Iohn Thurſton died in Colcheſter Caſtle.

Io. Thurſton a confeſſor of Chriſt.

BEfore you have heard of the taking of Iohn Thurſton at Muchbentley, in the houſe of one William Munt of the ſame town; which ſaid Iohn Thurſton afterward about the moneth of May, in the yeer aforeſaid, died in Colcheſter Caſtle, a conſtant confeſſor of Ieſus Chriſt.

The ſtory and death of George Eagles, otherwiſe termed Trudgeover, a moſt painfull Traveller in Chriſts Goſpel, who for the ſame Goſpel moſt cruelly was martyred by the cruell Papiſts.

George Eagles martyred.

AMong other Martyrs of ſingular vertue and conſtancie, one George Eagles deſerveth not the leaſt admiration, but is ſo much the more to be commended, for that he, having little learning or none, moſt manfully ſerved and fought under the banner of Chriſts Church. For oftentimes the will and pleaſure of God is, to beautifie and adorn his kingdome with the weake and ſimple inſtruments of this world; ſuch as in the old Teſtament Amos was, who with many other of obſcure and unknown names, were called from the heards and folds to the honor of Prophets; as likewiſe we read of the Apoſtles that were called from Fiſhermens craft, and put into Churches. Wherefore this George Eagles is not to be neglected for his baſe occupation, whom Chriſt called thence to ſet forth and declare abroad his Goſpel. Rather we ought to glorifie God the more thereby in his holineſſe, which in ſo blinde a time inſpired him with the gift of preaching, and conſtancie of ſuffering: who, after a certain time he had uſed the occupation of a Taylour, being eloquent and of good utterance, gave and applied himſelf to the profit of Chriſts Church.

Which man, as before in thoſe moſt bright and cleer dayes of King Edward the ſixth, he had not unfruitfully ſhewed and preached the power and force of the Lord, ſo afterward in the tempeſtuous time and fall of the Church (at what time the Confeſſors of Chriſt and his Goſpel were turmoiled, divers of them murdered, part baniſhed, and otherſome conſtrained for fear not to ſhew their heads) he expreſſed and uttered his manly ſtomacke. For he, wandring abroad into divers and far Countreys, where he could finde any of his brethren, did there moſt earneſtly encourage and comfort them, now tarrying in this town, and ſometime abiding in that certain moneths together, as occaſion ſerved, lodging ſometime in the countrey, and ſometime for fear living in fields and woods, who, for his immoderate and unreaſonable going abroad, was called Trudgeover. Oftentimes he did lie abroad in the night without covert, ſpending the moſt part in devout and earneſt prayer.

The painfull travell of Geor. Eagles.

His diet was ſo above meaſure ſpare and ſlender, that for the ſpace of three yeers, he uſed for the moſt part, to drink nothing but very water, whereunto he was compelled through neceſſitie of the time of perſecution: and after when he perceived that his bodie by Gods providence proved well enough with this diet, he thought beſt to inure himſelf therewithall againſt all neceſſities.

Now when he had profited Chriſts Church in this ſort, by going about and preaching the Goſpel a yeer or two, and eſpecially in Colcheſter, and the quarters thereabout; that privie enemie which envieth alwayes the ſalvation and bleſſed eſtate of the good, lurked and laid wait by all meanes poſſible for him, ſo that there were divers ſpies ſent out, who had in commandement, whereſoever they found him, to bring him either quicke or dead.

But when this their attempt could not prevail, but all was in vain (the ſaid Eagles with his brethren keeping in cloſe, and hiding themſelves in out and dark places, as in barns, thickets, holes, and privie cloſets) his adverſaries went about another way to compaſſe this their enterpriſe of taking him.

For in the Queens name a grievous Edict was proclaimed throwout foure Shires, Eſſex, Suffolke, Kent, and Northfolke, promiſing the partie that took him, twentie pounds for his pains; doubtleſſe a worthie hire to entice any Iew to trecherie. For being inflamed with greedy deſire of the money, they deviſed and invented all wayes and reaſons they could poſſible to be enriched with the hurt and deſtruction of this ſilly man.

At length it came to paſſe, that this George being ſeen by chance at Colcheſter upon Marie Magdalens day, at which time they kept a Fayre in the Town, ſhould have forthwith been delivered to his adverſaries, if he perceiving the ſame (as God would have it) had not conveighed himſelf away as faſt as he could, a great multitude purſuing after, and ſeeking diligently for him. Who firſt hid himſelf in a grove, and then from thence he ſtole into a corn field thereby, and ſo lay ſecretly couched from the violence of his enemies, inſomuch as they were all, ſaving one, paſt hope of taking him, and therefore ready to depart their way.

This one, having more ſubtiltie and wicked craft in his head then the reſt, would not depart thence with his fellows, but climed up into a high tree, there to view and eſpie if he might ſee Eagles any where ſtir or move.

Quid non mortalia pectora cogis,
Auri ſacra fames? Æneid.

The poore man thinking all ſure enough, by reaſon that he heard no noiſe abroad, roſe up on his knees, and lifting up his hands, prayed unto God. And whether it were for that his head was above the corn, or becauſe his voice was heard, the lurker perceiving his deſired prey that he hunted after, forthwith came down, and ſuddenly laying hands on him, brought him as priſoner to Colcheſter. Notwithſtanding the greedy and Iudas knave, which had ſo much promiſed him, was fain to be contented with a very ſmall reward, and glad to take that too, leſt he ſhould have had nothing at all.

This George, not without great lamentation of divers good men, and great lack unto the Church of God (of which to his power he was a worthie inſtrument) was committed to priſon there, and from thence within foure dayes after conveighed to Chelmesford, where he abode all that night in devout prayer, and would not ſleep, neither would eat or drink but bread and water. The next day he was carried to London to the Biſhop or the Councell, and there remained a certain time, and then was brought down to Chelmsford to the Seſſions, and there was indicted and accuſed of treaſon, becauſe he had aſſembled companies together, contrarie to the Laws and Statutes of the Realme in that caſe provided. For ſo it was ordained a little before, to avoyd ſedition, that if men ſhould flocke ſecretly together, above the number of ſix, they ſhould be attached of treaſon: which ſtrait law was the caſting away of the good Duke of Sommerſet before mentioned.

And albeit it was well knowne, that poore Eagles did never any thing ſeditiouſly againſt the Queene, yet to cloake an honeſt matter withall, and to cauſe him to be the more hated of the people, they turned Religion into a civill offence and crime, and though he defended his cauſe ſtoutly and boldly, making a full declaration of his Religion, or faith before the Iudges: yet could hee not bring it to paſſe by any means, but that he muſt needs bee indicted (as is ſaid) of treaſon; whoſe inditement did runne much after this faſhion.

George Eagles inditement.

George Eagles, thou art indicted by the name of George Eagles, otherwiſe Trudgeover the world, for that thou didſt ſuch a day make thy prayer, that God ſhould turne Queen Maries heart, or elſe take her away.

Hee denied that he prayed that God ſhould take her away, but he confeſſed, he prayed that God would turne her heart in his prayer. Well, notwithſtanding he was condemned for a traitor, although the meaning thereof was for Religion.

R. Potto Inholder at the Cocke in Chelmesford.

This thing done, he was carried to the new Inne, called the ſigne of the Crowne in Chelmſford, by the beaſtly Bailiffes, which ſome of them were they that before did their beſt to take him; and being in the Inne, one Richard Potto the elder, an Inne-holder, dwelling at the ſigne of the Cocke in the ſame towne, did much trouble him, in perſwading him to confeſſe he had offended the Queene in his prayer, which he was condemned for, and to aske her forgiveneſſe.

To whom he ſaid, he had not offended her Grace in that behalfe. So in proceſſe of time, hee was laid upon a Sled, with an hurdle on it, and drawne to the place of execution, being faſt bound, having in his hand a Pſalme Booke, of the which he read very devoutly all the way with a loud voyce, till hee came there: and being on the ladder this foreſaid Potto did much trouble him with the matter aforeſaid, when he would have uttered other things, till ſuch time as the Sheriffe commanded Potto to hold his peace, and trouble him no more.

So he made his confeſſion, and ſtood very conſtant ſtill; then hee was turned off the ladder. With him were caſt certaine theeves alſo, and the next day, when they were brought out to be executed with him, there happened a thing that did much ſet forth and declare the innocency and godlineſſe of this man. For being led betweene two theeves to the place where he ſhould ſuffer, when as he exhorted both them and all other to ſtand ſtedfaſtly to the truth, one of theſe turned the counſell he gave, into a ieſting matter, and made but a flout at it.

Why ſhould we doubt to obtaine heaven, ſaith he, foraſmuch as this holy man ſhall go before us, as captaine and leader unto us in the way. We ſhall flee thither ſtraight as ſoone hee hath once made us the entry.

In this, George Eagles and that other did greatly reprove him, who on the other ſide gave good heed to Georges exhortation, earneſtly bewailing his owne wickedneſſe, and calling to Chriſt for mercy. But the more that the firſt was bid to be ſtill, and to leave off his ſcoffing, the more perverſe hee did continue in his fooliſhneſſe, and his wicked behaviour. At length hee came to the Gallowes, where they ſhould bee hanged, but George was carried to another place there by to ſuffer. Betweene the two it was the godliers chance to goe the foremoſt, who being upon the ladder, after he had exhorted the people to beware and to take heed to themſeves, how they did tranſgreſſe the commandements of GOD, and then had committed his ſoule into Gods hands, he ended his life after a godly and quiet manner.

An example to be noted of a theefe rejecting and deriding wholſome and godly preaching.

The mockers turne commeth next, which would have ſaid likewiſe ſomwhat, but his tongue did fumble and faulter in his head, that hee was not able to ſpeake a word. Faine would he have uttered his mind, but he could not bring it out. Then did the under ſheriffe bid him ſay the Lords prayer, which he could not ſay neither, but ſtutteringly, as a man would ſay, one word to day, and another to morrow. Then one did begin to ſay it, and ſo bade him ſay after.

Such as were there, and ſaw it, were very much aſtonied, eſpecially thoſe that did behold the iuſt puniſhment of God againſt him that had mocked ſo earneſt a matter. George Eagles in the meane time, after he had hanged a ſmall time, having a great check with the halter, immediately one of the Bayliffs cut the halter aſunder, and he fell to the ground being ſtill alive, although much amazed with the checke he had off the ladder.

W. Swallow tormentor of George Eagles.

Then one William Swallow of Chelmesford a Bailiffe, did draw him to the Sled that he was drawne thither on, and laid his necke thereon, and with a cleaver, ſuch as is occupied in many mens kitchins, and blunt, did hackle off his head, and ſometime hit his necke, and ſometime his chinne, and did fowly mangle him, and ſo opened him. Notwithſtanding this bleſſed Martyr of Chriſt abode ſtedfaſt and conſtant in the very middeſt of his torments, till ſuch time as this tormentor William Swallow did plucke the heart out of his body. The body being divided in foure parts, and his bowels burnt, was brought to the foreſaid Swallowes doore, and there laid upon the fiſh ſtals before his doore, till they had made ready a horſe to carry his quarters, one to Colcheſter, and the reſt to Harwich, Chelmesford, and S. Rouſes.

Gods iuſt iudgement upon a cruell perſecutor.

His head was ſet up at Chelmesford on the market croſſe on a long pole, and there ſtood, till the winde did blow it downe, and lying certaine daies in the ſtreet tumbled about, one cauſed it to be buried in the Church-yard in the night. Alſo a wonderfull worke of God was it that he ſhewed on this wicked Bailiffe Swallow, who within ſhort ſpace after this was ſo puniſhed, that all the haire went well neer off his head, his eies were as it were cloſed up, and could ſcantly ſee, the nailes of his fingers and toes went cleane off. He was in ſuch caſe of his body, as though he had been a leper, and now in his laſt age almoſt a very begger, and his wife, which he a little after married, God hath puniſhed with the falling ſicknes, or a diſeaſe like unto that: which may be a warning or glaſſe for all men and women to looke in, that bee enemies to Gods true ſervants.

W. Swallowes wife puniſhed with the falling ſickneſſe.

Gods iudgement upon R. Potto, another perſecutor of George Eagles.

No leſſe token of his marvellous iudgement did God ſhew upon the foreſaid Richard Potto, which did ſo much trouble this George Eagles in the Inne, and at the place of Execution, as is above ſpecified. He lived till the beginning of Queene Elizabeths raigne, all which time hee little ioyed, and being on a time in a great chafe with two or three of his neighbors in his owne houſe, feeling himſelfe not well, hee ſaid to one of his ſervants, Goe with me into the chamber, and when he came there, hee fell downe on a low bed, as heavy as it had been Leade, and lay there foming at the mouth, and could never ſpeak after, neither yet underſtand what was ſaid to him, as by all meanes was tryed by his neighbors with ſigns to him made, but lay as ſenceleſſe as it had bin a very dumb beaſt, ann within thrée or foure dayes dyed. God grant that this token ſent of God, with many moe like, may be a warning to us ever hereafter, while we ſhall live unto the worlds end.

Beſides this, God hath wonderfully ſhewed his work. For at a time when they laid great wait for this George Eagles, ſo that it was thought that it was unpoſſible, but that he ſhould be taken being ſo beſet; his friends did put him into a prentice apparell, viz. watchet hoſe, as their manner is, and an old cloake, and ſet him on a packe of Wooll, as though he had ridden to carry Wooll to the ſpinners, ſo he rode amongſt the midſt of his adverſaries, and eſcaped them all for that time. Another troubler of the ſaid George Eagles, was alſo Juſtice Browne, who enjoyed not his cruelty many yeares after, &c.

Alſo when he was at the Seſſions at Chelmeſford, there was a rumor raiſed, that he had accuſed divers honeſt men that did kéep him in their houſes, and was converſant with him, and all to diſcredit him; which rumor was very falſe, and utterly untrue. Witneſſe one Raynold, with divers other dwelling in Chelmesford.

The martyrdome and examination of Richard Craſhfield of Wymundham, condemned to death for the teſtimony of Ieſus Chriſt.

Auguſt 5.

ABout this time ſuffered at Norwich, a godly man and a conſtant Martyr of Chriſt, called Richard Craſhfield, whoſe examinations before the Chancellor, named Dunning, as hee penned them with his owne hand, ſo have we faithfully recorded the ſame.

The examination of Richard Craſhfeld, before Dunning, Chance lor of Norwich.

How ſay you ſirrah, ſaid the Chancellor, to the ceremonies of the Church?

Then ſaid I, What ceremonies?

Hee ſaid unto me, Doe you not beléeve that all the ceremonies of the Church were good & godly?

My anſwer was, I doe beléeve ſo many as are grounded in the Teſtament of Jeſus Chriſt.

Sacrament of the altar.

Tuſh, ſaid he, Do you beléeve in the ſacrament of the altar?

I ſaid, I knew not what it was,

Then ſaid he, Doe you not beléeve that Chriſt tooke bread, gave thankes, brake it, and ſaid, Take, eat, this is my body?

Yes verily, ſaid I, and even as Chriſt did ſpeak, ſo did he performe the worke.

Tuſh, ſaid he, Doe you not beléeve this, that after the words be ſpoken by the Prieſt, there is the ſubſtance of Chriſts body, fleſh and bloud? How ſay you, doe you not beléeve this? ſpeak man.

I do beléeve that Chriſts body was broken for me upon the Croſſe, and his bloud ſhed for my redemption, whereof the bread and the wine is a perpetuall memory, the pledge of his mercy, the ring and ſeale of his promiſe, and a perpetuall memory for the faithfull unto the end of the world. So then I was commanded into priſon untill the next day.

Another examination of Richard Craſhfield.

Another examination of Craſhfeld.

THe day following I was brought forth. Then the Chancellor ſaid unto me, Richard, how ſay you? Are you otherwiſe minded than you were yeſterday? He rehearſing all the words that we had afore, ſaid, Are not theſe your words? Whereunto I anſwered, Yes.

Worſhipping of Images.

Then ſaid he, How ſay you, can you not find in your heart, when you come to the Church, to knéele downe before the Rood, and make your prayer?

I anſwered and ſaid, No; rehearſing the commandement of God forbidding the ſame.

He ſaid, Have you not read or heard, that God commanded an image to be made?

I anſwered, What image?

He ſaid, The brazen ſerpent.

I ſaid, Yes, I have heard it read how that God did command it to be made, and likewiſe to be broken downe.

Then Doctor Bridges ſaid, Wherfore did God command the Seraphins and Cherubins to be made?

I ſaid, I could not tell; I would faine learne.

Then ſaid the Chancellor, But how ſay you to this? can you finde in your heart to fall downe before the picture of CHRIST, which is the Roode?

I ſaid, no, I feare the curſe of God: for it is written, that God curſeth the hands that make them, yea and the hands that make the tooles wherwith they are carved.

Then Doctor Bridges raged and ſaid, Liſt now what a piece of Scripture he hath here gotten to ſerve his purpoſe, for he will not allow but where he liſteth.

Confeſſion to the Prieſt.

Then ſaid the Chancellor, How ſay you to confeſſion to the Prieſt? when were you confeſſed?

I ſaid, I confeſſe my ſelfe daily unto the eternall God, whom I moſt grievouſly offend.

Then the Chancellor ſaid, Do you not then take confeſſion to the Prieſt to be good?

I anſwered, No, but rather wicked.

Playing on the Organes.

Then the Chancellor ſaid, How ſay you by yonder geare, yonder ſinging, and yonder playing on the Organes? is it not good and godly?

I ſaid, I could perceive no godlineſſe in it.

Then he ſaid, Why, is it not written in the Pſalmes, That we ſhould praiſe God with hymns and ſpirituall ſongs?

I ſaid, Yes, ſpirituall ſongs muſt be had: but yonder is of the fleſh, and of the ſpirit of error. For to you it is pleaſant and glorious, but to the Lord it is bitter and odious.

Eſay. 56. Luke 19.

Then ſaid the Chancellor, Why, is it not written, My houſe is an houſe of prayer?

I ſaid, Yes. It is written alſo, That you have made my houſe of prayer a den of thieves.

With that, that the Chancellor looked and ſaid, Have we?

I anſwered and ſaid, Chriſt ſaid ſo. Then was I commanded to ward.

Another examination of R. Craſhfeld.

¶ The Thurſday next following, was Doctor Brigges ſent to mee to examine mee of my faith. And he ſaid, Countreyman, my Lord Biſhop (for love hee would have you ſaved) hath ſent mee unto you, becauſe to morrow is your day appointed: therefore my Lord hath thought it méet, that you ſhould declare unto me your faith. For to morrow my Lord will not have much adoe with you.

I anſwered and ſaid, Hath my Lord ſent you? It is not you, to whom I am diſpoſed to ſhew my mind.

Then he ſaid to me, I pray you ſhew me your mind concerning the ſacrament of the altar.

I anſwered, Are you ignorant what I have ſaid?

He ſaid, No, for it was well written, Except you beléeve, ſaith he, as the church hath taught, you are damned both body and ſoule.

I anſwered and ſaid, Judge not, leſt you be judged: condemne not, leſt you be condemned.

And he ſaid, Loe, we ſhall have a Traitor as well as an heretike: for he will diſallow the Kings iudgement.

I ſaid, No, I doe not diſallow the Kings iudgement, but yours I doe diſallow. For I pray you tell me, how came you by this iudgement?

He anſwered and ſaid, by the Church: for the Church hath power to ſave and condemne: for if you be condemned by the Church, be ye ſure, that you be damned both body and ſoule.

The Popes Church takes Chriſts office out of his hand.

Then I anſwered, if you have this power, I am ſore deceived. For I beleeve that Chriſt ſhall be our iudge. But now I perceive that you will doe much for him, that you wil not put him to the pain.

Then he ſaid, ſtand neerer Country man; why ſtand ye ſo far off?

I ſaid, I am neer enough, and a little too neere.

Then he ſaid, Did not Chriſt ſay, Is not my fleſh meat, and my bloud drinke indeed?

I ſaid, To whom ſpake Chriſt thoſe words?

He ſaid, To his Diſciples.

I (intending to rehearſe the Text) ſaid, whereat did Chriſts Diſciples murmure inwardly?

He ſaid, No, they did not murmure, but they were the infidels (ſaith he) for the Diſciples were ſatisfied with theſe words.

I ſaid, did not Chriſt ſay thus, as hee taught at Capernaum? whereas his Diſciples murmured, ſaying, This is an hard ſaying. Who can abide the hearing of it? Ieſus perceiving their thoughts, ſaid, doth this offend you?

Note here the ignorance of theſe catholike men in the Scriptures

Then he raged and ſaid, Oh, thou wreſteſt the Text for thine owne purpoſe. For the Diſciples did never murmure, but the unbeleevers, as thou art.

I ſaid, Yes, but I perceive you know not the Text.

Then ſaid he, with much raging, I will lay my head thereon, it is not ſo.

Then ſaid I, I have done with you.

Then ſaid he, What ſhal I tell my Lord of you?

If you have nothing to tell him, your errand ſhall be the ſooner doue, ſaid I. And ſo we departed.

Another examination of R. Craſhfield.

Then on Friday I was brought forth to receive iudgement, Then the Chancellor ſaid unto me, Are you a new man, or are you not?

I anſwered and ſaid, I truſt I am a new man borne of God.

God give grace you be ſo, ſaid he. So he rehearſed all my examination, and ſaid, How ſay you, are not theſe your words?

I ſaid, Yes, I will not deny them.

Then he ſaid to doctor Pore, ſtanding by, I pray you talke with him. Then he alledging to me many faire flattering words, ſaid, Take, eat, this is my body. How ſay you to this? Doe you not beleeve that it is Chriſts body? ſpeak.

I ſaid, Have you not my mind? Why doe you trouble me?

He ſaid, What did Chriſt give you? was it bread, or was it not?

1 Cor 10.

I ſaid, Chriſt tooke bread, and gave thanks, and gave it, and they tooke bread, and did eat. And ſaint Paul maketh it more manifeſt, where hee ſaith, So oft as ye ſhall eat of this bread, and drinke of this cup, ye ſhall ſhew forth the Lords death untill hee come. Saint Paul ſaith not here as you ſay: for he ſaith, So oft as ye ſhall eat of this bread. Hee doth not ſay, Body. So they intending that I ſhould go no further in the text, ſaid, Tuſh, you go about the buſh. Anſwer me to the firſt queſtion. Let us make an end of that.

What ſay you to the bread that Chriſt gave? Let me have your minde in that.

I anſwered, I have ſaid my mind in it.

Then the Chancellor ſaid, No, wee will have your minde in that.

I anſwered, I have ſaid my mind in it.

Then ſaid the chancellor, No, we will have your mind more plainly. For we intend not to have many words with you.

I ſaid, my faith is fully grounded and ſtabliſhed, that Chriſt Ieſus the Eaſter Lambe hath offered his bleſſed body a ſacrifice to God the father, the price of my redemption. For by that onely ſacrifice are all the faithfull ſanctified, and he is our only advocate and mediator, and he hath made perfect our redemption. This hath hee done alone, without any of your daily oblations.

Unbloudy Sacrifice of the Maſſe.

Then Doctor Bridges ſtart up, and ſaid, Truth, your words are true indeed. You take well the litterall ſenſe: but this you muſt underſtand, that like as you ſaid that Chriſt offered his body upon the Croſſe, which was a bloudy ſacrifice, and a viſible ſacrifice: ſo likewiſe wee daily offer the ſelfe ſame body that was offered upon the Croſſe, but not bloudy and viſible, but inviſible, unto God the Father.

Doe you offer Chriſts body, I ſaid? Why then Chriſts ſacrifice was not perfect. But Chriſt is true, when all men ſhall be lyers.

Then he ſaid, Thou ſhalt not feare him that hath power to kill the body: but thou ſhalt feare him that hath power to kill both body and ſoule.

I anſwered and ſaid, It is not ſo. But the text is thus, Thou ſhalt not feare them that have power to kill the body, and then have done what they can. But thou ſhalt feare him that hath power to kil both body and ſoule, and caſt them both into hel fire, and not them.

He anſwered and ſaid, Yes: for it is the Church.

I anſwered and ſaid, Why, Chriſt ſaith, I give my life for the redemption of the world. No man taketh my life from me (ſaith he) but I give it of my owne power, and ſo I have power to take it againe. Therefore Chriſt the Sonne of God did offer his body once for all. And if you will preſume to offer his body dayly, then your power is above Chriſts power. With that hee chafed and ſaid, What, ſhall wee have doctrine? Ye are not hereto appointed.

Then the Chancellor ſtood up, and ſaid, Wil ye turne from this wicked error, and be an example of goodneſſe, as you have been an example of evill (for by your wicked reading, you have perſwaded ſimple women to be in this error) and yee ſhall have mercy.

And I ſaid, it is of God that I do crave mercy, whom I have offended, and not you.

Then ſaid the Chancellor, When were you at your Pariſh Church? Theſe two yeres and more have you ſtood excommunicate. Wherfore you are condemned. And ſo I was condemned.

The martyrdome of Rich. Craſhfield. Anno 1557. Aug. 5.

Thus haſt thou (gentle Reader) the examinations of this godly yong man, ſet forth and written with his owne hand, who, not long after his condemnation, was by the Sheriffes and Officers there, brought to the ſtake, where with much patience and conſtancy he entred his bleſſed martyrdome. At the burning of which Chriſtian Martyr, one Thomas Carman the ſame time was apprehended, by what occaſion, it is not yet to us fully certain, whether it was for words, or for praying with him, or for pledging him at his burning, concerning which Thomas Carman, his ſtory hereafter followeth in his order and place, further to be ſeen.

One Fryer, and a certaine godly woman burned at Rocheſter, who was the ſiſter of George Eagles.

ABout the ſame time and moneth, one named Fryer, with a woman accompanying him, who who was the ſiſter of George Eagles, in the like cauſe of righteouſneſſe, ſuffered the like martyrdome by the unrighteous Papiſts, whoſe tyranny the Lord of his mercy abate and cut ſhort, turning that wicked generation, if it be his will, to a better mind.

The apprehenſion and death of Miſtreſſe Ioyce Lewes, the wife to Thomas Lewes of Mancetter, moſt conſtantly ſuffering for Gods Word at Liechfield.

The ſtory of miſtres Joyce Lewes, Martyr.

MIſtreſſe Joyce Lewes, a Gentlewoman borne, was delicately brought up in the pleaſures of the world, having delight in gay apparell, and ſuch like fooliſhneſſe, with the which follies the moſt part of the Gentlefolkes of England were then, and are yet infected, who was married firſt to one called Appleby, and afterward to Thomas Lewes of Manceter. In the beginning of Queene Maries time ſhee went to the Church and heard maſſe as others did, but when ſhe heard of the burning of that moſt godly and learned Martyr, Laurence Sanders, who ſuffered in Coventry, ſhee began to take more heed to the matter, and enquired earneſtly of ſuch as ſhe knew feared God, the cauſe of his death: and when ſhe perceived it was becauſe he refuſed to receive the maſſe, ſhee began to be troubled in conſcience, and waxed very unquiet. And becauſe her houſe was even hard by Maſter John Glovers houſe, of whom mention was made before, a man of bleſſed memory, and a ſingular example of his unfained godlineſſe and manifold troubles which he ſuffered for the Goſpell, ſhe did oftentimes reſort to him, and deſired him to tell her the faults that were in the maſſe, and other things that at that time were urged as neceſſary to ſalvation.

Now hee perceiving both her unquiet minde, and alſo the deſire ſhe had to know the truth, did moſt diligently inſtruct her in the wayes of the Lord, approving unto her out of Gods holy Word, that the maſſe, with all other papiſticall inventions, was odious in Gods ſight; and beſides this, reproved her, for that ſhe delighted in the vanities of this world ſo much. By the which godly counſell given by him, it happened that ſhee began to waxe weary of the world, throughly ſorrowfull for her ſinnes, being inflamed with the love of God, deſirous to ſerve him according to his word, purpoſing alſo to flee from thoſe things the which did diſpleaſe the Lord her God. And becauſe ſhe had learned the maſſe to be evill and abominable, ſhe began to eat it. And when at a time ſhe was compelled by the furiouſneſſe of her husband to come to the Church, at the ſame time when the holy water was caſt, ſhe turned her backe towards it, and ſhewed her ſelfe to be diſpleaſed with their blaſphemous holy water, injurious to the bloud of Chriſt. Whereupon ſhe was accuſed before the Biſhop for the deſpiſing of their ſacramentals.

Immediately, a Citation was ſent for her to her husbands houſe, to appeare before the Biſhop incontinently. The Sumner that brought the Citation delivered it to her husband, who looking upon it, and perceiving what it was, was moved with anger, willing the Sumner to take the Citation with him againe, or elſe he would make him to eat it. The Sumner refuſed to take it againe, for hee thought no man durſt have been ſo bold to trouble him. But in the end Lewes compelled tohe ſaid Sumner to eat the Citation indeed, by ſetting a Dagger to his heart; and when hee bad eaten it, hee cauſed him to drinke to it, and ſo ſent him away. But immedtately after, the ſaid Lewes with his wife were commanded to appeare before the Biſhop, where the ſaid Lewes by and by ſubmitted himſelfe, and deſiring the Biſhop to be good to him, excuſing himſelfe after the beſt faſhion he could. Whereupon the Biſhop was content to receive his ſubmiſſion, with condition that his wife ſhould ſubmit her ſelfe alſo. But ſhe ſtoutly told the Biſhop, that by refuſing of the holy water ſhe had neither offended God, nor any part of his Lawes. At the which words the Biſhop being grievouſly offended, yet becauſe ſhe was a Gentlewoman, he would not take her at the worſt (as he ſaid) he gave her one moneths reſpite, binding her husband in an hundred pound to bring her againe unto him at the months end, and ſo they were both let goe.

When they came to their owne houſe, the ſaid Miſtreſſe Joyce Lewes gave her ſelfe to moſt diligent prayer, and invocating of the name of GOD, reſorting continually to the abovenamed man of God, Maſter John Glover, who did moſt diligently inſtruct her with Gods Word, willing her in any caſe not to meddle with that matter in reſpect of vaine glory, or to get her ſelfe a name, ſhewing her the great dangers ſhe was like to caſt her ſelfe in, if ſhe ſhould meddle in Gods matter otherwiſe than Chriſt doth teach.

Miſtres Lewes inſtructed by Maſter John Glover.

When the moneth was now almoſt expired, and the time at hand that ſhee ſhould be brought before the ſaid Biſhop, her husband being advertiſed by the ſaid Maſter John Glover and others, not to carry her to the Biſhop, but to ſeeke ſome wayes to ſave her, or if the worſt ſhould come, to be content to forfeit ſo much money, rather than to caſt his owne wife into the fire: He anſwered, he would not leeſe or forfeit any thing for her ſake: and ſo, like a murtherer of his owne wife, he caried her to the bloudy Biſhop, where ſhe was examined, and found more ſtout, than ſhe was before death was threatened. And to begin withall, ſhee was ſent to ſuch a winking priſon, that a certaine maid, which was appointed to keepe her company, did ſwound in the ſame priſon.

Miſtris Lewes impriſoned.

Being thus kept in priſon, and oftentimes examined, and ever found ſtout, at the length ſhe was brought in judgement, and pronounced an heretike worthy to be burned. When the Biſhop reaſoned with her, why ſhe could not come to the maſſe, and receive the Sacraments and ſacramentals of the holy Ghoſt: ſhee anſwered, Becauſe I find not theſe things in Gods Word, which you ſo urge and magnifie, as things moſt needfull for mens ſalvation. If theſe things were in the ſame word of God commanded, I would with all my heart, receive, eſteeme, and beleeve them. The Biſhop anſwered, If thou wilt beleeve no more than is in the Scripture, concerning matters of Religion, thou art in a damnable caſe. At the which words ſhe was wonderfully amazed, and being moved by the ſpirit of God, told the Biſhop, that his words were ungodly and wicked.

After her condemnation, ſhe continued a whole twelve month in priſon, becauſe ſhe was committed to the Sheriffe that was of late choſen, who could not be compelled to put her to death in his time, as he affirmed: for the which thing, after her death, he was ſore troubled and in danger of his life. All that time ſhe was in priſon, her behaviour was ſuch both in words and deeds, that all they, that had any ſparke of godlineſſe or honeſty, did greatly lament her caſe, that ſhe ſhould be put to death.

Miſtres Lewes a yeere in priſon after her condemnation.

Now when the time did draw neere the which God had appointed for her deliverance, the writ De comburendo (as they terme it) being brought downe from London, ſhe deſired certaine of her friends to come to her, with whom when they came, ſhe conſulted how ſhe might behave her ſelfe, that her death might be more glorious to the Name of God, comfortable to his people, and alſo moſt diſcomfortable unto the enemies of God. As for death (ſaid ſhe) I doe not greatly paſſe: when I behold the amiable countenance of Chriſt my deare Savior, the ougleſome face of death doth not greatly trouble mee. In the which time alſo ſhe reaſoned moſt comfortably out of Gods Word, of Gods election and reprobation.

In the evening, before the day of her ſuffering, two of the Prieſts of the cloſe of Lichfield, came to the under Sheriffes houſe where ſhee lay, and ſent word to her by the Sheriffe, that they were come to heare her confeſſion: for they would be ſorry ſhe ſhould die without. She ſent them word again, ſhe had made her confeſſion to Chriſt her Savior, at whoſe hands ſhe was ſure to have forgiveneſſe of her ſins. As concerning the cauſe for the which ſhe ſhould die, ſhe had no cauſe to confeſſe that, but rather to give unto God moſt humble praiſe, that hee did make her worthy to ſuffer death for his Word: And as concerning that abſolution that they were able to give unto her, being authorized by the Pope, ſhe did defie the ſame, even from the bottome of her heart. The which thing when the Prieſts heard, they ſaid to the Sheriffe, Well, to morrow her ſtoutneſſe will bee proved and tryed. For although perhaps ſhee hath now ſome friends that whiſper her in her eares, to morrow we will ſee who dare be ſo hardy as to come neere her: and ſo they went their waies with anger, that their confeſſion and abſolution was nought ſet by.

Miſtreſſe Lewes refuſeth to be confeſſed of the Prieſts.

All that night ſhe was wonderfully cheerfull and merry, with a certaine gravity, in ſo much that the majeſty of the ſpirit of God did manifeſtly appeare in her, who did expell the feare of death out of her heart, ſpending the time in prayer, reading, and talking with them that were purpoſely come unto her, to comfort her with the Word of God.

About three of the clock in the morning, Satan (who never ſleepeth, eſpecially when death is at hand) began to ſtirre himſelfe buſily, ſhooting at her that fiery dart the which he is wont to doe againſt all that are at defiance with him, queſtioning with her, how ſhe could tell that ſhee was choſen to eternall life, and that Chriſt dyed for her. I grant that he dyed, but that he died for thee how canſt thou tell? with this ſuggeſtion when ſhe was troubled, they that were about her did counſell her to follow the example of Paul, Galathians 2. where he ſaith, Which hath loved me, and given himſelfe for me. Alſo, that her vocation and calling to the knowledge of Gods Word, was a manifeſt token of Gods love towards her, eſpecially that ſame holy ſpirit of God working in her heart, that love and deſire towards God to pleaſe him, and to be juſtified by him through Chriſt, &c. By theſe and like perſwaſions, and eſpecially by the comfortable promiſes of Chriſt, brought out of the Scripture, Sathan was put to flight, and ſhee comforted in Chriſt.

Temptations of Miſtreſſe Lewes before her death and martyrdome.

Ioyce Lewes comforted in her tentations

About eight of the clock, Maſter Sheriffe came to her into her chamber, ſaying theſe words, Miſtreſſe Lewes, I am come to bring you tidings of the Queenes pleaſure, the which is, that you ſhall live no longer but one houre in this world: therefore prepare your ſelfe thereunto, it ſtandeth you in hand. At which words, being ſo groſſely uttered, and ſo ſuddenly by ſuch an officer as he was, ſhe was ſomwhat abaſhed. Wherefore one of her friends and acquaintance ſtanding by, ſaid theſe words, Miſtres Lewes, you have great cauſe to praiſe God, who will vouchſafe ſo ſpeedily to take you out of this world, and make you worthy to be a witneſſe of his truth, and to beare record unto Chriſt, that he is the onely Saviour.

After the which words ſpoken thus, ſhee ſaid, Maſter Sheriffe your meſſage is welcome to me, and I thanke my God that he will make me worthy to adventure my life in his quarrell. And thus Maſter Sheriffe departed: and within the ſpace of one houre he came againe, cum gladiis & fuſtibus; and when he came up into the chamber, one of her friends deſired him to give him leave to goe with her to the ſtake, and to comfort her, the which the Sheriffe granted at that time, but afterwards hee was ſore troubled for the ſame, when ſhe was dead.

Now when ſhe was brought through the town with a number of bill men, a great multitude of people being preſent, ſhee being led by two of her friends (which were Maſter Michael Reniger, and Maſter Auguſtine Bernher) ſhe was brought to the place of execution: and becauſe the place was far off, and the throng of the people great, and ſhee not acquainted with the freſh ayre (being ſo long in priſon) one of her friends ſent a meſſenger to the Sheriffes houſe for ſome drinke; and after ſhe hed prayed three ſeverall times, in the which prayer ſhe deſired God moſt inſtantly to aboliſh the idolatrous maſſe, and to deliver this Realme from Papiſtry (at the end of the which prayers the moſt part of the people cryed Amen, yea, even the Sheriffe that ſtood hard by her, ready to caſt her in the fire for not allowing the maſſe, at this her prayer ſaid with the reſt of the people, Amen) when ſhee had thus prayed, ſhe tooke the cup into her hands, ſaying; I drinke to all them that unfainedly love the Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt, and wiſh for the aboliſhment of papiſtry. When ſhe had drunke, they that were her friends dranke alſo. After that a great number, ſpecially the women of the towne did drinke with her; which afterward were put to open penance in the Church by the cruell Papiſts, for drinking with her.

Ioyce Lewes brought to the place of martyrdome.

Her prayers.

Women put to penance for pledging Ioyce Lewes

When ſhe was tied to the ſtake with the chain, ſhe ſhewed ſuch a cheerfulneſſe, that it paſſed mans reaſon, being ſo well coloured in her face, and being ſo patient, that the moſt part of them that had honeſt hearts did lament, and even with teares bewayle the tyranny of the Papiſts. When the fire was ſet upon her, ſhe neither ſtruggled nor ſtirred, but onely lifted up her hands towards heaven, being dead very ſpeedily: for the under Sheriffe at the requeſt of her friends had provided ſuch ſtuffe, by the which ſhee was ſuddenly diſpatched out of this miſerable world.

The martyrdome of Miſtres Ioyce Lewes.

This amongſt other things may not be forgotten, that the Papiſts had appointed ſome to raile upon her openly, and to revile her, both as ſhe went to the place of execution, and alſo when ſhe came at the ſtake. Amongſt others there was an old Prieſt, which had a paire of writing tables to note both the names of the women that dranke of her cup (as before you heard) and alſo deſcribed her friends by their apparell, for preſently hee could not learne their names, and afterwards enquired for their names: and ſo immediately after proceſſe was ſent out for them, both to Coventry and other places: but God whoſe providence ſleeps not, did defend them from the hands of theſe cruell tyrants, Unto the which God, with the Sonne and the holy Ghoſt, be honor and glory for ever, Amen.

Septemb. 17. The ſtory of Ralph Allerton.

IN ſearching out the certaine number of the faithfull Martyrs of God that ſuffered within the time and raigne of Queene Mary; I find, that about the ſeventeenth day of Septemb. were burned at Iſlington, nigh unto London, theſe four conſtant Profeſſors of Chriſt, Ralph Allerton, Iames Auſtoo, Margery Auſtoo his wife, and Richard Roth. Among the which, it firſt appeareth that this Ralph Allerton was, more then a yeare before his condemnation, apprehended & brought before the Lord Darcie of Chich, and was there accuſed, aſwell for that he would not conſent and come unto the idolatry and ſuperſtition which then was uſed, as alſo that he had by preaching entiſed others to do the like.

Being then hereupon examined, hee confeſſed that hee comming into his Pariſh Church of Bentley, and ſeeing the people ſitting there, either gazing about, or elſe talking together, hee exhorted them that they would fall unto prayer, and meditation of Gods moſt holy Word, and not ſit ſtill idlely. Whereunto they willingly conſented. Then after prayer ended, he read unto them a Chapter of the New Teſtament, and ſo departed.

Ralph Allerton attached.

In the which exerciſe he continued untill Candlemas, and then being informed that he might not ſo doe by the Law (for that he was no Prieſt or Miniſter) he left off, and kept himſelfe cloſe in his houſe untill Eaſter then next after. At what time, certaine ſworne men for the inquiry of ſuch matters came unto his houſe, and attached him for reading in the Pariſh of Welley.

But when they underſtood that he had read but once, and that it was of obedience (whereunto he earneſtly moved the people) they let him for that time depart. Notwithſtanding for feare of their cruelte, hee was not long after conſtrained to forſake his own houſe, and keep himſelfe in woods, barnes, and other ſolitary places, untill the time of his apprehenſion.

After this examination, the Lord Darcie ſent him up to the Councell; but they (not minding to trouble themſelves with him) ſent him unto Bonner who by threatenings and other ſubtle means, ſo abuſed the ſimple and fearefull heart of this man (as yet not throughly ſtayd up on the ayd and help of God) that within ſhort time he won him to his moſt wicked will, and made him openly at Pauls Croſſe to revoke and recant his former profeſſion, and thereupon ſet him at liberty of body. Which yet brought ſuch a bondage and terrour of ſoul and conſcience, & ſo caſt him down, that except the Lord (whoſe mercies are immeaſurable) had ſupported and lift him up again, he had periſhed for ever.

Tho. Tye prieſt, perſecutor and promotor.

But the Lord, who never ſuffereth his elect children utterly to fall, caſting his pittifull eyes upon his loſt ſheep, with his mercifull and fatherly chaſtiſements, did (with Peter) raiſe him up againe, giving unto him not onely hearty and unfained repentance, but alſo a moſt conſtant boldneſſe to profeſſe againe (even unto the death) his moſt holy name and glorious Goſpel. Wherefore at the procurement of one Thomas Tie Prieſt, ſometime an earneſt profeſſor of Chriſt, but now a fierce perſecutor of the ſame (as appeareth more at large before in the hiſtory of William Munt and his wife) hee was again apprehended, and ſent up againe unto Bonner, before whom he was the eighth day of April, and ſundry other times elſe examined. The report of which examination, written by his owne hand with bloud for lacke of other inke, hereafter followeth.

The examination of Ralph Allerton.

BOner. Ah ſirrah, how chanceth it that you are come hither againe on this faſhion? I dare ſay thou art accuſed wrongfully.

Ralph. Yea my Lord ſo I am. For if I were guilty of ſuch things as I am accuſed of, then I would be very ſorry.

Boner. By Saint Mary that is not well done. But let me heare, Art thou an honeſt man? for if I can prove no hereſie by thee, then ſhall thine accuſers doe thee no harme at all. Goe to, let me heare thee: for I did not beleeve the tale to bee true.

Ralph. My Lord, who did accuſe me? I pray you let me know, and what is mine accuſation, that I may anſwer thereunto.

Boner. Ah, wilt thou ſo? Before God if thou haſt not diſſembled, then thou needeſt not bee afraid, nor aſhamed to anſwer for thy ſelfe. But tell me in faith, haſt thou not diſſembled.

Ralfe, If I cannot have mine accuſers to accuſe mee before you, my conſcience doth conſtraine me to accuſe my ſelfe before you: For I confeſſe that I have grievouſly offended God in my diſſimulation at my laſt being before your Lordſhip, for the which I am right ſorry, as God knoweth.

Boner. Wherein I pray thee, diddeſt thou diſſemble, when thou waſt before me?

Ralfe. Forſooth my Lord, if your Lordſhip remember, I did ſet my hand upon a certaine writing, the contents whereof (as I remember) were, that I did beleeve in all things as the Catholike Church teacheth, &c. In the which I did not diſcloſe my mind, but ſhamefully diſſembled, becauſe I made no difference betweene the true Church and the untrue Church.

Boner. Nay, but I pray thee let me heare more of this geare. For I feare me thou wilt ſmell of an heretike anon. Which is the true Church, as thou ſayeſt? Doeſt thou not call the heretikes Church the true Church, or the Catholike church of Chriſt? Now which of theſe two are the true Church, ſayeſt thou? Go to: for in faith I will know of thee ere I leave thee.

Ralfe. As concerning the Church of heretikes, I utterly abhorre the ſame, as deteſtable and abominable before God, with all their enormities and hereſies: and the Church Catholike is it that I onely embrace, whoſe doctrine is ſincere, pure and true.

Boner. By S. Auguſtine, but that is well ſaid of thee. For by God Almighty, if thou haddeſt allowed the Church of heretikes, I would have burned thee with fire for thy labour.

Morton. Then ſaid one Morton a Prieſt, My Lord, you know not yet what Church it is that he calleth Catholike. I warrant you he meaneth naughtily enough.

Boner. Thinke you ſo? Now by our bleſſed Lady, if it be ſo, he might have deceived me. How ſay you ſirrah, which is the Catholike Church?

Ralph. Even that which hath received the wholſome ſound, ſpoken of Eſay, David, Malachy, and Paul, with many other moe. The which ſound, as it is written, hath gone throughout all the earth in every place, and unto the ends of the world.

Boner. Yea, thou saieſt true before God. For this is the ſound that hath gone throughout all Chriſtendome, and he that beleeveth not the ſound of the holy Church, as S. Cyprian ſaith, doth erre. For he ſaith, that whoſoever is out of the Church, is like unto them that were out of Noahs ſhip when the floud came upon all the whole world; ſo that the Ark of Noah is likened unto the Church: and therefore thou haſt well ſaid in thy confeſſion. For the Church is not alone in Germany, nor was here in England in the time of the late ſchiſmes, as the heretiques doe affirme. For if the Church ſhould be there alone, then were Chriſt a lyar. For he promiſed that the holy Ghoſt ſhould come to us, leade us unto all truth, yea, and remaine with us unto the end of the world. So now if we will take Chriſt for a true ſayer, then muſt we needs affirme, that the way which is taught in France, Spaine, Italy, Flanders, Denmarke, Scotland, and all Chriſtendome over, muſt needs be the true Catholike Church.

Ralfe. My Lord, if you remember, I ſpake of all the world, as it is written, and not of all Chriſtendome only, as me thinkes your Lordſhip taketh it, the which kinde of ſpeaking you doe not finde in all the Bible. For ſure I am that the Goſpell hath been both preached and perſecuted in all lands: Firſt, in Jewry by the Scribes and Phariſees, and ſince that time by Nero, Diocleſian, and ſuch like, and now here in theſe our daies by your Lordſhip knoweth whom. For truth it is that the Church which you call Catholike, is none otherwiſe Catholike then was figured in Cain, obſerved of Jeroboam, Ahab, Jezabel, Nabuchodonoſor, Antiochus, Herod, with innumerable more of the like: and as both Daniel and Eſdras make mention of theſe laſt daies by a plaine prophecy, and now fulfilled, as appeareth, and affirmed by our Saviour Chriſt and his Apoſtles, ſaying; There ſhall come grievous Wolves to devoure the flocke.

He meaneth belike Boner and his fellows.

Boner. Now, by the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar Maſter Morton, he is the rankeſt heretike that ever came before me. How ſay you? have you heard the like?

Morton. I thought what he was my Lord at the firſt, I.

Boner. Now by all Hallowes thou ſhalt bee brent with fire for thy lying, thou whoreſon varlet and prick-louſe thou. Doeſt thou finde a prophecy in Daniel of us? Nay, you knave it is of you that he ſpeaketh of, and of your falſe pretenſed holineſſe. Goe to, let me heare what is the ſaying of Eſdras, and take heed ye make not a lie, I adviſe you.

Ralfe. The ſaying of Eſdras is this; The heate of a great mmltitude is kindled over you, and they ſhall take away certaine of you, and feed the Idols with you, and he that conſenteth unto them, ſhall be had in deriſion, laughed to ſcorne, and troden under foot: yea, they ſhall be like mad men, for they ſhall ſpare no man; they ſhall ſpoile and waſte ſuch as feare the Lord, &c.

a Eſdras 16;

Boner. And have you taken this thing to make your Market good? Ah ſirrha, wilt thou ſo? by my faith a pretty inſtruction, and a neceſſary thing to be taught among the people. By my troth I thinke there be no more of this opinion. I pray thee tell me: Is there any that underſtandeth this Scripture on this faſhion? Before God, I thinke there be none in all England but thou.

Ralfe. Yes, my Lord, there are in England three religions.

Three ſorts of religion in England.

Boner. Sayeſt thou ſo? which be thoſe three?

Ralfe. The firſt is that which you hold, the ſecond is cleane contrary to the ſame; and the third is a Neuter, being indifferent: that is to ſay, obſerving all things that are commanded outwardly, as though he were of your part, his heart being ſet wholly againſt the ſame.

Boner. And of theſe three which art thou? for now thou muſt needs be one of them.

Ralfe. Yea, my Lord, I am of one of them; and that which I am of, is even that which is contrary to that which you teach to be beleeved under paine of death.

Boner. Ah ſir, you were here with me at Fulham, and had good cheare, yea and mony in your purſe when you went away, and by my faith I had a favour unto thee, but now I ſee thou wilt be a naughty knave. Why, wilt thou take upon thee to reade the Scripture, and canſt underſtand never a word? For thou haſt brought a text of Scripture, the which maketh cleane againſt thee. For Eſdras ſpeaketh of the multitude of you heretikes, declaring your hate againſt the Catholike Church, making the ſimple or idle people beleeve, that all is Idolatry that wee doe, and ſo entiſe them away untill you have overcome them.

Ralfe. Nay, not ſo my Lord. For he maketh it more plaine, and ſaith on this wiſe; They ſhall take away their goods, and put them out of their houſes, and then ſhall it be knowne who are my choſen (ſaith the Lord) for they ſhall be tried, as the ſilver or gold is in the fire. And wee ſee it ſo come to paſſe, even as hee hath ſaid. For who is not now driven from houſe and home, yea and his goods taken up for other men that never ſweat for them, if he doe not obſerve as you command and ſet forth? Or elſe, if he be taken, then muſt he either deny the truth, as I did, in diſſembling, or elſe he ſhall be ſure, to be tried, as Eſdras ſaith, even as the gold is tried in the fire. Whereby all the world may know, that you are the bloudy Church, figured in Cain the tyrant, neither yet are ye able to avoide it.

The place of Eſdras explained.

Morton. I promiſe you my Lord, I like him better now than ever I did, when he was here before you the other time. For then he did but diſſemble, as I perceived well enough; but now me thinke he ſpeaketh plainly.

Boner. Mary ſir, as you ſay indeed, he is plain. For he is a plaine heretike, and ſhall be burned. Have the knave away. Let him be carried to Little eaſe at London untill I come.

Ralfe. And ſo was I carried to London unto Little eaſe, and there remained that night, and on the next morrow I appeared before him againe, the Deane of Pauls and the Chancellor of London being preſent. Then were brought forth certaine writings that I had ſet my hand unto.

Boner. Come on your waies ſirrah. Is not this your hand, and this, and this?

Allerton charged with his owne hand writing.

Ralfe. Yea, they are my hand all of them; I confeſſe the ſame, neither yet will I deny any thing that I have ſet my hand unto. But if I have ſet my hand to any thing that is not lawfull, therefore am I ſorry. Nevertheleſſe, my hand I will not deny to be my doing.

Boner. Well ſaid, Now ye muſt tell me; Were you never at the Church ſince you went from me, at Maſſe and Mattens? &c.

Ralfe. No; my Lord, not at Maſſe, Mattens, nor any other ſtrange worſhipping of God.

Boner. Yea, ſayeſt thou ſo? Waſt thou neither at thine owne Pariſh Church, nor at any other?

And doeſt thou alſo ſay, that it is a ſtrange worſhipping? Why, I pray thée, wilt thou not beléeve the Scripture to be true?

Ralfe. Yea, my Lord, I beléeve the Scripture to be true, and in thé defence of the ſame I intend to give my life, rather then I will deny any part thereof, God willing.

Deane. My Lord, this fellow will be an honeſt man, I heare by him. He will not ſtand in his opinion; for he ſheweth himſelfe gentle and patient in his talke.

Boner. Oh, he is a glorious knave. His painted termes ſhall no more deceive me. Ah whoreſon Prick-louſe, doth not Chriſt ſay, This is my body? And how dareſt thou deny theſe words, for to ſay, as I have a writing to ſhew, and thine owne hand at the ſame? Let me ſée wilt thou deny this? Is not this thine owne hand?

Ralfe. Yes, my Lord, it is mine owne hand, neither am I aſhamed thereof, becauſe my confeſſion therein is agréeable to Gods Word. And whereas you doe lay unto my charge, that I ſhould deny the words of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; Oh, good Lord, from whence commeth this raſh, haſty, and untrue judgement? Forſooth not from the ſpirit of truth; for he leadeth men into all truth, and is not the father of lyars. Whereupon ſhould your Lordſhip gather or ſay of me ſo diffamouſly? Wherefore, I beſéech you, if I deny the Scriptures Canonicall, or any part thereof, then let me die.

Sir Thomas Tye, lately turned to his vomit, thirſteth for blood.

Tye the Prieſt. My Lord, he is a very ſeditious fellow, and perſwadeth other men to doe as hée himſelfe doth, contrary to the order appointed by the Quéenes Highneſſe and the Clergy of this Realme. For a great ſort of the Pariſh will be gathered one day to one place, and another day to another place to heare him; ſo that very few commeth to the Church to heare divine Service: and this was not only before that he was taken and brought unto the Councell, but alſo ſince his returne home againe, he hath done much harme. For where both men and women were honeſtly diſpoſed before, by Saint Anne, now are they as ill as he almoſt. And furthermore, he was not aſhamed to withſtand me before all the Pariſh, ſaying, that we were of the malignant Church of Antichriſt, and not of the true Church of Chriſt, alledging a great many of Scriptures to ſerve for his purpoſe, ſaying; Good people, take héed, and beware of theſe blood-thirſty dogs, &c. And then I commanded the Conſtable to apprehend him, and ſo he did. Nevertheleſſe, after this apprehenſion, the Conſtable let him goe about his buſineſſe all the next day, ſo that without putting in of ſureties, he let him goe into Suffolke and other places, for no goodneſſe, I warrant you my Lord: It were almes to teach ſuch Officers their duty, how they ſhould let ſuch rebels goe at their owne liberty, after that they be apprehended and taken, but to kéep them faſt in the Stockes untill they bring them before a Juſtice.

Allerton apprehended, contrary to the lawes of the Realme.

Ralfe. As I ſaid before, ſo ſay I now againe; thou art not of the Church of Chriſt, and that will I prove, if I may be ſuffered. And where you ſaid, that you commanded the Conſtable to apprehend me, you did ſo indéed, contrary to the lawes of this Realme, having neither to lay unto my charge, Treaſon, Felony, nor Murther: No, neither had you Precept, Proceſſe, nor Warrant to ſerve on me; and therefore I ſay, without a law was I apprehended. And whereas you ſéeke to trouble the Conſtable, becauſe hée kept me not in the Stockes thrée daies and thrée nights, it doth ſhew in part what you are. And my going into Suffolke was not for any evill, but only to buy halfe a buſhell of corne for bread, for my poore wife and children, knowing that I had no long time to tarry with them. But if I had run away, then you would ſurely have laid ſomewhat to his charge.

Boner. Goe to, thou art a Merchant indéed. Ah ſirrah, before God thou ſhalt be burnt with fire. Thou knoweſt Richard Roth, doeſt thou not? Is he of the ſame minde that thou art of, or no? canſt thou tell?

Ralfe. He is of age to anſwer, let him ſpeake for himſelfe; for I heare ſay that he is in your houſe.

Boner. Loe what a knave here is. Goe Cluny, fetch me Roth hither. By my troth he is a falſe knave; but yet thou art worſe then he. Ah ſirrah, did you not ſet your hand to a writing, the tenor whereof was, that if thou ſhould at any time ſay or doe heretically, then it ſhould be lawfull for me to take thée with a relapſe, and to procéed in ſentence againſt thée?

Allerton charged with relapſe.

Ralfe. Yea, that is ſo. But here is to be aſked, whether it be ſufficient, that my hand or name in writing be able to give authority to you or to any other to kill me? For if I by writing can doe ſo much, then muſt my authority be greater then yours. Neverthelesſe, I have neither ſaid nor done heretically, but like a true Chriſtian man have I behaved my ſelfe. And ſo I was committed unto priſon againe, and the 24. day of the ſame moneth, I was brought before the Biſhop, the Lord North, Doctor Story, and others, and after a long talke in Latine amongſt themſelves (unto the which I gave no anſwer, becauſe they ſpake not to me, although they ſpake of me) at the laſt the Biſhop ſaid:

Boner. How ſay you ſirrah? tell me briefly at one word, wilt thou be contented to goe to Fulham with me, and there to knéele thée downe at Maſſe, ſhewing thy ſelfe outwardly as though thou didſt it with a good will? Goe to, ſpeake.

Ralfe. I will not ſay ſo.

Boner. Away with him, away with him.

Allerton brought againe before Boner and certain Lords

The ſecond day of May I was brought before the Biſhop, and thrée Noble men of the Councell, whoſe names I doe not remember.

Boner. Loe, my Lords, this ſame is the fellow that was ſent unto me from the Councell, and did ſubmit himſelfe, ſo that I had halfe a hope of him: but by S. Anne, I was alwaies in doubt of him. Neverthelesſe, he was with me, and fared well, and when I delivered him, I gave him money in his purſe. How saieſt thou? was it not ſo as I tell my Lords here?

Ralfe. Indéed my Lord I had meat and drink enough; but I never came in bed all the while. And at my departing you gave me twelve pence, howbeit I aſked none, nor would have done.

A Lord. Be good to him my Lord. He will be an honeſt man.

Boner. Before God, how ſhould I truſt him? He hath once deceived me already. But ye ſhall heare what he will ſay to the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar. How ſay you ſirrah? after the words of conſecration be ſpoken by the Prieſt, there remaineth no bread, but the very body of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, God and man, and none other ſubſtance, under the forme of bread.

Ralfe. Where finde you that, my Lord, written?

Boner. Loe ſir. Why? Doth not Chriſt ſay, This is my body? How saieſt thou? Wilt thou deny theſe words of our Saviour Chriſt? Or elſe was he a diſſembler, ſpeaking one thing, and meaning another? Goe to, now I have taken you.

Tranſubſtantiation.

Ralfe. Yea, my Lord, you have taken me indéed, and will kéepe me untill you kill me.

Howbeit, my Lord, I marvell why you leave out the beginning of the inſtitution of the ſupper of our Lord? For Chriſt ſaid; Take ye, and eate ye, this is my body. And if it will pleaſe you to joyne the former words to the latter, then ſhall I make you an anſwer. For ſure I am, that Chriſt was no diſſembler, neither did he ſay one thing, and meane another.

Boner. Why? Then muſt thou needs ſay, that it is his body; for he ſaith it himſelfe, and thou confeſſeſt that he will not lie.

Ralfe. No, my Lord; he is true, and all men are lyars. Notwithſtanding, I utterly refuſe to take the words of our Saviour ſo fantaſtically as you teach us to take them: for then ſhould we conſpire with certaine heretikes, called the Neſtorians; for they deny that Chriſt had a true naturall body, and ſo me thinke you doe, my Lord. If you will affirme his body to be there, as you ſay he is, then muſt you needs alſo affirme, that it is a fantaſticall body; and therefore looke to it for Gods ſake, and let theſe words goe before; Take ye, and eate ye, without which words the reſt are not ſufficient; but when the worthy receivers do take and eate, even then are fulfilled the words of our Saviour unto him, or every of them that ſo receiveth.

Biſhop Boners Parable.

Boner. Ah, I ſee well thou canſt not underſtand theſe words; I will ſhew thee a Parable. If I ſhould ſet a peece of Beefe before thee, and ſay; Eate, it is Beefe: And then take part of it away, and ſend it to my Cooke, and hee ſhall change the faſhion thereof, and make it looke like bread: What wouldeſt thou ſay that it were no Beefe, becauſe it hath not the faſhion of Beefe?

Ralfe. Let me underſtand a little further, my Lord; ſhall the Cooke adde nothing thereunto, nor take any thing therefrom?

Boner. What is that to the matter, whether he doe or no, ſo long as the ſhape is changed into another likeneſſe?

Amos 5.

Ralfe. Ah, will you ſo my Lord? your Sophiſtry will not ſerve; the truth will have the victory neverthelеſſe, as Eſay ſaith; He that reſtraineth himſelfe from evill, muſt be ſpoiled. And Amos hath ſuch like words alſo: For the wiſe muſt be faine to hold their peace; ſo wicked a time it is, ſaith he. Neverthеleſſe, he that can ſpeake the truth, and will not, ſhall give a ſtraite account for the ſame.

A Doctor. By my Lords leave, here me thinkes thou ſpeakeſt like a foole. Wilt thou be a Judge of the Scripture? Nay, thou muſt ſtand to learn, and not to teach; for the whole congregation hath determined the matter long agoe.

A Prieſt. No, by your leave, we have a Church, and not a congregation. You miſtake that word, Maſter Doctor.

Ralfe. Then ſaid I to my fellow priſoners ſtanding by; My brethren, doe ye not heare how theſe men help one another? Let us do ſo alſo. But we never came all in together after that time, but ſeverally one after another. Then was I carried away for that time. The 19. day of May I was brought before the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Chicheſter, with others.

B. Rocheſt. Were you a companion of George Eagles, otherwiſe called Trudgeover? My Lord of London telleth me that you were his fellow companion.

Ralfe. I know him very well, my Lord.

Rocheſt. By my faith, I had him once, and then he was as drunke as an Ape, for he ſtanke ſo of drinke, that I could not abide him; and ſo ſent him away.

Ralfe. My Lord, I dare ſay you tooke your marke amiſſe. It was either your ſelfe, or ſome of your owne company, for he did neither drinke Wine, Ale, nor Beere, in a quarter of a yeere before that time; and therefore it was not he forſooth.

The reſt of mine examinations you ſhall have when I am condemned, if I can have any time after my comming into Newgate, the which I truſt ſhall touch the matter a great deale more plainly; for the pithy matters are yet unwritten. Thus fare you well good friends all. Yea, I ſay, farewell for ever in this preſent world. Greete ye one another, and be joyfull in the Lord. Salute the good widowes among you, with all the reſt of the congregation in Barfold, and Dedham, and Colcheſter.

This promiſe of his, being either not performed, for that he might not thereto be permitted, or elſe if he did write, the ſame not comming to my hands. I am faine in the reſt of his examinations to follow the only report of the Regiſter; who witneſſeth, that the 15. day of May, Anno 1557. in the Biſhops palace at London, he was examined upon certaine interrogatories, the contents whereof be theſe.

Articles miniſtred againſt Ralfe Allerton.

First, that he was of the Pariſh of Muchbentley, and ſo of the Dioceſſe of London.

Secondly, that the 10. day of January then laſt paſt, Maſter John Morant preaching at Pauls, the ſaid Ralfe Allerton did there openly ſubmit himſelfe unto the Church of Rome, with the rites and ceremonies thereof.

Thirdly, that he did conſent and ſubſcribe as well unto the ſame ſubmiſſion, as alſo to one other bill, in the which he granted, that if he ſhould at any time turne againe unto his former opinions, it ſhould be then lawfull for the Biſhop immediatly to denounce and adjudge him as an heretike.

Fourthly, that he had ſubſcribed to a bill, wherein he affirmed, that in the Sacrament, after the words of conſecration be ſpoken by the Prieſt, there remaineth ſtill materiall bread and materiall wine; and that he beleeveth that the bread is the bread of thankſgiving, and the memoriall of Chriſts death; and that when he receiveth it, he receiveth the body of Chriſt ſpiritually in his ſoule, but materiall bread in ſubſtance.

Fifthly, that he had openly affirmed, and alſo adviſedly ſpoken that which is contained in the ſaid former fourth Article laſt before ſpecified.

Sixthly, that he had ſpoken againſt the Biſhop of Rome, with the Church and Sea of the ſame, and alſo againſt the 7. Sacraments and other ceremonies and ordinances of the ſame Church, uſed then within this Realme.

Seventhly, that he had allowed and commended the opinion and faith of Maſter Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, and others of late burned within this Realme, and beleeved that their opinions were good and godly.

Eighthly, that he had divers times affirmed, that the religion uſed within this Realme at the time of his apprehenſion, was neither good, nor agreeable to Gods Word, and that hee could not conforme himſelfe thereunto.

Ninthly, that he had affirmed, that the booke of Common prayer ſet forth in the reigne of King Edward the ſixth, was in all parts good and godly; and that the ſaid Ralfe and his company priſoners, did daily uſe amongſt themſelves in priſon ſome part of the booke.

Tenthly, that he had affirmed, that if he were out of priſon, he would not come to Maſſe, Mattins, nor Evenſong, nor beare Taper, Candle, or Palme, nor goe in Proceſſion, nor would receive holy water, holy bread, aſhes, or pace, or any other ceremony of the Church then uſed within this Realme.

Eleventhly, that he had affirmed, that if he were at liberty he would not confeſſe his ſins to any Prieſt, nor receive abſolution of him; nor yet would receive the Sacrament of the Altar, as it was then uſed.

Twelfthly, that he had affirmed, that praying to Saints, and prayers for the dead, were neither good nor profitable, and that a man is not bound to faſt and pray, but at his owne will and pleaſure; neither that it is lawfull to reſerve the Sacrament, or to worſhip it.

Thirteenthly, that the ſaid Allerton hath, according to theſe his affirmations, abſtained and refuſed to come unto his Pariſh Church ever ſince the 10. day of January laſt, or to uſe, receive, or allow any ceremonies, ſacraments, or other rites then uſed in the Church.

To all theſe Articles he anſwered affirmatively, denying preciſely none of them; ſaving to this clauſe contained in the twelfth Article, that a man is not bound to faſt and pray but at his owne will and pleaſure, he ſaid that he had affirmed no ſuch thing, but he confeſſed that he had not faſted nor prayed ſo oft as he was bound to doe. And unto this anſwer he alſo ſubſcribed in this ſort.

> Except it be proved otherwiſe by the holy Scripture, I doe affirme theſe Articles to be true. By me Ralfe Allerton.

The next examination was the fourth day of July. The acts whereof, becauſe they doe appeare more amply in his other examination, had the 10. day of September, I doe here omit, giving you farther to underſtand, that upon the ſeventh day of the ſame moneth of July, he was brought before Doctor Darbiſhire in the Biſhops Palace, who examined him againe upon the former Articles, and after perſwaded him to recant, threatning him that otherwiſe he ſhould be burned. To whom he boldly anſwered, I would I might be condemned even to morrow; for I perceive my Lord (meaning Boner) doth nothing but ſeeke mens blood. Upon which ſaying, Darbiſhire committed him againe to priſon, and the 10. day of September the Biſhop cauſed him (with the other three abovenamed) to be brought unto Fulham, and there in his private Chappell within his houſe, he judicially propounded unto him certaine other new Articles; of the which, the tenors of the firſt, fifth, ſixth, and ſeventh, are already mentioned in the ſecond, third, and fourth former objections: As for the reſt, the contents thereof here follow.

Thou Ralfe Allerton canſt not deny, but that the Information given againſt thee, and remaining now in the acts of this Court of thine Ordinary, Edmund Biſhop of London, was and is a true Information.

Perſecutors. Information given againſt Ralfe Allerton, by Sir Thomas Tye Prieſt, a wicked Promooter.

This Information was given by Thomas Tye, Curate of Bentley (of whom you have already heard) and certaine other of the ſame Pariſh and affinity: as namely, John Painter, William Harris, John Barker, John Carter, Thomas Candeler, Jeffry Beſtwood, John Richard, Richard Meere.

The effect whereof was, that one Laurence Edwards of Bentley aforeſaid, had a childe that was unchriſtened, and being demanded by the ſaid Tye, why his childe was not baptiſed, hee made anſwer it ſhould be when he could finde one of his Religion (meaning a true profeſſour of Chriſts Goſpell.) Whereat the Curate ſaid, Ah, ye have had ſome inſtructer that hath ſchooled you of late. Yea (quoth the ſaid Edwards) that I have, and if your doctrine be better then his, then I will beleeve you; and therewithall fondly offered to fetch him.

Whereupon the Conſtable going with him, they brought before the ſaid Curate the ſaid Ralfe Allerton; of whom in this Information they make this report that he was a ſeditious perſon, who ſince his comming downe from the Biſhop, had ſet upon the Conſtables doore certaine ſeditious Letters, moving and perſwading thereby the people to follow his malicious diſobedience; and that theſe his perſwaſions had taken effect in many: And farther, that the ſaid Ralfe Allerton (the Curate asking him whether he had inſtructed this Laurance Edwards, that it was againſt Gods commandement to enter into the Church) caſting abroad his hands, ſhould ſay; Oh good people, now is fulfilled the ſaying of the godly Prieſt and Prophet Esdras, who ſaith, 4. Eſd. 16. The fire of a multitude is kindled againſt a few: they have taken away their houſes, and ſpoiled their goods, &c. Which of you all have not ſeene this day? who is he here amongſt you, that ſeeth not all theſe things done upon us this day? The Church which they call us unto, is the Church of Antichriſt, a perſecuting Church, and the Church malignant. With theſe and many moe words (ſaid they, moſt maliciouſly, and falſly alledged out of the Scriptures) he thus perſwaded a great multitude there preſent (as much as in him lay) unto diſobedience. For the which cauſe the Conſtables did then apprehend him.

3 Item, thou Ralfe Allerton canſt not denie, but that the letter ſent unto me by my Lord Darcy, beginning with theſe words (Pleaſeth it your Lordſhip, &c.) was thine owne letter, and was ſubſcribed by thine owne hand.

The contents of the letter mentioned in this Article, and written by Allerton unto the Lord Darcy, was a confeſſion of his demeanour before his firſt apprehenſion; the effect and purport whereof, becauſe it appeareth in the beginning of his Hiſtory, I doe here omit.

4 Item, thou Ralfe Allerton canſt not deny, but that the other letter, ſent alſo to me from my ſaid Lord Darcy, beginning thus (Pleaſeth it your Lordſhip, &c.) and ending with thoſe words (whenſoever it be) is thine owne very letter, and ſubſcribed with thine owne hand.

This was alſo another letter written by him unto the Lord Darcy, the contents whereof were, that where the ſaid Lord had commanded him to declare where he had been ever ſince Whitſontide laſt before his firſt apprehenſion, this was to certifie his Lordſhip, that he was not able ſo to doe, otherwiſe then as he had already ſhewed him by his former letters. And moreover, whereas he charged him to have read unto the people abroad in the woods, he certified him that he did never reade any thing abroad, ſaving once when hee was in the company of George Eagles and others, Richard Roth tooke a writing out of his boſome, and deſired the ſaid Ralfe to reade it. which requeſt he then accompliſhed; and demanding of him whoſe doing the ſame was, the ſaid Roth told that it was Maſter Cranmers, late Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and farther he could not ſhew him. Nevertheleſſe, he was ready and willing to ſuffer ſuch puniſhment as his Lordſhip ſhould thinke meete, deſiring yet that the ſame might be with favour and mercy, although he feared neither puniſhment nor death, praying the Lord, that it might be in his feare, whenſoever it ſhould be.

8 Item, thou Ralfe Allerton canſt not deny, but that the letters written with blood, beginning with theſe words (Grace, mercy, and peace, &c.) and ending thus, (Farewell in God) remaining now regiſtred in the acts of this Court, were written voluntarily with thine owne hand.

He wrote this letter in the priſon with blood for lacke of other inke, and did meane to ſend the ſame unto Agnes Smith, alias Silverſide, at that time impriſoned, and afterward burned at Colcheſter for the teſtimony of the Goſpell of Chriſt, as before is mentioned. The copy of which letter here enſueth.

A Letter written by Ralfe Allerton, unto Agnes Smith, Widow.

A Letter of Ralfe Allerton.

GRace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, with the aſſiſtance of Gods holy Spirit, and the aboundant health both of ſoule and body, I wiſh unto you, as to my owne ſoule, as God knoweth, who is the ſearcher of all ſecrets.

Foraſmuch as it hath pleaſed Almighty God of his infinite mercy to call me to the ſtate of grace, to ſuffer Martyrdome for Jeſus Chriſts ſake, although heretofore I have moſt negligently dallied therewith; and therefore far unworthy I am of ſuch an high benefit, to be crowned with the moſt joyfull crowne of Martyrdome: Nevertheleſſe, it hath pleaſed God not ſo to leave me, but hath raiſed me up againe according to his promiſe, which ſaith; Although he fall, yet ſhall he not be hurt: For the Lord upholdeth him with his hand, Pſal. 37. Whereby we perceive Gods election to be moſt ſure; for undoubtedly he will preſerve all thoſe that are appointed to die. And as he hath begun this worke in me, even ſo doe I beleeve that he will finiſh the ſame, to his great glory, and to my wealth, through Jeſus Chriſt. So be it.

Dearely beloved ſiſter (I am conſtrained ſo to call you, becauſe of your conſtant faith and love unfained) conſider, that if we be the true ſervants of Chriſt, then may not we in any wiſe make agreement with his enemy Antichriſt. For there is no concord and agreement betweene them, ſaith the Scriptures, and a man cannot ſerve two maſters, ſaith Chriſt. And alſo it is prefigured unto us in the old Law, whereas the people of God were moſt ſtraitly commanded that they ſhould not mingle themſelves with the ungodly heathen, and were alſo forbidden to eate, drinke, or to marry with them. For as often as they did either marry unto their ſons, or take their daughters unto them, or to their ſons, even ſo oft came the great and heavy wrath of God upon his owne people, to overthrow both them and all their Cities, with the holy Sanctuary of God; and brought in ſtrange Princes to raigne over them, and wicked Rulers to governe them, ſo that they were ſure of hunger, ſword, peſtilence, and wilde Beaſts to devoure them. Which plagues never ceaſed, untill the good people of G O D were cleane ſeparated from the wicked Idolatrous people.

Oh dearely beloved, this was written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. And is it not in like caſe hapned now in this Realme of England? For now are the people of God had in deriſion, and troden under foote, and the Cities, Townes, and houſes where they dwelt, are inhabited with them that have no right thereunto, and the true owners are ſpoiled of their labours: yea, and the holy Sanctuary of Gods moſt bleſſed Word is laid deſolate and waſte, ſo that the very Foxes run over it, &c. yet is it the food of our ſoules, the lanterne of our feete, and the light unto our pathes; and where it is not preached, the people periſh. Bat the Prophet ſaith, Eſay 59. He that refraineth himſelfe from evill, muſt be ſpoiled. Why ſhould we then be abaſhed to be ſpoiled, ſeeing that it is told us before, that it muſt ſo happen unto them that refraine from evill? And thus I bid you farewell in God.

R. A.

Item, thou Ralfe Allerton, canſt not deny, but that the letters written with blood, beginning with theſe words in the over part thereof: (The Angel of God, &c.) and ended thus (Be with you, Amen.) and having alſo this Poſtſcript (Doe yee ſuppoſe that our brethren, &c.) remaining now regiſtred in the acts of this Court, are thine owne hand-writing.

· 9 For the better underſtanding of this Article, I have alſo here inſerted the copy of the letter mentioned in the ſame; which letter he wrote (by his owne confeſſion) unto Richard Roth, then in danger of the ſubtle ſnares of that bloody Wolfe Boner.

¶ A letter written by Ralfe Allerton unto Richard Roth, his fellow-Martyr.

A Letter of Ralfe Allerton.

THe Angel of God pitch his tent about us, and defend us in all our waies, Amen, Amen.

O deare brother, I pray for you; for I heare ſay, that you have been divers times before my Lord in examination. Wherefore take heed for Gods ſake what the wiſe man teacheth you, and ſhrinke not away when you are entiſed to confeſſe an untruth, for hope of life, but be ready alwaies to give an anſwer of the hope that is in you. For whoſoever confeſſeth Chriſt before men, him will Chriſt alſo confeſſe before his Father. But he that is aſhamed to confeſſe him before men, ſhall have his reward with them that doe deny him. And therefore, deare brother, goe forward: ye have a ready way, ſo faire as ever had any of the Prophets or Apoſtles, or the reſt of our brethren, the holy Martyrs of God. Therefore covet to goe hence with the multitude while the way is full. Alſo (deare brother) underſtand that I have ſeene your letter, and although I cannot reade it perfectly, yet I partly perceive your meaning therein, and very gladly I would copy it out, with certaine comfortable additions thereunto annexed. The which as yet will not be brought to paſſe for lacke of paper, untill my Lord be gone from hence, and then your requeſt ſhall be accompliſhed, God willing, without delay. Thus fare ye well in God. Our deare brother and fellow in tribulation, Robert Allen, ſaluteth you, and the fellowſhip of the holy Ghoſt be with you, Amen.

Ralfe Allerton.

Poſtſcriptum.

Doe ye ſuppoſe that our brethren and ſiſters are not yet diſpatched out of this world? I thinke that either they are dead, or ſhall be within theſe two daies.

And for the other objection yet remaining, and not ſpecified, if it were not more ſomewhat to ſhew the folly of theſe bloudy Tyrants (which of ſo ſmall trifles take occaſions to quarrell with the Saints of God) than for any weighty thing therein contained; I would neither trouble you with the reading thereof, nor yet my ſelfe with writing. But that ye may judge of them as their doings doe give occaſion, I will now proceed in the matter.

Item, thou Ralfe Allerton canſt not deny, but confeſſeſt, that the writing of letters in a little peece of Paper on both ſides of it, with this ſentence tence following on the one ſide (looke at the foote of the Stockes for a knife) and with this ſentence following upon the other ſide (looke betweene the poſt and the wall for two bookes and two Epiſtles, leave them here when ye goe) remaining now in the Regiſter and Acts of this Court, is voluntarily written by thee Ralfe Allerton with thine owne hand.

Item, thou Ralfe Allerton canſt not deny, but that thou art privy to a certaine writing remaining now in the Regiſter and Acts of this Court, the beginning whereof is with theſe words (I would have men wiſe, &c.) and ending thus (from houſe to houſe.)

Item, thou Ralfe Allerton canſt not deny, but that thou art privy, and of conſent and maintenance of a certaine great Woodknife, a long cord, a hooke, a ſtone, and of a trencher written upon with chalke, having this ſentence (All is gone and loſt, becauſe of your folly:) of two boords written upon with chalke, the one having this ſentence (under the ſtone looke) and the other having this ſentence (whereas you bid me take heed, I thanke you, I truſt in God that I ſhall be at peace with him ſhortly) remaining now regiſtred in the Acts of this Court.

Anſwers to the Articles. Ex Regiſt.

For anſwer unto all theſe Articles, he granted that the firſt nine were true, as the Regiſter recordeth. Howbeit, I finde noted in the backſide of the information, ſpecified in the ſecond Article (although croſſed out againe) that he denyed ſuch things as were there in the ſame informed againſt him. Wherefore it is not likely that he did ſimply grant unto the contents of the ſecond Article, but rather that he only affirmed, that ſuch an information was given againſt him, and not that the ſame was true.

Thus much I thought to warne the Reader of, leſt that in miſtaking his anſwers, it might ſeeme, that he granted himſelfe to be a ſeditious and a rebellious perſon; of which fact he was moſt cleere and innocent. And being farther demanded upon the contents of the eighth Article, where he had the blood he wrote that letter withall; he ſaid, that Richard Roth, ſometime his priſon-fellow, did make his noſe bleed, and thereby he got the blood wherewith he did then write. The Biſhop again aſked him, to whom he would have ſent the ſame. He anſwered, unto one Agnes Smith, alias Silverſide, of Colcheſter. Why (quoth the Biſhop) Agnes Smith was an heretike, and is burned for hereſie. Nay, ſaid Allerton, ſhe is in better caſe, then either I my ſelfe, or any of us all. Then being againe demanded (upon the ninth objection) to whom he would have ſent the letter mentioned in the ſame; he anſwered, that hee meant to have ſent it unto Richard Roth, at that preſent ſeparated from him. Whereupon the Biſhop farther inquired, what he meant by theſe words (brethren and ſiſters) ſpecified in the ſaid letter? He anſwered, that he meant thereby, ſuch as were lately condemned at Colcheſter, and were like (at the writing thereof) ſhortly to bee burned. Now as for the contents of the tenth and the eleventh Articles he utterly denied them. But to the twelfth he confeſſed, that he writ upon the ſaid trencher and other boords, the words mentioned in the ſaid Article, and that he did leave the ſame in the priſon-houſe, to the intent that Richard Roth ſhould reade them. Boner alſo bringing out the wooden ſword, mentioned in the ſaid Article, aſked him who made it, and for what purpoſe. Whereunto he anſwered, that he was the maker thereof, howbeit for no evill purpoſe. But being idle in the priſon, and finding there an olde boord, he thought the time better ſpent in making thereof, then to ſit ſtill, and doe nothing at all.

The forenoone being now ſpent, the reſt of this tragedy was deferred untill the afternoone. Wherein was miniſtred unto him yet certaine other objections, the tenor whereof was.

Other objections miniſtred to Ralfe Allerton.

First, that he had miſliked the Maſſe, calling upon Saints, and carrying the Croſſe in Proceſſion, with other their ceremonies, calling them Idolatry, and alſo had diſſwaded them therefrom.

2 Item, that he was much deſirous to have the people beleeve as he did; and therefore being in priſon with his fellowes, did ſing Pſalmes and other Songs againſt the ſacrament of the Altar, and other ordinances of the Church, ſo loud that the people abroad might heare them and delight in them.

3 Item, that he had divers times conſpired againſt his Keeper, and had provided things to kill him, and ſo to breake the priſon, and eſcape away.

4 Item, that he had railed againſt the Biſhop, being his Ordinary, calling him a bloody Butcher, Tyrant, and ravening Wolfe, and alſo againſt his Officers, eſpecially Cluny his Sumner, calling him Butchers Curre, with other ſuch names.

5 Item, that he had murmured, grudged, diſdained, and miſliked, that the Biſhop had proceeded againſt certaine of his Dioceſſe, and had condemned them as heretikes; or that he ſhould proceed now againſt him and others yet remaining in errors, notwithſtanding that he and his Chaplaines had charitably admoniſhed and exhorted them from the ſame.

6 Item, that he ought faithfully to beleeve, that there is one Catholike Church, without the which there is no ſalvation; of the which Church Jeſus Chriſt is the very Prieſt and Sacrifice, whoſe body and blood is really and truly contained in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the formes of bread and wine; the bread and wine being by the divine power tranſubſtantiated into his body and blood.

7 Item, that he had kept himſelfe, and alſo diſtributed to others certaine hereticall and corrupt bookes, condemned and reproved by the lawes of this Realme.

8 Item, that he had, contrary to the orders and ſtatutes of this Realme, kept company with that ſeditious heretike and traitor, George Eagles, commonly called Trudgeover, and had heard him reade in woods and other places, yet not accuſing, but allowing and praiſing him.

Unto which Articles, becauſe they were for the moſt part ſo fooliſh and full of lies, he would in a manner make no anſwer, ſaving he granted that he did miſlike their Maſſe and other ceremonies, becauſe they were wicked and naught. And moreover, he told the Biſhop, that he and his complices did nothing but ſeeke how to kill innocents.

The Biſhop then aſked him, whether he would beleeve in all points touching the Sacrament of the Altar, as is contained in the generall Councell holden and kept under Innocentius the third, and therewithall he did reade the decree of the ſaid Councell touching the Sacrament.

Whereunto Allerton againe made anſwer and ſaid; I beleeve nothing contained in the ſame Councell, neither have I any thing to doe therewith; and it were alſo very neceſſary, that no man elſe ſhould have to doe therewith.

Then (quoth Boner) thou art of the opinion that the heretikes lately burned at Colcheſter were of.

Yea, ſaid he, I am of their opinion, and I beleeve that they be Saints in heaven.

This done, the Biſhop perceiving that hee would not recant, demanded what he had to ſay, why he ſhould not pronounce the ſentence of condemnation againſt him. To whom he anſwered; Ye ought not to condemne me as an heretike, for I am a good Chriſtian. But now goe to, doe as you have already determined: For I ſee right well, that right and truth be ſuppreſſed, and cannot appeare upon the earth.

These words ended, the Biſhop pronounced the ſentence of condemnation, and ſo delivered him unto the temporall Officers: Who reſerved him in their cuſtody untill the 17. day of September, at which time, both hee and the other three before mentioned, were all burned, as ye have already heard. Of which other three, becauſe as yet little is ſayd, I will therefore now proceede to declare ſuch cauſe of their cruell deaths, as in the Regiſter is recorded.

Iames Auſtoo and Margery his wife.

Examination of James Auſtoo and Margery his wife.

TOuching the firſt apprehenſion of theſe two perſons, I finde neyther occaſion why, neyther time nor manner how. Howbeit, as the dayes then ſerved, it was no hard or ſtrange matter to fall into the hands of ſuch, as with cruelty perſecuted the true profeſſors of Gods Goſpel, eſpecially having ſo many Promoters, and unneighbourly neighbours to helpe them forwards. By which kinde of people, it is not unlike theſe two godly yoke-fellowes were accuſed and taken; and being once delivered into the pitileſſe handling of Boner, their examinations (ye may bee ſure) were not long deferred. For the 16. day of July 1557. they were brought before him into his place at London. Where firſt he demanded of the ſayd James Auſtoo (amongſt other queſtions) where he had been confeſſed in Lent, and whether he received the ſacrament of the altar at Eaſter, or not?

To whom he anſwered, that indeed he had been confeſſed of the Curate of Alhallowes Barking, nigh to the Tower of London, but that he had not received the ſacrament of the altar; for he defied it from the bottome of his heart.

Why (quoth the Biſhop) doeſt not thou beleeve, that in the ſacrament of the altar there is the true body and bloud of Chriſt?

No, ſayd Auſtoo, not in the ſacrament of the altar, but in the Supper of the Lord, to the faithfull receiver is the very body and bloud of Chriſt by faith.

Boner not well pleaſed with this talke, aſked then the wife, how ſhe did like the religion then uſed in this Church of England?

Shee anſwered, that ſhe beleeved, that the ſame was not according to Gods Word, but falſe and corrupted, and that they which did goe thereunto, did it more for feare of the law, than otherwiſe.

Then he againe aſked her, if ſhe would goe to the Church and heare Maſſe, and pray for the proſperous eſtate of the King, being then abroad in his affaires.

Whereunto ſhe ſayd, that ſhe defied the Maſſe with all her heart, and that ſhe would not come into any Church wherein were Idols.

After this, the Biſhop objected unto them certaine Articles, to the number of eighteene. The tenor whereof (becauſe they touch only ſuch common and trifling matters as are already mentioned in divers and ſundry places before) I doe here for brevities ſake omit and paſſe over; giving you yet this much to underſtand, that in the matters of faith they were as ſound, and anſwered as truly (God be therefore praiſed) as ever any did, eſpecially the woman, to whom the Lord had given the greater knowledge, and more ferventneſſe of ſpirit. Notwithſtanding, according to the meaſure of grace that GOD gave them, they both ſtood moſt firmely unto the truth. And therefore to conclude, the 10. day of September they were (with Ralfe Allerton, of whom ye have heard) brought againe before the Biſhop within his Chappell at Fulham, where hee ſpeaking unto them, ſayd firſt on this wiſe; Auſtoo, doeſt thou know where thou art now, and in what place, and before whom, and what thou haſt to doe?

Yea (quoth Auſtoo) I know where I am: For I am in an Idols temple.

After which words, their Articles being againe read, and their conſtancy in faith perceived, Boner pronounced againſt either of them ſeverally the ſentence of condemnation, and delivering them unto the Sheriffe there preſent, did rid his hands (as he thought) of them; but the Lord in the end will judge that: to whom I referre his cauſe.

Margery Auſtoo terrified in priſon.

It ſo hapned upon a night, that as this Margery Auſtoo was in the Biſhops priſon (which priſon, I ſuppoſe, was his Dogge-kenell; for it was, as is reported, under a paire of ſtaires) by the Biſhops procurement there was ſent a ſtout champion (as appeared) about twelve of the clock at night, who ſuddenly opened the doore, and with a knife drawne, or ready prepared, fell upon her, to the intent to have cut her throate. Which ſhe by reaſon of the cleereneſſe of the Moone perceiving, and calling unto GOD for helpe, he (but who it was ſhe knew not) giving a grunt, and fearing belike to commit ſo cruell a deede, departed his waies without any more hurt doing.

The next night following, they cauſed a great rumbling to be made over her head, which ſeemed to her to have been ſome great thunder, which they did to have feared her out of her wits, but yet, thankes be to God, they miſſed of their purpoſe.

Richard Roth.

Examination of Rich Roth.

IN the godly fellowſhip of the forenamed three Martyrs, was alſo this Richard Roth, as is already ſpecified. Who being apprehended, and brought up unto the Biſhop of London, was by him examined the fourth day of July; at what time the Biſhop did earneſtly travell to induce him to beleeve that there were ſeven ſacraments in Chriſts Church, and that in the ſacrament of the altar (after the words of conſecration duely ſpoken) there remained the very ſubſtance of Chriſts body and bloud, and none other. Whereunto (at that preſent) he made only this anſwer; that if the Scripture did ſo teach him, and that he might be by the ſame ſo perſwaded, he would ſo beleeve, otherwiſe not. But at another examination (which was the 9. day of September) he declared plainly, that in the ſayd ſacrament of the altar (as it was then uſed) there was not the very body and bloud of Chriſt, but that it was a dead God, and that the Maſſe was deteſtable, and contrary to Gods holy Word and will, from the which faith and opinion he would not goe or decline.

The next day, being the tenth day of the ſame moneth of September, the Biſhop at his houſe at Fulham (by way of an Article) laid and objected againſt him; that he was a comforter and boldner of heretikes: and therefore had written a letter to that effect unto certaine that were burned at Colcheſter; the copy whereof enſueth.

Anno 1557.

A letter written by Richard Roth, unto certaine brethren and ſiſters in Chriſt, condemned at Colcheſter, and ready to be burned for the teſtimony of the truth.

A letter of Rich. Roth.

O Deare brethren and ſiſters, how much have you to reioyce in God, that hee hath given you ſuch faith to overcome this bloud-thirſtie Tyrant thus farre: and no doubt he that hath begun that good worke in you, will fulfill it unto the end. O deare hearts in Chriſt, what a crowne of glory ſhall ye receive with Chriſt in the Kingdome of God? Oh that it had beene the good will of God that I had beene ready to have gone with you. For I lye in my Lords little eaſe in the day, and in the night I lie in the Colehouſe, from Ralfe Allerton, or any other: and we looke every day when wee ſhall be condemned. For hee ſayd, that I ſhould bee burned within ten dayes before Eaſter; but I lie ſtill at the pooles brinke, and every man goeth in before me: but wee abide patiently the Lords leaſure, with many bands, in fetters and ſtockes; by the which we have received great ioy in God. And now fare you well dear brethren and ſiſters, in this world, but I truſt to ſee you in the heavens face to face.

Oh brother Munt, with your wife and my dear ſiſter Roſe, how bleſſed are you in the Lord, that God hath found you worthy to ſuffer for his ſake; with all the reſt of my deare brethren and ſiſters knowne and unknowne. O be ioyfull even unto death. Feare it not, ſaith Chriſt; for I have overcome death, ſaith he. Oh deare hearts, ſeeing that Ieſus Chriſt will be our helpe, Oh tarry you the Lords leaſure. Be ſtrong, let your hearts bee of good comfort, and waite you ſtill for the Lord. He is at hand. Yea, the Angel of the Lord pitcheth his tent round about them that feare him, and delivereth them which way he ſeeth beſt. For our lives are in the Lords hands; and they can doe nothing unto us before God ſuffer them. Therefore give all thankes to God.

Oh deare hearts, you ſhall be clothed with long white garments upon the mount Sion, with the multitude of Saints, and with Ieſus Chriſt our Saviour, which will never forſake us. Oh bleſſed Virgins, ye have played the wiſe Virgins part, in that you have taken oyle in your lamps, that ye may go in with the Bridegroome, when he commeth into the everlaſting ioy with him. But as for the fooliſh, they ſhall be ſhut out, becauſe they made not themſelves ready to ſuffer with Chriſt, neither goe about to take up his Croſſe. Oh deare hearts, how precious ſhall your death be in the ſight of the Lord? for deare is the death of his Saints. O fare you well, and pray. The grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt be with you all, Amen, Amen. Pray, pray, pray.

By me Richard Roth, written with mine owne bloud.

This letter he confeſſed indeede (upon the ſaid examination) that he had written with his bloud, and that he meant to have ſent the ſame unto ſuch as were condemned at Colcheſter for the Goſpel of Ieſus Chriſt, and were afterwards burned there, as ye have already heard.

The Biſhop then farther asked him, what he thought his priſon-fellow Ralfe Allerton to be?

The teſtimony of Richard Roth of Ralfe Allerton.

He anſwered, that he thought him to be one of the elect children of God; and that if at any time hereafter hee hapned to bee put to death for his faith and religion, he thought he ſhould die a true Martyr. And moreover, finding himſelfe agrieved with the Biſhops privy and ſecret condemning of Gods people, hee ſayd unto him in this ſort; My Lord, becauſe the people ſhould not ſee and behold your doings, ye cauſe me and others to be brought to our examinations by night, being affraid (belike) to doe it by day.

The Biſhop not greatly caring for his talke, proceeded to examine him of other matters, amongſt which this high and weighty thing was one, videlicet, how he did like the order and rites of the Church then uſed here in England.

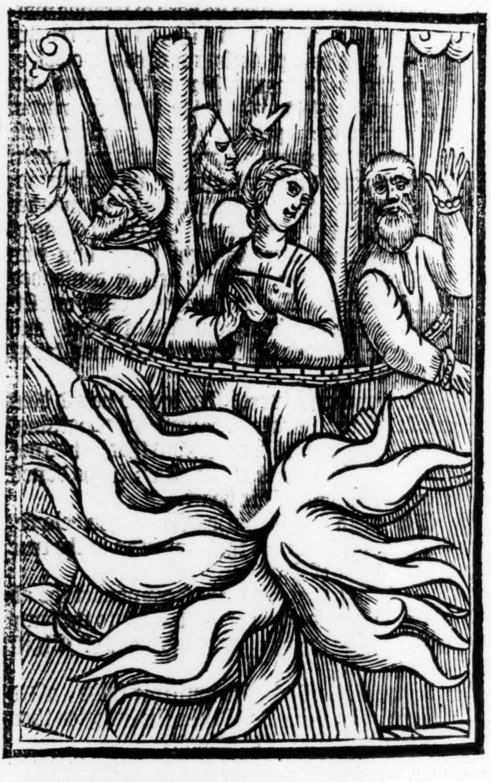
To whom he ſayd, that he ever had, and yet then did abhorre the ſame with all his heart.

Then divers of the Biſhops complices intreated and perſwaded him to recant, and aske mercy of the Biſhop.

The condemnation of Ric. Roth.

No (quoth Roth) I will not aske mercy of him that cannot give it. Whereupon he was (as the reſt before mentioned) condemned, and delivered unto the Sheriffe, and the 17. day of September they all moſt ioyfully ended their lives in one fire at Iſlington, for the teſtimony of Chriſt, as before is declared.

The martyrdome of Ralfe Allerton, Iames Auſtoo, Margery Auſtoo. Richard Roth, An. 1557. Sep. 17.



¶ Agnes Bongeor, and Margaret Thurſton, two godly Chriſtian women, burnt at Colcheſter for the ſincere profeſſion of Chriſts Goſpel.

September. Margaret Thurſton, Agnes Bongeor, Martyrs.

A Little before (gentle Reader) was mention made of ten that ſuffered martyrdome at Colcheſter, at which time there were two other women alſo one called Margaret Thurſton, and the other Agnes Bongeor, that ſhould have ſuffered with them, and were likewiſe condemned at the ſame time and place that the other above-named ten were, for the like cauſe, and anſwered alſo in their examinations the like in effect as the other did. But the one, namely Margaret Thurſton, that morning ſhe ſhould ſuffer with thoſe that went from the Caſtle, was for that time deferred. What the cauſe was, the teſtimony of Ioane Cooke ſhall declare unto us. Which Ioan Cook, the wife now of Iohn Spark, being then in the caſtle of Colcheſter for religion, did demand of this widow Thurſton, whoſe huſband died in the priſon, being impriſoned for religion, wherefore the ſaid Margaret, being a condemned woman, ſhould be reſerved when the other ſuffered in the caſtle Baily: She anſwered, that it was not for any feare of death, but being prepared, as the reſt were that ſuffered the ſame day, ſhe felt in her ſelfe a great ſhivering and trembling of the fleſh. Whereupon forſaking the company, ſhe went aſide to pray. And whileſt ſhe was a praying, ſhe thought that ſhe was lifted up with a mighty wind that came round about her. Even at that inſtant came in the Goaler and company with him, and whilſt ſhe turned her ſelfe to fetch her Pſalter, they tooke the other priſoners and left her alone. Shortly after ſhe was removed out of the Caſtle, and put into the Towne-priſon, where ſhe continued untill Friday ſevennight after her company were burnt. That day, not two houres before her death, ſhe was brought to the Caſtle againe, where ſhe declared thus much to the foreſaid Ioane Cooke.

The martyrdome of Margaret Thurſton, and Agnes Bongeor deferred, for what cauſes.

The other, named Agnes Bongeor, who ſhould have ſuffered in like manner with the ſixe that went out of Motehall, was alſo kept back at that time, but not in like ſort, becauſe her name was wrong written within the Writ, as in the Bayliffes letter of Colcheſter, ſent to Boner about the ſame, more plainly doth appeare in the booke of our firſt edition, pag. 1632.

The name of Agnes Bongeor miſtaken.

The ſame morning, the ſecond of Auguſt, that the ſaid ſixe in Motehall were called out to goe to their martyrdome, was Agnes Bongeor alſo called with them, by the name of Agnes Bowyer. Wherefore the Bayliffes underſtanding her (as I ſayd) to be wrong named within the Writ, commanded the ſayd Agnes Bongeor to priſon again, as ye have heard in the letter before named, and ſo from Motehall that day ſent her to the Caſtle, where ſhe remained untill her death.

Agnes Bongeor troubled for not ſuffering with her company.

But when ſhe ſaw her ſelfe ſo ſeparated from her ſayd priſon-fellowes in that ſort, Oh good Lord what pitious mone that good woman made, how bitterly ſhe wept, what ſtrange thoughts came into her minde, how naked and deſolate ſhe eſteemed her ſelfe, and into what plunge of deſpaire and care her poore ſoule was brought, it was pitious and wonderfull to ſee: which all came becauſe ſhe went not with them to give her life in the defence of her Chriſt; for of all things in the world, life was leaſt looked for at her hands. For that morning in which ſhe was kept backe from burning, had ſhe put on a ſmocke that ſhe had prepared only for that purpoſe. And alſo having a childe, a little young infant ſucking on her, whom ſhe kept with her tenderly all the time that ſhe was in priſon, againſt that day likewiſe did ſhe ſend away to another Nurſe, and prepared her ſelfe preſently to give her ſelfe for the teſtimony of the glorious Goſpel of Ieſus Chriſt. So little did ſhe looke for life, and ſo greatly did Gods gifts worke in her above nature, that death ſeemed a great deale better welcome than life. But this tooke not effect at that time as ſhe thought it would, and therefore (as I ſaid) was ſhe not a little troubled.

Being in this great perplexity of minde, a friend of hers came to her, and required to know whether Abrahams obedience was accepted before God, for that he did ſacrifice his ſon Iſaac, or in that he would have offered him? Unto which ſhe anſwered thus:

I know (quoth ſhe) that Abrahams will before God was allowed for the deede, in that he would have done it, if the Angel of the Lord had not ſtaied him: but I (ſayd ſhe) am unhappy, the Lord thinketh mee not worthy of this dignity; and therefore Abrahams caſe and mine is not alike.

Why (quoth her friend) would ye not willingly have gone with your company, if God ſhould ſo have ſuffered it?

Yes (ſaid ſhe) with all my heart, and becauſe I did not, it is now my chief and greateſt griefe.

Then ſaid her friend; My deare ſiſter, I pray thee conſider Abraham and thy ſelfe well, and thou ſhalt ſee thou doeſt nothing differ with him in will at all.

Alas (quoth ſhe) there is a farre greater matter in Abraham than in me; for Abraham was tried with the offering of his owne childe, but ſo am not I; and therefore our caſes are not alike.

Good ſiſter (quoth her friend) weigh the matter but indifferently. Abraham I grant (ſayd hee) would have offered his ſonne: and have not you done the like in your little ſucking babe? But conſider further than this, my good ſiſter (ſaid he) where Abraham was commanded but to offer his ſonne; you are heavy and grieved becauſe you offer not your ſelfe, which goeth ſomewhat more neere you than Abrahams obedience did; and therefore before God aſſuredly, is no leſſe accepted and allowed in his holy preſence; which further the preparing of your ſhroud alſo doth argue full well, &c. After which talke betweene them, ſhe began a little to ſtay her ſelfe, and gave her whole exerciſe to reading and prayer, wherein ſhe found no little comfort.

Agnes Bongeor receiveth comfort.

In the time that theſe foreſaid two good women were priſoners, one in the Caſtle, and the other in Motehall, God by a ſecret meane called the ſayd Margaret Thurſton unto his truth againe; who, having her eyes opened by the working of his ſpirit, did greatly ſorrow and lament her backſliding before, and promiſed faithfully to the Lord, in hope of his mercies, never more while ſhe lived to doe the like againe, but that ſhe would conſtantly ſtand to the confeſſion of the ſame, againſt all the adverſaries of the Croſſe of Chriſt. After which promiſe made, came in a ſhort time a Writ from London for the burning of them, which according to the effect thereof was executed the 17. day of September, in the yéere aforeſayd.

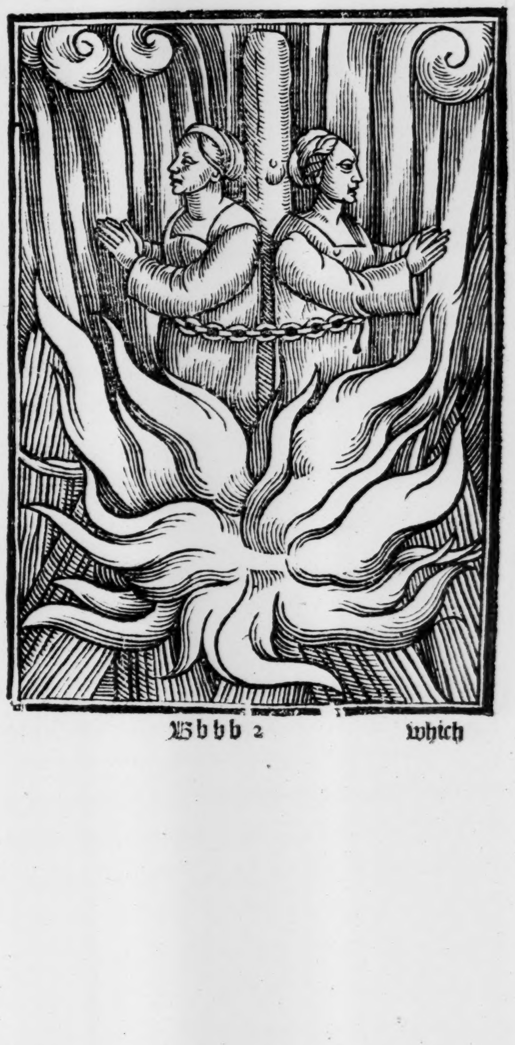
The martyrdome of Margaret Thurſton, Agnes Bongeor, at Colcheſter. An. 1557. Sep. 17.



Anno 1557.

Now when theſe foreſayd good women were brought to the place in Colcheſter where they ſhould ſuffer the 17. day of September, in the yéere afore ſayd, they fell downe upon both their knées, and made their humble prayers unto the Lord: which thing being done, they roſe and went to the ſtake joyfully, and were immediately thereto chained, and after the fire had compaſſed them about, they with great joy and glorious triumph gave up their ſoules, ſpirits, and lives, into the hands of the Lord, under whoſe government and protection, for Chriſts ſake we beſéech him to grant us his holy defence and helpe for ever more, Amen.

Thus (gentle Reader) God chooſeth the weake things of the world, to confound mighty things.

Iohn Kurde, Martyr.

Septemb. 20. John Kurde, Martyr.

IN the ſtory before, was ſomething touched of a certaine Shoomaker ſuffering at Northampton, being unnamed, whom becauſe wée underſtand by a letter ſent from the ſayd parties, that he ſuffered in this yéere, 1557. and in the moneth of September, therefore wée thought there to place him. His name was John Kurde, a Shoomaker, late of the Pariſh of Syrſam in Northampton ſhire, who was impriſoned in Northampton Caſtle for denying the Popiſh tranſubſtantiation, for the which cauſe William Binſley Bachelor of Law, and Chancellor unto the Biſhop of Peterborough, and now Archdeacon of Northampton, did pronounce ſentence of death againſt the ſayd Kurde, in the Church of all Saints in Northampton, in Auguſt, Anno 1557. And in September following, at the commandement of ſir Thomas Treſham, Sheriffe then of the Shire hée was led by his Officers without the Northgate of Northampton, and in the ſtone pits was burned. A Popiſh Prieſt ſtanding by, whoſe name was John Rote, Vicar of Saint Giles in Northampton, did declare unto him, that if hée would recant, he was authoriſed to give him his pardon. His anſwer was, that he had his pardon by Jeſus Chriſt, &c.

Wil. Binſley Chancellor to the biſhop of Peterborogh, and now archdeacon of Northampton, condemned John Kurde.

John Rote a Popiſh prieſt. Popiſh pardon refuſed.

¶ A true Certificate of the taking of one Iohn Noyes of Laxefield, in the County of Suffolke, Shoomaker, who was taken the nineteenth day of April, in the yeere of our Lord God, 1557. as hereafter followeth.

Septemb. 12.

IN the moneth of September this preſent yéer, or (as ſome report) in the yéer paſt, ſuffered the bleſſed Martyr Jo. Noyes, whoſe ſtory here followeth.

First, Maſter Thomas Lovell being then chief Conſtable of Horton Hundred, in the County aforeſayd, and one John Jacob, and William Stannard then being under-Conſtables of the foreſayd Towne of Laxefield, and Wolfren Dowſing, and Nicholas Stannard of the ſame Town, being then accounted faithfull and catholike Chriſtians, though undoubtedly they proved moſt cruell hinderers of the true profeſſours of Chriſt and his Goſpel, with others, were commanded to bée that preſent day before the Juſtices, whoſe names were Maſter Thurſton, ſir John Tyrrel, and Maſter Kene, and ſir Jo. Silliard being high Sheriffe.

Perſecution by the Conſtables, Sheriffes, and Juſtices of Suffolke.

These ſitting at Horton in the County of Suffolke aforeſayd, and there the ſaid Towneſmen aforeſayd having commandement of the ſayd Juſtices to inquire in their Towne if there were any that would neglect to come to their Service and Maſſe, further to examine the cauſe why they would not come, and thereupon to bring the true certificate to the ſayd Juſtices within foureteene dayes then next enſuing; they then comming homeward, being full of hatred againſt the truth, and deſirous to get promotion, without any ſuch commandement of the Juſtices (as far as we can learne) tooke counſell one with another how to attach the ſayd John Noyes without any more delay.

Charge given by the Inquiſitors.

This divelliſh enterpriſe agréed upon, chiefly through the counſell of Maſter Thomas Lovell, Wolfren Dowſing, and Nicholas Stannard aforeſayd, with expedition his houſe was beſet on both ſides. This done, they found the ſayd John Noyes on the backſide of the ſayd houſe going outward, and Nicholas Stannard called to the ſayd John, and ſayd, Whither goeſt thou? And he ſayd, to my neighbours. And the ſayd Nicholas Stannard ſayd, your Maſter hath deceived you; you muſt goe with us now. But the ſayd John Noyes anſwered, No, but take you héede your Maſter deceive not you. And ſo they tooke him and carried him to the Juſtices the next day. After his appearance and ſundry cauſes alledged, the Juſtices and the Sheriffe together caſt him into Eye-dungeon, and there he lay a certaine time. And then was carried from thence to Norwich, and ſo came before the Biſhop, where were miniſtred unto him theſe poſitions following:

Counſell taken for attaching John Noyes.

Jo. Noyes houſe beſet about.

Jo. Noyes taken by Nicholas Stannard, Perſecutor.

Jo. Noyes caſt into Eye dungeon.

1 Whether he beleeved that the ceremonies uſed in the Church were good and godly, to ſtirre up mens mindes to devotion.

2 Item, whether he beleeved the Pope to be ſupreme head of the Church here in earth.

3 Item, whether hee beleeved the body of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt to be in the ſacrament of the altar under the formes of bread and wine, after the words of conſecration.

Ex Regiſt. Articles againſt John Noyes.

Whereunto hée anſwered, that hée thought the naturall body of Chriſt to be only in heaven, and not in the ſacrament, &c.

Reall preſence denied.

For

Sentence read againſt John Noyes.

For the which, ſentence at laſt was read by the Biſhop againſt him, in the preſence of theſe there ſitting the ſame time, D. Dunning Chancellor, ſir W. Woodhouſe, ſir Thomas Woodhouſe, M. George Heyden, M. Spenſer, W. Farrar Alderman of Norwich, M. Thurſton, Wineſden with divers other.

More of his examination than this came not to our hands.

In the meane time his brother-in-law, one Nicholas Fiſk of Dinnington going to comfort him at ſuch time as hee remained priſoner in the Guildhall of Norwich, after Chriſtian exhortation, asked him if hee did feare death when the Biſhop gave judgement againſt him, conſidering the terrour of the ſame. And the ſaid Noyes anſwered; he thanked God he feared death no more at that time, than he or any other did, being at liberty. Then the ſayd Nicholas required him to ſhew the cauſe of his condemnation. Upon which requeſt the ſaid John Noyes writ with his owne hand as followeth:

The cauſe of John Noyes condemnation.

I ſayd (quoth he) that I could not beleeve, that in the ſacrament of the altar there is the naturall body of Chriſt, that ſame body that was borne of the Virgin Mary. But I ſayd, that the ſacrament of the body and bloud of Chriſt is received of Chriſtian people in the remembrance of Chriſts death, as a ſpirituall food, if it be miniſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution.

But they ſaid, I could not tell what ſpirituall meant.

The Biſhop ſayd, that the ſacrament was God, and muſt bee worſhipped as God. So ſaid the Chancellor alſo.

Then anſwered I, my Lord, I cannot ſo beleeve.

Then (quoth the Biſhop) why? Then ſay thou doeſt beleeve. Notwithſtanding theſe colluſions could not prevaile.

John Noyes brought to the place of martyrdome.

Now being condemned, he was ſent againe from Norwich to Eye-priſon, and upon the 21. day of September in the yeere aforeſayd, about midnight, he was brought from Eye to Laxefield to be burned, and on the next day morning was brought to the ſtake, where was ready againſt his comming the foreſaid Juſtice Maſter Thurſton, one Maſter Waller then being under Sheriffe, and Maſter Thomas Lovell being high Conſtable, as is before expreſſed, the which commanded men to make ready all things meete for that ſinfull purpoſe. Now the fire in moſt places of the ſtreete was put out, ſaving a ſmoake was eſpied by the ſayd Thomas Lovell proceeding out from the top of a chimney, to which houſe the Sherife and Grannow his man went, and brake open the doore, and thereby got fire, and brought the ſame to the place of execution. When John Noyes came to the place where he ſhould be burned, he kneeled downe, and ſayd the 50 Pſalme, with other prayers, and then they making haſte bound him to the ſtake, and being bound, the ſayd John Noyes ſayd; Feare not them that can kill the body, but feare him that can kill both body and ſoule, and caſt it into everlaſting fire.

The fire put out in the towne where John Noyes ſhould be burned.

The words of John Noyes to his ſiſter.

When he ſaw his ſiſter weeping and making mone for him, hee bade her that ſhe ſhould not weepe for him, but weepe for her ſins.

Then one Nicholas Cadman being Haſtler, a valiant champion in the Popes affaires, brought a fagot and ſet againſt him; and the ſayd John Noyes tooke up the fagot and kiſſed it, and ſayd; Bleſſed be the time that ever I was born to come to this.

Then hee delivered his Pſalter to the under Sheriffe, deſiring him to be good to his wife and children, and to deliver to her that ſame booke; and the Sheriffe promiſed him that he would, notwithſtanding he never as yet performed his promiſe. Then the ſaid John Noyes ſayd to the people; They ſay they can make God of a peece of bread, beleeve them not.

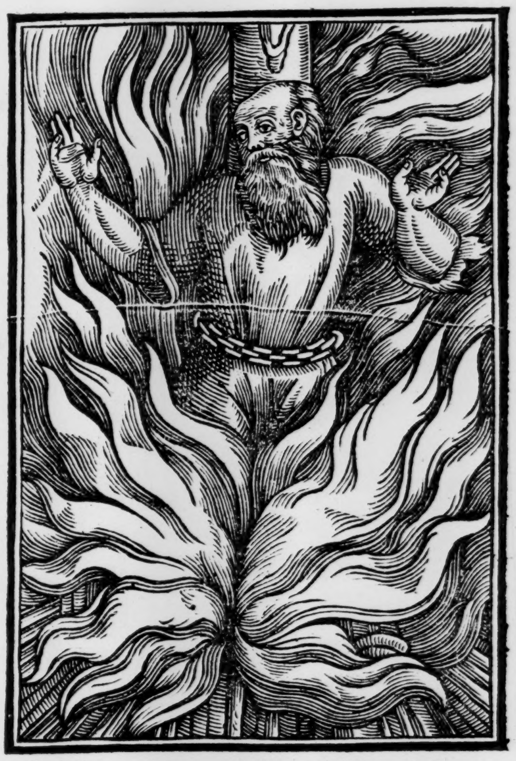
The words of John Noyes to the people.

Then ſayd he; Good people, beare witneſſe that I doe beleeve to be ſaved by the merits and paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt, and not by mine owne deeds; and ſo the fire was kindled, and burned about him, then he ſayd; Lord have mercy upon mee. Chriſt have mercy upon me. Sonne of David have mercy upon me.

The Martyrdome of Iohn Noyes of Laxfield, Anno 1557 or as ſome ſay, An. 1556 September.



And ſo he yeelded up his life, and when his body was burned, they made a pit to bury the coales and aſhes, and amongſt the ſame they found one of his feete that was unburned, whole up to the ankle, with the hoſe on, and that they buried with the reſt.

John Jarvis wrongfully troubled for words ſpoken at the burning of Noyes.

Now while he was a burning, there ſtood one John Jarvis by, a mans ſervant of the ſame Towne, a plaine fellow, which ſayd; Good Lord, how the ſinewes of his armes ſhrinke up. And there ſtood behinde him one Grannow and Benet, being the Sheriffes men, and they ſaid to their Maſter, that John Jarvis ſayd, What villaine wretches are theſe? And their Maſter bade lay hand on him, and they tooke him and pinioned him, and carried him before the Juſtice that ſame day, and the Juſtice did examine him of the words aforeſaid, but he denied them, and anſwered that hee ſayd nothing but this; Good Lord, how the ſinewes of his armes ſhrinke up. But for all this the Juſtice did binde his father and his Maſter in 5.l. a peece, that hee ſhould be forth comming at all times. And on the Wedneſday next he was brought again before the Juſtices, M. Thurſton, and M. Kene, they ſitting at Freſingfield in Horton hundred, and there they did appoint and command, that the ſaid John Jarvis ſhould be ſet in the ſtockes the next Market day, and whipt about the Market naked. But his Maſter, one William Jarvis, did after crave friendſhip of the Conſtables, and they did not ſet him in the ſtockes till Sunday morning, and in the afternoone they did whip him about the Market with a dogge-whip, having three cords, and ſo they let him goe.

Some doe give out, that John Jarvis was whipped for ſaying that Nicholas Cadman was Noyes Haſtler, that is, ſuch a one as maketh and haſteth the fire.

¶ The copy of a certaine Letter that he ſent to comfort his wife at ſuch time as he lay in priſon.

A letter of John Noyes to his wife.

WIfe, you deſired me that I would ſend you ſome tokens that you might remember me. As I did reade in the New Teſtament, I thought it good to write unto you certaine places of the Scripture for a remembrance. St. Peter ſaith, 1 Pet.4. Dearely beloved, be not troubled with this heate that is now come among you to try you, as though ſome ſtrange thing had happened unto you, but rejoyce, inſomuch as ye are partakers of Chriſts ſufferings, that when his glory appeareth, ye may be merry and glad. If ye be railed on for the name of Chriſt, happy are ye, for the ſpirit of glory, and the ſpirit of God reſteth upon you.

It is better, if the will of God be ſo, that ye ſuffer for well doing than for evill doing, 1 Pet,3.

So 1 Pet.4. See that none of you ſuffer as a murtherer, or as a theefe, or an evill doer, or as a buſie-body in other mens matters; but if any man ſuffer as a Chriſtian man, let him not bee aſhamed, but let him glorifie God in this behalfe; for the time is come that judgement muſt begin at the houſe of God. If it firſt begin at us, what ſhall the end of them be, that beleeve not the Goſpel of God? Wherefore let them that ſuffer according to the will of God, commit their ſoules to him in well doing.

S. Paul ſaith, 2 Tim.3. All that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt ſuffer perſecution.

S. John ſaith, 1 Iohn 2. See that ye love not the world, neither the things that are in the world.

If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, as the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world, which vaniſheth away and the luſt thereof, but he that fulfilleth the will of God, abideth for ever.

S. Paul ſaith, Coloſ.3. If ye be riſen againe with Chriſt, ſeeke thoſe things which are above, where Chriſt ſitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things that are above, and not on things which are on earth.

Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, Mat.18. Whoſoever ſhall offend one of theſe little ones that beleeve in me, it were better for him that a milſtone were hanged about his necke, and that he were caſt into the ſea.

The Prophet David ſaith, Pſal.24. Great are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth them out of all.

Feare the Lord, ye his Saints: for they that feare him lacke nothing.

When the righteous cry, the Lord heareth them and delivereth them out of all their troubles: But misfortune ſhall ſlay the ungodly, and they that hate the righteous ſhall periſh.

Heare, O my people. I aſſure thee O Iſrael, if thou wilt hearken unto mee, there ſhall no ſtrange God be in thee, neither ſhalt thou worſhip any other God. Oh that my people would obey me: for if Iſrael would walke in my wayes, I ſhould ſoone put downe their enemies, and turne my hand againſt their adverſaries.

Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith; The Diſciple is not above his Maſter, nor yet the ſervant above his Lord. It is enough for the Diſciple to be as his Maſter is, and that the ſervant be as his Lord is. If they have called the Maſter of the houſe Belzebub, how much more ſhall they call them of his houſhold ſo? feare not them therefore.

St. Paul ſaith, 2 Cor.4. ſet your ſelves therfore at large, and beare not a ſtrangers yoke with the unbeleevers: for what fellowſhip hath righteouſneſſe with unrighteouſneſſe? what company hath light with darkneſſe? either what part hath the beleever with the Infidell &c? Wherefore come out from among them, and ſeparate your ſelves now (ſaith the Lord) and touch none uncleane thing; ſo will I receive you, and I will be a father unto you, and ye ſhall be my ſons and daughters, ſaith the Lord Almighty.

For neither eye hath ſeene, nor the eare hath heard, neither can it enter into the heart of man, what good things the Lord hath prepared for them that love him, 1 Cor.2.

Ye are bought neither with ſilver nor gold, but with the precious bloud of Chriſt, 1 Pet.1.

There is none other name given to men wherein we muſt be ſaved, Acts 4.

So fare ye well wife and children, and leave worldly care, and ſee that ye be diligent to pray.

Take no thought (ſaith Chriſt, Mat.6) ſaying, what ſhall we eate, or what ſhall we drinke, or wherewith ſhall we be clothed? (for after all theſe things ſeeke the Gentiles) for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all theſe things; but ſeeke ye firſt the Kingdome of heaven, and the righteouſneſſe thereof, and all theſe things ſhall be miniſtred unto you.

The martyrdome and ſuffering of Cicely Ormes, burnt at Norwich for the teſtimony and witneſſe of Chriſts Goſpel.

Sep. 23. Cicely Ormes, Martyr.

M. Corbet of Sprowſon, perſecutor.

The Chancellors name was Dunning.

ABout the 23. day of the ſayd moneth of September, next after the other above mentioned, ſuffered at Norwich Cicely Ormes, wife of Edmund Ormes Worſteadweaver, dwelling in S. Laurence Pariſh in Norwich: ſhe being of the age of 32. yeeres or more, was taken at the death of Simon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper above mentioned, in a place called Lollards pit without Biſhops gate, at the ſayd Norwich, for that ſhe ſayd ſhe would pledge them of the ſame cup that they dranke on. For ſo ſaying, one Maſter Corbet of Sprowſon by Norwich, tooke her and ſent her to the Chancellor. When ſhe came before him, he aſked her what ſhe ſayd unto the ſacrament of Chriſts body. And ſhe ſayd, ſhe did beleeve that it was the ſacrament of the body of Chriſt. Yea, ſaid the Chancellor, but what is that that the Prieſt holdeth over his head? She anſwered him and ſayd, it is bread: and if you make it any better, it is worſe. At which words the Chancellor ſent her to the Biſhops priſon to the Keeper called Fellow, with many threatning and hote words, as a man being in a great chafe.

The 23. day of July ſhe was called before the Chancellour againe, who ſate in judgement with Maſter Bridges and others. The Chancellour offered her, if ſhe would goe to the Church and keepe her tongue, ſhe would be at liberty, and beleeve as ſhe would. But ſhe told him ſhe would not conſent to his wicked deſire therein, doe with her what hee would; for if ſhe ſhould, ſhe ſayd, God would ſurely plague her. Then the Chancellour told her, he had ſhewed more favour to her, than ever he did to any, and that he was loath to condemne her, conſidering that ſhe was an ignorant, unlearned, and fooliſh woman. But ſhe, not weighing his words, told him if he did, he ſhould not be ſo deſirous of her ſinfull fleſh, as ſhe would (by Gods grace) bée content to give it in ſo good a quarrell. Then roſe he and read the bloudy ſentence of condemnation againſt her, and ſo delivered her to the ſecular power of the Sheriffes of the City, M. Thomas Sutherton, and M. Leonard Sutherton brethren, who immediately carried her to the Guildhall in Norwich, where ſhée remained untill her death.

Brigges a popiſh perſecutor. Cicely Ormes firſt recanted.

Cicely Ormes re penteth her recantation.

This Cicely Ormes was a very ſimple woman, but yet zealous in the Lords cauſe, being borne in Eaſt Deram, and was there the daughter of one Thomas Haund Taylor. Shée was taken the fifth day of Julie, and did for a twelve moneth before ſhée was taken, recant, but never after was ſhe quiet in conſcience, untill ſhe was utterly driven from all their Poperie. Betwéene the time ſhe recanted, and that ſhe was taken, ſhe had gotten a letter made to give to the Chancellor, to let him know that ſhe repented her recantation from the bottome of her heart, and would never doe the like againe while ſhe lived. But before ſhe exhibited her bill, ſhe was taken and ſent to priſon as is beforeſaid. She was burnt the 23. day of September, betwéene 7. and 8. of the clock in the morning, the ſaid two Sheriffs being there, and of people to the number of 200. When ſhée came to the ſtake, ſhe knéeled downe, and made her praiers to God: that being done, ſhe roſe up and ſaid, Good people, I beléeve in God the Father, God the Son, and God the holy Ghoſt, thrée perſons and one God.

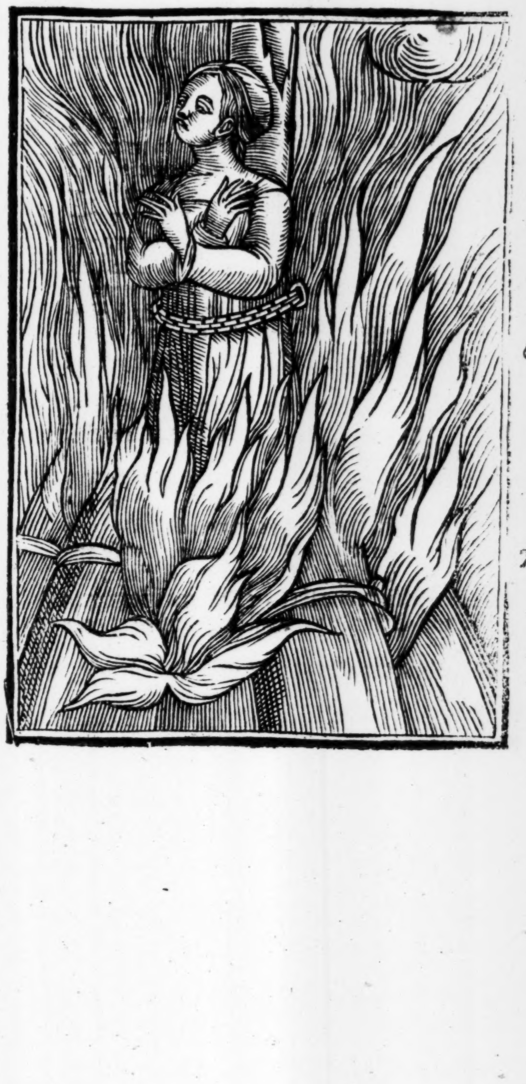
Note well this ſaying of Cicely Ormes.

This doe I not, nor will I recant; but I recant utterly from the bottome of my heart the doings of the Pope of Rome, and all his Popiſh Prieſts and ſhavelings. I utterly refuſe and never will have to doe with them againe by Gods grace. And good people, I would you ſhould not thinke of mée that I beléeve to bée ſaved in that I offer my ſelfe here unto the death for the Lords cauſe, but I beleeve to bée ſaved by the death of Chriſts paſſion; and this my death is and ſhall be a witneſſe of my faith unto you all here preſent. Good people, as many of you as beléeve as I beléeve, pray for me. Then ſhe came to the ſtake, and laid her hand on it, and ſaid, Welcome the Croſſe of Chriſt. Which being done, ſhe looking on her hand, and ſéeing it blacked with the ſtake, ſhe wiped it upon her ſmocke, for ſhe was burnt at the ſame ſtake that Simon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper was burned at. Then afer ſhe had touched it with her hand, ſhee came and kiſſed it, and ſaid, Welcome the ſwéete Croſſe of Chriſt, and ſo gave her ſelfe to bée bound thereto. After the tormentors had kindled the fire to her, ſhe ſaid, My ſoule doth magnifie the Lord, and my ſpirit rejoyceth in God my Saviour: and in ſo ſaying ſhe ſet her hands together right againſt her breaſt, caſting her eyes and head upward, and ſo ſtood, heaving up her hands by little and little, till the very ſinewes of her armes did breake aſunder, and then they fell; but ſhée yéelded her life unto the Lord, as quietly as if ſhée had béene in a ſlumber, or as one féeling no paine; So wonderfully did the Lord worke with her; his Name therefore bée praiſed for evermore. Amen.

The laſt words of Cice. Ormes at the ſtake.

The Martyrdome of Cicely Ormes at Norwich, An. 1557. September 23.



The trouble and diſturbance among good men and women at Lichfield.

After the death and martyrdome of Miſtreſſe Joice Lewes, a little above ſpecified, diverſe good men and women in the ſame Towne of Lichfield were vexed and in trouble before the Biſhop and his Chancellor, for kiſſing the ſaid Joice Lewys, and drinking with her about the time of her death; the name of which perſons were theſe: Joane Love, Elizabeth Smith, Margaret Biddell, Helene Bouring, Margaret Cootesfote, Nicholas Bird, John Hariſtone and his wife, Agnes Glyn, Agnes Glover, Agnes Penifather, &c. Theſe with other were produced to their examination before the Biſhop and his Chancellor for the cauſe abovenamed, and therefore adjudged for heretikes, for that they did pray and drink with the ſaid Miſtreſſe Lewys, but eſpecially Agnes Penifather ſuſtained the moſt trouble, for that ſhe accompanied the ſaid Joice Lewys going to her death. Which Agnes being examined further of the ſaid Biſhop, what words ſhe had ſpoken to two Prieſts of the Church of Lichfield, called John Adie and James Fox, concerning the ſaid Joice Lewys after her burning, ſaid as followeth, That ſhe being aſked by the ſaid two Prieſts being at her fathers houſe in the city of Lichfield, at ſuch time as ſhe came from the burning of the ſayd Joice Lewys, wherefore ſhe the ſaid Agnes did wéepe for ſuch an heretike, meaning Joice Lewys, whoſe ſoule they ſaid was in hell; the ſaid Agnes Penifather to their demand made this anſwer, that ſhée thought the ſaid bleſſed Martyr to bée in better caſe than the ſaid two Prieſts were.

Agnes Penifather accuſed of two Prieſts for words.

With the which words being charged, and willed to ſubmit her ſelfe as the other had done above rehearſed to ſuch penance as they ſhould enjoyne unto her, refuſed ſo to doe, and therefore was commanded to cloſe priſon, the ſheriffes being charged with her under pain of 100. pounds, that none ſhould have any acceſſe unto her. At length, at the perſwaſion of her friends ſhe was compelled to doe as the other had done before. And thus much concerning things done at Lichfield.

The perſecution and cruelty exerciſed by the Papiſts in the Dioceſſe of Chicheſter.

Perſecution among the godly men at Chicheſter.

AND now from Lichfield to come to Chicheſter, although wee have but little to report thereof, for lacke of certaine relation and records of that Countrey, yet it ſéemeth no little trouble and perſecution there alſo to have raged, as in other Countries. For what place was there almoſt in all the realme, where the Popes Miniſters did not beſtirre them, murthering ſome or other, as in the Acts of this Eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie may ſufficiently appeare? Wherefore as this plague of the Popes tyrannie was generall to all other people and countries of England, ſo likewiſe in the Dioceſſe of Chicheſter, divers and many there were condemned and martyred for the true teſtimonie of righteouſneſſe within the compaſſe of Queene Maries reigne. In the number of whom were theſe:

John Foreman of Eſtgreneſted.
John Warner of Berne.
Chriſtian Grover of the Archdeconry of Lewys.
Thomas Athoth, Prieſt.
Thomas Avington of Erdinglie.
Dennis Burgis of Buxſted.
Thomas Ravenſdale of Rie.
John Milles of Hellinglegh.
Nicholas Holden of Withiam.
John Hart of Withiam.
Margerie Morice of Hethfield.
Anne Trie of Eſtgreneſted.
John Oſeward of Woodmancote.
Thomas Harland of Woodmancote.
James Morice of Hethfield.
Thomas Dougate of Eſtgreneſted.
John Aſhedon of Katherfield.

Martyrs.

Perſecutors.

The greateſt doers againſt theſe godly and true faithfull Martyrs, and ſetters upon their condemnation, were theſe: Chriſtopherſon the Biſhop after Day, Richard Briſly Doctor of law, and Chancellor of Chicheſter, Robert Tailor Bachelor of law his Deputy, Tho. Paccard Civiliam, Anth. Clarke, Albane Langdale Bachelor of Divinitie, &c.

¶ The examination of Thomas Spurdance one of Queene Maries ſervants, before the Chancerllour of Norwich.

The examination of Tho. Spurdance.

THE Biſhops Chancellor did aſke me if I had béen with the Prieſt, and confeſſed my ſinnes unto him. And I ſaid, No, I had confeſſed my ſinnes to God, and God ſaith, In what houre ſoever a ſinner doth repent and be ſorry for his ſins, and aſke him forgiveneſſe, willing no more ſo to doe, he will no more reckon his ſin unto him. and that is ſufficient for me.

Then ſayd the Chancellor, Thou denieſt the Sacrament of penance.

I ſaid, I deny not penance, but I deny that I ſhould ſhew my ſins unto the Prieſt.

Then ſaid the Chancellor, that is a denying of the ſacrament of penance.

Write this article.

Have you received the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar (ſaid he) at this time of Eaſter?

And I ſaid, No.

And why have you not ſaith he?

I ſaid, I dare not meddle with you in it, as you uſe it.

Why, doe we not uſe it truely, ſaid he?

I ſaid, No: for the holy ſupper of the Lord ſerveth for the Chriſtian Congregation, and you are none of Chriſts members: and therefore I dare not meddle with you, leſt I bée like unto you.

Why are we none of Chriſts members, ſaid the Chancellor?

I ſaid, Becauſe you teach lawes contrary to Gods law.

What laws are thoſe, ſaid he?

I ſaid, Theſe thrée Articles that you ſweare the people unto here, bee falſe and untrue, and you doe evill to ſweare the people unto them.

Then ſaid hée, good people take no héede unto his words: for he is an heretike, and teacheth you diſobedience: and ſo he would no more ſpeake of that matter.

Then ſaid he, How beléeveſt thou in the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar? doſt thou not beléeve that after it is conſecrated, it is the very ſame bodie that was borne of the Virgin Mary?

I ſaid, No, not the ſame bodie in ſubſtance: for the ſame bodie hath a ſubſtance in fleſh bloud and bones, and was a bloudie ſacrifice, and this is a dry ſacrifice.

And I ſaid, Is the Maſſe a ſacrifice?

Unto which a Doctor anſwered that ſate by him, It is a ſacrifice both for the quicke and the dead.

Then ſaid I, No, it is no ſacrifice: for S. Paul ſaith, that Chriſt made one ſacrifice once for all: and I doe beléeve in none other ſacrifice, but only in that one ſacrifice that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt made once for all.

Then ſaid the Doctor, That ſacrifice that Chriſt made, was a wet ſacrifice, and the Maſſe is a dry ſacrifice.

Spurdance examined upon the ſacrament of the altar.

Then ſaid I, that ſame dry ſacrifice is a ſacrifice of your own making, and it is your ſacrifice, it is none of mine.

Then ſaid the Chancellor, He is an heretike, he denieth the ſacrament of the altar.

Then ſaid I, Will ye know how I beléeve in the holy ſupper of our Lord?

And he ſaid, Yea.

Then ſaid I, I beléeve that if I come rightly and worthily as God hath commanded mee, to the holy Supper of the Lord, I receive him by faith, by beléeving in him. But the bread being received is not God, nor the bread that is yonder in the pixe is not God. God dwelleth not in temples made with hands, neither will be worſhipped with the works of mens hands. And therefore you doe very evill to cauſe the people to knéele downe and worſhip the bread: for God did never bid you hold it above your heads, neither had the Apoſtles ſuch uſe.

Then ſaid the Chancellor, Hée denieth the preſence in the ſacrament. Write this article alſo. Hée is a very heretike.

Then ſaid I, The ſervant is not greater than his Maſter. For your Predeceſſors killed my Maſter Chriſt, the Prophets and Apoſtles, and holy vertuous men, and now you alſo kill the ſervants of Chriſt, ſo that all the righteous bloud that hath beene ſhed, even from righteous Abel, untill this day, ſhall bee required at your hands.

Well ſaid the Chancellor, have him away.

Another examination of Spurdance, before the Biſhop in his houſe.

Another examination of Tho. Spurdance before the Biſh.

THe Biſhop ſaid, ſirrah, doſt thou not beléeve in the Catholike faith of holy Church?

And I ſaid, I beléeve Chriſts Catholike Church.

Yea ſaid he, in Chriſts Church, of the which the Pope is the head? doeſt thou not beléeve that the Pope is ſupreame head of the Catholike Church?

Luke 22.

And I ſaid, No. I beléeve not that he ſhould be above the Apoſtles, if he take them to be his Predeceſſors. For when there came a thought among the Apoſtles, who ſhould be the greateſt when their Maſter was gone, Chriſt anſwered them unto their thoughts, The Kings of the earth beare domination above other, but ye ſhall not ſo doe, for he that will be greateſt among you ſhall become ſervant unto you all. How is it then (ſaid I) that he will climbe ſo high above his fellowes? And alſo we were ſworne by my Maſter King Henries time, that we ſhould to the uttermoſt of our power, never conſent to him againe. And therefore as he hath nothing to doe here in England, ſo neither in his owne countrey more, than a Biſhop hath in his Dioceſſe.

The Popes Supremacy.

Yea, ſaid the Biſhop, what of that? Wée were then in error and ſinne, now we are in the right way againe. and therefore thou muſt come home againe with us, and knowledge thy fault, and become a Chriſtian man, and be ſworne unto the Pope as our ſupreame head. Wilt thou be ſworn unto the Pope? How ſaieſt thou?

Then I ſaid, No I warrant you by the grace of God not as long as I live. For you cannot prove by the Scripture, that the Pope is head of the Church, and may do therein what him liſteth.

No, ſaid he? Yes I trow: for as the Belweather which weareth the Bell, is head of the flocke of ſhéepe, even ſo is the Pope the head of the Church of Chriſt. And as the Bées in the hive have a Maſter Bée, when they are gone out, to bring them home againe to the hive: even ſo the Pope when we be gone aſtray and wandred from the fold, from the hive, &c. then is ordained our head by ſucceſſion of Peter, to bring us home againe to the true Church; as thou now my good fellow haſt wandred long out of the way like a ſcattered ſhéep, &c. Heare therefore that Belweather, the maſter bell, &c. and come home with us to thy mother the true Church againe.

Unto whom I anſwered, My Lord, all this is but naturall reaſon, and no Scripture: but ſince yée cannot prove the Pope to be authorized by Scripture, ye anſwer not me as I thought yée would.

Ya, ſaid he, I ſée well ye be ſtout, and will not be anſwered: therefore ye ſhall be compelled by law whether ye will or no.

The Phariſees law.

My Lord, ſaid I, ſo did your forefathers intreat Chriſt and his Apoſtles. They had a law, and by their law they put him to death; and ſo likewiſe, you have a law which is tyranny, and by that would ye enforce me to beléeve as you doe: but the Lord I truſt will aſſiſt me againſt all your beggarly ceremonies, and make your fooliſhneſſe knowne to all the world one day.

Then ſaid he, when were ye at Church and went in proceſſion, and did the ceremonies of the Church?

And I ſaid, Never ſince I was born.

No ſaid he? How old are you?

And I ſaid, I think about xl.

Why, ſaid he, How did you uſe your ſelfe at Church twenty yeares agoe?

I ſaid, As you doe now.

And even now, ſaid he, you ſaid you did not the ceremonies ſince you were borne.

No more I did, ſaid I, ſince I was born anew; as Chriſt ſaid unto Nichodemus, Except ye be borne anew, ye cannot enter into the Kingdome of heaven.

Then ſaid a Doctor that ſate by, he is a very Anabaptiſt: for that is their opinion plaine.

No ſir, you ſay falſly, ſaid I: for I am no Anabaptiſt: for they deny children to be baptiſed, and ſo doe not I.

Well, ſaid the Biſhop, why doſt thou not go to the Church, and do the ceremonies?

And I ſaid, Becauſe they be contrary to Gods word and lawes, as you your ſelfe have taught: but now you ſay it is good againe: and I thinke if there were a returne to morrow, you would ſay that is falſe againe which you hold now. Therefore, I may well ſay, there is no truth in you.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, thou art a ſtubborne fellow, and an heretike, and a traytor.

No, ſaid I, I am no traytor, for I have done, I thinke, better ſervice to the crowne imperiall of England, than you.

If you had done ſo good ſervice (ſaid he) you would be obedient to the lawes of the realme.

Obedience to Princes, how farre.

So I am, ſaid I. There is no man alive (I thank God) that can accuſe me juſtly that ever I was diſobedient to any civill lawes. But you muſt conſider my Lord, that I have a ſoul and a body, and my ſoule is none of the Quéenes, but my body and my goods are the Quéenes. And I muſt give God my ſoule, and all that belongeth unto it, that is, I muſt doe the lawes and commandements of God; and whoſoever commandeth lawes contrary to Gods lawes, I may not doe them for loſing of my ſoule, but muſt rather obey God than man.

And he ſaid, Why doſt thou not theſe lawes then? are they not agréeable to Gods law?

And I ſaid, No, you cannot prove them to bée Gods lawes.

Yes, ſaith he, that I can.

Images.

Then ſaid I, if you can prove by the word of God that you ſhould have any graven Images made to ſet in your Churches for lay mens books, or to worſhip God by them, or that you ſhould have any Ceremonies in your Church as you have, prove them by the word of God, and I will doe them.

Then, ſaid he, it is a good and decent order to furniſh the Church: as when you ſhall goe to dinner, you have a cloath upon the Table to furniſh the Table before the meate ſhall come upon it; ſo are theſe Ceremonies a comely decent order to be in the Church among Chriſtian people.

Theſe, ſaid I, are inventions and imaginations out of your owne braine, without any word of God to prove them. For, God ſaith, Look what you thinke good in your owne eyes, if I command the contrary, it is abominable in my ſight. And theſe Ceremonies are againſt Gods Lawes. For, Saint Paul ſaith, they be weake and beggerly, and rebuketh the Galathians for doing them.

Well, ſaid he, if you will not doe them, ſéeing they be the Lawes of the Realme, you are an heretike and diſobedient: and therefore come home againe and confeſſe your faults with us, that you have béene in errour, &c. Will you doe ſo?

And I ſaid, No, I have béene in no errour: for the ſpirituall lawes were never trulier ſet forth

then in my Maſter King Edwards time, and I truſt unto God I ſhall never forſake them whiles I live.

Then came a Gentleman to me and ſaid, Are ye wiſer than all men? and have ye more knowledge than all men? will ye caſt away your ſoule willingly? My Lord and other men alſo, would faine you would ſave your ſelfe: therefore chooſe ſome man where you will, either ſpirituall or temporall, and take a day, my Lord will give it you.

Then ſaid I, if I ſave my life, I ſhall loſe it; and if I loſe my life for Chriſts ſake, I ſhall finde it in life everlaſting. And if I take a day, when the day commeth, I muſt ſay then even as I doe now, except I will lie, and therefore that needeth not.

Well, then have him away, ſaid the Biſhop.

Tho. Spurdance by whom he was apprehended.

This above named Thomas Spurdance was one of Queene Maries ſervants, and was taken by two of his fellowes, the ſaid Queens ſervants, named John Haman, otherwiſe called Barker, and George Loſon, both dwelling in Codnam in the County of Suffolke, who carried him to one M. Goſnall, dwelling in the ſaid Codnam, and by him he was ſent to Bury, where he remained in priſon, and afterwards burned in the moneth of November.

The ſtory and martyrdome of three conſtant witneſſes of Chriſt.

Novemb. 18. The ſtory and martyrdome of John Hallingdale, William Sparrow, Richard Gibſon.

NOt long after the martyrdome of the two good women at Colcheſter, above named, were three faithfull witneſſes of the Lords Teſtament, tormented and put to death in Smithfield at London, the eighteenth of November, in the yeare aforeſaid, whoſe names hereafter follow:

Iohn Hallingdale.
William Sparrow.
Richard Gybſon.

Which three were produced before Boner B. of London, the fifth day of November, 1557. and had by him and his officers certaine articles miniſtred unto them: the ſumme whereof hereafter followeth.

Articles miniſtred by Boner unto Iohn Hallingdale.

Articles againſt John Hallingdale.

FIrſt, that the ſaid John Hallingdale is of the Dioceſſe of London, and ſo ſubject to the juriſdiction of the Biſhop of London.

Secondly, that the ſaid John before the time of the reigne of K. Edward the ſixth, late King of England, was of the ſame faith and religion that was then obſerved, beleeved, taught, and ſet forth in the realme of England.

Thirdly, that during the Reigne of the ſaid King Edward the ſixth, the ſaid John Hallingdale, upon occaſion of the preaching of certaine Miniſters in that time, did not abide in his former faith and religion, but did depart from it, and ſo did and doth continue till this preſent day, and ſo determineth to doe (as he ſaith) till his lives end.

Fourthly, that the ſaid John Hallingdale hath thought, beleeved, and ſpoken divers times, that the faith, religion, and Eccleſiaſticall ſervice received, obſerved, and uſed now in this realme of England, is not good and laudable, but againſt Gods commandement and word, eſpecially concerning the Maſſe and the ſeven Sacraments; and that he the ſaid John will not in any wiſe conforme himſelf to the ſame, but ſpeak and thinke againſt it during his naturall life.

Fifthly, that the ſaid John abſenteth himſelfe continually from his own Pariſh Church of S. Leonards, neither hearing Mattins, Maſſe, nor Evenſong, nor yet confeſſing his ſinnes to the Prieſt, or receiving the ſacrament of the Altar at his hands, or uſing other Ceremonies as they are now uſed in this Church and realm of England; and as he remembreth, he never came but once in the Pariſh Church of S. Leonard, and careth not (as he ſaith) if he never come there any more, the ſervice being as it is there, and ſo many abuſes being there, as he ſaith there are, eſpecially the Maſſe, the ſacraments, and the ceremonies and ſervice ſet forth in Latine.

Sixthly, that the ſaid John, when his wife, called Alice, was brought in bed of a man childe, cauſed the ſaid childe to be chriſtened in Engliſh, after the ſame manner and forme in all points, as it was uſed in the time of the Reigne of K. Edward the ſixth aforeſaid, and cauſed it to be called Ioſue, and would not have the ſaid childe chriſtened in latine after the forme and manner as it is now uſed in the Church and realme of England, nor will have it by his will (as he ſaith) to be confirmed by the Biſhop.

His anſwers to the articles

Unto all which articles the ſaid John Hallingdale made anſwer, confeſſing them all, and every part of them to be true, and ſaying, that he would not revoke his ſaid anſwers, but ſtand unto them according as it was in every article above written.

The reall preſence denied.

Furthermore, the ſaid John Hillingdale, being demanded by the ſaid Boner, whether he did firmly beleeve that in the ſacrament, commonly called the ſacrament of the Altar, there is really and truly the very body and blood of our Saviour Chriſt, or no; made anſwer, that he neither in the time of the ſaid K. Edward the ſixth, nor at that preſent did beleeve, that in the ſaid Sacrament there is really the very body and blood of Chriſt. For he ſaid, that if he had ſo beleeved, he would (as others had done) have received the ſame, which he did not, becauſe he had and then did beleeve, that the very body of Chriſt is onely in heaven, and no where elſe. And furthermore the ſaid John Hallingdale ſaid, that Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, Hooper, and generally all that of late have been burned for heretikes, were no heretikes at all, becauſe they did preach truly the Goſpell: upon whoſe preaching, he grounded his faith and conſcience, as he ſaid, according to the ſaying of S. John, in the 18. chapter of his Revelation, where he ſaith, That the blood of the Prophets, and of the Saints, and of all that were ſlaine upon earth, was found in the Babylonicall Church, by the which, he ſaid, is underſtood the Church where the Pope is the head.

John Hallingdale againe brought before the Biſhop.

After which examination, the ſaid John was ſent unto priſon againe. And the next day, being the ſixth day of the ſaid moneth, hee was called before the Biſhop againe, who perſwading him with ſome wreſted ſentences of the Scripture, the ſaid John Hallingdale anſwered, Becauſe I will not (ſaith he) come to your Babylonicall Church, therefore (ſpeaking unto Boner) you go about to condemne me. And being of Boner further demanded, whether he would perſevere and ſtand in his opinions or no: he made anſwer, that he would continue and perſiſt in them unto the death. Then Boner read the bloody ſentence of condemnation. At which time the ſaid John affirmed openly, that (thanking GOD) he never came into the Church ſince the abomination came into it: and ſo he was ſent to priſon againe.

Sentence read againſt John Hallingdale by B. Boner.

Upon the ſame 6. day alſo, in the forenoone, was produced before the Biſhop the forenamed William Sparrow, and had layd unto him certaine articles, which hereafter follow.

Articles miniſtered by Boner unto William Sparrow.

Articles againſt Will. Sparrow.

FIrſt, that thou William Sparrow waſt in times paſt detected and preſented lawfully unto thy Ordinary the Biſhop of London, called Edmund, who alſo is now thine Ordinary of the ſayd Dioceſſe, and thou waſt preſented and detected unto him for hereſie, errors, and unlawfull opinions, which thou diddeſt beleeve, ſet forth, and hold.

2 Secondly, that thou before the ſayd Ordinary didſt openly and judicially confeſſe the ſaid hereſies, errors, and unlawfull opinions, as appeareth plainly in the acts of the court, had and made before the ſayd Ordinary.

3 Thirdly, that thou after the premiſſes, didſt make thy ſubmiſſion in writing, and dideſt exhibite and deliver the ſame as thy deede, to thy ſayd Ordinary; openly confeſſing and recogniſing thy hereſies, errours, unlawfull opinions, and thine offences and tranſgreſſions in that behalfe.

4 Fourthly, that thou after the premiſſes, diddeſt promiſe unto thy ſayd Ordinary voluntarily and of thine owne mind, that alwaies after the ſaid ſubmiſſion, thou wouldeſt in all points conforme thy ſelfe unto the common order of the Catholike Church obſerved and kept here in this realme of England, and in no wiſe fall againe to hereſies, errors, or unlawfull opinions.

5 Fifthly, that thou ſince thy ſayd ſubmiſſion, haſt willingly fallen into certaine hereſies and errours, and haſt holden and ſet forth diverſe unlawfull opinions, to the right great hurt of thine owne ſoule, and alſo to the great hinderance and loſſe of diverſe others, eſpecially againſt the ſacrament of the Altar, againſt Confeſſion auricular, with other the ſacraments of the Catholike Church.

6 Sixthly, that thou ſince the ſaid Commiſſion, haſt willingly gone about divers places within the Dioceſſe of London, and ſold diverſe hereticall, erroneous; and blaſphemous ballets about, and waſt apprehended and taken with the ſaid ballets about thee, and committed to priſon.

Vnto all which articles the ſaid William Sparrow anſwered in effect, as hereafter followeth.

His anſwers to the articles.

TO the firſt, ſecond, third, and fourth articles he anſwered affirmatively, as thus: That he was preſented and detected to Boner, unto whom he made his ſubmiſſion, &c. as in the articles.

To the fifth article he anſwered, That if he had ſpoken againſt them he had ſpoken but the truth: for they be naught, meaning the contents of the ſayd article.

To the ſixth, he granted to the article, adding, that he did ſell the ſayd ballets then ſhewed and read before him, and that the ſame did containe Gods word.

After which anſwers, the ſaid William Sparrow was ſent unto priſon. And the ſame day in the afternoone, being produced before the Biſhop againe, and there charged with his ſaid ſubmiſſion, made the yeere before unto the Biſhop, hee anſwered thus; I am ſorry (ſaid he) that ever I made it, and it was the worſt deed that ever I did: adding farther unto them, Hold up your abomination ſo long as you can. Alſo being laid unto him, and charged by the Biſhop that he went to Church, and there was confeſſed and heard Maſſe: the ſaid William Sparrow made anſwer and confeſſed, that he did ſo, but with a troubled conſcience he ſayd, God knoweth. And ſpeaking further to the Biſhop, he ſayd, That which you call truth, I doe beleeve (ſaid he) to be hereſie. And alſo the Biſhop charging him againe with the contents of the fifth article above named, he anſwered, that he had ſo done, as is contained in the ſame article, and ſo will doe againe if he were at liberty. And being further demanded of Boner, whether he would perſiſt and continue in the ſame, or no: he made anſwer, that he would not go from his opinions: And adding thereunto, hee ſayd, That which you call hereſie (ſpeaking to the Biſhop) is good and godly, and if every haire of my head were a man (ſayd he) I would burn them all, rather than go from the truth.

Then being demanded what ground of learning hee had to cleave to his opinions: hee made anſwer and ſaid, That all the Lawes now uſed (meaning the Eccleſiaſticall Lawes) are naught and abominable. And further, thereunto he ſayd, That the Maſſe is naught and abominable. &c. Which words being ſpoken, the Biſhop immediately read the ſentence of condemnation upon him, and ſo delivered him to the ſecular power, by whom he was ſent to priſon againe.

Richard Gibſon, Martyr.

Richard Gibſon, Martyr.

WIth the other two above named, ſuffered alſo in the ſame fire Richard Gibſon, who firſt was caſt into the Counter in the Poultry (where he had beene priſoner by the ſpace of two yeares for ſuretiſhip in a matter of debt, and then ſtood upon his deliverance) then upon ſuſpicion and evill will was accuſed to Boner, for that in the priſon he was never confeſſed, nor received at the Popiſh Altar: by reaſon whereof hee was called for, and ſuſtained divers and ſundry conflicts and examinations in the cauſe of his faith and religion. But firſt he ſeemed to make a certaine ſubmiſſion which alſo hee exhibited with the other 28. above mentioned: but becauſe it ſeemed ſomething to differ in words from the other, it appeareth not to bee received: or whether it was received or no, it is not fully certaine. This is certaine, that although his ſubmiſſion was in the Biſhops Regiſter recorded, yet hee was not delivered out from impriſonment till the day of his burning. The Articles firſt objected and miniſtred unto him by the Biſhop, were theſe:

Articles objected and miniſtred to Richard Gibſon by Boner Biſhop of London.

Articles againſt Richard Gibſon.

FIrſt, that the ſayd Richard Gibſon, priſoner in the Counter in the Poultry in the Dioceſſe of London, hath otherwiſe than became a faithfull Chriſtian man and a good ſubject of this Realme of England, behaved himſelfe in words and deeds in divers conditions and points, contrary to the order, religion, and faith of Chriſts Catholike Church, and contrary to the order of this realme, to the pernicious and evill example of the inhabitants of the City of London, and the priſoners of the priſon of the ſaid Counter in the Poultry, and greatly to the hurt and dammage of his owne ſoule, offending eſpecially in the articles following: By reaſon whereof the ſaid Richard Gibſon was and is of the juriſdiction of the ſayd Biſhop of London, and ſubject to the ſayd juriſdiction, to make anſwer to his offences and tranſgreſſions under written, according to the order of the Law.

2 Secondly, that the ſayd Richard Gibſon hath unreverently ſpoken againſt the Pope, and See and Church of Rome, and likewiſe againſt the whole Church of this realme of England, and againſt the ſeven ſacraments of the Catholike and whole Church of Chriſtendome, and againſt the articles of the Chriſtian faith here obſerved in this realme of England, and againſt the commendable and laudable Ceremonies of the Catholike Church.

3 Thirdly, that the ſayd Richard Gibſon hath commended, allowed, defended, and liked, both Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, and alſo all other heretikes here in this realme of England, according to the Eccleſiaſticall Lawes condemned for heretikes, and alſo liked all their hereticall and erroneous, damnable and wicked opinions, eſpecially againſt the ſacrament of the Altar, and the authority of the Pope and See of Rome, with the whole religion thereof.

4 Fourthly, that the ſayd Richard Gibſon hath comforted, ayded, aſſiſted and maintained both by words, and otherwiſe, heretikes and erroneous perſons, or at the leaſt ſuſpected and infamed of hereſies and errors condemned by the Catholike Church, to continue in their hereticall and erroneous opinions aforeſayd, favouring aud counſelling the ſame unto his power.

Q. Maries religion diſproved.

5 Fifthly, that the ſayd Gibſon hath affirmed and ſaid, that the religion and faith commonly obſerved, kept, and uſed now here in this Realme of England, is not good and laudable, nor in any wiſe agreeable unto Gods word and commandement.

The Booke of Engliſh ſervice.

6 Sixthly, that the ſayd Gibſon hath affirmed, that the Engliſh Service, and the Bookes, commonly called the Bookes of Communion, or Common Prayer, here ſet forth in this Realme of England in the time of King Edward the ſixth, were in all parts and points good and godly, and that the ſame onely, and no other, ought to bee obſerved and kept in this Realme of England.

7 Seventhly, that the ſayd Gibſon hath affirmed, that if hee may once be out of priſon and at liberty, he will not come to any Pariſh Church, or Eccleſiſticall place, to heare Mattins, Maſſe, Evenſong, or any divine ſervice now uſed in this Realme of England, nor come to Proceſſion upon times and daies accuſtomed, nor beare at any time any Taper or Candle, nor receive at any time aſhes, nor beare at any time Palme, nor receive Pax at Maſſe time, nor receive holy water, nor holy bread, nor obſerve the ceremonies or uſages of the Catholike Church, here obſerved or kept commonly in this Realme of England.

Mattins, Maſſe, Evenſong refuſed

8 Eighthly, that the ſayd Gibſon hath affirmed, that hee is not bound at any time, though he have liberty, and the preſence of a Prieſt convenient and meet, to confeſſe his ſinnes to the ſayd Prieſt, nor to receive the abſolution of his ſins at his hands, nor to receive of him the ſacrament, commonly called the ſacrament of the Altar, after ſuch forme as is now uſed within this Realme of England.

Auricular confeſſion.

9 Ninthly, that the ſaid Gibſon hath affirmed, that prayer unto Saints, or prayers for the dead, are not laudable, availeable, or profitable; and that no man is bound at any time or in any place to faſt or pray, but onely at his owne will and pleaſure, and that it is not lawfull to reſerve or keep the ſayd ſacrament of the altar, nor in any wiſe to adore and worſhip it.

Popiſh faſt and prayer.

The greateſt matter which hee was charged withall, was, for not comming to Confeſſion, being thereunto required, for not receiving of the ſacraments of the Popiſh making, and for that hee would not ſweare to anſwer unto their interrogatories layd againſt him.

Notwithſtanding, after theſe his firſt examinations he continued in the foreſayd priſon of the Counter a good ſpace, from the moneth of May unto November, at what time he was againe produced againſt the finall examination judiciary. Where is to be noted, that M. Gibſon being a very big and tall man, of a perſonable and heroicall ſtature, was ſent for of Boner by a little and ſhort perſon, a Promoter, like Robin Papiſt, called Robin Caley, if it were not he himſelfe.

Richard Gibſon a tall and big man.

This Robin Caley, having the conducting of the ſayd Gentleman from the Poultry, would needes hale him thorow Cheapſide, the Gentleman deſiring him to turne ſome other way. But the more the Gentleman intreated, the more fierce was the ſilly Jacke upon him; and drawing and holding him by the arme, would needs hale him thorow the high ſtreet, that all the world might ſee what he could doe in his office. M. Gibſon, deſirous to be led without holding, willed and intreated him to let his arme looſe, he would goe quietly of his owne accord with him whither he would, only craving that he might go by him freely without noting of the people.

The ſaucy and impotent miſer the Promoter hearing this, who was ſcarce able to reach to his ſhoulders: nay (ſaith he) thou ſhalt not eſcape me ſo, come on thy wayes. Thou ſhalt not chooſe but come; and ſo reaching at his arme, would needes drag him unto the Biſhop. The Gentleman content to goe, yet loth to bee notified in the ſtreets, gently requeſted againe and againe, that refraining his hold, hee would ſuffer him to goe of his owne free and voluntary will; hee ſhould not neede to feare him, for hee would not ſtart from him. To whom the Caitiffe, looking up to his face, Come on thy way (ſaith hee) I will hold thee faſt, ſpite of thy beard, and whether thou wilt or no.

Intolerable bragging of a vile promoter.

Maſter Gibſon ſeeing and beholding the intolerable bragging of the wretched miſer, and moved therewith not a little, could beare no longer, but ſayd, Wilt thou ſayd he ? and addeth moreover, bitterly looking downe towards him, that if hee did not incontinently plucke away his hand (and ſo ſtayed withall) hee would immediately wring his neck from his body. Whereupon Robin Papiſt the Promoter was faine to plucke away his hold, and ſo proceeded they unto the Biſhop there to be examined againe before him.

After this, another day being aſſigned him to appeare againe, much talke paſſed betweene him and Darbyſhire, then Chancellor. But in fine, being required to ſweare that hee ſhould anſwer unto all they would demand, hee denied to anſwer unto all things the Biſhop ſhould command him as Ordinary: for hee is not (ſaith he) mine Ordinary, and ſo bade him goe tell the Biſhop. Before the which Biſhop hee being then commanded to appeare the Friday next following, was brought unto the Juſtice Hall without Newgate, where he had the like conflicts with the foreſaid Biſhop and divers other Juſtices. At length, he was aſſigned the Saturday following, to be preſent in the Biſhops Conſiſtory Court, to heare his finall ſentence. At which day and place, the ſayd Examinate appearing as hee was commanded, the Biſhop after other matter of communication, aſked him if he knew any cauſe why why the ſentence ſhould not be read againſt him. To whom the ſaid Maſter Gibſon anſwered, that the Biſhop had nothing wherefore juſtly to condemne him. The Biſhops reaſon was againe objected to him, that man ſaid hee was an evill man. To whom Gibſon replying againe; Yea, ſaith he, and ſo may I ſay of you alſo. To bee ſhort, after this and ſuch other talke, the Biſhop haſted unto the ſentence. Which beeing read, Gibſon yet againe admoniſhed to remember himſelfe, and to ſave his ſoule, ſaid, That hee would not heare the Biſhops babling; and ſaid moreover, boldly proteſting and affirming that he was contrary, and an enemy to them all in his minde and opinion, although he had afore time kept it ſecret in minde, for feare of the Law. And ſpeaking to the Biſhop, Bleſſed, ſaid he, am I, that am curſed at your hands. We have nothing now, but thus will I: For as the Biſhop ſaith ſo muſt it be. And no hereſie it is to turne the truth of Gods word into lies, and that do you, meaning the Biſhop and his fellowes.

Thus this valiant ſoldier, fighting for the Goſpell, and ſincere doctrine of Chriſts truth and Religion, againſt Falſehood and Errour, was committed, with his Fellowes, to the Secular Power.

The martyrdome of John Hallingdale, W. Sparrow, Rich. Gibſon. Anno 1557. Novemb. 18.

And ſo theſe three godly men, John Hallingdale, William Sparrow, and Maſter Gibſon, beeing thus appointed to the ſlaughter, were the xii day after their condemnation (which was the xviii day of the ſaid moneth of November) burnt in Smithfield in London. And being brought thither to the ſtake, after their prayer made, they were bound thereunto with chaines, and wood ſet unto them, and after wood, fire, in the which being compaſſed about, and the fiery flames conſuming their fleſh, at the laſt they yeelded gloriouſly and joyfully their ſouls and lives into the holy hands of the Lord, to whoſe tuition and government I commend thee, good Reader. Amen.

It is a little above declared in this ſtory of Richard Gibſon, how Boner miniſtred unto the ſaid Gibſon certaine Articles, to the number of nine. Now let us ſee likewiſe the Articles which the ſaid Gibſon miniſtred againe to Boner, according to the ſame number of nine, for him to anſwer unto, as by the ſame hereunder written may appeare.

¶ Articles proponed by Richard Gibſon, unto Edmund Boner Biſhop of London, by him to be anſwered, by yea or nay, or elſe to ſay hee cannot tell.

Gibſons queſtions or demands put to B. Boner.

1 Whether the Scriptures of God, written by Moſes & other holy Prophets of God, through faith that is in Chriſt Jeſus, be available doctrine, to make all men in all things unto ſalvation learned, without the help of any other doctrine, or no.

2 What is authority, and from whence it commeth, and to whom it appertaineth, and to what end it tendeth.

3 Whether the holy word of God, as it is written, doth ſufficiently teach all men, of what dignity, eſtate, or calling by office ſoever he or they bee, their full true and lawfull duty in their office; and whether every man, of what dignity, eſtate, or calling by office ſoever he or they be, are bound upon the pain of eternall damnation, in all things to do as they are hereby taught and commanded, and in no wiſe to leave undone any thing that is to be done, being taught and commanded by the ſame.

4 Whether any man, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, God and man onely except, by the holy ordinance of God ever was, is, or ſhall bee Lord over Faith, and by what lawful authority of any man, of what dignity, eſtate, or calling by office ſoever hee or they be, may uſe Lordſhip or power over any man for Faiths ſake, or for the ſervice of his Conſcience.

5 By what lawfull authority or power any man, of what dignity, eſtate, or calling ſoever he or they be, may be ſo bold as to alter or change the holy ordinances of God, or any of them, or any part of them.

6 By what evident tokens Antichriſt in his Miniſters may bee knowne; ſeeing it is written, that Sathan can change himſelfe into the ſimilitude of an Angell of light, and his Miniſters faſhion themſelves as though they were the Miniſters of righteouſnes; and how it may be knowne to him that is deſirous thereof, when he is one of that number, or in the danger thereof, or when hee is otherwiſe.

7 What the beaſt is, the which maketh warre with the Saints of God, and doth not onely kill them, but alſo will ſuffer none to buy nor ſell, but ſuch as worſhip his image, or receive his marke in their right hands, or in their foreheads, his name, or the number of his name, or doe worſhip his Image, which by the juſt and terrible ſentence of God already decreed, ſhall be periſhed in fire and brimſtone, before the holy Angels, and before the Lamb; and they ſhall have no reſt day nor night, but the ſmoke of their torment ſhall aſcend up for evermore. Alſo what the gorgeous and glittering Whore is, the which ſitteth upon the Beaſt, with a Cup of gold in her hand full of abominations, with whom the Kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the Inhabitants of the earth, and ſhe her ſelfe alſo is drunken with the bloud of the Saints, which is the wine of her Fornication; whoſe fleſh the hornes of the Beaſt ſhall teare in pieces, and burne her with fire. For God hath put in their hearts to doe his will.

8 Whether a King over all thoſe people which are borne and inhabit within his owne dominions, Regions, and Countries, or any part of them, of what dignity, eſtate, or calling by Office ſoever they be, here upon this earth immediately under Chriſt, by the holy Ordinance of God, is lawfull, ſupreame, and chiefe Governor, or no. And whether a King over all thoſe people within his Dominions, Regions, and Countries, and every part of them, by holy Ordinance of God, lawfully may, and ought not otherwiſe to doe, nor ſuffer otherwiſe to be done, than in his owne name, power, and authority (the name of God onely except) as lawfull, ſupreme, and chiefe head in all things that belongeth to rule, without exception, to governe and rule. And whether all thoſe people, of what dignity, eſtate, or calling ſoever they be, are bound by the holy Ordinance of God, to owe their whole obedience and ſervice in all things without exception (their duty to God onely excepted) to their King onely, as to the ſupreame and chiefe Governor upon earth immediately under Chriſt. And whether a King without offence againſt God and his people, may give away, and not himſelfe uſe that his authority and power given him of God; or lawfully may, without offence to God and his people (after knowledge thereof had) ſuffer himſelfe by fraud or guile, or by any other unlawfull meane, to be beguiled, defrauded, and ſpoyled thereof. And whether any ſubject, of what dignity, eſtate, or calling ſoever he or they be, without offence to God and to his king, to the miniſhing or derogating of the ſupreame prerogative royal of his king, or of any part thereof, may doe ought, or after knowledge thereof had,

The death and martyrdome of Iohn Rough Miniſter, and Margaret Mearing, burned at London the xxii. of December.

Decemb. 22. John Rough Mar. Mearing Martyrs

IN this furious time of perſecution, were alſo burned theſe two conſtant and faithful Martyrs of Chriſt, John Rough a Miniſter, and Margaret Mearing.

This Rough was borne in Scotland, who (as himſelfe confeſſeth in his anſwers to Boners articles) becauſe ſome of his kinſfolk would have kept him from his right of inheritance which he had to certain lands, did at the age of xvii. yeares, in deſpight (and the rather to diſpleaſe his friends) profeſſe himſelfe into the order of the black Friars at Sterling in Scotland; where he remained the ſpace of 16. yeers, untill ſuch time as the Lord Hamulton, Earl of Arren, and Governour of the Realm of Scotland aforeſaid (caſting a favour unto him) did ſue unto the Archbiſhop of S. Andrews, to have him out of his profeſſed order, that as a ſecular Prieſt he might ſerve him for his Chaplain. At which requeſt the Archbiſhop cauſed the Provinciall of that houſe, having thereto authoritie, to diſpence with him for his habit and order.

A zealous occaſion of a frierly profeſſion.

This ſuit being thus by the Earl obtained, the ſaid Rough remained in his ſervice, one whole yeare: during which time it pleaſed God to open his eyes, and to give him ſome knowledge of his truth, and thereupon was by the ſaid Governor ſent to preach in the freedome of Ayre, where he continued foure yeares, and then after the death of the Cardinall of Scotland, hee was appointed to abide at Saint Andrewes, and there had aſſigned unto him a yearely penſion of twentie pound from King Henrie the eighth, King of England. Howbeit, at laſt weighing with himſelfe his owne danger, and alſo abhorring the Idolatrie and Superſtition of the Countrey, and hearing of the freedome of the Goſpel within this Realme of England, hee determined with himſelfe not to tarrie any longer there: And therfore, ſoone after the battell of Muſcleborough, he came firſt unto Carliel, and from thence unto the Duke of Somerſet, then Lord Protector of England, and by his aſſignement had appointed unto him out of the Kings Treaſurie twenty pounds of yearely ſtipend, and was ſent (as a Preacher) to ſerve at Carliel, Barwick, and Newcaſtle. From whence (after he had there, according to the lawes of God and alſo of this realme, taken a Countrey woman of his to wife) he was called by the Archbiſhop of Yorke that then was, unto a Benefice nigh in the towne of Hull, where he continued untill the death of that bleſſed and good King Edward the ſixth.

John Rough firſt called to the truth.

John Rough firſt comming to England in K. Edw. time.

But in the beginning of the reigne of Queene Marie (perceiving the alteration of religion, and the perſecution that would thereupon ariſe, and feeling his owne weakneſſe) he fled with his wife into Frizeland, and dwelt there at a place called Norden, labouring truly for his living, in knitting of caps, hoſe, and ſuch like things, till about the end of the moneth of October laſt before his death. At which time, lacking yarne, and other ſuch neceſſary proviſion for the maintenance of his occupation, hee came over againe into England, here to provide for the ſame, and the tenth day of November arrived at London. Where, hearing of the ſecret ſocietie, and holy Congregation of Gods children there aſſembled, he joyned himſelfe unto them, and afterwards being elected their Miniſter and Preacher, did continue moſt vertuouſly exerciſed in that godly fellowſhip, teaching and confirming them in the truth and Goſpel of Chriſt. But in the end (ſuch was the providence of God, who diſpoſeth all things to the beſt) the twelfth day of December, he with Cutbert Symſon and others, through the craftie and trayterous ſuggeſtion of a falſe hypocrite and diſſembling brother, called Roger Sergeant a Taylor, were apprehended by the Vicechamberlaine of the Queenes houſe, at the Saracens head in Iſlington; where the Congregation had then purpoſed to aſſemble themſelves to their godly and accuſtomable exerciſes of prayer, and hearing the word of God: which pretence, for the ſafegard of all the reſt, they yet at their examinations covered and excuſed, by hearing of a play that was then appointed to bee at that place. The Vicechamberlaine, after hee had apprehended them, carried Rough and Simſon unto the Councell, who charged them to have aſſembled together to celebrate the Communion or Supper of the Lord, and therefore after ſundry examinations, they ſent the ſaid Rough unto Newgate; but his examinations they ſent unto the Biſhop of London, with a letter ſigned with their hands: the copie whereof followeth.

A letter ſent from the Queenes Councell unto Boner Biſhop of London, touching the examination of Iohn Rough, Miniſter.

A letter ſent from the Councell to B. Boner.

AFter our hearty commendations to your good Lordſhip, we ſend you here incloſed the examination of a Scottiſh man named John Rough, who by the Queenes Majeſtie commandement is preſently ſent to Newgate, being of the chiefe of them that upon Sunday laſt, under the colour of comming to ſee a play at the Saracens head in Iſlington, had prepared a Communion to bee celebrated and received there among certaine other ſeditious and hereticall perſons. And foraſmuch as by the ſaid Roughs examination, containing the ſtory and progreſſe of his former life, it wel appeareth of what ſort he is; the Queens highneſſe hath willed us to remit him unto your Lordſhip, to ye end that being called before you out of priſon, as oft as your Lordſhip ſhall thinke good, ye may proceede, both to his further examination, and otherwiſe ordering of him according to the lawes, as the caſe ſhall require. And thus we bid your Lordſhip heartily well to fare. From Saint Iames the 15. day of Decemb. 1557.

Boner, now minding to make quicke diſpatch, did within three dayes after the receit of the letter (the 18. day of December) ſend for this Rough out of Newgate, and in his Palace at London miniſtred unto him 12. articles: Many whereof becauſe they containe only queſtions of the profeſſion and religion of that age, wherein both hee and his Parents were chriſtened (which in ſundry places are already mentioned) I doe here for brevity omit; minding to touch ſuch only, as pertaine to matters of faith now in controverſie, and then chiefly objected againſt the Martyrs and Saints of God, which in effect are theſe.

Articles againſt Iohn Rough. Sacrament of the altar. Confeſſion.

FIrſt, that thou Iohn Rough diddeſt directly ſpeake againſt the 7. Sacraments, uſed commonly and reverently, as things of eſtimation and great worthineſſe in the Catholike Church: and alſo diddeſt reprove and condemne the ſubſtance of the ſaid Sacraments, but eſpecially the ſacrament of the altar, affirming that in that ſame is not really and truly the very body and bloud of Chriſt: and that confeſſion to the Prieſt, and abſolution given by him (as the Miniſter of Chriſt) for ſins is not neceſſary or availeable in any wiſe.

Latine ſervice.

2 Item, thou haſt miſliked and reproved the religion and Eccleſiaſticall ſervice, as it is now uſed in this realme, and haſt allowed the religion and ſervice uſed in the later yeares of King Edward the ſixth, and ſo much as in thee hath lyen, haſt by word, writing, and deede, ſet forwards, taught, and preached the ſame openly, and in ſundry places affirmed, that the ſayd Engliſh ſervice and doctrine therein contained, is agreeable in all points to Gods word, and unto the truth, condemning utterly the Latine ſervice now uſed in the Queenes reigne, and inducing others by thine example to do the like.

3 Item, thou haſt in ſundry places within this Realme commended and approved the opinion and doctrine of Tho. Cranmer, late Archbiſhop of Canturbury, Nicholas Ridley, and Hugh Latimer, concerning the ſacrament of the altar, affirming that in the ſacrament there remaineth, after the words of conſecration, materiall bread, and materiall wine, without any tranſubſtantiation.

Books of communion.

4 Item, thou haſt in ſundry places of this realme, ſince the Queens reigne, miniſtred and received the Communion as it was uſed in the late dayes of K. Edward the 6. and thou knoweſt, or credibly haſt heard of divers, that yet do keep books of the ſaid Communion, and uſe the ſame in private houſes out of the Church and are of opinion againſt the Sacrament of the altar.

Againſt the ſupremacy of the Pope.

5 Item, that thou in ſundry places of this realme haſt ſpoken againſt the Pope of Rome, and his Apoſtolike See, and haſt plainly contemned and deſpiſed the authority of the ſame, miſliking and not allowing the faith and doctrine thereof, but directly ſpeaking againſt it, and by thine example haſt induced other the ſubjects of this realme, to ſpeak and do the like.

6 Item, thou doſt know, and haſt beene converſant with all, or a great part of ſuch Engliſh men as have fled out of this realme for religion, and haſt conſented and agreed with them in their opinions, and haſt ſuccoured, maintained, and holpen them, and haſt beene a conveyer of their ſeditious letters, and bookes into this realme.

7 Item, that thou haſt ſayd, that thou haſt been at Rome, and tarried there about thirty dayes or more, and that thou haſt ſeene little good or none there, but very much evill. Amongſt the which thou ſaweſt one great abomination, that is to ſay, a man (or the Pope) that ſhould goe on the ground, to be carried upon the ſhoulders of foure men, as though he had beene God and no man: Alſo a Cardinall to have his harlot riding openly behinde him: And thirdly, a Popes Bull, that gave expreſſe licence to have and uſe the ſtewes, and to keep open bawdry by the Popes approbation and authority.

Abominable ſights at Rome.

8 Item, that thou, ſithence thy laſt comming into England out of the parts beyond the ſea, haſt perniciouſly allured, and comforted divers of the ſubjects of this realme, both young men, old men and women, to have and uſe the booke of Communion, ſet forth in this realme, in the later dayes of King Edward the ſixth, and haſt alſo thy ſelfe read and ſet forth the ſame, cauſing others to doe the like, and to leave their comming to their Pariſh Churches to heare the Latine ſervice now uſed.

9 Item, that thou on the third ſunday of Advent the 12. day of this December 1557. waſt apprehended at the Saracens head at Iſlington, in the County of Middleſex and Dioceſſe of London, by the Queenes Vicechamberlaine, with one Cutbert a Taylor, Hugh a Hoſier, and divers other there aſſembled, under the colour of hearing a play, to have read the communion book, and to have uſed the accuſtomed faſhion, as was in the later dayes of King Edward the ſixth.

Cutbert Symſon. Hugh Foxe.

The Anſwer of Iohn Rough, to the foreſaid Articles.

His anſwers to the articles.

TO the firſt he ſaid and confeſſed, that he had ſpoken againſt the number of the ſayd ſacraments, being fully perſwaded that there bee but only two ſacraments, to wit, Baptiſme, and the Supper of the Lord; and as for the other five, he denied them to bee ſacraments, and therefore hath ſpoken againſt them. And as concerning the ſacrament of the altar (which hee then called the Supper of the Lord) hee confeſſed that he had ſpoken and taught, that in the ſayd ſacrament there is not really and ſubſtantially the very body and bloud of Chriſt, but that the ſubſtance of bread and wine doth remaine in the ſayd ſacrament, without any Tranſubſtantiation at all. Farther as touching Confeſſion of ſinnes to the Prieſt, he anſwered, that he thought it neceſſary, if the offence were done unto the Prieſt: but if the offence were done to another, then confeſſion made to the Prieſt is not neceſſary, but reconciliation onely to bee made to the party ſo offended.

2 To the ſecond he anſwered, that he then did and had before miſliked the order of Latine ſervice then uſed; and alſo did allow the ſervice uſed in the later time of King Edwards reigne, for that the holy Scripture doth the ſame, and therefore he granted that hee did teach and ſet forth the ſaid Engliſh ſervice, as in the ſame article is objected.

3 To the third, he granted that he had approved the doctrine of the parties articulat as agreeable to Gods word, and that they were godly learned men, and ſuch as had perfect underſtanding in the contents of the ſame article.

4 To the fourth he anſwered, that hee did well like the Communion uſed in King Edwards dayes, but hee ſaid, that hee had not miniſtred or received the ſame here in England ſince the Queenes reigne, neyther yet knew any that had the bookes thereof. But on the other ſide, he knew many that had thoſe bookes, and that there alſo hee had received the Communion in ſundry places.

5 The contents of the fifth hee granted to bee true.

6 To the ſixth he confeſſed that he had been familiar with diverſe Engliſh men and women being in Frizeland, and agreed with them in opinion, as Maſter Scory, Thomas Young, Geor: Roo, and others, to the number of one hundred perſons, which fled thither for religion, uſing there the order ſet forth in the reigne of King Edward, and otherwiſe he denieth the contents of this Article.

7 The contents of the ſeventh he granted in every point to be true.

8 To the eighth hee anſwered and confeſſed, that ſithence his laſt comming into England (which was about the x. day of November) he had in ſundry places in the ſuburbs of London prayed and read ſuch prayers and ſervice, as is appointed in the Booke of the Communion, and willed others to doe the like, both men and women, which he did know by ſight, but not by name. Howbeit hee did never cauſe any to withdraw themſelves from the Latine ſervice, but he ſayd it were better to pray in a tongue that they did underſtand, than in an unknowne tongue.

9 To the ninth he confeſſed, at the time and place articulate he was preſent to heare and ſee a play, and there was apprehended by the Queenes Majeſties Vicechamberlaine, with one Cutbert a Taylor, and one Hugh a Hoſier, and divers other both men and women, whoſe names he knew not, and by him was brought before the Councell, who ſent him unto Newgate, and from thence he was brought to the Biſhop. And otherwiſe hee denieth the contents of this article.

Another appearance of Io Rough before the Biſhop.

Iohn Rough condemned and degraded by Boner.

Upon theſe anſwers he was diſmiſſed, and the next day being the xix. of December, he was againe brought before the ſaid Biſhop and others. Who, when they perceived his conſtantneſſe, determined the next day after to bring him openly into the Conſiſtory, there to adjudge, and condemne him as an heretike. Which purpoſe they accompliſhed. For the twentieth day at afternoone, in the preſence of the Biſhop of London, and S. Davids, with Fecknam Abbat of Weſtminſter and others, hee was there produced. Where after much and many faire perſwaſions, Boner read unto him the articles and anſwers, before mentioned, in the which they charged him to have received the orders of the Church, and therefore might not marry; and that he had refuſed to conſent unto the Latine ſervice then uſed in the Church. Whereunto he then anſwered and ſayd, that their orders were nothing at all, and that hee being a Prieſt, might lawfully marry, and that his children which he had by his wife were lawfull. And touching the ſervice then uſed, he utterly deteſted it, ſaying, that if he ſhould live as long as did Methuſalach, yet hee would never come to the Church to heare the abominable maſſe and other ſervice, being as it was then. Upon which words the Biſhop proceeded to the actuall degradation of the ſayd Rough, exempting him from all the benefits and privileges of their Church, and after condemning him as an heretike, committed his body to the ſecular power, who taking him into their charge and cuſtody, carried him unto Newgate.

A note of M. Rough.

Moreover, as touching the ſaid M. Rough this is further to be noted, that he being in the North Country in the dayes of King Edward the ſixth, was the meane to ſave Doctor Watſons life (who in Queene Maries time was Biſhop of Lincolne) for a Sermon that he had made there. The ſayd Watſon after that, in the ſaid dayes of Queen Mary, being with Boner at the examination of the ſaid M. Rough, to requite the good turne in ſaving his life, detected him there to be a pernicious heretike, who did more hurt in the North parts, than an hundred beſides of his opinion. Unto whom M. Rough ſayd againe, Why Sir, is this the reward I have for ſaving your life, when you preached erroneous doctrine in the dayes of King Edward the ſixth? This Maſter Rough ſayd, he had lived thirty yeares, and yet had never bowed his knee to Baal; and being before Boner, among other talke, he affirmed that he had beene twice at Rome, and there had ſeene plainly with his eyes, which he had many times heard of before, namely, that the Pope was the very Antichriſt: for there he ſaw him caried on mens ſhoulders, and the falſe named Sacrament borne before him. Yet was there more reverence given to him, than to that which they counted to be their god. When Boner heard this, riſing up, and making as though he would have torne his garments, Haſt thou, ſayd he, beene at Rome, and ſeene our holy father the Pope, and doeſt thou blaſpheme him after this ſort, and with that flying upon him, he plucked off a peece of his beard, and after making ſpeedy haſte to his death, he burnt him halfe an houre before ſixe of the clock in the morning, becauſe the day (belike) ſhould not be far ſpent, before he had done a miſchievous deed.

B. Boner plucked off halfe the beard of Io. Rough.

Another note concerning Iohn Rough

Furthermore, note that this Maſter Rough being at the burning of Auſtoo in Smithfield, and returning homeward againe, met with one M. Farrar, a Merchant of Hallifax, who aſked him, where he had beene. Unto whom he anſwered; I have beene (ſaith hee) where I would not for one of mine eyes but I had beene. Where have you beene, ſayd Maſter Farrar? Forſooth (ſaith he) to learne the way. And ſo he told him he had beene at the burning of Auſtoo, where ſhortly after he was burned himſelfe.

A letter of Io. Rough.

THe comfort of the holy Ghoſt make you able to give conſolation to others, in theſe dangerous dayes, when Satan is let looſe, but to the triall only of the choſen, when it pleaſeth our God to ſift his wheat from the chaffe. I have not leaſure and time to write the great temptations I have beene under. I ſpeake to Gods glory; my care was to have the ſenſes of my ſoule open, to perceive the voice of God, ſaying, whoſoever denieth me before men, him will I deny before my father and his Angels. And to ſave the life corporall, is to loſe the life eternall. And he that will not ſuffer with Chriſt, ſhall not reign with him. Therefore moſt tender ones, I have by Gods ſpirit given over the fleſh, with the fight of my ſoule, and the ſpirit hath the victory. The fleſh ſhall now ere it be long, leave off to ſin, the ſpirit ſhall reign eternally. I have choſen the death, to confirme the truth by me taught. What can I doe more? Conſider with your ſelves, that I have done it for the confirmation of Gods truth. Pray that I may continue unto the end. The greateſt part of the aſſault is paſt, I praiſe my God. I have in all my aſſaults felt the preſent ayde of my God, I give him moſt hearty thankes therefore. Looke not backe, nor be ye aſhamed of Chriſts Goſpel, nor of the bonds I have ſuffered for the ſame, thereby ye may be aſſured it is the true word of God. The holy ones have beene ſealed with the ſame marke. It is no time for the loſſe of one man in the battell, for the camp to turne backe. Up with mens hearts; blow downe the dawbed walls of hereſie. Let one take the banner, and the other the trumpet; I meane, not to make corporall reſiſtance, but pray, and yee ſhall have Elias defence, and Elizeus company to fight for you. The cauſe is the Lords. Now my brethren I can write no more, time will not ſuffer, and my heart with pangs of death is aſſaulted: but I am at home with my God yet alive. Pray for me, and ſalute one another with the holy kiſſe. The peace of God reſt with you all. Amen. From Newgate priſon in haſte, the day of my condemnation.

John Rough.

Another letter of Iohn Rough written unto the Congregation two dayes before hee ſuffered.

THe ſpirit of all conſolation be with you, and you, and make you ſtrong to run to the fight that is layd before you, wherewithall God in all ages hath tried his elect, and hath found them worthie of himſelfe, by coupling to their head Ieſus Chriſt: in whom, whoſo deſireth to live godly, the ſame muſt needes ſuffer perſecution. For it is given unto them, not onely to beleeve, but alſo to ſuffer. And the Servant or Schollar cannot bee greater than his Lord or Maſter: but by the ſame way the head is entered, the members muſt follow: no life is in the members which are cut from the bodie: likewiſe we have no life, but in Chriſt: for by him we live, move, and have our being. My deare ſonne, now departing this life to my great advantage, I make change of mortalitie with immortalitie, of corruption to put on incorruption, to make my body like to the corne caſt into the ground, which except it die firſt, it can bring forth no good fruit. Wherefore death is to me great advantage: for thereby the body ceaſeth from ſinne, and after turneth into the firſt Originall; but after ſhall bee changed, and made brighter than the Sunne or Moone. What ſhall I write of this corporall death, ſeeing it is decreed of God, that all men ſhall once die? Happie are they that die in the Lord, which is to die in the faith of Chriſt, profeſſing and confeſſing the ſame before many witneſſes. I praiſe my God I have paſſed the ſame journey by many temptations, the divell is verie buſie to perſwade, the world to entice with promiſes and faire words: which I omit to write, leſt ſome might think I did hunt after vaine glorie, which is fartheſt from my heart. Laſtly the danger of ſome falſe brethren, who before the Biſhop of London purpoſed to confeſſe an untruth to my face; yet the God that ruled Balaam, moved their hearts: where they thought to ſpeake to my accuſation, he made them ſpeake to my purgation. What a journey (by Gods power) I have made, theſe eight daies before this day, it is above fleſh and bloud to beare: but as Paul ſaith, I may doe all things in him which worketh in me, Ieſus Chriſt. My courſe, brethren, have I runne, have I fought a good fight, the crowne of righteouſneſſe is layd up for me, my day to receive it is not long to. Pray brethren, for the enemy doth yet aſſault. Stand conſtant unto the end, then ſhall you poſſeſſe your ſoules. Walke worthily in that vocation wherein you are called. Comfort the brethren. Salute one another in my name. Be not aſhamed of the Goſpel of the Croſſe, by me preached, nor yet of my ſuffering: for with my blood I affirme the ſame. I goe before, I ſuffer firſt the baiting of the Butchers dogs; yet I have not done what I ſhould have done: but my weakneſſe, I doubt not, is ſupplyed in the ſtrength of Ieſus Chriſt; and your wiſdomes and learning will accept that ſmall talent, which I have diſtributed unto you (as I truſt) as a faithfull Steward: and what was undone, impute that to frailty and ignorance, and with your love cover that which is and was naked in me. God knoweth ye are all tender unto me, my heart burſteth for the love of you. Yee are not without your great Paſtor of your ſoule, who ſo loveth you, that if men were not to bee ſought out (as God be praiſed, there is no want of men) he would cauſe ſtones to miniſter unto you. Caſt your care on that rocke, the winde of temptation ſhall not prevaile: faſt and pray, for the daies are evill. Looke up with your eyes of hope, for the redemption is not far off (but my wickedneſſe hath deſerved that I ſhall not ſee it.) And alſo that which is behinde of the blood of our brethren, which ſhall alſo be laid under the Altar, ſhall cry for your reliefe. Time will not now ſuffer me to write longer letters. The ſpirit of God guide you in and out, riſing and ſitting, cover you with the ſhadow of his wings, defend you againſt the tyranny of the wicked, and bring you happily unto the Port of eternall felicity, where all teares ſhall be wiped from your eyes, and you ſhall alwaies abide with the Lambe.

Margaret Mearing, Martyr.

The ſtory and examination of Mar. Mearing Martyr.

IT is declared, that in the company of Iohn Rough, was burned one Margaret Mearing, who, as the Regiſter maketh mention, was at one time and day brought with the ſaid Rough forth to examination: where the Biſhop having no private matters to charge her withall, did the eighteenth day of December object againſt her thoſe common and accuſtomable Articles mentioned before. To which ſhe anſwered as followeth.

Her anſwers to the articles.

FIrſt, that there is here in earth a Catholike Church, and that there is the true faith of Chriſt obſerved and kept in the ſame Church.

2 Item, that there were only two ſacraments in the Church, namely the ſacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, and the ſacrament of Baptiſme.

3 Item, that ſhe was baptiſed in the faith, and beliefe of the ſaid Church, renouncing there, by her Godfathers and Godmothers, the devill and all his workes, &c.

4 Item, that when ſhe came to the age of fourteene yeeres, ſhee did not know what her true beliefe was, becauſe ſhe was not then of diſcretion to underſtand the ſame, neither yet was taught it.

5 Item, that ſhe had not gone from the Catholike faith at any time: but ſhe ſaid that the Maſſe was abominable before the ſight of God, and before the ſight of all true Chriſtian people, and that it is the plaine cup of fornication, and the whore of Babylon. And as concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, ſhe ſaid, ſhee beleeved there was no ſuch ſacrament in the Catholike Church.

Anno 1558.

Alſo ſhe ſaid, that ſhe utterly abhorred the authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome, with all the religion obſerved in the ſame Antichriſts Church.

6 Item, ſhe anſwered to the ſixth article, as to the firſt, before ſpecified.

7 Item, that ſhée hath refuſed to come to her Pariſh Church, becauſe the true religion of Chriſt was not then uſed in the ſame: and further ſaid, that ſhe had not come unto the church by the ſpace of one yeare, and thrée quarters, then laſt paſt, neither yet did meane any more to come unto the ſame in theſe idolatrous daies.

Margaret Mearing apprehended by Cluney.

8 Item, as touching the manner of her apprehenſion, ſhe ſaid, that Cluney the Biſhops Sumner, did fetch her to the Biſhop.

Sentence againſt Margeret Mearing.

Theſe anſwers being then regiſtred, they were again (with the ſaid articles) propounded againſt her the twentieth day of December, and there being demanded if ſhée would ſtand unto thoſe her anſwers, ſhée ſaid; I will ſtand to them unto the death; for the verie Angels of heaven doe laugh you to ſcorne, to ſée your abomination that you uſe in the Church. After the which words, the Biſhop pronounced the ſentence of condemnation againſt her; and then delivering her unto the Sheriffes, ſhée was with the forenamed John Rough carried unto Newgate. From whence they were both together led unto Smithfield, the xxii. day of the ſame moneth of December, and there moſt joyfully gave their lives for the profeſſion of Chriſts Goſpel.

The martyrdome of John Rough, and Margaret Mearing in Smithfield Anno 1557. December.

A note of Margaret Mearing.

When the later end of this hiſtorie of Maſter Rough, and Margaret Mearing was in finiſhing, there came to our hands one neceſſarie thing of the ſaid Margaret Mearing, which wee thought not good to omit. The matter is this. Maſter Rough being chiefe Paſtor to the Congregation in the ſaid time of Quéene Marie, as before you have heard (of which companie this Margaret Mearing was one) did not well like the ſaid Margaret, but greatly ſuſpected her, as many other of them did beſides, becauſe ſhée would oftentimes bring in ſtrangers among them, and in her talke ſéemed (as they thought) ſomewhat too buſie, &c. Now, what they ſaw or underſtood further in her, we know not, but this followed the evill ſuſpicion conceived of her. Maſter Rough, the Friday before he was taken, in the open face of the Congregation, did excommunicate her out of the ſame companie: and ſo ſéemed with the reſt to exclude and cut her off from their fellowſhip and ſocietie. Whereat ſhée being moved, did not well take it, nor in good part, but thought her ſelfe not indifferently handled among them. Whereupon to one of her friends in a heat, ſhée threatned to remove them all. But the providence of God was otherwiſe. For the Sunday after, Maſter Rough being taken by the information of one Roger, Sergeant to the Biſhop of London (as hereafter thou ſhalt heare) was laid priſoner in the Gatehouſe at Weſtminſter, where none of his friends could come to viſit him. Then this ſaid Margaret, hearing thereof, got her a Baſket, and a cleane ſhirt in it, and went to Weſtminſter, where ſhée, faining her ſelfe to bée his ſiſter, got into the Priſon to him, and did there to her power not a little comfort him.

Margaret Mearing relieveth M. Rough in priſon.

Then comming abroad againe, ſhee underſtanding that the Congregation ſuſpected the ſaid Sergeant to bee his Promoter, went to his houſe, and aſked whether Judas dwelt not there. Unto whom anſwer was made, there dwelt no ſuch. No, ſaid ſhee? Dwelleth not Judas here that betrayed Chriſt? His name is Sergeant. When ſhee ſaw ſhee could not ſpeake with him, ſhe went her way. So the Friday after, ſhe ſtanding at Marke lane end in London, with another woman, a friend of hers, ſaw Cluney Boners Sumner, comming in the Street towards her houſe. Whom when ſhée ſaw, ſhee ſaid to the other woman ſtanding with her, Whither goeth yonder fine fellow, ſaid ſhe? I thinke ſurely hee goeth to my houſe; and in viewing him ſtill, at the laſt ſhe ſaw him enter in at her doore. So immediately ſhe went home, and aſked him whom he ſought. Whereunto Cluney made anſwer and ſaid, for you; you muſt goe with me. Marie (quoth ſhe) here I am; I will goe with you: and comming to the Biſhop, ſhee was laid in priſon, and the wedneſday after burnt with M. Rough in Smithfield, as ye have heard.

The taking of Marg. Mearing, Martyr.

Anno 1558.

The ſuffering and cruell torments of Cutbert Symſon, Deacon of the Chriſtian Congregation in London, in Q. Maries dayes, moſt patiently abiding the cruell rage of the Papiſts for Chriſts ſake.

Anno 1558. The ſtory and cruell handling of Cutbert Symſon deacon and martyr.

NExt after the martyrdome of Maſter Rough Miniſter of the Congregation above mentioned, ſucceeded in like martyrdome the Deacon alſo of that ſaid godly company or congregation in London, named Cutbert Symſon, being committed to the fire, the yeare of our Lord, 1558. the 28. day of March.

This Cutbert Symſon was a man of a faithfull and zealous heart to Chriſt and his true flock, inſomuch that he never ceaſed labouring, and ſtudying moſt earneſtly, not onely how to preſerve them without corruption of the Popiſh religion, but alſo his care was very vigilant, how to keepe them together without perill or danger of perſecution. The paines, travell, zeale, patience, and fidelitie of this man, in caring and providing for this congregation, as it is not lightly to be expreſſed; ſo is it wonderfull to behold the providence of the Lord by viſion, concerning the troubles of this faithfull Miniſter and godly Deacon, as in this here following may appeare.

The viſions ſent to Gods Saints concerning their afflictions.

The Friday at night before Maſter Rough Miniſter of the Congregation (of whom mention is made before) was taken, being in his bed he dreamed, that hee ſaw two of the Guard leading Cutbert Symſon deacon of the ſaid Congregation, and that he had the booke about him, wherein were written the names of all them which were of the Congregation. Whereupon being ſore troubled, hee awaked, and called his wife; ſaying, Kate ſtrike light, for I am much troubled with my brother Cutbert this night. When ſhe had ſo done, he gave himſelfe to reade in his booke a while, and there féeling ſléep to come upon him, he put out the candle, and ſo gave himſelfe againe to reſt. Being aſleepe, he dreamed the like dreame againe; and, awaked therewith, he ſaid, Oh Kate, my brother Cutbert is gone. So they lighted a candle againe, and roſe. And as the ſaid Maſter Rough was making him readie to goe to Cutbert to ſee how hee did, in the meane time the ſaid Cutbert came in with the booke, containing the names and accounts of the Congregation. Whom when Maſter Rough had ſeene, he ſaid, Brother Cutbert, ye are welcome: for I have beene ſore troubled with you this night, & ſo told him his dreame. After he had ſo done, he willed him to lay the booke away from him, & to carrie it no more about him. Unto which Cutbert anſwered, hee would not ſo doe: for dreames, he ſaid, were but phantaſies, and not to be credited. Then Maſter Rough ſtraitly charged him in the name of the Lord to doe it. Whereupon the ſaid Cutbert tooke ſuch notes out of the booke, as he had willed him to doe, and immediatly left the booke with Maſter Roughes wife.

The next day following, in the night, the ſaid Maſter Rough had another dreame in his ſleepe concerning his owne trouble. The matter whereof was this. He thought in his dreame that hee was carried himſelfe forcibly to the Biſhop, and that the Biſhop pluckt off his beard, and caſt it into the fire, ſaying theſe words; Now I may ſay I have had a peece of an heretike burned in my houſe, and ſo accordingly it came to paſſe.

Now to returne to Cutbert againe; as wee have touched ſomething concerning theſe viſions, ſo now remaineth to ſtory alſo of his paines and ſufferings upon the racke, and otherwiſe, like a good Laurence for the Congregations ſake, as he wrote it with his owne hand.

¶ A true report how I was uſed in the Tower of London, being ſent thither by the Councell, the thirteenth day of December.

A letter of Cutbert Simſon to certaine of his friends.

ON the Thurſday after, I was called into the Warehouſe, before the Conſtable of the Tower and the Recorder of London Maſter Cholmley; they commanded me to tell, whom I did will to come to the Engliſh Service. I anſwered, I would declare nothing. Whereupon I was ſet in a rack of Iron, the ſpace of three hours as I judged.

Then they aſked me if I would tell them. I anſwered as before. Then was I looſed, and carried to my lodging againe. On the Sunday after I was brought into the ſame place againe before the Lieutenant and the Recorder of London, and they examined me. As before I had ſaid, I anſwered. Then the Lieutenant did ſweare by God I ſhould tell. Then did they binde my two forefingers together, and put a ſmall arrow betwixt them, and drew it through ſo faſt that the blood followed, and the arrow brake.

Then they racked me twice. Then was I caried to my lodging again, and ten dayes after the Lieutenant aſked me if I would not confeſſe that which before they had aſked me. I ſaid, I had ſaid as much as I would. Then five weekes after he ſent me unto the high Prieſt, where I was greatly aſſaulted, and at whoſe hand I received the Popes curſe, for bearing witneſſe of the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt. And thus I commend you unto God, and to the Word of his grace, with all them that unfainedly call upon the name of Jeſus, deſiring God of his endleſſe mercy, through the merits of his deare Sonne Jeſus Chriſt, to bring us all to his everlaſting Kingdome, Amen. I praiſe God for his great mercy ſhewed upon us. Sing Oſanna unto the Higheſt with me Cutbert Symſon. God forgive me my ſins. I aſke all the world forgiveneſſe, and I doe forgive all the world, and thus I leave this world, in hope of a joyfull reſurrection.

¶ A note of Cutbert Symſons patience.

A note of Cutbert Simſon.

NOw as touching this Cutbert Symſon, this further is to be noted, that Boner in his Cutbert Simſon upon the rack.

Conſiſtory ſpeaking of Cutbert Simſon, gave this teſtimony of him there to the people, ſaying, Ye ſee this man, ſaith he, what a perſonable man he is; and after he had thus commended his perſon, added moreover: And furthermore concerning his patience, I ſay unto you, that if hee were not an heretike, he is a man of the greateſt patience that yet ever came before me. For I tell you, he hath been thrice racked upon one day in the Tower. Alſo in my houſe he hath felt ſome ſorrow, and yet I never ſaw his patience broken, &c.

The patience of Cutbert Simſon.

It is thought and ſaid of ſome, that that arrow which was grated betwixt his fingers, being tyed together, was not in the Tower, but in the Biſhops houſe.

A viſion of Cutbert Simſon.

The day before the bleſſed Deacon and Martyr of God, Cutbert Simſon, after his painfull racking, ſhould goe to his condemnation before Boner, to be burned, being in the Biſhops Colehouſe there in the ſtockes, he had a certaine viſion or apparition very ſtrange, which he himſelfe with his owne mouth declared to the godly learned man Maſter Auſten, to his owne wife, and Thomas Simſon, and to others beſides, in the priſon of Newgate a little before his death. The relation whereof I ſtand in no little doubt whether to report abroad or not, conſidering with my ſelfe the great diverſity of mens judgements in the reading of Hiſtories, and variety of affections. Some I ſee will not beleeve it, ſome will deride the ſame, ſome alſo will be offended with ſetting forth things of that ſort incertaine, eſteeming all things to be incertaine and incredible, whatſoever is ſtrange from the common order of nature.

Others will be perchance agrieved, thinking with themſelves; or elſe thus reaſoning with me, that although the matter were as is reported, yet forſomuch as the common errour of beleeving raſh miracles, phantaſies, viſions, dreames, and apparitions thereby may be confirmed, more expedient it were the ſame to be unſetforth.

These and ſuch like will be, I know, the ſayings of many. Whereunto briefly I anſwer, granting firſt, and admitting with the words of Baſill, ὀ πᾶν ὄναρ ἐςὶ προφητεία, That is, not every dreame is ſtraightway a prophecy. Againe, neither am I ignorant that the Papiſts in their Bookes and Legends of Saints have their prodigious viſions, and apparitions of Angels, of our Lady, of Chriſt, and other Saints: which as I will not admit to be beleeved for true; ſo will they aſk me again why ſhould I then more require theſe to be credited of them, than theirs of us.

First, I write not this, binding any man preciſely to beleeve the ſame, ſo as they doe theirs, but only report it as it hath been heard of perſons knowne, naming alſo the parties who were the hearers thereof, leaving the judgement thereof notwithſtanding free unto the arbitrement of the Reader. Albeit, it is no good argument, proceeding from the ſingular or particular, to the univerſall, to ſay that viſions be not true in ſome: Ergo, they be true in none. And if any ſhall muſe, or object again, why ſhould ſuch viſions be given to him, or a few other ſingular perſons, more than to all the reſt, ſeeing the other were in the ſame cauſe and quarrell, and dyed alſo Martyrs as well as he? To this, I ſay, concerning the Lords times and doings I have not to meddle nor make, who may worke where and when it pleaſeth him. And what if the Lord thought chiefly above the other with ſingular conſolation to reſpect him, who chiefly aboue the other, and ſingularly did ſuffer moſt exquiſite torments for his ſake? What great marvell herein? But, as I ſaid, of the Lords ſecret times I have not to reaſon. This only which hath out of the mans owne mouth been received, ſo as I received it of the parties, I thought here to communicate to the Reader, for him to judge thereof as God ſhall rule his minde. The matter is this.

What credit is to be given to viſions, and how far.

The day before this Simſon was condemned, he being in the ſtockes, Cluney his Keeper commeth in with the keyes about nine of the clocke at night (after his uſuall manner) to view his priſon, and ſee whether all were preſent, who when he eſpyed the ſaid Cutbert to be there, departed againe, locking the doores after him. Within two houres after, about eleven of the clock toward midnight, the ſaid Cutbert (whether being in a ſlumber, or being awake I cannot ſay) heard one comming in, firſt opening the outward doore, then the ſecond, after the third doore, and ſo looking in to the ſaid Cutbert, having no candle or torch that he could ſee, but giving a brightneſſe, and light moſt comfortable and joyfull to his heart, ſaying, Ha, unto him, and departed againe. Who it was he could not tell, neither I dare define. This that he ſaw, he himſelfe declared foure or five times to the ſaid M. Auſten, and to other. At the ſight whereof he received ſuch joyfull comfort, that he alſo expreſſed no little ſolace in telling and declaring the ſame.

Articles ſeverally miniſtred to Cutbert Simſon.

FIrſt, that thou Cutbert Simſon art at this preſent abiding within the City and Dioceſſe of London, and not out of the juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Rome.

Item, that thou within the City and Dioceſſe of London haſt uttered many times, and ſpoken deliberately theſe words and ſentences following, videlicet, that though thy parents, anceſtors, kinsfolkes, and friends, yea, and alſo thy ſelfe, before the time of the late ſchiſme here in this Realme of England, have thought, and thoughteſt, that the faith and religion obſerved in times paſt here in this Realme of England, was a true faith and religion of Chriſt, in all points and articles, though in the Church it was ſet forth in the Latine tongue, and not in Engliſh, yet thou beleeveſt and ſayeſt, that the faith and religion, now uſed commonly in the Realme, not in the Engliſh, but in the Latine tongue, is not the true faith and religion of Chriſt, but contrary and expreſly againſt it.

Ceremonies.

Item, that thou within the ſaid City and Dioceſſe of London haſt willingly, wittingly, and contemptuouſly done, and ſpoken againſt the rites and the ceremonies, commonly uſed here through the whole Realme, and obſerved generally in the Church of England.

7. Sacraments.

Item, that thou haſt thought and beleeved certainly, and ſo within the Dioceſſe of London haſt affirmed and ſpoken deliberately, that there be not in the Catholique Church ſeven ſacraments, nor of that vertue and efficacy as is commonly beleeved in the Church of England them to be.

Sacrament of the Altar.

Item, that thou haſt likewiſe thought and beleeved, yea, and ſo within the City and Dioceſſe of London ſpoken, and deliberately affirmed, that in the ſacrament of the altar there is not really, ſubſtantially, and truly the very body and blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

Item, that thou haſt been, and to thy power

art at this preſent a fauourer of all thoſe, that eyther haue béen here in this Realme, heretofore called heretikes, or elſe conuented, and condemned by the Eccleſiaſticall Iudges for heretikes.

Vſing of Engliſh Seruice.

Item, that thou, contrary to the order of this Realme of England, and contrary to the uſage of the holy Church of this Realme of England, haſt at ſundry times and places within the City and Dioceſſe of London, béen at aſſemblies and conuenticles, where there was a multitude of people gathered together to heare the Engliſh Seruice ſaid, which was ſet forth in the later yéeres of King Edward the ſixth, and alſo to heare, and haue the Communion booke read, and the Communion miniſtred, both to the ſayd multitude, and alſo to thy ſelfe; and thou haſt thought, and ſo thinkeſt, and haſt ſpoken that the ſayd Engliſh Seruice and Communion booke, and all things contained in eyther of them was good and laudable, and for ſuch thou diddeſt and doeſt allow, and approue eyther of them at this preſent.

A letter of Cutbert Symſon to his wife.

DEarely beloued in the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, I cannot write as I doe wiſh unto you.

I beſéech you with my ſoule, commit your ſelfe under the mighty hand of our God, truſting in his mercy, and he will ſurely helpe us, as ſhall be moſt unto his glory, and our euerlaſting comfort, being ſure of this, that he will ſuffer nothing to come unto us, but that which ſhall be moſt profitable for us.

For it is eyther a correction for our ſinnes, or a tryall of our faith, or to ſet forth his glory, or for all together, and therefore muſt néedes bée well done. For there is nothing that commeth unto us by fortune or chance, but by our heauenly Fathers prouidence. And therefore pray unto our heauenly Father, that he will euer giue us his grace to conſider it. Let us giue him moſt hearty thankes for theſe his fatherly corrections; for as many as he loueth, he correcteth. And I beſéech you now bée of good cheare, and count the Croſſe of Chriſt greater riches, than all the vaine pleaſures of England. I doe not doubt (I praiſe God for it) but that you haue ſupped with Chriſt at his Maunday, I meane, beléeue in him: for that is the effect, and then muſt you drinke of his cup, I meane his croſſe (for that doth the cup ſignifie unto us.) Take the cup with a good ſtomack, in the name of God, and then ſhall you be ſure to haue the good wine, Chriſts bloud, to thy poore thirſty ſoule. And when you haue the wine, you muſt drinke it out of this cup. Learne this when you come to the Lords Supper. Pray continually. In all things giue thankes.

In the name of Ieſus ſhall every knee bow, Cutbert Symſon.

To the ſecond Article they all confeſſed and beléeued, that in Chriſts catholike Church there are but two ſacraments, that is to wit, Baptiſme, and the Supper of the Lord; otherwiſe they doe not beléeue the contents of this Article to be true in any part thereof.

To the third Article they all anſwered affirmatiuely.

To the fourth Article they all anſwered affirmatiuely.

To the fifth Article they all anſwered affirmatiuely, that they doe beléeue, and haue, and will ſpeake againſt the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, the ſacrament of the Altar, and likewiſe againſt the authority of the Sée of Rome, and are nothing ſorry for the ſame, but will doe it ſtill while they liue.

To the ſixth Article they all anſwered, and denied to acknowledge the authority of the Sée of Rome to be lawfull and good, eyther yet his religion.

To the ſeuenth Article they all anſwered affirmatiuely, that they haue, and will doe ſtill while they liue; and Iohn Deueniſh adding thereto, ſaid that the ſacrament of the Altar, as it is now uſed, is no ſacrament at all.

To the eighth Article they all confeſſed, and beléeued all things, aboue by them acknowledged and declared, to be true, and that they be of the Dioceſſe of London, and juriſdiction of the ſame.

April. 9. Wil Nichol, Martyr.

WE finde in all ages from the beginning, that Sathan hath not ceaſed at all times to moleſt the Church of Chriſt with one affliction or other, to the triall of their faith, but yet never ſo apparantly at any time to all the world, as when the Lord hath permitted him power over the bodies of his Saints, to the ſhedding of their blood, and perverting of Religion; for then ſleepeth he not, I warrant you, from the murdering of the ſame, unleſſe they will fall downe with Achab and Ieſabel to worſhip him, and ſo kill and poyſon their owne ſoules eternally; as in theſe miſerable latter daies of Queene Mary we have felt, heard, and ſeene practiſed upon Gods people. Among whom we finde recorded an honeſt good ſimple poore man, one William Nichol, who was apprehended by the Champions of the Pope, for ſpeaking certaine words againſt the cruell kingdome of Antichriſt, and the ninth day of April, Anno 1558. was butcherly burnt and tormented at Hereford Weſt in Wales, where he ended his life in a moſt happy and bleſſed ſtate, and gloriouſly gave his ſoule into the hands of the Lord, whoſe goodneſſe be praiſed for ever, Amen.

Wil. Nichol a ſimple ſoule.

This William Nichol (as we are informed) was ſo ſimple a good ſoule, that many eſteemed him halfe fooliſh. But what he was we know not, but this we are ſure, he dyed a good man, and in a good cauſe, whatſoever they judge of him. And the more ſimplicity of feebleneſſe of wit appeared in him, the more beaſtly and wretched doth it declare their cruell and tyrannicall act therein. The Lord give them repentance therefore, if it be his bleſſed will, Amen, Amen.

The martyrdome of William Seaman, Thomas Carman, and Thomas Hudſon, put to death by the perſecuting Papiſts at Norwich in the County of Northfolke.

May 19. The ſtory and martyrdome of Wil. Seaman, Tho. Carman, and Thomas Hudſon.

IMmediatly after William Nichol, ſucceeded in that honourable and glorious vocation of martyrdome three conſtant godly men at Norwich in Northfolke, who were cruelly and tyrannically put to death for the true teſtimony of Ieſus Chriſt, the nineteenth of May, Anno 1558. Whoſe names be theſe:

William Seaman.
Thomas Carman.
Thomas Hudſon.

Will. Seaman

Sir Iohn Tyrrel Knight.

Rob. Baulding, Iames Clark, perſecutors.

The ſaid William Seaman was an Huſbandman, of the age of twenty ſixe yeares, dwelling in Mendleſham, in the County of Suffolke, who was ſundry times ſought for by the commandement of Sir Iohn Tyrrel Knight, and at laſt he himſelfe in the night ſearched his houſe and other places for him; notwithſtanding hee ſomewhat miſt of his purpoſe, God be thanked. Then he gave charge to his ſervants Robert Baulding, and Iames Clarke, with others to ſeeke for him. Who, having no Officer, went in the evening to his houſe, where he being at home, they took him and carried him to their Maſter ſir Iohn Tyrrel. This Baulding being Seamans nigh neighbour, and whom the ſaid Seaman greatly truſted as a ſpeciall friend, notwithſtanding to doe his Maſter a pleaſure, now became enemy to his chiefe friend, and was one of the buſieſt in the taking of him. Now as they were going to carry him to their Maſter Sir Iohn Tyrrel in the night, it is credibly reported that there fell a light between them out of the element, ment, and parted them, this Baulding being in companie with the reſt when the light fell; and albeit he was then in his beſt age, yet after that time never enjoyed good day, but pined away even unto the death.

A light out of the element.

Gods puniſhment upon a perſecutor.

Well, for all that ſtrange ſight (as I ſaid) they carried him to their Maſter. Who, when he came, aſked him why he would not goe to Maſſe, and receive the ſacrament, and ſo to worſhip it? Unto which William Seaman anſwered, denying it to be a ſacrament, but ſaid it was an Idoll, and therefore would not receive it. After which words ſpoken, ſir John Tyrel ſhortly ſent him to Norwich to Hopton then Biſhop, and there after conference and examination had with him, the Biſhop read his bloudie ſentence of condemnation againſt him; and afterward delivered him to the ſecular power, who kept him unto the day of martyrdome.

Seaman brought to B. Hopton, and by him condemned.

This ſaid William Seaman left behinde him when hee died, a wife, and three children verie young: and with the ſaid young children his wife was perſecuted out of the ſayd Towne alſo of Mendleſham, becauſe that ſhe would not goe to heare Maſſe, and all her corne and goods ſeiſed and taken away by Maſter Chriſtopher Coles Officers, he being Lord of the ſaid Towne.

Seamans wife and his 3 young children were perſecuted alſo by ſir John Tyrel.

Thomas Carman (who, as is ſaid, pledged Richard Craſhfield at his burning, and thereupon was apprehended) being priſoner in Norwich, was about one time with the reſt examined and brought before the ſaid Biſhop, who anſwered no leſſe in his Maſters cauſe than the other; and therefore had the like reward that the other had, which was the Biſhops bloudy bleſſing of condemnation, and delivered alſo to the ſecular power, who kept him with the other untill the day of ſlaughter, which haſted on, and was not long after.

Thomas Carman, Martyr.

Carman condemned.

Thomas Hudſon was of Aileſham in Northfolke, by his occupation a Glover, a very honeſt poore man, having a wife, and three children, and labouring alwaies truly and diligently in his vocation, being of thirtie yeeres of age, and bearing ſo good a will to the Goſpell, that hee in the dayes of King Edward the ſixth, two yeeres before Queene Maries reigne, learned to reade Engliſh of Anthonie and Thomas Norgate of the ſame Towne, wherein hee greatly profited about the time of alteration of religion. For when Queene Marie came to reigne, and had changed the Service in the Church, putting in for wheate, draffe and darnell, and for good preaching, blaſphemous crying out againſt truth and godlineſſe; he then avoiding all their ceremonies of ſuperſtition, abſented himſelfe from his houſe, and went into Suffolke a long time, and there remained travelling from one place to another, as occaſion was offered. At the laſt hee returned backe againe to Northfolke to his houſe at Aileſham, to comfort his wife and children, being heavie, and troubled with his abſence.

Tho. Hudſon, Martyr.

Hudſon learneth to reade Engliſh.

Hudſon flieth from papiſtry.

Now when hee came home, and perceived his continuance there would be dangerous, he and his wife deviſed to make him a place among his fagots to hide himſelfe in, where he remained all the day (inſtead of his chamber) reading and praying continually, for the ſpace of halfe a yeere, and his wife like an honeſt woman being carefull for him, uſed her ſelfe faithfully and diligently towards him.

In the meane time came the Vicar of the Towne, named Berry (who was one of the Biſhops Commiſſaries, a verie evill man) and inquired of this ſaid Thomas Hudſons wife for her huſband. Unto whom ſhee anſwered, as not knowing where he was. Then the ſaid Berry rated her, and threatned to burne her, for that ſhee would not bewray her huſband where he was. After that when Hudſon underſtood it, he waxed every day more zealous than other, and continually read and ſang Pſalmes to the wonder of many, the people openly reſorting to him, to heare his exhortations and vehement prayers.

Berry the Commiſſary, a perſecutor.

Hudſon waxeth bold in the truth.

At the laſt he walked abroad for certaine daies openly in the Towne, crying out continually againſt the Maſſe and all their trumperie, and in the end comming home in his houſe he ſate him downe upon his knees, having his booke by him, reading and ſinging Pſalmes continually without ceaſing for three dayes and three nights together, refuſing meate and other talke, to the great wonder of many.

Then one John Crouch his next neighbour went to the Conſtables, Robert Marſham and Robert Lawes in the night, to certifie them thereof: for Berry commanded openly to watch for him, and the Conſtables underſtanding the ſame, went cruelly to catch him in the breake of the day, the two and twentieth of the moneth of April, Anno 1558.

John Crouch bewraieth Tho. Hudſon to the Conſtables.

Now when Hudſon ſaw them come in, he ſaid; Now mine houre is come. Welcome friends, welcome. You be they that ſhall leade me to life in Chriſt. I thanke God therefore, and the Lord enable me thereto for his mercies ſake. For his deſire was, and ever hee prayed (if it were the Lords will) that he might ſuffer for the Goſpel of Chriſt. Then they tooke him, and lead him to Berry the Commiſſary, which was Vicar of the Towne, and the ſaid Berry aſked him firſt, where he kept his Church for foure yeeres before. To the which the ſaid Hudſon anſwered thus, whereſoever he was, there was the Church.

The taking of Tho. Hudſon.

Talk betweene Berry and Hudſon.

Doeſt thou not beleeve, ſaid Berry, in the ſacrament of the altar? What is it?

Sacrament of the altar.

Hudſon. It is wormes meate; my beleife (ſaith he) is in Chriſt crucified.

Berry. Doeſt thou not beleeve the Maſſe to put away ſins?

The Maſſe.

Hudſon. No, God forbid: it is a patched monſter, and a diſguiſed Puppet, more longer a peecing than ever was Salomons temple. At which words Berry ſtamped, fumed, and ſhewed himſelfe as a madman, and ſaid, Well, thou villaine, thou: I will write to the Biſhop my good Lord, and truſt unto it, thou ſhalt bee handled according to thy deſerts. Oh ſir, ſaid Hudſon, there is no Lord but GOD, though there be many lords and many gods. With that Berry thruſt him backe with his hand. And one Richard Cliffar ſtanding by, ſaid, I pray you ſir, be good to the poore man. At which words Berry was more mad than before, and would have had Cliffar bound in a recogniſance of forty pounds for his good abearing, both in word and deede; which his deſire took no effect. Then he aſked the ſaid Hudſon whether hee would recant, or no. Unto the which words Hudſon ſaid, the Lord forbid; I had rather die many deaths than to doe ſo.

• Rich. Cliffar.

Then after long talke, the ſaid Berry, ſeeing it booted not to perſwade with him, tooke his pen and inke, and wrote letters to the Biſhop thereof, and ſent this Hudſon to Norwich bound like a theefe to him, which was eight miles from thence, who with joy and ſinging cheare went thither, as merry as ever he was at any time before. In priſon he was a moneth, where hee did continually reade, and invocate the name of God.

Theſe three Chriſtians and conſtant Martyrs, William Seaman, Thomas Carman, and Thomas Hudſon, after they were (as yee have heard) condemned the 19. day of May, Anno 1558, were carried out of priſon to the place where they ſhould ſuffer, which was without Biſhops gate at Norwich, called Lollards Pit. And being all there, they made their humble Petitions unto the Lord. That being done, they roſe and went to the ſtake, and ſtanding all there with their chains about them, immediately this ſaid Thomas Hudſon commeth forth from them under the chaine, to the great wonder of many; whereby divers feared and greatly doubted of him. For ſome thought he would have recanted; other judged rather that he went to aſke further day, and to deſire conference; and ſome thought he came forth to aſke ſome of his parents bleſſing. So ſome thought one thing, and ſome another: but his two companions at the ſtake cried out to comfort him what they could, exhorting him in the bowels of Chriſt to bee of good chéere, &c. But this ſwéet Hudſon felt more in his heart and conſcience than they could conceive in him. For alas good ſoule, he was compaſſed (God knoweth) with great dolour and griefe of minde, not for his death, but for lacke of féeling of his Chriſt: and therefore being very carefull, he humbly fell downe upon his knées, and prayed vehemently and earneſtly unto the Lord, who at the laſt (according to his old mercies) ſent him comfort, and then roſe he with great joy, as a man new changed even from death to life, and ſaid:

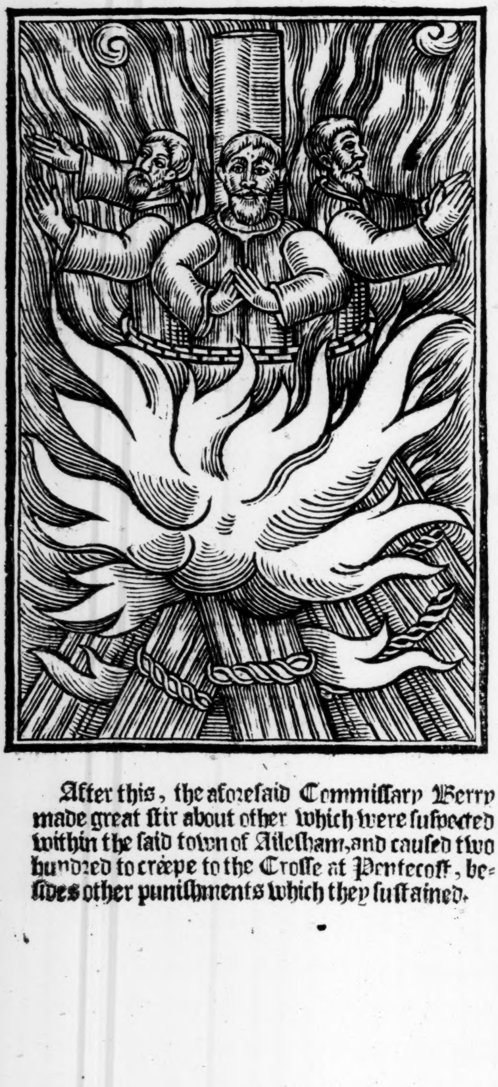
Tho. Hudſon commeth from under the chaine to pray.

Hudſon carefull to have the féeling of Chriſt.

Hudſon ſatisfied of his deſire.

Now I thanke God I am ſtrong, and paſſe not what man can do unto me. So going to the ſtake to his fellowes againe, in the end they all ſuffered moſt joyfully, conſtantly, and manfully, the death together, and were conſumed in fire, to the terror of the wicked, the comfort of Gods children, and the magnifiing of the Lords name, who be praiſed therefore for ever, Amen.

¶ The burning of three godly Martyrs at Norwich, viz. Will. Seaman, Tho. Carman, and Tho. Hudſon, Anno 1552. May 6.



After this, the aforeſaid Commiſſary Berry made great ſtir about other which were ſuſpected within the ſaid town of Aileſham, and cauſed two hundred to créepe to the Croſſe at Pentecoſt, beſides other puniſhments which they ſuſtained.

On a time this Berry gave a poore man of his Pariſh of Marſham a blow with the ſwingell of a flaile, for a word ſpeaking, that preſently thereon he died, and the ſaid Berry, as is ſaid, held up his hand at the bar therefore.

Berry ſtriketh a poore man, whereupon he dyed.

Then after that in his pariſh of Aileſham alſo, An. 1557, there was one Alice Oxes came to his houſe, and going into the hall, he méeting her, being before moved, ſmote her with his fiſt, whereby ſhe was faine to bee carried home, and the next day was found dead in her chamber.

Berry ſtriketh a poore woman, whereupon ſhe dyed.

To write how many Concubines and whores he had, none would beléeve it, but ſuch as knew him in the country where he dwelt. He was rich, and of great authority, a great ſwearer, altogether given to women, and perſecuting the Goſpell, and compelling men to idolatry.

One John Norgate, a man learned, godly, and zealous, who would not goe to their traſh, but rather die, being ſore hunted by the ſaid Berry, prayed heartily to God, and the Lord ſhortly after in a conſumption delivered him. Notwithſtanding the rage of this wicked man waxed more fiercer and fiercer. He troubled ſundry men, burnt all good bookes that he could get, and divorced many men and women for religion.

John Norgate a Confeſſor.

The rage of Berry.

When hee heard ſay that Quéene Mary was dead, and the glory of their triumph quailed, the Sunday after, beeing the ninetéenth of November, Anno 1558, he made a great feaſt, and had one of his Concubines there, with whom he was in his chamber after dinner, untill Even ſong. Then went he to Church, where he had miniſtred Baptiſme, and in going from church homeward after Evenſong, betwéene the Church yard and his houſe, being but a little ſpace (as it were a churchyard bredth aſunder) he fell downe ſuddenly to the ground with a heavy groane, and never ſtirred after, neither ſhewed any one token of repentance.

Gods puniſhment and terrible end of Berry.

This hapned, his neighbors being by, to the example of all other. The Lord grant wee may obſerve his judgements. And thoſe that had his great riches, ſince his death have ſo conſumed with them, that they be poorer now than they were before they had his goods: ſuch judgement hath the Lord executed to the eyes of all men.

Berries goods conſume as waxe againſt the fire.

At that time one Dunning Chancellor of Lincolne (which in ſome part of Quéene Maries dayes was Chancellor of Norwich, and a very mercileſſe Tyrant as lived) died in Lincolneſhire of as ſudden a warning as the ſayd Berry died.

Gods puniſhment upon Dunning Chancellor of Norwich.

Thus have I ſhewed thée (good Reader) the conſtancie, boldneſſe, and glorious victory of theſe happy Martyrs, as alſo the tyrannicall cruelty of that unfortunate Commiſſary, and his terrible end. The Lord grant we may all effectually honour the judgements of God, and fear to diſpleaſe his holy Majeſty. Amen.

¶ The perſecution of Mother Seaman.

About this time, or ſomewhat before, was one Joane Seaman, mother to the aforeſaid William Seaman, being of the age of thréeſcore and ſixe yeares, perſecuted of the ſayd Sir John Tyrrell alſo, out of the Towne of Mendleſham aforeſaid, becauſe ſhe would not goe to Maſſe and receive againſt her conſcience. Which good old woman being from her houſe, was glad ſometime to lie in buſhes, groves, and fields, and ſometime in her Neighbours houſe, when ſhe could. And her huſband being at home, about the age of eighty yéeres, fell ſicke; and ſhee hearing thereof, with ſpéed returned home to her houſe againe, not regarding her life, but conſidering her duty, and ſhewed her diligence to her huſband moſt faithfully, untill G O D tooke him away by death. Then by Gods providence ſhe fell ſicke alſo, and departed this life within her owne houſe ſhortly after.

Symonds the Commiſſary would not let mother Seaman be buried in the Churchyard.

And when one Maſter Symonds the Commiſſary heard of it, dwelling thereby in a Towne called Thorndon, he commanded ſtreightly that ſhe ſhould bée buried in no Chriſtian buriall (as they call it) where-through her friends were compelled to lay her in a pit under a Motes ſide. Her huſband and ſhe kept a good houſe, and had a good report amongſt their neighbours, willing alwayes to receive ſtrangers, and to comfort the poore and ſicke, and lived together in the holy eſtate of Matrimony very honeſtly above 40. yéeres, and ſhe departed this life willingly and joyfully, with a ſtedfaſt faith and a good remembrance of Gods promiſe in Chriſt Jeſus.

The perſecution of Mother Benet.

Mother Benet, a Confeſſor.

IN the ſayd time of Quéene Mary, there dwelt in the Towne of Wetherſet by Mendleſham aforeſayd, a very honeſt woman called mother Benet, a widow, which was perſecuted out of the ſame Towne, becauſe ſhe would not goe to Maſſe, and other their beggarly ceremonies; but at the laſt ſhe returned home againe ſecretly to her houſe, and there departed this life joyfully. But ſir John Tyrrel and Maſter Symonds the Commiſſary would not let her be buried in the Churchyard. So was ſhe laid in a grave by the high-way ſide.

Sir John Tyrel and M. Symonds would not ſuffer mother Benet to be buried in the Churchyard.

The ſame good old woman mother Benet, in the time of perſecution, met one of the ſayd mother Seamans neighbours, and aſked her how the ſayd mother Seaman did, and ſhe anſwered, that ſhe did very well, God be thanked. Oh, ſaid ſhe, mother Seaman hath ſtept a great ſtep before me; for ſhe was never covetous that I could perceive.

The charitable almes of mother Seaman to be noted.

Her huſband in his mirth would ſay unto her; O woman, if thou were ſparing, thou mighteſt have ſaved mée an hundred Markes more than thou haſt. To the which ſhe would anſwer again gently, and ſay; O man, be content, and let us be thankfull; for God hath given us enough, if we can ſée it. Alas, good huſband, would ſhe ſay, I tell you truth, I cannot firken up my butter, and kéepe my cheeſe in the chamber, and waite a great price, and let the poore want, and ſo diſpleaſe God. But huſband, let us be rich in good works, and ſo ſhall we pleaſe the Lord, and have all good things given us, &c. This good woman, of that vice of covetouſneſſe, of all that knew her, was adjudged leaſt to be ſpotted, of any infirmity ſhe had. The Lord roote it out of the hearts of them that be infected therewith, Amen.

Theſe thrée good ſoules were brought unto the ſtake, and there joyfully and fervently had made their prayers unto the Lord.

The Martyrdome of Wil. Harris, Rich. Day, and Chriſtian George, &c.

At the laſt, being ſetled in their places, and chained unto their poſtes, with the fire flaming fiercely round about them, they like conſtant Chriſtians triumphantly praiſed GOD within the ſame, and offered up their bodies a lively ſacrifice unto his holy Majeſty; in whoſe habitation they have now their everlaſting tabernacles: his name therefore be praiſed for evermore, Amen.

They ſayd Chriſtian Georges huſband had another wife burnt before this Chriſtian, whoſe name was Agnes George, which ſuffered, as you have heard, with the thirteene at Stratford the Bowe. And after the death of the ſaid Chriſtian, he married an honeſt godly woman againe, and ſo they both (I meane the ſayd Richard George and his laſt wife) in the end were taken alſo, and laid in priſon, where they remained till the death of Queene Mary, and at laſt were delivered by our moſt gracious Soveraigne Lady Queene Elizabeth, whom the Lord grant long to reigne among us, for his mercies ſake, Amen.

Rich George and his wife priſoners, delivered by Q. Elizabeth.

In the moneth of June came out a certaine Proclamation ſhort but ſharpe, from the King and the Queene, againſt, wholeſome and godly Bookes, which under the falſe title of Hereſie and Sedition, here in the ſayd Proclamations were wrongfully condemned.

By the King and Queene.

A Proclamation by the K. and Queene.

WHereas divers Bookes, filled both with hereſie, ſedition, and treaſon, have of late, and be dayly brought into this Realme out of forraine countries and places beyond the Seas, and ſome alſo covertly printed within this Realme, and caſt abroad in ſundry parts thereof, whereby not only God is diſhonoured, but alſo an incouragement given to diſobey lawfull Princes and Governors: The King and Queenes Majeſties, for redreſſe hereof, do by this their preſent Proclamation declare and publiſh to all their Subjects, that whoſoever ſhall after the proclaming hereof, be found to have any of the ſayd wicked and ſeditious bookes, or finding them, doe not forthwith burne the ſame, without ſhewing or reading the ſame to any other perſon, ſhall in that caſe hee reputed and taken for a rebell, and ſhall without delay be executed for that offence, according to the order of martiall law.

The order and occaſion of taking certaine godly men and women praying together in the fields about Iſlington, of whom thirteene were condemned by Boner, and after ſuffered in the fire for the truths ſake, as in the ſtory here following may appeare.

June 27. 22. Men taken 13. Martyrs burned.

SEcretly in a backe cloſe in the field by the Towne of Iſlington, were collected and aſſembled together a certaine company of godly and innocent perſons, to the number 40. men and women. Who there ſitting together at prayer, and vertuouſly occupied in the meditation of Gods holy Word, firſt commeth a certaine man to them unknowne; who looking over unto them, ſo ſtayed and ſaluted them, ſaying, that they looked like men that meant no hurt. Then one of the ſaid company aſked the man, if hee could tell whoſe cloſe that was, and whether they might be ſo bold there to ſit. Yea, ſaid hee, for that ye ſeeme unto me ſuch perſons as intend no harme, and ſo departed. Within a quarter of an houre after, commeth the Conſtable of Iſlington, named King, warded with ſixe or ſeven other, accompanying him in the ſame buſineſſe, one with a bow, another with a bill, and other with their weapons likewiſe. The which ſixe or ſeven perſons the ſayd Conſtable left a little behinde him in a cloſe place, there to be ready if neede ſhould be, while he with one with him ſhould goe view them before. Who ſo doing, came through them, looking and viewing what they were doing, and what bookes they had; and ſo going a little forward, and returning backe againe, bade them deliver their bookes. They underſtanding that he was Conſtable, refuſed not ſo to doe. With that commeth for the reſidue of his fellowes above touched, who bade them ſtand, and not depart. They anſwered againe, they would be obedient and ready to go whitherſoever they would have them; and ſo were they firſt carried to a Brewhouſe but a little way off, while that ſome of the ſaid ſouldiers ran to the Iuſtice next at hand. But the Iuſtice was not at home; whereupon they were had to ſir Roger Cholmley. In the meane time ſome of the women, being of the ſame number of the foreſayd forty perſons, eſcaped away from them, ſome in the cloſe, ſome before they came to the Brewhouſe. For ſo they were carried, ten with one man, eight with another, and with ſome moe, with ſome leſſe, in ſuch ſort as it was not hard for them to eſcape that would. In fine, they that were carried to ſir Roger Cholmley, were twenty ſeven, which ſir Roger Cholmley and the Recorder taking their names in a Bill, and calling them one by one, ſo many as anſwered to their names, hee ſent to Newgate. In the which number of them that anſwered, and that were ſent to Newgate, were twenty and two.

Sir Roger Cholmley, and the Recorder of London, perſecutors.

22 Sent to Newgate.

Theſe two and twenty were in the ſayd priſon of Newgate ſeven weekes before they were examined, to whom word was ſent by Alexander the Keeper, that if they would heare a Maſſe, they ſhould all be delivered. Of theſe foreſayd two and twenty were burned thirteene: In Smithfield ſeven, at Brainford ſixe.

Confeſſors.

In priſon two dyed in Whitſon weeke, the names of whom were Matthew Wythers, T. Taylor.

Seven of them which remained eſcaped with their lives hardly, although not without much trouble, yet (as God would) without burning. Whoſe names were theſe:

Iohn Willes.
Thomas Hinſhaw.
R. Baily, Woolpacker.
Robert Willes.
Hudleys.
T. Coaſt, Haberdaſher.

The firſt ſeven were brought forth to examination before Boner, and ſo, having their condemnation, were burnt (as is ſaid) in Smithfield. The other ſixe followed not long after, and ſuffered at Brainford, whereof ſpecially here followeth now in order of ſtory to be ſeene.

The examination and condemnation of 7. godly and faithfull Martyrs of Chriſt, burnt in Smithfield.

June 27.

Concerning the examination and condemnation of theſe abovesayd, which were apprehended and taken at Iſlington, ſeven firſt were produced before Boner the 14. of June, to make anſwer to ſuch articles and interrogatories, as by the ſayd Biſhop ſhould bee miniſtred unto them. The names of theſe ſeven were:

7 Martyrs burned in Smithfield.

Henry Pond.
Rainold Eaſtland.
Robert Southam.
Matthew Richarby.
Iohn Floyd.
Iohn Holiday.
Roger Holland.

Martyrs.

To theſe ſeven conſtant and godly Martyrs, produced before Boner, certaine Articles were miniſtred in this effect as followeth.

Articles.

Articles by Biſh. Boner miniſtred to the 7 Martyrs.

First, that ye being within the City and Dioceſſe of London have not, according to the common cuſtome of the Catholike Church of this Realme of England, come to your owne Pariſh Church, nor yet to the Cathedrall Church of this City and Dioceſſe of London, to heare devoutly and chriſtianly the Mattens, the Maſſe, the Evenſong, ſung or ſayd there in the Latine tongue, after the common uſage and manner of the Church of this Realme.

2 Second, that ye have not come to any of the ſayd Churches to pray, to goe in Proceſſion, or to exerciſe your ſelves there in godly and laudable exerciſes.

3 Third, that you have not conformed your ſelves duely to all the laudable cuſtomes, rites, and ceremonies of any the ſayd Churches.

4 Fourth, ye have not been confeſſed at due times and places to your owne Curate, of your ſinnes.

5 Fifth, ye have not received at your ſayd Curates hands (as of the Miniſter of Chriſt) abſolution of your ſins.

6 Sixth, you have not at due times and places of your Curate received reverently and duly the ſacrament of the altar.

7 Seventh, ye have not faithfully and truly beleeved, that in the ſayd ſacrament of the altar, there is really and truly the very body and bloud of Chriſt.

8 Eighth, ye have not by your mouth, nor otherwiſe by your deede expreſſed or declared in any wiſe, that ye without wavering or doubting doe thinke and beleeve, that the faith and religion now obſerved in the Church of England, is a true faith and religion in all points.

9 Ninth, ye have not made any ſignification that you doe in deede approve, or allow in any wiſe the common Service in Latine, here obſerved and kept in the Church of this Realme of England.

10 Tenth, ye have not beleeved, nor do beleeve at this preſent, that the Service in Latine, commonly uſed and obſerved in the Church of this Realme, is good and lawfull, and not againſt the Word of God.

11 Eleventh, ye have in times paſt liked, allowed, and approved as good and godly, and ſo doe like, allow, and approve at this preſent, the Service in Engliſh, the Bookes of Common prayer, the Bookes of Communion, the religion ſet forth and uſed in the time of King Edward the ſixth, eſpecially as it was ſet forth and uſed in the later dayes of the ſaid King Edward.

12 Twelfth, ye have in times paſt been very deſirous, and ſo are at this preſent, that the ſayd Engliſh Service, the ſayd Booke of Common prayer, the ſayd Book of Communion, and the ſaid religion and faith ſo ſet forth and uſed in King Edwards time, might now againe bee reſtored, ſet forth and uſed, and your ſelfe freely at your liberty, without any reſtraint or lets to uſe it, and alſo in all points and things to do therein, as yee did, eſpecially in the later dayes of the ſaid Edward the ſixth.

13 Thirteenth ye have of late beene charitably ſent to from me the Biſhop of London, and alſo by mouth exhorted, that where of late you did leave your Churches, and went in the time of Divine ſervice into the fields and prophane places, to reade Engliſh Pſalmes, and certaine Engliſh bookes, ye would leave off that, and being out of priſon, and at your liberty, come into your owne Pariſh Churches, there to heare Mattens, Maſſe, and Evenſong, after the common order of the Churches of this Realme, and to make due confeſſion of your ſinnes to your owne Curate, and receive at his hands (as of the Miniſter of Chriſt, having therein ſufficient authority) abſolution of your ſinnes, heare Maſſe, receive the ſacrament of the altar with a true faith, according to the beliefe of the Catholike Church, and obſerve all other the rites and cuſtomes of the ſaid Catholike Church uſed in this realme of England, aſwell in going in proceſſion after the croſſe, as alſo otherwiſe generally.

14 Fourteenth, ye being ſo required, have refuſed, and do refuſe ſo to doe, ſaying, amongſt other vaine and light words, that forſomuch as ye were impriſoned by the ſpace of ſixe weekes, not knowing wherewith ye were charged, your petition ſhould be and was, that ye might firſt anſwer to your former cauſe, and then ye would be ready to anſwer me the ſayd biſhop to all that by me ſhould be laid to your charge.

Unto the which articles all the forenamed ſeven (onely Reinold Eaſtland excepted) made anſwer in effect as hereafter followeth.

The anſwers of the forenamed perſons to the articles aforeſaid.

Their anſwers to the articles aforeſaid.

TO the firſt Article they anſwered affirmatively, Roger Holland adding, that hee came not to their Latine ſervice theſe two yeares before.

Matthew Ricarby added, that he came not to Church ſince Latine ſervice was renewed, becauſe it is againſt the word of God, and idolatry is committed in creeping to the croſſe.

Henry Pond added, if he had licence then to goe to Church, he would not.

2 To the 2. article they all anſwered affirmatively; Henry Pond adding as in the firſt article. John Floyd added, that the Latine ſervice then uſed, was ſet up by man, and not by God, and this he learned (he ſaid) in King Edwards dayes, which he beleeved to be true. Robert Southam added, that hee refuſed to come to Church, becauſe it is furniſhed with idols, and becauſe the ſacrament of the altar he beleeved to be an idol.

3 To the third article they all anſwered affirmatively. For they ſayd, that the cuſtomes, rites, and ceremonies of the Church then uſed, are not agreeable to Gods word.

4.5 To the foure and five articles, they all anſwered affirmatively, adding, that they beleeved no Prieſt hath power to remit ſin.

6 To the 6. article John Holiday, Henry Pond, and Robert Southam anſwered, that ſince the Queenes Maieſties reigne: but Robert Southam added, not for ten yeares before, he had received the ſacrament of the altar, either at their Curates hands, or any other Prieſt. John Floyd, Matthew Ricarby, and Roger Holland anſwered affirmatively, adding in effect that the ſacrament of the altar is no ſacrament approved by the word of God, &c.

7 To the 7. article they all confeſſed the contents thereof to bee true in every part; Henry Pond adding, that he knoweth not nor beleeveth any ſuch ſacrament, called the ſacrament of the Altar, but confeſſeth the ſacrament of the Lords Supper, and beleeveth that to bee approved. John Floyd added, that thoſe that kneele to and worſhip the ſacrament of the altar, commit idolatry, &c.

8.9.10. To the 8.9.10. articles, they all confeſſed the contents of thoſe articles to be true. But John Holiday, Henry Pond, and John Floyd added, that they doe allow the Latine ſervice for them that underſtand the ſame, ſo far as it agreeeth with Gods word. For ſome part thereof is not agreeable to Gods word (they ſaid:) but to ſuch as doe not underſtand the ſaid ſervice in Latine, they doe not allow it, for it doth not profit them. Robert Southam added and ſaid, that it was a fond queſtion to aske a ſimple man, whether the Latine ſervice be good and lawfull. Matthew Ricarby and Roger Holland denied the ſervice in Latine to be good.

11 To the 11 article, they all confeſſed the ſame to be true in every part; ſaving Henry Pond, and Matthew Ricarby, who anſwered in effect that they could not iudge thereof, but leave them to be tried by the word of God.

12 To the twelfth article, they granted and confeſſed the ſame to bee true, and deſired of GOD that the ſervice were in the Engliſh againe.

13 To the 13 article they all granted and confeſſed the ſame to be true.

14 To the 14 article they all granted and confeſſed the ſame to be true in every part.

An oath to end a ſtrife lawfull, but to begin a ſtrife it is unlawfull.

Thus have ye the anſwers of theſe men to the foreſaid articles, ſave that Reinald Eaſtland required to anſwer thereunto, refuſed ſo to doe, alledging that he knoweth that to end a ſtrife an othe is lawfull; but to beginne a ſtrife an othe is not lawfull: and therefore he now refuſeth to take his othe in the beginning of this matter againſt him. Wherupon being charged by the biſhop, he ſaid for his not anſwering to the articles, he was content to ſtand unto the order of the law for his puniſhment, whatſoever it ſhould be.

The condemnation of Reinold Eaſtland.

The 17 day after of the ſayd month of June, the ſayd Eaſtland appeared againe before the biſhop, who ſtanding firme in that he had ſaid before, denied to make any anſwer in that caſe, &c. whereupon the ſaid Eaſtland, with the other ſixe his fellow priſoners, were aſſigned by the biſhop to repaire againe to the ſame place at afternoone, who being there preſent in the foreſaid conſiſtory as they were commanded, and ſtanding all together before the ſayd biſhop, he beginning thus with them, asked them, if he had committed them to priſon. They ſaid no, but Maſter Cholmly and the Recorder of London committed them to Newgate.

Then being demanded further by the biſhop, if he had done any thing or act to keepe them in priſon, or to hinder their liberty from priſon; to this they anſwered they could not tell. Then the foreſaid articles being againe recited to them, all they anſwered and knowledged them to be the articles, and that they would ſtand to their anſwers made to the ſame. Whereupon the Biſhop diſſevering them apart one from another, proceeded with them ſeverally, firſt beginning with Reinald Eaſtland, who there declared that hee had beene uncharitably handled and talked withall ſince his firſt impriſonment in that behalfe. Then being required to reconcile himſelfe againe to the Catholike faith, and goe from his opinions, he ſayd, that he knew nothing why he ſhould recant; and therefore would not conforme himſelfe in that behalfe, &c. and ſo the ſentence was read againſt him, and he given to the ſecular power, &c.

The words of John Holiday

After him was called in John Holiday, who likewiſe being advertiſed to renounce his hereſies (as they called them) and to returne to the unity of their Church, ſayd, that he was no heretike, nor did hold any hereſie, neither any opinion contrary to the Catholike faith, and ſo would offer himſelfe to bee judged therein. Whereupon hee likewiſe perſiſting in the ſame, the ſentence was pronounced againſt him, condemning him to be burnt.

The condemnation of Jo. Holiday. The condemnation of Hen. Pond.

Next to him was condemned, with the like ſentence, Henry Pond, becauſe he would not ſubmit himſelfe to the Romiſh Church, ſaying to Boner, that he had done or ſpoken nothing whereof he was or would be ſorry, but that he did hold the truth of God, and no hereſie, &c.

The condemnation of Joh. Floyd.

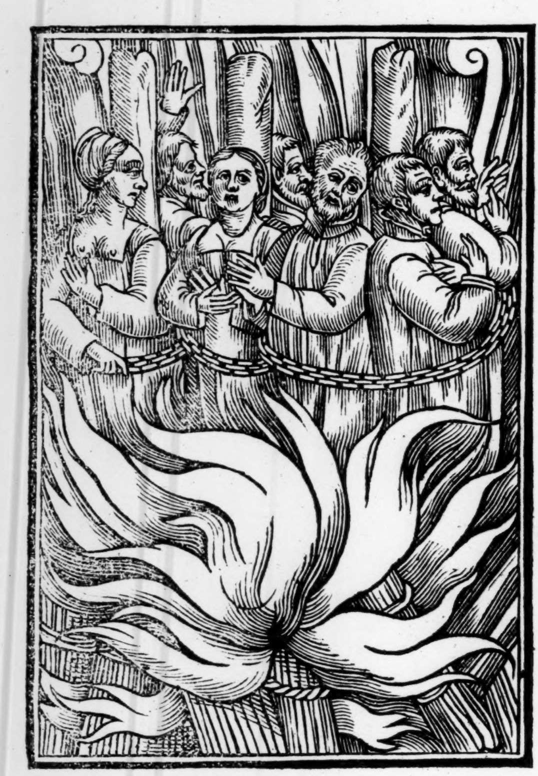
After whom next followed John Floyd, who likewiſe denied to be of the Popes Church, and ſayd his minde of the Latine Service, that the prayers made to Saints is Idolatry, and that the Service in Latine is profitable to none, but only to ſuch as underſtand the Latine. Moreover, being charged by Boner of hereſie, and ſaying, that whatſoever he and ſuch other now a dayes doe, all is hereſie; for this hee was condemned with the ſame butcherly ſentence, and ſo by the ſecular power was ſent away.

The condemnation of Ro. Southam, Mat. Ricarby and Roger Holland.

Then Robert Southam, after him Matthew Ricarby, and laſt of all Roger Holland were ſeverally produced.

Thus Roger Holland with his fellowes (as ye heard) ſtanding to their anſwers, and refuſing to acknowledge the doctrine of the Romiſh Church, were altogether condemned, the ſentence being read againſt them, and ſo all ſeven by ſecular Magiſtrates being ſent away to Newgate the ſeventeenth of June, not long after, about the ſeven and twenty day of the ſayd moneth were had to Smithfield, and there ended their lives in the glorious cauſe of Chriſts Goſpel. Whoſe particular examinations came not to our hands; ſaving only the examinations of Roger Holland, which here follow in order and manner as we received them by the information of certaine, who were preſent at the ſame.

The Martyrdome of Henry Pond, Rainold Eaſtland, Ro. Southam, Mat. Ricarby, Ioh. Floyd, Ioh. Holiday, Ro. Holland, in Smithfield. An. 1558. Iu. 27.



The examinations and condemnation of Roger Holland.

The firſt examination of Roger Holland.

THis Roger Holland, a Merchant-Taylor of London, was firſt prentiſe with one Maſter Kempton at the blacke Boy in Watling ſtréete, where he ſerved his prentiſhip with much trouble unto his Maſter in breaking him from his licentious liberty which hée had before béen trained and brought up in, giving himſelfe to riot, as dauncing, fence, gaming, banqueting, and wanton company; and beſides all this, being a ſtubborne and an obſtinate Papiſt, far unlike to come to any ſuch end as God called him unto; the which was as followeth:

His Maſter, notwithſtanding this his lewdneſſe, putting him in truſt with his accounts, hée had received for him certaine mony, to the ſumme of thirty pounds, and falling into ill company, loſt the ſaid mony every groate at dice, being paſt all hope which way to anſwer it, and therefore hée purpoſed to conveigh himſelfe away beyond the ſeas, either into France or into Flanders.

Now having determined with himſelfe thus to doe, he called betimes in the morning to a ſervant in the houſe, an ancient and diſcréete maide, whoſe name was Elizabeth, which profeſſed the Goſpel, with a life agréeing unto the ſame, and at all times much rebuking the wilfull and obſtinate Papiſtry, as alſo the licentious living of this Roger Holland. To whom he ſayd; Elizabeth, I would I had followed thy gentle perſwaſions and friendly rebukes; which if I had done, I had never come to this ſhame and miſery which I am now fallen into: for this night have I loſt thirty pound of my Maſters mony, which to pay him and to make up mine accounts, I am not able. But this much I pray you deſire my Miſtreſſe, that ſhe would intreate my Maſter to take this bill of my hand, that I am thus much indebted unto him; and if I bée ever able, I will ſée him payed, deſiring him that the matter may paſſe with ſilence, and that none of my kinred nor friends may ever underſtand this my lewd part. For if it ſhould come unto my fathers eares, it would bring his gray haires over ſoone unto his grave; and ſo was he departing.

A godly example of a mayde, letting more by the ſoule of a Chriſtian brother, than by her mony.

The mayde conſidering that it might bée his utter undoing; Stay, ſayd ſhe, and having a péece of mony lying by her, given unto her by the death of a kinſman of hers, who (as it was thought, was Doctor Redman) ſhe brought unto him thirty pound, ſaying, Roger, here is thus much mony; I will let thee have it, and I will kéepe this bill. But ſince I doe thus much for thée, to helpe thée, and to ſave thy honeſty, thou ſhalt promiſe mée to refuſe all lewd and wilde company, all ſwearing and ribaldry talke, and if ever I know thée to play one twelve pence at either Dice or Cards, then will I ſhew this thy bill unto my Maſter. And furthermore, thou ſhalt promiſe mée to reſort every day to the Lecture at Alhallows, and the Sermon at Pauls every Sunday, and to caſt away all thy bookes of papiſtry and vaine ballets, and get thee the Teſtament and Booke of Service, and read the Scriptures with reverence and feare, calling unto God ſtill for his grace to direct thee in his truth. And pray unto God fervently, deſiring him to pardon thy former offences, and not to remember the ſinnes of thy youth; and ever be affraid to breake his lawes or offend his Majeſty. Then ſhall God keepe thee and ſend thee thy hearts deſire.

Rog. Holland brought to the love of the Goſpel.

After this time, within one halfe yeare God had wrought ſuch a change in this man, that he was become an earneſt profeſſor of the truth, and deteſted all papiſtry and evill company; ſo that hee was in admiration to all them that had knowne him and ſeene his former life and wickedneſſe.

Rog. Holland converteth his Parents to the Goſpel.

Then he repaired into Lankeſhire unto his father, and brought divers good bookes with him, and beſtowed them upon his friends, ſo that his father and others began to taſte of the Goſpel, and to deteſt the maſſe, idolatry, and ſuperſtition; and in the end his father gave him a ſtocke of money to beginne the world withall, to the ſumme of fifty pound.

Rog. Holland repaieth the maid her mony againe, and marrieth her.

Then he repaired to London againe, and came to the maide that lent him the money to pay his maſter withall, and ſayd unto her, Elizabeth, here is thy money I borrowed of thee, and for the friendſhip, good will, and the good counſell I have received at thy hands, to recompence thee I am not able, otherwiſe than to make thee my wife; and ſoone after they were married, which was in the firſt yeare of Queene Mary. And having a childe by her, he cauſed Maiſter Roſe to baptiſe his ſaid child in his owne houſe. Notwithſtanding he was bewrayd unto the enemies, and he being gone into the countrey to convey the childe away, that the papiſts ſhould not have it in their annointing hands, Boner cauſed his goods to be ſeized upon, and moſt cruelly uſed his wife.

Hollands child chriſtned in his houſe.

Rog. Holland brought to Newgate.

After this he remained cloſely in the City, and in the countrey in the congregations of the faithfull, untill the laſt yeare of Queene Mary. Then he with the ſixe other aforeſayd, were taken in or not farre from S. Johns wood, and ſo brought to Newgate upon May day in the morning. An. 1558.

Then being called before the biſhop, Doctor Chadſey, both the Harpsfields, and certaine other, after many other faire and crafty perſwaſions of Doctor Chadſey, to allure him to their Babylonicall church; thus the biſhop began with him.

Holland, I for my part doe wiſh well unto thee, and the more for thy friends ſake. And as doctor Standiſh telleth mee, you and he were both borne in one pariſh, and hee knoweth your father to bee a very honeſt catholike gentleman. And maiſter doctor told me that hee talked with you a yeare agoe: and found you very wilfully addict to your owne conceite. Divers of the City alſo have ſhewed mee of you, that you have beene a great procurer of mens ſervants to bee of your religion, and to come to your congregations, but ſince you be now in the danger of the law, I would wiſh you to play a wiſe mans part: So ſhall you not want any favour I can doe or procure for you, both for your owne ſake, and alſo for your friends, which bee men of worſhip, and credite, and wiſh you well, and by my troth Roger ſo doe I.

Then ſaid Maſter Egleſtone, a gentleman of Lankeſhire, and neere kinſman to Roger, being there preſent; I thanke your good Lordſhip: your honour meaneth good unto my couſin, I beſeech God he have the grace to follow your counſell.

Holland Sir, you crave of God you know not what. I beſeech God to open your eyes to ſee the light of his word.

Egleſtone Roger, hold your peace leſt you fare the worſe at my Lords hands.

Holland No, I ſhall fare as it pleaſeth God; for man can doe no more than God doth permit him.

Rog. Holland willed to ſubmit himſelfe to the biſhop.

Then the biſhop and the doctors, with Johnſon the Regiſter, caſting their heads together, in the end ſaith Johnſon; Roger, how ſayſt thou? wilt thou ſubmit thy ſelfe unto my Lord, before thou be entered into the booke of contempt?

Holland I never meant but to ſubmit myſelfe unto the magiſtrat, as I learne of S. Paul to the Romanes, the 13. chap. and ſo he recited the text.

Chadſey Then I ſee you are no Anabaptiſt.

Holland I meane not yet to be a papiſt; for they and the Anabaptiſts agree in this point, not to ſubmit themſelves to any other prince or magiſtrate, than thoſe that muſt firſt bee ſworne to maintaine them and their doings.

Chadſey Roger, remember what I have ſaid, and alſo what my Lord hath promiſed he will performe with further friendſhip. Take heed Roger, for your ripeneſſe of wit hath brought you into theſe errors.

Holland Maſter Doctor, I have yet your words in memory, though they are of no ſuch force to prevaile with mee. Then they whiſpered together again, and at the laſt ſaid Boner; Roger, I perceive thou wilt be ruled by no good counſell for any thing that either I or your friends or any other can ſay.

Rog Holland firſt a great papiſt.

Holland I may ſay to you my Lord, as Paul ſaid to Felix and unto the Jewes, as doth appeare in the two and twentieth of the Acts, and in the fifteenth of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians. It is not unknowne unto my Maſter whom I was prentiſe withall, that I was of this your blinde religion that now is taught, and therein did obſtinately and wilfully remaine, untill the later end of King Edward in maner, having that liberty under your auricular confeſſion, that I made no conſcience of ſinne, but truſted in the Prieſts abſolution, hee for money doing ſome penance alſo for me: which after I had given, I cared no further what offences I did, no more than he paſſed after he had my money, whether he faſted bread and water for me or no: ſo that lechery, ſwearing, and all other vices I accompted no offence of danger, ſo long as I could for money have them abſolved. So ſtraitly did I obſerve your rules of religion, that I would have aſhes upon Aſhwedneſday, though I had uſed never ſo much wickedneſſe at night. And albeit I could not of conſcience eate fleſh upon the Friday, yet in ſwearing, drinking, or dicing all the night long I made no conſcience at all. And thus was I brought up, and herein have I continued till now of late, that God hath opened the light of his word, and called me by his grace to repentance of my former idolatry and wicked life: for in Lankeſhire their blindneſſe and whoredome is overmuch more, than may with chaſte eares be heard. Yet theſe my friends, which are not cleare in theſe notable crimes, thinke the Prieſt with his Maſſe can ſave them, though they blaſpheme God, and keep Concubines beſides their wives, as long as they live. Yea I know ſome Prieſts, very devout, my Lord, yet ſuch as have 6. or 7. children by foure or five ſundry women.

The wickedneſſe of Roger Holland before he was called to the Goſpel.

At theſe examinations, divers of Roger Hollands friends and kinsfolkes, being men of worſhip, were preſent, both of Lankeſhire and Cheſhire.

M. Doctor, now to your antiquity, unity, and univerſality (for theſe Doctor Chadſey alledged as notes and tokens of their religion) I am unlearned. I have no ſophiſtry to ſhift my reaſons withall; but the truth I truſt I have, which néedeth no painted colours to ſet her forth. The antiquity of our Church is not from Pope Nicholas, or Pope Joane, but our Church is from the beginning, even from the time that God ſayd unto Adam, that the ſéede of the woman ſhould breake the Serpents héad; and ſo to faithfull Noah; to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, to whom it was promiſed, that their ſéed ſhould multiply as the Stars in the ſkie; and ſo to Moſes, David, and all the holy Fathers that were from the beginning, unto the birth of our Saviour Chriſt. All they that beléeved theſe promiſes were of the Church, though the number were oftentimes but few and ſmall, as in Helias dayes, when he thought there was none but he, that had not bowed their knées to Baal, when God had reſerved ſeven thouſand that never had bowed their knées to that Idoll; as I truſt there bée ſeven hundred thouſand more than I know of, that have not bowed their knées to the Idoll your Maſſe, and your God Maozim: the upholding whereof is your bloudy cruelty, whiles you dayly perſecute Helias and the ſervants of God, forcing them (as Daniel was in his chamber) cloſely to ſerve the Lord their God; and even as we by this your cruelty are forced in the fields to pray unto God, that his holy Word may be once againe truely preached amongſt us, and that he would mitigate and ſhorten theſe idolatrous and bloudy dayes, wherein all cruelty reigneth. Moreover, our Church have béen the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts, the Martyrs and Confeſſors of Chriſt, that have at all times and in all ages béen perſecuted for the teſtimony of the Word of God. But for the upholding of your Church and Religion, what antiquity can you ſhew? Yea, the Maſſe, that Idoll and chiefe pillar of your Religion, is not yet foure hundred yéeres old, and ſome of your Maſſes are younger, as that Maſſe of St. Thomas Becket the Traitor, wherein you pray, that you may be ſaved by the bloud of Saint Thomas. And as for your Latine Service, what are we of the Laity the better for it? I thinke he that ſhould heare your Prieſts mumble up their Service, although he did well underſtand Latine, yet ſhould he underſtand few words thereof: the Prieſts doe ſo champe them and chaw them, and poſſe ſo faſt, that neither they underſtand what they ſay, nor they that heare them; and in the mean time the people, when they ſhould pray with the Prieſt, are ſet to their beades to pray our Ladies Pſalter. So crafty is Sathan to deviſe theſe his dreames (which you defend with fagot and fire) to quench the light of the Word of God: which (as David ſaith) ſhould be a lantern to our féete. And againe, wherein ſhall a young man direct his wayes, but by the Word of God? And yet you will hide it from us in a tongue unknowne. Saint Paul had rather in the Church to have five words ſpoken with underſtanding, than ten thouſand in an unknowne tongue; and yet will you have your Latine Service and praying in a ſtrange tongue, whereof the people are utterly ignorant to be of ſuch antiquity?

The Maſſe how old it is.

Latine Service.

The Gréeke Church, and a good part of Chriſtendome beſides, never received your Service in an unknowne tongue, but in their owne naturall language, which all the people underſtand, neither yet your tranſubſtantiation, your receiving all alone, your Purgatory, your Images, &c.

The Gréeke Church differing from the Latine.

As for the unity which is in your Church, what is it elſe but treaſon, murther, poyſoning one another, idolatry, ſuperſtition, wickedneſſe? What unity was in your Church, when there were thrée Popes at once? Where was your head of unity when you had a woman Pope? Here hée was interrupted, and could not be ſuffered to procéede, but, ſaith the Biſhop; Roger, theſe thy words are very blaſphemy, and by the meanes of thy friends thou haſt béen ſuffered to ſpeake, and art over malapert to teach any here. Therefore Kéeper take him away.

The ſecond examination of Roger Holland.

The day that Henry Pond and the reſt were brought forth to bée againe examined, Doctor Chadſey ſayd; Roger, I truſt you have now better conſidered of the Church than you did before.

The ſecond examination of Roger Holland.

Holland I conſider this much: That out of the Church there is no ſalvation, as divers ancient Doctors ſay.

Boner That is well ſaid. Maſter Egleſton, I truſt your kinſman will bée a good Catholike man. But Roger, you meane, I truſt, the Church of Rome.

Holland I meane that Church which hath Chriſt for her head; which alſo hath his word, and his ſacraments according to his word and inſtitution.

Chadſey Then Chadſey interrupted him, and ſayd, is that a Teſtament you have in your hand?

Holland Yea, Maſter Doctor, it is the New Teſtament. You will finde no fault with the tranſlation (I think.) It is of your owne tranſlation; it is according to the great Bible.

Boner How ſay you? How doe you know it is the Teſtament of Chriſt, but only by the Church? For the Church of Rome hath and doth preſerve it, and out of the ſame hath made Decrées, Ordinances, and true Expoſitions.

No (ſaith Roger) the Church of Rome hath and doth ſuppreſſe the reading of the Teſtament. And what a true expoſition (I pray you) did the Pope make thereof, when he ſet his foote on the Emperors necke, and ſayd; Thou ſhalt walke upon the Lion and the Aſpe: the young Lion and the Dragon ſhalt thou tread under thy foot? Pſal. 91.

Then ſaid the Biſhop; Such unlearned wilde heads as thou and other, would be expoſitors of the Scripture. Would you then the ancient learned (as there be ſome here as well as I) ſhould be taught of you?

Holland Youth delighteth in vanity. My wildneſſe hath béen ſomewhat the more by your doctrine, than ever I learned out of this booke of God. But (my Lord) I ſuppoſe ſome of the old Doctors ſay; If a poore lay man bring his reaſon and argument out of the Word of God, he is to be credited afore the learned, though they be never ſo great Doctors. For the gift of knowledge was taken from the learned Doctors, and given to poore Fiſhermen. Notwithſtanding I am ready to be inſtructed by the Church.

Boner That is very well ſaid, Roger. But you muſt underſtand that the Church of Rome is the Catholike Church. Roger, for thy friends ſake (I promiſe thée) I wiſh thée well, and I meane to doe thée good. Kéeper, ſée hée want nothing. Roger, if thou lacke any mony to pleaſure thée, I will ſée thou ſhalt not want. This hée ſpake unto him alone, his fellowes being apart, with many other faire promiſes, and ſo he was ſent to priſon againe.

brought into the Conſiſtory; and there excommunicated all ſaving Roger, and ready to have their ſentence of judgement given, with many threatning words to fear them withall: the L. Strange, Sir Tho. Iarret, M. Egleſton Eſquire, and divers other of worſhip, both of Cheſhire, and Lankaſhire, that were Roger Hollands kinſmen and friends, being there preſent, which had beene earneſt ſuters to the Biſhop in his favour, hoping of his ſafety of life. Now the Biſhop hoping, yet to win him with his faire and flattering words, began after this manner.

Boner Roger, I have divers times called thee before home to my houſe, and have conferred with thee, and being not learned in the Latine tongue, it doth appeare unto mee thou art of a good memory, and of a very ſenſible talke, but ſomething overhaſty, which is a naturall diſeaſe to ſome men. And ſurely they are not the worſt natured men. For I my ſelfe ſhall now and then be haſty, but mine anger is ſoone paſt. So Roger, ſurely I have a good opinion of you, that you will not with theſe lewd fellowes caſt your ſelfe headlong from the Church of your parents and your friends that are here, very good Catholikes (as it is reported unto me.) And as I meane thee good, ſo Roger play the wiſe mans part, and come home with the loſt ſonne, and ſay; I have runne into the Church of Schiſmatikes and Heretikes, from the Catholike Church of Rome; and you ſhall, I warrant you, not onely finde favour at Gods hands, but the Church that hath authority, ſhall abſolve you, and put new garments upon you, and kill the fatling to make thee good cheare withall, that is, in ſo doing, as meat doth refreſh and cheriſh the minde, ſo ſhalt thou finde as much quietneſſe of conſcience in comming home to the Church, as did the hungry ſonne that had bin fed afore with the hogges, as you have done with theſe heretikes that ſever themſelves from the Church. I give them a homely name, but they be worſe (putting his hand to his cap for reverence ſake) than hogges: For they know the Church, and will not follow it. If I ſhould ſay thus much to a Turke, he would (I think) beleeve me. But Roger, if I did not beare thee and thy friends good will, I would not have ſayd ſo much as I have done, but I would have let mine Ordinary alone with you.

At theſe words his friends that were there, gave the Biſhop thankes for his good will and paines that he had taken in his and their behalfe.

Boner Well Roger, how ſay you now? Doe you not beleeve, that after the Prieſt hath ſpoken the words of conſecration, there remaineth the body of Chriſt really and corporally under the formes of bread and wine? I meane the ſelfe ſame body that was borne of the Virgin Mary, that was crucified upon the croſſe, that roſe againe the third day.

The Papiſts how they take one peece of Scripture, and leave out another.

Holland Your Lordſhip ſaith, the ſame body which was borne of the Virgin Mary, which was crucified upon the croſſe, which roſe againe the third day: but you leave out which aſcended into heaven; and the Scripture ſaith, he ſhall there remaine untill hee come to judge the quick and the dead. Then he is not contained under the formes of bread and wine, by Hoc eſt corpus meum, &c.

Boner Roger, I perceive my paines and good will, will not prevaile, and if I ſhould argue with thee, thou art ſo wilfull (as all thy fellowes bee, ſtanding in thine owne ſingularity and fooliſh conceit) that thou wouldeſt ſtill talke to no purpoſe this 7. yeare, if thou mighteſt be ſuffered. Anſwer whether thou wilt confeſſe the reall and corporall preſence of Chriſts body in the ſacrament, or wilt not.

Holland My Lord, although God by his ſufferance hath here placed you, to ſet forth his truth and glory in us his faithfull ſervants; notwithſtanding your meaning is farre from the zeale of Chriſt: and for all your words, you have the ſame zeale that Annas and Caiphas had, truſting to their authority, traditions and ceremonies, more than to the word of God.

Bon. If I ſhould ſuffer him, he would fall from reaſoning to raving, as a franticke heretike.

L. Strange Roger (ſaith the Lord Strange) I perceive my Lord would have you tell him whether you will ſubmit your ſelfe to him or no.

Boner Yea, ſaith Boner, and confeſſe this preſence that I have ſpoken of.

With this, Roger turning him to the Lord Strange and the reſt of his kinſmen and friends, very cheerefully kneeled downe upon his knees, and ſaid; God by the mouth of his ſervant Saint Paul hath ſaid, Let every ſoule ſubmit himſelfe unto the higher powers, and he that reſiſteth receiveth his owne damnation: and as you are a Magiſtrate appointed by the will of God, ſo doe I ſubmit my ſelfe unto you, and to all ſuch as are appointed for Magiſtrates.

Boner That is well ſaid, I ſee you are no Anabaptiſt. How ſay you then to the preſence of Chriſts body and blood in the ſacrament of the altar?

The preſence of the ſacrament.

Holland I ſay, and beſeech you all to marke and beare witneſſe with me (for ſo you ſhall doe before the judgement ſeat of God) what I ſpeak; for here is the concluſion: And ye my deare friends (turning him to his kinſmen) I pray you ſhew my father what I doe ſay, that he may underſtand I am a Chriſtian man. I ſay and beleeve, and am therein fully perſwaded by the Scriptures, that the ſacrament of the ſupper of our Lord, miniſtred in the holy Communion according to Chriſts inſtitution, I being penitent and ſorry for my ſinnes, and minding to amend and leade a new life, and ſo comming worthily unto Gods boord in perfect love and charity, doe there receive by faith the body and blood of Chriſt. And though Chriſt in his humane nature ſit at the right hand of his father, yet (by faith I ſay) his death, his paſſion, his merits are mine, and by faith I dwell in him, and he in me. And as for the maſſe, tranſubſtantiation, and the worſhipping of the ſacrament, they are meere impiety and horrible idolatry.

Sentence read againſt Rog. Holland.

Boner I thought ſo much, ſayd Boner (ſuffring him to ſpeake no more) how he would prove a very blaſphemous heretike as ever I heard. How unreverently doth he ſpeak of the bleſſed Maſſe? and ſo read his bloudy ſentence of condemnation, adjudging him to be burned.

All this while Roger was very patient and quiet, and when he ſhould depart, he ſaid, My Lord, I beſeech you ſuffer me to ſpeak two words. The Biſhop would not hear him, but bade him away. Notwithſtanding, being requeſted by one of his friends, he ſaid, Speak, what haſt thou to ſay?

Rog. Holland propheſieth of ſhortning the time of B. Boners cruelty.

Holland Even now I told you that your authority was from God, and by his ſufferance: and now I tell you, God hath heard the prayer of his ſervants, which hath beene poured forth with teares for his afflicted Saints, which daily you perſecute, as now you doe us. But this I dare bee bold in God to ſpeake (which by his ſpirit I am moved to ſay) that God will ſhorten your hand of cruelty, that for a time you ſhall not moleſt his church. And this ſhall you in ſhort time well perceive, my deare brethren, to be moſt true. For after this day, in this place ſhall there not bee any by him put to the tryall of fire and faggot: And after this day there was none that ſuffered in Smithfield for the teſtimony of the Goſpel, God be thanked.

After theſe words ſpoken, ſayd Boner, Roger, thou art I perceive as mad in theſe thy hereſies as ever was Joane Butcher. In anger and fume thou wouldeſt become a rayling Prophet. Though thou and all the ſort of you would ſee mee hanged, yet I ſhall live to burne, yea, I will burne all the ſort of you that come in my hands, that will not worſhip the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar, for all thy pratling, and ſo he went his way.

Then Roger Holland beganne to exhort his friends to repentance, and to thinke well of them that ſuffered for the teſtimony of the Goſpell, and with that the Biſhop came backe charging the Keeper that no man ſhould ſpeake to them without his licence, and if they did, they ſhould bee committed to priſon. In the meane ſeaſon H. Pond and Roger ſpake ſtill unto the people, exhorting them to ſtand in the truth: adding moreover, that God would ſhorten theſe cruell and evill dayes for his elects ſake.

The cruell dayes ſhortned for the elects ſake.

The martyrdome of Roger Holland with ſixe other in Smithfield.

The day they ſuffered, a proclamation was made, that none ſhould be ſo bold to ſpeake or talke any word unto them, or receive any thing of them, or to touch them upon paine of impriſonment without eyther baile or mainpriſe; with diverſe other cruell threatning words, contained in the ſame proclamation. Notwithſtanding the people cried out, deſiring God to ſtrengthen them: and they likewiſe ſtill prayed for the people, and the reſtoring of his word. At length Roger embracing the ſtake, and the reeds, ſayd theſe words:

Lord I moſt humbly thanke thy Majeſty, that thou haſt called me from the ſtate of death, unto the light of thy heavenly word, and now unto the fellowſhip of thy Saints, that I may ſing and ſay, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hoſtes. And Lord into thy hands I commit my ſpirit. Lord bleſſe theſe thy people, and ſave them from idolatry. And ſo he ended his life, looking up into heaven, praying, and prayſing God, with the reſt of his fellow Saints. For whoſe joyfull conſtancy the Lord be praiſed.

The Martyrdome of ſixe, which ſuffered at Brainford for the true teſtimony of Ieſus Chriſt.

July 14. 6 Martyrs burnt at Brainford.

NOt long after the death of the forenamed ſeven godly Martyrs that ſuffered in Smithfield, were ſixe other faithfull witneſſes of the Lords true Teſtament, martyred at Brainford ſeven miles from London, the 14. day of July 1558. which ſaid ſixe were of that company that were apprehended in a Cloſe hard by Iſlington (as is above ſpecified) and ſent to priſon. Whoſe names and articles proponed to them, with their anſwers unto the ſame, hereafter follow.

Robert Milles,
Stephen Cotton,
Robert Dynes,
Stephen Wight, } Martyrs.
John Slade,
William Pikes, or Pikes, a Tanner.

Theſe ſixe forenamed martyrs (gentle Reader) had their articles miniſtred to them by Thomas Darbiſhire, Boners Chancellor, at ſundry times; as Robert Willes the 20. day of June, Stephen Wight the 21. day of the ſayd moneth. Stephen Cotton, and John Slade the 22. day, and Robert Dynes, and William Pikes the 23. day. At which ſaid times, though they were ſeverally examined, yet had they all one manner of articles miniſtred to them, yea and the ſelfe ſame articles that were miniſtred to John Holyday, Henry Pond, and their company aforeſaid. Which ſaid articles I leave the Reader to looke for above in their ſtory, and thinke it not neceſſary any more to rehearſe them, but only to proceede with their anſwers to the ſame, which briefly and in ſumme hereafter followeth.

The anſwers of the forenamed perſons to the Articles aforeſaid.

The anſwers of the 6 former Martyrs to the articles.

TO the firſt article they all granted the ſame; and added thereto for going to Church, that R. Milles and Stephen Wight came not there for three quarters of a yeare before, and John Slade and William Pikes not ſince the Queenes Reigne, Stephen Cotton not for a twelvemoneth before, and Robert Dynes not for two yeares before.

The ſecond, third, fourth, fifth, and ſixth articles they all anſwered in effect, as the forenamed Jo. Holyday, Henry Pond, and their company did, ſaving they added, that as their rites, cuſtomes, and ceremonies are againſt the word of God, ſo will they obſerve and keepe no part of the ſame. Stephen Wight added further, that hee received not their ſacrament of the altar for two yeares before, nor John Slade and William Pikes ſince Queene Maries reigne, nor Stephen Cotton for a twelvemoneth before, nor Robert Dynes for three years before.

To the 7. article, they all granted the ſame in every part like unto the aforenamed Henry Pond and his company; ſaving that Robert Dines added, that it was no part of his beliefe.

To the 8. article they all granted the ſame in every part, as the forenamed William Holyday and his company: but Robert Milles added thereto, that he will not come to Church, nor allow their religion, ſo long as the Croſſe is crept to, and worſhipped, and images are in the Church. John Slade affirmed in effect as Robert Milles did, adding further, that there be not ſeven ſacraments, but two ſacraments, which is Baptiſme, and the Supper of the Lord. Stephen Cotton would no further allow the Popiſh religion, than it agreeth with Gods word: and Robert Dines affirmed in effect the like to Stephen Cotton alſo.

To the 9. and 10. articles, Robert Milles, John Slade, and Stephen Cotton anſwered, that they doe not allow the Popiſh ſervice then ſet forth, becauſe it is againſt the truth, and in a ſtrange language which the common people underſtand not. Rob. Dines and William Pikes, will neither allow nor diſallow the Latin ſervice, becauſe they underſtand it not. And Ste. Wight would make no direct anſwer to the articles at all, and to the 11, 12, 13, and 14. articles we finde no anſwers recorded of the ſaid Stephen Wight, but of the reſt of his fellow priſoners we find anſwers to thoſe articles which hereafter follow.

To the 11. article, Robert Milles, John Slade, and Stephen Cotton anſwered, that concerning the bookes, faith, and religion ſpecified in this article, they do allow them ſo far forth, as they agree with Gods word, &c. Robert Dines would make no anſwer thereto, becauſe he thought himſelfe unmeete to judge thereof: and William Pikes doth not remember that he hath miſliked the ſervice, and the faith, and religion ſet forth in K. Edward the ſixth his time.

To the 12. they grant, that if they might receive the ſacrament as they did in K. Edward the ſixth his daies, they would with all their heart ſo doe.

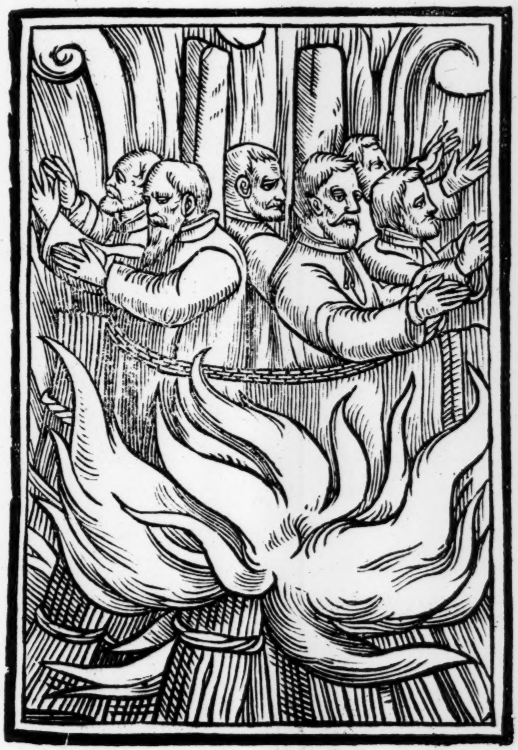
To the 13. and 14. Articles, they confeſſe and grant the contents of them to be true in every part.

When at the daies before ſpecified, theſe good men were produced before Boners Chancellor, Thomas Darbiſhire, and had the foreſaid articles miniſtred unto them, and they (as ye have heard) had made anſwer unto the ſame; in the end the Chancellor commanded them to appeare before him againe the eleventh day of July after in the ſaid place at Pauls. Where when they came, he required of them, whether they would turne from their opinions to the mother holy Church; and if not, that then, whether there were any cauſe to the contrary, but that he might proceed with the ſentence of condemnation. Whereunto they all anſwered, that they would not goe from the truth, nor relent from any part of the ſame while they lived. Then he charged them to appeare before him againe the next day in the afternoone, betweene one and two of the clock, to heare the definitive ſentence read againſt them, according to the Eccleſiaſticall Lawes then in force. At which time, he ſitting in judgement, talking with theſe godly and vertuous men, at laſt came into the ſaid place Sir Edward Haſtings and Sir Thomas Cornewalls Knights, two of Queene Maries Officers of her houſe, and being there, they ſate them downe over againſt the Chancellor, in whoſe preſence the ſaid Chancellor condemned thoſe good poore Lambes, and delivered them over to the ſecular power, who received and carried them to priſon immediatly, and there kept them in ſafety, till the day of their death.

The ſix martyrs brought againe before Darbiſhire.

Sir Edward Haſtings, and ſir Thomas Cornwalls at the condemnation of theſe Martyrs.

The martyrdome of ſixe men burned at Brainford, Anno 1558. Iuly 14.



In the meane time this naughty Chancellor ſlept not, I warrant you, but that day in which they were condemned, he made certificate into the Lord Chancellors Office, from whence the next day after was ſent a writ to burne them at Brainford aforeſaid, which accordingly was accompliſhed in the ſame place, the ſaid fourteenth day of July: Whereunto they being brought, made their humble prayers unto the Lord Jeſus, undreſſed themſelves, went joyfully to the ſtake, whereunto they were bound, and the fire flaming about them, they yeelded their ſoules, bodies, and lives into the hands of the omnipotent Lord, for whoſe cauſe they did ſuffer, and to whoſe protection I commend thee gentle Reader, Amen.

Among theſe ſixe was one William Pikes (as ye have heard) who ſometime dwelt in Ipſwich in Suffolke, by his occupation a Tanner, a very honeſt godly man, and of a vertuous diſpoſition, a good keeper of Hoſpitality, and beneficiall to the perſecuted in Queene Maries daies. This ſaid William Pikes, in the third yeare of Queene Maries raigne, a little after Midſummer, being then at liberty, went into his garden, and tooke with him a Bible of Rogers tranſlation, where he, ſitting with his face towards the South, reading on the ſaid Bible, ſuddenly fell downe upon his booke, betweene eleven and twelve a clock of the day, foure drops of freſh blood, and he knew not from whence it came. Then hee ſeeing the ſame, was ſore aſtoniſhed, and could by no meanes learn (as I ſaid) from whence it ſhould fall: and wiping out one of the drops with his finger, he called his wife, and ſaid, In the vertue of God wife, what meaneth this? Will the Lord have foure ſacrifices? I ſee well enough the Lord will have blood: his will be done, and give me grace to abide the triall. Wife, let us pray (ſaid he) for I feare the day draweth nigh. Afterward he daily looked to be apprehended of the Papiſts, and it came to paſſe accordingly, as yee have heard. Thus much thought I good to write thereof, to ſtir up our dull ſenſes in conſidering the Lords workes, and reverently to honour the ſame. His name therefore be praiſed for evermore. Amen.

Moreover, concerning the ſaid William Pikes, as he was in Newgate ſore ſick, and at the point of death, ſo that no man looked he ſhould live ſixe houres, he declared to them that ſtood by, that he had been twice in perſecution before, and that now he deſired the Lord, if it were his will, that he might glorifie his name at the ſtake, and ſo as he prayed it came to paſſe at Brainford.

Ye heard before, that of thoſe two and twenty taken at Iſlington, thirteene were burned, and ſix eſcaped, albeit very hardly, and ſome of them not without ſcourging by the hands of the Biſhop. In the which number was Thomas Hinſhaw and John Willes, according to the expreſſe picture hereafter purported.

The ſcourging of Tho. Hinſhaw.

IN the godly number above mentioned, which were apprehended at Iſlington, there congregated together, for their exerciſe of prayer and reading, was this Thomas Hinſhaw above named, a yong man of the age of 19. or 20. yeares, prentiſe in Pauls Churchyard with one M. Pugſon, Who with the reſt was carried to the Conſtables of Iſlington, and there every one of them ſearched, and led forthwith to the chiefe Iuſtice Maſter Cholmley, dwelling in the old Baily in London, and by him then the ſaid Thomas Hinſhaw was ſent to Newgate: and there remaining priſoner without conference with any, about eight weekes, at the laſt was ſent for to Boner Biſhop of London, and by him, Harpsfield, and Cole, examined. After which examination he was ſent to Newgate again, where he remained a three weekes following. Which time being overpaſſed, he was ſent for againe before the ſaid Biſhop, the day being Saturday, and with him had much talke to little purpoſe. The next day after alſo, which was Sunday, they perſwaded with him very much in like maner, and perceiving they could not bend him unto their bow, in the afternoone the Biſhop going unto Fulham, tooke him with him, where immediatly after his comming, he was ſet in the ſtockes, remaining there all the firſt night with bread and water.

Hinſhaw carried to Fulham, and there ſet in the ſtocks with bread and water.

The next morning the Biſhop came and examined him himſelfe, and perceiving no yeelding to his minde, he ſent M. Harpsfield to talk with him; who, after long talke, in the end fell to raging words, calling the ſaid Th. Hinſhaw peeviſh boy, and aſked him whether he thought he went about to damne his ſoule, or no, &c. Unto which the ſaid Tho. anſwered, that he was perſwaded that they laboured to maintaine their darke and deviliſh kingdom, & not for any love to truth. Then Harpsfield, being in a mighty rage, told the B. thereof.

Whereat

Hinſhaw beaten with rods. The boy was beholding to B. Boners graund paunch.

Whereat the Biſhop fumed and fretted, that ſcant for anger being able to ſpeake, he ſaid, Doeſt thou anſwer my Archdeacon ſo, thou naughty boy? I ſhall handle thee well enough, be aſſured: ſo hee ſent for a couple of rods, and cauſed him to kneele againſt a long bench in an arbor in his garden, where the ſaid Thomas, without any inforcement of his part, offered himſelfe to the beating, and did abide the fury of the ſayd Boner, ſo long as the fat panched Biſhop could endure with breath, and till for wearineſſe he was faine to ceaſe, and give place to his ſhamefull act. Hee had two willow rods, but hee waſted but one, and ſo left off.

Now after this ſcourging, the ſaid Thomas Hinſhaw notwithſtanding did ſuſtaine divers conflicts, and examinations ſundry times. At laſt being brought before the ſaid Biſhop in his Chappell at Fulham, there he had procured witneſſes, and gathered articles againſt him, which the yong man denied, and would not affirme, or conſent to any interrogatory there and then miniſtred, doe what they could.

The articles were theſe.

The ſcourging of Iohn Willes by Biſhop Boner.

The ſtory of Iohn Willes a capper.

BEſides the above named, was ſcourged alſo by the hands of the ſaid Biſhop, one Io. Willes a Capper, a right faithfull and true honeſt man in all his dealings and conditions. Who was brother to the foreſaid R. Willes burned before at Brainford, as is above ſignified. Who alſo was apprehended in the ſame number with them at Iſlington, as is mentioned alſo before: and being brought before Boner, and there examined, was commanded to the Colehouſe, with the foreſayd Tho. Hinſhaw, where they remained one night in the ſtocks. From thence he was ſent to Fulham, where he, with the ſayd Hinſhaw, remained 8. or 10. dayes in the ſtockes; during which time he ſuſtained divers conflicts with the ſayd Boner, who had him oft times in Examination, urging him, and with a ſticke which hee had in his hand, ofttimes rapping him on the head, and flirting him under the chin, and on the eares, ſaying he looked downe like a thiefe. Moreover, after hee had aſſayed all manner of wayes to cauſe him to recant, and could not, at length having him to his Orchard, there within a little arbor, with his owne hands beat him firſt with a willow rod, and that being worne well nigh to the ſtumps, hee called for a birchin rod, which a lad brought out of his chamber. The cauſe why he ſo beat him, was this; Boner aſked him when he had crept to the croſſe. He anſwered, Not ſince he came to the yeares of diſcretion, neither would, though hee ſhould bee torne with wilde horſes. Then Boner bade him make a croſſe in his forehead, which hee refuſed to doe. Whereupon hee had him incontinently to his Orchard, and there calling for rods, ſhewed his cruelty upon him, as he did upon Thomas Hinſhaw, as is above declared.

Anno 1558.

Hinſhaw and Willes beaten of Boner.

Iohn Willes denieth to ſubſcribe to B. Boners articles.

This done, he had him immediately to the Pariſh Church of Fulham with the ſaid Tho. Hinſhaw, and Rob. Willes, to whom there being ſeverally called before him, he miniſtred certaine articles, aſking if he would ſubſcribe to the ſame. To the which the ſaid Iohn Willes made his anſwer according to his conſcience, denying them all, except one article which was concerning K. Edwards ſervice in Engliſh. Shortly after this beating, Boner ſent to him in priſon a certaine old Prieſt lately come from Rome, to coniure out the evill ſpirit from him, who laying his hand upon his head, beganne with certaine words pronounced over him, to coniure as he had been wont before to doe. Willes marvelling what the Prieſt was about to doe, ſayd, Hee truſted no evill ſpirit to be within him, and laughed him to ſcorne, &c.

The unſavoury reaſons or talke of B. Boner going about to perſwade Iohn Willes.

Boners iudgment, that we ſhould truſt more to men, than to the ſcriptures of God.

As this Iohn Willes was divers times and oft called before Boner, ſo much communication and talke paſſed betweene them; which to recite all, it were too long. And if it were not unpleaſant for the Reader that luſteth to laugh, to ſee the blinde and unſavoury reaſons of that Biſhop, which he uſed to perſwade the ignorant withall. As in the proceſſe of his other talke with this Willes, Boner going about to perſwade him not to meddle with matters of the Scripture, but rather to beleeve other mens teaching, which had more skill in the ſame; firſt aſked if he did beleeve the Scripture? Yea, ſaid he, that I do. Then the Biſhop, why (quoth he) Saint Paul ſaith, If the man ſleep, the woman is at liberty to goe to another man. If thou were aſleepe having a wife, wouldeſt thou be content thy wife to take another man? And yet this is the Scripture.

This ſimilitude holdeth, [illegible]

Item, if thou wilt beleeve Luther, Zuinglius, and ſuch, then thou canſt not goe right. But if thou wilt beleeve me, &c. thou canſt not erre. And if thou ſhouldeſt erre, yet thou art in no perill, thy bloud ſhould be required at our hands. As if thou ſhouldeſt goe to a farre Countrey, and meet with a fatherly man as I am (for theſe were his terms) and aske the way to the head city, and he ſhould ſay this way, and thou wilt not beleeve him, but follow Luther, and other heretikes of late dayes, and goe a contrary way; how wilt thou come to the place thou askeſt for? ſo if thou wilt not beleeve me, but follow the leading of other heretikes, ſo ſhalt thou be brought to deſtruction, and burne both body and ſoule.

Raſh and preſumptuous iudgement of Boner.

As truely as thou ſeeſt the bodies of them in Smithfield burnt, ſo truly their ſoules do burne in hell, becauſe they erre from the true Church.

B. Boners wiſh in puniſhing Gods ſaints.

Oft times ſpeaking to the ſaid Iohn Willes, he would ſay, They call me bloudy Boner. A vengeance on you all. I would faine bee rid of you, but you have a delight in burning. But if I might have my will, I would ſowe your mouthes, and put you in ſackes and drowne you.

Wil. Cholmley Iuſtice.

Boner, Harpſfield, and Cole

IN the godly number aboue mentioned, which were apprehended at Iſlington, there congregated together, for their exerciſe of prayer and reading, was this Thomas Hinſhaw aboue named, a yong man of the age of 19. or 20. yeares, prentiſe in Pauls Churchyard with one M. Pugſon, Who with the reſt was carried to the Conſtables of Iſlington, and there euery one of them ſearched, and led forthwith to the chiefe Iuſtice Maſter Cholmley, dwelling in the old Baily in London, and by him then the ſaid Thomas Hinſhaw was ſent to Newgate: and there remaining priſoner without conference with any, about eight weekes, at the laſt was ſent for to Boner Biſhop of London, and by him, Harpsfield, and Cole, examined. After which examination he was ſent to Newgate again, where he remained a three weekes following. Which time being ouerpaſſed, he was ſent for againe before the ſaid Biſhop, the day being Saturday, and with him had much talke to little purpoſe. The next day after alſo, which was Sunday, they perſwaded with him very much in like maner, and perceiuing they could not bend him unto their bow, in the afternoone the Biſhop going unto Fulham, tooke him with him, where immediatly after his comming, he was ſet in the ſtockes, remaining there all the firſt night with bread and water.

Hinſhaw carried to Fulham, and there ſet in the ſtocks with bread and water.

The next morning the Biſhop came and examined him himſelfe, and perceiuing no yeelding to his minde, he ſent M. Harpsfield to talk with him; who, after long talke, in the end fell to raging words, calling the ſaid Th. Hinſhaw peeuiſh boy, and aſked him whether he thought he went about to damne his ſoule, or no, &c. Unto which the ſaid Tho. anſwered, that he was perſwaded that they laboured to maintaine their darke and deuilliſh kingdom, & not for any loue to truth. Then Harpsfield, being in a mighty rage, told the B. thereof.

Hinſhaw beaten with rods. The boy was beholding to B. Boners graund paunch.

Whereat the Biſhop fumed and fretted, that ſcant for anger being able to ſpeake, he ſaid, Doeſt thou anſwer my Archdeacon ſo, thou naughty boy? I ſhall handle thee well enough, be aſſured: ſo hee ſent for a couple of rods, and cauſed him to kneele againſt a long bench in an arbor in his garden, where the ſaid Thomas, without any inforcement of his part, offered himſelfe to the beating, and did abide the fury of the ſayd Boner, ſo long as the fat panched Biſhop could endure with breath, and till for wearineſſe he was faine to ceaſe, and give place to his ſhamefull act. Hee had two willow rods, but hee waſted but one, and ſo left off.

Now after this ſcourging, the ſaid Thomas Hinſhaw notwithſtanding did ſuſtaine divers conflicts, and examinations ſundry times. At laſt being brought before the ſaid Biſhop in his Chappell at Fulham, there he had procured witneſſes, and gathered articles againſt him, which the yong man denied, and would not affirme, or conſent to any interrogatory there and then miniſtred, doe what they could.

Now

Anno 1558.

The occaſion and maner of delivering John Willes.

Now ſomewhat to ſay concerning the deliverance of the ſaid John Willes. The ſame day that hée was delivered, Boner came unto the ſtockes where he lay, and aſked him how he liked his lodging, and his fare.

Well, ſayd Willes, if it would pleaſe God I might have a little ſtraw to lye or ſit upon.

Willes wife intreateth for her husband.

Then ſayd Boner, Thou wilt ſhew no token of a Chriſtian man. And upon this his wife came in unknowing unto him, being very great with childe, and looking every houre for her lying down, entreating the Biſhop for her huſband, and ſaying, that ſhée would not goe out of the houſe, but there would lay her belly in the Biſhops houſe, unleſſe ſhe had her huſband with her. How ſayeſt thou (quoth Boner) thou heretike? If thy wife miſcarry, or thy childe, or children, if ſhe be with one or two, ſhould periſh, the bloud of them would be required at thy hands. Then to this agréement he came, that hée ſhould hire a bed in the towne of Fulham, and her huſband ſhould goe home with her the morrow after, upon this condition, that his kinſman there preſent (one Robert Rouſſe) ſhould bring the ſaid Willes unto his houſe at Pauls the next day.

Rob. Rouſſe kinſman to John Willes.

The condition put to John Willes to ſay, In nomine Patris, &c.

Wherunto the ſaid Willes ſaid, he would not agrée, except he might go home by and by. At length his wife being importunate for her huſband, and ſéeing that ſhe would goe no further, but there remaine, unleſſe ſhe had her huſband with her, the Biſhop fearing belike the rumour which might come upon his houſe thereby, bade the ſaid Willes make a croſſe, and ſay, In nomine Patris, & Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, Amen.

John Willes ſent home with his wife.

Then the ſaid Willes beganne to ſay, In the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt. Amen. No, no, ſaith Boner, ſay it me in Latine, In nomine Patris, & Filii, & Spiritus ſancti, Amen. Willes underſtanding the matter of that Latine to be but good, ſaid the ſame, and ſo went home with his wife, his foreſaid kinſman being charged to bring him the next day unto Pauls: elſe, ſaid Boner, if thou doeſt not bring him, thou art an heretike as well as he. Notwithſtanding, the charge being no greater, his kinſman did not bring him, but hée of his owne voluntary accord came to the ſaid Biſhop within a few dayes after, where the Biſhop put unto him a certaine writing in Latine to ſubſcribe unto, containing as it ſéemed to him no great matter, that he néeded greatly to ſtick at, albeit, what the bill was, he could not certainely tell: ſo ſubſcribed he to the bill, and returned home. And thus much concerning the 22. taken at Iſlington.

July 10. The ſtory and martyrdome of Rich. Yeoman Miniſter.

After the ſtory of theſe 22. taken at Iſlington, procéeding now (the Lord willing) wée will proſecute likewiſe the taking and cruell handling of Richard Yeoman Miniſt. Which Yeoman had béene before Doctor Taylors Curate, a godly devout old man of 70. yéeres, which had many yeares dwelt in Hadley, well ſéene in the Scriptures, and giving godly exhortations to the people. With him D. Taylor left his cure at his departure. But as ſoone as M. Newall had gotten the Benefice, he drave away good Yeoman as is before ſayd, and ſet in a Popiſh Curate to maintaine and continue their Romiſh religion which now they thought fully ſtabliſhed. Then wandred hée long time from place to place, moving and exhorting all men to ſtand faithfully to Gods word, earneſtly to give themſelves unto prayer, with patience to beare the croſſe now laid upon them for their tryall, with boldneſſe to confeſſe the truth before the adverſaries, and with an undoubted hope to wait for the crowne and reward of eternall felicity. But when he perceived his adverſaries to lie in wait for him, hée went into Kent, and with a little packet of laces, pinnes, and points, and ſuch like things, he travelled from village to village, ſelling ſuch things, and by that poore ſhift gate himſelfe ſomewhat to the ſuſtaining of himſelfe, his poore wife and children.

Rich. Yeoman flieth into Kent.

Rich. Yeoman ſet in the ſtocks by M. Moile of Kent. Rich. Yeoman returneth againe to Hadley.

At the laſt a Juſtice of Kent, called Maſter Moyle, tooke poore Yeoman and ſet him in the ſtockes a day and a night, but having no evident matter to charge him with, he let him goe againe. So came he ſecretly againe to Hadley, and tarried with his poore wife, who kept him ſecretly in a chamber of the towne houſe, commonly called the Guildhall, more than a yeare. All the which time, the good old father abode in a chamber locked up all the day, and ſpent his time in devout prayer, and reading the Scriptures, and in carding of wooll which his wife did ſpin. His wife alſo did goe and beg bread and meat for her ſelfe and her children, and by ſuch poore meanes ſuſtained they themſelves. Thus the Saints of God ſuſtained hunger and miſery, while the Prophets of Baal lived in jollity, and were coſtly pampered at Jeſabels table.

Parſon Newall a wicked perſecutor. Yeoman taken by Parſon Newall.

At the laſt, Parſon Newall (I know not by what meanes) perceived that Richard Yeoman was ſo kept by his poore wife, and, taking with him the Bailiffes deputies and ſervants, came in the night time and brake up five doores upon Yeoman, whom hée found in a bed with his poore wife and children. Whom when he had ſo found, he irefully cried, ſaying, I thought I ſhould finde an harlot and an whore together. And he would have plucked the clothes off from them. But Yeoman held faſt the clothes, and ſayd unto his wife, Wife, ariſe, and put on thy clothes. And unto the Parſon he ſaid, Nay Parſon, no harlot, nor whore, but a married man and his wife, according unto Gods ordinance, and bleſſed be God for lawfull matrimony. I thanke God for this great grace, and I defie the Pope and all his Popery. Then led they Richard Yeoman unto the cage, and ſet him in the ſtocks untill it was day.

The words of J. Dale to parſon Newall and his Curate.

There was then alſo in the cage an old man named John Dale, who had ſitten there 3. or 4. dayes, becauſe when the ſaid Parſon Newall with his Curate executed the Romiſh ſervice in the Church, he ſpake openly unto him, and ſayd, O miſerable and blinde guides, will ye ever bée blinde leaders of the blinde? will ye never amend? will ye never ſée the truth of Gods word? will neither Gods threats nor promiſes enter into your hearts? will the blood of Martyrs nothing mollifie your ſtony ſtomacks? O indurate hard hearted, perverſe, and crooked generation. O damnable ſort, whom nothing can do good unto.

John Dale ſet in the cage by parſon Newall.

Theſe and like words he ſpake in ferventneſſe of ſpirit againſt the ſuperſtitious religion of Rome. Wherefore parſon Newall cauſed him forthwith to be attached, and ſet in the ſtockes in the cage. So was he there kept till ſir Hen. Doile, a Juſtice, came to Hadley.

Sir Henry Doile intreated for Gods ſaints, but could not be heard.

Now when poore Yeoman was taken, the Parſon called earneſtly upon ſir Henry Doile to ſend them both to priſon. Sir Henry Doile earneſtly laboured and entreated the Parſon, to conſider the age of the men, and their poore eſtate; they were perſons of no reputation nor preachers: wherefore he would deſire him to let them bée puniſhed a day or two, and ſo to let them goe, at the leaſt John Dale who was no Prieſt: and therefore ſéeing hée had ſo long ſitten in the cage, hée thought it puniſhment enough for this time, When the Parſon heard this, he was exceeding mad, and in a great rage called them peſtilent heretikes, unfit to live in the Common wealth of Chriſtians. Wherefore I beſeech you ſir, quoth he, according to your office, defend holy Church, and help to ſuppreſſe theſe ſects of hereſies, &c. which are falſe to God, and thus boldly ſet themſelves, to the evill example of other, againſt the Queens gracious proceedings. Sir Henry Doile ſeeing he could doe no good in the matter, and fearing alſo his perill if hee ſhould too much meddle in this matter, made out the writ, and cauſed the Conſtables to carry them forth to Bury Gaole. For now were all the Iuſtices, were they never ſo mighty, affraid of every ſhaven crowne, and ſtood in as much awe of them, as Pilate did ſtand in feare of Annas and Caiphas, and of the Phariſaicall Broode, which cried, Crucifie him, crucifie him. If thou let him goe, thou art not Cæſars friend.

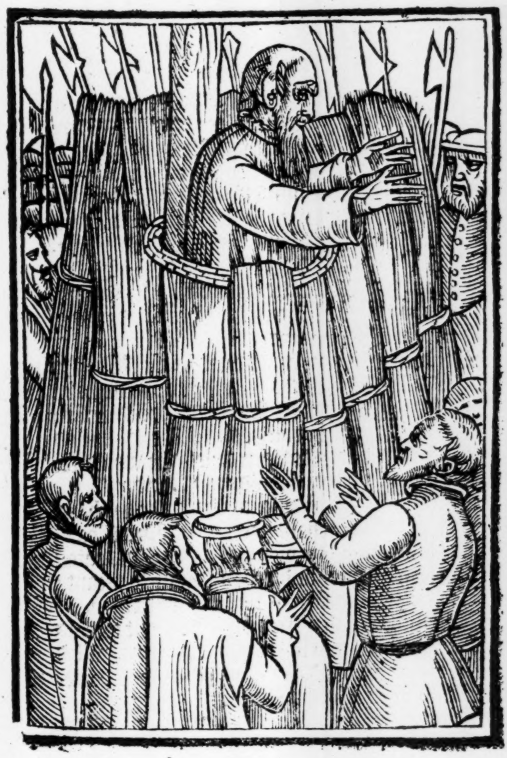
The kingdom of Locuſts.

Wherefore whatſoever their conſciences were, yet (if they would eſcape danger) they muſt needs bee the Popiſh Biſhops ſlaves and vaſſals. So they tooke Richard Yeoman and Iohn Dale, pinioned, and bound them like theeves, ſet them on horſe backe, and bound their legges under the horſes bellies, and ſo carried them to the Gaole at Bury, where they were tyed in irons; and for that they continually rebuked Popery, they were thrown into the loweſt dungeon, where Io. Dale through ſickneſſe of the priſon, and evill keeping, dyed in priſon, whoſe body, when hee was dead, was throwne out and buried in the fields. Hee was a man of 46. yeares of age, a Weaver by his occupation, well learned in the holy Scriptures, faithfull and honeſt in all his converſation, ſtedfaſt in confeſſion of the true doctrin of Chriſt ſet forth in King Edwards time; for the which he ioyfully ſuffered priſon and chaines, and from this worldly dungeon he departed in Chriſt to eternall glory, and the bleſſed Paradiſe of everlaſting felicity.

Yeoman and Iohn Dale ſent to Bury gaole.

Commendation of Io. Dale

The burning of Richard Yeoman Miniſter at Norwich 1558. Iuly 10.



Anno 1558.

After that Iohn Dale was dead, Richard Yeoman was removed to Norwich priſon, where after ſtrait and evill keeping, he was examined of his faith and religion. Then hee boldly and conſtantly confeſſed himſelfe to bee of the faith and confeſſion that was ſet forth by the late King of bleſſed memory, holy King Edward the ſixth, and from that hee would in no wiſe vary. Being required to ſubmit himſelfe to the holy father the Pope: I defie him (quoth he) and all his deteſtable abominations: I will in no wiſe have to doe with him, nor any thing that appertaineth to him. The chiefe articles objected to him, were his marriage, and the Maſſe ſacrifice. Wherefore when he continued ſtedfaſt in confeſſion of the truth, he was condemned, degraded, and not only burnt, but moſt cruelly tormented in the fire. So ended he his poore and miſerable life, and entred into the bleſſed boſome of Abraham, enjoying with Lazarus the comfortable quietneſſe that God hath prepared for his elect Saints.

Yeoman removed to Norwich.

The chiefe matters objected to Rich. Yeoman.

The ſtory of Iohn Alcocke.

THere was alſo in Hadley a young man, named Iohn Alcock, which came to Hadley ſeeking worke, for hee was a Shereman by his occupation. This young man after the martyrdome of Doctor Taylor, and taking of Richard Yeoman, uſed firſt in the Church of Hadley to reade the Service in Engliſh, as partly is above touched. At length, after the comming of Parſon Newall, he being in Hadley Church upon a ſunday when the Parſon came by with proceſſion, would not once move his cap, nor ſhew any ſigne of reverence, but ſtood behinde the Font. Parſon Newall perceiving this, when he was almoſt out of the Church doore, ran back againe, and caught him, and called for the Conſtable.

The ſtory of Iohn Alcock.

Parſon Newall in a rage againſt Iohn Alcock for not going on proceſſion.

Then came Rob. Rolfe, with whom this yong man wrought, and aſked M. Parſon what hath he done, that ye are in ſuch a rage with him?

He is an heretike and a traitor (quoth the Parſon) and deſpiſeth the Queens proceedings. Wherefore I command you in the Queenes name, have him to the ſtockes, and ſee hee be forth comming.

Well, quoth Rolfe, he ſhall be forth comming, proceed you in your buſineſſe, and be quiet. Have him to the ſtocks, quoth the Parſon.

I am Conſtable, quoth Rolfe, and may baile him, and will baile him; hee ſhall not come in the ſtockes, but he ſhall be forth comming. So went the good Parſon forth with his holy proceſſion, and ſo to Maſſe.

Rob. Rolfe an honeſt Conſtable of Hadley.

At afternoone Rolfe ſaid to this young man, I am ſorry for thee, for truely the Parſon will ſeeke thy deſtruction, if thou take not good heed what thou anſwereſt him.

The young man anſwered, Sir, I am ſorry that it is my hap to be a trouble to you. As for my ſelfe, I am not ſorry, but I doe commit my ſelfe into Gods hands, and I truſt he will give me mouth and wiſedome to anſwer according to right.

Well, quoth Rolfe, yet beware of him. For he is malitious and a bloud-ſucker, and beareth an old hatred againſt mee, and hee will handle you the more cruelly, becauſe of diſpleaſure againſt me.

I feare not, quoth the young man. Hee ſhall doe no more to me, than God will give him leave; and happy ſhall I be if God will call me to die for his truths ſake.

After this talke, they then went to the Parſon, who at the firſt asked him, Fellow, what ſaiſt thou to the ſacrament of the Altar?

Alcocke brought to Parſon Newall.

I ſay, quoth he, as ye uſe the matter, ye make a ſhamefull idol of it, and ye are falſe idolatrous Prieſts all the ſort of you.

I told you (quoth the Parſon) he was a ſtout heretike.

Parſon Newall carrieth up J. Alcock to London.

So after long talke, the Parſon committed him to Ward, and the next day rode he up to London, and carried the young man with him, and ſo came the young man no more againe to Hadley, but after long impriſonment in Newgate, where after many examinations and troubles, for that he would not ſubmit himſelfe to aſke forgiveneſſe of the Pope, and to be reconciled to the Romiſh religion, hee was caſt into the lower dungeon, wherewith evill kéeping and ſickneſſe of the houſe, hée dyed in priſon. Thus died hée a Martyr for Chriſts verity, which hée heartily loved and conſtantly confeſſed, and received the garland of a well foughten battell at the hand of the Lord. His body was caſt out, and buried in a dunghill, For the Papiſts would in all things bée like themſelves: Therefore would they not ſo much as ſuffer the dead bodies to have honeſt and convenient ſepulture.

Jo. Alcock died in Newgate.

Jo. Alcock buried of the papiſts in a dunghill.

Thomas Benbridge Gentleman and Martyr, wrongfully condemned and put to death by the cruell Papiſts, for the defence of the Goſpel of Chriſt Ieſus.

July 29. The ſtory of Th. Benbridg Martyr.

THomas Benbridge a Gentleman, ſingle and unmarried, in the Dioceſſe of Wincheſter, although hée might have lived a pleaſant and a Gentlemans life in the wealthy poſſeſſions of this world; yet to follow Chriſt, had rather enter into the ſtrait gate of perſecution, to the heavenly poſſeſſion of life in the Lords Kingdome, than here to injoy pleaſures preſent with unquietneſſe of conſcience. Wherefore, manfully ſtanding againſt the Papiſts for the defence of the ſincere doctrine of Chriſts Goſpel, hée ſpared not himſelfe to confirme the doctrine of the Goſpel. For the which cauſe hée being apprehended for an adverſary of the Romiſh religion, was forthwith had to examination before Doctor White Biſhop of Wincheſter, where he ſuſtained ſundry conflicts for the truth againſt the ſaid B. and his Collegues. The articles of the Biſhop miniſtred to him, with his anſwers to the ſame annexed, bée here following.

Th. Benbridg examined before the B. of Wincheſter.

Articles miniſtred to M. Benbridge, with his anſwers following the ſame.

Articles oppoſed againſt Th. Benbridg

FIrſt, we articulate againſt you, that the church of God miniſtreth rightly, according to the rite Apoſtolicall.

Anſwer.

To this he anſwered, That Baptiſme is not adminiſtred at this preſent, ſo as it was in the Apoſtles time, for that it is not miniſtred in the Engliſh tongue.

The reall preſence.

2 Item, we articulate, that the Church of God doth beléeve, and hold, that in the ſacrament of thankeſgiving, after the words of conſecration pronounced of the Prieſt, the true and naturall body of Chriſt is preſent really.

Anſwer.

Hée anſwered, that hée beléeveth not that in the ſacrament is contained the body and blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, ſaying; this is the marke that ye ſhoot at.

Confirmation

3 Item, we articulate, that the Church holdeth and beléeveth, that confirmation is a ſacrament in the Church, and that by impoſition of hands of a Biſhop, commeth grace.

Anſwer.

He anſwered, that he knoweth not whether that confirmation be a ſacrament or not, and whether the Biſhop giveth grace or not; hée knoweth not the order and faſhion of miniſtration.

4 Item, wée articulate, that penance is a ſacrament in the Church, and that by auricular confeſſion and abſolution, pronounced by the prieſt, ſins be forgiven.

Anſwer. Penance no ſacrament.

He anſwered negatively, denying ſinnes to be forgiven by abſolution pronounced of a Prieſt, and that it is not neceſſary for a man to recite all his ſins to a Prieſt.

5 Item, we articulate againſt thee, that the Church doth beléeve and hold the ſame authority to be now in the Church which Chriſt gave to his Apoſtles.

Anſwer.

Hée anſwered negatively, for that the Church hath not the ſame power and ſtrength to work.

6 Item, we articulate, that the Church beléeveth and holdeth, that the order of Miniſters, now being in the Church of Chriſt, is inſtituted of Chriſt himſelfe.

Anſwer.

He anſwered, hée beléeved not the Biſhops to bée the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles, for that they bée not called as they were, nor have that grace.

Head of the Church.

7 Item, wée articulate, that the Church beléeveth and holdeth, the Pope to bée ſupreme head in the Church, and the Vicar of Chriſt in earth.

Anſwer.

He anſwered, that it is not the Pope, but it is the Divell that is ſupreme head of the Church which you ſpeake of.

8 Item, we articulate, that the Church doth hold and beléeve that it is neceſſary to be baptized.

Anſwer.

He denyed not the ſame.

Purgatory.

9 Item, we articulate, that the Church doth hold and beléeve, that there is Purgatory, and that the ſoules of the dead be relieved with the almes and prayers of the living.

Anſwer.

He anſwered and ſaith, as touching Purgatory, he will not beléeve as their Church doth beléeve.

10 Item, we articulate, that the Church holdeth and beléeveth, that Matrimony is a ſacrament of the Church.

Anſwer. Matrimony no ſacrament.

He anſwered, that hée will not ſay that Matrimony is a ſacrament, but to be a ſacred order and ſigne of an holy thing, &c.

Martin Luther.

Moreover hapning into the mention of Martin Luther, he ſaid, that the ſaid Martin Luther died a good Chriſtian man, whoſe doctrine and life he did approve and allow.

Th. Benbridg condemned.

Th. Benbridg brought to the ſtake.

Thus have ye the Articles miniſtred by the B. and alſo the Anſwers of the ſaid M. Benbridge unto the ſame, for the which he was then condemned, and after brought to the place of Martyrdome by the ſheriffe, called ſir Richard Peckſall. Where he ſtanding at the ſtake, beganne to untie his points, and to prepare himſelfe; then he gave his gown to the Keeper, being belike his fee. His Jerkin was layd on with gold lace faire and brave, which he gave to Sir Rich. Peckſall the high ſheriffe. His cap of Velvet he tooke off from his head, and threw it away. Then lifting his minde to the Lord, he made his prayers.

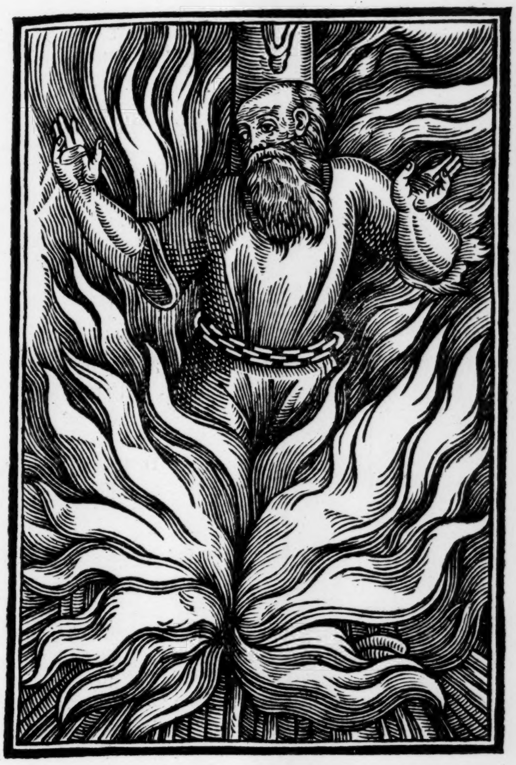
D. Seaton forbideth to pray for him.

That done, being now faſtened to the ſtake, D. Seaton willed him to recant, and hee ſhould have his pardon: but when he ſaw it prevailed not to ſpeak, the ſaid dreaming and doltiſh Doctor willed the people not to pray for him unleſſe he would recant, no more than they would pray for a dog.

M. Benbridge ſtanding at the ſtake with his hands together in ſuch maner as the Prieſt holdeth his hands in his memento, the ſaid D. Seaton came to him againe, and exhorted him to recant: unto whom he ſayd, Away Babylonian, away.

Then ſaid one that ſtood by, Sir, cut out his tongue, and another being a temporall man, railed on him worſe than D. Seaton did a great deale, who (as is thought) was ſet on by ſome other.

The martyrdome of Thomas Benbridge, Anno 1558. Iuly 19.



Then when they ſaw he would not yeeld, they bade the tormentors to ſet to fire, and yet he was nothing like covered with fagots. Firſt, the fire tooke away a peece of his beard; whereat hee nothing ſhranke at all. Then it came on the other ſide and tooke his legs, and the nether ſtockings of his hoſe being leather, made the fire to pierce the ſharper, ſo that the intolerable heat thereof made him to cry, I recant: and ſuddenly therewith he thruſt the fire from him. And having two or three of his friends by, that wiſhed his life, they ſtept to the fire, and holpe to talke it from him alſo; who for their labour were ſent to priſon. The Sheriffe alſo of his owne authority took him from the ſtake, and ſent him to priſon againe, for the which he was ſent unto the Fleet, and there lay a certaine time. But before he was taken from the ſtake, the ſaid Seaton wrote Articles to have him to ſubſcribe unto them as touching the Pope, the Sacrament, and ſuch other traſh. But the ſaid M. Benbridge made much adoe ere hee would ſubſcribe them, inſomuch that Doctor Seaton willed them to ſet to fire againe. Then with much paine and great griefe of heart hee ſubſcribed to them upon a mans backe. That being done, he had his gowne given him againe, and ſo was led to priſon. Being in priſon he wrote a letter to Doctor Seaton, and recanted thoſe words he ſpake at the ſtake, unto which he had ſubſcribed: for he was grieved that ever he did ſubſcribe unto them. Whereupon expreſſing his conſcience, he was the ſame day ſeven night after burnt indeed, where the vile tormentors did rather broile him than burne him. The Lord give his enemies repentance.

Maſter Benbridge recanted at the ſtake.

Sir Richard Peckſal.

M. Benbridge repenteth his recantation.

The unjuſt execution and martyrdome of foure burned at S. Edmunds Bury.

The ſtory of 4. Martyrs in Suffolke.

IN this yeare aforeſaid, which was the laſt of Q. Maries reigne, D. Hopton being Biſhop of Norwich, and D. Spenſer bearing the roome of his Chancellor, about S. Iames tide, at S. Edmunds Bury, were wrongfully put to death foure Chriſtian Martyrs, to wit:

Anno 1558.

Iohn Cooke, a Sawyer.
Robert Miles, alias Plummer, a Sheerman.
Alexander Lane, a Wheeleright.
Iames Aſhley, Bachelor.

Martyrs.

The examination of theſe forenamed perſons, being ſeverally called before the Biſhop of Norwich, and Sir Edward Walgrave, with others, was partly upon theſe articles following.

Sir Edward Walgrave, perſecutor.

Firſt, Sir Edward Walgrave called Iohn Cooke to him and ſaid, How fortuneth it, that you goe not to Church?

Examination of Iohn Cook.

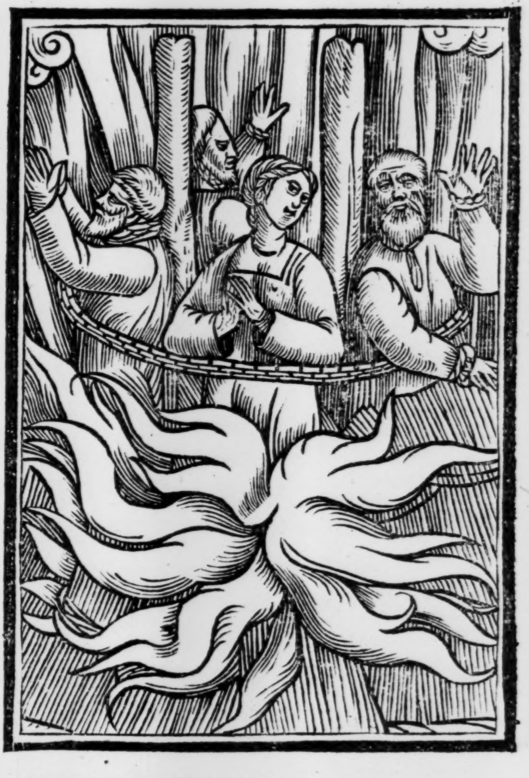
Iohn Cooke ſaid, I have been there.

Sir Edward ſaid, What is the cauſe that you goe not thither now in theſe daies?

Iohn Cooke ſaid, Becauſe the ſacrament of the altar is an abominable idoll, and (ſaith he) the vengeance of God will come upon all them that doe maintaine it.

Sir Edward ſaid, O thou ranke traytor, if I had as good commiſſion to cut out thy tongue, as I have to ſit here this day, thou ſhouldeſt be ſure to have it cut out. Then commanded he the Conſtable to have him away, ſaying, he was both a traitor and a rebell.

Foure burned at S. Edmunds Bury.



Then he called Robert Miles, and ſaid, how fortuneth it, that you go not to the Church?

Examination of Robert Miles.

Robert Miles anſwered, Becauſe I will follow no falſe gods.

Then ſaid the B. who told thee that it is a god?

Then ſaid Miles, Even you, and ſuch as you are.

Then the Biſhop commanded him aſide, and to appeare before him the next day.

Then he called Alexander Lane before him, and asked him, how it chanced, that he would not goe to the Church?

Examination of Alexander Lane.

He ſaid, That his conſcience would not ſerve him ſo to doe.

Anno 1558.

Then Sir Edward ſayd, How doeſt thou beléeve?

Then ſaid Lane, even as it is written in Gods booke.

Then Sir Edward commanded him to ſay his beliefe.

Then the ſaid Lane being ſomewhat abaſhed, ſayd his beliefe, to theſe words, which he miſſed unawares, Borne of the virgin Mary.

Then Sir Edward ſayd, What? was he not borne of the Virgin Mary?

Yes ſaid Lane, I would have ſayd ſo.

Nay, ſaid ſir Edward, you are one of Cookes ſchollers, and ſo commanded him away, and to come before him the next day.

Examination of Ja. Aſhley.

After the like manner they paſſed alſo with James Aſhley, whom they warned the next day likewiſe to appeare before them againe. So in fine they appearing againe, had their condemnation. And thus theſe foure bleſſed Martyrs and ſervants of Chriſt, innocently ſuffered together at S. Edmundſbury, as is aforeſaid, about the beginning of Auguſt, not long before the ſickneſſe of Quéene Mary.

The Martyrdome of two godly perſons ſuffering at Ipſwich for the Goſpel of Chriſt, and his everlaſting Teſtament, named Alexander Gouch, and Alice Driver.

Novemb. 4. M. Noone a perſecutor.

Maſter Noone, a Juſtice in Suffolke, dwelling in Martleſham, hunting after good men to apprehend them (as hée was a bloody tyrant in the dayes of tryall) at the length had underſtanding of one Gouch of Woodbridge, and Drivers wife of Groſborough, to be at Groſborough together, a little from his houſe, and immediately tooke his men with him, and went thither, and made diligent ſearch for them, where the poore man and woman were compelled to ſtep into an hay golph to hide themſelves from their cruelty. At the laſt they came to ſearch the hay for them, and by gaging thereof with pitchforkes, at the laſt found them: ſo they tooke them and led them to Melton Gaole, where they remaining a time, at the length were carried to Bury, againſt the Aſſiſe at Saint James tide, and being there examined of matters of faith, did boldly ſtand to confeſſe Chriſt crucified, defying the Pope with all his Papiſticall traſh. And among other things Drivers wife likened Quéene Mary in her perſecution, to Jezabel; and ſo in that ſenſe calling her Jezabel, for that ſir Clement Higham, being chiefe Judge there, adjudged her eares immediately to bée cut off, which was accompliſhed accordingly, and ſhée joyfully yéelded her ſelfe to the puniſhment, and thought her ſelfe happy that ſhée was counted worthy to ſuffer any thing for the Name of Chriſt.

Gouch and Alice Driver taken at Groſborough and carried to Melton gaole Queen Mary called Jezabel Alice Drivers eares cut off, for likening Queen Mary to Jezabel.

Alex. Gouch.

After the Aſſiſe at Bury, they were carried to Melton Gaole againe, where they remained a time. This Alexander Gouch was a man of the age of 36. yeares, or thereabouts, and by his occupation was a Weaver of ſhredding Coverlets, dwelling at Woodbridge in Suffolke, and borne at Uxford in the ſame County. Drivers wife was a woman about the age of 30. yeares, and dwelt at Groſborough where they were taken, in Suffolke. Her huſband did uſe huſbandry. Theſe two were caried from Melton Goale to Ipſwich, where they remained and were examined. The which their examination, as it came to our hands, hereafter followeth.

Gouch and Alice Driver carried to Ipſwich.

The examination of Drivers wife, before Doctor Spenſer the Chancellor of Norwich.

D. Spenſer after the death of D. Dunning who dyed ſuddenly in Lincolnſhire, was Chancellor under B. Hopton.

First, ſhee comming into the place where ſhee ſhould bee examined, with a ſmiling countenance, Doctor Spenſer ſayd, Why woman, doſt thou laugh us to ſcorne?

Drivers wife. Whether I do or no, I might well enough, to ſee what fooles ye be.

Doct. Spenſer. Then the Chancellor asked her wherefore ſhe was brought before him, and why ſhe was laid in priſon.

Dri. Wherefore? I think I need not tell you: for ye know it better than I.

Spenſ. No by my troth woman I know not why.

Dri. Then have ye done me much wrong (quoth ſhe) thus to impriſon me, and know no cauſe why: for I know no evill that I have done, I thanke God, and I hope there is no man that can accuſe me of any notorious fact that I have done juſtly.

Sacrament of the altar.

Spenſ. Woman, woman, what ſayſt thou to the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar? Doſt thou not beleeve that it is very fleſh and bloud, after the words be ſpoken of conſecration?

Drivers wife at thoſe words held her peace, and made no anſwer. Then a great chuffe-headed Prieſt that ſtood by, ſpake, and asked her why ſhe made not the Chancellor anſwer. With that, the ſaid Drivers wife looked upon him auſterely, and ſaid, Why Prieſt, I come not to talke with thee, but I come to talke with thy Maſter: but if thou wilt I ſhall talke with thee, command thy Maſter to hold his peace. And with that the prieſt put his noſe in his cap, and ſpake never a word more. Then the Chancellor bade her make anſwer to that he demanded of her.

A fat prieſt put to ſilence.

Dri. Sir (ſayd ſhe) pardon me though I make no anſwer, for I cannot tell what you mean thereby: for in all my life I never heard nor read of any ſuch ſacrament in all the Scripture.

Spenſ. Why, what Scriptures have you read, I pray you?

Dri. I have (I thanke God) read Gods book.

Spenſ. Why, what maner of book is that you call Gods book?

Dri. It is the old and new Teſtament. What call you it?

Spenſ. That is Gods book indeed, I cannot deny.

No ſacrament of the altar to be found in Gods book.

Dri. That ſame booke have I read thorowout, but yet never could finde any ſuch ſacrament there: and for that cauſe I cannot make you anſwer to that thing I know not. Notwithſtanding, for all that, I will grant you a ſacrament, called the Lords Supper: and therefore ſeeing I have granted you a Sacrament, I pray you ſhew me what a ſacrament is.

D. Gaſcoine perſecutor. What a ſacrament is.

Spenſ. It is a ſigne. And one D. Gaſcoine being by, confirmed the ſame, that it was the ſigne of an holy thing.

D. Gaſcoines Oration little to purpoſe.

Dri. You have ſaid the truth ſir, ſaid ſhe. It is a ſigne indéed, I muſt needs grant it: and therfore ſeeing it is a ſigne, it cannot be the thing ſignified alſo. Thus farre we doe agree: for I have granted your owne ſaying. Then ſtood up the ſaid Gaſcoine, and made an Oration with many faire words, but little to purpoſe, both offenſive and odious to the mindes of the godly. In the end of which long tale, he asked her if ſhe did not beleeve the omnipotency of God, and that he was almighty, and able to performe that he ſpake. Shee anſwered, Yes, and ſayd, I doe beleeve that God is almighty, and able to performe that hee ſpake and promiſed.

Talk betwéen Alice Driver and D. Gaſcoine.

Gaſc. Very well. Then he ſaid to his Diſciples, Take, eate, this is my body: Ergo, it was his body. For he was able to performe that he ſpake, and God uſeth not to lie.

Dri. I pray you did he ever make any ſuch promiſe to his diſciples, that he would make the bread his body?

Gaſc. Thoſe be the words. Can you deny it?

Dri. No, they be the very words indeed, I cannot deny it, but I pray you, was it not bread that he gave unto them?

Gaſc. No, it was his body.

Dri. Then was it his body that they did eate over night?

Gaſc. Yea, it was his body.

Dri. What body was it then that was crucified the next day?

Gaſc. It was Chriſts body.

Dri. How could that be, when his Diſciples had eaten him over night? except he had two bodies, as by your argument he had; one they did eate over night, and another was crucified the next day. Such a Doctor, ſuch doctrine. Be you not aſhamed to teach the people, that Chriſt had two bodies? In the 22. of Luke, He tooke bread and brake it, and gave it to his Diſciples, ſaying; Take, &c. and doe this in remembrance of me. Saint Paul ſaith, 1 Cor. 11. Doe this in remembrance of me: for as often as ye ſhall eate this bread, and drinke this cup, ye ſhall ſhew the Lords death till he come: and therefore I marvell you bluſh not before all this people, to lie ſo manifeſtly as ye doe. With that Gaſcoine held his peace, and made her no anſwer: for, as it ſeemed, he was aſhamed of his doings. Then the Chancellor lift up his head off from his cuſhion, and commanded the Gaoler to take her away.

If Chriſt had but one body, and that body was eaten up over night, what body then was crucified the next day?
Luke 22.
1 Cor. 11.

Gaſcoines mouth ſtopped

Dri. Now (ſaid ſhe) ye be not able to reſiſt the truth, yee command me to priſon againe. Well, the Lord in the end ſhall judge our cauſe, and to him I leave it. I wiſſe, I wiſſe, this geare will goe for no paiment then: So went ſhe with the Gaoler away.

The Chancellor when he could not anſwer her with reaſon, ſendeth her to priſon.

The ſecond examination of Alice Driver.

THe next day ſhe came before them again, and the Chancellor then aſked her, what ſhe ſaid to the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar.

Another examination of Alice Driver before Doctor Spenſer and Gaſcoine. Spenſer up with his Sacrament of the altar againe.

Dri. I will ſay nothing to it: for you will neither beleeve me nor your ſelves. For yeſterday I aſked you what a ſacrament was, and you ſaid, it was a ſigne, and I agreed thereto, and ſaid, it was the truth, confirming it by the Scriptures, ſo that I went not from your own words; and now yee come and aſke me againe of ſuch a ſacrament as I told you I never read of in the Scriptures.

Spenſ. Thou lyeſt naughty woman, we did not ſay that it was a ſigne.

Dri. Why Maſters, be ye not the men that you were yeſterday? Will ye eate your owne words? Are ye not aſhamed to lie before all this multitude here preſent, who heard you ſpeake the ſame?

Then ſtood up D. Gaſcoine, and ſaid, ſhe was deceived: for there were three Churches, the malignant Church, the Church militant, and the Church triumphant. So he would faine have made matter, but he could not tell which way.

Gaſcoine againe taketh the matter in hand.
3. Churches.

Dri. Sir, is there mention made of ſo many Churches in the Scripture?

Gaſc. Yea.

Dri. I pray you where finde you this word (Church) written in the Scripture?

Gaſc. It is written in the new Teſtament.

Dri. I pray you ſir ſhew the place where it is written.

Gaſc. I cannot tell the place, but there it is. With that ſhe deſired him to looke in his Teſtament. Then he fumbled and ſought about him for one: but at that time he had none, and that hee knew well enough, though he ſeemed to ſearch for it. At the laſt ſhe ſaid, Have ye none here ſir?

Gaſc. No.

Dri. I thought ſo much indeed, that ye were little acquainted withall. Surely, you be a good Doctor. You ſay you ſit here to judge according to the law, and how can you give judgement, and have not the book of the law with you? At which words Gaſcoine was out of countenance, and aſked her if ſhe had one.

Gaſcoine little acquainted with the new Teſtament.

Dri. No, ſaid ſhe.

Gaſc. Then ſaid hee, I am as good a Doctor as you.

Dri. Well ſir, I had one, but you took it from me (as you would take me from Chriſt, if you could) and ſince would ye not ſuffer me to have any book at all; ſo burning is your charity. But you may well know (I thanke God) that I have exerciſed the ſame; elſe could I not have anſwered you (to Gods glory be it ſpoken) as I have. Thus ſhe put them all to ſilence, that one looked on another, and had not a word to ſpeake.

The Papiſts put to ſilence by a ſimple woman.

Dri. Have you no more to ſay? God be honoured. You be not able to reſiſt the ſpirit of God in me poore woman. I was an honeſt poore mans daughter, never brought up in the Univerſity as you have been, but I have driven the plough before my father many a time (I thank God:) yet notwithſtanding in the defence of Gods truth, and in the cauſe of my Maſter Chriſt, by his grace I will ſet my foot againſt the foot of any of you all, in the maintenance and defence of the ſame, and if I had a thouſand lives, they ſhould goe for paiment thereof. So the Chancellor roſe up, and read the ſentence in Latine of condemnation, and committed her to the ſecular power, and ſo went ſhe to priſon againe as joyfull as the bird of day, praiſing and glorifying the name of God.

Alice Driver brought up at her fathers plough.

Spenſer readeth ſentence againſt Alice Driver.

Alexander Gouch, Martyr.

AT which time Alexander Gouch alſo was examined, who was taken with her, as before is ſaid, whoſe examination hereafter followeth.

This Alexander Gouch was examined chiefly of the Sacrament and other Ceremonies of the Popiſh Church. And for that his beleefe was, that Chriſt was aſcended into heaven, and there remaineth, and that the ſacrament was the remembrance of his death and paſſion, and for refuſing the Maſſe, and the Pope to be ſupreame head of Chriſts Church, for theſe cauſes was he condemned, and dyed with Alice Driver at Ipſwich, the 4. of November, which was the Munday after All Saints 1558. Doctor Miles Spenſer being Chancellor, they both ending their lives with earneſt zeale, nothing fearing to ſpeak their conſcience when they were commanded to the contrary.

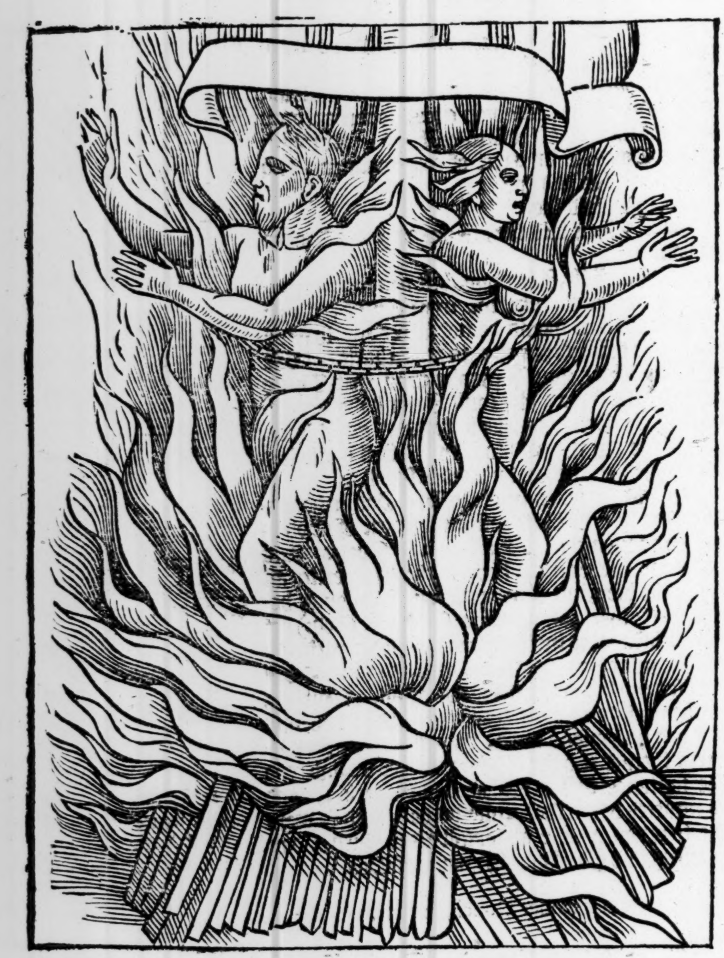
The articles whereupon Gouch was condemned. The martyrdome of Gouch and Alice Driver at Ipſwich. Anno 1558. Novemb 4.

Theſe two godly perſons being come to the place where the ſtake was ſet, by ſeven of the clocke in the morning, notwithſtanding they came the ſelf-ſame morning from Melton gaole, which is ſixe miles from Ipſwich, being in their prayers, and ſinging of Pſalmes both of them together, Sir Henry Dowell, then being Sherife, was very much offended with them, and willed the Bailiffes of Ipſwich to bid them make an end of their prayers, they kneeling upon a broom fagot, one of the Bailiffes, whoſe name was Richard Smart, commanded them to make an end, ſaying, On, on, have done, have done; make an end, naile them to the ſtake; yet they continued in prayer.

Gouch and Alice Driver brought to the ſtake.

Anno 1558.

The Martyrdome of Alexander Gouch, and Drivers wife.



Then ſir Henry ſent one of his men, whoſe name was Richard Cove, that they ſhould make an end.

Then Gouch ſtood up and ſaid unto the Sheriffe, I pray you M. Sheriffe, let us pray a little while, for we have but a little time to live here.

Then ſaid the Bailiffe, Come off, have them to the fire.

Then the ſaid Gouch and Alice Driver ſaid, Why Maſter ſheriffe, and Maſter bailiffe, will you not ſuffer us to pray?

The Martyrs not ſuffered to pray.

Away, ſaid Sir Henry, to the ſtake with them.

Gouch anſwered, Take heed Maſter Sherife. If you forbid prayer, the vengeance of God hangeth over your heads. Then they being tyed to the ſtake, and the iron chaine being put about Alice Drivers neck, O (ſaid ſhe) here is a goodly neckerchiefe, bleſſed be God for it.

Then divers came and took them by the hands as they were bound ſtanding at the ſtake. The Sheriffe cryed, Lay hands on them, lay hands on them. With that a great number ran to the ſtake. The Sheriffe ſeeing that, let them all alone, ſo that there was not one taken.

Bate a railing perſecutor.
Example of Gods judgement upon perſecutors.

There was one Bate a Barbor, a buſie doer about them, who having then a freeze gown upon him, ſold it immediately, ſaying, It ſtunk of heretikes, with other foule words moe. After this, within three or foure weekes, Gods hand was upon him, and ſo hee dyed very miſerably in Ipſwich.

The Martyrdome of three which were burned at Bury, for the true teſtimony of Ieſus Chriſt.

The Martyrdome of 3. good men at Bury.

ALthough our hiſtory haſteth apace (the Lord be praiſed) to the happy death of Queen Mary, yet ſhe dyed not ſo ſoone, but ſome there were burned before, and moe ſhould have been burned ſoone after them, if Gods proviſion had not prevented her with death. In the number of them which ſuffered in the ſame moneth when Queen Mary dyed, were three that were burned at Bury, whoſe names were theſe:

Philip Humfrey.
Iohn David.
Henry David, his brother.

Sir Clement Higham perſecutor.

Concerning the burning of theſe three, here is to be noted, that Sir Clement Higham, about a fortnight before the Queene dyed, did ſue out a writ for the burning of theſe three aforeſaid godly and bleſſed Martyrs, notwithſtanding that the Queene was then knowne to be paſt remedy of her ſickneſſe.

The trouble and Martyrdome of a godly poore woman which ſuffered at Exeter.

The ſtory of a poore woman burned at Exeter in Qu. Maries time.

ALthough in ſuch an innumerable company of godly Martyrs, which in ſundry quarters of this Realme were put to torments of fire in Queene Maries time, it bee hard ſo exactly to recite every particular perſon that ſuffered, but that ſome eſcape us either unknown, or omitted; yet I cannot paſſe over a certaine poore woman, and a ſilly creature, burned under the ſaid Queens reigne, in the City of Exeter (whoſe name I have not yet learned:) who dwelling ſometime about Cornwall, having a huſband and children there, much addicted to the ſuperſtitious ſect of Popery, was many times rebuked of them, and driven to goe to the Church, to their Idols and Ceremonies, to ſhrift, to follow the croſſe in proceſſion, to give thankes to God for reſtoring Antichriſt again in this Realme, &c. Which when her ſpirit could not abide to doe, ſhe made her prayer unto God, calling for helpe and mercy, and ſo at length lying in her bed, about midnight, ſhee thought there came to her a certaine motion and feeling of ſingular comfort. Whereupon in ſhort ſpace, ſhe began to grow in contempt of her huſband and children, and ſo taking nothing from them, but even as ſhe went, departed from them, ſeeking her living by labour and ſpinning as well as ſhe could, here and there for a time. In which time notwithſtanding ſhe never ceaſed to utter her minde as well as ſhe durſt; howbeit ſhe at that time was brought home to her huſband againe. Where at laſt ſhee was accuſed by her neighbors, and ſo brought up to Exeter, to be preſented to the Biſhop and his Clergy. The name of the Biſhop which had her in examination, was D. Troublevile. His Chancellor (as I gather) was Blackſtone. The chiefeſt matter whereupon ſhe was charged and condemned, was for the ſacrament (which they cal of the altar) and for ſpeaking againſt idols, as by the declaration of thoſe which were preſent, I underſtand, which report the talk betweene her and the Biſhop on this wiſe.

Her departing from her huſband and returning againe.

The poore woman ſent up to Exeter.
D. Troublevile B. of Exeter, and Blackſtone, perſecutors.

Talke betweene the woman and the Biſhop.

Biſhop. Thou fooliſh woman, quoth the biſhop, I heare ſay, that thou haſt ſpoken certain words againſt the moſt bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, the body of Chriſt. Fie for ſhame. Thou art an unlearned perſon and a woman; Wilt thou meddle with ſuch high matters, which all the Doctors of the world cannot define? Wilt thou talke of ſo high myſteries? Keep thy worke, and meddle with that thou haſt to doe. It is no womans matter, at cards and towe to be ſpoken of. And if it be as I am informed, thou art worthy to be burned.

Woman. My Lord, ſaid ſhe, I truſt your Lordſhip will heare me ſpeake.

Biſh. Yea marry, quoth he, therefore I ſent for thée.

Woman. I am a poore woman, and do live by my hands, getting a peny truly, and of that I get, I give part to the poore.

Biſh. That is well done. Art thou not a mans wife?

And here the Biſhop entered into talk of her husband.

The wife renouncing her husband for Chriſts ſake.

To whom ſhe anſwered againe, declaring that ſhe had a husband and children, and had them not. So long as ſhe was liberty, ſhe refuſed not neither husband nor children: But now ſtanding here as I doe, ſaid ſhe, in the cauſe of Chriſt and his truth, where I muſt either forſake Chriſt, or my husband, I am contented to ſtick only to Chriſt my heavenly Spouſe, and renounce the other.

And here ſhe making mention of the words of Chriſt, He that leaveth not Father or Mother, ſiſter or brother, husband, &c. The Biſhop inferred, that Chriſt ſpake that of the holy Martyrs, which dyed becauſe they would not do ſacrifice to the falſe gods.

Woman. Sikerly ſir, and I will rather die than I will doe any worſhip to that foule Idoll, which with your Maſſe you make a god.

Biſh. Yea, you callet, will you ſay that the ſacrament of the Altar is a foule Idoll?

The ſacrament of the altar made an Idoll.

Woman. Yea truly, quoth ſhe, there was never ſuch an Idoll as your ſacrament is made of your Prieſts, and commanded to be worſhipped of all men, with many fond phantaſies, where Chriſt did command it to be eaten and drunken in remembrance of his moſt bleſſed paſſion for our redemption.

Biſhop. Sée this pratling woman. Doeſt thou not heare, that Chriſt did ſay over the bread, This is my body, and over the cup, This is my blood?

Woman. Yes forſooth he ſaid ſo, but he meant that it is his body and blood, not carnally, but ſacramentally.

Biſh. Lo, ſhe hath heard pratling among theſe new Preachers, or heard ſome péeviſh book. Alas poore woman, thou art deceived.

Woman. No, my Lord, that I have learned was of godly Preachers, and of godly bookes which I have heard read. And if you will give me leave, I will declare a reaſon why I will not worſhip the ſacrament.

Biſhop. Marry ſay on, I am ſure it will bée goodly géere.

Woman. Truly ſuch géere as I will loſe this poore life of mine for.

Biſhop. Then you will be a Martyr good wife.

Woman. Indéed, if the denying to worſhip that bready God be my martyrdome, I will ſuffer it with all my heart.

Biſh. Say thy minde.

Woman. You muſt beare with me a poore woman, quoth ſhe.

Biſh. So I will, quoth he.

Reaſons ſhewing why the ſacrament of the Lords body is not to be worſhipped

Woman. I will demand of you, whether you can deny your Créed, which doth ſay, that Chriſt perpetually doth ſit at the right hand of his Father, both body and ſoule, untill he come againe, or whether he be there in heaven our Advocate, and doe make prayer for us unto God his Father. If it be ſo, he is not here in the earth in a péece of bread. If he be not here, and if he doe not dwell in temples made with hands, but in heaven, what, ſhall we ſéeke him here? if he did offer his body once for all, why make you a new offering? if with once offering he made all perfect, why doe you with a falſe offering make all unperfect? If he be to be worſhipped in ſpirit and truth, why do you worſhip a péece of bread? if he be eaten and drunken in faith and truth, if his fleſh be not profitable to be among us, why doe you ſay, you make his body and fleſh, and ſay it is profitable for body and ſoule? Alas, I am a poore woman; but rather then I would doe as you doe, I would live no longer. I have ſaid ſir.

Anno 1558.

Biſh. I promiſe you, you are a jolly Proteſtant. I pray you in what ſchooles have you béen brought up?

Woman. I have upon the Sundaies viſited the Sermons, and there have I learned ſuch things as are ſo fixed in my breaſt, that death ſhall not ſeparate them.

Biſh. O fooliſh woman, who will waſte his breath upon thée or ſuch as thou art? But how chanceth it that thou wenteſt away from thy husband? if thou wert an honeſt woman, thou wouldeſt not have left thy husband and children, and run about the country like a fugitive.

Woman. Sir, I laboured for my living; and as my Maſter Chriſt counſelleth me, when I was perſecuted in one City, I fled into another?

Biſh. Who perſecuted thée?

The wife perſecuted by her husband and children.

Woman. My husband and my children. For when I would have them to leave Idolatry, and to worſhip God in heaven, he would not heare me, but he with his children rebuked me, and troubled me. I fled not for whoredome, nor for theft, but becauſe I would be no partaker with him and his, of that foule Idoll the Maſſe. And whereſoever I was, as oft as I could upon Sundaies and Holidaies, I made excuſes not to goe to the Popiſh Church.

Biſh. Belike then you are a good huſwife, to flie from your husband and alſo from the Church.

Wom. My huswifery is but ſmall; but God give me grace to goe to the true Church.

Biſhop. The true Church, what doeſt thou meane?

Wom. Not your Popiſh Church full of Idols and abominations, but where two or thrée are gathered together in the name of God, to that Church will I goe as long as I live.

Biſh. Belike then you have a Church of your owne. Well, let this mad woman be put downe to priſon, untill we ſend for her husband.

Woman. No, I have but one husband, which is here already in this City and in priſon with me (from whom I will never depart) and ſo their communication for that day brake off. Blackſtone and others perswaded the Biſhop that ſhe was a mazed creature, and not in her perfect wit (which is no new thing, for the wiſdome of God to appeare fooliſhneſſe to carnall men of this world) and therefore they conſulted together, that ſhée ſhould have liberty, and go at large. So the Kéeper of the Biſhops priſon had her home to his houſe, where ſhe fell to ſpinning and carding, and did all other work as a ſervant in the ſaid Kéepers houſe, and went about the City, when and whither ſhée would, and divers had delight to talke with her. And ever ſhe continued talking of the ſacrament of the altar, which of all things they could leaſt abide. Then was her husband ſent for, but ſhe refuſed to go home with him, with the blemiſh of the cauſe and religion, in defence whereof ſhe there ſtood before the Biſhop and the Prieſts.

Then

Talk betweene the woman and the Prieſts about the ſacrament.

Then divers of the Prieſts had her in handling, perſwading her to leave her wicked opinion about the Sacrament of the altar, the naturall body and blood of our Saviour Chriſt. But ſhee made them anſwer, that it was nothing but very bread and wine, and that they might be aſhamed to ſay, that a peece of bread ſhould be turned by a man into the naturall body of Chriſt, which bread doth vinow, and Mice oftentimes doe eate it, and it doth mould, and is burned: And, ſaid ſhe, Gods owne body will not be ſo handled, nor kept in priſon, or boxes, or aumbries. Let it bee your God, it ſhall not be mine; for my Saviour ſitteth on the right hand of God, and doth pray for me. And to make that ſacramentall or ſignificative bread inſtituted for a remembrance, the very body of Chriſt, and to worſhip it, it is very fooliſhneſſe and deviliſh deceit.

Now truly, ſaid they, the devill hath deceived thee.

No, ſaid ſhee, I truſt the living GOD hath opened mine eyes, and cauſed me to underſtand the right uſe of the bleſſed Sacrament, which the true Church doth uſe, but the falſe Church doth abuſe.

Then ſtept forth an old Frier, and aſked her what ſhe ſaid of the holy Pope.

Talke betweene the woman and a Frier.

I (ſaid ſhee) ſay that he is Antichriſt and the devill.

Then they all laughed.

Nay, ſaid ſhe, you have more need to weepe than to laugh, and to be ſorry that ever you were borne, to be the Chaplaines of that Whore of Babylon, I defie him and all his falſhood; and get you away from me; you doe but trouble my conſcience. You would have mee follow your doings; I will firſt loſe my life. I pray you depart.

Why, thou fooliſh woman, ſaid they, we come to thee for thy profit and ſoules health.

O Lord God, ſaid ſhe, what profit riſeth by you that teach nothing but lies for truth? how ſave you ſoules, when you preach nothing but damnable lies, and deſtroy ſoules?

How proveſt thou that (ſaid they?)

Doe you not damne ſoules, ſaid ſhe, when you teach the people to worſhip Idols, Stockes, and Stones, the worke of mens hands? and to worſhip a falſe God of your owne making, of a peece of bread, and teach that the Pope is Gods Vicar, and hath power to forgive ſinnes? and that there is a Purgatory, when Gods Sonne hath by his paſſion purged all? and ſay, you make God, and ſacrifice him, when Chriſts body was a ſacrifice once for all? Doe you not teach the people to number their ſinnes in your eares, and ſay they be damned, if they confeſſe not all: when Gods Word ſaith, Who can number his ſinnes? Doe you not promiſe them Trentals and Diriges, and Maſſes for ſoules, and ſell your prayers for mony, and make them buy Pardons, and truſt to ſuch fooliſh inventions of your owne imaginations? Do you not altogether againſt God? Doe ye not teach us to pray upon beads, and to pray unto Saints, and ſay they can pray for us? Doe you not make holy water, and holy bread to fray Devils? Doe you not a thouſand more abominations? And yet you ſay, you come for my profit, and to ſave my ſoule. No, no, one hath ſaved me. Farewell you with your ſalvation. Much other talke there was betweene her and them, which here were too tedious to be expreſſed.

Falſe doctrine of the Papiſts reproved.

In the meane time during this her moneths liberty granted to her by the Biſhop, which we ſpake of before, it happened that ſhe entering into Saint Peters Church, beheld there a cunning Dutchman how he made new noſes to certaine fine Images which were disfigured in King Edwards time; What a mad man art thou (ſaid ſhe) to make them new noſes, which within a few daies ſhall all loſe their heads? The Dutchman accuſed her, and laid it hard to her charge. And ſhe ſaid unto him; Thou art accurſed, and ſo are thy Images. He called her Whore. Nay, ſaid ſhe, thy Images are Whores, and thou art a Whorehunter; for doth not God ſay; You goe a whoring after ſtrange gods, figures of your owne making? and thou art one of them. Then was ſhe ſent for, and clapped faſt, and from that time ſhe had no more liberty.

During the time of her impriſonment, divers reſorted to her to viſit her, ſome ſent of the Biſhop, ſome of their owne voluntary will; amongſt whom was one Daniel a great doer and preacher ſometimes of the Goſpel, in the daies of King Edward, in thoſe parts of Cornwall and Devonſhire: whom after that ſhe perceived by his owne confeſſion to have revolted from that which hee preached before, through the grievous impriſonments, as he ſaid, and feare of perſecution which he had partly ſuſtained by the cruel Juſtices in thoſe parts, earneſtly ſhe exhorted him to repent with Peter, and to be more conſtant in his profeſſion.

The revolting of one Daniel a miniſter, from the Goſpel to Popery in Q. Maries time.

Moreover, there reſorted to her a certaine worthy Gentlewoman, the wife of one Walter Rauley, a woman of noble wit, and of a good and godly opinion; who comming to the priſon, and talking with her, ſhe ſaid her Creed to the Gentlewoman, and when ſhe came to the article, He aſcended, there ſhe ſtaid, and bade the Gentlewoman to ſeeke his bleſſed body in heaven, not in earth, and told her plainly that God dwelleth not in temples made with hands, and that ſacrament to be nothing elſe but a remembrance of his bleſſed paſſion, and yet (ſaid ſhe) as they now uſe it, it is but an Idoll, and far wide from any remembrance of Chriſts body; which, ſaid ſhe, will not long continue, and ſo take it good Miſtreſſe. So that as ſoon as ſhe came home to her huſband, ſhe declared to him, that in her life ſhe never heard a woman (of ſuch ſimplicity to ſee to) talke ſo godly, ſo perfectly, ſo ſincerely, and ſo earneſtly; inſomuch, that if God were not with her, ſhe could not ſpeake ſuch things, to the which I am not able to anſwer her, ſaid ſhe, who can reade, and ſhe cannot.

William and John Kede, two godly brethren.

Alſo there came to her one William Kede, and John his brother, not only brethren in the fleſh, but alſo in the truth, and men in that Country of great credit, whoſe father Robert Kede all his life ſuffered nothing but trouble for the Goſpell. Theſe two good and faithfull brethren were preſent with her, both in the hall, and alſo at the priſon, and (as they reported) they never heard the like woman, of ſo godly talke, ſo faithfull, or ſo conſtant; and as godly exhortations ſhe gave them.

The conſtancy of this woman many waies tryed.

Thus this good Matron, the very ſervant and handmaide of Chriſt, was by many waies tryed, both by hard impriſonment, threatnings, taunts, and ſcornes, called an Anabaptiſt, a mad woman, a drunkard, a whore, a runnagate. She was proved by liberty to goe whither ſhe would; ſhe was tried by flattery, with many faire promiſes; ſhee was tryed with her huſband, her goods and children; but nothing could prevaile, her heart was fixed, ſhe had caſt her anker, utterly contemning this wicked world; a rare enſample of conſtancy to all profeſſors of Chriſts Goſpel.

In the Bill of my information, it is ſo reported to me, that albeit ſhe was of ſuch ſimplicity, and without learning, yet you could declare no place of Scripture, but ſhe would tell you the Chapter: yea, ſhe would recite to you the names of all the bookes of the Bible. For which cauſe one Gregory Baſſet, a ranke Papiſt, ſaid ſhe was out of her wit, and talked of the Scripture, as a dogge rangeth far off from his Maſter when he walketh in the fields, or as a ſtolne ſheep out of his Maſters hands, ſhe wiſt not whereat, as all heretikes doe; with many other ſuch taunts, which ſhe utterly defied. Whereby as Almighty God is highly to be praiſed, working ſo mightily in ſuch a weake veſſell; ſo men of ſtronger and ſtouter nature, have alſo to take example how to ſtand in like caſe; when as we ſee this poore woman, how manfully ſhe went through with ſuch conſtancy and patience.

Gregory Baſſet a railing Papiſt.

The conſtant patience of this woman and martyr to be noted.

At the laſt, when they perceived her to be paſt remedy, and had conſumed all their threatnings, that neither by priſonment nor liberty, by menaces nor flattery, they could bring her to ſing any other ſong, nor win her to their vanities and ſuperſtitious doings, then they cryed out, An Anabaptiſt, an Anabaptiſt. Then at a day they brought her from the Biſhops priſon to the Guildhall, and after that delivered her to the temporall power, according to their cuſtome, where ſhe was by the Gentlemen of the Country exhorted yet to call for grace, and to leave her fond opinions: and goe home to thy huſband, ſaid they thou art an unlearned woman, thou art not able to anſwer to ſuch high matters. I am not, ſaid ſhe, yet with my death I am content to be a witneſſe of Chriſts death: and I pray you make no longer delay with me; my heart is fired, I will never otherwiſe ſay, nor turne to their ſuperſtitious doings.

The woman brought from the Biſhops priſon to the Guildhall.

Exhortations to have her recant.

The conſtant ſtanding of this woman.

Then the Biſhop ſaid, the devill did leade her.

No, my Lord, ſaid ſhe, it is the ſpirit of God which leadeth me, and which called me in my bed, and at midnight opened his truth to me. Then was there a great ſhout and laughing among the Prieſts and other.

Blaſphemy of the Biſhop.

How God revaled his truth unto her.

During the time that this good poore woman was thus under theſe Prieſts hands, amongſt many other baitings and ſore conflicts which ſhe ſuſtained by them, Here is moreover not to bee forgotten, how that Maſter Blaxton aforeſaid, being Treaſurer of the Church, had a Concubine, which ſundry times reſorted to him, with other of his Goſſips; ſo that alwaies when they came, this ſaid good woman was called forth to his houſe, there to make his Minion with the reſt of the company ſome mirth, he examining her with ſuch mocking and girning, deriding the truth, that it would have vexed any Chriſtian heart to have ſeen it. Then when he had long uſed his fooliſhneſſe in this ſort, and had ſported himſelfe enough in deriding this Chriſtian Martyr; in the end he ſent her to priſon againe, and there kept her very miſerably, ſaving that ſometimes he would ſend for her, when his foreſaid gueſt came to him, to uſe with her his accuſtomed folly aforeſaid. But in fine, theſe vile wretches (after many combates and ſcoffing perſwaſions) when they had played the part of the Cat with the Mouſe, at length condemned her, and delivered her over to the ſecular power.

Judgement given againſt this good woman.

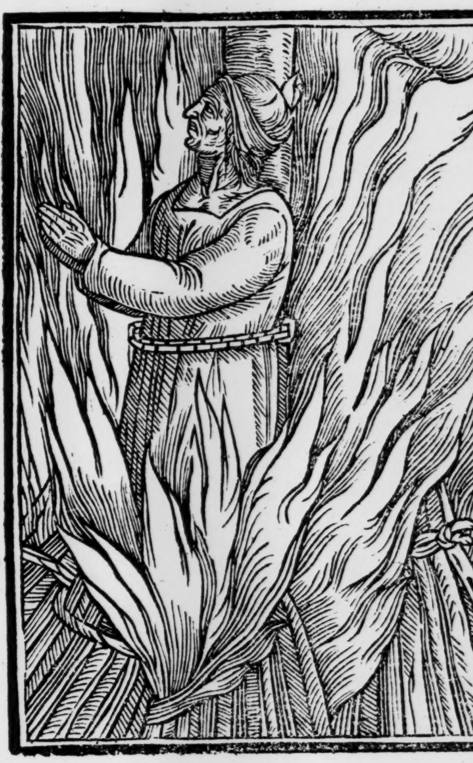
She thanketh God for her judgement given.

Then the Indictment being given and read, which was, that ſhe ſhould goe to the place whence ſhe came, and from thence to be led to the place of execution, then and there to be burned with flames till ſhe ſhould be conſumed; ſhe lifted up her voice and thanked God, ſaying; I thanke thee my Lord my God, this day have I found that which I have long ſought. But ſuch out-cries as there were againe, and ſuch mockings were never ſeen upon a poore ſilly woman: All which ſhe moſt patiently tooke. And yet this favour they pretended after her judgement, that her life ſhould be ſpared, if ſhe would turne and recant. Nay, that will I not (ſaid ſhe:) GOD forbid that I ſhould loſe the life eternall for this carnall and ſhort life. I will never turne from my heavenly huſband; to my earthly huſband; from the fellowſhip of Angels, to mortall children: And if my huſband and children be faithfull, then am I theirs; God is my father, God is my mother; God is my ſiſter, my brother; my kinſman, God is my friend moſt faithfull.

The woman delivered to the Sheriffe, and led to the place of execution.

Then was ſhe delivered to the Sherife, and innumerable people beholding her, ſhe was led by the Officers to the place of execution, without the wals of Exeter, called Sothenhey, where againe theſe ſuperſtitious Prieſts aſſaulted her; and ſhe prayed them to have no more talke with her, but cryed ſtill; God be mercifull to me a ſinner, God be mercifull to me a ſinner. And ſo whiles they were tying her to the ſtake, thus ſtill ſhe cryed, and would give no anſwer to them, but with much patience tooke her cruell death, and was with the flames and fire conſumed: and ſo ended this mortall life, as conſtant a woman in the faith of Chriſt, as ever was upon the earth. Shee was as ſimple a woman to ſee to as any man might behold; of a very little and ſhort ſtature, ſomewhat thicke, about 54. yeares of age. Shee had a cheerefull countenance, ſo lively, as though ſhe had been prepared for that day of her marriage to meet the Lambe; moſt patient of her words and anſwers; ſober in apparrell, meate and drink, and would never be idle; a great comfort to as many as would talk with her; good to the poore; and in her trouble, money ſhe ſaid, ſhee would take none; for ſhe ſaid, I am going to a City, where money beareth no maſtry; whiles I am here God hath promiſed to feed me. Thus was her mortall life ended. For whoſe conſtancy God be everlaſtingly praiſed, Amen.

The patient martyrdome of a poore woman at Exeter, being one Preſts wife.



Touching the name of this woman as I have now learned) ſhe was the wife of one called Preſt, dwelling in the Dioceſſe of Exeter, not farre from Launceſton.

The perſecution and martyrdome of three godly men burnt at Briſtow, about the later yeares of Queene Maries reigne.

The ſtory of 3 Martyrs which ſuffered at Briſtow.

IN writing of the bleſſed Saints which ſuffered in the bloody daies of Quéene Mary, I had almoſt overpaſſed the names and ſtory of thrée godly Martyrs, which with their blood gave teſtimony likewiſe to the Goſpel of Chriſt, being condemned and burnt in the Towne of Briſtow. The names of whom were theſe:

Richard Sharpe.
Thomas Benion. } Martyrs.
Thomas Hale.

Rich. Sharp, Martyr. M. Dalby Chancellor of Briſtow, perſecutor.

First, Richard Sharp Weaver, of Briſtow, was brought the ninth day of March, Anno 1556. before Maſter Dalby, Chancellor of the Towne or City of Briſtow, and after examination concerning the ſacrament of the altar, was perſwaded by the ſaid Dalby and others to recant, and the twenty nine of the ſame moneth was enjoyned to make his recantation before the Pariſhioners in his Pariſh Church. Which when he had done, he felt in his conſcience ſuch a tormenting hell, that he was not able quietly to worke in his occupation, but decayed and changed both in colour and liking of his body. Who ſhortly after upon a Sunday came into his Pariſh Church, called Temple, and after high Maſſe, came to the Quire doore, and ſaid with a loud voice; Neighbours, beare me record that yonder Idoll (and pointed to the altar) is the greateſt and moſt abominable that ever was; and I am ſorry that ever I denyed my Lord God. Then the Conſtables were commanded to apprehend him, but none ſtepped forth, but ſuffered him to goe out of the Church. After, by night he was apprehended and carried to Newgate, and ſhortly after, he was brought before the ſaid Chancellor, denying the ſacrament of the altar to be the body and blood of Chriſt, and ſaid, it was an Idoll, and therefore was condemned to be burned by the ſaid Dalby. He was burnt the ſeventh of May, 1557. and dyed godly, patiently, and conſtantly, confeſſing the articles of our faith.

Rich. Sharp condemned.

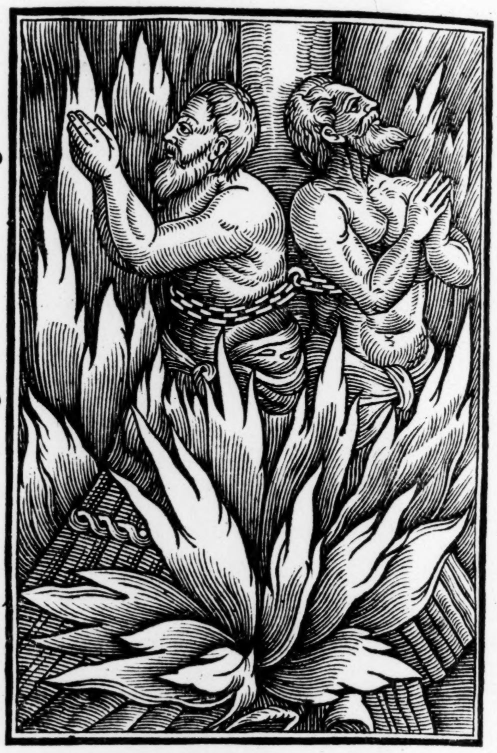
Thomas Hale, Martyr.

Thom. Hale Martyr.

THe Thurſday in the night before Eaſter, Anno, 1557. came one Maſter David Herris Alderman, and John Stone, to the houſe of one Thomas Hale, a Shoomaker of Briſtow, and cauſed him to riſe out of his bed, and brought him forth of his doore. To whom the ſaid Thomas Hale ſaid, You have ſought my blood theſe two yéeres, and now much good doe it you with it. Who being committed to the watchmen, was carried to Newgate the twenty foure of April, the yéere aforeſaid, was brought before Maſter Dalby the Chancellor, committed by him to priſon, and after by him condemned to be burnt, for ſaying the Sacrament of the Altar to be an Idoll. He was burned the ſeventh of May with the foreſaid Richard Sharpe, and godly, patiently, and conſtantly imbraced the fire with his armes.

Richard Sharp and Thomas Hale were burned both together in one fire, and bound back to backe.

Two godly Martyrs burned at Briſtow. An. 1557.



Thomas Benion.

Thomas Benion, Martyr.

THomas Benion a Weaver, at the commandement of the Commiſſioners, was brought by a Conſtable, the thirteenth day of Auguſt, Anno, 1557. before Maſter Dalby Chancellor of Briſtow, who committed him to priſon for ſaying there was nothing but bread in the ſacrament, as they uſed it. Wherefore, the twentieth day of the ſaid Auguſt he was condemned to bee burnt by the ſaid Dalby, for denying 5. of their ſacraments, and affirming two, that is, the ſacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, and the ſacrament of Baptiſme. He was burnt the 27. of the ſaid moneth and yéere, and dyed godly, conſtantly, and patiently, with confeſſing the Articles of our Chriſtian faith.

¶ The martyrdome of five conſtant Chriſtians, which ſuffered the laſt of all other in the time of Queene Mary.

Novemb. 10.

The laſt that ſuffered in Quéen Maries time, were five at Canterbury burned about ſixe daies before the death of Quéene Mary, whoſe names follow here under written.

Martyrs.

Iohn Corneford, of Wortham.
Chriſtopher Browne, of Maidſtone.
Iohn Herſt, of Aſhford.
Alice Snoth.
Katherine Knight, otherwiſe called Katherine Tynley, an aged woman.

The five laſt Martyrs that were burned in Queene Maries time.

These five, to cloſe up the finall rage of Quéen Maries perſecution, for the teſtimony of that Word, for which ſo many had dyed before, gave up their lives méekly and patiently, ſuffering the violent malice of the Papiſts. Which Papiſts, although they then might have either well ſpared them, or elſe deferred their death, knowing of the ſickneſſe of Quéens Mary; yet ſuch was the implacable deſpite of that generation, that ſome there be that ſay, the Archdeacon of Canterbury the ſame time being at London, and underſtanding the danger of the Quéene, incontinently made all poſt-haſte home to diſpatch theſe, whom before he had then in his cruell cuſtody.

Their articles why they were condemned.

The matter why they were judged to the fire, was for beléeving the body not to be in the ſacrament of the altar, unleſſe it be received; ſaying moreover, that we receive another thing alſo beſide Chriſts body, which we ſée, and is a temporall thing, according to S. Paul; The things that be ſeen, be temporall, &c.

Item, for confeſſing that an evill man doth not receive Chriſts body, Becauſe no man hath the Son, except it be given him of the Father.

Item, that it is Idolatry to créepe to the Croſſe, and Saint John forbidding it, ſaith; Beware of Images.

Item, for confeſſing that we ſhould not pray to our Lady, and other Saints, becauſe they be not omnipotent.

An example of Gods work to be noted.

For theſe and other ſuch Articles of Chriſtian doctrine, were theſe five committed to the fire. Againſt whom when the ſentence ſhould be read, and they excommunicate, after the manner of the Papiſts, one of them, John Corneford by name, ſtirred with a vehement ſpirit of the zeale of GOD, procéeding in a more true excommunication againſt the Papiſts, in the name of them all, pronounced ſentence againſt them, in theſe words as follow:

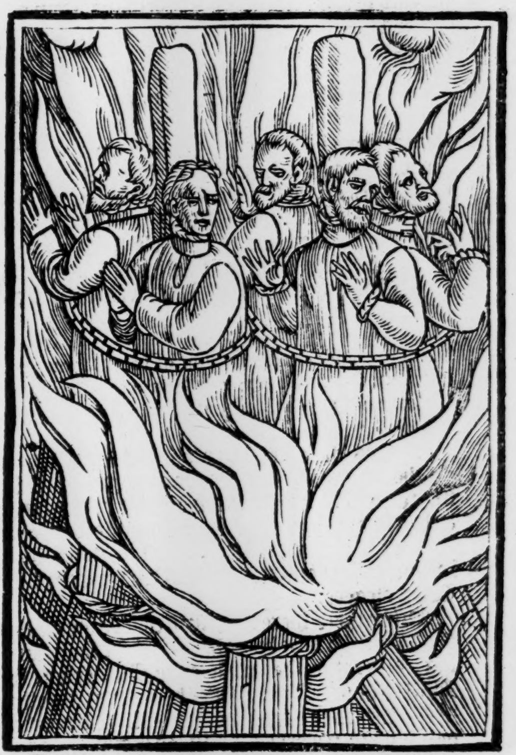
Sentence of condemnation pronounced by J. Corneford againſt the Papiſts.

In the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Sonne of the moſt mighty GOD, and by the power of his holy Spirit, and the authority of his holy Catholike and Apoſtolike Church, we doe here give into the hands of Sathan to be deſtroyed, the bodies of all thoſe Blaſphemers and Heretikes, that doe maintaine any error againſt his moſt holy Word, or doe condemne his moſt holy truth for hereſie, to the maintenance of any falſe Church or faigned Religion, ſo that by this thy juſt judgement, O moſt mighty GOD, againſt thy adverſaries, thy true religion may be knowne to thy great glory and our comfort, and to the edifying of all our Nation. Good Lord ſo be it, Amen.

The cruell dealing of M. Harpsfeld, the Archdeacon of Cant.

This ſentence of excommunication being the ſame time openly pronounced and regiſtred, procéeding ſo, as it ſéemeth, from an inward faith and hearty zeale to Gods truth and religion, took ſuch effect againſt the enemy, that within ſixe dayes after Quéene Mary dyed, and the tyranny of all Engliſh Papiſts with her. Albeit, notwithſtanding the ſickneſſe and death of that Quéen, whereof they were not ignorant; yet the Archdeacon, with other of Canterbury, thought to diſpatch the martyrdome of theſe men before.

The martyrdome of three men, and two women at Canterbury, An. 1558. Novemb. 10.



In the which fact, the tyranny of this Archdeacon ſéemeth to excéed the cruelty of Boner; who notwithſtanding he had certaine the ſame time under his cuſtody, yet he was not ſo importune in haling them to the fire, as appeareth by father Lining and his wife, and divers other, who being the ſame time under the cuſtody and danger of Boner, were delivered by the death of Quéene Mary, and remaine yet ſome of them alive.

These godly Martyrs in their prayers which they made before their martyrdome, deſired God that their blood might be the laſt that ſhould bée ſhed, and ſo it was.

This Katherine Tinley was the mother of one Robert Tinley, now dwelling in Maidſtone, which Robert was in trouble all Quéen Maries time. To whom his mother, comming to viſit him, aſked him how hée tooke this place of Scripture which ſhe had ſéene, not by reading of the Scripture (for ſhe had yet in manner no taſte of Religion) but had found it by chance in a Booke of prayers, I will poure out my ſpirit upon all fleſh, and your ſonnes and your daughters ſhall propheſie: your olde men ſhall dreame dreames, and your young men ſhall ſee viſions. And alſo upon the ſervants, and upon the maides in thoſe dayes will I poure my ſpirit, &c. Which place after that he had expounded to her, ſhe began gan to take hold on the Goſpel, growing more and more in zeale and love thereof, and ſo continued unto her martyrdome.

A note of Alice Snoth.

Among ſuch young women as were burned at Canterbury, it is recorded of a certaine maid, and ſuppoſed to be this Alice Snoth here in this ſtory mentioned, or elſe to be Agnes Snoth above ſtoried, (for they were both burned) that when ſhe was brought to be executed, ſhe being at the ſtake, called for her Godfather and Godmothers. The Iuſtice, hearing her, ſent for them, but they durſt not come. Notwithſtanding the Iuſtices willed the meſſenger to goe againe, and to ſhew them that they ſhould incurre no danger therefore.

Hereby biſhop Boner may ſee that the Martyrs died in the ſame faith, wherein they were baptiſed by their Godfathers and Godmothers.

Then they hearing that, came to know the matter of their ſending for. When the maid ſaw them, ſhe aſked them what they had promiſed for her, and ſo ſhe immediatly rehearſed her faith, and the commandements of God, and required of them, if there were any more that they had promiſed in her behalfe, and they ſaid, No.

Then, ſaid ſhe, I die a Chriſtian woman, beare witneſſe of mee, and ſo cruelly in fire was ſhe conſumed, and gave joyfully her life up for the teſtimony of Chriſts Goſpell, to the terrour of the wicked, and comfort of the godly, and alſo to the ſtopping of the ſlanderous mouthes of ſuch, as falſly doe quarrell againſt theſe faithfull Martyrs, for going from that religion wherein by their Godfathers and Godmothers they were firſt baptiſed.

The ſtory and condemnation of Iohn Hunt, and Richard White, ready to be burnt, but by the death of Q. Mary eſcaped the fire.

The ſtory of Iohn Hunt, and Richard White.

Beſides theſe Martyrs above named, divers there were in divers other places of the realm impriſoned, whereof ſome were but newly taken and not yet examined, ſome begun to be examined, but were not yet condemned, certaine were both examined and condemned, but for lack of the Writ eſcaped.

Other there were alſo, both condemned, and the Writ alſo was brought downe for their burning, and yet by the death of the Chancellor, the Biſhop, and of Queen Mary happening together about one time, they moſt happily and marvelouſly were preſerved, and lived many yeares after. In the number of whom was one Iohn Hunt and Richard White, impriſoned at Saliſbury. Touching which hiſtory ſomething here is to be ſhewed.

Firſt, theſe two good men and faithfull ſervants of the Lord above named, to wit, Iohn Hunt, and Richard White, had remained long time in priſon at Saliſbury, and other places thereabout, the ſpace of two yeeres and more. During which time, oft times they were called to examination, and manifold waies were impugned by the Biſhops and the Prieſts. All whoſe examinations, as I thought not much needfull here to proſecute or to ſearch out, for the length of the volume; ſo neither again did I think it good to leave no memory at all of the ſame, but ſome part to expreſſe, namely of the examination of Richard White before the B. of Saliſbury, the B. of Glocester, with the Chancellor and other Prieſts, not unworthy perchance to be rehearſed.

The examination of Richard White, before the Biſhop of Saliſbury in his chamber in Saliſbury, the 26. day of April, Anno 1557.

Examination of Richard White.

The Biſhop of Saliſbury at that time was Doctor Capon. The Biſhop of Gloceſter was Doctor Brookes. Theſe with Doctor Geffrey the Chancellor of Saliſbury, and a great number of Prieſts ſitting in judgement, Richard White was brought before them. With whom firſt the Biſhop of Gloceſter, which had the examination of him, beginneth thus.

Biſhop Brookes. Is this the priſoner?

The Chancellor. Yea, my Lord.

Brookes. Friend, wherfore cameſt thou hither?

White. My Lord, I truſt to know the cauſe: for the Law ſaith; In the mouth of two or three witneſſes things muſt ſtand.

Doctor Capon. Did not I examine thee of thy faith when thou cameſt hither?

White. No, my Lord, you did not examine me, but commanded me to the Lollards tower, and that no man ſhould ſpeake with me. And now I doe require mine accuſer.

Then the Regiſter ſaid; The Maior of Marlborow did apprehend you for words that you ſpake there; and for that I commanded you to be conveighed hither to priſon.

The Maior of Marlborough perſecutor.

White. You had the examination of me in Marlborow. Say what I have ſaid. And I will anſwer you.

Geffrey. Thou ſhalt confeſſe thy faith ere thou depart; and therefore ſay thy minde freely, and be not aſhamed ſo to doe.

White. I am not aſhamed of the Goſpel of Chriſt, becauſe it is the power of God to ſalvation unto all that beleeve: and S. Peter ſaith; If any man do ask thee a reaſon of the hope that is in thee, make him a direct anſwer, and that with meekneſſe. Who ſhall have the examination of me?

Chanc. My Lord of Gloceſter ſhall have the examination of thee.

White. My Lord, will you take the paines to wet your coate in my blood? be not guilty thereof; I warne you before hand.

Brooks. I will doe nothing contrary to our law.

White. My Lord, what is it that you doe requeſt at my hands?

Brookes. I will appoſe thee upon certain articles, and principally upon the Sacrament of the altar: How doeſt thou beleeve of the bleſſed Sacrament of the altar? Beleeveſt thou not the reall, carnall, and corporall preſence of Chriſt in the ſame, even the very ſame Chriſt that was borne of the Virgin Mary, that was hanged on the Croſſe, and that ſuffered for our ſins? (and at theſe words they all put off their caps, and bowed their bodies.)

The ſacrament of the altar.

White. My Lord, what is a ſacrament?

Brookes. It is the thing it ſelfe the which it repreſenteth.

White. My Lord, that cannot be; for he that repreſenteth a prince, cannot be the prince himſelfe.

Bro. How many ſacraments findeſt thou in the Scriptures called by the name of Sacraments?

White. I finde two ſacraments in the Scriptures, but not called by the names of ſacraments. But I thinke S. Auguſtine gave them the firſt name of ſacraments.

Brookes. Then thou findeſt not that word ſacrament in the Scriptures.

The name of ſacraments not found in the Scriptures.

White. No, my Lord.

Brookes. Did not Chriſt ſay, This is my body? and are not his words true?

White. I am ſure the words are true; but you play by me as the devill did by Chriſt: for he ſaid, If thou be, Mat. 4. For, it is, &c. Pſal. 91. But the words that followed after he cleane left out, which are theſe: Thou ſhalt walke upon the Lion and Aſpe, &c. Theſe words the devill left out, becauſe they were ſpoken againſt himſelf; and even ſo doe you recite the Scriptures.

How the Papiſts play with Scriptures, as the Devill did when he tempted Chriſt.

Brookes. Declare thy faith upon the ſacrament.

Whites opinion of the ſacrament.

White. Chriſt and his ſacraments are like, becauſe of the natures; for in Chriſt are two natures, a divine and a humane nature; ſo likewiſe in the ſacrament of Chriſts body and bloud there be two natures, the which I divide into two parts, that is, externall and internall. The externall part is the element of bread and wine, according to the ſaying of Saint Auguſtine. The internall part is the inviſible grace, which by the ſame is repreſented. So is there an externall receiving of the ſame ſacrament, and an internall. The externall is with the hand, the eye, the mouth, and the eare. The internall is by the Holy Ghoſt in the heart, which worketh in me faith. Whereby I apprehend all the merits of Chriſt, applying the ſame wholly unto my ſalvation. If this be truth, beleeve it; and if it be not, reprove it.

Double receiving of the ſacrament, externall, and internall.

Doctor Hoskins. This is Oecolampadius doctrine, and Hooper taught it the people.

Brookes Doeſt thou not beleeve, that after the words of conſecration there is the naturall preſence of Chriſts body?

White My Lord, I will anſwer you, if you will anſwer me to one queſtion. Is not this article of our beliefe true; Hee ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father almighty: If he be come from thence to judgement, ſay ſo.

A popiſh Paradoxe; Chriſts body both in heaven and in earth at one time.

Brook. No. But if thou wilt beleeve the Scriptures, I will prove to thee that Chriſt was both in heaven and in earth at one time.

White As he is God, he is in all places; but as for his manhood, he is but in one place.

Brookes St. Paul ſaith, 1 Cor 15. Laſt of all he was ſeene of me, &c. Here St. Paul ſaith hee ſaw Chriſt, and S. Paul was not in heaven.

How S. Paul ſaw Chriſt
Supra Pſal. 54.

White St. Pauls chiefe purpoſe was by this place to prove the reſurrection. But how doe you prove that Chriſt, when hee appeared to S. Paul, was not ſtill in heaven; like as he was ſeene of Stephen, ſitting at the right hand of God? Saint Auguſtine ſaith, the head that was in heaven, did cry for the body and members which were on the earth, and ſayd; Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? And was not Paul taken up into the third heaven, where he might ſee Chriſt? as he witneſſeth, 1 Cor. 15. For there he doth but only ſay he ſaw Chriſt, but concerning the place he ſpeaketh nothing. Wherefore this place of Scripture proveth not that Chriſt was both in heaven and earth at one time.

B. Brooks leaveth the Scripture, and proveth the ſacrament by other matter.

Brook. I told you before he would not beleeve. Here be three opinions, the Lutherans, the Oecolampadians, and we the Catholikes. If you the Oecolampadians have the truth; then the Lutherans and we the Catholikes be out of the way. If the Lutherans have the truth, then you the Oecolampadians and we the Catholikes be out of the way. But if we the Catholikes have the truth, as we have indeed, then the Lutherans and you the Oecolampadians are out of the way, as you are indeed; for the Lutherans doe call you Heretikes.

White My Lord, ye have troubled me greatly with the Scriptures.

Brookes Did I not tell you it was not poſſible to remove him from his errour? Away with him to the Lollards Tower, and diſpatch him as ſoone as ye can.

This was the effect of my firſt examination. More examinations I had after this, which I have no time now to write out.

Anno 1558.

The trembling and ſhaking of Blackſtone at the examination of Richard White.

Amongſt many other examinations of the foreſayd Richard White, at divers and ſundry times ſuſtained, it happened one time, that Doctor Blackſtone Chancellor of Exceter ſate upon him, with divers other; who alledging certaine Doctors, as Chryſoſtome, Cyprian, Tertullian, againſt the ſayd Richard, and being reproved by him for his falſe patching of the Doctors, fell in ſuch a quaking and ſhaking (his conſcience belike remorſing him) that hee was faine, ſtouping downe, to lay both his hands upon his knees to ſtay his body from trembling.

Condemnation of John Hunt and R. White.

Then the ſayd John Hunt and Richard White, after many examinations and long captivity, at length were called for, and brought before Doctor Geffrey the Biſhops Chancellor, there to be condemned, and ſo they were. The high Sheriffe at that preſent was one, named ſir Anthony Hungerford, who being then at the Seſſions, was there charged with theſe two condemned perſons, with other malefactors there condemned likewiſe the ſame time, to ſee the execution of death miniſtred unto them.

The chriſtian zeale of M. Clifford.

In the meane time Maſter Clifford of Boſco in Wiltſhire, ſonne-in-law to the ſaid ſir Anthony Hungerford the Sheriffe, commeth to his father, exhorting him and counſelling him earneſtly in no caſe to meddle with the death of theſe two innocent perſons; and if the Chancellor and Prieſts would needs be inſtant upon him, yet he ſhould firſt require the Writ to be ſent downe De comburendo, for his diſcharge.

Sir Anthony Hungerford hearing this, and underſtanding Juſtice Browne to be in the Towne the ſame time, went to him to aſke his advice and counſell in the matter: who told him that without the Writ ſent downe from the ſuperiour powers, hee could not bee diſcharged, and if the Writ were ſent, then he muſt by the law doe his charge.

Example of chriſtian piety in a Sheriffe to be noted.

The Sheriffe underſtanding by Juſtice Browne how farre he might goe by the law, and having at that time no Writ for his warrant, let them alone, and the next day after taking his horſe, departed.

The Chancellor all this while marvelling what the Sheriffe meant, and yet diſdaining to goe unto him, but looking rather the other ſhould have come firſt to him, at laſt hearing that hee was ridden away, taketh his horſe and rideth after him: who, at length overtaking the ſaid Sheriffe, declared unto him how hee had committed certaine condemned priſoners to his hand, whoſe duety had beene to have ſeene execution done upon the ſame; which for that hee had not done, the matter he ſayd was great, and therefore willed him to looke well unto it how hee would anſwer the matter. And thus began he fiercely to lay to his charge.

A note to be obſerved concerning the papiſts dealings

The Papiſts charged with manifeſt diſſimulation.

Wherein note (gentle Reader) by the way, the cloſe and covert hypocriſie of the Papiſts in their dealings. Who in the forme and ſtile of their owne ſentence condemnatory, pretend a petition unto the ſecular power, In viſceribus Ieſu Chriſti, ut iuris rigor mitigetur, atque ut parcatur vitæ. That is, that the rigour of the Law may be mitigated, and that their life may bee ſpared. And how ſtandeth this now with their owne doings and dealings, when this Chancellor (as ye ſee) is not onely contented to give ſentence againſt them, but alſo hunteth here after the Officer, not ſuffering him to ſpare them, although he would? What diſſimulation is this of men, going and doing contrary to their owne words and profeſſion? But let us returne to our matter againe.

The Sheriffe hearing the Chancellors words, and ſeeing him ſo urging upon him, told him againe that hee was no Babe, which now was to be taught of him. If he had any Writ to warrant and diſcharge him in burning theſe men, then he knew what he had to doe. Why, ſaith the Chancellor, did not I give you a Writ, with my hand and eight moe of the cloſe ſet unto the ſame? Well, quoth the Sheriffe, that is no ſufficient diſcharge for me; and therefore as I told you, if ye have a ſufficient Writ and Warrant from the ſuperiour powers, I know then what I have to doe in my office: otherwiſe, if you have no other Writ but that, I tell you, I will neyther burne them for you nor any of you all, &c.

Burning without a ſufficient Writ.

Where note againe (good Reader) how by this it may hee thought and ſuppoſed, that the other poore Saints and Martyrs of GOD, ſuch as had been burned at Salibury before, were burned belike without any authoriſed or ſufficient Writ from the ſuperiors, but only upon the information of the Chancellor and of the Cloſe, through the uncircumſpect negligence of the Sheriffes, which ſhould have looked more ſubſtantially upon the matter. But this I leave and referre unto the Magiſtrates. Let us returne to the ſtory againe.

Rich. White now Vicar of Malbrough in Wiltſhire.

Doctor Gefferey the Chancellor thus ſent away from the Sheriffe, went home, and there fell ſicke upon the ſame (for anger belike) as they ſignified unto me, which were the parties themſelves, both godly and grave perſons, who were then condemned, the one of them, which is Richard White, being yet alive.

M. Michel underſheriffe burneth the Writ.

The under Sheriffe to this ſir Anthony Hungerford above named, was one Maſter Michell, likewiſe a right and a perfect godly man. So that not long after this came downe the Writ to burn the above named Rich. White, and John Hunt, but the under Sheriffe receiving the ſayd Writ, ſaid; I will not bee guilty (quoth hee) of theſe mens bloud, and immediately burnt the writing, and departed his way. Within foure dayes after the Chancellor dyed. Concerning whoſe death this commeth by the way to be noted, that theſe two foreſayd, John Hunt and Richard White, being the ſame time in a low and dark Dungeon, being Saturday, toward evening (according to their accuſtomed manner) fell to evening prayer. Who kneeling there together, as they ſhould begin their prayer, ſuddenly fell both to ſuch a ſtrange weeping and tenderneſſe of heart (but how they could not tell) that they could not pray one word, but ſo continued a great ſpace burſting out in teares. After that night was paſt, and the morning come, the firſt word they heard, was that the Chancellor their great enemy was dead. The time of whoſe death they found to bee the ſame houre, when as they fell in ſuch a ſudden weeping. The Lord in all his workes bee prayſed, Amen. Thus much concerning the death of that wicked Chancellor.

Gods workings to be noted concerning the death of D. Geffrey Chancellor of Saliſbury.

This Rich. White and the ſayd John Hunt, after the death of the Chancellor, the Biſhop alſo being dead a little before, continued ſtill in priſon till the happy comming in of Queene Elizabeth: and ſo were ſet at liberty.

¶ The martyrdome of a young lad of eight yeeres old, ſcourged to death in Biſhop Boners houſe in London.

The ſtory of John Fetty, and martyrdome of his childe.

IF bloudy torments and cruell death of a poore innocent, ſuffering for no cauſe of his owne, but in the truth of Chriſt and his religion, doe make a Martyr, no leſſe deſerveth the childe of one John Fetty to be reputed in the Catalogue of holy Martyrs, who in the houſe of Biſhop Boner unmercifully was ſcourged to death, as by the ſequele of this ſtory here following may appeare.

Amongſt thoſe that were perſecuted and miſerably impriſoned for the profeſſion of Chriſts Goſpel, and yet mercifully delivered by the providence of God, there was one John Fetty, a ſimple and godly poore man, dwelling in the Pariſh of Clerkenwell, and was by vocation a Taylor, of the age of 24. yeeres or thereabout, who was accuſed and complained of unto one Brokenbury a Prieſt and Parſon of the ſame Pariſh, by his owne wife, for that hee would not come unto the Church, and be partaker of their Idolatrie and ſuperſtition; and therefore, through the ſaid Prieſts procurement, hee was apprehended by Richard Tanner and his fellow Conſtables there, and one Martin the Headborow. Howbeit immediately upon his apprehenſion, his wife (by the juſt judgement of God) was ſtricken mad, and diſtract of her wits; which declared a marvellous example of the juſtice of God againſt ſuch unfaithfull and moſt unnaturall treacherie. And although this example perhaps for lacke of knowledge and inſtruction in ſuch caſes little moved the conſciences of thoſe ſimple poore men to ſurceaſe their perſecution; yet naturall pitie towards that ungratefull woman wrought ſo in their hearts, that for the preſervation and ſuſtentation of her and her two children (like otherwiſe to periſh) they for that preſent let her husband alone, and would not carrie him to priſon, but yet ſuffered him to remaine quietly in his owne houſe. During which time, he as it were forgetting the wicked and unkinde fact of his wife, did yet ſo cheriſh and provide for her, that within the ſpace of three weekes (through Gods mercifull providence) ſhee was well amended, and had recovered againe ſome ſtay of her wits and ſenſes.

Gods dreadful hand upon a wife, ſeeking the deſtruction of her husband

The wife perſecuting her husband. John Fetty againe apprehended.

But ſuch was the power of Sathan in the malicious heart of that wicked woman, that notwithſtanding his gentle dealing with her, yet ſhee ſo ſoone as ſhe had recovered ſome health, did againe accuſe her husband; whereupon he was the ſecond time apprehended, and carried unto ſir John Mordant Knight, one of the Queenes Commiſſioners, and he upon examination ſent him by Cluny the Biſhops Sumner, unto the Lollards Tower: where he was (even at the firſt) put into the painefull Stockes, and had a diſh of water ſet by him, with a ſtone put into it. To what purpoſe God knoweth, except it were to ſhew that hee ſhould looke for little other ſuſtenance. Which is credible enough, if we conſider their like practices upon divers before mentioned in this hiſtorie, as amongſt other, upon Richard Smith, who died through their cruell impriſonment. Touching whom, when a godly woman came to D. Storie, to have leave that ſhe might burie him, he aſked her if hee had any ſtrawe or bloud in his mouth; but what he meant thereby, I leave to the judgement of the godly wiſe.

The ſtraite handling of Jo. Fetty by ſir John Mordant.

Rich. Smith dead in priſon through cruell handling.

The cruell handling and ſcourging of John Fetties childe.

After the foreſaid Fetty had thus laine in the priſon by the ſpace of 15. daies, hanging in the ſtocks, ſometime by the one leg, and the one arme, ſometime by the other, and otherwhiles by both, it hapned that one of his children (a boy of the age of 8. or 9. yeeres) came unto the Biſhops houſe to ſee if he could get leave to ſpeake with his father. At his comming thither, one of the biſhops Chaplaines met with him, and aſked him what he lacked and whom he would have. The childe anſwered, that he came to ſee his father. The Chaplain aſked againe who was his father. The boy then told him, and pointing towards Lollards Tower, ſhewed him that his father was there in priſon. Why (quoth the Prieſt) thy father is an heretike. The childe being of a bold and quicke ſpirit, and alſo godly brought up, and inſtructed by his father in the knowledge of God, anſwered and ſaid; My father is no heretike, but you are an heretike: For you have Balaams marke.

With that the Prieſt tooke the childe by the hand

The miſerable tyranny of the Papiſts in ſcourging a childe.

and carried him into the Biſhops houſe (whether to the Biſhop or not, I know not, but like enough hee did) and there amongſt them they did moſt ſhamefully and without all pity ſo whip and ſcourge, being naked, this tender childe, that hee was all in a gore bloud, and then in a jolly bragge of their catholike tyranny, they cauſed Cluny, having his coate upon his arme to carry the childe in his ſhirt unto his father being in priſon, the bloud running downe by his heeles.

The childe all bloudy brought to his father in priſon.

Cluny carrieth the boy againe to the B. houſe.

At his comming unto his father the childe fell downe upon his knees, and aſked him bleſſing. The poore man then beholding his childe, and ſeeing him ſo cruelly arayed, cryed out for ſorrow, and ſayd; Alas Will, who hath done this to thee? The Boy anſwered, that as he was ſeeking how to come to ſee his father, a Prieſt with Balaams marke tooke him into the Biſhops houſe, and there was hee ſo handled. Cluny therewith violently plucked the childe away out of his fathers hands, and carried him backe againe into the Biſhops houſe, where they kept him three dayes after.

The words betweene Boner and John Fetty.

And at the three dayes end, Boner (minding to make the matter whole, and ſomewhat to appeaſe the poore man, for this their horrible fact) determined to releaſe him; and therefore cauſed him early in a morning to bee brought out of Lollards Tower into his bed-chamber, where hee found the Biſhop baſting of himſelfe againſt a great fire; and at his firſt entring into the chamber, Fetty ſaid, God be here and peace. God be here and peace (quoth Boner) that is neither God ſpeede, nor good morrow. If ye kicke againſt this peace (ſaid Fetty) then this is not the place that I ſeeke for.

Bon. beades.

A Chaplaine of the Biſhops ſtanding by turned the poore man about, and thinking to deface him, ſaid in mocking wiſe; What have we here? A player? whileſt this Fetty was ſtanding in the Biſhops chamber, he eſpied hanging about the Biſhops bed a great paire of blacke Beades: whereupon he ſayd; My Lord, I think the Hangman is not far off; for the halter (pointing to the Beades) is here already. At which words the Biſhop was in a marvellous rage.

Boners Crucifixe.

Then immediately after he eſpied alſo ſtanding in the ſaid Biſhops chamber in the window, a little Crucifixe (before which belike Boner uſed to kneele in the time of his hypocriticall prayers.) Then he aſked the Biſhop what it was; and hee anſwered that it was Chriſt. Was he handled ſo cruelly as he is here pictured, quoth Fetty?

Yea, that he was, ſaid the Biſhop.

B. Boner compared to Caiphas.

And even ſo cruelly will you handle ſuch as come before you. For you are unto Gods people, as Caiphas was unto Chriſt.

The Biſhop being in a great fury, ſaid; Thou art a vile heretike, and I will burne thee, or elſe I will ſpend all that I have unto my gowne.

Nay, my Lord, ſaid Fetty, ye were better to give it to ſome poore body, that he may pray for you. But yet Boner bethinking in himſelfe of the danger that the childe was in by their whipping, and what perill might enſue thereupon, thought better to diſcharge him; which thing was accompliſhed.

B. Boner, for feare of the law in murdering a childe, delivered the father out of priſon.

The martyrdome of a child ſcourged to death in Boners houſe.

Whereupon, after this and ſuch like talke, the Biſhop at laſt diſcharged him, willing him to goe home, and carry his childe with him; which he ſo did, and that with a heavy heart to ſee his poore boy in ſuch extreme paine and griefe. But within foureteene dayes after the childe died, whether through his cruell ſcourging, or any other infirmity, I know not; and therefore I referre the truth thereof unto the Lord, who knoweth all ſecrets, and alſo to the diſcreete judgement of the wiſe Reader. But howſoever it was, the Lord yet uſed their cruell and deteſtable fact, as a meanes of his providence for the delivery of this good poore man and faithfull Chriſtian, his name be ever prayſed therefore, Amen.

The cruell handling and burning of Nicholas Burton, Engliſhman and Merchant in Spaine.

The ſtory of Nic. Burton Martyr in Spaine.

FOraſmuch as in our former booke of Acts and Monuments mention was made of the martyrdome of Nicholas Burton, I thought here alſo not to omit the ſame ſtory, being ſuch as is not unworthy to be knowne, as well for the profitable example of his ſingular conſtancy, as alſo for the noting of the extreame dealing and cruell revenging of thoſe catholike Inquiſitors of Spaine, who under the pretenſed viſor of Religion, doe nothing but ſeeke their owne private gaine and commodity, with crafty rifling and ſpoyling of other mens goods, as by the noting of this ſtory may appeare.

Nic Burton, Londoner.

The fifth day of the moneth of November, about the yeere of our Lord God, 1560, this Nicholas Burton, Citizen ſometime of London and Merchant, dwelling in the Pariſh of little Saint Bartholomew, peaceably and quietly following his traffique in the trade of Merchandiſe, and being in the City of Cadix, in the parts of Andolazia in Spaine, there came into his lodging a Judas (or as they terme them) a Familiar of the fathers of the Inquiſition. Who asking for the ſaid Nicholas Burton, fained that he had a letter to deliver to his owne hands; by which means he ſpake with him immediately. And having no letter to deliver to him, then the ſaid Promoter or Familiar, at the motion of the Divell his maſter, whoſe meſſenger he was, invented another lie, and ſayd, that he would take lading for London in ſuch ſhips as the ſayd Nicholas Burton had fraited to lade, if he would let any; which was partly to know where hee laded his goods, that they might attach them, and chiefly to detract the time untill the Alguiſiel or Sergeant of the ſaid Inquiſition might come and apprehend the body of the ſaid Nicholas Burton; which they did incontinently.

Who then, well perceiving that they were not able to burden nor charge him that he had written, ſpoken, or done any thing there in that Country againſt the eccleſiaſticall or temporall lawes of the ſame Realme, boldly asked them what they had to lay to his charge that they did ſo arreſt him, and bade them to declare the cauſe, and hee would anſwer them. Notwithſtanding they anſwered nothing, but commanded him with cruell threatning words to hold his peace, and not to ſpeake one word to them.

Nic. Burton laid in priſon, they having no cauſe to charge him with.

And ſo they carried him to the cruell and filthy common priſon of the Towne of Cadix, where he remained in irons foureteene dayes amongſt theeves.

All which time hee ſo inſtructed the poore priſoners in the Word of God, according to the good talent which God had given him in that behalfe, and alſo in the Spaniſh tongue to utter the ſame, that in ſhort ſpace hee had well reclaimed ſundry of thoſe ſuperſtitious and ignorant Spaniards to imbrace the Word of God, and to reject their Popiſh traditions.

Nic. Burton carried to Sivill.

Which being knowne unto the Officers of the Inquiſition, they conveighed him laden with irons from thence to a City called Sivill, into a more cruell & ſtraiter priſon called Triana, where the ſaid fathers of the Inquiſition proceeded againſt him ſecretly according to their accuſtomable cruell tyranny, that never after hée could bée ſuffered to write or to ſpeake to any of his nation; ſo that to this day it is unknowne who was his accuſer.

Nic. Burton brought to judgment after a diſguiſed manner.

Afterward, the 20. day of December, in the foreſayd yéere, they brought the ſayd Nicholas Burton, with a great number of other priſoners, for profeſſing the true Chriſtian religion, into the City of Sivill, to a place where the ſaid Inquiſitors ſate in judgement, which they called the Awto, with a Canvas coate, whereupon in divers parts was painted the figure of a huge Divell, tormenting a ſoule in a flame of fire, and on his head a copping tanke of the ſame worke.

Nic. Burton with another Engliſhman of Southhampton condemned.

His tongue was forced out of his mouth with a cloven ſticke faſtened upon it, that hée ſhould not utter his conſcience and faith to the people, and ſo hée was ſet with another Engliſh man of Southhampton, and divers other condemned men for Religion, as well French men, as Spaniards, upon a Scaffold over againſt the ſayd Inquiſition, where their ſentences and judgements were read and pronounced againſt them.

And immediately after the ſayd ſentences given, they were all carried from thence to the place of execution without the City, where they moſt cruelly burned him, for whoſe conſtant faith, God be praiſed.

This Nicholas Burton by the way, and in the flames of fire made ſo chearefull a countenance, embracing death with all patience and gladneſſe, that the tormentors and enemies which ſtood by, ſayd that the divell had his ſoule before he came to the fire; and therefore they ſayd his ſenſes of féeling were paſt him.

It happened that after the arreſt of this Nicholas Burton aforeſaid, immediately all the goods and merchandiſe which he brought with him into Spaine by the way of trafficke, were (according to their common uſage) ſeiſed, and taken into the Sequeſter; among the which they alſo rolled up much that appertained to another Engliſh Merchant, wherewith he was credited as Factor. Whereof ſo ſoone as newes was brought to the Merchant as well of the impriſonment of his Factor, as of the arreſt made upon his goods, hée ſent his Atturney into Spaine with authority from him, to make claime to his goods, and to demand them; whoſe name was John Fronton, Citizen of Briſtow.

The trouble of Jo. Fronton, Citizen of Briſtow in Spaine.

When his Atturney was landed at Sivill, and had ſhewed all his letters and writings to the holy houſe, requiring them that ſuch goods might be delivered into his poſſeſſion, anſwer was made him that he muſt ſue by Bill, and retaine an Advocate (but all was doubtleſſe to delay him) and they forſooth of courteſie aſſigned him one to frame his Supplication for him, and other ſuch Bils of petition, as he had to exhibite into their holy Court, demanding for each Bill 8. Rials, albeit they ſtood him in no more ſtead, than if hée had put up none at all. And for the ſpace of thrée or foure moneths this fellow miſſed not twice a day, attending every morning and after noone at the Inquiſitors palace, ſuing unto them upon his knées for his diſpatch, but eſpecially to the Biſhop of Tarracon, who was at that very time chiefe in the Inquiſition at Sivill, that hée of his abſolute authority would command reſtitution to be made thereof; but the booty was ſo good and ſo great, that it was very hard to come by it againe.

Note the ravening extortion of theſe Inquiſitors.

At the length, after hée had ſpent whole foure moneths in ſutes and requeſts, and alſo to no purpoſe, hée received this anſwer from them, that he muſt ſhew better evidence, and bring more ſufficient Certificates out of England for proofe of his matter, than thoſe which hée had already preſented to the Court. Whereupon the party forthwith poſted to London, and with all ſpéede returned to Sivill againe with more ample and large letters teſtimonials, and certificates, according to their requeſts, and exhibited them to the Court.

The vile proceedings of the Inquiſitors of Spaine.

Notwithſtanding the Inquiſitors ſtill ſhifted him off, excuſing themſelves by lacke of leaſure, and for that they were occupied in greater and more weighty affaires, and with ſuch anſwers delayed him other foure moneths after.

At the laſt, when the party had welnigh ſpent all his mony; and therefore ſued the more earneſtly for his diſpatch, they referred the matter wholly to the Biſhop. Of whom, when hée repaired unto him, hée had this anſwer; that for himſelfe, he knew what he had to doe; howbeit hée was but one man, and the determination of the matter appertained unto the other Commiſſioners as well as unto him: and thus by poſting and paſſing it from one to another, the party could obtaine no end of his ſute. Yet, for his importunity ſake, they were reſolved to diſpatch him, it was on this ſort: One of the Inquiſitors called Gaſco, a man very well experienced in theſe practices, willed the party to reſort unto him after dinner.

John Fronton impriſoned by the Spaniſh Inquiſitors for asking his own goods.

The fellow being glad to heare theſe newes, and ſuppoſing that his goods ſhould be reſtored unto him, and that he was called in for that purpoſe to talke with the other that was in priſon, to conferre with him about their accounts, the rather through a little miſunderſtanding, hearing the Inquiſitors caſt out a word, that it ſhould be néedfull for him to talke with the priſoner, and being thereupon more than halfe perſwaded, that at the length they meant good faith, did ſo, and repaired thither about the evening. Immediately upon his comming, the Jayler was forthwith charged with him, to ſhut him up cloſe in ſuch a certaine priſon, where they appointed him.

The party hoping at the firſt that hee had been called for about ſome other matter, and ſeeing himſelfe contrary to his expectation caſt into a darke dungeon, perceived at the length that the world went with him farre otherwiſe than he ſuppoſed it would have done.

But within two or thrée dayes after, he was brought forth into the Court, where he began to demand his goods; and becauſe it was a device that well ſerved their turne, without any more circumſtance they bade him ſay his Ave Maria. The party began and ſayd it after this manner: Ave Maria gratia plena, Dominus tecum, benedicta tu in mulieribus, & benedictus fructus ventris tui Ieſus, Amen.

John Fronton judged for an heretike, for not adding to Ave Maria, more than the Scripture hath.

The ſame was written word by word as hee ſpake it; and without any more talke of claiming his goods, becauſe it was bootleſſe, they command him to priſon againe, and enter an action againſt him as an heretike, foraſmuch as he did not ſay his Ave Maria after the Romiſh faſhion, but ended it very ſuſpiciouſly, for hee ſhould have added moreover; Sancta Maria mater Dei ora pro nobis peccatoribus; by abbreviating whereof, it was evident enough (ſayd they) that he did not allow the mediation of Saints.

A Chapter or Treatiſe concerning ſuch as were ſcourged and whipped by the Papiſts in the true cauſe of Chriſts Goſpel.

A chapter concerning ſuch as were ſcourged for religion.

AND thus through the mercifull aſſiſtance and favourable aide of Chriſt our Saviour, thou haſt as in a generall Regiſter (good Reader) the ſtory collected, if not of all, yet of the moſt part, or at leaſt, not many I truſt omitted of ſuch good Saints and Martyrs as have loſt their lives, and given their bloud, or died in priſon for the teſtimony of Chriſts true doctrine and ſacraments, from the time of the cruell Statute firſt given out by King Henry the fourth Ex officio, unto this preſent time, and eſpecially under the reigne of Quéene Mary.

Of this Statute reade before.

Now after this bloudy ſlaughter of Gods good Saints and ſervants thus ended and diſcourſed, let us proceede (by the good pleaſure of the Lord) ſomewhat likewiſe to intreate of ſuch as for the ſame cauſe of Religion have béen, although not put to death, yet whipped and ſcourged by the adverſaries of Gods Word, firſt beginning with Richard Wilmot and Thomas Fairefaxe, who about the time of Anne Aſkew, were pitifully rent and tormented with ſcourges and ſtrips for their faithfull ſtanding to Chriſt, and of his truth, as by the ſtory and examination both of the ſaid Richard Wilmot, and of Thomas Fairefaxe now following may appeare.

The ſcourging of Richard Wilmot and Thomas Fairefaxe.

The ſcourging of Rich. Wilmot and Tho. Fairefaxe. Doctor Cromes Sermon.

AFter the firſt recantation of Doctor Crome for his Sermon which he made the fifth Sunday in Lent at Saint Thomas Acres, being the Mercers Chappell, his Sermon was on the Epiſtle of the ſame day, written in the tenth Chapter to the Hebrewes; wherein hée proved very learnedly by the ſame place of Scripture and others, that Chriſt was the only and ſufficient Sacrifice unto God the Father for the ſinnes of the whole world, and that there was no more ſacrifice to bée offered for ſinne by the Prieſts, foraſmuch as Chriſt had offered his body on the Croſſe, and ſhed his bloud for the ſins of the people, and that once for all. For the which Sermon he was apprehended of Boner, and brought before Stephen Gardiner and other of the Councell, where he promiſed to recant his doctrine at Pauls Croſſe, the ſecond Sunday after Eaſter. And accordingly he was there and preached, Boner with all his Doctors ſitting before him: but he ſo preached and handled his matter, that hée rather verified his former ſaying, than denied any part of that which hée before had preached. For the which the Proteſtants praiſed God, and heartily rejoyced.

D. Cromes recantation.

But Biſhop Boner with his Champions were not therewith pleaſed; but yet notwithſtanding they had him home with them, and ſo handled him among the Wolviſh generation, that they made him come to the Croſſe againe the next Sunday.

D. Crome cauſed to recant the ſecond time.

And becauſe the Magiſtrates ſhould now hear him, and be witneſſes of this recantation which was moſt blaſphemous, to deny Chriſts ſacrifice to be ſufficient for penitent ſinners, and to ſay that the ſacrifice of the Maſſe was good, godly, and a holy ſacrifice, propitiatory and availeable both for the quicke and the dead: Becauſe (I ſay) that they would have the Nobles to heare this blaſphemous doctrine, the viperous generation procured all the chiefe of the Councell to be there preſent.

Rich. Wilmot prentiſe in Bow-lane.

Now to come to our matter; at this time, the ſame wéeke, betwéene his firſt Sermon and the laſt, and while Doctor Crome was in durance, one Richard Wilmot being Prentiſe in Bow-lane, being of the age of 18. yéeres, and ſitting at his worke in his Maſters ſhop, the Tueſday, in the moneth of July, one Lewes a Welchman, being one of the Guard, came into the ſhop, having things to doe for himſelfe.

Lewes one of the Guard, a Welchman, a popiſh perſecutor.

One aſked him what newes at the Court, and he anſwered, that the old heretike D. Crome had recanted now indéed before the Councell, and that he ſhould on Sunday next be at Pauls Croſſe againe, and there declare it.

Wilmot defendeth Doctor Cromes Sermon.

Then Wilmot ſitting at his Maſters worke, and hearing him ſpeake theſe words, and rejoycing in the ſame, began to ſpeake unto him, ſaying, that hée was ſorry to heare theſe newes. For (ſayd he) if Crome ſhould ſay otherwiſe than he hath ſayd, then is it contrary to the truth of Gods Word, and contrary to his owne conſcience, which ſhall before God accuſe him.

Lewes anſwered and ſayd, that hée had preached and taught hereſie; and therefore it was méet that he ſhould in ſuch a place revoke it.

Wilmot told him that he would not ſo ſay, neither did he heare him preach any doctrine contrary to Gods Word written, but that he proved his doctrine, and that ſufficiently by the Scriptures.

Lewes then aſked him how he knew that.

Wilmot anſwered, by the Scriptures of God, wherin he ſhall find Gods will and pleaſure, what he willeth all men to doe, and what not to doe; and alſo by them he ſhould prove and try all doctrines, and the falſe doctrine from the true.

Lewes ſayd, it was never merry ſince the Bible was in Engliſh: and that he was both an heretike and a traitor that cauſed it to be tranſlated into Engliſh (meaning Cromwel) and therefore was rewarded according to his deſerts.

The L. Cromwel wrongfully accuſed. The doings of the Lord Cromwel defended.

Wilmot anſwered againe, what his deſerts and offences were to his Prince a great many doe not know, neither doth it force whether they doe or no; once, he was ſure that he loſt his life for offending his Prince, and the law did put it in execution; Adding moreover concerning that man, that he thought it pleaſed God to raiſe him up from a lowe eſtate, and to place him in high authority, partly unto this, that hée ſhould doe that which all the Biſhops in the Realme yet never did, in reſtoring againe Gods holy Word, which being hid long before from the people in a ſtrange tongue, and now comming abroad amongſt us, will bring our Biſhops and Prieſts, ſayd he, in leſſe eſtimation among the people,

Lewes aſked why ſo.

Wilmot ſayd, becauſe their doctrine and living was not according to his Word.

The common reaſon of the Papiſts, why the Scriptures ſhould not be in Engliſh.

Then ſayd Lewes; I never heard but that all men ſhould learn of the Biſhops and Prieſts, becauſe they are learned men, and have béen brought up in learning all the dayes of their lives. Wherefore they muſt néeds know the truth, and our fathers did beléeve their doctrine and learning, and I thinke they did well; for the world was farre better then, than it is now.

Wilmot anſwered, I will not ſay ſo: For wée muſt not beléeve them becauſe they are Biſhops, neither becauſe they are learned, neither becauſe our forefathers did follow their doctrine. For I have read in Gods Booke how that Biſhops and learned men have taught the people falſe doctrine, and likewiſe the Prieſts from time to time; and indéed those people our forefathers beléeved as they taught, and as they did thinke, ſo did the people thinke. But for all this, Chriſt calleth them falſe Prophets, Théeves, and Murtherers, blinde leaders of the blinde, willing the people to take héede of them, leſt they ſhould both fall into the ditch.

Gods truth goeth not alwayes by title and fame of great learning.

Moreover we reade, that the Biſhops, Prieſts, and learned men have béen commonly reſiſters of the truth from time to time, and have alwayes perſecuted the Prophets in the old Law, as their ſucceſſors did perſecute our Saviour Chriſt and his Diſciples in the new Law. We muſt take héede therefore that wée credit them no further than GOD will have us, neither follow them nor our forefathers otherwiſe than hée commandeth us. For Almighty GOD hath given to all people, as well to Kings and Princes, as Biſhops, Prieſts, learned and unlearned men, a commandement and law, unto the which hée willeth all men to be obedient. Therefore if any Biſhop or Prieſt preach or teach, or Prince or Magiſtrate command any thing contrary to his commandement, we muſt take heede how we obey them. For it is better for us to obey God than man.

Learned men how far they are to be credited.

Anno 1558.

Marie ſir, quoth Lewes, you are an holy Doctor indeed. By Gods bloud if you were my man, I would ſet you about your buſines a little better, and not ſuffer you to looke upon bookes, and ſo would your Maſter if hee were wiſe. And with that in came his Maſter, and a young man with him, which was ſervant with M. Daubney in Watling ſtreet.

His Maſter aſked what the matter was.

Wilmot complained of to his Maſt.r.

Lewes ſayd, that he had a knaviſh boy here to his ſervant, and how that if hee were his, hee would rather hang him, than keepe him in his houſe.

Then his Maſter, being ſomewhat moved, aſked his fellowes what the matter was.

They ſaid, they beganne to talke about Doctor Crome.

Then his Maſter aſked him what he had ſaid, ſwearing a great oath, that he would make him to tell him.

He ſaid, that he truſted he had ſaid nothing, whereby either hee or Maſter Lewes may juſtly be offended. I pray (quoth Wilmot) aſk him what I ſaid.

Marie ſir (ſaid Lewes) this he ſayd, that Doctor Crome did preach and teach nothing but the truth, and how that if hee recant on Sunday next, hee would bee ſorry to heare it, and that if hee doe, he is made to doe it againſt his conſcience. And more he ſaith, that we muſt not follow our Biſhops doctrine and preaching: For, ſaith hee, they be hinderers of Gods word, and perſecutors of that; and how Cromewell did more good (that traytor) in ſetting forth the Bible, than all our Biſhops have done theſe hundreth yeares: thus reporting the matter worſe than hee had ſaid.

Then ſaid Wilmot, that in many things hee made his tale worſe than it was. His Maſter hearing of this, was in a great furie, and rated him, ſaying, that either he would be hanged or burned, ſwearing that hee would take away all his bookes and burne them.

M. Daubnies ſervant, called Tho. Fairefaxe taketh Wilmots part.

The young man (Maſter Daubnies ſervant) ſtanding by, hearing this, began to ſpeak on his part unto Lewes; and his talke confirmed all the ſayings of the other to be true.

This young man was learned, his name was Thomas Fairefaxe. Lewes hearing this mans talk as well as the others, went his way in a rage unto the Court.

Wilmot and Th. Fairefaxe ſent for to the Lord Mayor.

On the morrow they heard newes, ſo that the ſaid Wilmot and Thomas Fairefaxe were ſent for, to come to the Lord Mayor. The Meſſenger was Maſter Smart, Swordbearer of London. They came before dinner to the Mayors houſe, and were commanded to ſit downe at dinner in the Hall, and when the dinner was done, they were both called into a Parlour, where the Mayor and Sir Roger Cholmley was, who examined them ſeverally, the one not hearing the other.

Rich Wilmot & Tho Fairefaxe examined before the Lord Mayor, and M. Cholmley.

The effect of their talke with them was this; Sir Roger Cholmley ſaid unto the foreſaid Wilmot, that my Lord Mayor and he had received a commandement from the Councell, to ſend for him and his companion, and to examine them of certaine things which were laid unto their charge.

Then ſaid Maſter Cholmley to him, Sirra, what Countriman art thou? He anſwered, that he was borne in Cambridgeſhire, and in ſuch a towne. Then he aſked him, how long he had been in the City. He told him.

Then he aſked what learning he had. He ſaid, little learning and ſmall knowledge. Then (deridingly) he aſked how long he had knowne Doctor Crome. He ſaid, but a while, about two yeares. He ſaid that he was a lying boy, and ſaid that hee the ſaid Wilmot was his ſon.

The other ſaid unto him, that was unlike, for that hee never ſaw his mother, nor ſhee him. Cholmley ſaid hee lyed. Wilmot ſaid hee could prove it to be true. Then he aſked him how hee liked his Sermon that he made at Saint Thomas Acres Chappell in Lent. Hee ſaid that indeed he heard him not. He ſaid yes, and the other nay. Then ſaid he, what ſay you to his Sermon made at the Croſſe the laſt day, heard you not that?

Wilmot. Yes, and in that Sermon he deceived a great number of people.

Cholmley. How ſo?

Wilm. For that they looked that he ſhould have recanted his doctrin that he taught before, and did not, but rather confirmed it.

Cholm. Yea ſir, but how ſay you now to him? for he hath recanted before the Councell: and hath promiſed on Sunday next to bee at the Croſſe againe, how think ye in that?

Wilmot. If hee ſo did, I am the more ſorrie to heare it; and ſaid, he thought he did it for feare and ſafeguard of his life.

Cholm. But what ſay you? was his firſt Sermon hereſie or not?

S. Pauls doctrine made hereſie with the Papiſts.

Wilmot. No, I ſuppoſe it was no hereſie. For if it were, Saint Pauls Epiſtle to the Hebrews was hereſie, and Paul an heretike that preached ſuch doctrine, but God forbid that any Chriſtian man ſhould ſo thinke of the holy Apoſtle; neither do I ſo think.

Cholm. Why, how knoweſt thou that Saint Paul wrote thoſe things that are in Engliſh now, to be true, whereas Paul never wrote Engliſh or Latine?

Wilmot. I am certified that learned men of God, that did ſeeke to advance his word, did tranſlate the ſame out of the Greeke and Hebrew into Latine and Engliſh, and that they durſt not preſume to alter the ſenſe of the Scripture of God, and laſt will and teſtament of Chriſt Jeſus.

Then the Lord Mayor, being in a great furie, aſked him what he had to doe to reade ſuch bookes, and ſaid, that it was pitie that his Maſter did ſuffer him ſo to doe, and that he was not ſet better to workes: and in fine ſaid unto him, that hee had ſpoken evill of my Lord of Wincheſter and Boner, thoſe reverend and learned Fathers and Counſellors of this Realme, for the which his fact he ſaw no other but he muſt ſuffer, as was due to the ſame. And M. Cholmley ſaid, yea my Lord, there are ſuch a ſort of heretikes and traitorly knaves taken now in Eſſex by my Lord Rich, that it is too wonderfull to heare. They ſhall bee ſent to the Biſhop ſhortly, and ſhall bee hanged and burned all.

Wilm. I am ſorrie to heare that of my Lord Rich, for that he was my godfather, and gave me my name at my baptiſme.

Cholmley aſked him when he ſpake with him. He ſaid, not theſe xii. yeares.

Cholmley. If he knew that he were ſuch a one, he would doe the like by him, and in ſo doing hee ſhould doe God great ſervice.

Wilmot. I have read the ſame ſaying in the Goſpel, that Chriſt ſaid to his Diſciples, The time ſhall come (ſaith hee) that whoſoever killeth you, ſhall thinke that hee ſhall doe God high ſervice.

Well ſir ſaid Cholmley, becauſe yee are ſo full of your Scripture, and ſo well learned, we conſider you lacke a quiet place to ſtudy in. Therefore you ſhall goe to a place where you ſhall bee moſt quiet, and I would wiſh you to ſtudy how you will anſwer to the Councell of thoſe things which they have to charge you with, for elſe it is like to coſt you your beſt joint. I know my Lord of Wincheſter will handle you well enough, when he heareth thus much. Then was the officer called in, to have him to the Counter in the Poultry, and the other to the other Counter, not one of them to ſee another; and thus remained they eight daies. In the which time their Maſters made great labour unto the Lord Mayor, and to ſir Roger Cholmley, to know their offences, and that they might be delivered.

Wilmot and Fairefax committed to priſon.

At length they procured the Wardens of the company of Drapers to labour with them in their ſuite to the Mayor. The Mayor went with them to the Councell: but at that time they could finde no grace at Wincheſters hand, and ſir Anthonie Brownes, but that they had deſerved death, and that they ſhould have the law.

Sute made by the company of Drapers for Rich. Wilmot and Thomas Fairefax.

At length through intreatance, he granted them thus much favor, that they ſhould not die as they had deſerved, but ſhould bée tied to a carts taile, and be whipped thrée market daies thorow the City. Thus they came home that day, and went another day, and the Mayor and the Wardens of the companie knéeled before them to have this open puniſhment releaſed, foraſmuch as they were ſervants of ſo worſhipfull a Companie, and that they might bee puniſhed in their owne Hall before the Wardens and certaine of the companie. At length it was granted with condition, as ſome ſaid, as ſhall be hereafter declared.

Then were they ſent before the Maſters the next day to the Hall, both their Maſters being alſo preſent, and there were laid to their charges the hainous offences by them committed, how they were both heretikes and traytors, and have deſerved death for the ſame, and this was declared with a long proceſſe by the Maſter of the companie, whoſe name was Maſter Brooke, declaring what great labour and ſuite the Maior and the Wardens had made for them, to ſave them from death, which they (as he ſaid) had deſerved, and from open ſhame. which they ſhould have had, being judged by the Councell to have béene whipped thrée daies through the Citie at a Carts taile, and from theſe two dangers had they laboured to deliver them, but not without great ſute and alſo charge. For (ſaith hée) the companie hath promiſed unto the Councell for this their mercy and favour ſhewed towards them, being of ſuch a worſhipfull companie, a hundred pounds, notwithſtanding wée muſt ſée them puniſhed in our Hall within our ſelves for thoſe their offences. After theſe and many other words he commanded them to addreſſe themſelves to receive their puniſhment.

M. Brooke Maſter of the Company of Drapers.

Then were they put aſunder, and ſtripped from the waſte upward one after another, and had into the Hall, and in the middeſt of the Hall, where they uſe to make their fire, there was a great ring of iron, to the which there was a rope tied faſt, and one of their féet thereto faſt tyed.

Rich. Wilmot, and Th. Fairfax ſcourged in Drapers hall.

Then came two men downe, diſguiſed in Mummers apparell, with viſors on their faces, and they beat them with great rods untill the blood did follow in their bodies. As concerning this Wilmot, hée could not lye in his bed ſixe nights after, for Brooke played the tyrant with them. So it was, that with the beating and the flight, and feare, they were never in health ſince, as the ſayd Wilmot with his owne mouth hath credibly aſcertained us, and we can no leſſe but teſtifie the ſame.

Brookes a cruell tyrant.

Thus have we briefly rehearſed this little tragedie, wherein ye may note the malice of the enemies at all times to thoſe which profeſſe Chriſt, and take his part, of what eſtate or degrée ſoever they bée, according to the Apoſtles ſaying, It is given unto you not onely to beleeve, but alſo to ſuffer with him. To whom be honour and glory, Amen.

Next after theſe two above ſpecified, followeth the beating of one Thomas Gréene; who, in the time of Quéene Marie, was cauſed likewiſe to be ſcourged and beaten by Doctor Storie. What the cauſe was, here followeth in ſtorie and examination to bée ſéene, which hée penned with his owne hand, as the thing it ſelfe will declare to the Reader. The copie and words of the ſame, as hée wrote them, here follow. Wherein as thou mayeſt note (gentle Reader) the ſimplicity of the one, I pray thee, marke the cruelty of the other part.

The ſcourging of Thomas Greene.

IN the reigne of Quéene Marie, I Thomas Gréene being brought before Doctor Storie by my Maſter, whoſe name is John Wayland a Printer, for a Booke called Antichriſt, the which had beene diſtributed to certaine honeſt men; He asked me where I had the booke, and ſaid I was a traytor. I told him I had the booke of a French man. Then he asked me more queſtions, but I told him I would tell him no more, nor could not. Then he ſaid, It was no hereſie, but treaſon, and that I ſhould be hanged, drawne, and quartered, and ſo he called for Cluny, the Keeper of the Lollards Tower, and bade him ſet mee faſt in the ſtockes.

The ſcourging of Tho. Gréene. The Maſter promoteth the ſervant.

I was not in the Lollards Tower two houres; but Cluny came and tooke mee out, and carried me to the Colehouſe, and there I found a French man lying in the ſtockes, and hee tooke him out, and put on my right legge a bolt and a fetter, and on my left hand another, and ſo hee ſet mee croſſe fettered in the ſtockes, and tooke the French man away with him, and there I lay a day and a night. On the morrow after, he came and ſaid, let us ſhift your hand and your legge, becauſe you ſhall not be lame; and he made as though he pitied me, and ſaid, tell me the truth, and I will be your friend.

Tho. Gréene put in the ſtocks.

And I ſaid, I had told the truth, and would tell no other. Then he put no more but my legge in the ſtockes, and ſo went his way, and there I remained ſixe daies, and could come to no anſwer.

Then Doctor Storie ſent for mee, and asked whether I would tell him the truth, where I had the booke. I ſaid I had told him, of a French man. Hee asked mee where I came acquainted with the French man, where hee dwelt, and where hee delivered me the booke. I ſaid, I came acquainted with him in Newgate, I comming to my friends which were put in for Gods word and truths ſake, and the French man comming to his friends alſo, there we did talke together, and became acquainted one with another, and did eate and drinke together there with our friends in the feare of God.

Tho. Gréene examined before D. Story.

Then Storie ſcoffed at me and ſaid, then there was brother in Chriſt, and brother in Chriſt, and reviled mee, and called me an heretike, and asked mee if I had the booke of him in Newgate. I ſaid no, and I told him, as I went on my buſineſſe in the ſtreet I met him, and hee asked mee how I did, and I him alſo; ſo falling in communication, he ſhewed me that booke, and I deſired him that he would let me have it.

In this examination Story ſaid, it was a great booke, and aſked me whether I bought it or had it given me. I told him I bought it. Then ſayd he, I was a thieſe, and had ſtolne my Maſters money. And I ſaid, a little money ſerved, for I gave him but foure pence, but I promiſed him, that at our next meeting I would give twelve pence more. And he ſayd, that was boldly done, for ſuch a booke as ſpake both treaſon and hereſie.

Then Story required me to bring him two ſureties, and watch for him that I had the booke of, and I ſhould have no harme. I made him anſwer, I would bring no ſureties, nor could I tell where to finde them. Then ſaid he, this is but a lie, and ſo called for Cluney, and bad him lay me faſt in the Colehouſe, ſaying, he would make me tell another tale at my next comming: and ſo I lay in the ſtockes day and night, but only when I eate my meat, and there remained ten daies before I was called for againe.

Another examination of T. Greene before Doctor Story.

Then Doctor Story ſent for me againe, and aſked if I would yet tell him the truth. I ſaid, I could tell him no other truth than I had, nor would. And while I was there ſtanding, there were two brought which I tooke to be priſoners.

Miſtris Story ſheweth her charitable heart.

Then Miſtreſſe Story fell in a rage, and ſware a great oath, that it were a good deed to put a hundred or two of theſe heretike knaves in an houſe, and I my ſelfe (ſaith ſhee) would ſet it on fire. So I was committed to priſon againe, where I remained foureteene dayes, and came to no anſwer.

Greene again examined before Doctor Story.

Then Story ſent for me againe, and called me into the garden, and there I found with him my Lord of Windſors Chaplaine, and two Gentlemen more, and he told them all what they had ſaid and done. They ſaid, the booke was a wonderous evill booke, and had both treaſon and hereſie in it. Then they aſked me what I ſaid by the booke. And I ſaid, I know no evill by it.

At which words Story chafed, and ſaid hee would hang me up by the hands with a rope, and ſaid alſo hee would cut out my tongue, and mine eares alſo from mine head. After this they alleaged two or three things unto me out of the booke. And I anſwered, I had not read the booke throwout, and therefore I could give no judgement of the booke.

Then my Lord of Windſors Chaplaine and the other two Gentlemen tooke me aſide, and intreated mee very gently, ſaying; tell us where you had the booke, and of whom, and we will ſave you harmeleſſe. I made them anſwer, I had told all that I could to Doctor Story, and beganne to tell it them againe: but they ſaid, they knew that already; ſo they left that talke, and went againe to Story with me.

Greene examined of his beliefe.

Then Story burdened me with my faith, and ſaid I was an heretike. Whereupon the Chaplaine aſked me how I did beleeve. Then I began to rehearſe the Articles of my beliefe, but hee bade me let that alone. Then he aſked mee how I beleeved in Chriſt. I made him anſwer, that I beleeved in Chriſt which died and roſe againe the third day, and ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father.

D. Stories blaſphemous ſcoffing in matters of our faith.

Whereupon Story aſked me mockingly, what is the right hand of God? I made him anſwer, I thought it was his glory. Then ſaid he, ſo they ſay all. And he aſked me when he would be weary of ſitting there. Then inferred my Lord of Windſors Chaplaine, asking mee what I ſaid by the Maſſe. I ſaid, I never knew what it was, nor what it meant, for I underſtood it not, becauſe I never learned any Latine, and ſince the time that I had any knowledge, I had beene brought up in nothing but in reading of Engliſh, and with ſuch men as have taught the ſame; with many moe queſtions, which I cannot rehearſe.

The Maſſe

Moreover, hee asked me if there were not the very body of Chriſt, fleſh, bloud and bone in the Maſſe, after the Prieſt had conſecrated it. And I made him anſwer; as for the Maſſe I cannot underſtand it, but in the new teſtament I reade, that as the Apoſtles ſtood looking after the Lord when he aſcended up into heaven, an Angell ſayd to them, Even as you ſee him aſcend up, ſo ſhall he come againe. And I told them another ſentence, where Chriſt ſaith, The poore ſhall you have alwayes with you, but me yee ſhall not have alwayes.

Then Maſter Chaplaine put to me many queſtions more, to the which I could make him no anſwer. Among all other, he brought Chryſoſtome and Saint Hierome for his purpoſe. To whom I anſwered, that I neither minded nor was able to anſwer their Doctors, neither knew whether they alledged them right, or no, but to that which is written in the new Teſtament I would anſwer. Here they laughed me to ſcorne, and called me foole, and ſaid, they would reaſon no more with me.

Greene ſent againe to the Colehouſe.

Then Doctor Story called for Cluny, and bade him take me away, and ſet me faſt, and let no man ſpeake with me. So was I ſent to the Colehouſe; where I had not beene a weeke, but there came in xiiii. priſoners: but I was kept ſtill alone without company, in a priſon called the Salthouſe, having upon my legge a bolt and a fetter, and my hands manacled together with irons, and there continued ten dayes, having nothing to lye on, but bare ſtones or a boord.

The ſtrait handling of Greene in priſon.

On a time whiles I lay there in priſon, the Biſhop of London comming downe a paire of ſtairs on the backſide untruſt, in his hoſe and doublet, looked in at the grate, and asked wherefore I was put in, and who put me in.

Talke betweene Tho. Greene and B. Boner.

I made him anſwer, that I was put in for a booke called Antichriſt, by D. Story. And he ſaid, you are not aſhamed to declare wherefore you were put in, and ſaid it was a very wicked booke, and bade me confeſſe the truth to Story. I ſaid, I had told the truth to him already, and deſired him to bee good unto me, and helpe me out of priſon, for they had kept me there long. And he ſayd, he could not meddle with it; Story hath begun it, and he muſt end it.

Two priſoners brought to B. Boners Salthouſe.

Then I was removed out of the Salthouſe to give place to two women, and carried to the Lollards Tower, and put in the ſtocks; and there I found two priſoners, one called Lion, a Frenchman, and another with him: and ſo I was kept in the ſtockes more than a moneth both day and night, and no man to come to mee, or to ſpeak with me, but only my keeper which brought me meat.

Thus we three being together, Lyon the French man ſung a Pſalm in the French tongue, and we ſang with him, ſo that we were heard down into the ſtreet, and the Keeper comming up in a great rage, ſware that he would put us all in the ſtockes, and ſo tooke the Frenchman and commanded him to kneele downe upon his knees, and put both his hands in the ſtocks, where he remained all that night till the next day.

Cruelty ſhewed upon priſoners for ſinging Pſalmes.

Tho. Greene brought before Doctor Story and the commiſſioners.

After this, I being in the Lollards Tower 7. dayes, at my laſt being with Story, hee ſware a great oath, that he would racke mee, and make mee tell the truth. Then Story ſending for mee, commanded mee to bee brought to Walbroke, where where he and the Commiſſioners dined; and by the way my Kéeper told me that I ſhould goe to the Tower and be racked. So when they had dined, Story called for me in, and ſo there I ſtood before them, and ſome ſayd I was worthy to bée hanged for having ſuch hereticall bookes. After I had ſtayd a little while before them, Story called for the Kéeper, and commanded him to carry me to the Lollards Tower againe, and ſaid; I have other matters of the Quéenes to doe with the Commiſſioners, but I will finde another time for him. Whileſt I lay yet in the Lollards Tower, the woman which brought the bookes over, being taken, and her bookes, was put in the Clink in Southwarke by Huſſy, one of the Arches; and I Thomas Gréene teſtifie before God, now, that I neither deſcried the man nor the woman, the which I had the books of.

This woman was one Youngs wife.

Tho. Gréene examined before M. Huſſy.

Then I lying in the Lollards Tower, being ſent for before Maſter Huſſy, he required of mée, wherefore I was put into the Lollards Tower, and by whom. To whom I made anſwer, that I was put there by Doctor Story for a booke called Antichriſt. Then he made as though he would be my friend, and ſayd he knew my friends, and my father and mother, and bade me tell him of whom I had the booke, and ſayd, Come on, tell me the truth. I told him as I had told Doctor Story before.

Then he was very angry and ſayd, I love thée well, and therefore I ſent for thée, and looked for a further truth: but I would tell him no other; whereupon hée ſent mée againe to the Lollards Tower. At my going away he called mée backe againe, and ſaid that Dixon gave me the bookes being an old man, dwelling in Birchin lane: and I ſaid he knew the matter better than I. So hée ſent me away to the Lollards Tower, where I remained ſeven dayes and more.

Then Maſter Huſſy ſent for me againe, and required of me to tell him the truth. I told him I could tell him no other truth than I had told D. Story before.

Dixon in birchinlane.

Then he began to tell me Dixon of whom I had the bookes, the which had made the matter manifeſt afore; and he told mée of all things touching Dixon and the books, more than I could my ſelfe, inſomuch that he told me how many I had, and that he had a ſacke full of the bookes in his houſe, and knew where the woman lay, better than I my ſelfe. Then I ſaw the matter ſo open and manifeſt before my face, that it profited not me to ſtand in the matter. He aſked me where I had done the books, and I told him I had but one, and that Doctor Story had. He ſaid I lied, for I had thrée at one time, and hée required me to tell him of one.

John Beane Prentice with M. Tottle.

Then I told him of one that John Beane had of me, being prentice with Maſter Tottle. So he promiſed me before and after, and as he ſhould be ſaved before God, that he ſhould have no harme. And I knéeling downe upon my knées, deſired him to take my bloud, and not to hurt the young man. Then he ſaid, becauſe you have béen ſo ſtubborne, the matter being made manifeſt by other and not by you, being ſo long in priſon, tell me if you will ſtand to my judgment. I ſaid, yea, take my bloud, and hurt not the young man.

Tho. Gréene adjudged to be whipped.

Tho. Gréene brought to the Gray Friars.

Then he made me anſwer, I ſhould be whipped like a thiefe and a vagabond; and ſo I thanked him, and went my way with my Kéeper to the Lollards Tower, where I remained two or thrée dayes, and ſo was brought by the Kéeper Cluny, by the commandement of the Commiſſioners, to Chriſts Hoſpitall, ſometime the Gray Friers, and accordingly had there for the time the correction of théeves and vagabonds, and ſo was delivered to Trinian the Porter, and put into a ſtinking dungeon.

And after a few dayes, I finding friendſhip, was let out of the dungeon, and lay in a bed in the night, and walked in a yard by the dungeon in the day time, and ſo remained priſoner a moneth and more.

Tho Gréene againe appeareth before D. Story, and two Gentlemen.

Whither at length Doctor Story came and two Gentlemen with him, and called for me, and ſo I was brought into a counting houſe before them. Then he ſaid to the Gentlemen, here commeth this heretike, of whom I had the book called Antichriſt, and began to tell them how many times I had béene before him, and ſaid, I have entreated him very gently, and he would never tell me the truth till that it was found out by other. Then ſaid he, it were a good déed to cut out thy tongue, and thy eares off thy head, to make thée an example to all other heretike knaves. And the Gentlemen ſaid, nay, that were pitty. Then hée aſked if that I would not become an honeſt man: and I ſaid, yes for I have offended God many wayes. Whereupon he burdened me with my faith. I told him that I had made him anſwer of my faith before my Lord Windſors Chaplaine, as much as I could.

The ſcourging of Tho. Gréene before Doctor Story.

So in the end he commanded me to be ſtripped, he ſtanding by me, and called for two of the Beadles and the whips to whip me; and the two Beadles came with a cord, and bound my hands together, and the one end of the cord to a ſtone pillar. Then one of my friends, called Nicholas Prieſtman, hearing them call for whips, hurled in a bundell of rods, which ſéemed ſomething to pacifie the minde of his cruelty; and ſo they ſcourged me with rods. But as they were whipping of mée, Story aſked mée if I would goe unto my Maſter againe, and I ſaid nay. And he ſaid, I perceive now he will be worſe than ever he was before: but let me alone (quoth he) I will finde him out if he be in England. And ſo with many other things which I cannot rehearſe, when they had done whipping of me, they bade me pay my fées, and go my wayes.

Doctor Story commanded that he ſhould have an hundred ſtripes, but the Gentlemen ſo intreated, that he had not ſo many, Story ſaying, if I might have my will, I would ſurely cut out his tongue.

Of the ſcourging of Maſter Bartlet Gréene, alſo of John Willes, and of Thomas Hinſhaw, yée heard before. In like manner was ordered Stephen Cotten, burned before at Brainford, who teſtifieth himſelfe to be twice beaten by Boner, in a letter of his written to his brother, as by the ſame here following for the more evidence may appeare.

The copy of Stephen Cottens letter, written to his brother, declaring how he was beaten of Biſhop Boner.

Ste. Cottens letter to his brother.

BRother, in the Name of the Lord Jeſus I commend me unto you, and I doe heartily thank you for your godly exhortation and counſell in your laſt letter declared to me. And albeit I do perceive by your letter, you are informed, that as we are divers perſons in number, ſo wée are of contrary ſects, conditions, and opinions, contrary to the good opinion you had of us at your laſt being with us in Newgate; be you moſt aſſured good brother in the Lord Jeſus, wee are all of one minde, one faith, one aſſured hope in the Lord Jeſus, whom I truſt we all together with one ſpirit, one brotherly love, doe dayly call upon for mercy and forgivenes of our ſins, with earneſt repentance of our former lives, and by whoſe preous bloud ſhedding we truſt to be ſaved only, and by no other meanes. Wherefore good brother, in the name of the Lord, ſeeing theſe impudent people, whoſe mindes are altogether bent to wickedneſſe, envy, uncharitableneſſe, evill ſpeaking, do goe about to ſlander us with untruth, beleeve them not, neither let their wicked ſayings once enter into your minde. And I truſt one day to ſee you againe, although now I am in Gods priſon, which is a joyfull ſchoole to them that love their Lord God, and to me being a ſimple ſcholler moſt joyfull of all.

Good brother, once againe I doe in the Name of our Lord Jeſus, exhort you to pray for mee, that I may fight ſtrongly in the Lords battell, to bee a good ſouldier to my Captaine Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, and deſire my ſiſter alſo to doe the ſame; and doe not ye mourne or lament for me, but bee yee glad and joyfull of this my trouble: For I truſt to be looſed out of this dungeon ſhortly, and to goe to everlaſting joy, which never ſhall have end. I heard how yee were with the Commiſſioners. I pray you ſue no more for me, good brother. But one thing I ſhall deſire you, to be at my departing out of this life, that you may beare witneſſe with me that I ſhall die, I truſt in God, a true Chriſtian, and (I hope) all my companions in the Lord our God: and therefore beleeve not theſe evill diſpoſed people, who are the authors of all untruths.

Ste. Cotton twice beaten by B. Boner.

I pray you provide me a long ſhirt againſt the day of our deliverance: for the ſhirt you gave me laſt, I have given to one of my companions, who had more neede than I; and as for the mony and meat you ſent us, the Biſhops ſervants delivered none to us, neither hee whom you had ſo great truſt in. Brother, there is none of them to truſt to: for qualis Magiſter, talis Seruus. I have beene twice beaten, and threatned to be beaten againe by the Biſhop himſelfe. I ſuppoſe we ſhall goe into the Country to Fulham, to the Biſhops houſe, and there be arraigned. I would have you to hearken as much as you can. For when wee ſhall goe, it ſhall bee ſuddenly done. Thus fare ye well. From the Colehouſe this preſent Friday.

Your brother Stephen Cotton.

The ſcourging of Iames Harris.

Iames Harris ſcourged.

IN this ſociety of the ſcourged profeſſors of Chriſt, was alſo one James Harris of Billerica in Eſſex, a ſtripling of the age of 17. yeares: who being apprehended and ſent up to Boner in the company of Margaret Ellis, by ſir John Mordant Knight, and Edmund Tyrel Juſtices of Peace (as appeareth by their owne letters before mentioned) was by Boner divers times ſtraightly examined. In the which examinations hee was charged not to have come to his Pariſh Church by the ſpace of one yeare or more. Whereunto hee granted, confeſſing therewithall, that once for feare he had been at the Church, and there had received the Popiſh ſacrament of the altar, for the which hee was heartily ſorry, deteſting the ſame with all his heart.

Iames Harris repenteth his comming to the Popiſh church.

After this and ſuch like anſwers, Boner (the better to trie him) perſwaded him to goe to ſhrift. The lad, ſomewhat to fulfill his requeſt, conſented to goe, and did. But when he came to the Prieſt, he ſtood ſtill, and ſaid nothing. Why (quoth the prieſt) ſayeſt thou nothing? what ſhall I ſay, ſayd Harris? Thou muſt confeſſe thy ſins, ſaid the Prieſt. My ſins, ſaith he, be ſo many, that they cannot be numbered. With that the Prieſt told Boner what he had ſayd, and hee of his accuſtomed devotion, tooke the poore lad into his Garden, and there, with a rod gathered out of a Chery tree, did moſt cruelly whip him.

The cauſe of Iames Harris ſcourging

The ſcourging of Robert Williams a Smith.

The ſcourging of Rob. Williams.

OVer and beſides theſe above mentioned, was one Robert Williams, who, being apprehended in the ſame company, was ſo tormented after the like manner with rods in his arbour, who there ſubſcribing and yeelding himſelfe by promiſe to obey the lawes, after being let goe, refuſed ſo to doe: whereupon he was earneſtly ſought for, but could not be found, for that he kept himſelfe cloſe, and went not abroad but by ſtealth: and now in the meane time of this perſecution, this Robert Williams departed this life, and ſo eſcaped the hands of his enemies. The Lord therefore be honoured for ever, Amen.

¶ And foraſmuch as I have begun to write of Boners ſcourging, by the occaſion thereof commeth to minde to inferre by the way, his beating of other boyes and children, and drawing them naked through the nettles, in his journey rowing toward Fulham. The ſtory although it touch no matter of Religion, yet becauſe it toucheth ſomething the nature and diſpoſition of that man, and may refreſh the Reader, wearied percaſe with other dolefull ſtories, I thought not to omit.

Boner cauſeth certaine boyes to be beaten.

Boner cauſeth certaine boyes to be beaten.

BOner paſſing from London to Fulham by Barge, having John Willes and Tho. Hinſhaw above mentioned with him, both priſoners for Religion, by the way as he went by water, was ſaying Evenſong with Harpsfield his Chaplaine in the Barge, and being about the middle of their devout oriſons, they eſpied a ſort of young boyes ſwimming & waſhing themſelves in the Thames over againſt Lambeth, or a little above: unto whom hee went and gave very gentle language, and faire ſpeech, untill he had ſet his men aland. That done, his men ranne after the boyes to get them, as the Biſhop commanded them before, beating ſome with nettles, drawing ſome through buſhes of nettles naked, and ſome they made leape into the Thames to ſave themſelves, that it was marvell they were not drowned.

Boners pityfull heart.

Now as the children for feare did cry, and as this ſkirmiſhing was betweene them, immediately came a greater lad thither, to know what the matter meant that the boyes made ſuch a noiſe. Whom when the Biſhop eſpied, hee asked him whether hee would maintaine them in their doings or no. Unto whom the young fellow made anſwer ſtoutly, yea. Then the Biſhop commanded him to be taken alſo: but he ran away with ſpeed, and there avoided the Biſhops bleſſing. Now when the Biſhop ſaw him to flee away, and another man ſitting upon a raile in the way where he ranne, he willed him likewiſe to ſtop the boy: and becauſe he would not, he commanded his man to fet that man to him alſo; but he hearing that, ran away as faſt as he could, and by leaping over the ditch, eſcaped the Biſhop in like maner.

Then the Biſhop, ſeeing the ſucceſſe of his battell to prove no better, cried to a couple of Ferry boyes to runne and hold him that laſt ran away. And for that they ſaid they could not (as indeed it was true) therefore he cauſed his men by and by to take and beat them. The boies hearing that, lept into the water to ſave themſelves; notwithſtanding they were caught, and in the water by the Biſhops men holden and beaten.

Now

Boners devout Oriſons.

Now, after the end of this great ſkirmiſh, the Biſhops men returned to their Maſter againe into the Barge, and he and Harpsfield his Chaplaine went to their Evenſong afreſh where they left, and ſo forſooth the reſt of their Service, as cleane without malice, as an egge without meat. The Lord give him repentance (if it be his will) and grace to become a new man, Amen.

The whipping of a beggar at Saliſbury.

A poore begger whipt at Saliſbury, for not receiving with the Papiſts at Eaſter.

Vnto theſe above ſpecified, is alſo to be added the miſerable whipping of a certaine poore ſtarved ſilly beggar, who, becauſe hée would not receive the ſacrament at Eaſter in the Towne of Colingborow, was brought to Saliſbury with bils and glieves to the Chancellor D. Geffrey, who caſt him into the dungeon, and after cauſed him miſerably to be whipped of two Catchpoles. The ſight whereof made all godly hearts to rue it, to ſée ſuch tyranny to be ſhewed upon ſuch a ſimple and ſilly wretch: for they which ſaw him have reported, that they never ſaw a more ſimple creature, But what pity can move the hearts of mercileſſe Papiſts?

Beſides theſe above named, divers other alſo ſuffered the like ſcourgings and whippings in their bodies for their faithful ſtanding in the truth. Of whom it may be ſayd, as it is written of the Apoſtles in the Acts. Which departed from the Councell, reioycing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer for the name of Ieſus.

Acts 5.

Another treatiſe of ſuch as being purſued in Queen Maries time, were in great danger, and yet through the good providence of God, mercifully were preſerved.

A treatiſe of Gods mercy and providence in preſerving good men and women, in the time of this perſecution.

ALthough the ſecret purpoſe of Almighty God, which diſpoſeth all things, ſuffered a great number of his faithfull ſervants both men and women, and that of all ages and degrées, to fall into the enemies hands, and to abide the brunt of this perſecution, to be tried with rods, with whips, with rackes, with fetters, and famine, with burning of hands, with plucking of beards, with burning alſo both hand, beard, and body, &c.

Yet notwithſtanding ſome there were againe, and that a great number, who miraculouſly by the mercifull providence of GOD, againſt all mans expectation, in ſafety were delivered out of the fiery rage of this perſecution, eyther by voyding the Realme, or ſhifting of place, or the Lord ſo blinding the eyes of the perſecutors, or diſpoſing the opportunity of time, or working ſome ſuch means or other for his ſervants, as not onely ought to ſtirre them up to perpetuall thankes, but alſo may move all men both to behold and magnifie the wonderous workes of the Almighty.

About what time it began to bée knowne that Q. Mary was ſick, divers good men were in hold in divers quarters of the Realme, ſome at Bury, ſome at Saliſbury, as John Hunt, and Rich. White, of whom we have ſtoried before, and ſome at London, amongſt whom was William Living with his wife, and John Lithall, of whom ſomething remaineth now compendiouſly to bée touched.

The trouble and deliverance of William Living, with his wife, and of Iohn Lithall, Miniſters.

The deliverance of Will. Living, his wife, and of John Lithall.

ABout the time of the later end of Q. Mary, ſhée then being ſicke, came one Coxe a Promoter, to the houſe of William Living, about ſixe of the clocke, accompanied with one John Launce of the Grayhound. They being not ready, they demanded for buttons, ſaying, they ſhould be as well payd for them, as ever was any; and hée would come about thrée houres after againe for them.

Deane Conſtable, George Hancocke beadle, perſecutors.

In the meane while hée had gotten the Conſtable called M. Deane, and George Hancocke the Beadle of that Ward, and ſearching his bookes, found a booke of Aſtronomy, called the worke of Ioannes de ſacro Boſco de ſphæra, with figures, ſome round, ſome triangle, ſome quadrate: which booke becauſe it was guilt, ſéemed to him the chiefeſt booke there, and that hée carried open in the ſtréet, ſaying, I have found him at length. It is no marvell the Quéene be ſicke, ſéeing there bée ſuch conjurers in privy corners; but now I truſt he ſhall conjure no more, and ſo brought him and his wife from Shoe-lane thorow Fleete ſtreet into Pauls Church yard, with the Conſtable, the Beadle, and two other following them, till they were entred into Darbiſhires houſe, who was Biſhop Boners Chancellor: And after the Conſtable and they had talked with Darbiſhire, hee came forth and walked in his yard, ſaying theſe words.

Talk betweene Darbiſhire & W. Living, Prieſt.

Darbiſhire What is your name?

Living William Living.

Darb. What are you? a Prieſt?

Living Yea.

Dar. Is this your wife that is come with you?

Living That ſhe is.

Darb. Where were you made Prieſt?

Living At Obourne.

Darb. In what Biſhops dayes?

Living By the Biſhop of Lincolne, that was King Henries ghoſtly father in Cardinall Wolſies time.

Darb. You are a ſchiſmatike and a traitor.

Living I would be ſorry that were true. I am certaine I never was traytor, but alwayes have taught obedience, according to the tenour of Gods word; and when tumults and ſchiſmes have beene ſtirred, I have preached Gods word, and ſwaged them, as in the time of King Edward.

Darb. What? you are a Schiſmatike. You be not in the unity of the Catholike Church: for you pray not as the Church of Rome doth: you pray in Engliſh.

Living We are certaine we be in the true church.

Darb. There be that doubt thereof, forſomuch as there is but one true Church.

Well, you will learne againſt I talke with you againe, to know the Church of Rome, and to be a member thereof.

Living If the church of Rome be of that church whereof Chriſt is the head, then am I a member thereof: for I know no other church but that.

Darb. Well Cluny, take him with thee to the Colehouſe.

Then called he Cluny againe, and ſpake ſecretly to him, what I know not.

Cluny plaieth the thiefe.

Then ſaid Cluny, wilt thou not come? and ſo pluckt me away violently, and brought me to his owne houſe in Pater noſter Rowe, where he robbed me of my purſe, my girdle, and my Pſalter, and a New Teſtament of Geneva, and then brought me to the Colehouſe to put me in the ſtockes, ſaying, put in both your legges and your hands alſo, and except you fine with me, I will put a collor about your necke. What is the fine, quoth I? Forty ſhillings, quoth he: I am never able to pay it, ſayd I.

Note the ſotious dealing of theſe papiſts.

Then, ſaid hee, you have friends that be able.

I denied it; and ſo he put both my legs into the ſtockes till ſupper time, which was ſixe of the clocke, and then a couſin of my wives brought me meat, who ſeeing me to ſit there, ſaid, I will give you forty pence, and let him goe at liberty: and he tooke her money, and preſently let me forth in her ſight, to eat my ſupper. And at ſeven of the clocke, he put me into the ſtocks againe, and ſo I remained till two of the clocke the next day, and ſo he let me forth till night. This woman abovementioned, was Griffins firſt wife, a brother dwelling then in Aldermanbury, and yet alive in Cheapſide.

W. Living laid in the Lollards Tower.

The Thurſday following at afternoone was I called to the Lollards tower, and there put in the ſtocks, having the favor to put my leg in that hole that M. John Philpots leg was in, and ſo lay all that night, no body comming to mee, either with meat or drinke.

At 11. of the clocke on the Friday, Cluny came to me with meat, and let me forth, and about one of the clocke he brought me to Darbiſhires houſe, who drew forth a ſcroll of names, and asked me if I knew none of them: I ſaid, I know none of them but Foſter. And ſo I kneeled down upon my knees, and prayed him that he would not enquire thereof any farther. And with that came forth two godly women, which ſaid, Maſter Darbiſhire, it is enough, and ſo became ſureties for mee, and paid to Cluny 15. ſhillings for my fees, and bade me go with them.

W. Living delivered.

And thus much concerning William Living. After this came his wife to examination, whoſe anſwers to Darbiſhire the Chancellor, here likewiſe followeth.

The examination of Iulian Living, wife to William Living.

Talke betweene Darbiſhire and Livings wife.

DArbiſhire. Ah ſirrah; I ſee by your going you be one of the ſiſters.

Iulian. I weare not my gowne for Siſterhood, neither for Nunnery, but to keepe me warme.

Darb. Nunne? No, I dare ſay you be none: Is that man your husband?

Iulian. Yea.

Darb. He is a Prieſt.

Iulian. No, he ſaith no maſſe.

Darb. What then? he is a Prieſt. How dareſt thou marry him?

Then he ſhewed me a roll of certaine names of Citizens.

To whom I anſwered, I knew none of them.

Then ſaid he, you ſhall be made to know them.

Then ſaid I, Do no other but juſtice and right, for the day will come, that you ſhall anſwer for it.

Darb. Why woman, thinkeſt thou not that I have a ſoule.

Iulian. Yes, I know you have a ſoule: but whether it bee to ſalvation or damnation, I cannot tell.

Livings wife commanded to the Lollards Tower.

Darb. Ho Cluny, have her to the Lollards Tower. And ſo he tooke me, and carried me to his houſe, where was one Dale a Promoter, which ſaid to mee: Alas good woman, wherefore be you here?

What is that to you, ſaid I.

Dale a promotor.

You be not aſhamed, quoth Dale, to tell wherefore you came hither.

No, quoth I, that I am not: for it is for Chriſts Teſtament.

Chriſts Teſtament, quoth he? it is the Devils Teſtament.

Oh Lord, quoth I, God forbid that any man ſhould ſpeak any ſuch word.

Well well, quoth he, you ſhall be ordered well enough. You care not for burning, quoth hee. By Gods bloud, there muſt be ſome other meanes found for you.

What, quoth I, will you finde any worſe than you have found?

Marke the hope of the Papiſts.

Well, quoth he, you hope, and you hope: but your hope ſhall be the ſlope. For though the Queen taile, ſhe that you hope for ſhall never come at it: For there is my Lord Cardinals grace, and many more betweene her and it.

Then, quoth I, my hope is in none but God.

Then ſaid Cluny, Come with me: and ſo went I to the Lollards Tower. On the next day Darbiſhire ſent for mee againe, and enquired againe of thoſe Citizens that he enquired of before.

I anſwered, I knew them not.

Where were you, quoth he, at the Communion on Sunday was fortnight?

And I ſaid, in no place.

Then the Conſtable of S. Brides, being there, made ſute for me.

And Darbiſhire demanded of him if hee would be bound for me.

The Conſtable of Saint Brides ſurety for Iulian Living.

He anſwered, Yea. And ſo he was bound for my appearance betwixt that and Chriſtmas.

Then Darbiſhire ſaid, You be Conſtable, and ſhould give her good counſell.

So doe I, quoth he. For I bid her goe to maſſe, and to ſay as you ſay. For by the maſſe, if you ſay the Crow is white, I wil ſay ſo too.

Living & his wife delivered by the death of Q. Mary.

And thus much concerning the examination of William Living and his wife, whom although thou ſeeſt here delivered through the requeſt of women, his ſureties: yet it was no doubt, but that the deadly ſickneſſe of Queene Mary abated and bridled then the cruelty of thoſe Papiſts, which otherwiſe would never have let them goe.

The trouble and deliverance of Iohn Lithall.

John Lithall brought to examination by Ioh Avales.

AT the taking of William Living, it hapned that certaine of his bookes were in the cuſtody of one John Lithall, which knowne, the Conſtable of the Ward of Southwarke, with other of the Queenes ſervants, were ſent to his houſe, who breaking open his doores and cheſts, tooke away not only the bookes of the ſaid William Living, but alſo all his own bookes, writings, and bils of debts, which he never had againe. All this while Lithall was not at home.

The next Saturday after, as he was returned, and knowne to be at home, John Avales and certaine of the Queenes ſervants beſet his houſe all the night, with ſuch carefull watch, that as he in the morning iſſued out of his doores, thinking to eſcape their hands, John Avales ſuddenly bruſting out upon him, cried ſtop the traytor, ſtop the traytor. Whereat Lithall being amazed, looked backe.

Lithall brought before D. Darbiſhire chancellor.

And ſo John Avales came running to him, with other that were with him, ſaying, Ah ſirrah, you are a pretty traitorly fellow indeed, wee have had ſomewhat to doe to get you. To whom hee anſwered, that hee was a truer man to the Queenes Majeſty than hee. For you (ſaid he) are commanded by God to keepe holy the Sabbath day, and you ſeeke to ſhed your neighbours bloud on the Sabbath day. Remember that you muſt anſwer therefore to G O D. But hee ſaid, Come on you villaine, you muſt goe before the Councell. So was Lithall brought into Pauls Churchyard to the Biſhops Chancellor, by John Avales, ſaying, that hee had there caught the Captaine of theſe fellowes, and ſo cauſed him to bee called to examination before

Anno 1558.

Talke betweene Lethall and the Chancellor.

D. Darbiſhire, who entred talke with him in this wiſe.

Chan. What countreyman are you?

Lith. I am an Engliſh man, borne in Staffordſhire.

Chan. Where were you brought up?

Lith. In this our countrey of England.

Chan. In what Univerſity?

Lith. In no Univerſity, but in a free ſchoole.

Chan. We had certaine bookes from your houſe, and writings, wherein is both treaſon and hereſie.

Lith. Sir, There is neither treaſon nor hereſie in them.

Chan. Then he asked for certain other men that I knew.

Lith. If you have ought to lay to my charge, I will anſwer it: but I will have no other mans bloud upon my head.

Chan. Why come you not to the Church? Of what Church be you, that you come not to your owne pariſh Church?

Lith. I am of the Church of Chriſt, the fountain of all goodneſſe.

Chan. Have you no Miniſters of your Church but Chriſt?

Lith. We have others.

Chan. Where be they?

Lith. In the whole world, diſperſed, preaching and profeſſing the Goſpell and faith onely in our Savior Jeſus, as he commanded them.

Chan. You boaſt much every one of you of your faith and beliefe: let me heare therefore the effect how you beleeve.

Juſtification by faith onely.

Lith. I beleeve to be juſtified freely by Chriſt Jeſus, according to the ſaying of S. Paul to the Epheſians, without either deeds or works, or any thing that may be invented by man.

Chan. Faith cannot ſave without works.

Lith. That is contrary to the doctrine of the Apoſtles.

Chan. John Avales, you and the keeper have this fellow to priſon.

Cluny & Iohn Avales. Then John Avales and Cluny the Keeper had me into Pauls, and would have had me have ſeene the Apoſtles maſſe.

Lith. I know none the Apoſtles had, and therefore I will ſee none.

Cluny & Iohn Avales. Come kneele downe before the Roode, and ſay a Pater noſter, and an Ave in the worſhip of the five wounds.

Lithall denies to kneele before the Rood.

Lith. I am forbidden by Gods owne mouth to kneele to any idoll or image: therefore I will not.

Then they pulled me with great extremity, the one having me by one arme, and the other by the other, but God gave me at that preſent time more ſtrength than both theſe, his name be prayſed for it.

Then when they could not make me to kneele before the Roode, neither to ſee the maſſe, there gathered a great company about us, and all againſt me. Some ſpit on me, and ſaid, Fie on thee heretike, and other ſaid it was pitty I was not burned already.

Then they carried me to Lollards tower, and hanged me in a great paire of ſtockes, in which I lay three daies and three nights, till I was ſo lame that I could neither ſtirre nor move.

Then I offered the Keeper certaine mony and gold that I had about me, to releaſe mee out of the ſtockes: and he ſaid, I would not be ruled by him, either to ſee maſſe, or to kneele before the Roode, and therefore I ſhould lye there ſtill. But I ſaid I would never doe the thing that ſhould be againſt my conſcience: and though you have lamed my body, yet my conſcience is whole, I praiſe God for it. So ſhortly after hee let me out of the ſtockes, more for the love of my money (as it may be thought) than for any other affection, and within foure or five daies my wife got leave of Maſter Chancellor to come to mee, to bring mee ſuch things as were needfull for me, and there I lay five weekes and odde daies. In the which time divers of my neighbors and friends made ſute to the Chancellor for my deliverance: the Biſhop, as they ſaid, at that time being at Fulham ſicke. So my neighbors being there, about twenty of them, the Chancellor ſent for me out of the Lollards Tower to his owne houſe, and ſaid as followeth.

Lithals neighbours make ſute for him.

Chan. Lithall, here be of thy neighbours which have been with me to intreat for thee, and they have informed me that thou haſt beene a very honeſt and quiet neighbour among them, and I thinke it be Gods will that I ſhould deliver thee before my Lord come home. For if hee come, and thou goe home againe, I will be burned for thee: for I know his mind already in that matter.

Lith. I give you hearty thanks for your gentleneſſe, and my neighbors for their good report.

Chan. Lithall, if thy neighbors will be bound for thy forth comming whenſoever thou ſhalt be called for, and alſo if thou wilt be an obedient Subject, I ſhall bee content to deliver thee.

Neighb. If it pleaſe your worſhip we will bee bound for him in body and goods.

Chan. I will require no ſuch bond of you, but that two of you will be bound in twenty pound a peece, that he ſhall come to anſwer when hee ſhall be called.

Lith. Where finde you, Maſter Chancellor, in all the Scriptures, that the Church of God did binde any man for the profeſſion of his faith? which profeſſion you have heard of me, that all our juſtification, righteouſnes, and ſalvation commeth only and freely by the merits of our Savior Jeſus Chriſt, and all the inventions and works of men, be they never ſo glorious, be altogether vain, as the wiſe man ſaith.

Chan. Loe, where he is now. I put no ſuch matter to you; for in that I beleeve as you doe: but yet Saint James ſaith, That a man is juſtified by works.

S. James pounded.

Lith. Saint James ſpake to them that boaſted themſelves of faith, and ſhewed no workes of faith: But O M. Chancellor, remember I pray you, how all the promiſes and propheſies of the holy Scripture, even from the firſt promiſe that God made to Adam, and ſo even to the later end of the Revelation of S. John, do teſtifie that in the name of Jeſus, and onely by his merits, all that beleeve ſhal be ſaved from all their ſins and offences. Eſay ſaith, Chap. 65, I am found of them that ſought mee not, and am manifeſt to them that asked not after me: but againſt Iſrael he ſaith, All day long have I ſtretched out my hand to a people that beleeve not. And when the Jaylor asked Saint Paul, what he ſhould doe to be ſaved, the Apoſtle ſaid, Act. 16. Beleeve on the Lord Ieſus, and thou ſhalt be ſaved, and all thy houſhold.

Againe, Saint John ſaith in the Revelation, that there was none, neither in heaven nor in earth, neither under the earth, that was able to open the booke nor the ſeales thereof, but onely the Lambe Jeſus our onely Saviour. And Saint Paul ſaith, Hebrewes 9. With one offering hath he made perfect for ever them that are ſanctified.

Chan. With vaine glory you rehearſe much Scripture, as all the ſort of you doe: but you have no more underſtanding than a many of ſheepe. But to the purpoſe. Will you that your neighbors ſhall enter into bonds for you, or not?

Lithall refuſeth to put in bond.

Lith. By my minde they ſhall not. Wherefore I deſire you that you would not bind mee, but let me ſerve God with my conſcience freely. For it is written, Apoc.13. They that lead itno captivity, ſhal go into captivity, and they that ſtrike with the ſword ſhall periſh with the ſword.

Alſo it is written in the Goſpell of our Savior Jeſus Chriſt, That whoſo doth offend one of theſe little ones which beleeve in mee, it were better for him that a milſtone were hanged about his necke, aud that he were caſt into the depth of the ſea, Matth.18. Of the which I am aſſured by his holy ſpirit that I am one. Wherefore be you well aſſured that ſuch mercy as you ſhew, unto you ſhall be ſhewed the like.

Chan. You are a mad man. I would not bind you, but that I muſt needs have ſomwhat to ſhew for your deliverance. Then he called two of my neighbors, Thomas Daniel, and Saunders Maybe, which offered themſelves to be bound, and called mee before them, and ſaid, I have a letter of his owne hand writing, with his name and ſeale at it, with a booke alſo againſt the Regiment of women, for the which I could make him to bee hanged, drawne and quartered, but on my faith I will him no more hurt than I meane to my owne ſoule.

Lith. I deſire you that be my neighbors and friends, that you will not enter into bonds for me: for you know not the danger thereof, neither I my ſelfe: it goeth againſt my conſcience that yee ſhould ſo doe.

Chan. Why? I will not binde you to doe any thing againſt your conſcience.

His neighbors enter into bloud for him.

Neighb. Then they made the bond and ſealed to it, and willed me that I ſhould ſeale to it alſo, and I ſaid that I would not, neither could I obſerve the bond, and therefore I would not ſet to my hand.

Chan. It is pity that thou haſt ſo much favour ſhewed thee: yet for theſe honeſt mens ſakes I will diſcharge thee.

Notwithſtanding all theſe diſſembling words of Maſter Darbiſhire, pretending for favor of his ſureties, to ſet him at liberty, it was no ſuch thing, nor any zeale of charity that moved him ſo to doe, but only feare of the time, underſtanding the dangerous and unrecoverable ſickneſſe of Queen Mary, which then began ſomwhat to aſſwage the cruell proceeding of theſe perſecutors, whereby they durſt not do that they would: for elſe Lithall was not like to have eſcaped ſo eaſily.

Edward Grew.

Edward Grew and Appline his wife.

MOreover, there was one Edward Grew prieſt, and Appline his wife, compelled to fly from their dwelling at a towne called Broke; and the man being very aged, travelled abroad to keepe a good conſcience.

At the laſt he was taken and laid in Colcheſter caſtle, where he remained till Q. Elizabeth came to her Regall Seat, and by the alteration of religion he was delivered. His wife, good woman, was in great care for him, and to her power did what ſhe could to ſuccour him.

William Browne.

M. Browne of Suffolke.

WIlliam Browne, Parſon of little Stanham, in the County of Suffolke, made a Sermon in the ſaid Towne, incontinently after the buriall of our good King Edward, and in his Sermon he ſaid, There goeth a report that our good King is buried with a maſſe by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, hee having a Miter upon his head. But if it were ſo, ſaith hee, they are all traytors that ſo doe, becauſe it is both againſt the truth, and the Lawes of this Realme, and it is great idolatry and blaſphemy, and againſt the glory of God; and they are no friends either to God, the King, or yet unto the Realme, that ſo do.

Rob. Blomefield, Perſecutor.

Edw. Golding under-Sheriffe. Cornewalis high ſheriffe.

For this his preaching one Robert Blomefield, an adverſary to the truth, being then Conſtable of the ſaid towne, and Bayliffe unto Sir John Jerningham Knight (the chiefe Lord of the town) immediately rode forth, and brought home with him one Edward Goulding, which was then underſheriffe, Sir Thomas Cornewalis being then high ſheriffe.

So the ſaid Golding and Blomefield ſent for certain men of the ſaid towne, and examined them for the Sermon. Whereunto they made but a ſmall anſwer. Then the Sheriffe made a bill, and ſo feared the men, that two or three of them ſet to their hands, and one of them never joyed after, but it was a griefe to him till he died.

M. Browne perſecuted and taken.

Then did they take men with them unto the Parſons houſe, and in the night they tooke him, and with watchmen kept him untill it was day. Then ſhould hee have been carried the next day to the Councell; but the ſaid Robert Blomefield was taken ſo ſicke, that he was like to die: ſo that he could not carry him for his life.

M. Browne delivered.

Then the ſaid ſheriffe ſent him to Ipſwich again and there he was for a time. Then he was ſent to Bury priſon, and from thence to the Councell, and then into the Fleet: and ſo he lay in priſon from the beginning of harveſt till it was nigh Chriſtmas, and he ſaid God gave him ſuch anſwers to make when he was examined, that hee was delivered with quietneſſe of conſcience. And having his liberty, hee came againe unto the foreſaid towne; and becauſe hee would not goe to maſſe, his living was taken away, and he and his wife were conſtrained to fly here and there for his life and conſcience. In the laſt yeare of Queen Maries raigne God did take him out of this life in peace.

Example of Gods puniſhment upon a Perſecutor.

Where moreover is to be noted, that this Robert Blomefield abovenamed, immediately after he had apprehended the ſaid Brown, fell very ſick: And although at that time he was a wealthy man and of a great ſubſtance (beſide his land which was better than twenty pound a yeare) after this time, God ſo plagued his houſhold, that his eldeſt ſon died, and his wife had a pining ſicknes till ſhe departed this life alſo.

Then married he another, a rich widow: but all would not help, and nothing would proſper: For he had a ſore pining ſickneſſe, being full of botches and ſores, whereby he waſted away both body and goods, till he died.

So when he died, hee was above nineſcore pounds in dept, and it was never heard of any repentance he had. But a little before his death he bragged, and threatened a good man, one Simon Harliſton, to put him forth to the officers, becauſe he did weare no ſurplis when he ſaid ſervice.

Wherefore it is pity ſuch baits of Popery are left to the enemies to take Chriſtians in. God take them away, or elſe us from them: for God knoweth they be the cauſe of much blindneſſe and ſtrife amongſt men.

Furthermore, out of the ſaid towne were conſtrained to fly Robert Boela and John Trapne, becauſe they would not goe to maſſe and receive their ſacrament of the altar.

Elizabeth Young.

YE heard before in the treatiſe of the ſcourging of Tho. Greene, how he was troubled and beaten by Doctor Story, for a certaine booke called Antichriſt, which he receiued of a woman, becauſe in no caſe he would detect her.

This woman was one Elizabeth Young, who comming from Emden to England, brought with her diuers bookes, and ſparſed them abroad in London; for the which ſhee, being at length eſpyed and layd faſt, was brought to examination 13. times before the Catholike Inquiſitors of hereticall prauity. Of the which her examinations, nine haue come to our hands.

Wherein how fiercely ſhee was aſſaulted, how ſhamefully ſhe was reuiled, how miſerably handled, and what anſwers ſhe made unto the aduerſaries in her owne defence, and finally after all this, how ſhe eſcaped and paſſed through the pikes, (being yet, as I heare ſay, aliue) I thought to giue the Reader here to ſee and underſtand.

The firſt examination of Elizabeth Young, before M. Huſſie.

The 1. examination of Eli. Young.

WHo examined her of many things: Firſt, where ſhe was borne, and who was her father and mother.

Eliz. Young. Sir, all this is but vaine talk, and very ſuperfluous. It is to fill my head with fantaſies, that I ſhould not be able to anſwer unto ſuch things as I came for. Ye haue not (I thinke) put me in priſon to know who is my father and mother. But I pray you goe to the matter that I came hither for.

M. Huſſie. Wherefore wenteſt thou out of the Realme?

Eliz. To kéep my conſcience cleane.

Huſ. When waſt thou at maſſe?

Eliz. Not this thrée yeares.

Huſ. Then waſt thou not there thrée yeares before that?

Eliz. No ſir, nor yet thrée yeares before that: for if I were I had euill luck.

Huſ. How old art thou?

Eliz. Forty and upwards.

Huſ. Twenty of thoſe yeares thou wenteſt to maſſe.

Eli. Yea and twenty more I may, and yet come home as wiſe as I went thither firſt, for I underſtand it not.

Huſ. Why wilt thou not goe to the maſſe?

Eliz. Young refuſeth to go to maſſe.

Eliz. Sir, my conſcience will not ſuffer me: for I had rather all the world ſhould accuſe mee, than mine owne conſcience.

Huſ. What if a louſe or a flea ſticke upon thy skinne, and bite thy fleſh? thou muſt make a conſcience in taking her off; is there not a conſcience in it?

Eliz. That is but an eaſie argument to diſplace the Scriptures, and eſpecially in ſuch a part as my ſaluation dependeth upon: for it is but an eaſie conſcience that a man can make,

Huſ. But why wilt thou not ſweare upon the Euangeliſt before a Iudge?

Eliz. Becauſe I know not what a book oath is.

Huſ. Then he began to teach her the book oath.

Eliz. Young denieth to ſwear, & why.

Eliz. Sir I doe not underſtand it, and therefore I will not learne it.

Huſ. Then ſaid he, thou wilt not underſtand it: and with that roſe up and went his way.

The ſecond examination before Doctor Martin.

The 2. examination of Eli. Young. She troubled for bringing ouer books.

WHo ſaid to her, Woman, thou art come from beyond the ſea, and haſt brought with thée books of hereſie and treaſon, and thou muſt confeſſe to us who tranſlated them, printed them, and who ſent them ouer (for once I know thee to be but a meſſenger) and in ſo doing the Quéenes highnes will be good to thée (for ſhe hath forgiuen greater things than this) and thou ſhalt finde as much fauor as is poſſible. But if thou be ſtubborne, and wilt not confeſſe, thou wilt bee wondrous euill handled: for we know the truth already, but this we doe, onely to ſée whether thou wilt be true of thy word or no.

Eliz. Sir, ye haue my confeſſion, and more than that I cannot ſay.

D. Martin threatneth her with the rack.

Thou muſt ſay more, and ſhalt ſay more. Doeſt thou think that we will be fully anſwered by this examination that thou haſt made? Thou rebell whore and traitorly heretike, thou doeſt refuſe to ſweare upon the Euangeliſt before a Iudge, I heare ſay. Thou ſhalt be racked inchmeale, thou traytorly whore and heretike, but thou ſhalt ſwear before a Iudge before thou goe: yea, and thou ſhalt be made to confeſſe how many bookes thou haſt ſold, and to whom.

Eliz. Sir, I underſtand not what an oath is, and therefore I will take no ſuch thing upon me. And no man hath bought any books of me as yet, for theoſe books that I had, you Commiſſioners haue them all.

Martin. Thou traitorly whore, we know that thou haſt ſold a number of bookes, yea, and to whom: and how many times thou haſt béen here, and where thou layeſt, and euery place that thou haſt béen in. Doeſt thou think that thou haſt fooles in hand?

Eliz. No ſir, ye be too wiſe for me: for I cannot tell how many places I haue been in my ſelfe: but if it were in Turky, I ſhould haue meat, and drinke, and lodging for my money.

Eliz. Young charged for ſpeaking againſt the Queene.

Martin. Thou rebell whore, thou haſt ſpoken euill words by the Queene, and thou dwelleſt amongſt a ſort of traitors and rebels that cannot giue the Queene a good word.

Eliz. I am not able to accuſe any man thereof, neither yet is there any man that can proue any ſuch things by me, as ye lay unto my charge. For I know by Gods word, and Gods book hath taught me what is my duty to God, and unto my Queen, and therefore (as I ſaid) I am aſſured that no man liuing upon the earth, can proue any ſuch things by me.

Mart. Thou rebell and traitorly whore, thou ſhalt be ſo racked and handled, that thou ſhalt be an example to all ſuch traitorly whores and heretikes; and thou ſhalt be made to ſweare by the holy Euangeliſts, and confeſſe to whom thou haſt ſold all and euery of theſe hereticall bookes that thou haſt ſold: for wee know what number thou haſt ſold, and to whom; but thou ſhalt be made to confeſſe it in ſpite of thy bloud.

Eliz. Here is my carkaſſe; doe with it what you will, and more than that you cannot haue. M. Martin, ye can haue no more but my bloud.

Then fared he, as though he had béen ſtarke mad, and ſaid, Martin? Why calleſt thou mee Martin?

Eliz. Sir, I know well enough, for I haue been before you ere now. Ye deliuered me once at Weſtminſter.

Mart. Where didſt thou dwell then?

Eliz. I dwelled in the Minories.

Eliz. Young and her husband deliuered by D. Martin.

Mart. I deliuered thee and thy husband both; and I thought then that thou wouldeſt haue done otherwiſe than thou doeſt now. For if thou hadſt been before any Biſhop in England, and ſaid the words that thou didſt before me, thou hadſt fried a fagot: and though thou didſt not burne then, thou art like to burne or hang now.

Eliz. Sir, I promiſed you then, that I would neuer be fed with an unknown tongue, and no more will I yet.

Mart. I ſhall feed thee well enough. Thou ſhalt beſed with that (I warrant thee) which ſhall be ſmally to thine eaſe.

Eliz. Doe what God ſhall ſuffer you to doe: for more ye ſhall not. And then he aroſe, and ſo departed, and went to the Keepers houſe, and ſaid to the wife. Whom haſt thou ſuffered to come to this vile traitorly whore and heretike to ſpeake with her? Then ſaid the Keepers wife, as God receive my ſoule, here came neither man, woman, nor childe, to aske for her.

Eliz. Young commanded to cloſe priſon, to have one day bread, and another day water.

Martin. If any man, woman, or childe, come to aske for her, I charge thee in paine of death, that they be laid faſt, and give her one day bread, and another day water.

Eliz. If ye take away my meat, I truſt that God will take away my hunger: and ſo he departed and ſaid, that was too good for her: and then was ſhe ſhut up under two lockes in the Chink, where ſhe was before.

The third examination before Doctor Martin againe.

The 3. examination of Eliz. Young.

D. Martin ſeeketh to know how many Gentlewomen were fled over the ſea.

Then was ſhe brought before him in his chamber, within my Lord Chancellors houſe. Who asked her, ſaying, Elizabeth, wilt thou confeſſe theſe things that thou haſt been examined upon? For thou knoweſt that I have been thy friend, and in ſo doing, I will be thy friend againe; giving her many faire words, and then demanding of her how many Gentlemen were beyond the ſeas.

Eliz. It is too much for me to tell you how many are on the other ſide.

Mart. No, I meane but in Frankford and Emden, where thou haſt been.

Eliz. Sir, I did never take account of them; it is a thing that I looke not for.

Mart. When ſhall I have a true word come out of thy mouth?

Eliz. I have told you the truth, but becauſe that it ſoundeth not to your mind, therefore ye will not credit it.

Eliz. Young again threatened with the racke.

Mart. Wilt thou yet confeſſe? and if thou wilt, that that I have promiſed, I will doe: and if thou wilt not, I promiſe thee thou muſt goe even hence to the racke, and therefore confeſſe.

Eliz. I can ſay no more than I have ſaid.

Mart. Well, forſomuch as ſhe will confeſſe no more, have her away to the rack, and then ſhe will be marred. Then anſwered a prieſt that ſat there, and ſaid, Woman, take an oath, and confeſſe. Wilt thou be hurt for other men?

She againe refuſeth to ſweare to accuſe other.

Eliz. I can confeſſe no more than I have. Doe with my carkaſſe what ye will.

Mart. Did ye ever heare the like of this heretike? What a ſtout heretike is this? We have the truth, and we know the truth, and yet look whether ſhe will confeſſe. There is no remedy, but ſhe muſt needs to the racke, and therefore away with her, and ſo commanded her out of the doore, and called her keeper unto him, and ſaid to him: There is no remedy but this heretike muſt bee racked; and talked with him more, but what it was ſhe heard not.

Then he called her in againe, and ſaid, Wilt thou not confeſſe, and keep thee from the racke? I adviſe thee ſo to doe: for if thou wilt not, thou knoweſt not the paine yet, but thou ſhalt doe.

Eliz. Sir, I can confeſſe no more. Do with my carkaſſe what ye will.

Eliz. Young commanded againe to the Clinke.

Mart. Keeper, away with her. Thou knoweſt what I ſaid. Let her know the paine of the racke. And ſo ſhe departed, thinking no leſſe, but that ſhee ſhould have gon to the racke, till ſhe ſaw the keeper turne toward the Clinke again. And thus did God alienate their hearts, and diminiſh their tyranous power, unto the time of further examination: for ſhe was brought before the Biſhop, the Dean, and the Chancellor, and other Commiſſioners, firſt and laſt, 13. times.

Anno 1558.

The fourth examination was before the Biſhop of London, Sir Roger Cholmley, D. Cooke, the Recorder of London, D. Roper of Kent, and D. Martin, as concerning her faith, &c.

The 4. examination of E Young. D. Martin preſenteth her to the Commiſſioners.

Firſt ſhe being preſented by D. Martin, before the Biſhop of London, Doctor Martin began to declare againſt her, ſaying, The Lord Chancellor hath ſent you here a woman, which hath brought books over from Emden, where all theſe bookes of hereſie and treaſon are printed, and hath therewith filled all the land with treaſon and hereſie; neither yet will ſhe confeſſe who tranſlated them, nor who printed them, nor yet who ſent them over. Wherefore my Lord Chancellor committeth her unto my Lord of London, he to doe with her as he ſhall thinke good. For ſhe will confeſſe nothing, but that ſhe bought theſe ſaid books in Amſterdam, and ſo brought them over to ſell for gaine.

D. Cook. Let her head be truſſed in a ſmall line, and make her to confeſſe.

The booke called Antichriſt.

Mart. The booke is called Antichriſt, and ſo may it be well called, for it ſpeaketh againſt Ieſus Chriſt and the Queene. Beſides that ſhee hath a certaine ſparke of the Anabaptiſts, for ſhe refuſeth to ſweare upon the foure Evangeliſts before a Iudge: For I my ſelfe and M. Huſſie have had her before us foure times, but wee cannot bring her to ſweare. Wherefore my Lord Chancellor would that ſhe ſhould abſtain and faſt, for ſhe hath not faſted a great while: For ſhe hath lien in the Clinke a good while, where ſhee had too much her liberty.

Eliz. Young a great while in the Clinke.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, why wilt thou not ſwear before a Iudge? that is the right trade of the Anabaptiſts.

Eliz. My Lord, I will not ſweare that this hand is mine.

No, ſaid the Biſhop? and why?

Eliz. My Lord, Chriſt ſaith, That whatſoever is more than yea, yea, or nay, nay, it commeth of evill. And moreover, I know not what an oath is: and therefore I will take no ſuch thing upon me.

Eliz. Young refuſeth to ſweare, and why.

Eliz. Young thought to be no woman.

Then ſaid Cholmley, twenty pound, it is a man in a womans clothes, twenty pound it is a man.

Boner. Thinke you ſo my Lord.

Chol. Yea, my Lord, &c.

Eliz. My Lord, I am a woman.

Biſh. Sweare her upon a booke, ſeeing it is but a queſtion asked.

Then ſaid Cholmley, I will lay twenty pound it is a man.

Then D. Cooke brought her a booke, commanding her to lay thereon her hand.

Eliz. No, my Lord, I will not ſweare: for I know not what an oath is. But I ſay that I am a woman, and have children.

Biſh. That know not we: wherefore ſweare.

Cholm. Thou ill favoured whore, lay thy hand upon the booke; I will lay on mine: and ſo hee laid his hand upon the booke.

Eliz. So will not I mine.

Then the Biſhop ſpake a word in Latine out of S. Paul, as concerning ſwearing.

Eliz. My Lord, if you ſpeake to me of S. Paul then ſpeak Engliſh, for I underſtand you not.

Biſh. I dare ſweare that thou doſt not.

Eliz. My Lord, Saint Paul ſaith, that five words ſpoken in a language that may be underſtood, are better than many in a forrain or ſtrange tongue which is unknown.

Doctor Cooke. Sweare before us whether thou be a man or a woman.

Eliz. If ye will not beleeve mee, then ſend for women into a ſecret place, and I will be tried.

Cholm. Thou art an ill favored whore.

Sacrament of the altar.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, How beleeveſt thou in the ſacrament of the altar?

Eliz. My Lord, if it will pleaſe you that I ſhall declare mine owne faith, I will.

The Biſhop. Tell me how thou beleeveſt in the ſacrament of the altar?

Eliz. Will it pleaſe you that I ſhall declare my faith? And if it be not good, then teach mee a better, and I will beleeve it.

D.Cook. That is well ſaid, declare thy faith.

The confeſſion & faith of Eliz. Young.

Eliz. I beleeve in God the father almighty, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, three perſons and one God. I beleeve all the articles of my Creed. I beleeve all things written in the holy Scripture, and all things agreeable with the Scripture, given by the holy Ghoſt into the Church of Chriſt, ſet forth and taught by the Church of Chriſt, I beleeve that Ieſus Chriſt, the only ſonne of God, that immaculate Lambe, came into the world to ſave ſinners, and that in him, by him, and through him I am made cleane from my ſinnes, and without him I could not. I beleeve that in the holy ſacrament of Chriſts body and bloud, which he did inſtitute and ordaine, and left among his Diſciples that night before hee was betrayed, when I doe receive this Sacrament in faith and ſpirit, I doe receive Chriſt.

The Sacrament to be received in ſpirit and faith.

Biſh. Nomore, I warrant you, but the Sacrament of Chriſts body and bloud, received but in ſpirit and faith, with thoſe heretikes.

Cholmly cannot abide ſpirit and faith.

Chol. Ah whore, ſpirit and faith, whore?

Eliz. This Sacrament never man could or did make, but only he, that did what no man could doe.

Mart. Then thou muſt allow that graſſe is a ſacrament: for who could make graſſe but he only?

Inſtitution of the ſacrament by Chriſt only once for all.

Eliz. Sir, he hath ſuffered, and made a ſufficient ſacrifice once for all, and ſo hath he made his ſacrament ſufficient once for all: for there was never man that could ſay, Take, eat, this is my body, that is broken for you, but only Ieſus Chriſt, who had his body broken for the ſinnes of the world; which Sacrament he hath left here amongſt us for a teſtimoniall of his death, even to the worlds end.

Mart. Who taught thee this doctrine? did Scory?

Eliz. Yea, Biſhop Scory and other that I have heard.

Biſh. Why, is Scory biſhop now?

Eliz. If that doe offend you, call him D. Scory, if ye will.

Roper. I knew when he was but a poore doctor.

Mart. What doe ye call Scorie?

Eliz. Our ſuperintendent.

Biſh. Loe their Superintendent.

Mart. And what are ye called?

Eliz. Chriſts Congregation.

Biſh. Loe, Chriſts Congregation, I warrant you.

D.Cooke. What living hath Scorie?

Eliz. Sir, as far as I doe know, he liveth by his own, for I know no man that giveth him ought.

Recorder. Yes, I warrant you, he hath enough ſent him out of England.

Eliz. Sir, I know no ſuch thing.

Cholm. Harke whore, harke; harke how I doe beleeve,

Eliz. My Lord, I have told you my beliefe.

Chol. Harke, thou ill favored whore, how I doe beleeve. When the Prieſt hath ſpoken the words of Conſecration, I doe beleeve that there remaineth the very body that was borne of the Virgin Mary, was hanged on the croſſe, was dead and buried, and deſcended into hell, and roſe againe on the third day, and aſcended into heaven, and ſitteth at the right hand of God. The ſame body when the Prieſt hath ſpoken the words, commeth downe, and when the Prieſt lifteth up his body on this wiſe (hee lifting up his hands, ſaid) there it is.

Confeſſion of Cholmleys faith.

Eliz. I have told you alſo how I do beleeve.

Mart. Away with her.

Cholm. Ah evill favoured whore, nothing but ſpirit and faith whore?

Mart. Away with her, wee have more to talke withall.

Then was ſhe carried into the Colehouſe, and ſearched for bookes, & then put into the ſtockhouſe, and her knife, girdle, and apron taken from her.

Eliz. Young carried into the ſtockhouſe.

The fifth examination before the Biſhop of Londons Chancellor.

The 5. examination of Eliz. Young.

Then was ſhe brought out of the ſtockehouſe, & brought before the Biſhops Chancellor, who required of her what age ſhe was of.

Eliz. Sir, forty yeares and upwards.

The Chan. Why, thou art a woman of a faire yeares; what ſhouldeſt thou meddle with the Scriptures? it is neceſſary for thee to beleeve, and that is enough. It is more fit for thee to meddle with thy diſtaffe, than to meddle with the Scriptures. What is thy beliefe? I would heare it: for it cannot be good, in that thou art brought into priſon.

Eliz. Sir, if it will pleaſe you to heare, I will declare it unto you. But I pray you that you will take your pen and write it, and then examine it; and if ye find any thing therein that is not fit for a Chriſtian woman, then teach me better, and I will learne it.

Eliz. Young offered againe to declare her beliefe.

Chan, Well ſaid. But who ſhall judge betweene thee and me?

Eliz. The Scripture.

Chan. Wilt thou ſtand by that?

Eliz. Yea ſir.

Chan. Well go thy way out at the doore a little while, for I am buſie, and I will call for thee anon againe.

Then he called me againe and ſaid, Now woman, the time is too long to write. Say thy mind, and I will beare it in my head.

Then Elizabeth began, and declared her faith to him, as ſhe had done before the Biſhop.

Really, corporally, ſubſtantially.

Chan. Woman, ſpirit and faith I do allow, but doeſt not thou beleeve that thou doeſt receive the body of Chriſt, really, corporally, & ſubſtantially?

Eliz. Theſe words, really and corporally, I underſtand not; as for ſubſtantially, I take it, ye meane I ſhould beleeve that I ſhould receive his humane body (which is upon the right hand of God, and can occupy no more places at once) and that beleeve not I.

Chan. Thou muſt beleeve this, or elſe thou art damned.

Eliz. Sir, can ye give me beliefe or faith?

Chan. No, God muſt give it thee.

Eliz. God hath given me no ſuch faith or beliefe.

The Chancellor then declared a text of S. Paul in Latine, and then in Engliſh, ſaying, I could make thee beleeve, but that thou haſt a cankered heart, and wilt not beleeve. Who then can make thee to beleeve?

Eliz. You ſaid even now, that faith or beliefe commeth of God, and ſo beleeve I, and then may not I beleeve an untruth to be a truth.

Faith commeth of God: Ergo, no untruth ought to be beleeved.

Chan.

Chriſt is fleſh of our fleſh, but not in our fleſh. Iohn 6.

Chan. Doeſt thou not beleeve that Chriſts fleſh is fleſh in thy fleſh?

Eliz. No ſir, I beleeve not that; for my fleſh ſhall putrifie and rot.

Chan. Chriſt ſaid, my fleſh is fleſh in fleſh.

Eliz. Who ſo receiveth him fleſhly, ſhall have a fleſhly reſurrection.

Chan. Chriſt ſaith in the 6. of Iohn, My fleſh is meat indeed, and my blood is drinke indeed.

Eliz. Chriſt preached to the Capernaites, ſaying; Except ye eate the fleſh of the ſon of man, and drinke his blood, ye ſhall not have life in you: and the Capernaites murmured at it. And his Diſciples alſo murmured, ſaying among themſelves, This is an hard ſaying, and who can abide it? Chriſt underſtood their meaning, and ſaid; Are ye alſo offended? Will ye alſo goe away? What and if ye ſhall ſee the ſon of man aſcend up to heaven, from whence he came? will that offend you? It is the ſpirit that quickneth, the fleſh profiteth nothing. I pray you ſir, what meaneth Chriſt by that?

This man dare not expound the ſcripture, yet he dare judge upon hereſie.

Chan. O God forbid. Would ye have me to interpret the Scriptures? We muſt leave that for our old ancient fathers, which have ſtudied Scriptures a long time, and have the Ghoſt given unto them.

Eliz. Why ſir, have you not the holy Ghoſt given and revealed unto you?

The Papiſts dare not aſſure themſelves to have the holy Ghoſt.

Chan. No, God forbid that I ſhould ſo beleeve; but I hope, I hope: But ye ſay, ye are of the ſpirit. Will you ſay that ye have no profit in Chriſts fleſh?

The Capernaites faith.

Eliz. Sir, we have our profit in Chriſts fleſh, but not as the Capernaites did underſtand it: For they underſtood that they muſt eat his fleſh as they did eat Oxe fleſh and other, and drinke his blood, as we drinke wine or beere out of a bowle. But ſo we muſt not receive it. But our profit that we have by Chriſt, is to beleeve that his body was broken upon the Croſſe, and his blood ſhed for our ſinnes; that is the very meaning of Chriſt, that ſo we ſhould eate his fleſh, and drinke his blood, when he ſaid; My fleſh is meate indeed, and my blood is drinke indeed.

The place of Iohn, cap. 6. expounded how Chriſts fleſh is meate.

Chan. How doth thy body live, if Chriſts fleſh is not fleſh in thy fleſh?

Eliz. Sir, I was a body before I had a ſoule; which body God had created, and yet it could not live, till God had breathed life into me, and by that life doth my body live. And when it ſhall pleaſe God to diſſolve my life, my fleſh will offer it ſelfe unto the place from whence it came, and through the merits of Chriſt my ſoule will offer it ſelfe to the place from whence it came.

Chriſts fleſh is fleſh in our fleſh, ſay the Papiſts.

Cha. Yea, but if thou do not beleeve that Chriſts fleſh is fleſh in thy fleſh, thou canſt not be ſaved.

Eliz. Sir, I do not beleeve that.

Chan, Why, doth not Chriſt ſay, My fleſh is meate indeed, and my blood is drinke indeed? Canſt thou deny that?

Chriſts fleſh is meat for our ſoule ſay the Chriſtians.

Eliz. I deny not that; for Chriſts fleſh and blood is meat and drink for my ſoul, the food of my ſoul. For whoſoever beleeveth that Ieſus Chriſt the Son of God hath dyed and ſhed his blood for his ſins, his ſoule feedeth thereon for ever.

Chan. When thou receiveſt the Sacrament of the Altar, doeſt thou not beleeve that thou doeſt receive Chriſts body?

In the ſacrament miniſtred and received according to Chriſts inſtitution, we receive Chriſt.

Eliz. Sir, when I doe receive the Sacrament which Chriſt did inſtitute and ordaine the night before he was betrayed, and left among his Diſciples, as often (I ſay) as I receive it, I beleeve that ſpiritually, and by faith I receive Chriſt. And of this Sacrament, I know Chriſt himſelfe to be the author, and none but he. And this ſame Sacrament is an eſtabliſhment to my conſcience, and an augmenting to my faith.

Chan. Why, did not Chriſt take bread, and gave thankes, and brake it, and gave it to his Diſciples, and ſaid; Take, eate, this is my body that is given for you? Did he give them his body, or no?

Eliz. He alſo tooke the cup, and gave thankes to his Father, and gave it unto his Diſciples, ſaying; Drinke ye all hereof: for this is the cup of the New Teſtament in my blood, which ſhall be ſhed for many. Now I pray you ſir, let mee aſk you one queſtion: Did he give the cup the name of his blood, or elſe the wine that was in the cup?

One queſtion ſolved by another.

Then was he very angry, and ſaid; Doeſt thou think that thou haſt an hedge-Prieſt in hand?

Eliz. No ſir, I take you not to be an hedge-Prieſt. I take you for a Doctor.

Chan. So me thinketh. Thou wilt take upon thee to teach me.

Eliz. No ſir: But I let you know what I know; and by argument one ſhall know more.

The Sacrament a witneſſe both of Chriſts death and of his comming againe.

Chriſt ſaid; As oft as ye doe this, doe it in the remembrance of me; but a remembrance is not of a thing preſent, but abſent. Alſo S. Paul ſaith; So oft as ye ſhall eate of this bread, and drinke of this cup, ye ſhall ſhew forth the Lords death till he come: Then we may not looke for him here, untill his comming again at the later day. Again, is not this article of our beleefe true, He ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence he ſhall come to judge both the quicke and the dead? But if he ſhall not come before he come to Iudgement, then how is he here preſent in your Sacrament of the Altar? Wherefore I beleeve that the humane body of Chriſt occupieth no more but one place at once; for when he was here, he was not there.

Chriſts body occupieth but one place at once.

The ſixth examination before the ſaid Chancellor.

The ſixth examination of Eliz. Young.

WHo ſaid unto her; Woman, the laſt time that thou waſt before me, our talk was concerning the Sacrament.

Eliz. Sir, true it is, and I truſt that I ſaid nothing that ye can deny by the Scriptures.

The fleſhly reaſon of the Papiſts.

Chan. Yes, thou wilt not beleeve that Chriſts fleſh is fleſh in thy fleſh.

Eliz. No ſir, God hath given me no ſuch beliefe; for it cannot be found by the Scriptures.

Chan. Wilt thou beleeve nothing but what is in the Scripture? Why, how many Sacraments doeſt thou finde in the Scripture?

Eliz. The Church of Chriſt doth ſet down twain.

Chan. I will as well finde ſeven by the Scripture, as thou ſhalt finde twain.

Name of ſacraments given by the Church. Two Sacraments.

Eliz. Sir, I talke not to you thereof, but I ſay that the Church of Chriſt ſetteth out twaine, and I have been taught no more.

Chan. What are thoſe twaine?

Eliz. The Sacrament of Chriſts body and blood, and the Sacrament of Baptiſme.

Chan. What ſaiſt thou by the Sacrament of Wedlocke?

Wedlocke.

Eliz. I have not heard it called a Sacrament, but the holy eſtate of Matrimony, which ought to be kept of all men that take it upon them.

Chan. How ſaiſt thou by Prieſts? Is it good that they ſhould marry? is it to be kept of them?

Prieſts marriage.

Eliz. I come not hither to reaſon any ſuch matters, for I am no Divine, and alſo it is no part of my faith.

Chan. Can ye not tell? ye ſhall tell ere ever you goe.

Eliz. Sir, then muſt ye keepe me a good while:

for I have not ſtudied the Scriptures for it.

Chan. No? why, ye will not be aſhamed to flée unto the higheſt myſtery, even to the Sacrament at the firſt daſh, and ye are not afraid to argue with the beſt Doctor in the land.

Eliz. Gods myſteries I will not meddle with, but all things that are written, are written for our edification.

Praying for the dead.

Chan. What ſay you by prayer for the dead? is it not méet that if a mans friend be dead, his friend commend his ſoule unto God?

Eliz. There is no Chriſtian man that will commend his friend nor his foe unto the devill. And whether it be good for him when he is dead or no, ſure I am, that it is good when he is alive.

Oblation for the dead.

Chan. Then thou alloweſt not prayer to bée good for them when they be dead, and lying in Purgatory. Is it not méet that prayer be made unto God for them?

Purgatory.

Eliz. Sir, I never heard in the Scriptures of Purgatory, but in the Scripture I have heard of heaven and hell.

Chan. Why, ye have nothing but the ſkimming of the Scriptures. Our ancient fathers could finde out in the bottome of the Scriptures that there is a Purgatory. Yea, they could finde it in the New Teſtament, that a Prieſt ſhall take the Sacrament, and goe to the Altar, and make an oblation, and offer it up every day.

Eliz. Sir, that could never be found in the Bible nor Teſtament, as far as ever I could heare.

The holy communion blaſphemed.

Chan. Whom doeſt thou heare reade either the Bible or Teſtament, but a ſort of Schiſmatikes, bawdy Biſhops, and hedge-Prieſts (which have brought into the Church a ſtinking communion, which was never heard of in any place in the world, but here in England) which have deceived the King and all the Nobility, and all the whole Realme.

Eliz. Sir, it is a vile name that ye give them all.

So many martyrs have been ſlain, and yet the papiſts brag as though none will come forth to anſwer them.

Chan. Where are all the hedge-knaves become now, that they come not to their anſwer?

Eliz. Anſwer ſir? why, they have anſwered both with the Scriptures, and alſo with their blood, and then where were you that ye came not forth to anſwer in their times? I never knew any of you that were troubled, but twaine, and that was not for Gods Word, it was for their diſobedience.

Chan. No, I pray you? did ye not know that we were killed, hanged, burned, and headed?

Eliz. Sir, I never knew that any of you ever was either hanged, killed, burned, or headed.

Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter.

Chan. No? did ye never heare that the Biſhop of Rocheſter loſt his head for the ſupremacy of the Biſhops of Rome?

Eliz. Then he died not for Gods Word.

Nothing to be received to ſalvation but only that which is found or founded in Scripture.

Chan. Well, thou wilt beléeve nothing but that which is written in Gods Word. Where canſt thou finde the Sabbath written in the Scripture, by the name of the Sabbath? For the right Sabbath day will I prove to be Saturday. Or where canſt thou finde the articles of the Créede in the Scripture by the name of the Articles? Or where canſt thou finde in the Scripture, that Chriſt went downe into hell?

Eliz. What place or part in the Scripture can ye finde to diſprove any of theſe things?

Chan. What Prieſt haſt thou lien withall, that thou haſt ſo much Scripture? Thou art ſome Prieſts woman, I think, for thou wilt take upon thée to reaſon, and teach the beſt Doctor in all the land, thou.

Eliz. I was never yet Prieſts wife, nor yet Prieſts woman.

Chan. Have I touched your conſcience?

Eliz. No ſir, ye have not touched my conſcience, but beware ye hurt not your owne.

Chan. Thou haſt read a little in the Bible or Teſtament, and thou thinkeſt that thou art able to reaſon with a Doctor that hath gone to ſchoole thirty yéeres; and before God, I thinke if I had talked thus much with a Iew, as I have done with thée, hée would have turned ere this time. But I may ſay by you as Chriſt ſaid by Ieruſalem, ſaying; O Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, how oft would I have gathered thee together, even as a Hen gathereth her chickens, but thou wouldeſt not. And ſo would we gather you together in one faith, and ye will not: and therefore your owne blood be upon your owne heads; for I can doe no more but teach you. Thou art one of the rankeſt heretikes that ever I heard; for thou beléeveſt nothing but what is in the Scripture: and therefore thou art damned.

But we reade not that Chriſt did draw them into priſons, and condemned them to bée burnt that would not come.

Eliz. Young déemed an heretike, becauſe ſhe beléeveth all things written and agréeable to the Scripture, and nothing elſe.

Eliz. I doe beléeve all things written in the Scripture, and all things agréeable with the Scripture, given by the holy Ghoſt unto the Church of Chriſt, ſet forth and taught by the Church of Chriſt, and ſhall I be damned becauſe I beléeve the truth, and will not beléeve an untruh?

Eliz. Young had to the ſtock-houſe, and then to the Lollards Tower.

Then the Chancellor called the Kéeper, ſaying; Clumy, take her away, thou knoweſt what thou haſt to doe with her. And ſo ſhe departed, and was brought againe to the ſtock-houſe, and there ſhe lay certaine daies, and both her hands manacled in one iron; and afterward ſhe was removed into the Lollards Tower, and there ſhe remained with both her féete in the ſtockes and irons till the next time of examination.

The ſeventh examination before the Chancellor and the Biſhops Scribe.

The ſeventh examination of El. Young.

When ſhee was brought before the ſaid Chancellor and the Scribe, the Chancellor ſaid unto her; Woman, thou haſt béen twice before me, but thou and I could not agrée, and here be certaine articles that my Lord the Biſhop of London would that thou ſhouldeſt make anſwer unto, which are theſe: Firſt, how many Sacraments thou doeſt allow?

Two Sacraments.

Eliz. Sir, as many as Chriſts Church doth allow, and that is twaine.

Then ſaid the Scribe. Thou waſt taught ſeven before King Edwards daies.

Chan. Which two Sacraments be thoſe that thou doeſt allow?

Eliz. The ſacrament of the body and blood of Ieſus Chriſt, and the ſacrament of Baptiſme.

Chan. Doeſt thou not beléeve that the Pope of Rome is the ſupreme head of the Church, immediatly under God in earth?

Head of the Church.

Eliz. No ſir, no man can be the head of Chriſts Church; for Chriſt himſelfe is the head, and his word is the governor of all that be of that Church, whereſoever they be ſcattered abroad.

Chan. Doeſt thou not beléeve that the Biſhop of Rome can forgive thée all thy ſins hereticall, deteſtable, and damnable, that thou haſt done from thine infancy unto this day?

Biſhop of Rome.

Eliz. Sir, the Biſhop of Rome is a ſinner as I am, and no man can forgive me my ſins, but he only that is without ſin, and that is Ieſus Chriſt, which dyed for my ſins.

Chan. Doeſt thou not know that the Pope ſent over his Iubilies, that all that ever would faſt and pray, and goe to the Church, ſhould have their ſins forgiven them?

The Scribe. Sir, I thinke that ſhe was not in the Realme then.

From the Biſhop of Rome and all his deteſtable enormities.

Chan. Haſt thou not deſired God to defend thée from the tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome and all his deteſtable enormities?

Eliz. Yes that I have.

Chan. And art thou not ſorry for it?

Eliz. No ſir, not a whit.

Chan. Haſt thou not ſaid, that the Maſſe was wicked, and the Sacrament of the Altar moſt abominable?

Eliz. Yes that I have.

Chan. And art thou not ſorry for it?

Eliz. No ſir, not a whit.

Chan. Art thou not content to go to the Church, and heare Maſſe?

Eliz. I will not goe to the Church, either to Maſſe or Mattens, till I may heare it in a tongue that I can underſtand: for I will be fed no longer in a ſtrange language. And alwaies the Scribe did write every of theſe Articles, as they were demanded, and anſwered unto.

Then the Scribe aſked her from whence ſhee came.

The Chancellor ſaid, this is ſhee that brought over all theſe bookes of hereſie and treaſon.

Then ſaid the Scribe to her; Woman, where hadſt thou all theſe bookes?

Eliz. I bought them in Amſterdam, and brought them over to ſell, thinking to gaine thereby.

Then ſaid the Scribe, What is the name of the booke?

Eliz. I cannot tell.

The Scribe. Why wouldſt thou buy bookes and know not their names?

Then ſaid Cluny the Keeper; Sir, my Lord Biſhop did ſend for her by name that ſhee ſhould come to Maſſe, but ſhe would not.

Chan. Yea, did my Lord ſend for her by name, and would ſhe not go to maſſe?

Eliz. Young refuſeth to go to Maſſe.

Eliz. No ſir, I will never goe to Maſſe, till I doe underſtand it, by the leave of God.

Chan. Underſtand it? Why, who the Devill can make thee to underſtand Latine, thou being ſo old?

Then the Scribe commanded her to ſet to her hand to all the ſaid things.

Elizabeth ſaid; Sir, then let me heare it read firſt.

Then ſaid the Scribe; Maſter Chancellor, ſhall ſhe heare it read?

Eliz. Young ſetteth her hand to her examination.

Chan. Yea, let the heretike heare it read.

Then ſhe heard it read, and ſo ſhe ſet to her hand.

The eighth examination before the Biſhop.

The eighth examination of Elizabeth Young.

When ſhe was brought before the Biſhop, he aſked the Keeper; Is this the woman that hath the three children? And the Keeper ſaid; Yea, my Lord.

Biſhop. Woman, here is a ſupplication put unto my hands for thee. In like caſe there was another ſupplication put up to me for thee afore this, in the which thou madeſt as though that I ſhould keep thy children.

Eliz. My Lord, I did not know of this ſupplication, nor yet of the other.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, Maſter Deane, is this the woman you have ſued ſo earneſtly for?

The Deane. Yea, my Lord.

The Deane made ſute for Eliz. Young.

The Deane. Woman, what remaineth in the Sacrament of the Altar, when and after that the Prieſt hath ſpoken the words of conſecration?

Eliz. A peece of bread. But the Sacrament of Chriſts body and blood, which he did inſtitute and leave amongſt his Diſciples the night before hee was betrayed, miniſtred according to his word, that Sacrament I doe beleeve.

The Deane, How doeſt thou beleeve concerning the body of Chriſt? where is his body, and how many bodies hath he?

Eliz. Sir, in heaven, he ſitteth on the right hand of God.

The Deane. From whence came his humane body?

Eliz. He tooke it of the Virgin Mary.

The Deane. That is fleſh, blood, and bones, as mine is. But what ſhape hath his ſpirituall body? hath it face, hands and feete?

Eliz. I know no other body that he hath, but that body whereof he meant when he ſaid; This is my body which is given for you: and this is my blood which ſhall be ſhed for you. Whereby he plainly meaneth that body and no other, which hee tooke of the Virgin Mary, having the perfect ſhape and proportion of a humane body.

Story.

Story. Then ſaid Story; Ye have a wiſe body: for ye muſt goe to the ſtake.

The Deane. Art thou content to beleeve in the faith of Chriſts Church? But to aſk of thee what Chriſts Church is, or where it is, I let it paſſe.

Eliz. Sir, to that Church I have joyned my faith, and from it I purpoſe never to turne by Gods help.

The Deane. Wouldeſt thou not be at home with thy children with a good will?

Elizabeth. Sir, if it pleaſe God to give mee leave.

The beliefe of the Papiſts followeth the multitude. True beliefe dependeth not upon men, but upon the rule of Gods Word.

The Deane. Art thou content to confeſſe thy ſelfe to be an ignorant and a fooliſh woman, and to beleeve as our holy Father the Pope of Rome doth, and as the Lord Cardinals Grace doth, and as my Lord the Biſhop of London thine Ordinary doth, and as the Kings Grace, and the Queens Grace, and all the Nobility of England doe; yea, and the Emperors Grace, and all the noble Princes of Chriſtendome?

Eliz. Sir, I was never wiſe, but in few words I ſhall make you a briefe anſwer how I doe beleeve. I doe beleeve all things that are written in the Scriptures given by the holy Ghoſt unto the Church of Chriſt, ſet forth and taught by the Church of Chriſt. Hereon I ground my faith, and on no man.

Then ſaid Story; And who ſhall be judge?

Eliz. Sir, the Scripture.

Story. And who ſhall reade it?

Eliz. He unto whom God hath given the underſtanding.

Biſhop. Woman, be reformable; for I would thou were gone, and Maſter Deane here hath earneſtly ſued for thee.

Deane. Woman, I have ſued for thee indeed, and I promiſe thee, if thou wilt be reformable, my Lord will be good unto thee.

Eliz. I have been before my Lord Biſhop, and before Maſter Chancellor three times, and have declared my faith.

Deane. And yet I know that Maſter Chancellor will ſay, that thou art a ranke heretike.

Story. Away with her.

Eliz. Young committed to the Deane.

Biſhop. Maſter Deane, ye know that I may not tarry, nor you neither. Let her Keeper bring her home to your owne chamber ſoone at foure a clocke at afternoone, and if that ye finde her reaſonable, then let her goe, for I would that ſhee were gone.

Then ſaid the Deane, with a good will my Lord; and ſo ſhe was ſent unto the place from whence ſhe came, untill it was foure of the clocke at afternoone.

¶ The ninth Examination before the Deane, before whom it pleaſed God to deliver her.

The ninth examination of Eliz. Young.

When it was foure of the clocke at afternoon, as the houre was appointed, and the Dean was ſet, he aſked her; Art thou a foole now as thou waſt to day?

Eliz. Sir, I have learned but ſmall wiſedome ſince.

Dean. Doeſt thou think that I am better learned than thou?

Eliz. Yes Sir, that I doe.

Deane. Thinkeſt thou that I can doe thée good?

Elizab. Yea Sir, and if it pleaſe God that ye will.

Talke betwéen the Deane and Eliz. Young about receiving the Sacrament.

Deane. Then I will do thee good indéed. What doeſt thou receive when thou receiveſt the Sacrament which Chriſt left among his Diſciples the night before he was betraied?

Eliz. Sir, that that his Diſciples did receive.

Deane. What did they receive?

Eliz. Sir, that that Chriſt gave them they received.

Deane. What anſwer is this? Was Chriſt there preſent?

Eliz. Sir, he was there preſent; for he inſtituted his owne Sacrament.

Deane. He tooke bread, and he brake it, and he gave it to his Diſciples, and ſaid; Take eat, this is my body which ſhall be broken for you. When thou receiveſt it, doeſt thou beléeve that thou receiveſt his body?

Eliz. Sir, when I receive, I beléeve that through faith I doe receive Chriſt.

Deane. Doeſt thou beléeve that Chriſt is there?

Eliz. Sir, I beléeve that he is there to me, and by faith I doe receive him.

Chriſt not abſent from his Sacraments.

Deane. He alſo tooke the cup and gave thanks, and gave it to his Diſciples, and ſaid; Drink ye all hereof, This is the cup of the New Teſtament in my bloud, which is ſhed for many for the remiſſion of ſins. When thou doſt receive it after the inſtitution that Chriſt ordained among his Diſciples, the night before he was betraied, doeſt thou beléeve that Chriſt is there?

Eliz. Sir, by faith I beléeve that he is there, and by faith I doe beléeve that I doe receive him.

Deane. Now thou haſt anſwered me, Remember that thou ſayeſt, that when thou doeſt receive according to the inſtitution of Chriſt, thou doeſt receive Chriſt.

Eliz. Sir, I beléeve Chriſt not to be abſent from his owne Sacrament.

Dean, How long wilt thou continue in that beliefe?

Eliz. Sir, as long as I doe live, by the help of God; for it is, and hath béen my beliefe.

Deane. Wilt thou ſay this before my Lord?

Eliz. Yea, ſir.

Deane. Then I dare deliver thee. Why, thou Calfe, why wouldeſt thou not ſay ſo to day?

Eliz. Sir, ye asked me no ſuch queſtion.

Dean. Then ye would ſtand in diſputation how many bodies Chriſt had.

Eliz. Sir, indéed that queſtion yée did aske mee.

Deane. Who ſhall be the ſureties that thou wilt appeare before my Lord of London and me upon Friday next?

Eliz. Sir, I have no ſureties, nor know I where to have any.

Two women ſureties for Eliz, Young.

Then ſpake the Deane unto two women that ſtood there, who had earneſtly ſued for her, ſaying: Women, will ye be her ſureties, that ſhe ſhall appeare before my Lord of London and me upon Friday next?

The women. Yea ſir, and it pleaſe you.

Deane. Take héed that I finde you no more a brabler in the Scripture.

Eliz. Sir, I am no brabler in the Scripture, nor yet any man can burthen me therewith.

Deane. Yes, I have heard of you well enough what ye are.

Then ſaid he to the two women, What if a man ſhould touch your conſcience, doe ye not ſmell a little of hereſie alſo?

The women. No, ſir.

Deane. Yes, a little of the Frying-pan, or elſe wherefore have ye twaine ſo earneſtly ſued for her?

The one woman anſwered, becauſe that her children were like to periſh, and therfore God put me in mind to ſue for her.

Then ſaid the other woman; And I gate her childe a Nurſe, and I am threatened to ſtand to the kéeping of her childe; and therefore it ſtandeth me in hand to ſue to have her out.

Eliz. Young upon ſureties delivered.

Dean. Woman, give thankes unto theſe honeſt women, who have ſo earneſtly ſued for thee, and I promiſe thee ſo have I. Theſe great heretikes will receive nothing but in ſpirit and faith, and ſo he roſe and departed.

Eliz. Sir, God be praiſed, and I thanke you for your goodneſſe and theirs alſo, and ſo he went away; and upon the Friday next, becauſe ſhe was acraſed, her two ſureties went thither, and were diſcharged.

Elizabeth Lawſon.

Eliz. Lawſon Confeſſor.

IN the towne of Bedfield, and in the County of Suffolk, was dwelling a antient godly matron, named Elizabeth Lawſon, about the age of ſixty yeares. This Elizabeth was apprehended as an heretike by the Conſtables of the ſame town, named Robert Kitrich, and Thomas Elas, in the yeare of our Lord 1556. becauſe ſhe would not goe to Church to heare maſſe, and receive the Sacrament, and beléeve in it.

Rob. Kitrich, Tho. Elas, Perſecutors.

Sir John Stilliard, Sheriffe.

Firſt, they laid her in a dungeon, and after that ſhe was carried unto Norwich, and from thence to Bury Gaole, where at laſt ſhe was condemned to be burnt. In the meane time Sir John Sylliard had her home unto his houſe, hee being high Sheriffe that yeare, where ſhe was hardly kept, and wrapped in Irons, till at length, when they by no means could move her to recant, ſhe was ſent to priſon againe with ſhamefull revilings.

Eliz. Lawſon in priſon two yeares & thrée quarters.

Eliz, Lawſon ſorry that ſhee was not burned.

Thus ſhe continued in priſon the ſpace of two yeares and thrée quarters. In the meane time there was burnt her ſon and many more, whereby ſhe would often ſay; Good Lord, what is the cauſe thhat I may not yet come to thee with thy children? Well, good Lord, thy bleſſed will be done, and not mine.

Eliz Lawſon bailed upon ſureties in Queen Elizabeths time.

Not long after this (moſt happily) followed the death of Quéene Mary, after whom ſuccéeded our Quéene that now is. At which time this Elizabeth Lawſon remained yet ſtill in Bury priſon, till at laſt ſhee was bailed upon ſureties, or elſe ſhe could not be delivered. For ſhe being a condemned perſon, neither the temporality, nor yet ſpirituall authority would diſcharge her without ſureties.

Now ſhe being abroad, and her ſureties made afraid by wicked men, ſaid, they would caſt her againe in priſon, except ſhe would ſée them diſcharged.

Eliz. Lawſon preſerved from perſecution, ended her life in peace.

Then ſhe got a Supplication to goe unto the Quéenes Majeſty, and came to a friend of hers to have his counſell therein; who willed her to ſtay a while, becauſe ſhe was old, the daies ſhort, and the expences great, and Winter foule (for it was a little before Chriſtmaſſe) and to tarry untill ſummer. In the meane time God brake the bond, and ſhortned her journey; for he tooke her home to himſelfe out of this life in peace.

Eliz. Lawſon troubled with the falling ſickneſſe after her perſecution never felt it more.

This good old woman, long before ſhe went to priſon, had the falling ſickneſſe, and told a friend of hers, one Simon Harlſton, after ſhe was apprehended, that ſhe never had it more, but lived in good health and joy of heart, through our Lord Chriſt.

She had a very unkind man to her husband, who, while ſhe was in priſon, ſold away her raiment, and would not help her; and after ſhe was out of priſon, ſhe returned home unto him, yet would he ſhew her no kindneſſe, nor help her neither; and yet the houſe and land that he dwelt in he had by her: wherefore as long as ſhe lived, ſhe was found of the congregation.

The ſaid Elizabeth Lawſon alſo had a ſiſter, wife to one Robert Hollon in Mickfield in the ſame county of Suffolke, which likewiſe was perſecuted and driven out from houſe to houſe, and a young man her ſon with her, becauſe they would not goe to the Church to heare maſſe, and receive the ſacrament of the altar.

Thomas Chriſtenmaſſe and William Wats.

Thom Chriſtenmas, Wil. Wats.

In this perillous rage of Queene Maries reigne were two men perſecuted, one called Thomas Chriſtenmaſſe, the other William Wats of Tunbridge in Kent. As theſe travelled from place to place, not reſting two nights together in one place, it happened them on a time to come to Rocheſter in Kent, where as they entring into the Towne, even at the Townes end met with a little Damoſell of eight yeares of age, but whither ſhe went, they knew not. It was then night, and they weary, and faine therefore would have lien in the ſame time, but could not tell where, they feared ſo the bloudy Catholiques. At laſt they deviſed to aske the Damoſell whether there were any heretikes in the Towne, or no? and ſhe ſaid, Yea. They asked her where. She anſwered them; At ſuch an Inne, telling them the name, and where the Inne was. Shortly after, as they were gone from her, they bethought themſelves better, and God ſo moving their hearts, they went to the childe againe, and asked her how ſhe knew that the Innekeeper (of whom ſhe ſpake before) was an heretike. Marry, quoth ſhe, well enough, and his wife alſo. How knoweſt thou, pretty maiden, ſaid they? I pray thee tell us. How know I, ſaid ſhe? Marry because they goe to the Church; and thoſe that will not hold up their hands there, they will preſent them, and hee himſelfe goeth from houſe to houſe, to compel them to come to Church. When theſe two men heard this, they gave God praiſe, and avoided that houſe, taking the warning of that maid (of good bringing up as it ſhould ſeeme) to be Gods marvellous providence towards them.

Gods providence upon Thom. Chriſtenmas and Wil Wats.

Another eſcape of William Wats.

Wil. Wats another time delivered by the Lords providence. Wil Wats apprehended & brought before the Biſhop.

This foreſaid William Wats, dwelling in Queene Maries daies at Seale in Kent, the laſt yeare of her raigne ſave one, was apprehended by his enemies, and brought by the Conſtables before the Biſhop & Iuſtices at Tynbridge, where the Biſhop and Iuſtices would have perſwaded him all they could, to turne from the truth: howbeit in vaine, for they could not remove him, although they ſpent all the forenoone thereabouts, with many flattering words; ſo mercifull was the Lord unto him.

Now when dinner time was come, as they ſhould riſe, they committed the priſoner to the Conſtables againe, and ſo roſe up to goe to dinner. The Conſtables tooke Wats, and led him to a victualling houſe, where after they had well filled themſelves, they fell aſleep, ſuppoſing their priſoner to be ſure enough under their hands. Wats wife being then in the houſe with her husband, and very carefull for his well doing, ſeeing the Conſtables thus faſt aſleep, deſired her husband to depart and goe thence, forſomuch as the Lord had made ſuch a way for him. Unto which her words he would not conſent, although ſhee perſwaded him all that ſhe could.

At the laſt (they replying one againſt another) a ſtranger heard them, and asked her what the matter was, that ſhee was ſo earneſt with her husband. The wife told him. Then ſaid the ſtranger unto Wats theſe words; Father, goe thy waies in Gods name, and tarry no longer: the Lord hath opened the way unto thee. Whereupon the ſaid Wats went his way, and his wife departed from him, and went home to her houſe at Seale, thinking her husband had gone another way. Now as ſhe was going in at her doore, telling her friends of his deliverance, immediately came the ſaid Wats in alſo, and they all being amazed thereat, willed him in all haſte to get him away; for they thought there would be ſearch for him immediately.

Another notable example of the Lords providence.

Then Wats ſaid, he would eat meate firſt, and alſo pray; which he did, and afterward departed thence. So ſoone as he was out of the doores, and had hid himſelfe in an holly buſh, immediately came the ſaid Conſtables with thirty perſons into the ſaid houſe to ſearch for him, where they pierced the Featherbeds, broke up his cheſts, and made ſuch havocke, that it was wonderfull; and ever among as they were ſearching, the Conſtables cried, I will have Wats, I will have Wats, I tell thee, I will have Wats: but (God be thanked) Wats could not be found. And when they ſaw it booted not to ſearch for him, in the end they tooke his wife, and ſet her in a paire of ſtockes, where ſhe remained two daies, and ſhe was very bold in the truth, and at the laſt delivered through the providence of God; whoſe name be glorified in all his works, Amen.

Wil. Wats delivered out of his enemies hands.

Wil. Wats ſought for againe.

Wil. Wats wife ſet in the ſtockes.

Iohn Glover of Manceter, Gentleman.

What a fatherly and manifeſt providence of the Lord likewiſe did appeare in the preſerving of Maſter Iohn Glover in the Dioceſſe of Coventry and Lichfield, in the Town of Manceter; firſt, at the taking of Robert his brother. At which time although the Commiſſion came down for him, yet ſo G O D ordered the matter, that his brother being ſicke was apprehended, and yet he being whole eſcaped, whereof mention is made before.

Gods providence in delivering Maſter Iohn Glover, reade before.

And againe, another time how miraculouſly the mercifull providence of the Lord wrought his eſcape out of his enemies hands, they being at his chamber doore, and drawing the latch to ſearch for him; and how his wife the ſame time was taken and ſent to Lichfield, reade before.

Another narrow eſcape of M. I. Glover, reade before.

One Dabney.

There was at London a certaine honeſt godly perſon, a Painter, named Dabney, whom Iohn Avales in the time of Queene Mary had brought before Boner to bee examined for his faith. It happened the ſame time, as the ſaid Dabney was there, that the Biſhop was occupied with the examination of other, ſo that hee was bid to ſtand by, and to wait the Biſhops leaſure. Upon the ſame, or not long after, ſuddenly commeth word to the Biſhop to prepare him in all ſpeed, the generall Proceſſion tarried for him. The Biſhop hearing that, ſetting all buſineſſe apart, buſtleth himſelfe with all ſpeed poſſible, ſible to the Church, there to furniſh Proceſſion. By reaſon whereof Dabney, which newly came to the houſe, was there left alone, while every man elſe was buſied in preparing and ſetting themſelves forward, according as the caſe required.

Gods ſecret working in the deliverance of Dabney.

To be ſhort, as the time called on, Boner with his houſhold maketh haſte, ſo faſt as they can, out of the doores to the Proceſſion. Dabney being left alone, commeth downe to the outward Court next the gate, there walking with himſelfe all heavy, looking for nothing leſſe than to eſcape that danger. The Porter, who was only left at home, ſéeing the man to walke alone, ſuppoſing he had béen ſome Citizen there left behinde, and waiting for opening of the gate, went and opened the wicket, asking if he would goe out. Yea, ſaid he, with a good will, if ye will let me out. With all my heart, quoth the Porter, and I pray you ſo doe.

And thus the ſaid Dabney taking the occaſion offered of God, being let out by the Porter, eſcaped out of the Wolves mouth. The Proceſſion being done, when the biſhop returned home, Dabney was gone, and could not be found. Wherupon ſearch was made, but eſpecially John Avales laid much privy waite for him; who after long ſearching, when he could not get him, at length received fiftéene crownes of his wife to let him alone when he ſhould ſée him, and ſo that good man eſcaped.

Alexander Wimſhurſt.

Alexander Wimſhurſt, a Miniſter, delivered by Gods providence from his enemies.

A Like example of God almighties goodneſſe toward his afflicted ſervants in that dangerous time of perſecution, may alſo appear evidently in one Alexander Wimſhurſt a Prieſt, ſometime of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, and then the Popes owne Knight, but ſince an earneſt enemy to Antichriſt, and a man better inſtructed in the true feare of God. It happened that one had promoted him to Boner for Religion, upon what occaſion I doe not underſtand. According to the old manner in ſuch caſes provided, hee ſent forth Robin Caly, otherwiſe called Robin Papiſt, one of his whelps to bring in the game, and to cauſe this ſilly poore man to appeare before him. Little Robin, like a proper man, beſtirreth him in his buſineſſe, and ſmelleth him out, and when he had gotten him, bringeth him along by Cheapſide, not ſuffering him to talke with any of his acquaintance by the way, though they were of his old friends of Oxford that offered to ſpeake unto him.

Wimſhurſt taken by Robert Caly.

When they came into Pauls, it happened this Alexander to eſpy Doctor Chadſey there walking up and downe. To whom, becauſe he was able in ſuch a caſe to doe pleaſure, and for that hee had béen of his old acauaintance in Oxford, hee was very deſirous to ſpeak to him ere he went through. Chadſey, perceiving that Robin Caly did attend upon him, ſaid that hee durſt not meddle in the matter. Yes (ſaith little Robin) you may talke with him if it pleaſe you Maſter Doctor. To be ſhort, Alexander openeth his caſe, and in the end deſireth for old acquaintance ſake, that hee would find means he might be rather brought before Doctor Martin to be examined, than any other. Nay, ſaith he (alledging the words of Chriſt unto Peter in the laſt chapter of S. John.) You remember brother what is written in the Goſpel; When thou waſt young, thou didſt gird thy ſelfe, and wenteſt whither thou wouldeſt: but being aged, other men ſhall gird thee, and lead thee whither thou wouldeſt not. Thus abuſing the Scripture to his private meaning, whereas notwithſtanding he might eaſily have accompliſhed ſo ſmall a requeſt, if it had liked him.

Wimſhurſt brought to D. Story, and D. Cooke, Commiſſioners.

Thence was he carried to Story and Cooke Commiſſioners, there to learne what ſhould become of him. Before them he did uſe himſelfe boldly and ſtoutly, as they on the other ſide did urge him with captious queſtions very cruelly. When they had baited the poore man their fill, they asked him where his whore was. She is not my whore (ſaid he) but my lawfull wife. She is thy whore, ſaid they. She is not my whore (ſaid he againe) but my wife, I tell you. So when they perceived that hee would not give place unto them, nor attributed to them ſo much as they looked for at his hand, according to the ordinary manner they commanded him to priſon. And now marke well the providence of God in his preſervation.

Wimſhurſt commanded to priſon.

He was brought into Clanies houſe at Pater-noſter-rowe, thence to bee carried to Lollards Tower out of hand, but that Cluny (as it happened) his wife and his maid were ſo earneſtly occupied about preſent buſineſſe, that as then they had not leiſure to locke up their priſoner. In the Hall where Alexander ſate was a ſtrange woman, whoſe husband was then preſently in trouble for religion, which perceived by ſome one occaſion or other, that this man was brought in for the like cauſe. Alacke good man, ſaith ſhee, if you will you may eſcape the cruell hands of your enemies, foraſmuch as they be all away that ſhould looke unto you. God hath opened the way unto you of deliverance, and therefore loſe not the opportunity thereof, if you bee wiſe. With thoſe and ſuch like words being then perſwaded, he gate out of the doores, and went away without any haſte making at all; ſo that if any had followed, he might have béen eaſily recovered againe. But undoubtedly, it was Gods will that hee ſhould ſo eſcape the fury of his adverſaries, and be preſerved from all dangers of death and impriſonment.

Good counſell ſent of God.

A way made by Gods providence to Alexander Wimſhurſt to eſcape.

Boſomes wife.

Boſomes wife.

AS the workes of the Lord are not to be kept ſecret, whatſoever the perſons be in whom it pleaſeth him to worke; ſo commeth to remembrance the ſtory of one Boſomes wife, not unworthy to be conſidered. This good woman, being at Richmond with her mother, was greatly called upon, and urged to come to Church. At length, through importunate crying and calling upon, ſhe granted unto them, and came. Being in the church, and ſitting with her mother in the Pew, contrary in all things to the doings of the Papiſts, ſhee behaved her ſelfe; to wit, when they knéeled, ſhee ſtood, when they turned forward, ſhe turned backward, &c.

The behaviour of Boſomes wife in the Church.

This being notorious in the Church, at length the Conſtable and Churchwarden named Sanders, attached her in the Quéenes name, charging her with her mother, the next day to appeare at Kingſtone. Who at their commandement ſo did.

Boſomes wife ſummoned to appeare at Kingſtone.

The next day, according as they were aſſigned, they came to Kingſton to appeare before the foreſaid Officers, who at the ſame time (as it chanced) were going over the Ferry, and méeting them by the way, ſaluted them by their names, but at that time had no further power to ſpeake unto them. Afterward, as they were in the boat going over, they knockt their hands, ſtampt and ſtared, lamenting that they had let them ſo paſſe their hands. This the Feriman declared unto them, and what they ſaid in the boate. Whereupon the good woman taking her journey to London, eſcaped their cruelty, through the ſecret working (no doubt) of the Lord; who in all his works and evermore be praiſed, Amen.

Boſomes wife through Gods help eſcapeth.

Lady Knevet in Northfolke.

The Lady Anne Knevet

AMong the number of the godly that were kept under the providence of the Lord in thoſe perillous dayes, I may not forget an antient good Lady of much worſhip, called Lady Anne Knevet, who till her death dwelt in Northfolke, in a Towne named Wimondham, ſixe miles from Norwich. Which ſaid good Lady in Queen Maries daies being judged by the common people to be more than an hundred yeares of age, and by her owne eſtimation well toward a hundred, kept her ſelfe from their Popiſh Church, or having any Papiſticall traſh miniſtred in her houſe, but only the Service that was uſed in the later dayes of King Edward the ſixt, which daily ſhee had ſaid before her, either by one M. Tollin, who was then by Gods providence preſerved in her houſe, or elſe by one of her Gentlewomen or houſhold ſervants, that could ſerve the place in the ſaid M. Tollins abſence.

Lady Knevet threatened by the Biſhop.

Now this worſhipfull Lady continuing in this manner of true ſerving of God, ſhe and her family were many times threatened by meſſengers, that the Biſhop would viſit her therefore. Unto which meſſengers ſhe would alwayes anſwer, that if his Lordſhip ſent word before what day he would come, he would thereafter be entertained at her hand. But God, whoſe providence ruleth the raging ſeas, never ſuffered them all that toiling time to moleſt her: Although oftentimes when ſhe had Service before her, there were very great enemies to the truth, and of much authority, that came in, and kneeled to prayer among them, and yet had no power to trouble her therefore.

The great age of the Lady Knevet.

This good Lady (gentle Reader) kept good hoſpitality, as any in that countrey of her living. She alſo ſuccoured many perſecuted that came to her houſe in the ſaid Queene Maries dayes. Were they never ſo ſimple, they were eſteemed of her as the friends of the Goſpell, and departed not from her without money and meate. Borne ſhee was long before King Edward the fourth died, and ended her life in the Lord Ieſus peace, about the beginning of the ſecond yeare of our moſt Soveraigne Lady Queene Elizabeths raigne, as one falling into a moſt ſweet ſleep.

Lady Elizabeth Vane a great reliever of Gods people.

Unto whom not unworthily may be compared the Lady Elizabeth Vane, who likewiſe, being a great harbourer and ſupporter of the afflicted Martyrs and Confeſſors of Chriſt, was in great hazzards and dangers of the enemies, and yet notwithſtanding, through the mercifull providence of the Lord, remained ſtill untouched. Of this Lady Vane thou ſhalt read before.

Iohn Davis, of the age of twelve yeares, and under.

Iohn Davis a childe under the age of 12. yeres, caſt to be burned for the 6. articles, and yet by Gods providence preſerved.

AN. Dom. 1546. and the laſt yere of King Henry the eighth, Iohn Davis, a childe of twelve yeares and under, who dwelling in the houſe of M. Iohnſon Apothecary, in the Towne of Worceſter, his Uncle, uſing ſometimes to read of the Teſtament and other good Engliſh bookes, was complained of by Alice Iohnſon his Miſtreſſe; which Alice being an obſtinate perſon, conſulted with one Thomas Parton, and one Alice, wife to Nicholas Brooke Organmaker, with certaine of the Canons, and M. Iohnſon Chancellor to D. Heath their Biſhop. The means whereby he was entrapped was wrought by the foreſaid Alice Brooke, who procured Oliver her ſon, ſchoolfellow with the ſaid Iohn Davis, to faigne friendſhip with him, and under pretence to be inſtructed, to ſee his Engliſh bookes, and eſpecially to get ſomething of his writing againſt the ſix articles. Which being had, was ſoone brought to the Canons of the Church, and the Chancellor. Whereupon, Thomas Parton, whether being ſent, or of his own mind, came to apprehend him, and his Uncle was forced againſt his will, to bind the poore boyes armes behind him; and ſo he was brought to the officers of the town, where he lay from the 14. of Auguſt, till the laſt of September, Then was he commanded to the free mans priſon, where one Richard Howborough, comming to perſwade him from burning, willed him to prove firſt with a candle: who then holding his finger, and the other a candle under it a good ſpace, yet (as the party himſelfe to me aſſureth) felt no burning thereof, neither would the other that held the candle beleeve him a great while, till he had looked, and ſaw no ſcorching of the candle at all appeared.

Then was the childe removed from thence to an inner priſon called Peepehole, where the low Bayliffe, called Robert Pould, laid upon him a paire of bolts, ſo that hee could not lift up his ſmall legs, but leaning on a ſtaffe, ſlipt them forward upon the ground, the coldneſſe of which irons he feeleth yet in his ankles and ſhall ſo long as he liveth: with theſe bolts his lying was upon the cold ground, having not one locke of ſtraw nor cloth to cover him, ſave only two ſheep skins, neither durſt father or mother, or any of his friends come at him. Beſides this, and many great threats of the Papiſts, there was a mad man put to him in the priſon, with a knife about him, wherewith hee oft times in his frantike rage proffered to thruſt him in.

After this came to him one Iolyfe, and N. Pewer, two Canons, which had his writings againſt the ſixe Articles, and his Ballet called, Come downe for all your ſhaven crowne; to ſee whether he would ſtand to that he had written. Which done, with many great raging words, not long after ſate Maſter Iohnſon the Chancellor in the Guildhall upon the poore lad. Where firſt were brought in his accuſers and ſworne, then were ſworne alſo twenty foure men which went on his Queſt, and found him guilty, but hee never came before the Chancellor. Upon this he was ſent to the common Gaole among theeves and murtherers, there to tarry the comming of the Iudges, and ſo to be had ſtraight to execution. But the mighty mercy of the Lord, who helpeth the deſolate and miſerable when all other help is paſt, ſo provided for this ſilly condemned lad, that the purpoſe of all his hard-hearted enemies was diſappointed. For before the Iudges came, God tooke away Henry the eighth out of this life. By reaſon whereof the force of the law was then ſtated, howbeit he was nevertheleſſe arraigned, being holden up in a mans armes at the Barre, before the judges, who were Portman and Marven. Which, when they perceived that they could not burne him, would have him preſently whipped. But M. I. Bourne Eſquire, declared to the Iudges how he had whipping enough. After that hee had lien a weeke more in priſon, he had him home to his houſe, his wife anointed his legs her ſelfe with ointment, which then were ſtiffe and nummed with irons, till at length when Maſter Bourne and his wife ſaw they could not win him to the beliefe of their ſacrament, they put him away, leſt he ſhould infect their ſon Anthony, as they thought, with hereſie.

Thus Iohn Davis of the age aforeſaid, in what danger he was for the Goſpell ye ſee, and how the Lord preſerved him, ye underſtand. He endured in priſon from the 14.day of Auguſt, till within 7. daies of Eaſter, who is yet alive, and a profitable Miniſter this day in the church of England: Bleſſed be the Lord, qui facit mirabilia ſolus.

Miſtreſſe Roberts.

The miraculous deliverance of Miſtres Roberts. This Gentlewoman was a great ſuccourer of the perſecuted that came to her houſe, & ſpecially, of good Woodman, whom ye heard of before, and to whom hee wrote a letter. Sir John Gilford a troubler of Miſtreſſe Roberts.

FUrthermore, to both theſe may be alſo aſſociate another Gentlewoman, to make the third, named Miſtreſſe Roberts, yet living and dwelling (as I underſtand) in the towne of Hawkhurſt in Suſſex. She being earneſtly addicted to the truth of Chriſts Goſpell, and no leſſe conſtant in that which ſhe had learned therein, ſo kept her ſelfe during all the brunt of Queene Maries time, that ſhe never came to their Popiſh Service, nor would pollute her conſcience with hearing their idolatrous maſſe. There dwelt the ſame time not farre off a Juſtice, called Sir John Gilford. who being as fervent on the contrary ſide to ſet forward the proceedings of Queene Mary, thought to prove maſteries with this Gentlewoman, in forcing her into the Church. And firſt ſending his wife, he attempted her by faire words and gentle perſwaſions to conforme her ſelfe to the Princes lawes, and to come, as other Chriſtian people did, to the Church. Notwithſtanding, ſhe conſtantly perſiſting in the ſincerity of the truth, would by no perſwaſions be won to do therein againſt her conſcience; and ſo kept at home a certaine ſpace, till againe the ſecond time, Maſter Gilford thinking not to give her over ſo, ſent his officers and ſervants to her, by force and power to hale her out of her houſe to the Church, and ſo did. Where by the way ſhe for griefe of conſcience ſwouned, and ſo of neceſſity was brought home againe, and falling into an Ague, was for that time diſpenſed withall.

Sir John Gilford ſtopped of his purpoſe, by Gods working.

The third time yet the unquiet ſpirit of M. Gilford being not content, after the time that ſhe recovered health againe, he would needs come in his owne perſon to compell her, wild ſhee, nild ſhee, to the Church. But (as the Proverbe goeth) Who can let that God would have done? For when M. Gilford had purpoſed as pleaſed him, the Lord ſo diſpoſed for his ſervant, that as the ſaid M. Gilford was comming up the ſtaires toward her chamber, ſuddenly his old diſeaſe the goute ſo tooke him, and terribly tormented him, that he could goe no further: And ſo hee, that purpoſed to carrie her to the Church againſt her will, was faine himſelfe to be carried home to his houſe to his paine; proteſting and ſwearing that he would never from henceforth trouble that Gentlewoman more, and no more he did.

Miſtreſſe Anne Lacy.

Miſtres Anne Lacie.

IN the number of good Gentlewomen being in trouble and danger for Gods Word, is not to be omitted the memory of one Miſtreſſe Anne Lacie widow in Nottinghamſhire, who was in great danger in Queene Maries time, inſomuch that the Proceſſe was forth againſt her, and ſhe ready to have been apprehended, being ſo neerely purſued, that ſhe was driven to hide her Bible and other bookes in a dunghill. M. Lacie her brother was then Juſtice of Peace: but to whom (as I have heard) ſhe was but ſmally beholden. Nevertherleſſe, where kindred faileth, yet Gods grace never faileth ſuch as ſtick to him; for in this mean time, as the proceſſe came out againſt her, Queen Mary died, and ſo ſhe eſcaped.

Croſmans wife.

Croſmans wife, Barber of Tibnam, Conſtable, perſecutor. Example of Gods gracious providence.

ONe Croſmans wife of Tibnam Longrow in Northfolke, in Queene Maries time, for not going to Church was ſought for at her houſe by one Barber of the ſaid Towne, then Conſtable of the hundred, who when he came to her houſe, ſhe being at home with a child ſucking in her arms, ſtept into a corner on the one ſide of the chimney, and they ſeeking the chambers the childe never cried (although before they came it did) as long as they were there, and ſo by this meanes the Lord preſerved her.

The Congregation at Stoke in Suffolke.

The ſtory of a congregation at Stoke in Suffolke.

THere was ſome likewiſe which avoided the violent rage of the adverſaries by meanes onely of their number, and mutuall concord in godlineſſe, wherein they did ſo hold together, that without much adoe none well could be troubled: whereof we have an example in a certain towne of Suffolke called Stoke. After the three ſharp yeares of Queene Maries perſecution being paſt, yet notwithſtanding the inhabitants of the towne aforeſaid, eſpecially the women, came not to their Church to receive, after the Popiſh manner, the ſacrament. Who, if they had been but few, they could by no meanes have eſcaped impriſonment. But becauſe there were ſo many, the Papiſts thought it not beſt to lay hands upon them. Onely they appointed them 16. daies reſpite after Eaſter, wherein as many as would, ſhould receive the Sacrament; thoſe that would not, ſhould ſtand to the perill that would follow. Of this company, which were many, giving their hands together, the chiefeſt doers were theſe:

Eve, an old woman of 60. yeares.
Alice Coker her daughter.
Elizabeth Foxe.
Agnes Cutting.
Alice Spencer.
Henry Canker.
Ioane Fouke.
Agnes Spaulding.
Iohn Steyre, and his brother.
Iohn Foxe.

Confeſſors

Theſe, after the order was taken for their not comming to the Church, tooke adviſement among themſelves what was beſt to be done, and at length concluded by promiſe one to another, that they would not receive at all. Yet ſome of them afterward, being perſwaded with faire promiſes that the Communion ſhould be miniſtred unto them according to King Edwards booke, gate them unto the Pariſh Prieſt (whoſe name was Cotes) and asked him after which ſort he would miniſter the Sacrament. Hee anſwered to ſuch as he favoured, that he would give it after the right ſort; the reſt ſhould have it after the papiſticall manner.

Cotes Pariſh Prieſt at Stoke.

John Steyre & John Foxe revolted.

To bee ſhort, none did communicate ſo, but onely John Steyre and John Foxe; of which the one gave his wife leave to doe as ſhee thought beſt. The other went about with threats to compell his wife, ſaying, that otherwiſe hee would divorce himſelfe from her. As for the reſt, they did withdraw themſelves from Church, reſorting to their wonted company. Onely Foxes wife tarried ſtill at home, all in her dumpes and heavineſſe. whoſe huſband practiſed with the Curate in the meane time, that the next day after he ſhould give her the ſacrament, which was

was the 17. day after Eaſter. But the very ſame day, unknowing unto her husband, ſhe gate her ſelfe ſecretly to her company, and with teares declared how violently her husband had dealt with her. The other women bade her notwithſtanding to be of a good cheere, and ſaid that they would make their earneſt prayers unto the Lord, both for her and her husband, and indeed when they had ſo done, the matter tooke very good ſucceſſe.

The effect of Chriſtian prater. John Foxe recovered againe to the truth by prater.

For the next day after goodman Foxe came of his own accord unto them, a far other man than he was before, and bewailed his owne headineſſe and raſhneſſe, praying them that they would forgive him, promiſing ever after to be more ſtrong in faith, to the great rejoycing both of them and his wife.

The women of Stoke ſummoned by the Biſhop.

About halfe a yeare after this, the Biſhop of Norwich ſendeth forth certaine of his Officers or apparators thither, which gave them warning every one to come to the Church the next Sunday following. If they would not come, they ſhould appeare before the Commiſſary out of hand, to render account of their abſence.

How the women of Stoke eſcaped.

But the women having ſecret knowledge of this before, kept themſelves out of the way for the nonce, to avoid the ſummons or warning. Therfore when they were not at the Church at the day appointed, the Commiſſary did firſt ſuſpend them, according to the Biſhop of Romes law, and within three weeks after did excommunicate them. Therfore when they perceived that an Officer of the Towne was ſet to take ſome of them, they conveighing themſelves privily out of the Towne, eſcaped all danger.

The Congregation in London.

The preſervation of the congregation at London.

NO leſſe marvellous was the preſervation of the Congregation in London, which from the firſt beginning of Queene Mary, to the later end thereof, continued notwithſtanding whatſoever the malice, device, ſearching & inquiſition of men, or ſtrictneſſe of lawes could worke to the contrary. Such was the mercifull hand of the Lord, according to his accuſtomed goodneſſe, ever working with his people. Of this great bountifull goodnes of the Lord, many and great examples appeared in the Congregation which now I ſpeake of. How oft, and in what great danger did hee deliver them?

The congregation at M. Cardens houſe.

Firſt, at the Blacke-Fryers, when they ſhould have reſorted to ſir Thomas Cardens houſe, privy watch was laid for them, but yet through the Lords vigilant providence the miſchiefe was prevented, and they delivered.

The congregation again delivered.

Again, how narrowly did they eſcape about Algate, where ſpies were laid for them, and had not Thom. Simſon the Deacon eſpied them, and bid them diſperſe themſelves away, they had been taken. For within two houres the Conſtable comming to the houſe after they were gone, demanded of the wife what company had bin there. To whom ſhe, to excuſe the matter, made anſwer againe, ſaying, that halfe a dozen good fellows had bin there at breakfaſt, as they went a Maying.

The congregation againe delivered.

Another time alſo about the great Conduit, they paſſing there through a very ſtrait Alley, into a Clothworkers loft, were eſpied, and the Sheriffes ſent for: but before they came, they having privy knowledge thereof, immediately ſhifted away out of the Alley, John Avales ſtanding alone in the Mercers Chappell ſtaring at them.

The congregation in a ſhip at Billinſgate.

Another like eſcape they made in a Ship at Billinſgate, belonging to a certaine good man of Ley, where in the open ſight of the people they were congregated together, and yet through Gods mighty power eſcaped.

The congregation in a ſhip betwixt Ratcliffe & Redriffe.

Betwixt Ratcliffe and Redriffe, in a ſhip called Jeſus Ship, twice or thrice they aſſembled, having there cloſely, after their accuſtomed manner, both Sermon, Prayer, and Communion, and yet through the protection of the Lord they returned, although not uneſpyed, yet untaken.

The congregation in a Coupers houſe in Pudding lane.

Moreover, in a Coupers houſe in Pudding Lane, ſo neere they were to perils and dangers, that John Avales comming into the houſe where they were, talked with the goodman of the houſe, and after he had asked a queſtion or two, departed, God ſo working that either hee had no knowledge of them, or no power to apprehend them.

The congregation in a houſe in Thames ſtreet.

But they never eſcaped more hardly, than once in Thames ſtreet in the night time, where the houſe being beſet with enemies, yet, as the Lord would, they were delivered by the meanes of a Mariner, who being at that preſent in the ſame company, and ſeeing no other way to avoyd, pluckt off his ſlops and ſwam to the next boate, and ſo rowed the company over, uſing his ſhooes in ſtead of Oares, and ſo the jeopardy was diſpatched.

I have heard of one, who being ſent to them to take their names, and to eſpy their doings, yet being in amongſt them, was converted, and cried them all mercy.

Another notable example of Gods mercifull providence.

What ſhould I ſpeak of the extreme and preſent danger which that godly company was in at the taking of M. Rough their Miniſter, and Cutbert Simſon their Deacon, had not the Lords providence given knowledge before to M. Rough in his ſleep, that Cutbert Simſon ſhould leave behinde him at home the booke of all their names, which he was wont to carry about him? whereof mention is made before.

The miniſters of this congregation.

In this Church or Congregation were ſometime forty, ſometimes an hundred, ſometimes two hundred, ſometimes moe, and ſometimes leſſe. About the later time of Queene Mary it greatly increaſed. From the firſt beginning, which was about the firſt entry at Queene Maries reigne, they had divers Miniſters; firſt Maſter Scamier, then Tho. Fuole, after him M. Rough, then M. Auguſtine Bernher, and laſt M. Bentham. Concerning the deliverance of which Maſter Bentham (being now B. of Coventry and Lichfield) Gods mighty providence moſt notably is to be conſidered. For how is it poſſible, by mans eſtimation, for the ſaid M. Bentham to have eſcaped, had not the preſent power of the Lord, paſſing all mans expectation, been preſt and ready to help his ſervant in ſuch a ſtraite. The ſtory and caſe is this.

A ſtory of M. Bentham.

At what time the ſeven laſt burned in Smithfield, mentioned in this booke before, were condemned and brought to the ſtake to ſuffer, came downe in the name of the King and Queene a Proclamation, being twice pronounced openly to the people, firſt at Newgate, then at the ſtake where they ſhould ſuffer, ſtraightly charging and commanding, that no man ſhould either pray for them, or ſpeake to them, or once ſay God help them.

The Queens proclamation, no man to pray for the martyrs, nor to ſpeake unto them.

It was appointed before of the godly there ſtanding together, which was a great multitude, that ſo ſoone as the priſoners ſhould bee brought, they ſhould goe to them to embrace and to comfort them, and ſo they did. For as the ſaid Martyrs were comming towards the place in the peoples ſight, being brought with Bils and Gleeves (as the cuſtome is) the godly multitude and congregation with a generall ſway made toward the priſoners, in ſuch manner, that the Bilmen and the other Officers, being all thruſt back, could nothing doe, nor any thing come nigh. So the godly people meeting and embracing, and kiſſing them, brought them in their armes (which might as eaſily have conveighed them cleane away) unto the place where they ſhould ſuffer.

M Bentham Miniſter of the congregation.

M. Bentham ſpeaketh and prayeth for the Martyrs without danger.

This done, and the people giving place to the Officers, the Proclamation with a loud voice was read to the people, containing (as is before ſaid) in the King and Queenes name, that no man ſhould pray for them, or once ſpeake a word unto them, &c. Maſter Bentham the Miniſter then of the congregation, not ſparing for that, but as zeale and Chriſtian charity moved him, and ſeeing the fire ſet to them, turning his eies to the people, cried and ſaid; We know they are the people of God; and therefore we cannot chuſe but wiſh to them, and ſay; GOD ſtrengthen them: and ſo boldly he ſaid; Almighty God for Chriſts ſake ſtrengthen them. With that all the people with a whole conſent and one voice followed and ſaid; Amen, Amen. The noiſe whereof was ſo great, and the criers thereof ſo many, that the Officers could not tell what to ſay, or whom to accuſe. Aud thus much concerning the Congregation of the faithfull aſſembling together at London in the time of Queene Mary.

Another delivery of M. Bentham out of great perill.

M. Bentham forced againſt his will to ſit in the Crowners office.

The ſaid Maſter Bentham another time, as he paſſed through Saint Katherines, intending to walke and take the ayre abroad, was inforced by two or three men, approaching upon him, needs to goe with them to a place, whither they would leade him. Maſter Bentham aſtonied at the ſuddenneſſe of the matter, and marvelling what the thing ſhould be, required what their purpoſe was, or whither they would have him. They anſwered, that by the occaſion of a man there found drowned, the Crowners queſt was called and charged to ſit upon him, of the which queſt he muſt of neceſſity be one, &c. Hee againe loth to meddle in the matter, excuſed himſelfe, alledging that in ſuch kinde of matters he had no skill, and leſſe experience; if it would pleaſe them to let him goe, they ſhould meet with other more meet for their purpoſe. But when with this they would not be ſatiſfied, he alledged further, that he was a ſcholler of Oxford, and thereby was priviledged from being of any inqueſt. The Crowner demanded the ſight of his priviledge. He ſaid, if hee would give him leave, he would fetch it. Then ſaid the Crowner, the Queene muſt be ſerved without all delay, and ſo conſtrained him notwithſtanding to bee with them in hearing the matter.

M. Bentham refuſeth to ſweare upon a popiſh primer.

Meanes wrought whereby M. Bentham eſcaped.

Being brought to the houſe where the crowner and the reſt of the queſt were ſitting, as the manner is, a booke was offered to him to ſweare upon. Maſter Bentham opening the booke, and ſeeing it was a papiſticall primer, refuſed to ſweare thereupon, and declared moreover what ſuperſtition in the booke was contained. What, ſaid the Crowner? I thinke we ſhall have here an heretike among us. And upon that, after much reaſoning amongſt them, hee was committed to the cuſtody of an Officer till further examination: by occaſion whereof, to all mens reaſon, hard it had been and inevitable for Maſter Bentham to have eſcaped, had not the Lord helped where man was not able. What followed? Incontinent as they were thus contending and debating about matters of hereſie, ſuddenly commeth the Crowner of the admiralty, diſannulling and repealing the order and calling of that inqueſt, for that it was (as he ſaid) pertaining to his office; and therefore the other Crowner and his company in that place had nothing to doe. And ſo the firſt Crowner was diſcharged and diſplaced; by reaſon whereof Maſter Bentham eſcaped their hands, having no more ſaid unto him.

Engliſhmen preſerved at the taking of Calice.

Engliſhmen at Calice preſerved.

John Thorpe and his wife.

THe worthy workes of the Lords mercy toward his people be manifold, and cannot bee comprehended, ſo that who is hee living in the earth almoſt who hath not experienced the helping hand of the Lord at ſome time or other upon him? Amongſt many other, what a peece of Gods tender providence was ſhewed of late upon our Engliſh brethren and countrimen, what time Calice was taken by the tyrant Guiſe, a cruell enemy both to Gods truth and our Engliſh nation? And yet by the gracious proviſion of the Lord, few or none at all, of ſo many that favored Chriſt and his Goſpell, in that terrible time miſcarried. In the number of whom there was a godly couple, one John Thorp and his wife, which feared the Lord, and loved his truth: who being ſick the ſame time, and caſt out into the wilde fields, harbourleſſe, deſolate, and deſpairing of all hope of life, having their yong infant moreover taken from them in the ſaid fields, and carried away of the ſouldiers; yet the Lord ſo wrought, that the poore woman, being almoſt paſt recovery of life, was ſet and carried the ſpace well nigh of a mile, by ſtrangers whom they never knew, into a village, where both ſhe was recovered for that night, and alſo the next day comming toward England, they chanced into the ſame Inne at the next Towne, where they found their young childe ſitting by the fire ſide.

Edward Benet.

A ſtory of Ed. Benet now dwelling in S. Brides Pariſh.

ONe Edward Benet about the ſecond yeare of the raigne of Queene Mary, then dwelling at Queenehithe with one Gyrnocke a Baker, was deſired of one Tingle priſoner then in Newgate, to bring him a New Teſtament. He procuring one of Maſter Coverdales tranſlation, wrapt it in a handkerchiefe, ſaying to George the Keeper which asked him what he had, that it was a peece of poudred beefe. Let me ſee it, ſaid hee. Perceiving what it was, he brought him to Sir Roger Cholmeley, who examined him why he did ſo, ſaying that booke was not lawfull, and ſo committed him to the Counter in Woodſtreet, where he continued 25. weekes.

Edw. Benet 25. weekes in the counter, for bringing a new Teſtament to Tingle.

Which after died in priſon, and was buried on a dunghill.

D. Stories words to Ed. Benet.

Doctor Story comming to the priſon to examine other priſoners, this Benet looking out at the grate, ſpake to him, deſiring him to be good unto him, and to help him out; for hee had lien long in priſon. To whom D. Story then anſwering; What, ſaid he, waſt thou not before me in Chriſts Church? Yes forſooth, ſaid Benet. Ah, ſaid Story, thou doeſt not beleeve in the ſacrament of the altar? Mary I will help thee out; Come, ſaid he to the Keeper, turne him out, I will help him: and ſo tooke Benet with him, and brought him to Cluny in Pater-noſter-rowe, and bad him bring him to the Colehouſe, and there he was in the ſtocks a weeke.

Edw. Benet brought to Boner, and examined.

Then the Biſhop ſent for him to talk with him, and firſt asked him if he were ſhriven? No, ſaid Benet. He asked him if he would be ſhriven? No, ſaid he. Then he asked him if the Prieſt could take away his ſins. No, ſaid Benet, I do not ſo beleeve. Then hee and Harpsfield laughed at him, & mocked him, asking him if he did not beleeve, that whatſoever the Prieſt here bound in earth, ſhould bee bound in heaven; and whatſoever he looſed in earth, ſhould be looſed in heaven? No, quoth Benet: But I beleeve that the Miniſter of GOD preaching Gods Word truly, & miniſtring the Sacraments according to the ſame, whatſoever he bindeth in earth, ſhould be bound in heaven, and whatſoever he loſeth, &c. Then the Biſhop, putting him aſide, ſaid he ſhould goe to Fulham and be whipped.

How Edw. Benet eſcaped out of the biſhops houſe.

Then came to him M. Buſwell a Prieſt, lying in the Cole-houſe in the ſtocks, & brought Cranmers recantation, ſaying, that he had recanted. My faith, ſaith the other, lyeth in no mans booke, but in him which hath redeemed me. The next Saturday, Benet with five other was called for to come to maſſe in the Chappell. The maſſe being done, and they comming out, five of them went to priſon, and were after burned. Benet being behinde, and comming toward the gate, the Porter, opening to a company going out, asked if there were no priſoners there. No, ſaid they. Benet ſtanding in open ſight before him, with other ſerving-men which were there by reaſon that Boner made many Prieſts that day (having one of his ſleeves and halfe the forepart of his coat burned off in priſon, being more like a priſoner than any of the other) when the gates were opened, went out amongſt them, and ſo eſcaped.

Another eſcape of Ed. Benet.

Eight of the 24. taken at Iſlington, eſcaped, and how: good warning ſent of God.

Againe, in the laſt yeare of Queene Mary, the ſame Benet being taken againe with the 24. beyond Iſlington, and brought to ſir Roger Cholmleyes, the people comming very thicke did cut off ſome of them, to the number of 8, which were behinde, among whom was Benet. Then he knocked at the gate to come in, the Porter ſaid, that he was none of the company. Hee ſaid, Yes, and knocked againe. Then there ſtood one by of the congregation, named Iohnſon, dwelling now at Hamerſmith, which ſaid; Edward, thou haſt done well, doe not tempt God, goe thy way. And ſo he taking the warning as ſent of God, with a quiet conſcience eſchued burning.

Iefferey Hurſt brother in law to George Marſh the Martyr.

The ſtory of Ieffrey Hurſt dwelling in the towne of Shakerly in the Pariſh of Leaght.

Ieffrey Hurſt brother to G. Marſh the Martyr.

Ieffrey Hurſt leaveth wife, children and houſe for perſecution.

Preachers uſing to Ieffrey Hurſts houſe, and to preach.

IN the town of Shakerley in Lancaſhire dwelled one Ieffrey Hurſt the ſon of an honeſt yeoman, who had beſides him eleven children, the ſaid Ieffrey being the twelfth and eldeſt of the reſt: and for that their father was willing to bring them up, ſo that they ſhould be able another day to help themſelves, he did binde this Ieffrey prentice unto the craft of nailing, to make all kind of nailes, which occupation he learned, and ſerved out the time of 7. yeares. The which yeares being expired, he gave himſelfe at times to learne of his other brethren which went to ſchoole: and as hee was very willing to the ſame, ſo God ſent him knowledge; wherein he did perſevere and go forwards in ſuch ſort that he could write and reade indifferently, and in longer continuance came by more knowledge, and ſo having the Bible and divers other books in his houſe, did come by prety knowledge in the Scripture. After this hee tooke unto him a wife being the ſiſter of M. George Marſh, of whoſe martyrdome mention is made before, and being much familiar with him, did mend his knowledge not a little. Now when Queene Mary was entred, the firſt yeare of her reigne he kept himſelfe away from their doings, and came not at the Church: Whereupon he was laid in wait for, and called heretike, and Lollard, and ſo for feare of further danger he was compelled to leave his wife and childe, and all, and fled into Yorkeſhire, and there being not knowne did leade his life, returning ſometimes by night to his houſe to comfort his wife, and bringing with him ſome Preacher or other, who uſed to preach unto them ſo long as the time would ſerve, and ſo departed by night againe. The names of the Preachers were, M. Reneſes, M. Beſt, M. Brodbanke, M. Ruſſell, and every time they came thither they were about 20. or 24. ſometimes, but 16. at leaſt, who had there alſo ſomtimes a Communion. And thus in much feare did he with other lead his life, till the laſt yeare of the reigne of Queene Mary. Then it chanced that the ſaid Ieffrey Hurſt, after the death of his father, came home and kept himſelf cloſe for ſeven or eight weeks.

M. Thomas Lelond juſtice of Peace at Morleſſe, in Lancaſhire, a cruell perſecutor.

Ieffry Hurſt conveighed under a drifat.

Miſtreſſe Shakerley Hurſts landlady.

There dwelt not farre off, at Morleſſe, a certaine Iuſtice of Peace, and of quorum, named Maſter Thomas Lelond, who hearing of him, appointed a time to come to his fathers houſe where he then dwelt, to rifle the houſe for books, and to ſearch for him alſo, and ſo did. Ieffrey and his company having knowledge of his comming, tooke the bookes which were in the houſe, as the Bible, the Communion booke, and the new Teſtament of Tindals tranſlation, and divers others, and threw them all underneath a tub or fat, conveighing alſo the ſaid Ieffrey under the ſame, with a great deale of ſtrawe underneath him: for as it chanced they had the more time, becauſe that when the Iuſtice came almoſt to the dore, he ſtayd and would not enter the houſe till hee had ſent for Hurſts mothers landlady, Miſtres Shakerley; and then with her conſent intended to goe forwards. In the meane time, Ieffrey by ſuch as were with him, was willed to lay in his window the Teſtament of Tindals tranſlation, and a little booke containing the third part of the Bible, with the booke of Eccleſiaſticus, to try what they would ſay unto them.

M. Lelond entreth to ſearch Hurſts houſe.

Ralfe Parkinſon a popiſh perſecuting prieſt.

The papiſts follow falſe propheſies of the Goſpel to come again after 4. moneths and more.

This done, Miſtreſſe Shakerly came. Unto whom eftſoones the Iuſtice declared the cauſe of his comming, and how he was ſorry to attempt any ſuch thing againſt any of her tenants for her ſake, but notwithſtanding he muſt needs execute his office. And againe you muſt (ſaid hee) note this, that a ſcabbed ſheepe is able to infect a great number; and eſpecially having, as he hath, ſo many brethren and ſiſters, he is able to marre them all, if he be not looked unto in time. And thus concluding, M. Lelond entred into the houſe, and being come in, ſet himſelfe in a chaire in the middle of the houſe; and ſending ſir Ralfe Parkinſon his Prieſt, and one of his men, and one of Miſtreſſe Shakerleyes men about the houſe, to ſearch and rifle the cheſts for bookes (which ſo did) in the meane time he talked with Hurſts mother, being of the age almoſt of 60. yeares: And chiding with her that ſhe would ſuffer her ſonne ſo to order and behave himſelfe like an heretike, ſaid; Thou old foole, I know my ſelfe that this new learning ſhall come againe; but for how long; even for three moneths or foure moneths, and no longer. But I will lay thee old foole in Lancaſter dungeon for this geare, and well worthy.

The new teſtament of Tindals tranſlation made hereſie.

Search made for Hurſt and his ſiſter Alice.

Now as concerning the ſearchers, they found nothing but Latine bookes, as Grammar, and ſuch like. Theſe be not they that we looke for (ſaid they) we muſt ſee further, and ſo looked into Hurſts chamber, where they found the foreſaid bookes. Then ſir Ralfe taking up the teſtament, lookt on it, and ſmiled. His Maſter ſeeing that, ſaid, Now ſir Ralfe, what have we here? Forſooth, ſaith he, a Teſtament of Tindals tranſlation, plaine hereſy, and none worſe than it. Then is al their goods, ſaith he, loſt to the Queene, and their bodies to priſon, and was wonderfully haſty; notwithſtanding through Miſtreſſe Shakerly, for a ſpace, hee was content to ſee farther.

Then the Prieſt looked on the other book. What ſay ye to that ſir Ralfe? is that as evill as the other? No, ſaid he, but it is not good that they ſhould have ſuch Engliſh bookes to looke on; for this and ſuch others may doe much harme. Then he asked her mother where her eldeſt ſon was, and her daughter Alice? She anſwered ſhe could not tell; they were not with her of long time before. And he ſwore by Gods body, he would make her tell where they were, or hee would lay her in Lancaſter dungeon; and yet hee would have them notwithſtanding too. To be ſhort, for feare hee had his brother J. Hurſt and his mother bound in an hundred pound to bring the parties before him within fourteene daies, and ſo departed hee, and the Prieſt put both the bookes in his boſome, and carried them away with him. Then John Hurſt went after them, deſiring that he might have the booke which the Prieſt found no fault with; but hee ſaid, they ſhould anſwer to them both, and whichſoever was the better, was not good.

To whom when Jeffrey anſwered and ſaid; Sir, my maker is in heaven, and I am aſſured, in going to your maſſe I ſhall find no edification thereby; and therefore I pray you hold me excuſed.

Examination after maſſe.

J. Hurſt and Alice his ſiſter let goe under ſureties.

John Hurſt by the death of Q. Mary releaſed.

Well, well, ſaid hee, I perceive I ſhall find you an heretike, by God; but I wil goe to maſſe, and I will not loſe it for all your pratling. Then into his Chappell he went, and when maſſe was done he ſent for them, and cauſed his Prieſts to read a ſcrole unto them as concerning the ſeven ſacraments, and ever as he ſpake of the body and bloud of Chriſt, hee put off his cap, and ſaid; Loe ye may ſee, you will deny theſe things, and care not for your Prince; but you ſhall feele it ere I have done with you, and all the faculty of you, with other talke more betweene them, I know not what; but in the end they were licenſed to depart under ſureties to appeare againe before him within three weekes, and then to goe to Lancaſter. Howbeit, in the meane while it ſo pleaſed God, that within foure daies of the day appointed, it was noiſed that the Queene was dead, and within fourteene daies after the ſaid Jeffry Hurſt fet home his two books, and nothing was ſaid unto him.

J Hurſt in Q. Elizabeths time put in authority to ſee the proceeding of Religion.

It followed after this that Gods Word begun to take place, and the Queenes Viſitors came downe into that countrey, who did chuſe foure men in the Pariſh, to wit, Simon Smith, Jeffrey Hurſt, Henry Browne, George Eccerſly, which foure were Proteſtants, to ſee the Queens proceedings to take place; which according to their power did the ſame, notwithſtanding it did little prevaile: and therefore the ſaid Jeffrey being ſore grieved with the office, fell ſicke, in which ſickneſſe it pleaſed God to call him, making a very godly end, God have the praiſe for it.

Tho. Lelond the popiſh Juſtice would not come to the Church in Q. Elizabeths time, and yet continued Juſtice ſtill.

A catholike father of the popiſh church.

Note a catholike knacke of a popiſh Juſtice.

Now to returne to the foreſaid Thomas Lelond againe, hee continuing in his office ſtill, did very few times come to the Church, but ſaid hee was aged, and might not labour, and there kept with him Sir Ralfe Parkinſon his Prieſt, which could (as it was ſaid) miniſter the Communion unto the people, and ſing maſſe to his Maſter: yes, and (as the ſame reported) did a pretier feate than all that; for he begat two children by a ſervant in a houſe, his Maſter knowing it, and ſaying nothing, for that hee would not loſe his good Maſſe-Prieſt.

Furthermore, this was noted in the ſame Juſtice Lelonds behaviour at Service time, that hee had a little dog which he would play with all Service time, and the ſame dog had a coller full of bels, ſo that the noiſe of them did moleſt and trouble others, as well as himſelfe, from hearing the Service. Alſo in the ſame Juſtice it was noted and obſerved, that as he ſate in his Chappel at Service time, his manner was on a Willow barke to knit knots, for that he could not be ſuffered to have his Beads, and to put the ſame upon a ſtring alſo. Witneſſe hereof Edward Hurſt, with others.

The trouble & eſcape of Henry Browne out of his enemies hands.

Furthermore, as concerning Henry Browne one of the foure choſen men above mentioned, this is alſo to be added, that the ſaid Henry Browne dwelling in the Towne of Pinnington in the ſame Pariſh, Anno 1564. had a little boy, who as hee was playing in the Towne, one Glaves wife gave unto the boy a paire of Beades made of wood, for him to play withall. The little boy, being glad thereof to have ſuch a trim thing, went home and ſhewed his father of them. His father ſeeing the Beades, tooke them and burned them, and when he had ſo done, went forth and asked who had given unto his little boy that paire of Beades, Glaves wife maintainer of popery, and a perſecutor.

That did I, ſaid Glaves wife.

Well, ſaid he, I have burned them.

Haſt thou ſo, ſaid ſhe? and thruſt him from her. They ſhall be the deareſt Beads that ever thou saweſt, and incontinent went and complained unto the ſaid Juſtice, how Browne had burned her Beades.

Juſtice Lelond writeth to the Conſtables, to apprehend Henry Browne.

Henry Browne troubled for burning of beads in Q. Elizabeths time.

This matter the Juſtice tooke ſore to ſnuffe, and was very angry, and did direct his letter unto the Conſtables of the ſame Towne, by his owne hand ſubſcribed; the title of which ſuperſcription on the backſide was this; To the conſtables of Pinington give this.

This done, the Conſtables according to this their charge did bring him afore the Juſtice at the time appointed; and when the Juſtice came to talke with him, he was in ſuch a heate, that hee called him theefe, and ſaid that he had robbed his neighbour in burning of her Beades, and that there were rings and other jewels on them, and that he might as well have picked her purſe; wherefore (ſaid he) I will lay thee in Lancaſter for this geere.

Like maſter, like men.

Whileſt they were thus talking, there came all his ſervants about them from their worke, ſaying; Is this Maſter Doctor Browne that will burne Beades? I pray you Sir, let us have him here and preach. I will give a quarters wages, ſaith one; and I will give money ſaith another, and he ſhall be Maſter Doctor; with much deriſion and ſcoffing at this poore man.

He hearing this, ſpake againe boldly, and ſaid; Did you ſend for me to make a laughing ſtocke of me? You be in office, and ought rather to come to the Church, and ſee ſuch Papiſtry aboliſhed your ſelfe, than thus to trouble me for doing my duty: but I tell you plainely, that you doe not come to Church as you ought to do, and therfore with more things that I have to charge you withall, I ſay you do not well. When all this miſdemeanour of the Juſtice laid to his charge would not prevaile, and alſo witneſſe came in of the Papiſts, which did know the Beades, and teſtified that they were plaine, and coſt but a halfpenny, he then went into his parlour in a chafe, and one Maſter Erberſton a Papiſt with him; which Erberſton turned backe, and ſaid, Is it you Henry Browne, that keepeth this ſtirre? you are one of them that pulled downe Croſſes in the Church, and pulled downe the Rood ſollar, and all the Saints; you were beſt now to goe paint a blacke Devill, and ſet him up and worſhip him, for that will ſerve well for your Religion. And thus under ſuretiſhip he did depart till July following, and then he ſayd hee ſhould goe to Lancaſter priſon, and ſo came hee away.

A lamentable thing when ſuch Juſtices beare rule over chriſtian congregations!

Henry Browne under ſureties diſmiſſed for a time.

The time drew on that he ſhould appeare, but God ſtaied the matter, and in July, as the foreſaid

William Wood of Kent.

Examination of W. Wood.

THe examination of William Wood Baker, dwelling in the Pariſh of Strowd, in the County of Kent, before Doctor Kenall Chancellor of the Dioceſſe of Rocheſter, Doctor Chadſey, the Maior of Rocheſter, and M. Robinſon the Scribe, the 19. day of October, and in the ſecond yeare of Q. Mary, in S. Nicholas Church in Rocheſter.

W. Wood charged for not comming to Church.

M. Robinſon. Will. Wood, you are preſented, becauſe you will not come to the Church, nor receive the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar. How ſay you? have you received, or have you not?

Wood. I have not received it, nor dare I receive it, as you doe now miniſter it.

Kenall. Thou heretike, what is the cauſe that thou haſt not received the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar? and at this word all they put off their caps and made low obeiſance.

Three cauſes why W. Wood durſt not receive the ſacrament of the altar.

Wood. There be three cauſes that make my conſcience afraid that I dare not receive it. The firſt, Chriſt did deliver it to his twelve Apoſtles, and ſaid, Take, eat: and drinke ye all of this, &c. and ye eat and drinke up all alone. The ſecond cauſe is; you hold it to be worſhipped, contrary to Gods Commandements, Thou ſhalt not bow downe nor worſhip. The third cauſe is; you miniſter it in a ſtrange tongue, contrary to S. Pauls doctrine, I had rather have five words with underſtanding, than ten thouſand with tongues: by reaſon whereof the people be ignorant of the death of Chriſt.

Kenall. Thou heretike, wilt thou have any plainer words than theſe, Hoc eſt corpus meum? Take, eat, this is my body? wilt thou deny the Scripture?

Wood. I will not deny the holy Scriptures, God forbid, but with my heart I doe faithfully beleeve them. S. Paul ſaith, God calleth thoſe things that are not, as though they were. and Chriſt ſaith, I am a vine: I am a dore. S. Paul ſaith, The rocke is Chriſt: All which are figurative ſpeeches, wherin one thing is ſpoken, & another thing is underſtood.

Robinſon. You make a very long talke of this matter, Learne Wood, learne.

Kenall. Nay, theſe heretikes will not learne, Looke how this heretike glorieth in himſelf. Thou foole, art thou wiſer than the Queen and her Councell, and all the learned men of this realme?

Wood. And pleaſe you, M. Chancellor, I think you would be loath to have ſuch glory, to have your life and goods taken away, and to be thus called upon, as you raile upon me. But the ſervant in not greater than his Maſter. And where you doe mocke me, and ſay that I am wiſer than the Queene and her Councell, S. Paul ſaith, The wiſedome of the wiſe of this world is fooliſhneſſe before God, and he that will be wiſe in this world, ſhall be accounted but a foole.

Kenall. Doeſt not thou beleeve that after theſe words ſpoken by a Prieſt, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my body, there remaineth no more bread and wine, but the very fleſh and bloud of Chriſt, as he was borne of the Virgin Mary, really and ſubſtantially, in quantity and quality, as hee did hang upon the croſſe.

Wood. I pray you M. Chancellor, give mee leave for my learning, to aske you one queſtion, and I will anſwer you after.

Kenall. It is ſome wiſe queſtion, I warrant you.

Anno 1558.

Ezek. 5.

W. Woods queſtion propounded to the Doctors.

Wood. God ſpake to the Prophet Ezechiel, ſaying, Thou ſon of man, take a raſor, and ſhave off the haire of thy head and of thy beard, and take one part and caſt into the aire, take the ſecond part and put it into thy coate lap; and take the third part and caſt it into the fire: and this is Ieruſalem. I pray you M. Chancellor, was this haire that the Prophet did caſt into the fire, or was it Jeruſalem?

Kenall. No: it did ſignifie Jeruſalem.

The naturall quantity of Chriſt not in the ſacrament

Wood. Even ſo this word of Chriſt, This is my body, is not ſo to be underſtood, that Chriſts carnall, naturall, and reall body is in the ſame, in quantity and quality as it was borne of the Virgin Mary, and as hee was crucified upon the Croſſe, is preſent or incloſed in the Sacrament: but it doth ſignifie Chriſts body, as Saint Paul ſaith, So oft as yee doe eat of this bread, and drinke of this cup, you ſhall ſhew forth the Lords death till he come. What ſhould the Apoſtle meane by this word, till he come, if he were here carnally, naturally, corporally, and really in the ſame quantity and quality as hee was borne of the Virgin Mary, and as hee did hang on the Croſſe, as you ſay? but Saint Paul ſaith, You ſhall ſhew the Lords death till he come. This doth argue that he is not here as you would have us to beleeve.

D. Chadſey. I will prove that Chriſt is here preſent under the forme of bread, but not in quantity and quality.

Kenall ſaid, Yes, he is here preſent in quantity and quality.

Chadſey. He is here preſent under a form, and not in quantity and quality.

The papiſts could not agree in their own doctrine.

Yes, ſaid Kenall.

No, ſaid Chadſey.

I will prove him here in quantity and quality, ſaid Kenall.

I will prove the contrary, ſaid Chadſey.

And theſe two Doctors were ſo earneſt in this matter, the one to affirme, the other to deny, contending and raging ſo ſore one at the other, that they fomed at the mouth, and one was ready to ſpit in anothers face, ſo that in great fury and rage the two Doctors roſe up from the judgement ſeat, and D. Kenall departed out of the church in great rage and fury immediately.

Wood. Behold good people, they would have us to beleeve, that Chriſt is naturally, really, in quantity and quality, preſent in the Sacrament, and yet they cannot tell themſelves, nor agree within themſelves how he is there.

W. Wood delivered as was Saint Paul by the contention of the Phariſees & Sadduces.

At theſe words the people made a great ſhout, and the Maior ſtood up and commanded the people to be quiet, and to keep ſilence. And the God that did deliver Saint Paul out of the hands of the high Prieſts, by the contention that was betweene the Phariſees and Sadduces, did even ſo deliver me at that time out of the mouthes of the bloudy Papiſts, by the means of the contention of theſe two Doctors. Bleſſed be the name of the Lord, which hath promiſed to lay no more upon his, than he will make them able to beare, and in the midſt of temptation he can make his way for his (how, and when it pleaſeth him) to eſcape out of all dangers.

Many other like examples of Gods helping hand have been declared upon his elect Saints and children, in delivering them out of danger by wonderfull and miraculous wayes, ſome by one meanes, ſome by another. What a notable worke of Gods mighty hand was ſeene in Simon Grineus, mentioned in the Commentary of Melancthon upon Daniel? Who having a ſudden warning by a certaine old man, who was not ſeene after, nor knowne then of any what hee was, avoided the perill of taking and burning, as by the relation of Melancthon, writing and witneſſing the ſame, may appeare in the words of his own ſtory here following.

The ſtory of Simon Grinæus Ex Commentariis Phil. Mel in cap. 10. Danielis.

John Faber B. of Vienna perſecutor.

Obſequium amicos, veritas odium parit.

WHen I was (ſaith hee) at the aſſembly holden at Spyre, in the yeare of our Lord, 1539. by chance Simon Grineus came thither unto mee from the Univerſity of Heidelberge, where he heard Faber, the Biſhop of Vienna, in a Sermon, defend and maintaine certaine deteſtable errors. When the Sermon was done, hee followed Faber going out of the Church, and ſaluted him reverently, declaring unto him that hee was moved of a good zeale and intent, ſomewhat to ſay unto him. Faber was contented to talke with him.

Then Grineus ſaid unto him, that he was very ſorry that a man of ſuch learning and authority ſhould openly maintaine ſuch errors as were both contumelious againſt God, and alſo might bee refuted by the manifeſt teſtimonies of the Scripture. Ireneus writeth (ſaid he) that Polycarpus was wont to ſtop his eares whenſoever he heard any erroneous and wicked doctrine. With what minde then (thinke you) would Polycarpus have heard you argue and reaſon what it is that the mouſe eateth, when he gnaweth the conſecrated hoſt? Who would not bewaile ſuch ignorance and blindneſſe of the Church? With this Faber brake off his talke, as he was about to ſay more, and asked his name. This man diſſembling nothing, gently told him that his name was Grineus.

Faber gently admoniſhed of Grineus for his Sermon.

This Faber (as many well knew) was alwaies timorous and fearefull in the company of learned men. Wherefore hee fearing the learning, eloquence, and fervent zeale of Grineus, ſpecially in ſuch a matter as this was, fained as though he had bin ſent for by the King, and that he had no leiſure now to reaſon upon this matter. Hee pretended that he was very deſirous of acquaintance and longer talke with Grineus, intreating him, that both for his own private cauſe, and alſo for the common wealth, he would come againe the next day unto him, and ſo ſhewed him his lodging, and appointed him an houre when he ſhould come. Grineus, thinking that he had ſpoken unfainedly, promiſed ſo to doe.

Godly warning ſent by an old man to Grineus.

When he was departed from Faber, hee came ſtraightway unto us, and was ſcarſely ſet at the table (for it was ſupper time) reciting a part of his talke with Faber unto me and others there preſent, when as I ſitting with my company, was ſuddenly called out of the Parlour by a certaine antient fatherly man, who ſhewing a ſingular gravity in his countenance, words, and behaviour, ſpake unto me, and ſaid, that the Sergeants would by and by come unto our lodging, being ſent by the Kings commandement, to carry Grineus to priſon, whom Faber had accuſed to the King; commanding that Grineus ſhould ſtraightwayes depart out of the towne, and exhorted me, that we ſhould in no caſe delay the time: and ſo bidding me farewell, departed. But what old man this was, neither did I know then, nor afterward could I underſtand. I returning againe unto my company, bade them riſe, and told them what the old man had ſaid unto me.

Grineus accuſed and purſued.

By and by, we taking Grineus in the midſt of us, carried him through the ſtreet to the River of Rhene, whereas after we had ſtayed upon the hither banke a while, untill Grineus with his companion were carried over in a ſmall boat, returning againe to our lodging, wee underſtood that the Sergeants had been there, when wee were but a little way gone out of the houſe. Now in what great danger Grineus ſhould have been, if hee had been carried to priſon, by this cruelty of Faber every man eaſily may conjecture: Wherefore we judged, that that moſt cruell intent and purpoſe of him, was diſappointed by Gods mercifull providence. And as I cannot ſay, what old man it was that gave me that warning, even ſo likewiſe the Sergeants made ſuch quicke ſpeed, that except Grineus had been covered and defended by Angels through the marvellous providence of God, hee could never have eſcaped.

Grineus warned to fly, eſcapeth.

Gods mercifull providence in defeating the cruell purpoſe of perſecutors.

Concerning the truth of this matter, there be many good men yet alive, which know both the ſame, and alſo were preſent at the doing thereof. Therefore let us give thankes unto God, which hath given us his Angels to be our keepers and defenders, whereby with more quiet minds we may fulfill and doe the office of our vocation.

With ſuch like examples of Gods mighty and mercifull cuſtody, the Church of Chriſt in all ages doth abound, as by manifold experiences may appeare as well among the Germanes, as alſo in other places and ages: but in no place more, nor in any time more plentifull, than in this perſecuting time of Q. Mary, in this our Realme of England, as partly hath been already hiſtoried, and part yet remaineth (the Lord willing) moreover hereunto to be added.

The Lady Katherine, Ducheſſe of Suffolke.

STephen Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter, ſurmiſing the Lady Katherine Baroneſſe of Willoughby and Ereſby, and Ducheſſe Dowager of Suffolke, to bee one of his antient enemies, becauſe hee knew he had deſerved no better of her, deviſed, in the holy time of the firſt Lent in Queene Maries reigne, a holy practiſe of revenge, firſt by touching her in the perſon of her husband Maſter Richard Berty Eſquire, for whom he ſent an attachement (having the great ſeale at his devotion) to the Sheriffe of Lincolnſhire, with a ſpeciall letter commanding moſt ſtraightly the ſame Sheriffe, to attach the ſaid Richard immediately, and without baile to bring him up to London to his great Lordſhip. M. Berty her husband being cleere in conſcience, and free from offence toward the Q. could not conjecture any cauſe of this ſtrange proceſſe, unleſſe it were ſome quarrell for Religion, which he thought could not be, ſo ſore as the proces pretended.

The old hatred of Step. Gardiner B. of Wincheſter againſt the Ducheſſe of Suffolke.

M. Ric. Berty husband to the Ducheſſe, attached by the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

The Sheriffe, notwithſtanding the commandement, adventured onely to take the bond of M. Berty with two ſureties, in a thouſand pound for his appearance to be made before the Biſhop on good Fryday following, at which day Maſter Berty appeared, the Biſhop then lying at his houſe by Saint Mary Overies. Of whoſe preſence when the Biſhop underſtood by a Gentleman of his chamber, in a great rage hee came out of his gallery into his dining chamber, where he found a preaſe of ſuters, ſaying hee would not that day heare any, but came forth onely to know of M. Berty, how he being a ſubject, durſt ſo arrogantly ſet at light two former proceſſes of the Queene.

M. Berty appeareth before B. Gardiner.

M. Berty

Talke betweene Biſhop Gardiner and M. Berty.

M. Berty anſwered, that albeit my Lords words might ſeeme to the reſt ſomewhat ſharp towards him, yet he conceived great comfort of them. For whereas he before thought it extremity to be attached, having uſed no obſtinacy or contumacy, now he gathered of thoſe words, that my Lord meant not otherwiſe but to have uſed ſome ordinary proceſſe; albeit indeed none came to his hands.

Yea mary, quoth the Biſhop, I have ſent you two Subpenas, to appeare immediatly, and I am ſure you received them, for I committed the truſt of them to no worſe man but to M. Solicitor, and I ſhall make you an example to all Lincolnſhire for your obſtinacy.

M. Berty denying the receit of any, humbly prayed his Lordſhip to ſuſpend his diſpleaſure and the puniſhment till he had good triall thereof, and then, if it pleaſe him, to double the paine for the fault, if any were.

The devotion of B. Gardiner to good Friday.

Well, quoth the Biſhop, I have appointed my ſelfe this day (according to the holineſſe of the ſame) for devotion, and I will not further trouble me with you: but I enioyne you in a thouſand pound not to depart without leave, and to be here againe to morrow at 7. of the clocke. Maſter Berty well obſerved the houre, and no iotte failed: at which time the Biſhop had with him M. Sergeant Stampford, to whom he moved certain queſtions of the ſaid Maſter Berty, becauſe Maſter Sergeant was towards the Lord Wriotheſley, late Earle of Southhampton, and Chancellor of England, with whom the ſaid Maſter Berty was brought up. Maſter Sergeant made very friendly report of M. Berty, of his owne knowledge for the time of their converſation together. Whereupon the Biſhop cauſed M. Berty to be brought in, and firſt making a falſe traine (as God would, without fire) before he would deſcend to the quarrell of religion, he aſſaulted him in this manner.

M. Berty attachhed for debt of 4000. pounds due to the Queen.

Winch. The Queenes pleaſure is, quoth the Biſhop, that you ſhall make preſent paiment of 4000. pound due to her father by Duke Charles, late huſband to the Ducheſſe your wife, whoſe executor ſhe was.

Bert. Pleaſeth it your Lordſhip, quoth Maſter Berty, that debt is eſtalled, and is according to that eſtallement truly anſwered.

Kette captain of the rebels in K. Edw. time.

Winch. Tuſh (quoth the Biſhop) the Queen will not be bound to eſtallements in the time of Kettes government: for ſo I eſteeme the late government.

Bert. The eſtallement (quoth M. Berty) was appointed by K. Henry the eighth: beſides, the ſame was by ſpeciall commiſſioners confirmed in K. Edwards time; and the Lord Treaſurer being an executor alſo to the Duke Charles ſolely and wholly, tooke upon him, before the ſaid Commiſſioners, to diſcharge the ſame.

Winch. If it be true that you ſay (quoth the B.) I will ſhew you favour. But of another thing Maſter Berty I will admoniſh you, as meaning you well. I heare evill of your Religion; yet I hardly can thinke evill of you, whoſe mother I know to be as godly and Catholike, as any within this land; your ſelfe brought up with a Maſter, whoſe education if I ſhould diſallow, I might be charged as Author of his error. Beſides, partly I know you my ſelfe, and underſtand of my friends enough to make me your friend: wherefore I will not doubt of you, but I pray you, if I may aſke the queſtion of my Lady your wife, is ſhe now as ready to ſet up the Maſſe, as ſhe was lately to pull it down, when ſhe cauſed in her progreſſe, a dog in a Rochet to be caried, and called by my name? or doth ſhe think her lambes now ſafe enough, which ſaid to me, when I vailed my bonnet to her out of my Chamber window in the Tower, that it was merry with the lambes, now the Wolfe was ſhut up? Another time my Lord her huſband, having invited me and diverſe Ladies to dinner, deſired every Lady to chooſe him whom ſhe loved beſt, and ſo place themſelves: My Lady your wife taking me by the hand, for that my Lord would not have her to take himſelfe, ſaid, that foraſmuch as ſhe could not ſit downe with my Lord whom ſhee loved beſt, ſhee had choſen him whom ſhee loved worſt.

A dog clothed in a Rochet under the name of B. Gardiner.

It is merry with lambes, when wolves be tyed up.

Of the device of the Dog, quoth Maſter Berty, ſhee was neither the author, nor the allower. The words, though in that ſeaſon they ſounded bitter to your Lordſhip, yet if it would pleaſe you without offence to know the cauſe, I am ſure the one will purge the other. As touching ſetting up of Maſſe, which ſhe learned not only by ſtrong perſwaſions of divers excellent learned men, but by univerſall conſent and order whole ſixe yeares paſt, inwardly to abhorre, if ſhee ſhould outwardly allow, ſhe ſhould both to Chriſt ſhew her ſelfe a falſe Chriſtian, and to her Prince a maſquing ſubiect. You know, my Lord, one by iudgement reformed, is more worth than a thouſand transformed temporizers. To force a confeſſion of religion by mouth, contrary to that in the heart, worketh damnation where ſalvation is pretended.

Purgation of the Lady Ducheſſe for not comming to Maſſe.

Yea mary (quoth the Biſhop) that deliberation would doe well if ſhe were required to come from an old religion to a new. But now ſhe is to return from a new to an ancient religion: Wherein when ſhe made me her Goſſip, ſhe was as earneſt as any.

For that, my Lord (ſaid Maſter Berty) not long ſince, ſhee anſwered a friend of hers uſing your Lordſhips ſpeech, That Religion went not by age, but by truth: and therefore ſhe was to be turned by perſwaſion, and not by commandement.

Religion goeth not by age, but by truth.

I pray you (quoth the Biſhop) think you it poſſible to perſwade her?

Yea verily (ſaid M. Berty) with the truth: for ſhe is reaſonable enough.

The Biſhop thereunto replying, ſaid, It will be a marvellous griefe to the Prince of Spaine, and to all the Nobility that ſhall come with him, when they ſhall finde but two Noble perſonages of the Spaniſh race within this land, the Queen, and my Lady your wife, and one of them gone from the faith.

Maſter Berty anſwered, That he truſted they ſhould finde no fruits of infidelity in her.

So the Biſhop perſwaded M. Berty to travell earneſtly for the reformation of her opinion, and offering large friendſhip, releaſed him of his bond from further appearance.

M. Berty releaſed from his bond of appearing.

The Ducheſſe and her huſband, daily more and more, by their friends underſtanding that the Biſhop meant to call her to an account of her faith, whereby extremity might follow, deviſed waies how by the Queenes licence they might paſſe the Seas. Maſter Berty had a ready meane: for there reſted great ſummes of money due to the olde Duke of Suffolke (one of whoſe executors the Ducheſſe was) beyond the Seas, the Emperor himſelfe being one of thoſe debtors. Maſter Berty communicated this his purpoſed ſute for licence to paſſe the Seas, and the cauſe to the Biſhop, adding, that he tooke this time moſt meete to deale with the Emperor, by reaſon of likelihood of marriage betweene the Queen and his ſon.

Waies practiſed how to convey the Ducheſſe over the ſeas with the Queene her licence.

M. Berty deviſeth cauſe to paſſe over into Flanders.

I like your device well (quoth the Biſhop) but I thinke it better that you tarry the Princes comming, and I will procure you his letters alſo to his father.

Nay (quoth M. Berty) under your Lordſhips correction and pardon of ſo liberall ſpeech, I ſuppoſe the time will then be leſſe convenient: for when the marriage is conſummate, the Emperor hath his deſire; but till then he will refuſe nothing to win credit with us.

By Saint Mary (quoth the Biſhop, ſmiling) you gueſſe ſhrewdly. Well, proceed in your ſute to the Queene, and it ſhall not lacke my helping hand.

M. Berty licenſed by the Q. to paſſe the ſeas.

Maſter Berty found ſo good ſucceſſe, that he in few daies obtained the Queenes licence, not only to paſſe the Seas, but to paſſe and repaſſe them ſo often as to him ſeemed good, till he had finiſhed all his buſineſſe and cauſes beyond the Seas. So he paſſed the Seas at Dover about the beginning of June, in the firſt yeere of her raigne, leaving the Ducheſſe behinde, who, by agreement and conſent betwixt her and her huſband, followed, taking Barge at Lion Key, very early in the morning, on the firſt day of January next enſuing, not without ſome perill.

Preparation made how to convey the Ducheſſe over the ſeas.

M. Cranwel a truſty friend to M. Berty.

There was none of thoſe that went with her, made privy to her going till the inſtant, but an old Gentleman, called Maſter Robert Cranwell, whom M. Berty had ſpecially provided for that purpoſe. She tooke with her her daughter, an infant of one yeare, and the meaneſt of her ſervants, for ſhe doubted the beſt would not adventure that fortune with her. They were in number foure men, one a Greeke borne, which was a rider of horſes, another a Joyner, the third a Brewer, the fourth a foole, one of the Kitchin, one Gentlewoman, and a Laundreſſe.

The Duches with her company departed the realme.

The manner of the Duches flying out of her houſe.

As ſhe departed her houſe called the Barbican, betwixt foure and five of the clocke in the morning, with her company and baggage, one Atkinſon a Herauld, Keeper of her houſe, hearing noiſe about the houſe, roſe and came out with a torch in his hand as ſhee was yet iſſuing out of the gate: wherewith being amazed, ſhe was forced to leave a male with neceſſaries for her young daughter, and a milke pot with milke in the ſame gate-houſe, commanding all her ſervants to ſpeede them away before to Lion Key: and taking with her only the two women and her child: ſo ſoone as ſhee was forth of her owne houſe, perceiving the Herauld to follow, ſhee ſtept in at Charter houſe hard by. The Herauld comming out of the Ducheſſe houſe, and ſeeing no body ſtirring, nor aſſured (though by the male ſuſpecting) that ſhee was departed, returned in; and while he ſtayed ranſacking parcels left in the male, the Ducheſſe iſſued into the Streete, and proceeded in her journey, hee knowing the place only by name where ſhee ſhould take her boate, but not the way thither, nor any with her. Likewiſe her Servants having divided themſelves, none but one knew the way to the ſaid Key.

The Duches with her company taketh Bharge.

So ſhee apparelled like a meane Merchants wife, and the reſt like meane ſervants, walking in the Streetes unknowne, ſhee tooke the way that led to Fineſbury field, and the others walked the City Streetes as they lay open before them, till by chance more than diſcretion, they met all ſuddenly together a little within Moregate, from whence they paſſed directly to Lion Key, and there took Barge in a morning ſo miſty, that the Steareman was loath to launch out, but that they urged him. So ſoone as the day permitted, the Councell was informed of her departure, and ſome of them came forthwith to her houſe, to enquire of the manner thereof, and tooke an inventory of her goods, beſides further order deviſed for ſearch and watch to apprehend and ſtay her.

Purſuit after the Ducheſſe.

The Duches ſtayed in M. Goſlings houſe by Leigh, under the name of his daughter.

The fame of her departure reached to Leigh, a towne at the lands end, before her approaching thither. By Leigh dwelt one Goſling, a Merchant of London, an old acquaintance of Cranwels, whither the ſaid Cranwell brought the Ducheſſe, naming her Miſtreſſe White, the daughter of Maſter Goſling, for ſuch a daughter he had which never was in that Countrey. There ſhee repoſed her, and made new garments for her Daughter, having loſt her owne in the male at Barbican.

The hard adventure of the Duches upon the ſeas.

When the time came that ſhe ſhould take ſhip, being conſtrained that night to lie at an Inne in Leigh (where ſhe was againe almoſt bewrayed) yet notwithſtanding by Gods good working ſhe eſcaping that hazzard; at length, as the tide and winde did ſerve, they went aboord, and being carried twice into the Seas, almoſt into the coaſt of Zeland, by contrary winde were driven to the place from whence they came, and at the laſt recoile, certaine perſons came to the ſhore, ſuſpecting ſhe was within that ſhip; yet having examined one of her company that was aland for freſh Achates, and finding by the ſimplicity of his tale, only the appearance of a meane Merchants wife to be a ſhipboord, he ceaſed any further to ſearch.

The Duches landed in Brabant.

M. Berty with the Ducheſſe his wife arrived at Santon, a Free-towne of Weſell in Cleveland.

To be ſhort, ſo ſoone as the Ducheſſe had landed in Brabant, ſhe and her women were apparelled like the women of Netherland with hooks; and ſo ſhe and her huſband tooke their jourdey towards Cleveland, and being arrived at a towne therein called Santon, tooke a houſe there, untill they might further deviſe of ſome ſure place, where to ſettle themſelves.

A protection procured for the Ducheſſe, of the Magiſtrate of Weſell.

About five miles from Santon, is a free town called Weſell, under the ſaid Duke of Cleves dominion, and one of the Haunce townes, priviledged with the company of the Steeleyard in London, whither divers Wallons were fled for religion, and had for their Miniſter one Frances Peruſell, then called Frances de Rivers, who had received ſome courteſie in England at the Ducheſſe hands. Maſter Berty, being yet at Santon, practiſed with him to obtaine a protection from the magiſtrates for his abode and his wives at Weſell; which was the ſooner procured, becauſe the ſtate of the Ducheſſe was not diſcovered, but onely to the chiefe Magiſtrate, earneſtly bent to ſhew them pleaſure, whiles this protection was in ſeeking.

In the meane while, at the Towne of Santon was a muttering that the Ducheſſe and her huſband were greater perſonages than they gave themſelves forth, and the Magiſtrates not very well inclined to Religion, the Biſhop of Arras alſo being Deane of the great Minſter, order was taken, that the Ducheſſe and her huſband ſhould be examined of their condition and Religion upon the ſudden. Which practiſe diſcovered by a Gentleman of that Countrey to M. Bertie, he without delay taking no more than the Ducheſſe, her daughter, and two other with them, as though he meant no more but to take the ayre, about three of the clocke in the afternoone in February, on foot, without hiring of horſe or wagon for feare of diſcloſing his purpoſe, meant privily that night to get to Weſell, leaving his other family ſtill at Santon.

After the Ducheſſe and he were one Engliſh mile from the towne, there fell a mighty raine of continuance, whereby a long froſt and yce before congealed, was thawed, which doubled more the wearineſſe of thoſe new lacquies. But being now on the way, and overtaken with the night, they ſent their two ſervants (which only went with them) to villages as they paſt, to hire ſome carre for their eaſe, but none could be hired. In the meane time Maſter Berty was forced to carry the childe, and the Ducheſſe his cloke and rapier. At laſt, betwixt ſix and ſeven of the clocke in the dark night, they came to Weſell, and repairing to their Innes for lodging, and ſome repoſe after ſuch a painfull journey, found hard entertainment: for going from Inne to Inne offering large money for ſmall lodging, they were refuſed of all the Inne-holders, ſuſpecting Maſter Berty to be a Launce-knight, and the Ducheſſe to be his woman. The childe for cold and ſuſtenance cryed pittifully, the mother wept as faſt, the heavens rained as faſt as the cloudes could poure.

Gods providence in time of diſtreſſe.

M. Berty, deſtitute of all other ſuccour of hoſpitality, reſolved to bring the Ducheſſe to the Porch of the great Church in the towne, and ſo to buy coales, victuals, and ſtraw for their miſerable repoſe there that night, or at leaſt till by Gods help he might provide her better lodging. Maſter Berty at that time underſtood not much dutch, and by reaſon of evill weather and late ſeaſon of the night, he could not happen upon any that could ſpeake Engliſh, French, Italian, or Latine, till at laſt, going towards the Church Porch, he heard two ſtriplings talking Latine, to whom he approached, and offered them two ſtivers to bring him to ſome Wallons houſe.

The meeting of M. Peruſel and the Ducheſſe at Weſell.

By theſe boyes, and Gods good conduct, hée chanced at the firſt upon the houſe where Maſter Peruſell ſupped that night, who had procured them the protection of the Magiſtrates of that Towne. At the firſt knocke, the Goodman of the houſe himſelfe came to the doore, and opening it, asked Maſter Berty what he was. Maſter Berty ſaid, An Engliſhman, that ſought for one Maſter Peruſelles houſe. The Wallon willed Maſter Berty to ſtay a while, who went backe, and told Maſter Peruſell, that the ſame Engliſh Gentleman, of whom they had talked the ſame ſupper, had ſent by likelihood his ſervant to ſpeake with him. Whereupon Maſter Peruſell came to the doore, and beholding Maſter Berty, the Ducheſſe, and their childe, their faces, apparels, and bodies ſo farre from their old forme, deformed with dirt, weather, and heavineſſe, could not ſpeake to them, nor they to him for feares. At length recovering themſelves, they ſaluted one another, and ſo together entered the houſe, God knoweth full joyfully; M. Berty changing his apparell with the good man, the Ducheſſe with the good wife, and their childe with the childe of the houſe.

The Citizens of Weſell admoniſhed by their Preacher of their hardneſſe toward ſtrangers.

Within few daies after, by Maſter Peruſelles meanes, they hired a very faire houſe in the towne, and did not let to ſhew themſelves what they were, in ſuch good ſort as their preſent condition permitted. It was by this time thorow the whole Towne what diſcourteſie the Inneholders had ſhewed unto them at their entry: inſomuch as on the Sunday following, a Preacher in the Pulpit openly in ſharpe termes rebuked that great incivility toward ſtrangers, by allegation of ſundry places out of holy Scriptures, diſcourſing how not only Princes ſometime are received in the image of private perſons, but Angels in the ſhape of men, and that GOD of his juſtice would make them ſtrangers one day in another Land, to have more ſenſe of the afflicted heart of a ſtranger.

A friendly part of Sir Jo. Maſon towards the Ducheſſe.

A train laid for the Ducheſſe by the Lord Paget, and the Duke of Brunſwicke.

The time thus paſſing forth, as they thought themſelves thus happily ſettled, ſuddenly a watch-word came from Sir John Maſon, then Quéene Maries Ambaſſadour in Netherland, that my Lord Paget had fained an errand to the Bathes that waies: and whereas the Duke of Brunſwicke was ſhortly with tenne Enſignes to paſſe by Weſell for the ſervice of the houſe of Auſtricke againſt the French King, the ſaid Ducheſſe and her husband ſhould be with the ſame charge and company intercepted.

M. Berty and the Ducheſſe remove to Wineheim under the Palſegrave.

Wherefore to prevent the cruelty of theſe enemies, Maſter Berty with his wife and childe departed to a place called Wineheim in high Dutchland under the Palſgraves Dominion; where under his protection they continued till their neceſſaries began to faile them, and they, almoſt fainting under ſo heavy a burden, began to faile of hope.

The helping hand of the Lord againe in their neceſſity.

Joan. Alaſco a meanes to the King of Pole, for the Ducheſſe of Suffolke.

The Duches invited into Poleland by the K. letters.

M. Barloe a meſſenger from the Ducheſſe to the K. of Pole.

The Palatine of Wilva a great friend to the Ducheſſe.

At what time, in the middeſt of their deſpaire, there came ſuddenly letters to them from the Palatine of Wilva, and the King of Pole, being inſtructed of their hard eſtate by a Baron, named Ioannes Alaſco, that was ſometime in England, offering them large courteſie. This purviſion unlooked for, greatly revived their heavy ſpirits. Yet conſidering they ſhould remove from many their country men and acquaintance, to a place ſo far diſtant, a Country not haunted with the Engliſh, and perhaps upon their arrivall not finding as they looked for, the end of their journey ſhould be worſe than the beginning; they deviſed thereupon with one Maſter Barloe, late Biſhop of Chicheſter, that if he would vouchſafe to take ſome paines therein, they would make him a fellow of that journey. So finding him prone, they ſent with him letters of great thankes to the King and Palatine, and alſo with a few principall Jewels (which only they had left of many) to ſollicite for them, that the King would vouchſafe under his ſeale, to aſſure them of the thing which he ſo honourably by letters offered.

The Duches taketh her journey toward Poleland.

The troubles happening to the Ducheſſe in her journey to Poleland.

That ſute, by the forwardneſſe of the Palatine, was as ſoone granted as uttered. Upon which aſſurance the ſaid Ducheſſe and her husband, with their family, entered the journey in April, 1557. from the Caſtle of Wineheim, where they before lay, towards Frankford. In the which their journey, it were long here to deſcribe what dangers fell by the way upon them and their whole company, by reaſon of their Lantgraves Captaine, who, under a quarrell pretenſed for a Spaniell of Maſter Berties, ſet upon them in the high way with his horſemen, thruſting their Bore-ſpeares thorow the wagon where the children and women were, Maſter Berty having but foure horſemen with him. In the which brabble it hapned the Captaines horſe to be ſlain under him.

Whereupon a rumor was ſparſed immediately thorow townes and villages about, that the Lantgraves Captaine ſhould be ſlaine by certaine Wallons, which incenſed the ire of the Countrymen there more fiercely againſt Maſter Berty, as afterward it proved. For as he was motioned by his wife to ſave himſelfe by the ſwiftneſſe of his horſe, and to recover ſome towne there by for his reſcue, he ſo doing was in worſe caſe than before: for the townesmen and the Captaines brother, ſuppoſing no leſſe but that the Captaine had béene ſlaine, preſſed ſo eagerly upon him, that he had béen there taken and murdered among them, had not he (as God would) ſpying a ladder leaning to a window, by the ſame got up into the houſe, and ſo gone up into a Garret in the top of the houſe, where he with his dagge and raper defended himſelfe for a ſpace: but at length the Burghmaſter comming thither with another Magiſtrate which could ſpeake Latine, he was counſelled to ſubmit himſelfe to the order of the Law. M. Berty knowing himſelfe cleere, and the Captain to be alive, was the more bold to ſubmit himſelfe to the judgement of the Law, upon condition that the Magiſtrate would receive him under ſafe conduct, and defend him from the rage of the multitude. Which being promiſed, M. Berty putteth himſelfe and his weapon into the Magiſtrates hand, and ſo was committed to ſafe cuſtody, while the truth of his cauſe ſhould be tryed.

Then Maſter Berty writing his letters to the Lantgrave, and to the Earle of Erbagh, the next day early in the morning the Earle of Erbagh, dwelling within eight miles, came to the towne whither the Ducheſſe was brought with her wagon, Maſter Berty alſo being in the ſame towne under cuſtody.

The Earle, who had ſome intelligence of the Ducheſſe before, after he was come and had ſhewed ſuch courteſie as he thought to her eſtate was ſeemly, the towneſmen perceiving the Earle to behave himſelf ſo humbly unto her, began to conſider more of the matter, and further underſtanding the Captain to be alive, both they, and eſpecially the authors of the ſtir ſhrunk away, and made all the friends they could to M. Berty & his wife, not to report their doings after the worſt ſort.

M. Berty with the Ducheſſe honourably entertained of the K. of Pole.

And thus M. Berty and his wife, eſcaping that danger, proceeded in their journey toward Poleland, where in concluſion they were quietly entertained of the King, and placed honourably in the Earledome of the ſaid King of Poles in Sanogelia, called Crozan, where M. Berty with the Ducheſſe, having the Kings abſolute power of government over the ſaid Earledome, continued both in great quietneſſe and honor, till the death of Q. Mary.

Thomas Horton Miniſter.

A ſtory of Thomas Horton, Miniſter.

AS ye have heard of the dangerous trouble of the Ducheſſe of Suffolke in the time of her exile for religion ſake, whom notwithſtanding the Lords preſent protection ſtill delivered in all diſtreſſes, as well from her enemies in England, as in Dutchland from the Launce-knights there: ſo have we no leſſe to behold and magnifie the Lords mercifull goodneſſe in preſerving of Thomas Horton from the like perils of the ſame Countrey.

Which Thomas Horton, what a profitable inſtrument he was to the Church of Chriſt in Q. Maries time, all our Engliſhmen almoſt, beyond the ſeas then, did both know and feele.

This good Thomas Horton, as he uſed oftentimes to travell betweene Germany and England, for the behoofe and ſuſtenance of the poore Engliſh exiles there: ſo he journying upon a time betweene Maſtrick and Cullen, chanced to be taken there by certain Rovers, and ſo being led by them away, was in no little danger: and yet this danger of his was not ſo great, but the preſent help of the Lord was greater to aide and deliver him out of the ſame.

Thomas Sprat of Kent, Tanner.

The ſtory of Tho: Sprat and W. Porrege.

VNto theſe afore rehearſed examples of Gods bleſſed providence towards his ſervants, may alſo be added the happy deliverance of Thomas Sprat and William Porrege his companion, now Miniſter. Whoſe ſtory briefly to courſe over is this.

This Thomas Sprat had beene ſervant ſometimes to one Maſter Brent a Juſtice, and a heavy perſecutor, and therefore forſaking his Maſter for religion ſake, he went to Calice, from whence he uſed often with the ſaid William Porrege, for their neceſſary affaires, to have recourſe into England.

M. Brent Juſtice in Kent, a perſecutor.

It ſo happened about the fourth yeare of Queen Maries raigne, that they landing upon a time at Dover, and taking their journey together toward Sandwich, ſuddenly upon the way within three miles of Dover, met with the foreſaid Maſter Brent, the two Blachendens, and other Gentlemen moe, with their ſervants, to the number of ten or twelve horſes. Of the which two Blachendens, being both haters and enemies of Gods word and people, the one had perfect knowledge of William Porrege, the other had not ſeen him, but only had heard of his name before.

The two Blachendens in Kent, perſecutors.

Thus they being in the way where this Juſtice with his mates ſhould meet them directly in the face, Thomas Sprat firſt eſpying Maſter Brent, was ſore diſmayed, ſaying to his companion, Yonder is Maſter Brent. William Porrege, God have mercy upon us. Well, quoth the other, ſeeing now there is no remedy, let us go on our way. And ſo thinking to paſſe by them, they kept themſelves aloofe, as it were a ſcore off from them, Thomas Sprat alſo ſhadowing his face with his Cloke.

Tho: Sprat almoſt taken in the way by the Juſtice.

Notwithſtanding one of Maſter Brents ſervants adviſing him better than his Maſter did, Yonder ſaid he to his Maſter, is Thomas Sprat, At which words they all rained their Horſes, and called for Thomas Sprat to come to them. They call you, ſaid William Porrege. Now here is no remedy but we are taken: and ſo perſwaded him to goe to them being called, for that there was no eſcaping from ſo many horſemen in thoſe plaines and downes, where was no wood neere them by a mile, nor hedge neither, but only one, which was a birdbolt ſhot off.

Tho: Sprat called of the Juſtice, but would not come.

All this notwithſtanding, Sprat ſtaid, and would not goe. Then they called againe, ſitting ſtill on horſebacke. Ah ſirrah (quoth the Juſtice) why come ye not hither? And ſtill his companion moved him to goe, ſeeing there was no other ſhift to flee away. Nay (ſaid Sprat) I will not goe to them, and therewithall tooke his legges, running to the hedge that was next him. They ſeeing that, ſet ſpurres to their horſe, thinking by and by to have him, and that it was unpoſſible for him to eſcape their hands, as it was indeed, they being on horſe backe, and he on foote, had not the Lord miraculouſly delivered his ſilly ſervant from the gaping mouth of the Lion ready to devoure him. For as God would, ſo it fell out that he had got over the hedge, ſkrawling through the buſhes, when as they were even at his heeles, ſtriking at him with their ſwords, one of the Blachendens crying cruelly, cut off one of his legs.

God alwaies ſtronger than the devill.

Thus Sprat had ſcarcely recovered the hedge from his enemies, when one of Maſter Brents ſervants, which had beene fellow ſometimes in houſe with him, followed him in his Bootes; and certaine rode up at one ſide of the hedge, and certaine at the other, to meete him at the upper end.

Tho: Sprat getteth over the hedge from his perſecutors.

Now while they were following the chaſe after Thomas Sprat, only one remained with William Porrege (who was one of the Blachendens, not he which knew him, but the other) who began to queſtion with him, not aſking what was his name (as God would) for then he had been knowne and taken: but from whence hee came, and how he came into Sprats company, and whither he went? Unto whom he anſwered and ſaid, From Calice, and that Sprat came over with him in the paſſage boat, and they two were going to Sandwich, and ſo without any more queſtions he let him depart.

W. Porrege eſcapeth.

Anon, as he kept along the hedge, one of the horſmen which rode after Sprat, returning backe, and meeting with the ſaid W. Porrege, demanded the very ſame queſtions as the other had done, to whom he made alſo the like anſwer as afore, and ſo departed, taking another contrary way from the meeting of the other horſmen. And thus W. Porrege eſcaped.

The Lord diſpoſing the way of his ſervants.

Now concerning Thomas Sprat, hee being purſued on the one ſide by horſemen, and on the other ſide by his owne fellow, who followed after him in his boots, crying, you were as good to tarry, for we will have you, we will have you: yet notwithſtanding he kept ſtill on his courſe, till at length he came to a ſteepe downe hill at the hedge end, downe the which hill he ranne from them, for they could not ride downe the hill, but muſt fetch a great compaſſe about, and ſo this Thom. Sprat ranne almoſt a mile, and (as God would) got a Wood.

Tho. Sprat delivered by Gods helpe from his adverſaries.

By that time he came to the Wood, they were even at his heeles: but the night drew on, and it began to raigne, and ſo the malice of theſe perſecutors was at an end, the Lord working for his ſervants, whoſe name be prayſed for ever and ever, Amen.

Not long after this, one of the two Blachendens aforeſaid, which ſo cruelly ſought the deſtruction of other, was cruelly murdered by his owne ſervants.

Iohn Cornet.

The troubles of I. Cornet, and how he was delivered.

HEre might alſo be recited the hard adventures and ſufferings of Iohn Cornet, and at length his deliverance, by Gods good working, out of the ſame.

Who, being a prentice with a minſtrell at Colcheſter, was ſent by his Maſter, about the ſecond yeare of Q. Maries raigne, to a wedding in a towne thereby called Roughhedge, where he being requeſted by a company there of good men, the Conſtables alſo of the Pariſh being preſent thereat, to ſing ſome ſongs of the Scripture, chanced to ſing a ſong called Newes out of London, which tended againſt the maſſe, and againſt the Queens miſproceedings.

Packſley, Parſon of Roughhedge, perſecutor. The mother againſt her owne ſon.

Whereupon the next day hee was accuſed by the Parſon of Roughhedge, called Packſley, and ſo committed, firſt to the Conſtable, where both his Maſter gave him over, and his Mother forſooke and curſed him. From thence hee was ſent to the next Iuſtice, named Maſter Cannall, and then to the Earle of Oxford, where he was firſt put in yrons and chaines, and after that ſo manacled, that the bloud ſpurt out of his fingers ends, becauſe hee would not confeſſe the names of them which allured him to ſing.

And marvell it was that the cruell Papiſts were ſo contented, that they ſent him not alſo to Biſhop Boner, to ſuffer the extremity of the fire. But Gods gracious providence diſpoſed otherwiſe for his ſervant. For after he was manacled, the Earle commanded him to be brought againe to the towne of Roughhedge, and there to be whipped till the bloud followed, and to be baniſhed the town for ever: and ſo he was, during all the time of Queene Mary.

Cornet whipped out of the towne, and ſo baniſhed.

¶ Thomas Bryce.

Tho. Bryce preſerved.

IF our ſtory would proceede ſo wide and ſo large, as did the exceeding mercy of Gods providence in helping his ſervants out of wretchedneſſe and thraldome of thoſe bloudy daies, our treatiſe (I thinke) would extend to an endleſſe proceſſe.

For what good man or woman, was there almoſt in all this time of Queene Mary, who either in carrying a good conſcience out of the land, or tarrying within the realme, could well eſcape the Papiſts hands, but by ſome notable experience of the Lords mighty power and helping hand working for him? What ſhould I here ſpeake of the miraculous deliverance of Thomas Bryce? who being in the houſe of Iohn Seale, in the Pariſh of Horting, and the Bailiffe with other neighbours comming in, ſent by Sir Iohn Baker to ſearch and apprehend him, and knowing perfectly both his ſtature and colour of his garments, yet had no power to ſee or know him ſtanding before their faces. So mightily the Lord did blinde their eyes, that they aſking for him, and looking upon him, yet notwithſtanding he quietly tooke up his bagge of bookes, and ſo departed out of the houſe without any hand layde upon him.

God blindeth the eyes of them which ſought for Tho. Bryce, that they could not ſee him.

Another ſtory of Th. Bryce & his brother.

Alſo another time, about the ſecond yeare of Queene Mary, the ſaid Thomas Bryce, with Iohn Bryce his elder brother, comming then from Weſell, meeting together at their fathers houſe; as they journeyed towards London, to give warning there to one Springfield, which elſe was like to bee taken unawares by his enemies waiting for him upon Gads hill, fell in company with a Promoter, which dogged them and followed them againe to Graveſend, into the towne, and laid the houſe for them where they were, all the wayes as they ſhould goe to the waters ſide, ſo that it had not been poſſible for them to have avoyded the preſent danger of thoſe perſecutors, had not the Lords provident care otherwiſe diſpoſed for his ſervants, through the Hoſtler of the Inne, covertly to convey them by a ſecret paſſage; whereby they tooke Barge a mile out of the Towne, and ſo in the end both the lives of them, and alſo of Springfield were preſerved, through the Lords gracious protection.

Thomas and Ioh. Bryce delivered by Gods good means and protection.

¶ Gertrude Crokhay.

The trouble and deliverance of Gertrude Crockhay.

GErtrude Crokhay dwelling at Saint Katherines by the Tower of London, and being then in her huſbands houſe, it happened in the yeare 1556. that the Popes childiſh Saint Nicholas went about the Pariſh. Which ſhee underſtanding, ſhut her doore againſt him, not ſuffering him to enter into her houſe.

Then Doctor Mallet hearing thereof, and being then Maſter of the ſaid Saint Katherines, the next day came to her with twenty at his taile, thinking belike to fray her, and aſked why ſhe would not the night before let in Saint Nicholas, and receive his bleſſing, &c. To whom ſhe anſwered thus: Sir, I know no Saint Nicholas (ſaid ſhe) that came hither. Yes quoth Mallet, here was one that repreſented S. Nicholas.

This D. Mallet, is now Dean of Lincolne.

Indeed Sir (ſaid ſhee) here was one that was my neighbours childe, but not Saint Nicholas: for Saint Nicholas is in Heaven. I was afraid of them that came with him, to have had my purſe cut by them: for I have heard of men robbed by Saint Nicholas Clerkes, &c. So Mallet perceiving that nothing could bee gotten at her hands, went his way as hee came, and ſhe for that time ſo eſcaped.

Another trouble of the ſaid Gertrude in Dutchland.

Then in the yeare 1557. a little before Whitſontide, it hapned that the ſaid Gertrude anſwered for a childe that was baptized of one Thomas Saunders, which childe was chriſtened ſecretly in a houſe after the order of the Service booke in King Edwards time; and that being ſhortly knowne to her enemies, ſhe was ſought for. Which, underſtanding nothing thereof, went beyond the ſea into Gilderland, to ſee certaine lands that ſhould come to her children in the right of her firſt husband, who was a ſtranger borne: and being there about a quarter of a yeare, at the length comming homeward by Antwerpe, ſhe chanced to meet with one John Johnſon a Dutchman, alias John de Villa of Antwerpe ſhipper, who ſeeing her there, went of malice to the Margrave, and accuſed her to be an Anabaptiſt, whereby ſhe was taken and carried to priſon. The cauſe why this naughty man did thus, was, for that he claimed of Maſter Crokhay her husband a piece of money which was not his due, for a ſhip that Maſter Crokhay bought of him, and for that he could not get it, he wrought this diſpleaſure. Well, ſhee being in priſon, lay there a fortnight. In the which time ſhee ſaw ſome that were priſoners there, who privily were drowned in Rheniſh wine fats, and after ſecretly put in ſacks and caſt into the river. Now ſhe, good woman, thinking to bee ſo ſerved, tooke thereby ſuch feare, that it brought the beginning of her ſickneſſe, of the which at length ſhe died.

Cruelty in Flanders uſed ſecretly againſt the Chriſtians.

Then at the laſt was ſhe called before the Margrave, and charged with Anabaptiſtrie: which ſhe there utterly denied, and deteſted the errour, declaring before him in Dutch her faith boldly, without any feare. So the Margrave hearing the ſame, in the end being well pleaſed with the profeſſion, at the ſute of ſome of her friends delivered her out of priſon, but tooke away her booke, and ſo ſhe came over into England againe.

Gertrude returneth into England.

William Mauldon.

A ſtory of W. Mauldon.

W. Mauldon accuſed and ſcourged for true religion.

I Lightly paſſe over here the tedious afflictions of William Mauldon, how in the dangerous time of the ſixe Articles, before the burning of Anne Aſkew, he was ſcourged, being young, of his father, for profeſſing and confeſſing of true religion; and afterward being examined in auricular confeſſion by the Prieſt, his bookes were ſearched for, and ſo at length he was preſented up by the ſame Prieſt, in a letter written to the Biſhop. Which letter, had it not been burned by another Prieſt, to whoſe hands it came (as the Lord would have it) it had undoubtedly coſt him his life.

This one thing in the ſame William Mauldon is to be noted, that being young, in thoſe dayes of King Henry, when the Maſſe moſt flouriſhed, the altars with the ſacrament thereof being in their moſt high veneration, that to mans reaſon it might ſeeme unpoſſible that the glory and opinion of that Sacrament and Sacramentals, ſo highly worſhipped, and ſo deeply rooted in the hearts of ſo many, could by any meanes poſſible ſo ſoone decay and vaniſh to nought: yet notwithſtanding he being then ſo young, under the age of ſeventeene yeares, by the ſpirit (no doubt) of propheſie, declared then unto his parents, that they ſhould ſee it ſhortly even come to paſſe, that both the ſacrament of the altar and the altars themſelves, with all ſuch plantations which the heavenly Father did not plant, ſhould be plucked up by the roots; and even ſo within the ſpace of very few yeares the event thereof followed accordingly: the Lord therefore be prayſed for his moſt gracious reformation.

The propheſie of W. Mauldon in King Henries time, for the fall of the maſſe, and ſacrament of the altar.

Robert Horneby.

Rob. Hornby through Gods working preſerved.

I Let paſſe likewiſe the dangerous eſcape of Robert Horneby, ſervant ſometime and groome of the Chamber to Lady Elizabeth, ſhee being then in trouble in Queene Maries daies; who being willed to come to maſſe, refuſed ſo to doe, and therefore comming afterward from Woodſtocke to Hampton Court, was called before the Councell, and by them committed to the Marſhalſea, and not unlike to have ſuſtained further danger, had not the Lords goodneſſe better provided for him, who at length by Doctor Martin was delivered.

Miſtreſſe Sands.

M. Sands now Lady Bartlet preſerved from perſecution.

THe like alſo may be teſtified and recorded of Miſtreſſe Sands, now wife to Sir Morice Bartlet, then Gentlewoman waiter to the ſaid Lady Elizabeth being in the Tower. Which Miſtreſſe Sands denied in like manner to come to maſſe, and therefore, beſide the heavy diſpleaſure of her father, was not onely diſplaced from her roome, and put out of the houſe, but alſo was in great jeopardy of further tryall. But the Lord, who diſpoſeth for every one as he ſeeth beſt, wrought her way out of her enemies hands by flying over the ſeas, where ſhe continued amongſt other baniſhed exiles in the City of Geneva and of Baſill, till the death of Q. Mary.

The ſtory of Thomas Roſe yet living, a Preacher, of the age of lxxvi. yeares, in the towne of Luton, and County of Bedford.

The ſtory of Tho. Roſe yet living.

THis Thomas Roſe a Devonſhire man, was borne in Exmouth, and being made prieſt in that countrey, was brought out of it by one M. Fabian, to Polſted in Suffolke, where the ſaid M. Fabian was Parſon, and in ſhort time after by his meanes was placed in the towne of Hadley, where he, firſt comming to ſome knowledge of the Goſpell, began firſt there to intreat upon the Creed, and thereupon to take occaſion to inveigh againſt Purgatory, praying to Saints and Images, about the time that Maſter Latimer began firſt to preach at Cambridge, in the time of Bilney and Arthur, forty ſeven yeares agoe, or thereabout; inſomuch that many embracing the truth of Chriſts Goſpell, againſt the ſayd Purgatory and other points, and the number of them dayly increaſing, the adverſaries began to ſtirre againſt him, inſomuch that M. Bate (who afterward became a godly zealous man) was then brought to preach againſt the ſaid Thomas Roſe, and ſo did. This notwithſtanding he continued ſtill very vehement againſt Images, and the Lord ſo bleſſed his labours, that many began to deviſe how to deface and deſtroy them, and eſpecially foure men, whoſe names were, Ro. King, Ro. Debnam, Nich Marſh, and Ro. Gard, which uſually reſorted to his ſermons, and upon his preaching were ſo inflamed with zeale, that ſhortly after they adventured to deſtroy the Roode of Dover court, which coſt three of them their lives, as appeareth before. The three perſons which ſuffered

Three offered to have their lives ſaved, to accuſe Thom. Roſe, but would not.

ſuffered, and were hanged in chaines, were offered their lives, to have accuſed the ſaid Thom. Roſe, as of counſell with them, which refuſed ſo to do, and therefore ſuffered. The ſaid Thomas Roſe had the coat of the ſaid Roode brought unto him afterward, who burned it. The Roode was ſaid to have done many great miracles and great wonders wrought by him, and yet being in the fire could not help himſelfe, but burned like a block, as in very deed he was.

Thom. Roſe arreſted by a Sergeant at Armes.

At this time there were two ſore enemies in Hadley. Walter Clerke, and John Clerke, two brethren: theſe complained to the Councell, that an hundred men were not able to fetch the ſaid Thomas Roſe out of Hadley, who then was, upon examination of his doctrine, committed to the Commiſſaries keeping. And indeede ſuch was the zeale of a number towards the truth then in that Towne, that they were much offended that their Miniſter was ſo taken from them, and had therefore by force fet him from the Commiſſary, if certaine wiſe men had not otherwiſe perſwaded, which at length alſo with more quiet did ſet him in his office againe: which thing ſo angred the two brethren, Walter Clerke, and John Clerke, that they complained to the Councell, as is aforeſaid, whereupon a Sergeant at Armes, named Cartwright, was ſent from the Councell, who arreſted the ſaid Thomas Roſe, and brought him before the Councell. Then his adverſaries being called, they laid to his charge, that hee was privy of the burning of the Roode of Dover court, and upon this he was committed to priſon in the Biſhop of Lincolnes houſe in Holborne, Biſhop Langley the Kings Confeſſor, and there remained hee in priſon, from Shrovetide till Midſomer, very ſore ſtocked till after Eaſter.

The cruell handling of Tho. Roſe by the Papiſts.

Tho. Roſe ſet at liberty by D. Cranmers meanes.

The ſtocks were very high and great, ſo that day and night he did lie with his backe on the ground, upon a little ſtraw, with his heeles ſo high, that by meanes the bloud was fallen from his feet, his feet were almoſt without ſenſe for a long time, and he herewith waxed very ſicke, inſomuch that his keeper pitying his eſtate, and hearing him cry ſometime through the extremity of paine, went to the Biſhop, and told him that hee would not keep him to die under his hand, and upon this hee had ſome more eaſe and liberty. Now at this time his mother was come from Hadley to ſee him, but ſhe might not be ſuffered to ſpeake with the ſaid Thomas Roſe her ſon (ſuch was their cruelty) but the Biſhop flattered her, and gave her a paire of pardon beads and bade her goe home and pray, for ſhe might not ſee him; which thing pierced the hearts both of the mother and ſonne, not a little. At this time alſo certaine men of Hadley, very deſirous to ſee him, travelled to ſpeake with him, but might not be ſuffered, till at length they gave the Keeper 4 s. and yet then might not ſpeake to him, or ſee him otherwiſe than through a grate. And thus continued he till Midſomer in priſon there. Then was he removed to Lambeth, in the firſt yeare of Doctor Cranmers conſecration, who uſed him much more courteouſly than ever the Biſhop of Lincoln did, and at length wrought his deliverance, and ſet him at liberty: but yet ſo, that he was bound not to come within 20. miles of Hadley. After this he came to London, and there preached the Goſpel halfe a yeare, till Hadley men hearing thereof, laboured to have him to Hadley againe, and indeed, by means of Sir John Rainford Knight, obtained at the Archbiſhops houſe to have him thither: Howbeit, by meanes one was placed in the Cure at Hadley, hee could not enjoy his office againe there, but went to Stratford three miles off, and there continued in preaching the word three yeares, till at length the adverſaries procured an inhibition from the Biſhop of Norwich, to put him to ſilence. But a great number travelled to have him continue in preaching, and ſubſcribed a Supplication to the Archbiſhop, with ſevenſcore hands, who under their ſeales alſo teſtified of his honeſt demeanor, ſo that the adverſaries this way not prevailing, they indicted him at Bury in Suffolke, ſo that he was conſtrained to flee to London, and to uſe the ayd of the Lord Audley, then Lord Chancellor, who removed the matter from them, and called it before him, and after certaine examination of the matter, did ſet him free, and did ſend him by a token to the Lord Cromwell, then Lord privy Seale, for a licence from the King to preach: which thing obtained by the Lord Cromwell his meanes (who hereupon alſo had admitted the ſaid Thomas Roſe his Chaplaine) forthwith he was ſent into Lincolneſhire and to Yorke. In the meane time ſuch complaint was made to the Duke of Northfolke, for that he had preached againſt auricular confeſſion, tranſubſtantiation, and ſuch other points contained in the ſix Articles (which then to have done, by law was death) that the Duke in his owne perſon not onely ſought him at Norwich, but alſo beſet all the havens for him, from Yarmouth to London, and being Lievtenant commanded, that whoſoever could take the ſaid Thomas Roſe, ſhould hang him on the next tree. Howbeit, the ſaid Thomas Roſe at his comming home, having warning hereof by certaine godly perſons, was conveighed away, and paſſed over into Flanders, and ſo to Germany unto Zuricke, where a time he remained with Maſter Bullinger, and afterward went to Baſill, and there hoſted with Maſter Grineus, till letters came that Maſter Doctor Barnes ſhould bee Biſhop of Norwich, and things ſhould be reformed and hee reſtored. But when he came into England again, it was nothing ſo, and therefore forthwith fled againe beyond the ſeas, being ſo beſet, as if the mighty providence of God had not ſent him in a readineſſe to receive him the ſelfe ſame man, boat and boy that before carried him over, it had not been poſſible for him to have eſcaped. But ſuch was the goodneſſe of God towards him, that he ſafely was conveighed, and lived at Barow the ſpace of three yeares, till at length purpoſing to come over into England, about buſineſſe that hee had, he, his wife, and their childe, being but a yeare and three quarters old, upon the ſea, the ſhip being in great danger, wherein they ſayled (for the maſt being hewn down in that perill, they were carried whitherſoever the waves toſſed them,) they with divers others made a full account of death. Howbeit, at length they were taken priſoners, and carried into Deepe in France, having all their ſtuffe taken from them, and forty pound in mony. There they remained priſoners from Michaelmas till Hallontide, in great heavineſſe, not knowing what would become of them, but depending onely upon Gods providence. It pleaſed God at the ſame time, that one M. Young of the towne of Rye (who had heard him preach before) came thither for the redeeming of certaine Engliſhmen there taken priſoners. This M. Young moved to ſee them in this caſe, much pitied them, and comforted them, and told them he would pay their ranſome, and ſo he did, had them away, and brought them to Rye, and from thence by ſtealth came they to London. At length the honourable Earle of Suſſex, hearing of the ſaid Tho. Roſe, ſent for him, his wife, and his childe, and had them to his houſe at Attleborough, where they continued, till at length it was blazed abroad, that the Earle was a maintainer of ſuch a man to reade in his houſe, as had preached againſt the Catholike faith (as they terme it.) The Earle being at the Parliament, and hearing thereof, wrote a letter to warne him to make ſhift for himſelfe, and to avoid. So that from thence he paſſed to London, making ſtraight ſhifts for a yeare there and ſomewhat more, till the death of King Henry. After the Kings death, he and others which in the Kings generall pardon were excepted (and therefore dead men, if they had beene taken whilſt King Henry lived) by certaine of the Councell were ſet at liberty, and at length, after King Edward was crowned, were licenſed to preach againe by the King; who gave unto the ſaid Thomas Roſe, the Benefice of Weſtham by London. But at the death of that vertuous and noble Prince, he was deprived of all, and ſo ſhould alſo have beene of his life, had not God appointed him friends, who received him in London ſecretly, as their teacher in the Congregation, amongſt whom for the poore priſoners at their aſſemblies x li. a night oftentimes was gathered. And thus he continued amongſt them, and with the Lady Iane almoſt a yeare in the raigne of Queene Mary. But although he oftentimes eſcaped ſecretly whileſt he read to the godly in ſundry places of London, yet at length through a Iudas that betrayed them, he with 35. that were with him, were taken in Bow Church-yard at a Sheremans houſe on New yeares day at night being Tueſday. The reſidue being committed to priſons, the ſaid Thomas Roſe was had to the biſhop of Wincheſter Stephen Gardiner, but the Biſhop would not ſpeake with him that night, but committed him to the Clinke till Tueſday after.

The firſt examination of Thomas Roſe, before Winch. at S. Mary Overies.

The firſt examination of Tho. Roſe.

ON Thurſday being brought before the B. of Wincheſter, at S. Mary Overies, the ſaid Thomas Roſe ſpake as followeth.

Roſe. It maketh mee to marvell (my Lord, quoth he) that I ſhould be thus troubled for that which by the word of God hath bin eſtabliſhed, and by the lawes of this Realme allowed, and by your owne writing ſo notably, in your booke De vera obedientia, confirmed.

Biſh. Ah ſirra, haſt thou gotten that?

Roſe. Yea, my Lord, I thank God, and doe confeſſe my ſelfe much thereby confirmed. For as touching the doctrine of the ſupremacy, againſt the Biſhop of Romes uſurped authority, no man hath ſaid further. And as I remember, you confeſſe in it, that when this truth was revealed unto you, you thought the ſcales to fall from your eies.

Biſh. Thou lieſt like a varlet, there is no ſuch thing in my booke, but I ſhall handle thee and ſuch as thou art well enough. I have long looked for thee, and at length have caught thee. I will know who be thy maintainers, or elſe I will make thee a foot longer.

Roſe. My Lord, you ſhall doe as much as pleaſeth God, and no more, yet the law is in your hand: but I have God for my maintainer, and none other. At theſe words one of his ſervants ſtepped forth, and ſaid, My Lord, I heard this man preach by Norwich in Sir Iohn Robſters houſe, and in his prayer he deſired God to turne Queen Maries heart, or elſe to take her out of the world; and this was in King Edwards time.

Roſe. My Lord I made no ſuch praier, but next after the King I prayed for her after this ſort, ſaying, Yee ſhall pray for my Lady Maries grace, that God will vouchſafe to endue her with his ſpirit, that ſhe graciouſly may perceive the myſteries contained within his holy lawes, and ſo render unto him her heart purified with true faith, and true aud loyall obedience to her ſoveraigne Lord and King, to the good enſample of the inferiour ſubjects. And this, my Lord, is already anſwered in mine owne hand writing to the Councell. Unto this he ſaid little, but turning his face to certain that were by him; This is he (quoth the Biſhop) that my Lord of Norwich told me had begotten his maid with childe.

Thom. Roſe belied of Winch.

Roſe. This is no hereſie, my Lord, although it bee a lie. Indeed certaine wicked perſons raiſed this report of me, for the hatred they bare to the doctrine which I preached: but for purgation of my ſelfe herein I had no leſſe than ſixe of the Councels hands, that there might be due and diligent examination for this matter in the countrey by men of worſhip appointed for that purpoſe, who can all teſtifie (I thanke God) that I am moſt cleere from ſuch wickedneſſe, and indeed they have cleered me from it, and therefore I doubt not, but all good men will eſpy the miſchievous device of mine adverſaries, which (when other wayes fayled) by ſuch ſiniſter means went about to draw me into diſcredit and hatred: but God which is the helper of the innocent, and ſearcher of mens hearts, hath and doth defend me, and hath laid open things that were had, to their ſhame. One of the chiefe reporters of this, that I ſhould ſo abuſe my ſelfe, was one M. Clarke, ſervant and in ſome eſtimation with the old Lord Treaſurer of England, reputed and taken for a Conjurer, who afterward for his good demerites hanged himſelfe in the Tower. Then the Biſhop commanded that I ſhould be carried to the tower, and kept ſafely, where I did lie till it was the weeke before Whitſontide. After which time I was twice called, when as the Biſhop came to the Tower about other priſoners. Notwithſtanding, the Biſhop had no great talke with mee, but ſpake friendly. Howbeit, one Sir Richard Southwell, Knight, ſtill accuſed me for my prayer, and ſaid I did put a difference betwixt Lady Mary and Lady Elizabeth, for that I prayed in King Edwards faith, and prayed that he would confirm Lady Elizabeth in that which was well begun in her. Unto this the Biſhop ſaid little. But in the weeke before Pentecoſt, I was conveyed from the Tower to Norwich, there to be examined by the Biſhop and his Clergy, as concerning my faith, the manner whereof here followeth.

Thom. Roſe cleere from Wincheſters ſlander.

Thom. Roſe committed to the Tower.

The ſecond examination of Thom. Roſe before the Biſhop of Norwich, Hopkins by name, in his own Palace, in the preſence of ſir W. Woodhouſe knight, M. Steward the Chancellor, D. Barret, with dives others, the Wedneſday in Whitſon weeke, Anno Dom. 1553.

The 2. examination of Th. Roſe before the Biſh. of Norwich.

AFter I was preſented by my Keeper, the Biſhop immediately aſked mee what I was. I told him I had been a Miniſter.

Biſh. What is this to the purpoſe, were yee a Frier or a Prieſt?

Roſe. Frier was I never, but a Prieſt have I bin, and beneficed by the Kings Majeſty.

Biſh. Where were ye made Prieſt?

Roſe. In Exeter, in the County where I was borne. Then the Biſhop required of me my letters of orders. I told him I knew not where they were become, for they were things of mee not greatly regarded.

Biſh. Well, you are ſent to me to be examined; what ſay you, will you ſubmit your ſelfe to the order of the Church of England?

Roſe. My Lord, I truſt I am not out of the order of Chriſts Church in England, neither do I know my ſelfe an offendor there againſt.

Biſh. What? yes, ye have here preached moſt damnable and devilliſh doctrine.

Roſe. Not ſo, my Lord. The doctrine by me here preached was both true, ſincere, and holy. But indeed the doctrine that is now ſet forth, is moſt wicked & damnable, yea, and that both againſt Gods lawes and mans. But as for the doctrine by mee preached, it is grounded upon the word of God, ſet out alſo by the authority of two moſt mighty kings, with the conſent of all the Nobility and Clergy of the ſame: ſo that I preached nothing but their lawfull proceedings, having their lawfull authority under their broad Seales for confirmation of the ſame, for which my doing ye cannot juſtly charge me. For why, ſithence the law ceaſed, I have kept ſilence, ſo that the Councell which ſent me unto you have not charged mee therewith. Wherefore ye doe me open wrong to burden mee with that wherein I am free.

Chan. What ſir? ye are very captious; anſwereſt thou my Lord after ſuch a ſort?

Roſe. Sir (ſaid I) I anſwer for my ſelfe, and according to the truth: wherewith ye ought not to be offended, if ye be of God.

Chan. Thou art an evill man. Waſt thou not abjured before now?

Roſe. No, ye untruly report me, and are in no wiſe able to prove that which ye have ſpoken: ſo that your words appeare to proceed altogether of malice, which I have not deſerved at your hands. But in this I well perceive ye are made an inſtrument to utter other mens malice conceived of old.

Chan. What ſayeſt thou to the reall preſence in the Sacrament?

Roſe. I wiſt right well yee were made an inſtrument to ſeek innocent bloud: well ye may have it, if God permit, it is preſent and at hand, for I am not come hither to lie, but to die (if God ſee it good) in defence of that which I have ſaid. Wherefore ye may begin when ye ſhall thinke good, for I have ſaid nothing but the truth, and that which in thoſe daies was of all men allowed for truth, and againſt the which ye at that time durſt not once whiſper, although ye now brag never ſo much.

Biſh. Well father Roſe, ſaid hee, whatſoever hath been done in times paſt, ſhall not now bee called in queſtion, ſo that yee now ſubmit your ſelfe. For, not only you, but all the whole Realme hath been out of the right way, both high and low, ſpirituall and temporall, but all notwithſtanding have ſubmitted themſelves and acknowledged their faith. Wherefore if yee will be accounted for an Engliſhman, ye muſt likewiſe ſubmit your ſelfe.

How Thom. Roſe ſubmitted himſelfe.

Roſe. My Lord, I am an Engliſhman borne, and doe muſt humbly require of the Chriſtian Congregation of England, to bee counted as a particular member of the ſame, and with all due reverence ſubmit my ſelfe as in the forme and manner following: That whatſoever law or laws ſhall be ſet forth in the ſame for the eſtabliſhment of Chriſts true religion, and that according to the faith and doctrine of the holy Patriarchs and Prophets, Jeſus Chriſt, and his holy Apoſtles, with the faithfull Fathers of Chriſts primitive church, I doe not only hold it and beleeve it, but alſo moſt reverently obey it. At which my aſſertion, the B. ſeemed to be greatly rejoyced, and ſaid, Well, then we ſhall ſoone be at a point. But ſaid he, you ſhall take this for no day of examination, but rather of communication, ſo that ye ſhall now depart and pawſe your ſelfe, untill we call for you againe, and ſo ended our firſt meeting.

The third examination of Tho. Roſe.

The 3. examination of Tho. Roſe.

On the Friday following, I was called again into Chriſts church within their ladies chappell (as they termed it, where was gathered a great part of the whole City of Norwich, and after I was by my keeper preſented, the B. began with a great proteſtation, and after many words demanded of mee whether according to my former promiſe I would ſubmit my ſelfe or no? I anſwered as before I had done, that according to my former proteſtation, I would moſt gladly obey. Then ſaid the Chancellor, to utter his gentleneſſe, I thinke ye do but faine.

Roſe. The fault then (ſaid I) ſhall be in your ſelfe, and not in me. For if ye burthen me with nothing but Scriptures, and the Fathers of Chriſts Primitive Church, then as I ſaid before, ſo I ſay againe, I ſhall moſt gladly obey.

Chan. Well then, ſeeing you challenge to be a member of the Church of England, your mother here for a triall of obedience provoketh you, as mothers are wont to allure you to receive this little gift at her hand.

Roſe. Forſooth ſaid I, if ſhe offer it me, as received of God my father, I ſhall gladly receive it, as from the hand of my very true & ghoſtly mother.

Auricular confeſſion.

Chan. What ſay you to eare confeſſion? Is it not a law Eccleſiaſticall and neceſſary for the Church of England?

Roſe. Some waies it might be permitted, and ſome wayes not, and that becauſe it had not his originall of God and his bleſſed word; and yet I deny not, but that a man being troubled in his conſcience, and reſorting to a diſcreet, ſober and Chriſtian learned man for the quieting of his minde, might well be permitted: but to bind a man under paine of damnation, once every yeare to number his ſins into the eares of a filthy lecherous prieſt, is not of God, neither can be approved by his word.

Biſh. A ſirrah, yee will admit nothing but Scripture, I ſee well.

Nothing but Scripture to be admitted for the regiment of the ſoule.

Roſe. No truly, my Lord, I admit nothing but Scripture for the regiment of the ſoule: for why, faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, and where the word of God is not, there ought no beliefe to be given. For whatſoever is not of faith is ſin: and here they left off ſpeaking any more of that matter.

But then M. Chancellor began to whet his teeth at me, ſaying, Yea, but you have preached that the reall, naturall and ſubſtantiall preſence of Chriſt is not in the ſacrament of the altar: what ſay ye to that?

Roſe. Verily, I ſay, that you are a bloudy man, and ſeeke to quench your thirſt with the bloud of an innocent, and therefore to ſatisfie you in that behalfe, I ſay verily unto you, that even ſo I have here preached: and although contrary to law, you charge me with the ſame, yet will I in no wiſe deny it, though juſtly I might do it, but ſtand thereunto, even to ſeale it with my bloud, deſiring all that be here preſent, to teſtifie the ſame, and beleeve it as the only truth.

Biſh. I charge you all beleeve it not.

Roſe. Yea, but my Lord (ſaid I) if ye will needs have credence given you, you muſt bring Gods word to maintaine your ſayings.

Biſh. Why, doth not Chriſt ſay, This is my body? and can there be any plainer words ſpoken?

Roſe. It is true my Lord, the words be as plain as can be, and even ſo be theſe, whereas it is ſaid, I am a doore, a vine, & Chriſt called a ſtone, a Lyon, and yet is he naturally none of theſe: for they be all figurative ſpeeches, as both the Scriptures and fathers do ſufficiently prove.

At which my ſaying, the biſhop would have had me ſtay, ſaying, I ſhould have another day, wherein I might take better adviſement.

Tranſubſtantiation and reall preſence againſt the Scriptures & the antient fathers of the Primitive Church.

Roſe. Not ſo, my Lord, ſaid I, for I am at a full point with my ſelfe in that matter, and am right well able to prove both your tranſubſtantiation, with the reall preſence, to be againſt the Scriptures and the antient fathers of the Primitive Church. For Juſtinus, which is one of the antienteſt writers that ever wrote upon the ſacraments, writeth in his ſecond Apology, that the bread, water, and wine in the Sacrament, are not to be taken as other meats and drinks, but be meats purpoſely ordained to give thanks unto God, and therfore be called Euchariſtia, and alſo have the names of the body and bloud of Chriſt, and that it is not lawfull for any man to eat and drinke of them, but ſuch as profeſſe the Religion of Chriſt, and live alſo according to their profeſſion: and yet (ſaith he) the ſame bread and drinke is changed into our fleſh and bloud, nouriſheth our bodies. By which ſaying it is evident, that Juſtine meant, that the bread and wine remaine ſtill, or elſe they could not have been turned into our fleſh and bloud, and nouriſh our bodies. At which my ſaying they were not a little troubled, but inforced themſelves, to have denied the Doctor, and would ſuffer mee to ſpeake no more, but ſtraightway was I carried away unto my lodging: and ſo ended the ſecond day of mine appearance, which was the Friday in Whitſon weeke, and then was I appointed to appeare againe on the Munday following. Howbeit, upon what occaſion I know not, it was deferred unto the Wedneſday, which was Corpus Chriſti Even.

His talke with the Earle of Suſſex, Sir William Woodhouſe, and the Biſhops Chaplaines.

IN the meane time the Biſhop ſent two of his Chaplaines to mee, with whom I had communication about the reall preſence: and after long reaſoning to and fro concerning this point, at length I drave them to this iſſue, whether they did confeſſe that Chriſt in the ſelfe ſame body which was conceived of the Virgin Mary, and wherein he ſuffered and roſe againe, doe in the ſelfe ſame body, naturally, ſubſtantiall, and really ſit at the right hand of God the Father, without returne from thence, untill the day of the generall judgement or not? Whereunto they anſwered, Yes truely, ſaid they, wee confeſſe it, hold it, and beleeve it. Then I againe demanded of them, whether they did affirme, after the words pronounced by the Miniſter, there to remaine fleſh, bloud, bones, haire, nailes, as is wont moſt groſſely to be preached, or not? And they with great deliberation anſwered, That they did not onely abhorre the teaching of ſuch groſſe doctrine, but alſo would deteſt themſelves, if they ſhould ſo thinke,

The Papiſts affirme the reall body of Chriſt to be in the Sacrament, but they know not how.

At which two principall points, wherein they fully condemned my doctrine which I ever taught, I was not a little comforted and rejoyced, but marvellouſly encouraged, Whereupon I demanded again of them, what manner of body they then affirmed to be in the Sacrament? Forſooth (ſaid they) not a viſible, palpable, or circumſcriptable body, for that is allwaies at the Fathers right hand: but in the Sacrament it is inviſible, and can neither be felt, ſeen, nor occupy any place, but is there by the omnipotency of Gods word they know not how.

And for this they brought in Saint Auguſtine, although of them not truly underſtood, yet would they admit none other ſenſe than their owne, but would take upon them to confirme it with Martin Luther, Melancthon, Bucer, and Calvin: ſo that I perceiving their obſtinacy in that behalfe, gave them over for that time, and afterward talked with Doctor Barret, whom I alſo found of the ſame judgement in that behalfe. For (ſaid he) if ye would diſſent from the fathers of the Primitive Church in this behalfe, of which Saint Auguſtine is one, yet ſhall ye be counted to die out of the favor of God. Well, all this their obſtinacy and blaſphemous errors imprinted and deepely weighed in my minde, I gave them all over, and the more quietly to bring them to confeſſe that openly, which they unto me had granted privately, I granted them according to the Scriptures, and my former proteſtation, a preſence, although not as they ſuppoſed.

After all this, came there unto me the honourable Earle of Suſſex, and that gentle Knight, Sir William Woodhouſe, with great perſwaſions: unto whom I ſaid, after long talke, that I would doe all that I might, ſaving my conſcience, which I would in no wiſe pollute, and no more I have, as knoweth God by whom all men muſt be judged.

His laſt appearance before the Biſhop.

The laſt appeacance of Thom. Roſe before the Biſhop.

NOw to come to my laſt appearance, after I was before the Biſhop preſented, hee forthwith demanded of me, whether I were reſolved, as hee had heard ſay. To whom I anſwered, that even as allwaies I had ſaid before, even ſo I was now. Unto whom, by low bowing my knee, I gave my due reverence, and the rather for that the honourable Earle of Suſſex was there. Wherewith ſome, which would be counted great Goſpellers, were (contrary to all Chriſtianity) ſore offended. Then I ſaid, that whatſoever Lawes were ſet forth for the eſtabliſhment of Chriſts true Religion, and that according to the doctrine of Chriſts holy Apoſtles, and the faithfull Fathers of the Primitive Church. I did not onely obey them, but moſt earneſtly embrace and beleeve them. Yea, and yet to the further blinding of their eyes, I ſaid, that if any thing could juſtly be proved by Gods holy Word, by me heretofore preached, or taught untruely, either for lacke of learning, ſlide of tongue, or of ignorance; yet by better knowledge when it ſhall juſtly be tried and examined by the ſame. I ſhall not refuſe (the thing perfectly approved) to revoke the ſame. Provided allwaies, the Word of God herein to be judge.

All this ſpake I (as God knoweth) to keepe them from ſuſpecting that which I went about, and that they ſhould have none occaſion to judge mee of obſtinacy. Then ſaid I moreover, All you muſt of force confeſſe, that the doctrine by me heretofore preached, had, beſides the authority of Gods eternall verity, the authority of two moſt noble and mighty Princes, with the advice and counſell of all the Nobility and Clergy of the ſame, and that with great deliberation from time to time, with open diſputations in both the Univerſities, enacted alſo by Parliament with the conſent of the whole body and commons of the ſame, and that without any reſiſtance or gainſaying eſtabliſhed, as a Religion moſt pure and perfect, moſt earneſtly and ſincerely preached by the principall Biſhops and Doctors, and that before the Kings Majeſties perſons; and I, as one being called to that office, did the like with all the reſt, and in the zeale of God, and with a pure conſcience did ſet forth the ſame as the onely and abſolute truth of God, and the juſt and moſt true proceedings of my Soveraigne Lord and King:

and I had then my head at that preſent even wher it now ſtandeth, betwixt mine ears, altogether applying the ſame, to apprehend with all diligence that which then was eſtabliſhed and taught, as the only and abſolate truth, and a thing unto me moſt deſireable and well willing, without any deſire to heare the contrary, till now through this my captivity I am compelled to heare the contrary part ſpeake, who are even here preſent, and which my Lord ſent unto me.

Of whom, after long diſputations privately to and fro before this time had betwixt us, at length I have heard of them a contrary doctrine, whitch I never before had heard; and therfore muſt confeſſe mine owne ignorance in the ſame. For (quoth I) after I had inforced theſe men here preſent (meaning the Biſhops two Chaplaines) to confeſſe Ieſus Chriſts naturall body with his full complete members in due order and proportion of a perfect mans body to be preſent at the right hand of God the Father, and that without returne from thence, untill the laſt Iudgement, and alſo that after the words pronounced by the Prieſt, there remaineth no ſuch groſſe preſence of fleſh, bloud, bones, haire, and nailes, as was wont to be preached; but that after I had demanded of them what manner of body they affirmed to be preſent, they ſaid; A body inviſible by the omnipotency of Gods Word, which neither can be felt nor ſeene, nor that hath any diſtinction of members, but ſuch a body as occupieth no place, but is there they know not how; neceſſity compeld me to confeſſe mine ignorance in that behalfe, although in very deed they perceived not my meaning therein, neither was it in my thought they ſhould ſo do. For by this their confeſſion, and my ſilence, afterward I perceived their horrible blaſphemies.

And me thought in this I had well diſcharged at that time my conſcience, in cauſing them in open audience to confeſſe the ſame, and ſo I granted a preſence, but not as they ſuppoſed.

For only I ſaid, that Chriſt after the words pronounced, is preſent in the lawfull uſe and right diſtribution of his holy Supper; which thing I never denied, nor any godly man that ever I heard of. For (ſaid I) Euſebius Emiſſenus, a man of ſingular fame and learning, about 300. yeares after Chriſts aſcenſion, ſaith, That the converſion of the viſible creatures of bread and wine into the body and bloud of Chriſt, is like unto our converſion in Baptiſme. where nothing is outwardly changed, but all the change is inwardly by the mighty working of the holy Ghoſt, which faſhioneth and frameth Chriſt in the heart ⁊ mind of man, as by the example of Peter preaching to the people, Acts 2. By which he ſo pierced their conſciences, that they openly with moſt earneſt repentance confeſſed their ſins, ſaying; Men and brethren, what ſhall we doe? Repent, and be baptiſed every one of you (ſaid Peter) in the name of Ieſus Chriſt; ſo that at this Sermon there were turned unto Chriſt three thouſand perſons; in whom Chriſt was ſo faſhioned and framed, as that he did dwell in every one of them, and they in him; and after the like manner (ſaid I) is Chriſt preſent in the lawfull uſe and right diſtribution of his holy Supper, and not otherwiſe. For although I ſaid, according to the truth, that Chriſt dwelt in every one of theſe perſons rehearſed, yet meant I nothing leſſe than that hee in them ſhould have a groſſe, carnall, or fleſhly dwelling.

How Chriſt is preſent in the Sacrament.

And no more meant I (as God knoweth) him carnally or ſpiritually to be in the Sacrament, but according to the Scriptures, and my former proteſtation, that is, to the ſpirituall nouriſhment of all ſuch as worthily come unto that holy Supper, receiving it according to his holy inſtitution.

And thus I ended; which the Papiſts moſt maliciouſly and ſlanderouſly named a recantation; which I never meant, nor thought (as God knoweth.)

Now after I had thus concluded my ſpeech, the Biſhop taking me by the hand, ſaid; Father Roſe, you may be a worthy inſtrument in Gods Church, and we will ſee to you at our comming home (for he was about to take his journey in viſitation of his Dioceſſe) and they feared much at this very time, leſt Queene Mary ſhould have miſcarried in childe-travell, which was looked for, being then accounted very great with childe, ſo that they were not ſo fierce as they had been, and doubted very much of ſome ſtirre, if I ſhould have ſuffered; and therefore were glad to be rid of me, ſo that by any colourable meanes for their owne diſcharge it might be; ſo the night following I was onely committed to mine owne lodging.

On the morrow, when the Biſhop was ready to ride forth in viſitation, hee called me before him, and perceiving that Sir W. Woodhouſe did beare me great favor, ſaid, hee was ſorry for mee and my expences; and therefore wiſhed that I were ſome where, where I might ſpend no more money, till his returne. Why, my Lord (quoth Sir William Woodhouſe) hee ſhall have meat and drinke, and lodging with me, till you returne againe, ſeeing you now breake up houſe; and hereupon I went home with Sir William that good Knight, who moſt gently entertained mee, and I had great liberty. Upon this the Papiſticall Prieſts of the Colledge of Chriſts Church in Norwich, for that they ſaw me at liberty in Sir Williams abſence (who alſo was then from home a fortnight) blazed it abroad, that Sir William was bounden for me in body and lands. At his comming home therefore I aſked Sir William if he were ſo bounden for me; and he denied it. Then ſaid I; Sir, but for reverence I beare to you, I might have been an hundred miles from you ere this. But I truſt now Sir, ſeeing you be not bound for me, I may goe viſit my friends. Goe where you will, ſaid Sir William, for (quoth he) I told the Biſhop I would not be his Iaylor, but promiſed onely meate, drinke, and lodging for you. Shortly after, upon the device of ſome friends, I was cloſely conveighed to a friends houſe, where almoſt a moneth I was ſecretly kept, till rumours were over. For at the Biſhops returne ſearching was for me, inſomuch as all houſes, where it was knowne I had been acquainted, were ſearched, and the Ships at Yarmouth.

Pop. Prieſts love to blaze abroad lies.

At the length the Biſhop ſent to a Conjurer, to know of him which way I was gone, and he anſwered, that I was gone over a water, and in the keeping of a woman. And in very deed I was paſſed over a ſmall water, and was hid by a bleſſed woman and godly woman (which lived in a poore cottage) the ſpace of three weeks, till all the great heate was over.

Then was I conveighed to London, and from thence paſſed over the ſeas, where I lived till the death of Queene Mary, and till that it pleaſed God for the comfort of his Church, and reſtoring of all poore exiles and priſoners for his names ſake, to bleſſe this Realme with the government of our noble Queene, whom God to the glory of his owne name, and the defence of his Church, according to his good will and pleaſure, long preſerve and continue over us.

Anno 1558.

A briefe diſcourſe concerning the troubles and happy deliverance of the reverend Father in God, Doctor Sands, firſt Biſhop of Worceſter, next of London, and now Archbiſhop of Yorke.

KIng Edward died, the world being unworthy of him, the Duke of Northumberland came down to Cambridge with an army of men, having Commiſſion to proclaime Lady Jane Quéene, and by power to ſuppreſſe Lady Mary, who tooke upon her that dignity, and was proclaimed Quéene in Northfolke. The Duke ſent for Doctor Sands, being Vicechancellor for Doctor Parker, for Doctor Bill, and Maſter Leaver to ſup with him. Amongſt other ſpéeches hee ſaid; Maſters, pray for us, that we ſpéed well: if not, you ſhall be made Biſhops, & we Deacons. And even ſo it came to paſſe, Doctor Parker, and D. Sands were made Biſhops, and he and Sir John Gates, who was then at the table, were made Deacons, ere it was long after on the tower hill. D. Sands being Vicechancellor, was required to preach on the morrow. The warning was ſhort for ſuch an auditory, and to ſpeak of ſuch a matter; yet he refuſed not the thing, but went into his chamber, and ſo to bed. He roſe at thrée of the clocke in the morning, took his Bible in his hand, and after that hee he had prayed a good ſpace, hee ſhut his eies, and holding his Bible before him, earneſtly prayed to God, that it might fall open, where a moſt fit text ſhould be for him to intreat of. The Bible, as God would have it, fell open upon the firſt chahter of Joſuah, where he found ſo convenient a péece of Scripture for that time, that the like hee could not have choſen in all the Bible. His Text was thus: Reſponderuntque Ioſuæ atque dixerunt, Omnia quæ præcepiſti nobis faciemus, & quocunque miſeris ibimus: ſicut obedivimus in cunctis Moſi, ita obediemus & tibi, tantum ſit dominus Deus tuus tecum ſicut fuit cum Moſe: qui contradixerit ori tuo, & non obedierit cunctis ſermonibus quos præceperis ei, moriatur; tu tantum confortare & viriliter age. Who ſhall conſider what was concluded by ſuch as named themſelves the State, and withall, the Auditory, the time and other circumſtances he ſhall eaſily ſée that this Text moſt fitly ſerved for the purpoſe. And as God gave the Text, ſo gave hee ſuch order and utterance, as pulled many teares out of the eie of the biggeſt of them.

In the time of his Sermon one of the Guard lift up to him into the Puluit a maſſe booke and a Graile, which Sir George Haward with certain of the Guard had taken that night in Maſter Hurleſtones houſe, where Lady Mary had béen a little before, and there had maſſe. The Duke, with the reſt of the Nobility, required Doctor Sands to put his Sermon in writing, and appointed Maſter Leaver to goe to London with it, and to put it in print. Doctor Sands required one day and a halfe for writing of it. At the time appointed he had made it ready, and Maſter Leaver was ready booted to receive it at his hands, and carry it to London. As hee was delivering of it, one of the Beadles, named M. Adams, came wéeping to him, and prayed him to ſhift for himſelfe, for the Duke was retyred, and Quéene Mary proclaimed.

Doctor Sands was not troubled herewithall, but gave the Sermon written to Maſter Layfield. Maſter Leaver departed home, and hee went to dinner to one Maſter Mores a Bedle, his great friend. At the dinner, Miſtreſſe Mores ſéeing him merry and pleaſant (for hee had ever a mans courage, and could not be terrified) dranke unto him, ſaying; Maſter Vicechancellor, I drinke unto you, for this is the laſt time that I ſhall ſée you. And ſo it was; for ſhee was dead before Doctor Sands returned out of Germany. The Duke that night retired to Cambridge, and ſent for Doctor Sands to goe with him to the Market place to proclaime Quéene Mary. The Duke caſt up his cap with others, and ſo laughed, that the teares ran downe his chéekes for griefe. He told Doctor Sands that Quéene Mary was a mercifull woman, and that he doubted not thereof; declaring that he had ſent unto her to know her pleaſure, and looked for a generall pardon. Doctor Sands anſwered; My life is not deare unto me, neither have I done or ſaid any thing that urgeth my conſcience. For that which I ſpake of the State, I have inſtructions warranted by the ſubſcription of ſixtéene Counſellors, neither can ſpéech be treaſon, neither yet have I ſpoken further than the Word of God, and the Lawes of the Realme doe warrant me, come of mee what God will. But be you aſſured, you ſhall never eſcape death; for if ſhe would ſave you, thoſe that now ſhall rule, will kill you.

That night the Guard apprehended the Duke, and certaine Groomes of the Stable were as buſie with Doctor Sands, as if they would take a priſoner. But Sir John Gates, who lay then in Doctor Sands his houſe, ſharply rebuked them, and drave them away. Doctor Sands, by the advice of Sir Jhhn Cates, walked in the fields. In the meane time the Univerſity, contrary to all order, had met together in conſultation, and ordered that Doctor Mouſe and Doctor Hatcher ſhould repaire to Doctor Sands lodging, and fet away the Statute booke of the Univerſity, the keyes, and ſuch other things that were in his kéeping, and ſo they did: for Doctor Mouſe being an earneſt Proteſtant the day before, and one whom Doctor Sands had done much for, was now become a Papiſt, and his great enemy. Certaine of the Univerſity had appointed a congregation at afternoone. As the bell rang to it, Doctor Sands commeth out of the fields, and ſending for the Bedles, asketh what the matter meaneth, and required them to wait upon him to the Schooles, according to their duty. So they did. And ſo ſoon as Doctor Sands, the Bedles going before him, came into the regent houſe and tooke his chaire: One M. Mitch, with a rabble of unlearned Papiſts, went into a by-ſchoole, and conſpired together to pull him out of his chaire, and to uſe violence unto him. Doct. Sands began his Oration, expoſtulating with the Univerſity, charging them with great ingratitude, declaring that he had ſaid nothing in his Sermon, but that he was ready to juſtifie, and that their caſe was all one with his: For they had not onely concealed, but conſented to that which he had ſpoken.

And thus while he remembred unto them how beneficiall hee had béen to the Univerſity, and their unthankfulneſſe to him againe, in commeth Maſter Mitch with his conſpirators about twenty in number. One laieth hand upon the chaire, to pull it from him, another told him that that was not his place, and another called him Traitor. Whereat he perceiving how they uſed violence, and being of great courage, groped to his dagger, and had diſpatched ſome of them as Gods enemies, if Doctor Bill & Doctor Blith had not fallen upon him, and prayed him for Gods ſake to hold his hands and be quiet, and patiently to beare that great offered wrong. He was perſwaded by them, and after that tumult was ceaſed, he ended his Oration, and having ſome money of the Univerſities in his hand, hee there delivered the ſame every farthing. He gave up the bookes, reckonings, and keyes pertaining to the Univerſity, and withall yeelded up his office, praying God to give the Univerſity a better Officer, and to give them better and more thankfull hearts, and ſo repaired home to his own Colledge.

On the morrow after, there came unto him one M. Gerningham, and one M. Thomas Mildmay. Gerningham told him that it was the Queenes pleaſure that two of the Guard ſhould attend upon him, and that he muſt be carried priſoner to the Tower of London, with the Duke. M. Mildmay ſaid, hee marvelled that a learned man would ſpeake ſo unadviſedly againſt ſo good a Prince, and wilfully runne into ſuch danger. Doctor Sands anſwered; I ſhall not be aſhamed of bonds, but if I could doe as M. Mildmay can, I needed not to feare bonds. For he came downe in paiment againſt Queene Mary, and armed in the field, and now he returneth in paiment for Queene Mary; before a traitor, and now a great friend. I cannot with one mouth blow hot and cold after this ſort.

Upon this, his ſtable was robbed of foure notable good Geldings, the beſt of them Maſter Huddleſtone tooke for his owne ſaddle, and rode on him to London in his ſight. An Inventory was taken of all his goods by Maſter More Bedle for the Univerſity. He was ſet upon a lame horſe that halted to the ground; which thing a friend of his perceiving, prayed that hee might lend him a negge. The Yeomen of the Guard were contented. As he departed forth at the townes end, ſome Papiſts reſorted thither to geere at him; ſome of his friends to mourne for him. Hee came in the ranke to London, the people being full of out-cries. And as he came in at Biſhops gate, one like a milke-wife hurled a ſtone at him, and hit him on the breaſt, with ſuch a blow, that he was like to fall off his horſe. To whom he mildly ſaid; Woman, GOD forgive it thee. Truth is, that journey and evill intreating ſo mortified him, that he was more ready to die than to live.

As he came through Tower-hill-ſtreete, one woman ſtanding in her doore, cried; Fie on thee thou Knave, thou Knave, thou Traitor, thou Heretike. Whereat he ſmiled. Looke, the deſperate Heretike (ſaith ſhe) laugheth at this geere. A woman on the other ſide of the ſtreet anſwered, ſaying; Fie on thee neighbour, thou art not worthy to be called a woman, railing upon this Gentleman whom thou knoweſt not, neither yet the cauſe why he is thus intreated. Then ſhe ſaid; Good Gentleman, God be thy comfort, and give thee ſtrength to ſtand in Gods cauſe even to the end. And thus he paſſed through fire and water into the Tower; the firſt priſoner that entred in that day, which was Saint James day. The Yeomen of the Guard tooke from him his borrowed nagge, and what elſe ſoever he had. His man, one Quinting Suainton, brought after him a Bible, and ſome ſhirts, and ſuch like things. The Bible was ſent in to him, but the ſhirts and ſuch like ſerved the Yeomen of the Guard.

After he had been in the Tower three weekes in a bad priſon, he was lift up into Nuns bower a better priſon, where was put to him M. John Bradford.

At the day of Queene Maries Coronation their priſon doore was ſet open, ever ſhut before. One Maſter Mitchell his old acquaintance, which had been priſoner before in the ſame place, came in to him, and ſaid; Maſter Sands, there is ſuch a ſtirre in the Tower, that neither gates, doores, nor priſoners are looked to this day. Take my cloake, my hat, and my rapier, and get you gone, you may goe out of the gates without queſtioning, ſave your ſelfe, and let me doe as I may. A rare friendſhip; but he refuſed the offer, ſaying; I know no juſt cauſe why I ſhould be in priſon. And thus to doe were to make my ſelfe guilty. I will expect Gods good will, yet muſt I think my ſelfe moſt bounden unto you: and ſo Maſter Mitchell departed.

While Doctor Sands and Maſter Bradford were thus in cloſe priſon together 29. weekes, one John Bowler was their Keeper, a very perverſe Papiſt, yet by often perſwading of him, for hee would give eare, and by gentle uſing of him, at the length he began to miſlike Popery, and to favour the Goſpell, and was ſo perſwaded in true Religion, that on a Sunday when they had maſſe in the Chappell, he bringeth up a Service booke, a manchet, and a glaſſe of wine, and there Doctor Sands miniſtred the Communion to Bradford and to Bowler. Thus Bowler was their ſonne begotten in bonds. When Wyat was in armes, and the old Duke of Northfolke ſent forth with a power of men to apprehend him; that room might be made in the Tower for him and other his complices, Doctor Cranmer, Doctor Ridley, and Maſter Bradford were caſt into one priſon, and D. Sands with 9. other Preachers were ſent unto the Marſhalſea.

The Keeper of the Marſhalſea appointed to every Preacher, a man to lead him in the ſtreete; he cauſed them to goe far before, and he and Doctor Sands came behinde, whom hee would not leade, but walked familiarly with him. Yet Doctor Sands was knowne, and the people every where prayed to God to comfort him, and to ſtrengthen him in the truth. By that time the peoples mindes were altered, Popery began to be unſavoury. After they paſſed the Bridge, the Keeper Thomas Way ſaid to Doctor Sands; I perceive the vaine people would ſet you forward to the fire. Ye are as vaine as they, if you being a young man will ſtand in your owne conceits, and preferre your owne knowledge before the judgement of ſo many worthy Prelates, antient, learned, and grave men as be in this Realme. If you ſo doe, you ſhall finde me as ſtraight a Keeper, as one that utterly miſliketh your Religion. Doctor Sands anſwered; I know my yeares young, and my learning ſmall, it is enough to know Chriſt crucified, and he hath learned nothing that ſeeth not the great blaſphemy that is in Popery. I will yeeld unto God, and not unto man: I have read in the Scriptures of many godly and courteous Keepers. God may make you one. If not, I truſt he will give mee ſtrength and patience to beare your hard dealing with me. Saith Thomas Way; Doe ye then minde to ſtand to your Religion? Yea, ſaith Doctor Sands, by Gods grace. Truly, ſaith the Keeper, I love you the better, I did but tempt you, What favor I can ſhew you ye ſhall be ſure of, and I ſhall think my ſelfe happy, if I may die at the ſtake with you. The ſaid Keeper ſhewed Doct. Sands ever after all friendſhip; he truſted him to goe into the fields alone, and there met with Maſter Bradford, who then was removed into the Bench, and there found the like favour of his Keeper. He laid him in the beſt chamber in the houſe, he would not ſuffer the Knight Marſhals man to lay fetters on him, as others had. And at his requeſt he put M. Sanders in to him, to be his bed-fellow, and ſundry times ſuffered his wife, who was Maſter Sands daughter of Eſſex, a Gentlewoman beautifull both in body and ſoule, to reſort to him. There was great reſort to Doctor Sands and Maſter Sanders;

Sanders; they had much mony offered them, but they would receive none. They had the Communion there three or foure times, and a great ſort of Communicants. Doctor Sands gave ſuch exhortation to the people (for at that time being young, he was thought very eloquent) that he moved many teares, and made the people abhorre the maſſe, and defie all Popery.

When Wyat with his army came into Southwarke, he ſent two Gentlemen into the Marſhalſea to Doctor Sands, ſaying, that Maſter Wyat would be glad of his company and advice, and that the gates ſhould be ſet open for all the priſoners. He anſwered, tell M. Wyat, if this his riſing be of God, it will take place; if not, it will fall. For my part, I was committed hither by order, I will be diſcharged by like order, or I will never depart hence. So anſwered M. Sanders, and the reſt of the Preachers, being there priſoners.

After that D. Sands had been 9. weekes priſoner in the Marſhalſea by the mediation of ſir Thomas Holcroft, then Knight Marſhall, he was ſet at liberty. Sir Thomas ſued earneſtly to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Doctor Gardiner, for his deliverance after many repulſes; but hee could not prevaile, except D. Sands would be one of their ſect, and then he could want nothing. Hee wrung out of him at laſt, that if the Queene could like of his deliverance, he would not be againſt it; for that was Sir Thomas his laſt requeſt. In the meane time he had procured two Ladies of the privy chamber to move the Queene in it; who was contented if the Biſhop of Wincheſter could like of it. The next time that the Biſhop went into the privy chamber to ſpeake with the Queene, M. Holcroft followed, and had his Warrant for D. Sands remiſſion ready, and prayed the two Ladies, when as the Biſhop ſhould take his leave, to put the Queen in minde of Doctor Sands. So they did, and the Queene ſaid; Wincheſter, what thinke you by D. Sands, is he not ſufficiently puniſhed? As it pleaſe your Majeſty, ſaith Wincheſter. That he ſpake, remembring his former promiſe to Maſter Holcroft, that hee would not be againſt D. Sands, if the Queene ſhould like to diſcharge him. Saith the Queene; Then truely, we would that he were ſet at liberty. Immediately Maſter Holcroft offered the Queene the Warrant. Who ſubſcribed the ſame, and called Wincheſter to put to his hand, and ſo he did. The Warrant was given to the Knight Marſhall againe, ſir Thomas Holcroft. As the Biſhop went forth of the privy chamber doore, he called M. Holcroft to him: Commanding him not to ſet Doctor Sands at liberty, untill he had taken ſureties of two Gentlemen of his countrey with him, every one bound in 500. pounds, that D. Sands ſhould not depart out of the realme without licence. Maſter Holcroft immediately after met with two Gentlemen of the North, friends and couſins to D. Sands, who offered to be bound in body, goods, and lands for him. After dinner, the ſame day, Maſter Holcroft ſent for Doctor Sands to his lodging at Weſtminſter, requiring the Keeper to company with him. He came accordingly, finding Maſter Holcroft alone walking in his Garden. Maſter Holcroft imparted his long ſute, with the whole proceeding, and what effect it had taken, to D. Sands: much rejoycing that it was his good hap to doe him good, and to procure his liberty, and that nothing remained, but that he would enter into bonds with his two ſureties, for not departing out of the Realme. Doctor Sands anſwered; I give God thanks, who hath moved your heart to minde me ſo well, and I thinke my ſelfe moſt bound unto you. God ſhall requite, and I ſhall never be found unthankfull. But as you have dealt friendly with me, I will alſo deal plainly with you. I came a free man into priſon. I will not goe forth a bondman. As I cannot benefit my friends, ſo will I not hurt them. And if I be ſet at liberty, I will not tarry ſix daies in this Realme, if I may get out. If therefore I may not get free forth, ſend me to the Marſhalſea againe, and there ye ſhall be ſure of me.

This anſwer much miſliked M. Holcroft: He told Doctor Sands that the time would not long continue, a change would ſhortly come, the ſtate was but a cloud, and would ſoone ſhake away. And that his couſin Sir Edward Bray would gladly receive him and his wife into houſe, where hee ſhould never need to come at Church, and how the Lady Bray was a zealous Gentlewoman, who hated Popery. Adding, that hee would not ſo deale with him to loſe all his labour. When Doctor Sands could not be removed from his former ſaying, Maſter Holcroft ſaid; Seeing you cannot bee altered, I will change my purpoſe, and yeeld unto. Come of it what will, I will ſet you at liberty: And ſeeing you minde to goe over ſea, get you gone ſo quickly as you can. One thing I require of you, that while you are there, you write nothing to come hither, for ſo you may undoe me. He friendly kiſſed Doctor Sands, bade him farewell, and commanded the Keeper to take no fees of him, ſaying; Let me anſwer Wincheſter as I may. Doctor Sands returning with the Keeper to the Marſhalſea, tarried all night. There on the morrow, hee gave a dinner to all the priſoners, bade his bed-fellow, and ſworne ſtake-fellow, if it had ſo pleaſed God, Maſter Sanders farewell, with many teares and kiſſings, the one falling on the others necke, and ſo departed, cleerly delivered without examination or bond. From thence he went to the bench, and there talked with M. Bradford and M. Farrar Biſhop of ſaint Davids, then priſoners. Then he comforted them, and they praiſed God for his happy deliverance. Hee went by Wincheſters houſe, and there took boate, and came to a friends houſe in London, called William Banks, and tarried there one night. On the morrow at night he ſhifted to another friends houſe, and there he learned that ſearch was made for him.

Doctor Watſon and Maſter Chriſtopherſon, comming to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, told him that he had ſet at liberty the greateſt Heretike in England, and one that had of all other moſt corrupted the Univerſity of Cambridge, Doctor Sands. Whereupon the Biſhop of Wincheſter, being Chancellor of England, ſent for all the Conſtables of London, commanding them to watch for Doctor Sands, who was then within the City, and to apprehend him, and whoſoever of them ſhould take him and bring him to him, hee ſhould have five pounds for his labour. Doctor Sands ſuſpecting the matter, conveighed himſelfe by night to one M. Barties houſe a ſtranger, who was in the Marſhalſea priſoner with him a while, he was a good Proteſtant, and dwelt in Marke Lane. There he was ſix daies, and had one or two of his friends that repaired unto him. Then he repaired to an acquaintance of his, one Hurleſtone a ſkinner, dwelling in Cornhill; hee cauſed his man Quinting to provide two Geldings for him, minding on the morrow to ride into Eſſex to Maſter Sands his father in law, where his wife was.

At his going to bed in Hurleſtones houſe, he had a paire of hoſe newly made that were too long for him. For while he was in the Tower, a Taylor was admitted him to make him a paire of hoſe. One came unto him, whoſe name was Benjamin, a good Proteſtant, dwelling in Bir-chin lane : he might not ſpeake to him, or come unto him to take meaſure of him, but onely looke upon his legge, he made the hoſe, and they were two inches too long. Theſe hoſe he prayed the goodwife of the houſe to ſend to ſome Taylor to cut them two inches ſhorter. The wife required the boy of the houſe to carry them to the next Taylor to cut. The boy chanced (or rather God ſo provided) to goe to the next Taylor, which was Benjamin that made them, which alſo was a Conſtable, and acquainted with the Lord Chancellors commandement. The boy required him to cut the hoſe. He ſaid, I am not thy Maſters Taylor. Saith the boy, becauſe you are our next neighbour, and my Maſters Taylor dwelleth far off, I came to you; for it is far nights, and he muſt occupy them timely in the morning. Benjamin tooke the hoſe, and looking upon them, he knew his handy-worke, and ſaid ; Theſe are not thy Maſters hoſe, but D.Sands, them I made in the Tower. The boy yeelded and ſaid, it was ſo. Saith he, Goe to thy Miſtreſſe, pray her to ſit up till 12. of the clocke, then I will bring the hoſe and ſpeake with D.Sands to his good.

At midnight the goodwife of the houſe, and Benjamin the Taylor commeth into D.Sands chamber : The wife prayeth him not to be afraid of their comming. He anſwered nothing can bee amiſſe ; what God will, that ſhall be done. Then Benjamin telleth him that he made his hoſe, and by what good chance they now come to his hands. God uſed the meanes, that hee might admoniſh him of his perill, and adviſe him how to eſcape it, telling him that all the Conſtables of London, whereof he was one, watched for him, and ſome were ſo greedily ſet, that they prayed him, if he tooke him, to let them have the carriage of him to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and he ſhould have the five pound. Saith Benjamin, it is knowne that your man hath provided two Geldings, and that you minde to ride out at Algate to morrow, and there then you are ſure to be taken. Follow mine advice, and by Gods grace ye ſhall eſcape their hands. Let your man walke all the day to morrow in the ſtreete where your horſes ſtand, booted and ready to ride. The goodmans ſervant of the houſe ſhall take the horſes, and carry them to Bednol greene. The goodman ſhall be booted, and follow after, as if he would ride. I will be here with you to morrow about eight of the clocke ; it is both Terme and Parliament time, here we will breake our faſt, and when the ſtreet is full, we will goe forth. Looke wildly, and if you meete your brother in the ſtreet, ſhun him not, but outface him, and know him not. Accordingly Doctor Sands did, clothed like a Gentleman in all reſpects, and looked wildly, as one that had been long kept in priſon out of the light, Benjamin carried him through Birchin lane, and from one Lane to another, till he came to Mooregate. There they went forth untill they came to Bednol green, where the horſes were ready, and M. Hurleſtone, to ride with him as his man. Doctor Sands pulled on his boots and taking leave of his friend Benjamin, with teares they kiſſed each other; he put his hand in his purſe, and would have given Benjamin a great part of that little he had, but Benjamin would take none. Yet ſince D.Sands hath remembred him thankfully. Hee rode that night to his father in law M.Sands, where his wife was : he had not been there two houres, but it was told M.Sands, that there were two of the Guard which would that night apprehend Doctor Sands, and ſo they were appointed.

That night D.Sands was guided to an honeſt Farmer neere the ſea, where he tarried two daies and two nights in a chamber without all company. After that he ſhifted to one James Mower a Shipmaſter, who dwelt at Milton ſhore, where he expected winde for the Engliſh Fleet ready into Flanders. While he was there, James Mower brought to him 40. or 50. Mariners, to whom he gave an exhortation ; they liked him ſo well, that they promiſed to die for it ere that he ſhould be apprehended.

The 6, of May, being Sunday, the winde ſerved. He tooke his leave of his Hoſt and Hoſteſſe, and went towards the ſhip. In taking his leave of his Hoſteſſe who was barren, and had bin married 8. yeares, he gave her a fine handkerchiefe and an old Royall of gold in it, thanking her much, and ſaid ; Be of good comfort, ere that an whole yeare be paſt, God ſhall give you a childe, a boy. And it came to paſſe, for that day twelve moneth lacking one day, God gave her a faire ſon.

At the ſhore Doct.Sands met with M. Iſaac of Kent, who had his eldeſt ſon there, who, upon the liking he had to D.Sands, ſent his ſon with him, who afterward died in his fathers houſe in Frankford. D.Sands and D.Coxe were both in one ſhip, being one Cockrels ſhip. They were within the kenning, when two of the Guard came thither to apprehend D.Sands. They arrived at Antwerp, being bid to dinner to Maſter Locke. And at dinner time one George Gilpin being Secretarie to the Engliſh houſe, and kinſman to Doctor Sands, came to him, and rouned him in his eare, and ſaid; King Philip hath ſent to make ſearch for you, and to apprehend you. Hereupon they roſe from their dinner in a marvellous great ſhower, and went out at the gate toward yͤ land of Cleve. They found a Wagon, and haſted away, & came ſafe to Auſburge in Cleveland, where D. Sands tarried 14. daies, and then journeyed towards Strauſborough, where after he had lived one yere, his wife came unto him. He fell ſore ſick of a fluxe, which kept him nine moneths, and brought him to deaths doore. He had a childe which fell ſick of the Plague, and died. His wife at length fell ſicke of a Conſumption, and died in his armes ; no man had a more godly woman to his wife.

After this, Maſter Sampſon went away to Emanuel, a man ſkilfull in Hebrew. Maſter Grindall went into the countrey to learne the Dutch tongue. Doctor Sands ſtill remained in Strauſborough, whoſe ſuſtentation then was chiefly from one Maſter Iſaac, who loved him moſt dearely, and was ever more ready to give than he to take. He gave him in that ſpace above an hundred markes, which ſumme the ſaid Doctor Sands paid him againe, and by his other gifts and friendlineſſe ſhewed himſelfe to bee a thankefull man. When his wife was dead, hee went to Zurike, and there was in Peter Martyrs houſe for the ſpace of 5. weeks. Being there, as they ſate at dinner, word ſuddenly came that Queene Mary was dead, & D.Sands was ſent for by his friends at Strauſborough. That newes made Maſter Martyr, and Maſter Jarret then there, very joyfull ; but Doctor Sands could not rejoyce, it ſmote into his heart that he ſhould be called to miſery.

Maſter Bullinger and the Miniſters feaſted him, and he took his leave and returned to Strauſborough where he preached ; and ſo Maſter Grindall and he came towards England, and came to London the ſame day that Queene Elizabeth was crowned.

The

The Miraculous preſervation of Lady ELIZABETH, now Queene of England, from extreame calamity and danger of life, in the time of Queene MARY, her Siſter.

The bleſſed protection of Almighty God in preſerving La. Elizabeth in her manifold dangers and troubles.

BUt when all hath been ſaid and told, whatſoever can be recited touching the admirable working of Gods preſent hand in defending and delivering any one perſon out of thraldome, never was there, ſince the memory of our fathers, any example to be ſhewed, wherein the Lords mightie power hath more admirably and bleſſedly ſhewed it ſelf, to the glory of his own name, to the comfort of all good hearts, and to the publike felicitie of this whole Realme, than in the miraculous cuſtody and out-ſcape of this our Soveraigne Ladie, now Queene, then Lady Elizabeth, in the ſtraite time of Queene Mary her ſiſter.

The troubles of Lady Elizabeth in Queen Maries time.

In which ſtory we firſt have to conſider in what extreme miſery, ſickneſſe, feare, and perill her Highneſſe was; into what care, what trouble of minde, and what danger of death ſhe was brought: Firſt, with great routes and bands of armed men (and happy was hee that might have the carrying of her) being fetched up as the greateſt Traitor in the world, clapped in the Tower, and againe toſſed from thence, and from houſe to houſe, from priſon to priſon, from poſt to pillar, at length alſo priſoner in her owne houſe, and guarded with a ſort of cut-throates, which ever gaped for the ſpoile, whereby they might be fingering of ſomewhat.

Secondly, we have to conſider againe, all this notwithſtanding, how ſtrangely or rather miraculouſly ſhe was delivered from danger, what favour and grace ſhe found with the Almightie; who when all helpe of man and hope of recoverie was paſt, ſtretched out his mightie protection, and preſerved her Highneſſe, and placed her in this Princely ſeate of reſt and quietneſſe, wherein now ſhe ſitteth, and long may ſhe ſit, the Lord of his glorious mercy grant, we beſeech him.

In which ſtorie, if I ſhould ſet forth at large and at full all the particulars and circumſtances thereunto belonging, and as juſt occaſion of the Hiſtorie requireth; beſide the importunate length of the ſtorie diſcourſed, peradventure it might move offence to ſome being yet alive, and truth might get mee hatred. Yet notwithſtanding I intend (by the grace of Chriſt) therein to uſe ſuch brevitie and moderation, as both may be to the glory of God, the diſcharge of the ſtory, the profit of the Reader, and hurt to none, ſuppreſſing the names of ſome, whom here although I could recite, yet I thought not to be more cruell in hurting their name, than the Queene hath been mercifull in pardoning their lives.

The hiſtory of the Lady Elizabeth.

Therefore now to enter into the diſcourſe of this tragicall matter, firſt here is to be noted, that Queene Mary when ſhe was firſt Queen, before ſhe was crowned, would go no whither, but would have her by the hand, and ſend for her to dinner and ſupper; but after ſhe was crowned, ſhe never dined nor ſupped with her, but kept her aloofe from her, &c. After this it happened immediately upon the riſing of ſir Thomas Wyat (as before was mentioned) that the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney were charged with falſe ſuſpicion of ſir Thomas Wyats riſing. Whereupon Queene Mary, whether for that ſurmiſe, or for what other cauſe I know not, being offended with the ſayd Lady Elizabeth her ſiſter, at that time lying in her houſe at Aſhbridge, the next day after the riſing of Wyat, ſent to her 3. of her Counſellers, to wit, ſir Richard Southwell, ſir Edward Haſtings, then Maſter of the Horſe, and ſir Thomas Cornewalles, with their retinue and troupe of Horſemen, to the number of 250. Who, at their ſudden and unprovided comming, found her at the ſame time ſore ſicke in her bed, and very feeble and weake of body. Whither when they came, aſcending up to her Graces chamber, they willed one of her Ladies, whom they met, to declare unto her Grace, that there were certain come from the Court, which had a meſſage from the Queene.

Sir Richard Sothwell, ſir Edward Haſtings, and ſir Thomas Cornwalles ſent to fetch up Lady Elizabeth, with whom alſo afterward was ſent the Lord William Howard, &c.

Her Grace having knowledge thereof, was right glad of their comming; howbeit being then very ſicke, and the night far ſpent (which was at ten of the clocke) ſhe requeſted them by the meſſenger, that they would reſort thither in the morning. To this they anſwered, and by the ſaid meſſenger ſent word againe, that they muſt needs ſee her, and would ſo doe, in what caſe ſoever ſhee were. Whereat the Lady being agaſt, went to ſhew her Grace their words; but they, haſtily following her, came ruſhing as ſoone as ſhe into her Graces chamber unbidden.

The unmannerlineſſe of the Knights.

At whoſe ſo ſudden comming into her bed-chamber, her Grace, being not a little amazed, ſaid unto them; Is the haſte ſuch that it might not have pleaſed you to come to morrow in the morning?

They made anſwer, that they were right ſorrie to ſee her in that caſe. And I (quoth ſhe) am not glad to ſee you here at this time of the night. Whereunto they anſwered, that they came from the Queen to doe their meſſage and duetie, which was to this effect, that the Queenes pleaſure was, that ſhe ſhould be at London the 7. day of that preſent moneth. Whereunto ſhe ſaid; Certes, no creature more glad than I to come to her Majeſty, being right ſorry that I am not in caſe at this time to waite on her, as you your ſelves doe ſee, and can well teſtifie.

Indeed we ſee it true (quoth they) that you do ſad; for which we are very ſorry. Albeit, we let you to underſtand, that our Commiſſion is ſuch, and ſo ſtraineth us, that we muſt needes bring you with us, either quick or dead. Whereat ſhe being amazed, ſorrowfully ſaid, that their Commiſſion was very ſore; but yet notwithſtanding ſhe hoped it to be otherwiſe, and not ſo ſtraite. Yes verily, ſaid they. Whereupon they calling for two Phiſitians, Doctor Owen, and Doctor Wendy, demanded of them whether ſhe might be removed from thence with life, or no. Whoſe anſwer and judgement was, that there was no impediment in their judgement to the contrary, but that ſhe might travell without danger of life.

A ſtrait Commiſſion from the Queene to bring the Lady Elizabeth, either quicke or dead.

In concluſion, they willed her to prepare againſt the next morning at nine of the clocke to goe with them, declaring that they had brought with them the Queenes Litter for hee. After much talke, the meſſengers declaring how there was no prolonging of times and dayes, ſo departed to their chamber, being entertained and cheared, as appertained to their worſhips.

On the next morrow at the time preſcribed, they had her forth as ſhe was, very faint and feeble, and in ſuch caſe, that ſhe was readie to ſwounde three or foure times betweene them. What ſhould I ſpeake here, that cannot well be expreſſed, what an heavie houſe there was to behold the unreverend and dolefull dealing of theſe men, but eſpecially the carnall feare and captivitie of their innocent Lady and Miſtreſſe.

La. Elizabeth taketh her journey toward the Q.

Now to proceed in her journie from Aſhbridge, all ſicke in the Litter, ſhee came to Redborne, where ſhe was gaurded all night. From thence to St. Albanes to ſir Ralfe Rowlets houſe, where ſhee tarried that night, both feeble in bodie, and comfortleſſe in minde. From that place they paſſed to Maſter Dods houſe at Mymmes, where alſo they remained that night; and ſo from thence ſhe came to Highgate, where ſhe being very ſicke, tarried that night and the next day. During which time of her abode, there came many Purſevants and meſſengers from the Court; but for what purpoſe I cannot tell.

La. Elizabeth brought up to London.

From that place ſhee was conveighed to the Court, where by the way came to meete her many Gentlemen to accompany her Highneſſe, which were very ſorry to ſee her in that caſe. But eſpecially a great multitude of people there were ſtanding by the way, who, then flocking about her Litter, lamented and bewailed greatly her eſtate. Now when ſhe came to the Court, her Grace was there ſtraight-waies ſhut up, and kept as cloſe priſoner a fortnight, which was till Palme-Sunday, ſeeing neyther King nor Queene, nor Lord, nor friend, all that time, but only the then Lord Chamberlaine, ſir John Gage, and the Vicechamberlaine, which were attendant unto the doores. About which time ſir William Sentlowe was called before the Councell. To whoſe charge was laid, that he knew of Wyats rebellion. Which hee ſtoutly denied, proteſting that hee was a true man both to GOD and his Prince, defying all Traytors and Rebels, bnt being ſtraitly examined, he was in concluſion committed to the Tower.

Sir Wil. Sentlowe committed to the Tower.

The Friday before Palme-Sunday, the Biſhop of Wincheſter with 19. other of the Councell (who ſhalbe here nameleſſe) came unto her Grace from the Queenes Majeſtie, and burdened her with Wyats conſpiracie; which ſhe utterly denied, affirming that ſhe was altogether guiltleſſe therein. They being not contented with this, charged her Grace with buſineſſe made by ſir Peter Carew, and the reſt of the Gentlemen of the Weſt countrie: which alſo ſhe utterly denying, cleared her innocencie therein.

La. Elizabeth charged with ſir Thomas Wyats conſpiracy.

La. Elizabeth charged with the buſineſſe of ſir Peter Carew.

La. Elizabeth threatned to go to the Tower:

In concluſion, after long debating of matters, they declared unto her, that it was the Queenes will and pleaſure that ſhee ſhould goe unto the Tower, while the matter were further tried and examined.

La. Elizabeth purgeth her ſelfe to the Lords.

Whereat ſhee being agaſt, ſayd, that ſhe truſted the Queenes Majeſty would be a more gracious Lady unto her, and that her Highneſſe would not otherwiſe conceive of her, but that ſhee was a true woman; declaring furthermore to the Lords, that ſhe was innocent in all thoſe matters wherein they had burdened her, and deſired them therefore to be a further meane to the Queene her ſiſter, that ſhe being a true woman in thought, word, and deed, towards her Majeſtie, might not be committed to ſo notorious and dolefull a place, proteſting that ſhe would requeſt no favour at her hand, if ſhe ſhould be proved to have conſented unto any ſuch kinde of matter as they laid unto her charge; and therefore in fine deſired their Lordſhips to thinke of her what ſhe was, and that ſhe might not ſo extremely be dealt withall for her truth.

Whereunto the Lords anſwered againe, that there was no remedie, for that the Queenes Majeſtie was fully determined that ſhee ſhould goe unto the Tower. Wherewith the Lords departed, with their caps hanging over their eyes. But not long after, within the ſpace of an houre or little more, came foure of the foreſaid Lords of the Councell, which were the Lord Treaſurer, the Biſhop of Wincheſter, the Lord Steward, the Earle of Suſſex, with the Guard; who warding the next chamber to her, ſecluded all her Gentlemen and Yeomen, Ladies and Gentlewomen, ſaving that for one Gentleman Uſher, three Gentlewomen, and two Groomes of her chamber, were appointed in their roomes, three other men of the Queenes, and three waiting women to give attendance upon her, that none ſhould have acceſſe to her Grace.

L. Elizabeths ſervants removed from her.

The Queens men and waiting women attendant upon Lady Elizabeth.

At which time there was an hundred of Northren ſouldiers in white coates, watching and warding about the gardens all that night, and a great fira being made in the midſt of the Hall, and two certaine Lords watching there alſo with their band and company.

Upon Saturday following, two Lords of the Councell (the one was the Earle of Suſſex, the other ſhall be nameleſſe) came and certified her Grace, that forthwith ſhee muſt goe unto the Tower, the Barge being prepared for her, and the tide now readie, which tarrieth for no bodie. In heavie moode her Grace requeſted the Lords that ſhee might tarry another tide, truſting that the next would be better, and more comfortable. But one of the Lords replied, that neyther time nor tide was to be delayed.

The hard dealing of a certain Lord with the Lady Elizabeth.

And when her Grace requeſted him that ſhe might be ſuffered to write to the Queenes Maieſtie, he anſwered, that he durſt not permit that: adding, that in his iudgement it would rather hurt, than profit her Grace in ſo doing.

The Earle of Suſſex gentle to the Lady Elizabeth.

But the other Lord, more curteous and favourable (who was the Earle of Suſſex) kneeling downe, told her Grace that ſhee ſhould have libertie to write, and as he was a true man, hee would deliver it to the Queenes Highneſſe, and bring an anſwer of the ſame, whatſoever came thereof. Whereupon ſhee wrote, albeit ſhee could in no caſe be ſuffered to ſpeake with the Queene, to her great diſcomfort, being no offender againſt the Queenes Maieſty.

La. Elizabeth writeth to the Queen, but it would not ſerve.

And thus the time and tide paſſed away for that ſeaſon, they privily appointing all things ready that ſhee ſhould goe the next tide, which fell about midnight; but for feare ſhe ſhould be taken by the way, they durſt not. So they ſtaied till the next day, being Palme-Sunday, when about nine of the clocke theſe two returned againe, declaring that it was time for her Grace to depart. Shee anſwered, if there be no remedie, I muſt be contented, willing the Lords to goe on before. Being come forth into the garden, ſhee did caſt her eyes towards the window, thinking to have ſeene the Queene, which ſhe could not. Whereat ſhe ſayd, ſhe marvelled much what the Nobilitie of the Realme meant, which in that ſort would ſuffer her to be led into captivitie, the Lord knew whither, for ſhee did not. In the meane time commandement was given in all London, that every one ſhould keepe the Church, and carrie their Palmes, while in the meane ſeaſon ſhee might be conveighed without all recourſe of people into the Tower.

After all this, ſhee tooke her Barge with the two foreſaid Lords, three of the Queenes Gentlewomen, and three of her owne, her Gentleman

Lady Elizabeth ſent to the tower.

Uſher, and two of her Groomes, lying and hovering upon the water a certaine ſpace, for that they could not ſhoote the Bridge, the Bargemen being very unwilling to ſhoote the ſame, ſo ſoone as they did, becauſe of the danger thereof: for the ſterne of the boate ſtrooke upon the ground, the fall was ſo bigge, and the water was ſo ſhallow, that the boate being under the Bridge, there ſtaied againe a while. At landing ſhe firſt ſtaied and denied to land at thoſe ſtaires where all traytors and offenders cuſtomably uſed to land, neither well could ſhe, unleſſe ſhe ſhould goe over her ſhooe. The Lords were gone out of the boate before, and asked why ſhee came not. One of the Lords went backe againe to her, and brought word ſhe would not come.

The words of Lady Elizabeth entring the Tower.

Then ſayd one of the Lords, which ſhall bee nameleſſe, that ſhe ſhould not chuſe; and becauſe it did then raine, he offered to her his cloake, which ſhee, putting it backe with her hand with a good daſh, refuſed. So ſhee comming out, having one foote upon the ſtaire, ſayd; Here landeth as true a ſubject, being priſoner, as ever landed at theſe ſtaires: And before thee, O God, I ſpeake it, having no other friends but thee alone.

To whom the ſame Lord anſwered again, that if it were ſo, it was the better for her. At her landing there was a great multitude of their ſervants and Warders ſtanding in their order. What needed all this, ſaid ſhe? It is the uſe (ſaid ſome) ſo to be when any priſoner came thither. And if it be (quoth ſhe) for my cauſe, I beſeech you that they may be diſmiſſed. Whereat the poore men kneeled downe, and with one voice deſired God to preſerve her Grace, who the next day were releaſed of their cold coates.

After this, paſſing a little further, ſhe ſate down upon a cold ſtone, and there reſted her ſelfe. To whom the Lieutenant then being ſaid; Madame, you were beſt to come out of the raine, for you ſit unwholſomely. She then replying, anſwered againe; It is better ſitting here, than in a worſe place; for God knoweth, I know not whither you will bring me. With that her Gentleman Uſher wept; ſhe demanding of him what he meant ſo uncomfortably to uſe her, ſeeing ſhe tooke him to be her comfort, and not to diſmay her, eſpecially for that ſhe knew her truth to be ſuch that no man ſhould have cauſe to weepe for her. But forth ſhe went into priſon.

The chriſtian prayer of Lady Elizabeth.

The doores were locked and bolted upon her, which did not a little diſcomfort and diſmay her Grace. At what time ſhee called to her Gentlewoman for her Booke, deſiring God not to ſuffer her to build her foundation upon the ſands, but upon the Rocke, whereby all blaſts of bluſtering weather ſhould have no power againſt her. The doores being thus locked, and ſhe cloſe ſhut up, the Lords had great conference how to keepe ward and watch, everie man declaring his owne opinion in that behalfe, agreeing ſtraitely and circumſpectly to keep her.

The Lord of Suſſex ſpeaketh for Lady Elizabeth.

Then one of them, which was the Lord of Suſſex, ſwearing, ſayd: My Lords, let us take heede, and doe no more than our Commiſſion will beare us out in, whatſoever ſhall happen hereafter. And further, let us conſider that ſhe was the King our Maieſties daughter; and therefore let us uſe ſuch dealing, that wee may anſwer it hereafter, if it ſhall ſo happen: for juſt dealing (quoth hee) is alwayes anſwerable; whereunto the other Lords agreed that it was well ſayd of him, and thereupon departed. Being in the Tower, within two dayes commandement was that ſhe ſhould have Maſſe within her houſe. One Maſter Yong was then her Chaplaine; and becauſe there was none of her men ſo well learned to helpe the Prieſt to ſay Maſſe, the Maſſe ſtaied for that day.

The next day two of her Yeomen, who had gone long to ſchoole before, and were learned, had two Abcies provided, and delivered them, ſo that upon the Abcies they ſhould helpe the Prieſt. One of the ſaid Yeomen, holding the Abcie in his hand, pretending ignorance at Kirie eleyſon, ſet the Prieſt, making as though he could anſwer no farther.

It would make a pitifull and a ſtrange ſtory, here by the way to touch and receite what examination and rackings of poore men there were to find out that knife that ſhould cut her throate; what gaping among my Lords of the Clergy, to ſee the day wherein they might waſh their goodly white Rochets in her innocent bloud; but eſpecially the Biſhop of Wincheſter Stephen Gardiner, then Lord Chadcellor, ruler of the roſt, who then within 5. daies after came unto her, with divers other of the Counſell, and examined her of the talke that was at Aſhridge, betwixt her and ſir James Acroft, concerning her removing from thence to Dunnington Caſtle, requiring her to declare what ſhe meant thereby.

The Biſhop of Wincheſter enemy to Lady Elizabeth.
La. Elizabeth examined by the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

At the firſt ſhe being ſo ſuddenly asked, did not well remember any ſuch houſe; but within a while, well adviſing her ſelfe, ſhe ſaid; Indeed (quoth ſhe) I doe now remember that I have ſuch a place, but I never lay in it in all my life. And as for any that hath moved me thereunto, I doe not remember.

Then to enforce the matter, they brought forth ſir James Acroft. The Biſhop of Wincheſter demanded of her what ſhe ſaid to that man. She anſwered, that ſhe had little to ſay to him, or to the reſt that were then priſoners in the Tower. But my Lords (quoth ſhe) you doe examine every meane priſoner of me, wherein me thinkes you doe me great injury. If they have done evill, and offended the Queens Majeſty, let them anſwer to it accordingly. I beſeech you, my Lords, joyne not me in this ſort with any of theſe offenders. And as concerning my going unto Dunnington Caſtle, I doe remember that Maſter Hobby and mine Officers, and you ſir James Acroft had ſuch talke, but what is that to the purpoſe, my Lords, but that I may goe to mine own houſes at all times?

The friendly ſpeech of the Earle of Arundel to the La. Elizabeth

The Lord of Arundel kneeling downe, ſaid, Your Grace ſaith true, and certainly we are very ſorry that we have ſo troubled you about ſo vaine matters. She then ſaid; My Lords, you do ſift me very narrowly. But well I am aſſured, you ſhall not do more to me than God hath appointed, and ſo God forgive you all.

Sir James Acroft examined touching the Lady Elizabeth.

At their departure ſir James Acroft kneeled downe, declaring that he was ſorry to ſee the day in which he ſhould be brought as a witneſſe againſt her Grace. But I aſſure your Grace (ſaid he) I have been marvellouſly toſſed and examined touching your Highneſſe, which the Lord knoweth is very ſtrange to me. For I take God to record before all your Honours, I doe not know any thing of that crime that you have laid to my charg, and will thereupon take my death, if I ſhould be driven to ſo ſtrict a triall.

Theſe were not the officers of the but Tower, ſuch as went in white and greene.

That day, or thereabouts, divers of her owne Officers, who had made proviſion for her diet, brought the ſame to the outer gate of the Tower, the common raſcall ſouldiers receiving it; which was no ſmall griefe unto the Gentlemen, the bringers thereof. Wherefore they required to ſpeake with the Lord Chamberlaine, being then Conſtable of the Tower. Who, comming before his preſence, declared unto his Lordſhip, that they were much affraid to bring her Graces diet, and to deliver it unto ſuch common and deſperate perſons as they were which did receive it, beſeeching his Honour to conſider her Grace, and to give ſuch order, that her viands might at all times bee brought in by them which were appointed thereunto. Yea, ſirs, ſayd hee? who appointed you this office? They anſwered, her Graces Councell. Councell, quoth hee? There is none of them which hath to doe eyther in that caſe, or any thing elſe within this place; and I aſſure you, for that ſhe is a priſoner, ſhe ſhall be ſerved with the Lieutenants men, as other the priſoners ares. Whereat the Gentlemen ſayd, that they truſted for more favour at his hands, conſidering her perſonage; ſaying, that they miſtruſted not, but that the Queene and her Councell would be better to her Grace than ſo, and therewith ſhewed themſelves to be offended at the ungratefull words of the Lord Chamberlaine towards their Ladie and Miſtreſſe.

Lady Elizabeths ſervants reſtrained for bringing her diet to the Tower.

Diſpleaſure between the Lord Chamberlaine and Lady Elizabeths men.

At this he ſware by God, ſtriking himſelfe upon the breaſt, that if they did eyther frowne or ſhrug at him, hee would ſet them where they ſhould ſee neyther Sunne nor Moone. Thus taking their leave, they deſired God to bring him into a better minde toward her Grace, and departed from him.

Upon the occaſion whereof, her Graces officers made great ſute unto the Queenes Councel, that ſome might bee appointed to bring her diet unto her, and that it might no more be delivered unto the common ſouldiers of the Tower. Which being reaſonably conſidered, was by them granted. And thereupon were appointed one of her Gentlemen, her Clerke of her Kitchin, and her two Purveiers to bring in her proviſion once a day. All which was done, the Warders ever waiting upon the bringers thereof.

The Lord Chamberlaine himſelfe being alwaies with them, circumſpectly and narrowly watched and ſearched what they brought, and gave heede that they ſhould have no talke with any of her Graces waiting ſervants, and ſo warded them both in and out. At the ſayd ſute of her officers were ſent by the commandement of the Councell, to waite upon her Grace, two Yeomen of her Chamber, one of her Robes, two of her Pantrie and Ewrie, one of her Buttrie, another of her Cellar, two of her Kitchin, and one of her Larder, all which continued with her the time of her trouble.

Lady Elizabeths waiting men in the Tower.

Here the Conſtable, being at the firſt not very well pleaſed with the comming in of ſuch a companie againſt his will, would have had his men ſtill to have ſerved with her Graces men. Which her ſervants at no hand would ſuffer, deſiring his Lordſhip to bee contented, for that order was taken, that no ſtranger ſhould come within their offices. At which anſwer being ſore diſpleaſed, he brake out into theſe threatning words; Well (ſayd hee) I will handle you well enough. Then went hee into the Kitchin, and there would needes have his meate roſted with her Graces meate, and ſayd that his Cooke ſhould come thither and dreſſe it. To that her Graces Cooke anſwered; My Lord, I will never ſuffer any ſtranger to come about her diet, but her owne ſworne men, ſo long as I live. He ſayd they ſhould. But the Cooke ſayd, his Lordſhip ſhould pardon him for that matter. Thus did he trouble her poore ſervants very ſtoutly; though afterward he were otherwiſe adviſed, and they more curteouſly uſed at his hands. And good cauſe why. For hee had good cheare, and fared of the beſt, and her Grace payed well for it. Wherefore hee uſed himſelfe afterward more reverently toward her Grace.

Variance between the Lord Chamberlaine and Lady Elizabeths ſervants

After this ſort, having lien a whole moneth there in cloſe priſon, and being very evill at eaſe therewithall, ſhee ſent for the Lord Chamberlaine, and the Lord Shandoyes to come and ſpeak with her. Who comming, ſhe requeſted them that ſhee might have libertie to walke in ſome place, for that ſhee felt her ſelfe not well. To the which they anſwered, that they were right ſorrie that they could not ſatiſfie her Graces requeſt, for that they had commandement to the contrarie, which they durſt not in any wiſe breake. Furthermore, ſhee deſired of them, if that could not be granted, that ſhee might walke but into the Queenes lodging. No, nor yet that (they anſwered) could by any meanes be obtained without a further ſute to the Queene and her Councell. Well, ſayd ſhee, my Lords, if the matter bee ſo hard that they muſt bee ſued unto for ſo ſmall a thing, and that friendſhip be ſo ſtrict, God comfort me, and ſo they departed, ſhee remaining in her old dungeon ſtill, without any kind of comfort but only God.

La. Elizabeth denied the liberty of the Tower.

The next day after the Lord Shandoyes came againe unto her Grace, declaring unto her that hee had ſued unto the Councell for further libertie. Some of them conſented thereunto, divers other diſſented, for that there were ſo many priſoners in the Tower. But in concluſion, they did all agree that her Grace might walke into thoſe lodgings, ſo that he and the Lord Chamberlaine, and three of the Queenes Gentlewomen did accompanie her, the windows being ſhut, and ſhe not ſuffered to looke out at any of them: wherewith ſhe contented her ſelfe, and gave him thankes for his good will in that behalfe,

Afterwards there was libertie granted to her Grace to walke in a little garden, the doores and gates being ſhut up, which notwithſtanding was as much diſcomfort unto her, as the walke in the garden was pleaſant and acceptable. At which times of her walking there, the priſoners on that ſide ſtraitely were commanded not to ſpeake or looke out at the windowes into the garden, till her Grace were gone out againe, having in conſideration thereof their Keepers waiting upon them for that time. Thus her Grace with this ſmall libertie contented herſelfe in God, to whom be praiſe therefore.

Liberty granted to Lady Elizabeth to walk in a little garden.

During this time, there uſed a little boy, a mans childe in the Tower, to reſort to their chambers, and many times to bring her Grace flowers, which likewiſe hee did to the other priſoners that were there. Whereupon naughtie and ſuſpicious heads, thinking to make and wring out ſome matter thereof, called on a time the childe unto them, promiſing him Figges and Apples, and aſked of him when hee had been with the Earle of Devonſhire, not ignorant of the childes wonted frequenting unto him. The boy anſwered, that hee would goe by and by thither. Further, they demanded of him, when he was with the Ladie Elizabeths Grace. Hee anſwered, every day. Furthermore, they examined him, what the Lord of Devonſhire ſent by him to her Grace. The childe ſayd, I will goe know what hee will give to carry to her. Such was the diſcretion of the childe, being yet but 4. yeeres of age. This ſame is a crafty boy, quoth the Lord Chamberlaine. How ſay you my Lord Shandoyes? I pray you my Lord (quoth the boy) give mee the Figges you promiſed me. No Mary (quoth he) thou ſhalt be whipped if thou come any more to the Lady Elizabeth or the Lord Courtney. The boy anſwered, I will bring my Lady my Miſtreſſe more flowers. Whereupon the childes father was commanded to permit the boy no more to come up into their chambers.

Suſpicious heads.

A young child examined for bringing flowers to the La. Elizabeth

The next day, as her Grace was walking in the garden, the childe peeping in at a hole in the doore, cried unto her, ſaying; Miſtreſſe, I can bring you no more flowers. Whereat ſhee ſmiled, but ſaid nothing, underſtanding thereby what they had done. Wherefore afterwards the Chamberlaine rebuked highly his father, commanding him to put him out of the houſe. Alas, poore infant, quoth the father. It is a craftie knave, quoth the Lord Chamberlaine; let me ſee him here no more.

The Conſtable of the Tower diſcharged of his office. Sir Henry Benifield with his company, placed about the Lady Elizabeth.

Lady Elizabeth in great feare and doubt of life.

The fifth day of May, the Conſtable of the Tower was diſcharged of his office, and one ſir Henry Benifield placed in his roome, a man unknowne to her Grace, and therefore the more feared; which ſo ſudden mutation was unto her no little amaze. He brought with him an hundred ſouldiers in blew coates, wherewith ſhe was marvellouſly diſcomforted, and demaunded of ſuch as were about her, whether the Lady Janes Scaffold were taken away or no, fearing by reaſon of their comming, leſt ſhee ſhould have plaied her part. To whom anſwer was made, that the Scaffold was taken away, and that her Grace needed not to doubt of any ſuch tyrannie; for God would not ſuffer any ſuch treaſon againſt her perſon. Wherewith being contented, but not altogether ſatisfied, ſhee aſked what ſir Henrie Benifield was, and whether hee was of that conſcience, or no, that if her murdering were ſecretly committed to his charge, he would ſee the execution thereof.

La. Elizabeth in doubt, of ſir Hen. Beniſſled

Shee was anſwered, that they were ignorant what manner of man hee was. Howbeit they perſwaded her that God would not ruffer ſuch wickedneſſe to proceede. Well, quoth ſhee, God grant it be ſo. For thou, O God, canſt molifie all ſuch tyrannous hearts, and diſappoint all ſuch cruell purpoſes; and I beſeech thee to heare mee thy creature, which am thy ſervant and at thy commandement, truſting by thy grace ever ſo to remaine.

About which time it was ſpread abroad, that her Grace ſhould bee carried from thence by this new iolly Captaine and his ſouldiers; but whither, it could not bee learned. Which was unto her a great griefe, eſpecially for that ſuch a companie was appointed to her guard, requeſting rather to continue there ſtill, than to bee led thence with ſuch a ſort of Raſcals. At laſt, plain anſwer was made by the Lord Shandoyes, that there was no remedy, but from thence ſhee muſt needs depart to the Manour of Woodſtocke, as he thought. Being demanded of her, for what cauſe; for that (quoth he) the Tower is like further to be furniſhed. She being deſirous to know what he meant thereby, demanded wherewith. He anſwered, with ſuch matter as the Queene and Councell were determined in that behalfe, whereof he had no knowledge; and ſo departed.

In concluſion, on Trinitie Sunday, being the nineteenth day of May, ſhee was removed from the Tower, the Lord Treaſurer being then there for the lading of her Carts, and diſcharging the place of the ſame, Where ſir Henrie Benifield (being appointed her Iayler) did receive her with a company of rake-hels to guard her, beſide the Lord of Darbies band, waiting in the countrie about for the Mooneſhine in the water. Unto whom at length came my Lord of Tame ioyned in Commiſſion with the ſayd ſir Henrie, for the ſafe guiding of her to priſon; and they together conveighed her Grace to Woodſtocke, as hereafter followeth.

La Elizabeth removed from the Tower to Woodſtocke.

The firſt day they conducted her to Richmond, where ſhee continued all night, being reſtrained of her owne men, which were lodged in out-chambers, and ſir Henrie Benifields ſouldiers appointed in their roomes to give attendance on her perſon. Whereat ſhee being marvellouſly diſmaied, thinking verily ſome ſecret miſchiefe to bee a working towards her, called her Gentleman Uſher, and deſired him with the reſt of his companie to pray for her. For this night (quoth ſhee) I thinke to die. Wherewith hee being ſtricken to the heart, ſaying; God forbid that any ſuch wickedneſſe ſhould be pretended againſt your Grace. So comforting her as well as he could, at laſt he braſt out into teares, and went from her downe into the Court, where were walking the Lord of Tame, and ſir Henrie Benifield.

La. Elizabeth ſecluded from her ſervants.

La. Elizabeth in diſpaire of her life.

Then he comming to the Lord of Tame (who had proffered to him much friendſhip) deſired to ſpeake with him a word or two. Unto whom he familiarly ſayd, hee would with all his heart. Which when ſir Henrie, ſtanding by, heard, hee aſked what the matter was. To whom the Gentleman Uſher anſwered; No great matter ſir (ſayd hee) but to ſpeake with my Lord a word or two.

Lady Elizabeths Uſher talketh with the Lord of Tame.

Then when the Lord of Tame came to him, he ſpake on this wiſe: My Lord (quoth he) you have been alwayes my good Lord, and ſo I beſeech you to remaine. The cauſe why I come to you at this time, is to deſire hour Honour unfainedly to declare unto me whether any danger is meant towards my Miſtreſſe this night, or no, that I and my poore fellowes may take ſuch part as ſhall pleaſe God to appoint: For certainly we will rather die, than ſhe ſhould ſecretly and innocently miſcarry. Mary (ſayd the Lord of Tame) GOD forbid that any ſuch wicked purpoſe ſhould bee wrought; and rather than it ſhould be ſo, I with my men are readie to die at her foote alſo: and ſo (praiſed bee God) they paſſed that dolefull night, with no little heavineſſe of heart.

The gentle heart of the Lord of Tame to the Lady Elizabeth.

Afterwards paſſing over the water at Richmond, going towards Windſor, her Grace eſpied certaine of her poore ſervants ſtanding on the other ſide, which were very deſirous to ſee her. Whom when ſhee beheld, turning to one of her men ſtanding by, ſhe ſayd; Yonder I ſee certaine of my men: goe to them and ſay theſe words from me, Tanquam ovis, i. Like a ſheep to the ſlaughter.

So ſhee paſſing forward to Windſor, was lodged there that night in the Deane of Windſors houſe, a place more meete indeed for a Prieſt than a Princeſſe.

And from thence her Grace was guarded and brought the next night to Maſter Dormers houſe, where much people ſtanding by the way, ſome preſented to her one gift, and ſome another, ſo that ſir Henrie was greatly moved therewith, and troubled the poore people very ſore, for ſhewing their loving hearts in ſuch a manner, calling them Rebels and Traitors, with ſuch like vile words.

La. Elizabeth honourably received and beloved of the people.

Beſides, as ſhee paſſed through the villages, the Towneſmen rang the Bels, as being ioyfull of her comming, thinking verily that it had been otherwiſe than it was indeede, as the ſequele proved after to the ſayd poore men. For immediately the ſayd ſir Henry hearing the ſame, ſent his ſouldiers thither, who apprehended ſome of the Ringers, ſetteth them in the Stockes, and otherwiſe uncurteouſly miſuſing otherſome for their good wils.

On the morrow her Grace paſſing from Maſter Dormers (where was, for the time of her abode there, a ſtraite watch kept) came to the Lord of Tames houſe, where ſhee lay all the night, being very princely entertained both of

The gentle entertainment of Lady Elizabeth at the Lord of Tames houſe.

M. Benifield grudging at the great enterteinment of the Lady Elizabeth.

Knights and Ladies, Gentlemen and Gentlewomen. Whereat Sir Henry Benifield grunted, and was highly offended, ſaying unto them, that they could not tell what they did, and were not able to anſwer their doings in that behalfe, letting them to underſtand, that ſhe was the Queenes Majeſties priſoner, and no otherwiſe; adviſing them therefore to take heed and beware of afterclaps. Whereunto the Lord of Tame anſwered in this wiſe; that he was well adviſed of his doings, being joyned in commiſſion as well as he, adding with warrant, that her Grace might and ſhould in his houſe be merry.

The next day, as ſhe ſhould take her journey from Richmond toward Woodſtocke, the Lord of Tame with another Gentleman being at Tables, playing, and dropping vie crownes, the Lady Elizabeth paſſing by, ſtaied and ſaid ſhee would ſee the game played out, which Sir Henry Benifield would ſcarſe permit. The game running long about, and they playing, drop vie crowns, Come on, ſaith he; I will tarry, ſaith ſhe, and will ſee this game out.

The rude and ungentlemanly behaviour of ſir Henry Benifield.

After this, Sir Henry went up into a chamber, where was appointed for her Grace a chaire, two cuſhions, and a foot-carpet very faire and prince-like, wherein preſumptuouſly he ſate, and called one Barwike his man to pull off his boots. Which as ſoone as it was knowne among the Ladies and Gentles, every one muſed thereat, and laughed him to ſcorne, obſerving his undiſcreet manners in that behalfe, as they might very well.

When ſupper was done, he called my Lord, and willed him that all the Gentlemen and Ladies ſhould withdraw themſelves every one to his lodging, marvelling much that he would permit there ſuch a company, conſidering ſo great a charge committed to him.

Sir Henry (quoth my Lord) content your ſelfe, all ſhall be voided, your men and all. Nay, my ſouldiers (quoth Sir Henry) ſhall watch all night. The Lord of Tame anſwered, it ſhall not need. Well, ſaid he, need or need not, they ſhall ſo doe, miſtruſting belike the company, which God knoweth was without cauſe.

Lady Elizabeth commeth to Woodſtock.

The next day her Grace tooke her journey from thence to Woodſtocke, where ſhe was incloſed, as before in the Tower of London, the ſouldiers guarding and warding both within and without the wals, every day to the number of 60. and in the night without the wals 40. during the time of her impriſonment there.

The ſtrait watch kept at Woodſtocke.

At length ſhe had gardens appointed for her walke, which was very comfortable to her Grace. But alwaies when ſhe did recreate her ſelfe therein, the doores were faſt locked up, in as ſtrict manner as they were in the Tower, being at the leaſt five or ſixe lockes betweene her lodging and her walkes; Sir Henry himſelfe keeping the keyes, and truſting no man therewith. Whereupon ſhe called him her Jaylor; and hee, kneeling downe, deſired her Grace not to call him ſo, for he was appointed there to be one of her Officers. From ſuch Officers (quoth ſhe) good Lord deliver me.

A merry ſtory concerning the ſtrait keeping of the Lady Elizabeth.

And now by the way, as digreſſing, or rather refreſhing the Reader, if it be lawfull in ſo ſerious a ſtory to recite a matter incident, and yet not impertinent to the ſame; occaſion here moveth, or rather inforceth me to touch briefly what hapned in the ſame place and time by a certaine merry conceited man, being then about her Grace: who noting the ſtraite and ſtrange keeping of his Lady and Miſtreſſe by the ſaid Sir Henry Benifield, with ſo many lockes and doores, with ſuch watch and ward about her, as was ſtrange and wonderfull, ſpied a Goat in the ward where her Grace was; and whether to refreſh her oppreſſed minde, or to notifie her ſtrait handling by Sir Henry, or elſe both, he tooke it upon his necke, and followed her Grace therewith as ſhe was going into her lodging.

Which when ſhe ſaw, ſhe aſked him what he would doe with it, willing him to let it alone. Unto whom the ſaid party anſwered; No, by Saint Mary (if it like your Grace) will I not; for I cannot tell, whether he be one of the Queens friends, or no. I will carry him to Sir Henry Benifield (God willing) to know what he is. So leaving her Grace, hee went with the goat on his necke, and carried it to Sir Henry Benifield, who when he ſaw him comming with it, aſkt him, halfe angerly, what he had there.

The ſtraitnes of ſir Henry Benifield merrily noted.

Unto whom the party anſwered, ſaying; Sir (quoth he) I cannot tell what he is. I pray you examine him, for I found him in the place where my Ladies Grace was walking, and what talke they have had I cannot tell. For I underſtand him not, but he ſhould ſeeme to me to be ſome ſtranger, and I thinke verily a Welchman, for he hath a white frize coat on his backe. And forſomuch as I being the Queens ſubject, and perceiving the ſtraite charge committed to you of her keeping, that no ſtranger ſhould have acceſſe to her without ſufficient licenſe, I have here found a ſtranger (what he is I cannot tell) in place where her Grace was walking; and therefore for the neceſſary diſcharge of my duty, I thought it good to bring the ſaid ſtranger to you, to examine, as you ſee cauſe; and ſo hee ſet him downe. At which his words Sir Henry ſeemed much diſpleaſed, and ſaid; Well, well, you will never leave this geare I ſee: and ſo they departed.

La. Elizabeth with much adoe, ſuffered to write to the Queene.

Now to return to the matter from whence we have digreſſed, after her Grace had been there a time, ſhe made ſute to the Councell that ſhe might be ſuffered to write to the Queene. Which at laſt was permitted: So Sir Henry Benifield brought her penne, inke, and paper; and ſtanding by her while ſhe wrote (which he ſtraitly obſerved) alwaies ſhe being weary, hee would carry away her letters, and bring them againe when ſhe called for them. In the finiſhing thereof, he would have been meſſenger to the Queene of the ſame. Whoſe requeſt her Grace denied, ſaying, one of her owne men ſhould carry them, and that ſhe would neither truſt him, nor any of his therein.

The cruell dealing of ſir He. Benifield to the Lady Elizabeth reproved.

Then he anſwered againe, ſaying; None of them durſt be ſo bold (he trowed) to carry her letters being in that caſe. Yes (quoth ſhe) I am aſſured I have none ſo diſhoneſt that would deny my requeſt in that behalfe, but will be as willing to ſerve me now as before. Well (ſaid hee) my commiſſion is to the contrary, and I may not ſo ſuffer it. Her Grace replying againe, ſaid; You charge me very often with your commiſſion. I pray God you may juſtly anſwer the cruell dealing you uſe towards me.

Then hee kneeling downe, deſired her Grace to thinke and conſider how hee was a ſervant, and put in truſt there by the Queene to ſerve her Majeſty; proteſting that if the caſe were hers, he would as willingly ſerve her Grace, as now he did the Queenes Highneſſe. For the which his anſwer her Grace thanked him, deſiring God that ſhe might never have need of ſuch ſervants as he was; declaring further to him, that his doings towards her were not good nor anſwerable, but more than all the friends he had would ſtand by.

To whom ſir Henry replied and ſaid, that there was no remedie but his doings muſt bee anſwered, and ſo they ſhould, truſting to make good account thereof. The cauſe which moved her grace ſo to ſay, was for that he would not permit her letters to be carried foure or five daies after the writing thereof. But in fine hee was content to ſend for her Gentleman from the town of Woodſtocke, demanding of him whether hee durſt enterpriſe the carriage of her Graces letters to the Queene, or no: and he anſwered, Yea ſir, that I dare, and will with all my heart. Whereupon ſir Henrie, halfe againſt his ſtomacke, tooke them unto him.

The letters of the Lady Elizabeth ſent to the Queene.

Then about the eighth of June came downe Doctor Owen and Doctor Wendie, ſent by the Queene to her Grace, for that ſhe was ſickely; who miniſtring to her, and letting her blood, tarried there and attended on her Grace five or ſixe daies. Then ſhe being well amended, they returned againe to the Court, making their good report to the Queene and the Councell of her Graces behaviour and humbleneſſe toward the Queenes highneſſe. Which her Majeſtie hearing, tooke very thankfully: but the Biſhops thereat repined, looked black in the mouth, and told the Queene, they marvelled that ſhee ſubmitted not her ſelfe to her Majeſties mercy, conſidering that ſhe had offended her highnes.

D. Owen & D. Wendy Q. Maries Phiſitians ſent to the Lady Elizabeth.

The Popiſh Prelates repined againſt the Lady Elizabeth.

About this time, her Grace was requeſted by a ſecret friend, to ſubmit her ſelfe to the Queenes Majeſtie, which would be very well taken, and to her great quiet and commoditie. Unto whom ſhee anſwered, that ſhee would never ſubmit her ſelfe to them whom ſhee never offended. For (quoth ſhee) if I have offended and am guiltie, I then crave no mercy, but the law, which I am certaine (quoth ſhee) I ſhould have had ere this, if it could be proved by me. For I know my ſelfe (I thank God) to be out of the danger thereof, wiſhing that I were as cleere out of the perill of my enemies, and then I am aſſured I ſhould not ſo be locked and bolted up within walles and doores as I am. God give them a better minde when it pleaſeth him.

Lady Eliz. requeſted to ſubmit her ſelfe to the Queen.

About this time there was a great conſulting among the Biſhops and Gentlemen, touching a marriage for her grace, which ſome of the Spaniards wiſhed to be with ſome ſtranger, that ſhee might go out of the realme with her portion; ſome ſaying one thing, and ſome another.

Counſel of the Papiſts to marry the Lady Elizabeth to a Spaniard.

A Lord (who ſhall be here nameleſſe, being there, at laſt ſaid, that the King ſhould never have any quiet commonwealth in England, unleſſe her head were ſtricken from the ſhoulders. Whereunto the Spaniards anſwered, ſaying, God forbid that their King and Maſter ſhould have that minde to conſent to ſuch a miſchiefe.

Wicked counſel given of the Lord Paget againſt the Lady Elizabeth.

This was the courteous anſwer of the Spaniards to the Engliſhmen, ſpeaking after that ſort againſt their owne countrey. From that day the Spaniards never left off their good perſwaſions to the King, that the like honor hee ſhould never obtaine, as he ſhould in delivering the Ladie Elizabeths grace out of priſon; whereby at length ſhe was happily releaſed from the ſame. Here is a plaine and evident example of the good clemencie and nature of the King and his Counſellers toward her Grace (praiſed bee God therefore) who moved their hearts therein. Then hereupon ſhee was ſent for ſhortly after to come to Hampton Court.

Spaniards more favourable to the Lady Elizabeth, than ſome Engliſhmen.

But before her removing away from Woodſtock, wee will a little ſtay to declare in what dangers her life was, during this time ſhee there remained: firſt through fire, which began to kindle betweene the boards and ſeeling under the chamber where ſhe lay, whether by a ſparke of fire gotten into a crany, or whether of purpoſe by ſome that meant her no good, the Lord doth know. Neverthelesſe a worſhipfull knight of Oxfordſhire, which was there joyned the ſame time with ſir Henrie Benifield in keeping that Lady (who then tooke up the boards and quenched the fire) verily ſuppoſed it to be done of purpoſe.

Lady Eliz. in danger of fire.

Furthermore it is thought, and alſo affirmed (if it be true) of one Paul Peny a Keeper of Woodſtock, a notorious ruffian and a butcherly wretch, that he was appointed to kill the ſaid Lady Elizabeth: who both ſaw the man being of ten in her ſight, and alſo knew thereof.

Lady Eliz. in danger of killing.

Another time, one of the privie chamber, a great man about the Queene, and chiefe darling of Stephen Gardiner, named Maſter James Baſſet, came to Blandenbridge a mile from Woodſtocke, with twentie or thirtie privie coates, and ſent for ſir Henrie Benifield to come and ſpeake with him. But, as God would, which diſpoſed all things after the purpoſe of his owne will, ſo it happened, that a little before the ſayd Henry Benifield was ſent for by Poſt to the Councell, leaving ſtraight word behinde him with his brother, that no man, whatſoever he were, though comming with a Bill of the Queenes hand, or any other warrant, ſhould have acceſſe to her before his returne againe. By reaſon whereof it ſo fell out, that Maſter Benifields Brother, comming to him at the Bridge, would ſuffer him in no caſe to approach in, who otherwiſe (as is ſuppoſed) was appointed violently to murther the innocent Lady.

Another conſpiracy of murder againſt Lady Elizabeth.

In the life of Stephen Gardiner wee declared before, how that the Lady Elizabeth being in the Tower, a Writ came downe, ſubſcribed with certaine hands of the Councell for her execution. Which if it were certaine, as it is reported, Wincheſter (no doubt) was deviſer of that miſchievous drift: and doubtleſſe the ſame Achitophel had brought his impious purpoſe that day to paſſe, had not the fatherly providence of Almightie God (who is alwayes ſtronger than the divell) ſtirred up Maſter Bridges, Lieutenant the ſame time of the Tower, to come in haſte to the Queen, to give certificate thereof, and to know further her conſent touching her ſiſters death. Whereupon it followed, that all that device was diſappointed, and Wincheſters devilliſh platforme, which hee ſaid he had caſt, through the Lords great goodnes came to no effect.

Lady Eliz. preſerved by the Lords providence from execution in the Tower. Wincheſters platform overthrowne: Whereof read before.

Where moreover is to bee noted, that during the impriſonment of this Lady and Princeſſe, one M. Edmund Tremaine was on the Racke, and Maſter Smithwike, and divers other in the Tower were examined, and divers offers made to them to accuſe the guiltleſſe Lady, being in her captivity. Howbeit all that notwithſtanding, no matter could be proved by all examinations, as ſhe the ſame time lying at Woodſtocke had certaine intelligence by the meanes of one John Gayer; who, under a colourable pretence of a letter to Miſtreſſe Cleve from her father, was let in, and ſo gave them ſecretly to underſtand of all this matter. Whereupon the Lady Elizabeth, at her departing out from Woodſtock, wrote theſe verſes with her Diamond in a glaſſe window.

Much ſuſpected by me:
Nothing proved can be.
Quoth Elizabeth priſoner.

Verſes written by Lady Elizabeth in the glaſſe window.

And thus much touching the troubles of Ladie Elizabeth at Woodſtock. Whereunto this is more to be added, that during the ſame time, the Lord of Tame had laboured to the Queen, and became ſurety for her, to have her from Woodſtocke to his houſe, and had obtained grant thereof. Whereupon preparation was made accordingly, and all things readie in expectation of her comming. But through the procurement eyther of Maſter Benified, or by the doing of Wincheſter her mortall enemy, letters came over night to the contrary; whereby her iourney was ſtopped.

Lady Elizabeth not ſuffered to come to the Lord of Tames houſe.

Thus this worthy Ladie, oppreſſed with continuall ſorrow, could not bee permitted to have recourſe to any friends ſhe had, but ſtill in the hands of her enemies was left deſolate, and utterly deſtitute of all that might refreſh a dolefull heart, fraught full of terrour and thraldome. Whereupon no marveil if ſhe hearing upon a time, out of her garden at Woodſtocke, a certaine milkemaide ſinging pleaſantly, wiſhed her ſelfe to be a milkemaide as ſhe was, ſaying that her caſe was better, and life more merrier than was hers, in that ſtate as ſhe was.

Lady Eliz. wiſheth her ſelfe to be a milkmaide.

Now after theſe things thus declared, to procéede further there where we left before, ſir Henrie Benifield and his ſouldiers, with the Lord of Tame, and ſir Ralph Chamberline, gaurding and waiting upon her, the firſt night from Woodſtocke ſhe came to Ricot. In which iourney ſuch a mightie winde did blow, that her ſervants were faine to hold downe her cloathes about her: In ſo much that her hoode was twice or thrice blowne from her head, Whereupon ſhe deſiring to returne to a certaine Gentlemans houſe there néere, could not bée ſuffered by ſir Henry Benifield ſo to do, but was conſtrained under an hedge to trimme her head as well as ſhe could.

Lady Eliz. removed from Woodſtock to Hampton Court.

After this, the next night they iourneyed to M. Dormers, and ſo to Colbroke, where ſhée lay all that night at the George, and by the way comming to Colbroke, certaine of her Graces Gentlemen and Yeomen met her, to the number of thréeſcore, much to all their comforts, which had not ſéene her grace of long ſeaſon before: notwithſtanding they were commanded in the Quéenes name immediately to depart the town, to both their, and her Graces no little heavines, who could not bee ſuffered once to ſpeake with them. So that night all her men were taken from her, ſaving her Gentleman Uſher, thrée Gentlewomen, two groomes, and one of her Wardrobe, the ſouldiers watching and warding about the houſe, and wée cloſe ſhut up within her priſon.

The next day following, her Grace entred Hampton Court on the backſide, into the Princes lodging, the doores being ſhut to her, and ſhée guarded with ſouldiers, as before, lay there a fortnight at the leaſt, ere any had recourſe unto her, At length came the Lord William Haward, who marvellous honourably uſed her Grace. Whereat ſhée tooke much comfort, and requeſted him to be a meane that ſhée might ſpeake with ſome of the Councell. To whom (not long after) came the Biſhop of Wincheſter, the Lord of Arundel, the Lord of Shrewſburie, and Secretary Peter, who with great humility humbled themſelves to her Grace. She againe likewiſe ſaluting them, ſayd, My Lords, I am glad to ſée you: for me thinke, I have béen kept a great while from you deſolately alone. Wherfore I would deſire you to be a mean to the King and Quéenes Maieſties, that I may be delivered from priſon, wherein I have béen kept a long ſpace, as to you my Lords it is not unknowne.

Lord William Haward gentle and favorable to Lady Elizabeth.

Lady Eliz. requeſted by Wincheſter to ſubmit her ſelf to the Quéens mercy.

When ſhe had ſpoken, Stephen Gardiner the Biſhop of Wincheſter knéeled down, and requeſted that ſhe would ſubmit her ſelfe to the Quéens Grace, and in ſo doing he had no doubt, but that her Maieſtie would be good to her. She made anſwer, that rather than ſhe would ſo do, ſhe would lie in priſon all the dayes of her life, adding that ſhe craved no mercy at her Maieſties hand, but rather deſired the law, if ever ſhe did offend her Maieſtie in thought, word, or déed: And beſides this in yéelding (quoth ſhe) I ſhould ſpeak againſt my ſelfe, and confeſſe my ſelfe to be an offendor, which I never was towards her Maieſtie, by occaſion whereof the King and the Quéen might ever hereafter conceive of me an evill opinion: And therefore I ſay, my Lords, it were better for me to lie in priſon for the truth, than to bée abroade and ſuſpected of my Prince. And ſo they departed, promiſing to declare her meſſage to the Quéene.

Anno 1558.

Lady Eliz. ſtandeth to be tried by the law.

On the next day the Biſhop of Wincheſter came againe unto her Grace, and knéeling down declared that the Quéene marvelled that ſhée would ſo ſtoutly uſe her ſelfe, not confeſſing that ſhée had offended: ſo that it ſhould ſéeme that the Quéens Maieſtie had wrongfully impriſoned her Grace.

Talke againe betwéen Wincheſter and Lady Elizabeth. Lady Elizabeth denieth to confeſſe any fault done to the Quéene.

Nay, quoth the Lady Elizabeth, it may pleaſe her to puniſh me as ſhe thinketh good.

Well quoth Gardiner, her Maieſtie willeth me to tell you, that you muſt tell another tale ere that you be ſet at liberty.

Her Grace anſwered, that ſhe had as liefe bee in priſon with honeſty and truth, as to be abroade, ſuſpected of her Maieſtie, and this that I have ſaid, I will (ſaid ſhe) ſtand unto, for I will never belye my ſelfe.

Wincheſter againe knéeled downe, and ſaid, Then your Grace hath the vantage of me and other the Lords for your wrong and long impriſonment.

What vantage I have (quoth ſhée) you know, taking God to record, I ſeeke no vantage at your hands for your ſo dealing with me, but God forgive you and mee alſo. With that the reſt kneeled, deſiring her Grace that all might bee forgotten, and ſo departed, ſhee being faſt locked up againe.

Lady Eliz. ſent for to the Quéene.

A ſevennight after the Queene ſent for her Grace at ten of the clocke in the night to ſpeake with her: for ſhe had not ſeene her in two yeares before. Yet for all that ſhee was amazed at the ſudden ſending for, thinking it had beene worſe than afterwards it proved, and deſired her Gentlemen and Gentlewomen to pray for her, for that ſhe could not tell whether ever ſhee ſhould ſee them againe or no.

At which time ſir Henry Benifield with Miſtris Clarencius comming in, her Grace was brought into the garden unto a ſtaires foote that went into the Queenes lodging, her Graces gentlewoman waiting upon her, her gentleman Uſher and her groomes going before with torches; where her gentlemen and gentlewomen being commanded to ſtay all ſaving one woman, Miſtris Clarencius conducted her to the Queenes bedchamber where her Maieſtie was.

Lady Eliz brought to the Quéenes bedchamber.

At the ſight of whom her Grace knéeled down, and deſired God to preſerve her Maieſty, not miſtruſting but that ſhee ſhould try her ſelfe as true a ſubiect towards her Maieſtie, as ever did any, and deſired her Maieſty even ſo to iudge of her; and ſaid, that ſhée ſhould not finde her to the contrary, whatſoever report otherwiſe had gone of her.

Talk betwéen the Quéene & Lady Elizabeth.

To whom the Quéen anſwered, You will not confeſſe your offence, but ſtand ſtoutly to your truth; I pray God it may ſo fall out.

If ti doth not (quoth the Lady Elizabeth) I requeſt neither favor nor pardon at your Maieſties hands. Well (ſaid the Queene) you ſtiffely ſtill perſevere in your truth. Be like you will not confeſſe but that you have been wrongfully puniſhed.

perſevers

I muſt not ſay ſo (if it pleaſe your Maieſtie) to you.

Why then (ſayd the Queene) belike you will to other.

Smal comfort at the queenes hand toward her ſiſter.

No, if it pleaſe your Maieſtie (quoth ſhe) I have borne the burden and muſt beare it. I humbly beſeech your Maieſtie to have a good opinion of me, and to thinke me to be your true ſubiect, not only from the beginning hitherto, but for ever, as long as life laſteth: and ſo they departed with very few comfortable words of the Queene, in Engliſh: but what ſhe ſayd in Spaniſh, God knoweth. It is thought that King Philip was there behind a cloth, and not ſeene, and that he ſhewed himſelfe a very friend in that matter. &c.

King Philip thought to be a friend to Lady Elizabeth.

Lady Eliz. by Gods providence ſet at liberty.

Sir H. Benifield diſcharged.

Thus her Grace departing, went to her lodging againe, and that day ſevennight was releaſed of ſir Henrie Benifield her gaoler (as ſhe termed him) and his ſouldiers, and ſo her grace being ſet at libertie from impriſonment, went into the Country, and had appointed to goe with her Sir Thomas Pope, one of Q. Maries Counſellors, and one of her Gentlemen Uſhers, Maſter Gage: and thus ſtraitely was ſhe looked to all Queene Maries time. And this is the diſcourſe of her highneſſe impriſonment.

Miſtris Ashley ſent to the fleet. 3 gentlewomen of Lady Elizabeth ſent to the Tower: Note the wonderfull working of the Lords providence in ſaving of Lady Eliz.

¶ Then there came to Lamheyre, M. Jerningham, and M. Noris Gentleman Uſher, Queene Maries men, who tooke away from her Grace Miſtreſſe Aſhley to the Fleete, and three other of her Gentlewomen to the Tower; which thing was no little trouble to her Grace, ſaying, that ſhe thought they would fetch all away at the end. But God be praiſed, ſhortly after was fetched away Gardiner through the mercifull providence of the Lords goodneſſe, by occaſion of whoſe opportune deceaſe (as is partly touched in this ſtorie before) the life of this excellent Princeſſe, the wealth of all England, was preſerved. For this is credibly to be ſuppoſed, that the ſayd wicked Gardiner of Wincheſter had long laboured his wits, and to this onely moſt principall marke bent all his deviſes, to take this our happie and deare ſovereigne out of the way, as both by his words and doings before notified, may ſufficiently appeare.

Lady Eliz. delivered by the death of Stephen Gardiner.

But ſuch was the gracious and favorable providence of the Lord, to the preſervation not onely of her royall Majeſtie, but alſo of the miſerable and woefull ſtate of this whole Iland, and poore ſubiects of the ſame, wherby the proud platformes and peeviſh practices of this wicked Achitophel prevailed not: but contrariwiſe, both he, and all the ſnares and trappes of his pernicious counſell laid againſt another, were turned to a net to catch himſelfe, according to the Proverb, Malum conſilium conſultori peſſimum.

How the Lord here began to work for Lady Elizabeth.

After the death of this Gardiner, followed the death alſo and drooping away of other her enemies, whereby by little and little her jeopardy decreaſed, feare diminiſhed, hope of comfort beganne to appeare as out of a darke cloud: and albeit as yet her Grace had no full aſſurance of perfect ſafetie, yet more gentle entertainement daily did grow unto her, till at length in the moneth of November, and ſeventeenth day of the ſame, three yeares after the death of Stephen Gardiner, followed the death of Queen Marie, as hereafter God granting ſhall be more declared.

A note of a ſtory declaring the malignant hearts of the papiſts toward Lady Elizabeth.

Although this hiſtorie following be not directly appertaining to the former matter, yet the ſame may here not unaptly be inſerted, for that it doth diſcover and ſhew forth the malicious hearts of the Papiſts toward this vertuous Queene our Sovereigne Lady in the time of Queene Marie her ſiſter, which is reported, as a truth credibly told, by ſundrie honeſt perſons, of whome ſome are yet alive, and doe teſtifie the ſame. The matter whereof is this.

Rob. Farrer of London a ſore enemy to Lady Elizabeth.

¶ Soone after the ſtir of Wiat and the troubles that happened to this Queene for that cauſe, it fortuned one Robert Farrer a Haberdaſher of London, dwelling neare unto Newgate market, in a certaine morning to bee at the Roſe Taverne (from whence he was ſeldome abſent) and falling to his common drinke, as hee was ever accuſtomed, and having in his companie three other companions like to himſelfe, it chanced the ſame time one Laurence Shiriffe Grocer, dwelling alſo not farre from thence, to come into the ſayd Taverne, and finding there the ſayd Farrer (to whom of long time hee had borne good will) ſate downe in the ſeate to drinke with him, and Farrer having in his full cups, and not having conſideration who were preſent, began to talke at large, and namely againſt the Lady Elizabeth, and ſaid, that Jill hath bin one of the chiefe doers of this rebellion of Wiat, and before all be done, ſhe and all the heretikes her partakers, ſhall well underſtand of it. Some of them hope that ſhe ſhall have the crowne, but ſhe and they (I truſt) that ſo hope, ſhall hop headleſſe, or be fried with fagots before ſhe come to it.

Laurence Shiriffe ſworne friend and ſervant to Lady Eliz. his Miſtreſſe.

Robert Farrer ralleth againſt Lady Elizabeth.

The part of a good truſty ſervant.

The foreſayd Laurence Shiriffe Grocer being then ſervant unto the Lady Elizabeth, and ſworne unto her Grace, could no longer forbeare his old acquaintance and neighbour Farrer in ſpeaking ſo unreverently of his Miſtreſſe, but ſayd unto him; Farrer, I have loved thee as a neighbour, and have had a good opinion of thee, but hearing of thee that I now heare, I defie thee; and I tell thee I am her Graces ſworne ſervant, and ſhee is a Princeſſe, and the daughter of a Noble King, and it evill becommeth thee to call her a Jill, and for thy ſo ſaying, I ſay thou art a knave, and I will complaine upon thee. Doe thy worſt ſayd Farrer: for that I ſaid, I will ſay againe, and ſo Shiriffe came from his company.

Robert Farrer complained of to the Commiſſioners but no redreſſe was had.

Shortly after the ſaid Shiriffe, taking an honeſt neighbor with him, went before the Commiſſioners to complaine; the which Commiſſioners ſate then at Boner the Biſhop of Londons houſe beſide Pauls, and there were preſent, Boner then being the chiefe Commiſſioner, the Lord Mordant, ſir John Baker, D. Darbiſhire Chancellor to the Biſhop, Doctor Storie, Doctor Harpsfield, and other.

The aforeſayd Shiriffe comming before them, declared the manner of the ſaid Rob. Farrers talk againſt the Lady Elizabeth. Boner anſwered, Peradventure you take him worſe than hee meant.

Yea my Lord, ſaid Doctor Storie, if you knew the man as I doe, you would ſay there is not a better Catholike, nor an honeſter man in the City of London.

Well, ſayd Shiriffe, my Lord ſhee is my gracious Lady and Miſtreſſe, and it is not to bee ſuffered that ſuch a Varlet as hee is ſhould call ſo honourable a Princeſſe by the name of a Jill: And I ſaw yeſterday in the Court that my Lord Cardinall Poole, meeting her in the Chamber of Preſence, kneeled downe on his knees and kiſſed her hand; and I ſaw alſo that King Philip meeting her, made her ſuch obeyſance, that his knee touched the ground; and then me thinketh it were too much to ſuffer ſuch a Varlet as this is, to call her Jill, & to wiſh them to hop headleſſe that ſhall wiſh her Grace to enioy the poſſeſſion of the crowne when God ſhall ſend it unto her, as in the right of her inheritance. Yea: ſtay there quoth Bonner. When God ſendeth it unto her, let her enjoy it. But truly (ſaid he) the man that ſpake the words that you have reported, meant nothing againſt the Lady Elizabeth your miſtreſſe, and no more do we: but he like an honeſt and zealous man feared the alteration of religion, which every good man ought to feare: and therefore (ſaid Boner) good man goe your waies home and report well of us toward your miſtreſſe, and we will ſend for Farrer and rebuke him for his raſh and undiſcreete words, and we truſt he will not do the like again. And thus Shiriffe came away, and Farrer had a flap with a Foxe taile.

How B. Bonner and D. Story bare with him that railed againſt Lady Elizabeth.

Now that ye may bee fully informed of the aforeſaid Farrer, whom Doctor Storie prayſed for ſo good a man, ye ſhall underſtand that the ſame Farrer having two daughters being handſome maidens, the elder of them for a ſumme of money hee himſelfe delivered to ſir Roger Cholmley to bee at his commandement, the other hee ſold to a Knight called ſir Willam Goddolphin to bee at his commandement; whom hee made his lackie, and ſo carried her with him, being apparelled in mans apparell, to Bolein, and the ſaid Farrer followed the campe. He alſo was a great and an horrible blaſphemer of God, and a common accuſer of honeſt and quiet men, alſo a common drunkard. And now I referre the life of theſe catholikes to your judgement, to thinke of them as you pleaſe.

Note the ungodly life of theſe catholiks

But of this matter enough, and too much. Now let us returne where we left before, which was at the death of Queene Marie. After whoſe deceaſe ſucceded her foreſayd ſiſter Ladie Elizabeth into the right of the crowne of England: who after ſo long reſtrainment, ſo great dangers eſcaped, ſuch bluſterous ſtormes overblowne, ſo many injuries digeſted and wrongs ſuſtained, by the mightie protection of our mercifull God, to our no ſmall comfort and commodity, hath beene exalted and erected out of thrall to libertie, out of danger to peace and quietneſſe, from dread to dignitie, from miſerie to majeſtie, from mourning to ruling: briefly, of a priſoner made a princeſſe, and placed in her throne Royall, proclaimed now Queene, with as many glad hearts of her ſubjects, as ever was any King or Queene in this realme before her, or ever ſhall bee (I dare ſay) hereafter.

Lady Eliz. proclaimed Queene the ſame day that Q. Mary died

The Lord make England thankful to him for his great beneſits

Touching whoſe flouriſhing ſtate, her Princely reigne and peaceable governement, with divers and ſundrie other things incident to the ſame, and eſpecially touching the great ſtirres and alterations which have happened in other forreigne Nations, and alſo partly among our ſelves here at home, forasmuch as the tractation hereof requireth another volume by it ſelfe, I ſhall therefore defer the Reader to the next booke or ſection inſuing; wherein (if the Lord ſo pleaſe to ſuſtaine mee with leave and life) I may have to diſcourſe of all and ſingular ſuch matters done and atchieved in theſe our latter dayes and memory, more at large.

Now then after theſe ſo great afflictions falling upon this Realme, from the firſt beginning of Queene Maries reigne, wherein ſo many men, women, and children were burned, manie impriſoned, and in priſons ſtarved, divers exiled, ſome ſpoyled of goods and poſſeſſions, a great number driven from houſe and home, ſo many weeping eyes, ſo many ſobbing hearts, ſo many children made fatherleſſe, ſo many fathers bereft of their wives and children, ſo many vexed in conſcience, and divers againſt conſcience conſtrained to recant; and in concluſion, never a good man almoſt in all the Realme but ſuffered ſomething during all the time of this bloudie perſecution; after all this (I ſay) now we are come at length (the Lord be praiſed) to the 17. day of November: which day as it brought to the perſecuted members of Chriſt reſt from their carefull mourning, ſo it eaſeth me ſomewhat likewiſe of my laborious writing, by the death I meane of Q. Marie. Who being long ſicke before, upon the ſaid 17. day of November, in the yeare above ſaid, about three or foure a clocke in the morning, yeelding her life to nature, and her kingdome to Queen Elizabeth her ſiſter.

Anno 1558.

Novemb. 17. Q. Mary endeth. Q. Elizabeth beginneth her reigne.

As touching the manner of whoſe death, ſome ſay that ſhee died of a Tympany, ſome (by her much ſighing before her death, ſuppoſed ſhee died of thought and ſorrow. Whereupon her Councell ſeeing her ſighing, and deſirous to know the cauſe, to the end they might miniſter the more ready conſolation unto her, feared, as they ſayd, that ſhe tooke that thought for the Kings Majeſty her huſband, which was gone from her. To whom ſhe anſwering againe, Indeed (ſaid ſhe) that may be one cauſe, but that is not the greateſt wound that pierceth my oppreſſed minde: but what that was ſhe would not expreſſe to them.

The manner of Q. Maries death.

Albeit, afterward ſhe opened the matter more plainly to M. Riſe and Miſtreſſe Clarentius (if it be true that they told me, which heard it of M. Riſe himſelfe) who then being moſt familiar with her, and moſt bold about her, told her that they feared ſhee tooke thought for King Philips departing from her. Not that only (ſaid ſhee) but when I am dead and opened, you ſhall finde Calice lying in my heart, &c. And here an end of Q. Marie, and of her perſecution.

Q. Maryes thought for the loſſe of Calice.

Of which Queen this truly may be affirmed, and left in ſtorie for a perpetuall memoriall or Epitaph for all Kings and Queenes that ſhall ſucceede her, to be noted, That before her never was read in ſtorie of any King or Queene of England ſince the time of King Lucius, under whom in time of peace, by hanging, heading, burning, and priſoning, ſo much Chriſtian blood, ſo many Engliſhmens lives were ſpilled within this Realm, as under the ſaid Q. Mary for the ſpace of foure yeares was to be ſeene, and I beſeech the Lord never may be ſeene hereafter.

More Engliſh bloud ſpilled in Q. Maries time, than ever was in any Kings reigne, before her.

A briefe declaration, ſhewing the unproſperous ſucceſſe of Q. Mary in perſecuting Gods people, and how mightily God wrought againſt her in all her affaires.

NOw, forasmuch as Queen Marie, during all the time of her reigne, was ſuch a vehement adverſarie and perſecutor againſt the ſincere profeſſors of Chriſt Jeſus and his Goſpel: for the which there be many which do highly magnifie and approve her doings therein, reputing her religion to bee ſound and catholike, and her proceedings to be moſt acceptable and bleſſed of almighty God: to the intent therefore, that all men may underſtand, how the bleſſing of the Lord God did not only not proceede with her proceedings, but contrariwiſe rather, how his manifeſt diſpleaſure ever wrought againſt her, in plaguing both her and her realme, and in ſubverting all her counſels and attempts, whatſoever ſhe tooke in hand, wee will beſtow a little time therein, to perpend and ſurvey the whole courſe of her doings and chievances, and conſider what ſucceſſe ſhe had in the ſame. Which being well conſidered, we ſhall never find any reigne of any Prince in this land, or any other,

The reigne of Q. Mary how unproſperous it was both to her, and to her realme in all reſpects.

Anno 1558.

ther, which had ever to ſhew in it (for the proporon of time) ſo many arguments of Gods great wrath and diſpleaſure, as was to bee ſeene in the reigne of this Queene Marie, whether we behold the ſhortneſſe of her time, or the unfortunate event of all her purpoſes, who ſeemed never to purpoſe any thing that came luckily to paſſe, neither did any thing frame to her purpoſe, whatſoever ſhe tooke in hand touching her owne private affaries.

Q. Mary never had good ſucceſſe in any thing ſhe went about.

Of good Kings we read in the Scripture, in ſhewing mercy and pitie, in ſeeking Gods will in his word, and ſubverting the monuments of Idolatrie, how God bleſſed their waies, encreaſed their honors, and mightily proſpered all their proceedings; as we ſee in K. David, Solomon, Ioſias, Ioſaphat, Ezechias, with ſuch other. Manaſſes made the ſtreets of Ieruſalem to ſwim with the bloud of his ſubiects, but what came of it the text doth teſtifie.

A good king alwaies maketh a flouriſhing Realme.

Of Queene Elizabeth, which now reigneth among us, this we muſt needes ſay, which we ſee, thct ſhee in ſparing the bloud, not onely of Gods ſervants, but alſo of Gods enemies, hath doubled now the reigne of Q. Mary her ſiſter, with ſuch abundance of peace and proſperity, that it is hard to ſay, whether the realme of England felt more of Gods wrath in Q. Maries time, or of Gods favor and mercie in theſe ſo bleſſed and peaceable daies of Q. Elizabeth.

Compariſon betweene the reigne of Q. Mary and Q Elizabeth.

Gamaliel ſpeaking his minde in the Councell of the Phariſees concerning Chriſts religion, gave this reaſon, That if it were of God, it ſhould continue, whoſoever ſayd nay; If it were not, it could not ſtand. So may it be ſaid of Q. Mary and her Romiſh religion, That if it were ſo perfect and catholike as they pretend, and the contrary faith of the Goſpellers were ſo deteſtable and hereticall as they make it; how commeth it then, that this ſo Catholike a Queene, ſuch a neceſſary pillar of his ſpouſe the Church, continued no longer, till ſhe had utterly rooted out of the land this hereticall generation? yea how chanced it rather, that almightie God, to ſpare theſe poore heretikes, rooted out Queene Mary ſo ſoone from her throne, after ſhee had reigned but onely five yeares and five moneths?

Gamaliels reaſon. Acts 5.

Now furthermore, how God bleſſed her waies and endeavors in the meane time, while ſhe thus perſecuted the true ſervants of God, remaineth to be diſcuſſed. Where firſt this is to bee noted, that when ſhee firſt began to ſtand for the title of the Crowne, and yet had wrought no reſiſtance againſt Chriſt and his Goſpel, but had promiſed her faith to the Suffolke men, to maintaine the religion left by King Edward her brothr, ſo long God went with her, advanced her, and by the meanes of the Goſpellers brought her to the poſſeſſion of the Realme. But after that ſhe breaking her promiſe with God and man, beganne to take part with Stephen Gardiner, and had given over her ſupremacie unto the Pope, by and by Gods bleſſing left her, neither did any thing well thrive with her afterward during the whole time of her Regiment.

Q. Mary proſpered ſo long as ſhe went not againſt the Lord.

Q. Maries promiſe to the Goſpellers broken.

For firſt incontinently the faireſt and greateſt ſhip ſhe had, called great Harry, was burned; ſuch a veſſell as in all theſe parts of Europe was not to be matched.

The ſhip called the great Harry burned.

Then would ſhe needs bring in King Philip, and by her ſtrange marriage with him, make the whole Realme of England ſubiect unto a ſtranger. And all that notwithſtanding, that ſhee either did or was able to doe, ſhee could not bring to paſſe to ſet the crowne of England upon his head. With King Philip alſo came in the Pope and his Popiſh Maſſe; with whom alſo her purpoſe was to reſtore againe the Monks and Nunnes unto their places, neyther lacked there all kinde of attempts to the uttermoſt of her ability: and yet therein alſo GOD ſtopt her of her will, that it came not forward. After this, what a dearth happened in her time here in her land? the like whereof hath not lightly in England beene ſeene, inſomuch that in ſundrie places her poore ſubiects were faine to feed of acornes for want of corne.

Q. Maries marriage with a ſtranger.

Q. Mary diſappointed of her purpoſe in crowning K. Philip.

Q. Mary ſtopped of her will in reſtoring Abbeylands.

Furthermore, where other Kings are wont to be renowned by ſome worthie victorie and prowes by them atchieved, let us now ſee what valiant victorie was gotten in this Queene Maries daies. King Edward the ſixth her bleſſed brother, how many rebellions did he ſuppreſſe in Devonſhire, in Northfolke, in Oxfordſhire, and elſe where? what a famous victory in his time was gotten in Scotland, by the ſingular working (no doubt) of Gods bleſſed hand, rathar than by any expectation of man? King Edward the third (which was the eleventh King from the conqueſt) by Princely puiſſance purchaſed Calice unto England, which hath been kept Engliſh ever ſince, till at length came Queen Mary, the eleventh likewiſe from the ſaid King Edward, which loſt Calice from England again: ſo that the winnings of this Queen were very ſmall, what the loſſes were let other men iudge,

The victory of K. Edward 6. in Scotland.

The ill luck of Q. Mary in loſing of Calice.

The 11. K: from the Conqueſt got Calice and the 11 againe after him loſt it.

Hitherto the affaires of Queen Marie have had no great good ſucceſſe, as you have heard. But never worſe ſucceſſe had any woman, than had ſhee in her childe-birth. For ſeeing one of theſe two muſt needes bee granted, that eyther ſhee was with childe or not with childe: if ſhe were with childe and did travell, why was it not ſeene? if ſhe were not, how was all the Realme deluded? And in the meane while, where were all the prayers, the ſolemne proceſſions, the devout Maſſes of the Catholike Clergy? why did they not prevaile with God, if their religion were ſo godly as they pretend? If their Maſſes Ex opere operato be able to fetch Chriſt from heaven, and to reach downe to Purgatory: how chanced then they could not reach to the Queenes chamber, to help her in her travell, if ſhe had been with childe indeed? if not, how then came it to paſſe, that all the Catholike Church of England did ſo erre, and was ſo deeply deceived? Q. Mary after theſe manifold plagues and corrections, which might ſufficiently admoniſh her of Gods diſfavour provoked againſt her, would not yet ceaſe her perſecution, but ſtill continued more and more to revenge her Catholike Zeale upon the Lords faithfull people, ſetting fire to their poore bodies by doſens and halfe doſens together. Whereupon Gods wrathfull indignation, increaſing more and more againſt her, ceaſed not to touch her more neere with private misfortunes and calamities. For after that hee had taken from her the fruit of children (which chiefly and above all things ſhee deſired) then he bereft her of that, which of all earthly things ſhould have been her chiefe ſtay of honor, and ſtaffe of comfort, that is, withdrew from her the affection and company even of her owne huſband, by whoſe marriage ſhe had promiſed before to her ſelfe whole heapes of ſuch ioy and felicity: but now the omnipotent governor of all things ſo turned the wheele of her owne ſpinning againſt her, that her high buildings of ſuch ioyes and felicities came all to a Caſtle come down, her hopes being confounded, her purpoſes diſappointed, and ſhee now brought to deſolaton; who ſeemed neither to have the favor of God, nor the hearts of her ſubiects, nor yet the love of her huſband; who neither had fruit by him while ſhe had him, neyther could now enjoy him whom ſhe had married, neither yet was in liberty to marry any other whom ſhée might enjoy. Marke here (Chriſtian Reader) the wofull adverſitie of this Quéene, and learne withall what the Lord can do when mans wilfulneſſe will néeds reſiſt him, and will not be ruled.

The final end and death of Q. Mary.

At laſt, when all theſe faire admonitions would take no place with the Quéene, nor remove her to revoke her bloudy lawes, nor to ſtay the tyrannie of her Prieſts, nor yet to ſpare her owne ſubjects, but that the poore ſervants of God were drawne daily by heapes moſt pitifully as ſhéep to the ſlaughter, it ſo pleaſed the heavenly Majeſtie of almightie God, when no other remedie would ſerve, by death to cut her off, which in her life ſo little regarded the life of others, giving her throne, which ſhée abuſed to the deſtruction of Chriſts Church and people, to another who more temperately and quietly could guide the ſame, after ſhée had reigned here the ſpace of five yeares and five moneths. The ſhortneſſe of which years and reigne, ſcarce we finde in any other ſtory of King or Quéene ſince the Conqueſt or before (being come to their owne government) ſave only in King Richard the third.

An admonition to all Chriſtian rulers.

And thus much here, as in the cloſing up of this ſtorie, I thought to inſinuate, touching the unluckie and ruefull reigne of Quéene Marie: not for any detraction to her place and ſtate royall, whereunto ſhée was called of the Lord, but to this only intent and effect, that forſomuch as ſhée would néeds ſet her ſelfe ſo confidently to worke and ſtrive againſt the Lord and his procéedings, all readers and rulers may not onely ſée how the Lord did worke againſt her therefore, but alſo by her may be advertiſed and learne what a perillous thing it is for men and women in authoritie, upon blinde zeale and opinion, to ſtirre up perſecution in Chriſts Church, to the effuſion of Chriſtian bloud, leſt it prove in the end with them (as it did here) that while they thinke to perſecute heretikes, they ſtumble at the ſame ſtone as did the Jewes in perſecuting Chriſt and his true members to death, to their own confuſion and deſtruction.

The ſevere puniſhment of God upon the perſecutors of his people and enemies to his Word, with ſuch alſo as have beene blaſphemers, contemners, and mockers of his Religion.

A treatiſe of Gods ſevere puniſhment againſt cruel perſecutors, and enemies to his word.

Leaving now Quéene Marie, being dead and gone, I come to them which under her were the chiefe miniſters and doers in this perſecution, the Biſhops (I meane) and Prieſts of the Clergy to whom Quéene Marie gave all the execution of her power, as did Quéene Alexandra to the Phariſées after the time of the Machabées. Of whom Joſephus thus writeth, Ipſa ſolum nomen regium ferebat, cæterum omnem regni poteſtatem Phariſæi poſſidebant: that is, She only retained to her ſelfe the name and title of the Kingdome, but all her power ſhe gave to the Phariſées to poſſeſſe, &c. Touching which Prelates and Prieſts here is to be noted in like ſort the wonderfull and miraculous providence of almightie God, which as hée abridged the reigne of their Quéene, ſo he ſuffered them not to eſcape unviſited: firſt beginning with Stephen Gardiner the Arch-perſecutor of Chriſts Church, whom he tooke away about the middeſt of the Quéenes reigne. Of whoſe poiſoned life, and ſtincking end, forſomuch as ſufficient hath béen touched before, I ſhall not néed here to make any new rehearſall thereof.

Anno 1558.

Gods puniſhment upon D. Morgan B. of S. Davids.

After him dropped other away alſo, ſome before the death of Quéene Marie, and ſome after; as Morgan Biſhop of Saint Davids, who ſitting upon the condemnation of the bleſſed Martyr Biſhop Farrer, and unjuſtly uſurping his roome, not long after was ſtricken by Gods hand after ſuch a ſtrange ſort, that his meat would not goe downe, but riſe and picke up againe, ſometime at his mouth, ſometime blown out at his noſe moſt horrible to behold, and ſo hée continued till his death. Where note moreover that when Maſter Leyſon, being then ſheriffe at Biſhop Farrers burning, had ſet away the cattell of the ſaid Biſhop from his ſervants houſe called Matthew Harbottell, into his own cuſtodie, the cattell comming into the ſheriffes ground, divers of them would never eate meat, but lay bellowing and roaring, and ſo dyed.

A note of wrong-gotten goods.

Juſtice Morgan ſtricken with madnes.

This foreſaid Biſhop Morgan above mentioned, bringeth me alſo in remembrance of Juſtice Morgan, who ſate upon the death of the Lady Jane, and not long after the ſame fell mad, and was bereft of his wits, and ſo died, having ever in his mouth, Lady Jane, Lady Jane, &c.

D. Dunning a cruel chancellor ſtricken with ſudden death.

Before the death of Q. Mary died D. Dunning the bloudy and wretched Chancellor of Norwich, who, after he had moſt rigorouſly condemned and murdered ſo many ſimple and faithful Saints of the Lord, continued not long himſelfe, but in the middeſt of his rage in Q. Maries dayes died in Lincolnſhire, being ſuddenly taken (as ſome ſay) ſitting in his chaire.

The ſudden death of Berry a commiſſary in Northfolke.

The like ſudden death fell alſo upon Berrie Commiſſary in Northfolke, who (as is before ſhewed in the ſtory of Tho. Hudſon) four daies after Q. Maries death, when he had made a great feaſt, and had one of his Concubines there, comming home from the Church after Evenſong, where he had miniſtred Baptiſme the ſame time, betwéene the Church-yard and his houſe ſuddenly fell downe to the ground with a heavy groane, and never ſtirred after, neither ſhewed any one token of repentance.

Gods ſtroke upon Doctor Thornton B. or Suffragan of Dover.

What a ſtroke of Gods hand was brought upon the cruell perſecutor of the holy and harmleſſe Saints of the Lord, Biſhop Thornton, Suffragan of Dover, who after hée had exerciſed his cruell tyranny upon ſo many godly men at Canterbury, at length comming upon a ſaturday from the Chapter houſe at Canterbury to Borne, and there upon ſunday following looking upon his men playing at the bowles, fell ſuddenly in a Palſey, and ſo had to bed, was willed to remember God: Yea, ſo I do (ſaid he) and my Lord Cardinall too, &c.

Another ſuffragan of Dover brake his necke after he had received the Cardinals bleſſing.

After him ſucceeded another Biſhop or Suffragan ordained by the foreſaid Cardinall. It is reported that he had béene Suffragan before to Boner, who, not long after being made Biſhop or Suffragan of Dover, brake his necke falling downe a paire of ſtaires in the Cardinals Chamber at Gréenwich, as he had received the Cardinals bleſſing.

Among other plentifull and ſundrie examples of the Lords judgement and ſeverity practiſed upon the cruell perſecutors of his people, that is not the leaſt that followeth, concerning the ſtorie of one William Fenning, the effect and circumſtance of which matter is this.

John Cooper of the age of 44. years, dwelling at Watſam in the County of Suffolke, being by Science a Carpenter, a man of very honeſt report and a good houſe-keeper, a harbourer of ſtrangers that travelled for conſcience, and one that favoured religion, and thoſe that were religious, was of honeſt converſation and good life, hating all Popiſh and Papiſticall traſh.

Anno 1558.

This man being at home in his houſe, there came unto him one William Fenning, a ſerving man, dwelling in the ſayd Towne of Watſam, and underſtanding that the ſaid Cooper had a couple of faire Bullocks, did deſire to buy them of him; which Cooper told him that hee was loath to ſell them, for that he had brought them up for his owne uſe, and if he ſhould ſell them, he then muſt be compelled to buy other, and that he would not doe.

When Fenning ſaw he could not get them (for he had often aſſayed the matter) hee ſaid, hee would ſit as much in his light, and ſo departed, and went and accuſed him of high Treaſon. The words he was charged with were theſe, How he ſhould pray, if God would not take away Queene Marie, that then the Divell would take her away. Of theſe words did this Fenning charge him before ſir Henrie Doiell Knight (unto whom hee was carried by M. Timperley of Hincleſam in Suffolke, and one Grimwood of Lowſhaw Conſtable) which words Cooper flatly denied; and ſaid he never ſpake them: but that could not helpe.

Notwithſtanding, hee was arraigned therefore at Berry before ſir Clement Higham, at a Lent Aſſiſe, and there this Fenning brought two naughty men that witneſſed the ſpeaking of the foreſaid words, whoſe names were Richard White of Watſam, and Grimwood of Hitcham, in the ſaid Countie of Suffolk. Whoſe teſtimonies were received as truth, although this good man John Cooper had ſaid what hee could to declare himſelfe innocent therein, but to no purpoſe, God knoweth. For his life was determined, as in the end appeared by ſir Clement Highams words, who ſaid hee ſhould not eſcape, for an example to all heretikes, as indeed he throughly performed. For immediately hee was judged to bee hanged, drawne, and quartered, which was executed upon him very ſhortly after, to the great griefe of many a good heart. Here good Cooper is bereft of his life, and leaves behinde him alive his wife and nine children, with goods and cattell, to the value of three hundred markes, the which ſubſtance was all taken away by the ſayd ſir Henrie Doiell ſheriffe, but his wife and poore children left to the wide world in their clothes, and ſuffered not to enjoy one peny of that they had ſore laboured for, unleſſe they made friends to buy it with mony of the ſaid ſheriffe, ſo cruell and greedie was he and his officers upon ſuch things as were there left.

The judgment of God upon Grimwood.

Well, now this innocent man is dead, his goods ſpoyled, his wife and children left deſolate and comfortleſſe, and all things huſht, and nothing feared of any part: yet the Lord who ſurely doth revenge the guiltleſſe bloud, would not ſtill ſo ſuffer it, but began at the length to puniſh it himſelfe. For in the harveſt after, the ſayd Grimwood of Hitcham one of the witneſſes before ſpecified, as hee was in his labour ſtaking up a goffe of corne, having his health, and fearing no perill, ſuddenly his bowels fell out of his body, and immediately moſt miſerably hee died; ſuch was the terrible judgement of God, to ſhew his diſpleaſure againſt his bloudy act, and to warne the reſt by theſe his judgements to repentance. The Lord grant us to honor the ſame, for his mercies ſake. Amen.

This foreſayd Fenning, who was the procurer of this tyrannie againſt him, is yet alive, and is now a Miniſter; which if he be, I pray God he may ſo repent that fact, that he may declare himſelfe hereafter ſuch a one as may well anſwer to his vocation accordingly.

But ſince wee have heard that he is no changeling, but continueth ſtill in his wickedneſſe, and therefore preſented before the worſhipfull Maſter Humerſton Eſquire and Juſtice of Peace and Coram, for that hee had talke with ſome of his friends (as hee thought) how many honeſt women (to their great infamie) were in the Pariſh of Wenſthaſton, wherein hee is now Vicar reſident: wherefore he was commanded the next ſunday enſuing, to aſke all the Pariſh forgivenes upon his knees openly in ſervice time, which he did in Wenſthaſton Church before ſayd, and moreover the aboveſaid Fenning is reported to bee more like a ſhifter than a Miniſter.

A terrible example of Gods ſevere puniſhment upon one Nightingal, Parſon of Crondal in Kent.

To theſe examples alſo may be added the terrible judgement of God upon the Parſon at Crondal in Kent, who upon Shroveſunday, having received the Popes pardon from Cardinall Poole, came to his Pariſh, and exhorted the people to receive the ſame, as he had done himſelfe; ſaying that he ſtood now ſo cleere in conſcience as when he was firſt borne, and cared not now if he ſhould die the ſame houre, in the cleereneſſe of his conſcience; whereupon being ſuddenly ſtricken by the hand of God, and leaning a little on the one ſide, immediately ſhrunke downe in the Pulpit, and ſo was found dead, ſpeaking not one word more. Reade before.

D. Geffery Chancellor of Salisbury.

Not long before the death of Queene Marie died Doctor Capon Biſhop of Saliſburie. About the which time alſo followed the unprepared death of Doctor Geffrey, Chancellor of Saliſburie, who in the midſt of his buildings, ſuddenly being taken by the mighty hand of God, yeelded his life, which had ſo little pity of other mens lives before. Concerning whoſe cruelty partly mention is made before.

As touching moreover this foreſaid Chancellor, here is to be noted, that he departing upon a ſaturday, the next day before the ſame hee had appointed to call before him 90. perſons and not ſo few, to examine them by Inquiſition, had not the goodnes of the Lord, and his tender providence thus prevented him with death, providing for his poore ſervants in time.

And now (to come from prieſts to lay men) we have to find in them alſo no leſſe terrible demonſtrations of Gods heavy judgement upon ſuch as have bin vexers and perſecutors of his people.

M. Woodroffe a cruel ſheriffe plagued.

Before in the ſtorie of M. Bradford mention was made of Maſter Woodroffe, who being the ſherieffe, uſed much to rejoyce at the death of the poore ſaints of Chriſt, and ſo hard he was in his office, that when Maſter Rogers was in the cart going toward Smithfield, and in the way his children were brought unto him, the people making a lane for them to come; Maſter Woodroffe bade the car-mans head ſhould bee broken for ſtaying his cart. But what happened? Hee was not come out of his office the ſpace of a weeke, but he was ſtricken by the ſudden hand of God, the one halfe of his bodie in ſuch ſort, that he lay benummed and bedred, not able to move himſelfe but as he was lifted of other, and ſo continued in that infirmity the ſpace of ſeven or eight yeares, till his dying day.

Reade before. The betrayer of George Eagles plagued.

Likewiſe touching Ralph Lardin the betrayer of George Eagles, it is thought of ſome, that the ſayd Ralph afterward was attached himſelfe, arraigned, and hanged.

Who, being at the barre, had theſe words before the Judges there, and a great multitude of people, This is moſt juſtly fallen upon me, ſaith he, for that I have betrayed the innocent bloud of a good and juſt man George Eagles, who was here condemned in the time of Queene Maries reign through my procurement, who ſold his bloud for a little money. Not much unlike ſtroke of theſe ſeverally was ſhewed upon W. Swallow of Chelmeſford, and his wife, alſo upon Richard Potto, and Juſtice Browne, cruell perſecutors of the ſaid George Eagles, concerning whoſe ſtorie reade before.

Among other perſecutors alſo came to our hands the cruelty of one M. Swingfield an Aldermans Deputie about Thames ſtreete, who hearing one Angels wife, a midwife that kept her ſelfe from their Popiſh Church, to be at the labor of one Miſtreſſe Walter at Crooked lane end, tooke three other with him, and beſet the houſe about, and tooke her and carried her to Boners officers, bigge with childe, eight and twentie weekes gone, who layd her in Lollards Tower; where, the ſame day ſhee came in, through feare and a fall at her taking, ſhe was delivered of a man childe, and could have no women with her in that needfull time. Lying there five weekes, ſhee was delivered under ſureties by friendſhip, and D. Story heareing thereof charged her with felony, and ſo ſent her to Newgate. The cauſe was, for that ſhe had a woman at her houſe in her labour that dyed, and the childe alſo, and ſo hee charged her with their death.

Gods puniſhment upon M. Swingfield & other which bewrayed one Angels wife.

But when ſir Roger Cholmley heard her tell her tale, he delivered her; and not much more than ten weekes after, if it were ſo long, died the ſayd Maſter Swingfield, and the other three that came to take her.

A ſtory of Burton, bailiffe of Crowland, how he was plagued for ſetting up Maſſe.

Becauſe ſome there bee, and not a few, which have ſuch a great devotion in ſetting up the Popiſh Maſſe, I ſhall deſire them to marke well this ſtory following. There was a certaine Bailiffe of Crowland in Lincolnſhire named Burton, who pretending an earneſt friendſhip to the Goſpel in K. Edwards dates, in outward ſhew at leaſt (although inwardly hee was a Papiſt or Atheiſt, and well knowne to be a man of a wicked and adulterous life) ſet forth the Kings proceedings luſtily, till the time that King Edward was dead and Queene Marie placed quietly in her eſtate.

Then perceiving by the firſt proclamation concerning religion, how the world was like to turn, the Bailiffe turned his religion likewiſe; and ſo hee moved the Pariſh to ſhew themſelves the Queenes friends, and to ſet up the Maſſe ſpeedily. Nevertheleſſe, the moſt ſubſtantiall of the Pariſh marvelling much at the Bailiffes inconſtant lightneſſe, conſidering alſo his abominable life, and having no great devotion unto his requeſt, knowing moreover that their duty and friendſhip to the Queene ſtood not in ſetting up the Maſſe, ſpared to provide for it, as long as they might: but the Bailiffe called on them ſtill in the Queenes name.

At laſt, when he ſaw his words were not regarded, and purpoſing to winne his ſpurres by playing the man in the Maſſes behalfe and the Queenes, hee got him to the Church upon a Sunday morning, and when the Curate was beginning the Engliſh ſervice, according to the ſtatute ſet forth by King Edward the ſixth, the Bailiffe commeth in a great rage to the Curate, and ſaith, Syrra, will you not ſay Maſſe? buckle your ſelfe to maſſe you knave, or by Gods bloud I ſhall ſheathe my dagger in your ſhoulder. The poore Curate for feare ſettled himſelfe to Maſſe.

Burton earneſt in ſetting up the maſſe.

Not long after this, the Bailiffe rode from home upon certaine buſineſſe, accompanied with one of his neighbors, and as they came riding together upon the Fennebank homeward again, a Crow ſitting in a Willow tree tooke her flight over his head, ſinging after her wonted note, knave, knave, and withall let fall upon his face, ſo that her excrements ran from the top of his noſe downe to his beard.

The poiſoned ſent and ſavor whereof ſo noyed his ſtomak, that he never ceaſed vomiting untill he came home, wherewith his heart was ſo ſore and his bodie ſo diſtempered, that for extreme ſickneſſe he got him to bed, and ſo lying, hee was not able for the ſtinch in his ſtomack and painfull vomiting, to receive any reliefe of meat or drink, but cried out ſtill, ſorrowfully complaining of that ſtinke, and with no ſmall oathes curſed the Crow that poiſoned him. To make ſhort, hee continued but a few dayes, but with extreme paine of vomiting and crying, he deſperately dyed, without any token of repentance of his former life.

The ſtinking death of a popiſh maſſemonger.

Reported and teſtified for a certainty, by divers of his neighbours, both honeſt and credible perſons.

Of the martyrdome of James Abbes, reade before.

Of James Abbes Martyr, ye heard before. In the time of whoſe martyrdome, what befell upon a wicked railer againſt him, now ye ſhall further underſtand. Whereby all ſuch railing perſecutors may learne to feare Gods hand, and to take heede how or what they ſpeake againſt his ſervants. As this James Abbes was ledde by the Sheriffe toward his execution, divers poore people ſtood in the way, and asked their almes. Hee then having no money to give them, and deſirous yet to diſtribute ſomething amongſt them, did pull off all his apparell ſaving his ſhirt, and gave the ſame unto them, to ſome one thing, to ſome another; in the giving whereof he exhorted them to bee ſtrong in the Lord, and as faithfull followers of Chriſt, to ſtand ſtedfaſt unto the truth of the Goſpel, which he (through Gods help) would then in their ſight ſeale and confirme with his bloud. Whiles hee was thus charitably occupied, and zealouſly inſtructing the people, a ſervant of the Sheriffes going by and hearing him, cried out aloude unto them, and blaſphemouſly ſayd, Beleeve him not good people. Hee is an heretike and a mad man, out of his wit: beleeve him not, for it is hereſie that hee ſayth. And as the other continued in his godly admonitions, ſo did this wicked wretch ſtill blow forth his blaſphemous exclamations, untill they came unto the ſtake where hee ſhould ſuffer. Unto the which this conſtant Martyr was tied, and in the end cruelly burned, as in his ſtorie more fully is already declared.

A ſtory to be noted of al railing perſecutors.

The Sheriffes ſervant vilely railing againſt James Abbes.

But immediately after the fire was put unto him (ſuch was the fearefull ſtroke of Gods juſtice upon this blaſphemous railer) that hee was there preſently, in the ſight of all the people, ſtricken with a frenzie, wherewith he had before moſt railingly charged that good Martyr of God, who in this furious rage and madneſſe caſting off his ſhooes, with all the reſt of his clothes, cried out unto the people, and ſaid, Thus did James Abbes the true ſervant of GOD, who is ſaved, but I am damned. And thus ranne hee round about the Towne of Burie, ſtill crying out, that James Abbes was a good man and ſaved, but he was damned.

A fearefull example of Gods righteous judgement againſt the Sheriffes ſervant railing againſt James Abbes.

The Sheriffe then being amazed, cauſed him to be taken and tied in a darke houſe, and by force compelled him againe to put on his clothes, thinking thereby within a while to bring him to ſome quietnes. But he (all that notwithſtanding) as ſoone as they were gone, continued his former raging, and caſting off his clothes, cried as he did before, James Abbes is the ſervant of God and is ſaved, but I am damned.

Example how popery bringeth to deſperation.

At length he was tied in a cart, and brought home unto his Maſters houſe, and within halfe a yeare or thereabouts, he being at the point of death, the Prieſt of the Pariſh was ſent for: who comming unto him, brought with him the Crucifixe, and their houſeling hoſt of the altar. Which geare when the poore wretch ſaw, hee cried out of the Prieſt, and defied all that baggage, ſaying, that the Prieſt, with ſuch other as he was, was the cauſe of his damnation, and that James Abbes was a good man and ſaved. And ſo ſhortly after he died.

Coxe the Promoter ſuddenly died.

Coxe and earneſt Proteſtant in K. Edwards dayes, and in Q. Maries time a Papiſt and a Promoter, going well and in health to bed (as it ſeemed) was dead before the morning. Teſtified by divers of the neighbors.

Alexander the cruel keeper of Newgate, died a rotten death.

Alexander the Keeper of Newgate, a cruell enemy to thoſe that lay there for religion, dyed very miſerably, being ſo ſwollen, that hee was more like a monſter than a man, and ſo rotten within, that no man could abide the ſmell of him. This cruell wretch, to haſten the poore lambs to the ſlaughter, would goe to Boner, Story, Cholmley, and other, crying out, Rid my priſon, rid my priſon, I am too much peſtered with theſe heretikes.

The ſudden death of James, Alexanders ſon.

The ſonne of the ſayd Alexander called James, having left unto him by his father great ſubſtance, within three yeares waſted all to nought: and when ſome marvelled how hee ſpent thoſe goods ſo faſt: O ſaid he, evill gotten, evill ſpent; and ſhortly after as hee went in Newgate market, hee fell downe ſuddenly, and there wretchedly died.

John Peter Alexanders ſonne in law rotted away.

John Peter, ſonne in law to this Alexander, an horrible blaſpemer of God, and no leſſe cruell to the ſaid priſoners, rotted away, and ſo moſt miſerably dyed. Juſtice Lelond perſecutor, plagued. Rob. Baulding perſecutor.

With theſe I might inferre the ſudden death of Juſtice Lelond perſecutor of Jeffrey Hurſt, mentioned before.

Alſo the death of Rob. Baulding ſtricken with lightening at the taking of William Seaman, whereupon he pined away and dyed: the ſtory of the which W. Seaman ſee before.

Beard the Promoter. Rob. Blomfield perſecutor. The judgement of God upon John Rockwood, Lady Honor, and George Bradway perſecutors in Calice.

Likewiſe the wretched end of Beard the Promoter.

Moreover, the conſuming away of Robert Blomfield, perſecutor of William Browne, ſpecified before.

Further, to returne a little backward to King Henries time, here might be induced alſo the example of John Rockwood, who in his horrible end cried all too late, with the ſame words which hee had uſed before in perſecuting Gods poore people of Calice.

Alſo the judgment of God upon Lady Honor a perſecutor, and of George Bradway a falſe accuſer, both bereft of their with.

The juſt puniſhment of God upon ſir Ralfe Ellerker perſecutor.

And what a notable ſpectacle of Gods revenging judgement have we to conſider in ſir Ralph Ellerker, who as he was deſirous to ſee the heart taken out of Adam Damlyp, whom they moſt wrongfully put to death: ſo ſhortly after the ſaid ſir Ralphe Ellerker being ſlaine of the Frenchmen, they all to mangling him, after they had cut off his privy members, would not ſo leave him, before they might ſee his heart cut out of his body.

The ſudden death of D. Forford.

Doctor Forford, Chancellor to B. Stokeſley, a crull perſecutor, died ſuddenly.

Pavier a perſecutor hanged himſelfe.

Pavier or Pavy, towne Clarke of London, and a bitter enemy to the Goſpel, hanged himſelfe.

Stephen Gardiner, hearing of the pitifull end of Judge Hales after he had drowned himſelfe, taking occaſion thereby, called the following and profeſſion of the Goſpel a doctrine of deſperation. But as Judge Hales never fell into that inconvenience before he had conſented to Papiſtry: ſo whoſo well conſidereth the end of Doctor Pendleton (which at his deathfull ſore repented that ever he had yeelded to the doctrine of the Papiſts, as he did) and likewiſe the miſerable end of the moſt part of the Papiſts beſides, and eſpecially of Stephen Gardiner himſelfe (who after ſo long profeſſing the doctrine of Papiſtry, when there came a Biſhop to him in his death bed, and put him in remembrance of Peter denying his Maſter: he anſwering againe, ſaid, that he had denyed with Peter, but never repented with Peter, and ſo both ſtinkingly and unrepentantly died) will ſay, as Stephen Gardiner alſo himſelfe gave an evident example of the ſame to all men, to underſtand that Popery rather is a doctrine of deſperation, procuring the vengeance of almighty God to them that wilfully do cleave unto it.

The ſtinking end of Ste. Gardiner proveth popery and not the goſpel to be the doctrine of deſperation.

Gods juſt ſtroke upon John Fiſher B. of Rocheſter, and ſir Tho. More.

John Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter, and ſir Thomas More, in King Henries time, after they had brought John Frith. Baifield and Baynham, and divers other to their death, what great reward wan they thereby with almighty God? Did not the ſword of Gods vengeance light upon their owne necks ſhortly after, and they themſelves made a publike ſpectacle at the tower hill of bloudy death, which before had no compaſſion of the lives of others? Thus ye ſee the ſaying of the Lord to be true, Hee that ſmiteth with the ſword, ſhall periſh with the ſword, 2 Mach. 3.

Anno 1558.

Biſhops that dyed after Q. Mary.

“ Note that B. Tonſtall in Q. Maries time was no great bloudy perſecutor. For maſter Ruſſel a preacher was before him and D. Himner his Chancellor would have had him examined more particularly. The B. ſtayed him, ſaying, Hitherto we have had a good report among our neighbors, I pray you bring not this mans bloud upon my head.

Biſhops:
- John Chriſtopherſon Biſhop of Chicheſter.
- Hopton Biſhop of Norwich.
- Morgan B. of Saint Davids.
- John White B. of Wincheſter.
- Ralfe Bain B. of Lichfield & Coventry
- Owes Oglethorpe B. of Carlile.
- “ Cutbert Tonſtall B. of Durham.
- Thomas Rainolds Elect of Hereford, after his deprivation dyed in priſon.

Beſides theſe Biſhops above named, firſt died at the ſame time.

- D. Weſton Deane of Weſtminſter, afterward Deane of Windſore, chiefe diſputer againſt Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer.
- M. Slethurſt, Maſter of Trinity Colledge in Oxford, who died in the Tower.
- Seth Holland Deane of Worceſter, and warden of All-ſoule Colledge in Oxford.
- William Copinger, Monke of Weſtminſter, who bare the great Seale before Stephen Gardiner, after the death of the ſaid Gardiner, made himſelfe Monk in the houſe of Weſtminſter, and ſhortly after fell mad, and died in the Tower.
- D. Steward Deane of Wincheſter.

A note of D. Weſton.

¶ To behold the working of Gods judgements, it is wondrous. In the firſt yeare of Q. Mary, when the Clergy was aſſembled in the Convocation houſe, and alſo afterward, when the diſputation was in Oxford againſt Doctor Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer, he that had ſeene then Doctor Weſton the Prolocutor in his ruffe, how highly he took upon him in the ſchooles, and how ſtoutly he ſtood in the Popes quarrell againſt ſimple and naked truth, full little would have thought, and leſſe did he thinke himſelfe (I dare ſay) that his glory and lofty lookes ſhould have beene brought downe ſo ſoone, eſpecially by them of his owne religion, whoſe part hee ſo doubtily defended. But ſuch is the reward and end commonly of them, who preſumptuouſly oppoſe themſelves to ſtrive againſt the Lord, as by the example of this Doctorly Prolocutor right well may appeare. For not long after the diſputation above mentioned againſt Biſhop Cranmer and his fellowes, God ſo wrought againſt the ſaid Doctor Weſton, that hee fell in great diſpleaſure with Cardinall Poole and other biſhops, becauſe he was unwilling to give up his Deanry and houſe of Weſtminſter unto the Monkes and religious men, whom indeed he favoured not, although in other things he maintained the church of Rome. Who notwithſtanding at laſt, through importunate ſute, gave up Weſtminſter, and was Deane of Windſore; where not long after, he was apprehended in adultery, and for the ſame was by the Cardinall put from all his ſpirituall livings.

D. Weſton out of favour with Papiſts.

D. Weſton taken in adultry

D. Weſton appealed to Rome.

Wherefore he appealed to Rome, and purpoſed to have fled out of the Realme, but was taken by the way, and committed to the Tower of London and there remained untill Q. Elizabeth was proclaimed Queene, at which time hee being delivered, fell ſicke and died. The common talke was, that if he had not ſo ſuddenly ended his life, he would have opened and revealed the purpoſe of the chiefe of the Clergie, meaning the Cardinall, which was to have taken up K. Henries body at Windſore, and to have burned it. And thus much of D. Weſton.

The death of D. Weſton.

The reſidue that remained of the perſecuting Clergy, and eſcaped the ſtroke of death, were deprived, and committed to priſons: the Catalogue of whoſe names here followeth.

Catholike biſhops after Q. Maries death deprived and impriſoned.

In the Tower.
- Nicholas Heath, Archbiſhop of York, and Lord Chancellor.
- Thomas Thurby Biſhop of Ely.
- Thomas Watſon Biſhop of Lincolne.
- Gilbert Bourne Biſhop of Bath and Welles.
- Richard Pates B. of Worceſter.
- Troublefield B. of Exeter.
- Jo. Fecknam Abbot of Weſtminſter.
- John Borall Dean of Windſore and Peterborough.

Of David Poole Biſhop of Peterborough, I doubt whether he was in the Tower, or in ſome other priſon.

Note that ſome of theſe biſhops afterward through the goodneſſe of Q. Elizabeth were diſperſed, and ſuffered to be kept in their friends houſes.

Ran away
- Goldwell B. of Saint Aſſe.
- Maurice Elect of Bangor.
- Edmund Boner B. of London, in the Marſhalſea.
- Thomas Wood Biſhop Elect, in the Marſhalſea.
- Cutbert Scot, Biſhop of Cheſter, was in the Fleet, from whence hee eſcaped to Lovane, and there dyed.

In the Fleet
- Henry Cole Deane of Pauls.
- Jo. Harpsfield archdeacon of London, and Deane of Norwich.
- Nicholas Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canturbury.
- Anthony Draycot Archdeacon of Huntington.
- William Chadſey Archdeacon of Middleſex.

A note of D. Chadſey. 34. Articles of D. Chadſey. D. Chadſey ſubſcribed to the reformed religion in K. Edwards time.

¶ Concerning which D. Chadſey here is to be noted, that in the beginning of King Edwards reigne he recanted, and ſubſcribed to thirty foure Articles, wherein he then fully conſented and agreed with his owne hand writing to the whole forme of doctrine approved and allowed then in the Church, as well concerning juſtification by faith onely, as alſo the doctrine of the two Sacraments then received, denying aſwell the Popes Supremacy, Tranſubſtantiation, Purgatory, Invocation of Saints, elevation and adoration of the ſacrament, the ſacrifice, and veneration of the Maſſe, as alſo all other like excrements of Popiſh ſuperſtition, according to the Kings booke then ſet forth.

Wherefore the more marvell it is, that hee, being counted ſuch a famous and learned Clerke, would ſhew himſelfe ſo fickle and unſtable in his aſſertions, ſo double in his doings, to alter his religion according to time, and to maintaine for truth, not what he thought beſt, but what he might moſt ſafely defend. So long as the ſtate of the L. Protector and of his brother ſtood upright, what was then the conformity of this D. Chadſey, his owne articles in Latine, written and ſubſcribed with his owne hand, doe declare, which I have to ſhew, if he will deny them. But after the decay of the Kings uncles, the fortune of them turned not ſo faſt, but his religion turned withall, and eftſoones he tooke upon him to diſpute againſt Peter Martyr, in upholding Tranſubſtantiation at Oxford, which a little before with his owne hand writing he had overthrowne.

D. Chedſey mutable and inconſtant in his religion.

After this enſued the time of Queene Mary, wherein Doctor Chadſey, to ſhew his double diligence, was to eager in his commiſſion to ſit in judgment, and to bring poore men to their death, that that in the laſt yeare of Queene Mary when the L. Chancellor, ſir Thomas Cornwalles, L. Clinton, and divers other of the Councell had ſent for him by a ſpeciall letter to repaire unto London out of Eſſex, he, writing againe to the Biſhop of London, ſought meanes not to come at the Councels bidding, but to continue ſtill in his perſecuting progreſſe. The copie of whoſe letter I have alſo in my hands (if need were) to bring forth.

The eagernes of D. Chadſey in puniſhing the poore martyrs.

w Mauldon prentice with M. Hugh Aparry at Greenwich.

Mention was made not long before, of one William Mauldon, who in King Henries time ſuffered ſtripes and ſcourgings for confeſſing the verity of Gods true Religion. It happened in the firſt yeare of Queene Elizabeth, that the ſayd William Mauldon was bound ſervant with one named Maſter Hugh Aparrie then a Wheate-taker for the Queene, dwelling at Greenewich. Who being newly come unto him, and having never a booke there to looke upon, being deſirous to occupy himſelfe vertuouſly, looked about the houſe, and found a Primer in Engliſh, whereon hee read in a winters evening. Whiles he was reading, there ſate one John Apowell that had beene a ſerving man, about thirty yeares of age, borne toward Wales, whom the ſaid Maſter Hugh gave meat and drinke unto, till ſuch time as hee could get a ſervice. And as the foreſaid W. Mauldon read on the book, the ſaid Jo. Apowell mocked him after every word, with contrary gaudes and flouting words unreverently, inſomuch that hee could no longer abide him for griefe of heart, but turned unto him, and ſaid; John, take heed what thou doeſt; Thou doeſt not mocke me, but thou mockeſt GOD. For in mocking of his word, thou mockeſt him; and this is the word of God, though I be ſimple that reade it: and therefore beware what thou doeſt.

Then Mauldon fell to reading againe, and ſtill he proceeded on in his mocking, and when Mauldon had read certaine Engliſh prayers, in the end he read, Lord have mercy upon us, Chriſt have mercy upon us, &c.

And as Mauldon was reciting theſe words, the other with a ſtart ſuddenly ſaid, Lord have mercy upon me.

With that Mauldon anſwered and ſaid, What ayleſt thou John?

He ſaid, I was affraid.

Whereof was thou affraid, ſaid Mauldon?

Nothing now, ſaid the other: and ſo he would not tell him. After this, when Mauldon and hee went to bed, Mauldon asked him wereof he was affraid?

He ſaid when you read, Lord have mercy upon us, Chriſt have mercy upon us, me thought the haire of my head ſtood upright, with a great feare which came upon me.

Then ſaid Mauldon, John thou mayeſt ſee, the evill ſpirit could not abide that Chriſt ſhould have mercy upon us. Well John, ſaid Mauldon, repent and amend thy life, for God will not be mocked. If we mocke and jeſt at his word, he will puniſh us.

Alſo you uſe ribaldrie words and ſwearing very much: therefore for Gods ſake John amend thy life. So I will (ſaid he) by the grace of God; I pray God I may. Amen ſaid the other, with other words, and ſo went to bed.

A terrible example of Gods judgement to be noted of all ſuch as be contemners and mockers of God, and his word.

On the morrow, about 8. of the clocke in the morning, the foreſaid John came running downe out of his chamber in his ſhirt into the hall, and wreſtled with his miſtreſſe as if hee would have throwne her downe, Whereat ſhe ſhriched out, and her ſervants holpe her, and tooke him by ſtrength, and carried him up unto his bed, and bound him downe to his bed: for they perceived plainly that he was out of his right minde.

After that, as he lay, almoſt day and night his tongue never ceaſed, but he cried out of the divell of hell, and his words were ever ſtill, O the divell of hell; now the divell of hell; I would ſee the divell of hell: Thou ſhalt ſee the divell of hell; there he was, there he goeth, with other words, but moſt of the divell of hell.

Thus he lay without amendment about ſixe dayes, that his Maſter and all his houſhold was weary of that trouble and noiſe. Then his Maſter agreed with the Keepers of Bedlam, and gave a peece of mony, and ſent him thither. It ſeemeth that he was poſſeſſed with an evill ſpirit, from the which God defend us all.

This is a terrible example to you that be mockers of the word of God: therefore repent and amend, leſt the vengeance of God fall upon you in like manner. Witneſſe hereof William Mauldon of Newington.

Gods puniſhment upon a young damſell of 12. yeares old, blaſpheming the Majeſty of God.

The ſame William Mauldon chanced afterward to dwell at a towne ſixe miles from London called Waltamſtow, where his wife taught young children to reade, which was about the yeare of our Lord, 1563. and the fourth yeare of Queene Elizabeths reigne. Unto this ſchoole, amongſt other children, came one Benfields daughter, named Dennis, about the age of 12. yeares.

As theſe children ſate talking together, they happened among other talk (as the nature of children is to be buſie with many things) to fall into communication with God, and to reaſon among themſelves, after their childiſh diſcretion, what he ſhould be.

Whereunto ſome anſwered one thing, ſome another. Among whom when one of the children had ſaid, that he was a good old father; the foreſaid Denis Benfield caſting out impious words of horrible blaſphemy, What he (ſaid ſhe) is an old doting foole.

What wretched and blaſphemous words were theſe ye heare. Now mark what followed.

When William Mauldon heard of theſe abominable words of the girle, hee willed his wife to correct her for the ſame. Which was appointed the next day to bee done. But when the next morrow came, her mother would needes ſend her to the Market to London, the wench greatly intreating her mother that ſhe might not goe, being marvellouſly unwilling thereunto. Howbeit through her mothers compulſion, ſhe was forced to goe, and went. And what happened? Her buſineſſe being done at London, as ſhe was returning againe homeward, and being a little paſt Hackney, ſuddenly the young girle was ſo ſtricken, that all the one ſide of her was black, and ſhe ſpeechleſſe. Whereupon immediately ſhe was carried back to Hackney, and there the ſame night was buried. Witneſſe of the ſame ſtory William Mauldon and his wife, alſo Benfield her father, and her mother, which yet be all alive.

Blaſphemy puniſhed.

A terrible example (no doubt) both to old and young, what it is for children to blaſpheme the Lord their God, and what it is for parents to ſuffer their young ones to grow up in ſuch blaſphemous blindneſſe, and not to nurture them betime in the rudiments of the Chriſtian Catechiſme, to know firſt their creation, and then their redemption in Chriſt our Saviour, to feare the name of GOD, and to reverence his Majeſty. For elſe what doe they deſerve but to be taken away by death, which contemptuouſly deſpiſe him, of whom they take the benefit of life?

Anno 1558.

A leſſon to children and young girles.

And therefore let all young maides, boyes, and young men, take example by this wretched ſilly wench, not onely not to blaſpheme the ſacred Maieſtie of the omnipotent God their Creator, but alſo not once to take his name in vaine, according as they are taught in his commandements.

A leſſon to fathers and godfathers and godmothers.

Secondly, let all fathers, godfathers, and godmothers, take this for a warning, to ſee to the inſtruction and catechiſing of their children, for whom they have bound themſelves in promiſe both to God and to his Church. Which if the father and godfather, the mother and godmothers had done to this young girle, verily it may be thought this deſtruction had not fallen upon her.

A leſſon to all atheiſts, epicures and infidels.

Thirdly, let all blinde Atheiſts, Epicures, Mammoniſts, belly gods of this world, and ſons of Belial, hypocrites, infidels, and mockers of religion, which ſay in their hearts, there is no God, learne alſo hereby, not onely what God is, and what he is able to doe, but alſo in this miſerable creature here puniſhed in this world, behold what ſhall likewiſe fall on them in the world to come, unleſſe they will bee warned betime, by ſuch examples as the Lord GOD doth give them.

A leſſon to all blaſphemers and ſwearers.

Fourthly and laſtly, here may alſo bee a ſpectacle for all them which be blaſpemers and abominable ſwearers, or rather tearers of God, abuſing his glorious name in ſuch contemptuous and deſpitefull ſort as they uſe to doe. Whom if neither the word and commandement of God, nor the calling of the Preachers, nor remorſe of conſcience, nor rule of reaſon, nor their withering age, nor hoary haires will admoniſh; yet let theſe terrible examples of Gods ſtrict judgment ſomewhat move them to take heed to themſelves. For if this young maiden, who was not fully twelve yeares old, for her unreverent ſpeaking of God (and that but at one time) did not eſcape the ſtroke of Gods terrible hand, what then have they to looke for, which being men growne in yeares, and ſtriken in age, being ſo often warned and preached unto, yet ceaſe not continually with their blaſphemous oathes, not only to abuſe his name, but alſo moſt contumeliouſly and deſpitefully to teare him (as it were) and all his parts in pieces?

Lebar of Abyngdon, a blaſphemer of Gods martyrs, plagued.

About the yeare of our Lord 1565. at Brightwell in the County of Barkſhire, upon certaine communication as touching the right reverend Martyrs in Chriſt, Biſhop Cranmer, Biſhop Ridley, and Maſter Hugh Latimer, there came into an houſe in Abyngdon, one whoſe name is Lebar, being a Plowman, dwelling in Brightwell aforeſaid, and ſaid, that he ſaw that evill favored knave Latimer when he was burned: and alſo in deſpite ſaid, that he had teeth like a horſe. At which time and houre, as neare as could bee gathered, the ſon of the ſaid Lebar moſt wickedly hanged himſelfe, at Shepton in the County aforeſaid within a mile of Abyngdon.

These words were ſpoken in the hearing of me Thomas Ienens of Abyngdon.

Tho: Arundell archbiſh. of Cant.

Did not Thomas Arundell, Archbiſhop of Canturbury, give ſentence againſt the L. Cobham, and died himſelfe before him, being ſo ſtriken in his tongue, that neither he could ſwallow nor ſpeake for a certaine ſpace before his death?

Frier Champbel plagued.

Frier Champbel, the accuſer of Patrick Hamelton in Scotland, what a terrible end he had, read before.

Gods judgement upon Harvey a perſecuting Commiſſary.

Harvey a Commiſſary, that condemned a poore man in Calice, was ſhortly after hanged, drawne, and quartered.

Gods juſt plague upon W. Swallow

William Swallow, the cruell tormentor of George Egles, was ſhortly after ſo plagued of God, that all the haire of his head, and nailes of his fingers and toes went off, his eyes well neare cloſed up, that hee could ſcant ſee. His wife alſo was ſtriken with the falling ſickneſſe, with the which malady ſhee was never infected before.

Gods juſt plague upon Rich. Potto.

Likewiſe Rich. Potto, another troubler of the ſaid George Egles, upon a certaine anger or chafe with his ſervants, was ſo ſuddenly taken with ſickneſſe, that falling upon his bed like a beaſt, there he died and never ſpake word.

Rich. Denton burned in his owne houſe.

Richard Denton, a ſhrinker from the Goſpel, while he refuſed to ſuffer the fire in the Lords quarrell, was afterward burned in his own houſe with two moe.

Fetties wife ſtricken with madneſſe.

The wife of John Fetty, being the cauſe of the taking of her husband, how ſhe was immediately upon the ſame by Gods hand ſtriken with madneſſe, and was diſtract of her wits, reade before.

Thomas Mouſe and George Revet, two perſecutors, were ſtriken miſerably with the hand of God, and ſo died.

Robert Edgore bereft of his wits.

Alſo Robert Edgore, for that he had executed the office of a Pariſh Clarke againſt his conſcience, through anguiſh and griefe of conſcience for the ſame, was ſo bereft of his wits, that hee was kept in chaines and bonds many yeares after.

Two papiſts of new colledge in Oxford drowned themſelves.

As touching John Plankney fellow of new Colledge in Oxford, Civilian, and one Habington, both fellowes of the ſame houſe aforeſaid, and both ſtubborne Papiſts, the matter is not much worthy the memory; yet the example is not unworthy to be noted, to ſee what little comfort and grace commonly followeth the comfortleſſe doctrine and profeſſion of Papiſtrie, as in theſe two young men, amongſt many other may well appeare. Of whom the one, which was Plankney, ſcholler ſometime to Marſhall (who wrote the booke of the Croſſe) is commonly reported and knowne to them of that univerſity, to have drowned himſelfe in the river about Ruly, at Oxford, Anno 1566. the other in a Well about Rome, or as ſome doe ſay, at Padua, and ſo being both drowned, were both taken up with Crucifixes, as it is ſaid of ſome, hanging about their neckes; the more pity that ſuch young ſtudents did ſo much addict their wits, rather to take the way of Papiſtry, than to walke in the comfortable light of the Goſpel, now ſo brightly ſpreading his beames in all the world; which if they had done, I thinke not contrary, but it had proved much better with them.

A ſtory of a courtier one of the guard, which happened, An. 1568.

Albeit (I truſt) the Goſpel of Chriſt, being now received in the Queenes Court amongſt the Courtiers and ſervants of her Guard, hath framed their lives and manners ſo to live in the due feare of God, and temperance of life, with all ſobriety, and mercifull compaſſion toward their even Chriſtians, that they neede not greatly any other inſtructions to be given them in this ſtory: yet forſomuch as examples many times doe worke more effectually in the mindes and memories of men; and alſo partly conſidering with my ſelfe, how theſe, above all other ſorts of men in the whole realme, in time paſt ever had moſt neede of ſuch wholeſome leſſons and admonitions, to leave their unordinate riot of quaffing and drinking, and their Heatheniſh prophanity of life; I thought here to ſet before their eyes a terrible example, not of a ſtrange and forreine perſon, but of one of their owne coat, a Yeoman of the Guard, not fained by mee, but brought to mee by Gods providence, for a warning to all Admonition to Courtiers.

Courtiers, and done of very truth no longer agoe than in the yeere of our Lord, 1568. And as the ſtory is true, ſo is the name of the party not unknowne, being called Chriſtopher Landeſdale, dwelling in Hackney in Middleſex. The order of whoſe life, aud manner of his death being worthy to be noted, is this, as in ſtory here under followeth.

An example of Chriſtopher Landeſdale, one of the Guard, for all Courtiers to looke upon.

This foreſaid Landeſdale being married to an ancient woman yet living, having by her both goods and lands, notwithſtanding lived long in filthy whoredome with a younger woman; by whom he had two children, a ſonne and a daughter, and kept them in his houſe unto the day of his death. Alſo when he ſhould have been in ſerving of GOD on the Sabbath day, he uſed to walke or ride about his fields, and ſeldome hee or any of his houſe came to the Church after the Engliſh Service was againe received. Beſides this, he was a great ſwearer, and a great drunkard, and had great delight alſo in making other men drunken, and would have them whom he had made drunkards, to call him father, and he would call them his ſonnes; and of theſe ſonnes, by report, he had above forty. And if he had ſeene one that would drinke freely, hee would marke him; and ſpend his mony with him liberally in ale or wine, but moſt in wine, to make him the ſooner drunken. Theſe bleſſed ſonnes of his ſhould have great cheere oftentimes, both at his owne houſe and at Tavernes: and not long before his death hee was ſo beaſtly drunken in a Taverne over againſt his doore, that he fell downe in the Taverne yard, and could not ariſe alone, but lay grovelling, till he was holpen up, and ſo carried home.

Landeſdale a feaſter of the rich, and unmercifull to the poore.

This father of drunkards, as he was a great feaſter of the rich and wealthy of Hackney, and others; ſo his poore neighbours and poore tenants fared little the better for him: except it were with ſome broken meate, which after his feaſts his wife would carry and ſend unto them, or ſome almes given at his doore.

Beſides all this, he did much injury to his poore neighbours, in oppreſſing the Commons neere about him; which was a ſpeciall reliefe unto them, ſo that his cattell did eate up all without pity or mercy.

Poore Lazarus lying by the rich mans doore.

There chanced after this about two yeeres before he died, a poore man, being ſicke of the bloudy flixe, for very weakneſſe to lie downe in a ditch of the ſaid Landeſdales, not a ſtones caſt from his houſe, where hee had a little ſtraw brought him. Notwithſtanding the ſaid Landeſdale had backe houſes and barnes enow to have laid him in, but would not ſhew him ſo much pity. And thus poore Lazarus there lay night and day, about ſixe weekes ere he died.

Certaine good neighbours hearing of this, procured things neceſſary for his reliefe, but he was ſo far ſpent, that he could not be recovered; who lay broyling in the hote Sunne, with a horrible ſmell, moſt pitifull to behold.

Yet the rich Glutton was better, for he ſuffered Lazarus to lie at his gates.

This poore man, a little before he died, deſired to be removed to another ditch into the ſhadow. Whereupon, one of the neighbours comming to Landeſdales wife for a bundle of ſtrawe for him to lie upon, ſhe required to have him removed to Newington ſide, becauſe, ſhe ſaid, if he ſhould die, it would be very far to carry him to the Church.

Beſides this, there was a mariage in this Landeſdales houſe, and the gueſts that came to the marriage gave the poore man mony as they came and went by him, but Landeſdale diſdained to contribute any reliefe unto him, notwithſtanding that he had promiſed to Maſter Searles, one of the Queenes Guard (who had more pity of him) to miniſter to him things neceſſary.

The death of poore Lazarus in the ditch.

To be ſhort, the next day poore Lazarus departed this life, and was buried in Hackney Churchyard; upon whom Landeſdale did not ſo much as beſtow a winding ſheet, or any thing elſe towards his buriall. And thus much concerning the end of poore Lazarus. Now let us heare what became of the rich Glutton.

About two yeeres after, the ſayd Landeſdale being full of drinke (as his cuſtome was) came riding in great haſte from London on Saint Andrewes day in the evening, Anno 1568. and as it is reported by thoſe that ſaw him, reeling to and fro like a Drunkard with his hat in his hand, and comming by a ditch, there tumbled in headlong into the ditch. Some ſay that the horſe fell upon him, but that is not like. This is true, the horſe, more ſober than the Maſter, came home, leaving his Maſter behinde him. Whether he brake his necke with the fall, or was drowned (for the water was ſcarcely a foote deepe) it is uncertaine; but certaine it is, that he was there found dead. Thus he being found dead in the ditch, the Crowner (as the manner is) ſate upon him: and how the matter was handled for ſaving his goods, the Lord knoweth; but in the end ſo it fell out, that the goods were ſaved, and the poore horſe indited for his Maſters death.

The end of this unmercifull Epicure in the ditch.

The neighbours hearing of the death of this man, and conſidering the manner thereof, ſaid it was juſtly fallen upon him, that as he ſuffered the poore man to lie and die in the ditch neere unto him, ſo his end was to die in a ditch likewiſe. And thus haſt thou in this ſtory (Chriſtian Brother and Reader) the true Image of a rich Glutton and poore Lazarus ſet out before thine eyes: whereby we have all to learne, what happeneth in the end to ſuch voluptuous Epicures and Atheiſts, which being voide of all ſenſe of Religion, and feare of God, yeeld themſelves over to all prophanity of life, neither regarding any honeſty at home, nor ſhewing any mercy to their needy neighbours abroad.

The image of the rich Glutton and poore Lazarus.

Chriſt our Saviour ſaith, Mat. 5. Bleſſed be the mercifull, for they ſhall obtaine mercy: but judgement without mercy ſhall be executed on them which have ſhewed no mercy, &c. And St. John ſaith, 1. John 4. Hee that ſeeth his brother have neede, and ſhutteth up his compaſſion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? &c. Againe, Eſay againſt ſuch profane drunkards and quaffers thus crieth out; Woe be unto them that riſe up early to follow drunkenneſſe, and to them that ſo continue untill night, till they bee ſet on fire with wine. In thoſe companies are Harpes and Lutes, Tabrets and Pipes and Wine: but they regard not the workes of the Lord, and conſider not the operation of his hands, &c. Woe be unto them that are ſtrong to ſpue out wine, and expert to ſet up drunkenneſſe.

A warning to Gentlemen.

The puniſhments of them that be dead, bee wholeſome documents to them that bee alive. And therefore as the ſtory above exemplified may ſerve to warne all Courtiers and Yeomen of the Guard; ſo by this that followeth, I would with all Gentlemen to take good heede and admonition betime, to leave their outragious ſwearing and blaſpheming of the Lord their God.

A fearfull example of Gods puniſhment upon a gentleman a greater ſwearer in Cornewall.

In the time and reigne of King Edward, there was in Cornewall a certaine luſtie young Gentleman, which did ride in company with other moe Gentlemen, together with their ſervants, being about the number of twenty horſemen.

Anno 1558.

men. Amongſt whom this luſtie yonker entring into talke, began to ſweare moſt horribly, blaſpheming the Name of God, with other ribauldry words beſides. Unto whom one of the company (who is yet alive, and witneſſe hereof) not able to abide the hearing of ſuch blaſphemous abomination, in gentle words ſpeaking to him, ſaid, he ſhould give anſwer aud account for every idle word.

The Gentleman taking ſnuffe thereat; Why, ſaid he, takeſt thou thought for me? take thought for thy winding ſhéete. Well (quoth the other) amend, for death giveth no warning; for as ſoone commeth a Lambes skinne to the Market, as an old Shéepes. Gods wounds, ſaith he, care not thou for me; raging ſtill after his manner worſe and worſe in words, till at length paſſing on their journy, they came riding over a great Bridge, ſtanding over a péece of an arme of the ſea. Upon the which Bridge this Gentleman ſwearer ſpurred his horſe in ſuch ſort, as he ſprang cleane over with the man on his backe. Who as he was going, cried, ſaying, Horſe and man, and all to the Divell. This terrible ſtory happening in a Towne in Cornewall, I would have been affraid amongſt theſe ſtories here to recite, were it not that he, which was then both reprehender of his ſwearing, and witneſſe of his death, is yet alive, and now a Miniſter, named Heynes. Beſides this, Biſhop Ridley, then Biſhop of London, preached and uttered even the ſame fact and example at Pauls Croſſe. The name of the Gentleman I could by no meanes obtaine of the party and witneſſe aforeſaid, for dread of thoſe (as he ſaid) which yet remaine of his affinity and kindred in the ſaid country.

Gentle exhortation neglected.

The terrible end of a ſwearer.

Having now ſufficiently admoniſhed, firſt the Courtiers, then the Gentlemen; now thirdly for a briefe admonition to the Lawyers, we will here inſert the ſtrange end and death of one Henry Smith, Student of the law.

This Henry Smith having a Godly Gentleman to his father, and an ancient Proteſtant, dwelling in Camdeu in Gloceſterſhire, was by him vertuouſly brought up in the knowledge of Gods Word, and ſincere Religion; wherein he ſhewed himſelfe in the beginning ſuch an earneſt profeſſor, that he was called of the Papiſts, Prating Smith. After theſe good beginnings it followed, that he comming to be a Student of the law in the middle Temple at London, there through ſiniſter company of ſome, and eſpecially as it is thought of one Gifford, began to be perverted to Popery, and afterward going to Lovane, was more déeply rooted and grounded in the ſame; and ſo continuing a certaine ſpace among the Papiſts, of a young Proteſtent, at length was made a perfect Papiſt. Inſomuch, that returning from thence, he brought with him Pardons, a Crucifixe, with an Agnus dei, which he uſed commonly to weare about his necke, and had in his chamber Images, before which he was wont to pray. Beſides divers other Popiſh traſh, which he brought with him from Lovane. Now what end followed after this I were loth to utter in ſtory, but that the fact ſo lately done this preſent yéere, Anno 1569. remaineth yet ſo freſh in memory, that almoſt all the City of London not only can witneſſe, but alſo doth wonder thereat. The end was this.

The miſerable end of H. Smith, a Lawyer of the middle Temple, after he was perverted from the Goſpel.

Note what lewd company doth, incorrupting good natures.

M. Smiths Images and Agnus dei.

Not long after the ſaid Henry Smith, with Gifford his companion, was returned from Lovane, being now a foule jeerer, and a ſcornfull ſcoffer of that religion which before he profeſſed; in his chamber where he lay in a houſe in S. Clements Pariſh without Temple-barre, in the Evening as he was going to bed, and his clothes put off (for he was found naked) he had tied his ſhirt (which he had torne to the ſame purpoſe) about his privy places, and ſo with his owne girdle, or ribond garter (as it ſéemed) faſtned to the bed-poſt, there ſtrangled himſelfe. They that were of his Queſt, and other which ſaw the manner of his hanging, and the print where hée ſate upon his beds ſide, doe record, that he thruſt himſelfe downe from his beds ſide where he ſate; the place where he had faſtned the girdle being ſo low, that his hips well néere touched the floore, his legges lying acroſſe, and his armes ſpread abroad. And this was the manner of his hanging, having his Agnus Dei in a ſilver tablet, with his other Idolatrous traſh in the window by him. And thus being dead, and not thought worthy to be interred in the Churchyard, he was buried in a Lane called Foskew Lane.

Henry Smith a Lawyer hanged himſelfe in his chamber, and after what manner.

This heavy and dreadfull end of Henry Smith, although it might ſéeme enough to gender a terrour to all young Popiſh Students of the Law; yet it did not ſo worke with all, but that ſome remained as obſtinate ſtill as they were before. Amongſt whom was one named Williams, a Student of the Inner-Temple, who being ſometime a favourer of the Goſpel, fell in like manner from that to be an obſtinate Papiſt, a deſpitefull railer againſt true religion, and in concluſion, was ſo hote in his Catholike zeale, that in the midſt of his railing he fell ſtarke mad, and ſo yet to this preſent day remaineth. The Lord of his mercy turne him to a better minde, and convert him if it be his pleaſure, Amen.

One Williams a Lawyer, and a railer againſt the Goſpel, fell mad.

The miſerable end of Twyford is here no leſſe to be remembred, a buſie doer ſometimes in King Henries dayes by Boners appointment, in ſetting up of ſtakes for the burning of poore Martyrs. Who, when hée ſaw the ſtakes conſume alway ſo faſt; Yea, ſaid he, will not theſe ſtakes hold? I will have a ſtake, I trowe, that ſhall hold, and ſo provided a bigge trée, and cutting off the top, ſet it in Smithfield. But thankes be to God, ere the trée was all conſumed, God turned the ſtate of Religion, and he fell into an horrible diſeaſe, rotting alive above the ground before hée died. Reade more of him before. But becauſe the ſtory both of him, and of a number ſuch other like, is to be found in ſundry places of this hiſtory ſufficiently before expreſſed, it ſhall be be but a double labour againe to recapitulate the ſame.

Of the miſerable end of this Twyford, reade before.

¶ Ye have heard before of the condemnation and martyrdome of a certaine boy called Thomas Drowrie, condemned by Williams, Chancellor of Gloceſter, contrary to all right and counſell of the Regiſter then preſent, called Barker. Now what puniſhment fell after upon the ſaid Chancellor, followeth to be declared.

The ſtrange and fearfull death of the ſame Doctor Williams.

When God of his ineſtimable mercy having pity of us, and pardoning our ſinnes, for his Sonne Chriſt Jeſus ſake, had now taken from us that bloudy Princeſſe, and ſent us this Jewell of joy, the Quéenes Majeſty that now reigneth (and long may ſhe reigne) over us; that the Commiſſioners for reſtitution of religion were comming toward Gloceſter; the ſame day Doctor Williams the Chancellor dined with Maſter Jenings the Deane of Gloceſter, who with all his men were booted ready at one of the clocke to ſet forward to Chipping-Norton, about fiftéen miles from Gloceſter, to méete the Commiſſioners which were at Chipping-Norton, and ſaid to him; Chancellor, are not thy bootes on?

Chanc. Why ſhould I put them on?

To goe with mee (quoth the Deane) to meete theſe Commiſſioners.

Chancel. I will neither meete them nor ſee them.

Deane Thou moſt needes ſee them, for now it is paſt twelve of the clocke, and they will be here afore three of the clocke: and therefore if thou bee wiſe, on with thy boots, and let us goe together, and all ſhall be well.

Chanc. Goe your wayes M. Deane, I will never ſee them.

As I ſaid, W. Jenings the Deane ſet forward with his company toward the Commiſſioners, and by and by commeth one upon horſebacke to the Deane, ſaying; Maſter Chancellor lieth at the mercy of God, and is ſpeechleſſe. At that word the Deane with his company pricked forward to the Commiſſioners, and told them the whole matter and communication betweene them two, as above. And they ſent one of their men with the beſt words they could deviſe, to comfort him with many promiſes. But to bee ſhort, albeit the Commiſſioners were now neerer Gloceſter, than the Deane and his company thought, making very great haſte, eſpecially after they had received theſe newes: Yet Doctor Williams, though falſe of religion, yet true of his promiſe, kept his ungracious covenant with the Deane: for he was dead ere they came to the City, and ſo never ſaw them indeed.

Declaration of forains examples.

Wherefore to paſſe over our owne domeſticall examples of Engliſh perſecutors plagued by Gods hand (wherewith this our preſent ſtory doth abound) I will ſtretch my penne a little farther, to adjoyne with all a few like examples in forraine Countries.

Forraine Examples.

Holmeiſter ſuddenly ſtricken with death, going to Ratiſbone.

HOimeiſter the great Archpapiſt, and chiefe Maſter-pillar of the Popes falling Church, as he was in his journey going toward the Councell of Ratiſbone, to diſpute againſt the defenders of Chriſts Goſpel, ſuddenly in his journey, not farre from Ulmes, was prevented by the ſtroke of Gods hand, and there miſerably died, with horrible roaring and crying out. Ex Illyrico de vocabulo fidei.

What inconvenience commeth by the Popes deſperate doctrine.

What a pernicious and peſtilent doctrine is this of the Papiſts, which leadeth men to ſeeke their ſalvation by merits and workes of the law, and not by faith only in Chriſt the Sonne of God, and to ſtay themſelves by grace? And what inconvenience this doctrine of doubting and deſperation bringeth men to at length, if the plaine Word of God will not ſufficiently admoniſh, yet let us be warned by examples of ſuch as have been either teachers or followers of this doctrine, and conſider well what end commonly it hath and doth bring men unto. To recite all that may be ſaid in this behalfe, it were infinite. To note a few examples for admonitions ſake, it ſhall be requiſite.

The miſerable end of Guarlacus, Reader in Lovane.

In the Univerſity of Lovane was one named Guarlacus a learned man, brought up in that ſchoole, who at length was Reader of Divinity to the Monkes of Saint Gertrudes order. Where after he had ſtoutly maintained the corrupt errours of ſuch Popiſh doctrine, at laſt falling ſick, when he perceived no way with him but death, he fell into a miſerable agony and perturbation of ſpirit, crying out of his ſinnes, how wickedly he had lived, and that he was not able to abide the judgement of God, and ſo caſting out words of miſerable deſperation, ſaid, his ſinnes were greater than he could be pardoned, and in that deſperation wretchedly he ended his life. Ex Epiſtola Claudii Senarclæ ad Bucerum ante hiſtor. de morte Diazii.

The ſtory of Arnoldus Bomelius, ſtudent at Lovane.

Another like example we have of Arnoldus Bomelius, a young man of the ſaid Univerſity of Lovane, well commended for his freſh flouriſhing wit and ripeneſſe of learning, who ſo long as hee favoured the cauſe of the Goſpel, and tooke part with the ſame againſt the enemies of the truth, hee proſpered and went well forward; but after that hee drew to the company of Tyleman, Maſter of the Popes Colledge in Lovane, and framed himſelfe after the rule of his unſavoury doctrine, that is, to ſtand in feare and doubt of his juſtification, and to worke his ſalvation by merits and deeds of the law, hee began more and more to grow in doubtfull deſpaire and diſcomfort of minde; as the nature of that doctrine is, utterly to plucke away a mans minde from all certainty and true liberty of ſpirit, to a ſervile doubtfulneſſe, full of diſcomfort and bondage of ſoule.

Note what evill inſtruction and company doth.

Thus the young man, ſeduced and perverted through this blinde doctrine of ignorance and dubitation, fell into a great agony of mind, wandring and wreſtling in himſelfe a long ſpace, till at length being overcome with deſpaire, and not having in the Popiſh doctrine wherewith to raiſe up his ſoule, hee went out of the City on a time to walke, accompanied with three other Students of the ſame Univerſity, his ſpeciall familiars. Who as they returned home againe after their walke, Arnoldus for wearineſſe, as it ſeemed, ſate downe by a ſpring ſide to reſt him a while. The other, ſuppoſing none other but that he for wearineſſe there reſted to refreſh himſelfe, went forward a little paſt him. In the meane time what doth Arnoldus, but ſuddenly taketh out his dagger, and ſtroke himſelfe into the body.

An horrible example of Arnoldus Bomelius, which killed himſelfe with his owne dagger.

His fellowes ſeeing him ſhrinking downe, and the fountaine to be all coloured with the bloud which iſſued out of the wound, came running to him to take him up, and ſo ſearching his body where the wound ſhould be, at length found what he had done, and how he had ſtricken himſelfe with his dagger into the breaſt. Whereupon they tooke him and brought him into an houſe next at hand, and there exhorted him, as well as they could to repent his fact; who then by outward geſture ſeemed to give ſome ſhew of repentance, Notwithſtanding, the ſayd Arnoldus, eſpying one of his friends there buſie about him to have a knife hanging at his girdle, violently plucked out the knife, and with maine force ſtabbed himſelfe to the heart.

Admonition to our Lovanians.

By theſe Lovanian examples, as we have all to learne, no man to bee ſure of his life, but that he alwayes needeth to crave and call unto the Lord to bleſſe him with his truth and grace; ſo eſpecially would I wiſh our Engliſh Lovanians, which now make forts in that Univerſity againſt the open truth of Chriſts Goſpel, to be wiſe in time, and not to ſpurn ſo againſt the prick, Ne forte, &c.

Or if they thinke yet theſe examples not enough for ſufficient admonition, let them joyne hereunto the remembrance alſo of Jacobus Lato-mus, a chiefe and principall captaine of the ſame Univerſity of Lovane. Who after he had beene at Bruzels and there, thinking to doe a great act againſt Luther and his fellowes, made an Oration before the Emperour, ſo fooliſhly and ridiculouſly, that he was laughed to ſcorne almoſt of the whole Court: Then returning from thence to Lovane againe, in his publike Lecture he fell in an open fury and madneſſe, uttering ſuch words of deſperation and blaſphemous impiety, that the other Divines which were there, and namely, Ruardus, Anchuſtanus, were faine to carry him away as he was raving, and ſo ſhut him into a cloſe chamber. From that time unto his laſt breath, Latomus had never any thing elſe in his mouth, but that he was damned and rejected of God, and that there was no hope of ſalvation for him, becauſe that wittingly and againſt his knowledge he withſtood the manifeſt truth of his word. Ex Epiſt. Senarclæi ante hiſt. de morte Diazii. Item, ex Oratione Pauli Eberi in comitiis Wittembergæ habita.

Anno 1558.

Jacobus Latomus an enemy to the Goſpel, brought to madneſſe and deſperation.

The terrible words of Latomus in his deſperation.

Thus Almighty God not only by his Word, but by examples in divers and ſundry wiſe doth warne us, firſt to ſeeke to know the perfect will and decree of the Lord our God appointed in his Word. The perfect will and full Teſtament of the Lord in his Word, is this, that he hath ſent and given his only Sonne unto us, being fully contented to accept our faith only upon him for our perfect juſtification and full ſatisfaction for all our tranſgreſſions; and this is called in Scripture, Iuſtitia Dei. To this will and righteouſneſſe of GOD, they that humble themſelves, finde ſuch peace and reſt in their ſoules, as no man is able to expreſſe, and have ſtrength enough againſt all the invaſions and temptations of Sathan.

Gods will in his word to accept our faith only for juſtification.

Obedience to Gods will rewarded.

Contrariwiſe, they that will not yeeld their obedience unto the will and ordinance of GOD expreſſed in his Word, but will ſeeke their owne righteouſneſſe, which is of man, labouring by their merits and ſatisfactions to ſerve and pleaſe God; theſe not only doe finde with God no righteouſneſſe at all, but in ſtead of his favour procure to themſelves his horrible indignation, in ſtead of comfort, heape to themſelves deſperation, and in the end what inconvenience they come to by theſe above receited examples of Guarlacus, Bomelius, and Latomus, it is evident to ſee. And out of this fountaine ſpring not only the puniſhments of theſe men, but alſo all other inconveniences, which happen amongſt men, whereſoever this pernicious and erroneus doctrine of the Papiſts taketh place.

Diſobedience to Gods will puniſhed.

The chiefe fountaine of all miſchiefe in the world.

A Dominicke Frier of Munſter, as he was inveighing in the Pulpit againſt the doctrine of the Goſpel then ſpringing up, was ſtricken with a ſudden flaſh of lightning, and ſo ended his life. Ex Pantal. in 2. parte Rerum memor.

Manlius in his booke, De dictis Philippi Melancth. maketh mention of a certaine Taylors ſervant in Lipſia, who receiving firſt the ſacrament in both kindes with the Goſpellers, afterward, being perſwaded by the Papiſts, received with them under one kinde. Whereupon being admoniſhed of his Maſter to come to the Communion againe in the Church of the Goſpellers, hee ſtood a great while and made no anſwer. At laſt, crying out upon a ſudden, hee ran to the window thereby, and ſo caſt himſelfe out, and brake his necke.

Joanes Sleidanus in his 23. Booke maketh relation of Cardinall Creſcentius, the chiefe Preſident and Moderator of the Councell of Trident, Anno 1552. The ſtory of whom is certaine, the thing that hapned to him was ſtrange and notable, the example of him may bee profitable to others, ſuch as have grace to be warned by other mens evils. The narration is this.

Ex Ioan. Sleidano lib. 23.

The twenty five day of March in the yeere aforeſaid, Creſcentius the Popes Legate, and Vicegerent in the Councell of Trident, was ſitting all the day long untill darke night, in writing letters to the Pope. After his labour, when night was come, thinking to refreſh himſelfe, hee began to riſe; and at his riſing, behold there appeared to him a mighty blacke dogge, of a huge bigneſſe, his eyes flaming with fire, and his eares hinging low downe well neere to the ground, to enter in, and ſtraite to come toward him, and ſo to couch under the bord. The Cardinall not a little amazed at the ſight thereof, ſomewhat recovering himſelfe, called to his ſervants, which were in the outward chamber next by, to bring in a candle, and to ſeeke for the dogge. But when the dogge could not be found, neyther there, nor in any other chamber about, the Cardinall thereupon ſtricken with a ſudden conceit of minde, immediately fell into ſuch a ſickneſſe, whereof his Phyſitians, which he had about him, with all their induſtry and cunning could not cure him. And ſo in the Towne of Verona died this Popiſh Cardinall, the Popes holy Legate, and Preſident of this Councell; wherein his purpoſe was (as Sleidane ſayth) to recover and heale againe the whole authority and doctrine of the Romiſh See, and to ſet it up for ever.

The wretched end of Cardinall Creſcentius, Preſident of the Councel of Trent.

There were in this Councell, beſide the Popes Legates and Cardinall of Trident, 42. Biſhops, Doctors of Divinity 62. And thus was the end of that Popiſh Councell, by the provident hand of the Almighty, diſpatched and brought to nought. Ex Sleidano. lib. 23.

This Councell of Trident, being then diſſolved by the death of this Cardinall, was afterward notwithſtanding recollected againe about the yeere of our Lord, 1562. againſt the erroneous proceedings of which Councell other Writers there bee that ſay enough. The other Biſhop, whoſe haunt was to creepe thorow a window, in the ſame window was ſubtilly taken and hanged in a grin laid for him of purpoſe, and ſo conveighed, that in the morning he was ſeene openly in the ſtreete hanging out of the window, to the wonderment of all that paſſed by. D. Eckius the Popes ſtout champion.

Amongſt all the religious order of Papiſts, who was a ſtouter defender of the Popes ſide, or a more vehement impugner of Martin Luther, than Jo. Eckius? who, if his cauſe wherein he ſo travelled, had been godly, had deſerved (no doubt) great favour and condigne retribution at the hands of the Lord. Now forſomuch as we cannot better judge of him than by his end, let us conſider the manner of his departing hence, and compare the ſame with the end of M. Luther.

The end of Martin Luther compared to the end of Eckius.

In the which M. Luther, being ſuch an adverſary as he was to the Pope, and having no leſſe than all the world upon him at once, firſt this is to be noted, that after all theſe travels, the Lord gave him to depart both in great age, and in his owne native country where he was borne. Secondly, hee bleſſed him with ſuch a quiet death, without any violent hand of any adverſary, that it was counted rather a ſleep than a death. Thirdly, as the death of his body was milde, ſo his ſpirit and minde continued no leſſe godly unto the end, continually invocating and calling upon the name of the Lord, and ſo commending his ſpirit to him with fervent prayer, he made a bleſſed and an heavenly ending. Fourthly, over and beſides theſe bleſſings, Almighty God did alſo adde unto him ſuch an honourable buriall, as to many great Princes ſcarce happeneth the like. And this briefly concerning the end of Martin Luther, as ye may reade before more at large.

The manner of John Eckius death.

Eckius laſt words.

Eckius dieth dreaming of his Guildens.

Now let us conſider, and conferre with this the death of John Eckius, and the manner thereof, which we finde in the Engliſh tranſlation of the Hiſtory of John Carion, fol. 250. in theſe words expreſſed. This yeere (ſayth he) died at Ingoldſtate, Doct. Eckius, a faithfull ſervant and champion of the Pope, and a defender of the abominable Papacy. But as his life was full of all ungodlineſſe, uncleanneſſe, and blaſphemy; ſo was his end miſerable, hard, and pitifull, inſomuch that his laſt words (as it is noted of many credible perſons) were theſe; In caſe the foure thouſand Guildens were ready, the matter were diſpatched, &c. (Dreaming belike of ſome Cardinalſhip that he ſhould have bought.) Some ſay that the Pope had granted him a certaine Deanry, which he ſhould have redeemed from the Court of Rome with the foreſaid ſumme. Now what a heavenly end this was of M. Eckius, I leave it to the Readers judgement.

Ex appendice Hiſt. Ioan. Carionis.

Gods judgement upon one John Vander warf, Shoulted of Antwerpe, a perſecutor.

Shilpad, a kind of ſhelfiſh, faſhioned like a Tode, with a hard and a broad ſhell upon his backe.

In the City of Antwerpe was (as they terme him there) a Shoulted, that is to ſay, the next Officer to the Markgrave, one named John Vander Warfe, a Baſtard ſon of a ſtocke or kindred called Warfe, of good eſtimation amongſt the chiefeſt in Antwerpe. Who, as hee was of nature cruell, ſo was hee of judgement perverſe and corrupt, and a ſore perſecutor of Chriſts ſtocke, with greedineſſe ſeeking and ſhedding innocent bloud, and had drowned divers good men and women in the water, for the which hee was much commended of the bloudy generation. Of ſome hee was called a Bloud-hound or bloudy dogge. Of other he was called Shilpad, that is to ſay, Sheltode; for that he being a ſhort-grundy, and of little ſtature, did ride commonly with a great broad hat, as a churle of the country.

This man, after hee was weary of his office (wherein hee had continued above 20. yeeres) hee gave it over; and becauſe hee was now growne rich and wealthy, he intended to paſſe the reſidue of his life in pleaſure and quietneſſe.

Our Ladies drunken feaſt.

During which time, about the ſecond yeere after he had left his office, he came to Antwerpe to the feaſt called our Ladies Dumegang, to make merry; which feaſt is uſually kept on the Sunday following the Aſſumption of our Lady. The ſame day in the afternoone about foure of the clocke, he being well loden with wine, rode homewards in his Wagon, with his wife and a Gentlewoman waiting on her and his Foole. As ſoone as the Wagon was come without the gate of the City called Croneborgh gate, upon the wooden bridge being at that time made for a ſhift with railes or barres on both ſides for more ſurety of the paſſengers (halfe a mans height and more) the horſes ſtood ſtill, and would by no meanes goe forward, whatſoever the guider of the Wagon could doe.

Then hee in a drunken rage cried out to him that guided the Wagon, ſaying; Ride on in a thouſand Divels name, ride on. Whereat the poore man anſwered, that he could not make the horſes to goe forward. By and by, while they were yet thus talking, ſuddenly roſe, as it were, a mighty whirle-winde, with a terrible noiſe (the weather being very faire, and no winde ſtirring before) and toſt the Wagon over the barre into the Towne ditch, the ropes whereat the horſes had been tied, being broken aſunder in ſuch ſort, as if they had been cut with a ſharpe knife, the Wagon alſo being caſt upſide-downe, with the fore-end thereof turned toward the Towne againe, and he drowned in the mire; and when he was taken up, it was found, that his necke alſo was broken. His wife was taken up alive, but died alſo within three dayes after. But the Gentlewoman and the Foole, by Gods mighty providence, were preſerved and had no harme. The Foole hearing the people ſay his Maſter was dead, ſayd; And was not I dead, was not I dead too? This was done, Anno 1553. Witneſſe hereof not only the Printer of the ſame ſtory in Dutch, dwelling then in Antwerpe, whoſe name was Francis Fraet, a good man, and afterward for hatred put to death of Papiſts, but alſo divers Dutchmen here now in England, and a great number of Engliſh Merchants, which were at Antwerpe, and are yet alive.

Eraſm. in Epiſtola Apologetica, Deutil. Colloqui.

Eraſmus in an Epiſtle or Apology written in defence of his Colloquies, inferreth mention of a certaine noble perſon of great riches and poſſeſſions, who having wife and children, with a great family at home (to whom by Saint Pauls rule he was bound in conſcience principally above all other worldly things to attend) had purpoſed before his death to goe ſee Jeruſalem. And thus all things being ſet in order, this Noble man, about to ſet forward on his journey, committed the care of his wife (whom he left great with childe,) and of his Lordſhips and Caſtles to an Archbiſhop, as to a moſt ſure and truſty father. To make ſhort, it hapned in the journey this Noble man to dye. Whereof ſo ſoone as the Archbiſhop had intelligence, in ſtead of a father he became a theefe and a robber, ſeiſing into his owne hands all his Lordſhips and poſſeſſions. And moreover, not yet contented with all this, hee layd ſiege againſt a ſtrong fort of his (unto the which his wife for ſafeguard of her ſelfe did flee) where in concluſion ſhe, with the childe that ſhe went with all, was pitifully ſlaine, and ſo miſerably periſhed. Which ſtory was done (as teſtifieth Eraſmus) not ſo long before his time, but that there remaine the Nephewes of the ſaid Noble man then alive, to whom the ſame inheritance ſhould have fallen, but they could not obtaine it.

Againſt Idolatrous Pilgrimage.

A wonderfull example of Gods judgement at Gaunt. An. 1565.

In the yeere of our Lord, 1565. there was in the Towne of Gaunt in Flanders, one William de Weber, accuſed and impriſoned by the Provoſt of S. Peters in Gaunt (who had in his Cloiſter a priſon and a place of execution) and the day when the ſayd William was called to the place of judgment, the Provoſt ſent for M. Giles Brackleman, principall Advocate of the Councell of Flanders, and Borough-Maſter and Judge of S. Peters in Gaunt, with other of the Rulers of the Towne of Gaunt, to ſit in judgement upon him, and as they ſate in judgement, the Borough-Maſter, named M. Giles Brackleman, reaſoned with the ſayd William de Weber upon divers Articles of his faith.

Three cauſes why Saints are not to be prayed unto.

The one whereof was, why the ſayd William de Weber denied that it was lawfull to pray to Saints; and hee anſwered (as the report goeth) for three cauſes. The one was, that they were but creatures, and not the Creator.

The ſecond was, that if hee ſhould call upon them, the Lord did both ſee it, and heare it: and therefore he durſt give the glory to none other, but to God.

The third and chiefeſt cauſe was, that the Creator had commanded in his holy Word to call upon him in troubles, unto which commandement he durſt neither adde, nor take from it.

The Borough-Maſter M. Giles Brackleman alſo demanded, whether hee did not beleeve that there was a Purgatory which he ſhould goe into after this life, where every one ſhould be purified and cleanſed.

Purgatory denied.

He anſwered, that he had read over the whole Bible, and could finde no ſuch place, but the death of Chriſt was his Purgatory: with many other queſtions preceeding after their order, untill hee came to pronounce his condemnation. But ere the ſayd condemnation was read forth, the judgement of God was layd upon the ſayd Borough-Maſter, who ſuddenly at that preſent inſtant was ſtricken with a Palſie, that his mouth was drawne up almoſt to his eare, and ſo he fell down, the reſt of the Lords by and by ſtanding up and ſhadowing him that the people could not well ſee him; and alſo the people were willed to depart, who being ſtill called upon to depart, anſwered, the place was ſo ſmall to goe out, that they could goe no faſter. Then the Borough-Maſter of the Town being taken up, was carried to his houſe, and it is not yet underſtood nor commonly knowne that ever he ſpake word after he was firſt ſtricken, but was openly knowne to be dead the next day following. And yet notwithſtanding that this was done about ten of the clock, they burned the ſaid William de Weber within three houres after, on the ſame day.

The judgment of God upon Giles Brackleman the Borough-Maſter.

William de Weber martyr, burnt at Gaunt. Anno 1565.

The fourth day of March, 1566. the like example of the Lords terrible judgement was ſhewed upon ſir Garret Trieſt Knight, who had long before promiſed to the Regent to bring downe the preaching. For the which act (as the report goeth) the Regent promiſed againe to make him a Grave, which is an Earle. Of the which ſir Garret it is alſo ſayd, that he comming from Bruxels towards Gaunt, brought with him the death of the Preachers, and being come to Gaunt, the ſaid ſir Garret with other of the Lords having received from the Regent a Commiſſion to ſweare the Lords and Commons unto the Romiſh religion, the ſaid ſir Garret the 4. day of March above noted, at night being at ſupper, willed the Lady his wife to call him in the morning one houre ſooner than he was accuſtomed to riſe, for that hee ſhould the next day have much buſineſſe to doe in the Towne-houſe, to ſweare the Lords and people to the Romiſh religion. But ſee what hapned. The ſaid ſir Garret going to bed in good health (as it ſeemed) when the Lady his wife called him in the morning, according to his appointment, was found dead in her bed by her, and ſo unable to proſecute his wicked purpoſe.

Another terrible example of Gods judgement againſt ſir Garret Trieſt Gentleman, and then Alderman of Gaunt, a perſecutor, Anno 1566.

Another example of Gods judgment upon Martin de Peſter one of the principall Secretaries of Gaunt, Anno 1566.

The fifth day of March, 1566. which was the day that ſir Garret Trieſt appointed to bee there, and the Lords of Gaunt were come into the Town-houſe (as they had afore appointed) to proceed and to give the oath, according as they had their Commiſſion, and M. Martin de Peſter the Secretary being appointed and about to give the oath, as the firſt man ſhould have ſworne, the ſayd Martin de Peſter was ſtricken of God with preſent death likewiſe, and fell downe, and was carried away in a chaire or ſettell, and never ſpake after. Witneſſe hereunto.

A ſtory of a tame divell coniured in an Abbey in Suevia.

About the borders of Suevia in Germany, not far from the City of Vberling, there was a certaine Monaſtery of Ciſtercian Monkes, called Salmeſuille, founded in the dayes of Pope Innocent 2. by a noble Baron named Guntherame, about the yeere of our Lord, 1170. This Celle thus being erected, in proceſſe of time was inlarged with more ample poſſeſſions, finding many and great benefactors and endowers liberally contributing unto the ſame; as Emperors, Dukes, and rich Barons.

A ſubtle device of the Monkes, to fray away their gueſts.

Amongſt whom moſt eſpeciall were the Earls of Montfort, who had beſtowed upon that Monaſtery many new liberties and great priviledges, upon this condition, that they ſhould receive with free hoſpitality any ſtranger both horſeman or footeman, for one nights lodging, whoſoever came. But this hoſpitality did not long ſo continue, through a ſubtle and divelliſh device of one of the Monkes, who tooke upon him to counterfeit to play the part of the divell, ratling and raging in his chaines, where the ſtrangers ſhould lie, after a terrible manner, in the night time to fray away the gueſts; by reaſon whereof no ſtranger nor traveller durſt there abide, and ſo continued this a long ſpace.

At length (as God would) it ſo hapned, that one of the Earles of the ſayd houſe of Montfort, benefactors to that Abbey, comming to the Monaſtery, was there lodged, whether of ſet purpoſe, or by chance, it is not knowne.

The puniſhment of God upon a Monk that would counterfeit the Divell.

When the night came, and the Earle was at his reſt, the Monke after his wonted manner beginneth his Pageant, to play the tame, yea rather the wilde Divell. There was ſtamping, ramping, ſpitting of fire, roaring, thundering, bounſing of boords, and ratling of chains, enough to make ſome man ſtarke mad. The Earle hearing the ſudden noyſe, and being ſomewhat peradventure affraid at the firſt, although he had not then the feate of conjuring, yet taking a good heart unto him, and running to his ſword, he laid about him well favouredly, and following ſtill the noyſe of the Divell, ſo conjured him at the laſt, that the Monke, which counterfeited the Divell in jeſt, was ſlaine in his owne likeneſſe in earneſt. Ex Gaſpare Bruſchio, in Chronologia Monaſteriorum Germaniæ.

After the impriſonment of the Congregation, which were taken hearing Gods Word in Saint James ſtreete in Paris, Anno 1558. (as is above ſtoried) was a letter written to the King, which was divulgate abroad, proving and declaring by divers hiſtories, what afflictions and calamities from time to time, by Gods righteous judgment, have fallen upon ſuch as have been enemies to his people, and have reſiſted the free paſſage of his holy Word, In which Letter, forſomuch as beſide the ſaid examples much other good fruitfull matter is contained, worthy of all men to be read, and eſpecially of Princes to be conſidered, I thought good here to copy out the whole, as the French booke doth give it. The tranſlation of the which letter into Engliſh, is after this tenour, as followeth.

¶ A Letter tranſlated out of French into Engliſh, written to King Henry the 2. French King.

The doings of Henry 2. F. king againſt the Lutherans never proſpered with him.

Conſider I pray you ſir, and you ſhall finde that all your afflictions have come upon you, ſince you have ſet your ſelfe againſt thoſe which are called Lutherans.

When you made the Edict of Chaſteaubriant, God ſent you warres; but when ye ceaſed the execution of your ſayd Edict, and as long as ye were enemy unto the Pope, and going into Almany for the defence of the liberty of the Germaines afflicted for religion, your affaires proſpered as ye would wiſh or deſire.

This truce was betweene the French King and the Emperor, which the Pope cauſed to be broken.

On the contrary, what hath become upon you ſince you were joyned with the Pope againe, having received a ſword from him for his owne ſafeguard? And who was it that cauſed you to breake the truce? God hath turned in a moment your proſperities into ſuch afflictions, that they touch not only the ſtate of your owne perſon, but of your Kingdome alſo.

The cruell purpoſe of the duke of Guiſe diſappointed.

To what end came the enterpriſe of the Duke of Guiſe in Italy, going about the ſervice of the enemy of God, and purpoſing after his returne to deſtroy the Vallies of Piemont, to offer or ſacrifice them to God for his victories? The event hath well declared, that God can turne upſide downe our counſels and enterpriſes; as hee overturned of late the enterpriſe of the Conſtable of France at S. Quintins, having vowed to God, that at his returne he would goe and deſtroy Geneva, when he had gotten the victory.

The wicked vow of the Conſtable of France defeated.

The marvellous iudgment of God upon a burning perſecutor.

Have you not heard of L. Ponchet Archbiſhop of Toures, who made ſute for the erection of a Court called Chamber Ardent, wherein to condemne the Proteſtants to the fire? who afterwards was ſtricken with a diſeaſe called the fire of God; which began at his feete, and ſo aſcended upward, that he cauſed one member after another to be cut off, and ſo died miſerably without any remedy.

Gods fearfull hand upon Caſtellanus, perſecutor.

Alſo one Caſtellanus, who having inriched himſelfe by the Goſpel, and forſaking the pure doctrine thereof to returne unto his vomit againe, went about to perſecute the Chriſtians at Orleans, and by the hand of God was ſtricken in his body with a ſickneſſe unknowne to the Phyſitians, the one halfe of his body burning as hote as fire, and the other as cold as Ice; and ſo moſt miſerably crying and lamenting, ended his life.

There bee other infinite examples of Gods judgements worthy to bee remembred; as the death of the Chancellor and Legate du Prat, which was the firſt that opened to the Parliament the knowledge of hereſies, and gave out the firſt Commiſſions to put the faithfull to death, who afterward died in his houſe at Natoillet, ſwearing and horribly blaſpheming God, and his ſtomacke was found pierced and gnawne aſunder with wormes.

Alſo John Ruſe, Counſellor in the Parliament, comming from the Court, after he had made report of the Proceſſe againſt the poore innocents, was taken with a burning in the lower part of his belly, and before he could be brought home to his houſe, the fire invaded all his ſecret parts, and ſo he died miſerably, burning all his belly over, without any ſigne or token of the acknowledging of God.

The wicked end of Claude de Aſſes, perſecutor.

Alſo one named Claude de Aſſes, a Counſellor in the ſayd Court, the ſaid day that he gave his opinion and conſent to burne a faithfull Chriſtian (albeit it was not done indeed as hee would have it) after he had dined, committed whoredome with a ſervant in the houſe, and even in doing the act was ſtricken with a diſeaſe called Apoplexia, whereof he died out of hand.

Peter Liſet, chief Preſident of the ſaid Court, and one of the authors of the foreſayd burning chamber, was depoſed from his office, for being knowne to be out of his right wit, and bereaved of his underſtanding.

Alſo John Morin, Lieutenant criminall of the Provoſt of Paris, after hee had been the cauſe of the death of many Chriſtians, was finally ſtriken with a diſeaſe in his legges, called the Wolves, whereby he loſt the uſe of them, and died alſo out of his wits, many dayes before denying and blaſpheming God.

John Andrew, Booke binder, plagued.

Likewiſe John Andrew, Booke-binder of the Palace, a ſpie for the Preſident Liſet, and of Bruſeard the Kings Solicitter, died in a fury and madneſſe.

The terrible vengeance of God upon Jo. de Roma, a terrible perſecutor.

The Inquiſitor John de Roma in Provence, his fleſh fell from him by peece-meale, ſo ſtinking that no man might come neere him.

John Minerius a cruell perſecutor plagued of God.

Alſo John Minerius of Provence, which was the cauſe of the death of a great number of men, women, and children, at Cabriers and at Merindol, died with bleeding in the lower parts, the fire having taken his belly, blaſpheming and deſpiſing God: beſides many other whereof we might make recitall, which were puniſhed with the like kinde of death.

The French K. by ſundry ſorts of troubles warned of God.

It may pleaſe your Maieſty to remember your ſelfe that ye had no ſooner determined to ſet upon us, but new troubles were by and by moved by your enemies, with whom ye could come to no agreement; which GOD would not ſuffer, foraſmuch as your peace was grounded upon the perſecution which ye pretended againſt Gods ſervants: As alſo your Cardinals cannot let through their cruelty the courſe of the Goſpel, which hath taken ſuch roote in your Realme, that if God ſhould give you leave to deſtroy the profeſſors thereof, you ſhould be almoſt a King without ſubjects.

Riches and pride of the Clergy, the fountaine of all evils.

Tertullian hath well ſayd, that the bloud of Martyrs is the ſeede of the Goſpel. Wherefore to take away all theſe evills comming of the riches of the Papiſts, which cauſe ſo much whoredome, Sodomitry, and inceſt, wherein they wallow like Hogs, feeding their idle bellies; the beſt way were to put them from their lands and poſſeſſions, as the old ſacrificing Levites were, according to the expreſſe commandement which was given to Joſua. For as long as the commandement of God tooke place, and that they were voide of ambition, the purity of Religion remained whole and perfect; but when they began to aſpire to principality, riches, and worldly honours, then began the abomination of deſolation that Chriſt foretold.

The pureneſſe of the primitive Church how long it continued, and whereby.

The falſe donation of Conſtantine.

It was even ſo in the Primitive Church, for it flouriſhed and continued in all pureneſſe, as long as the Miniſters were of ſmall wealth, and ſought not their particular profit, but the glory of GOD only. But ſince the Pope began to be Prince-like, and to uſurpe the dominion of the Empire under the colour of a falſe donation of Conſtantine, they have turned the Scriptures from their true ſenſe, and have attributed the ſervice to themſelves, which we owe to God. Wherefore your Maieſty may ſeiſe with good right upon all the temporalties of the Benefices, and that with a ſafe conſcience to employ them to their true and right uſe.

Exhortation to the king to ſeiſe upon the temporalties of the Clergy.

The riches of the Popes Clergy how they ought to be employed.

Firſt, for the finding and maintaining of the faithfull Miniſters of the Word of GOD, for ſuch livings ſhall be requiſite for them, according as the caſe ſhall require. Secondly, for the entertainment of your Juſtices that give judgement. Thirdly, for the relieving of the poore, and maintenance of Colledges to inſtruct the poore youth in that which they ſhall bee moſt apt unto. And the reſt, which is infinite, may remaine for entertainment of your owne eſtate and affaires, to the great eaſement of your poore people, which alone beare the burthen, and poſſeſſe in manner nothing.

In this doing, an infinite number of men, and even of your Nobility, which live of the Crucifixe, ſhould employ themſelves to your ſervice, and the Common-wealths ſo much the more diligently, as they ſee that ye recompence none but thoſe that have deſerved; whereas now there is an infinite number of men in your Kingdome, which occupy the chiefeſt and greateſt Benefices, which never deſerved any part of them, &c. And thus much touching the ſuperfluous poſſeſſions of the Popes lordly Clergy. Now proceeding further in this exhortation to the King, thus the letter importeth.

The malicious and lying ſlanders of the Papiſts to bring the true Goſpell is in hatred with Princes.

But when the Papiſts ſee that they have not to alledge for themſelves any reaſon, they aſſay to make odious to your Maieſty the Lutherans (as they call us) and ſay; If their ſayings take place, ye ſhall be faine to remaine a private perſon, and that there is never change of religion, but there is alſo change of Princedome. A thing as falſe as when they accuſe us to be Sacramentaries, and that wee deny the authority of Magiſtrates, under the ſhadow of certaine furious Anabaptiſts, which Sathan hath raiſed in our time to darken the light of the Goſpel. For the hiſtories of the Emperors which have begun to receive the Chriſtian religion, and that which is come to paſſe in our time, ſhew the contrary.

Conſtantine confirmed in his kingdome the more, by receiving the Goſpel.

Was there ever Prince more feared and obeyed, than Conſtantine in receiving the Chriſtian religion? was hee therefore put from the Empire? No, he was thereby the more confirmed and eſtabliſhed in the ſame, and alſo his poſterity which ruled themſelves by his providence. But ſuch as have fallen away, and followed mens traditions, God hath deſtroyed, and their race is no more knowne in earth: So much doth God deteſt them that forſake him.

Examples of England and Germany, how Princes loſe no honour by the Goſpel.

The Popes religion more noiſome to the ſtate of Princes than the doctrine of the Lutherans.

And in our time the late Kings of England and Germany, were they conſtrained in reproving ſuperſtitions, which the wickedneſſe of the time had brought in, to forſake their Kingdomes and Princedomes? All men ſee the contrary; and what honour, fidelity, and obedience the people in our time that have received the reformation of the Goſpel, doe under their Princes and ſuperiours. Yea, I may ſay, that the Princes knew not before what it was to be obeyed, at that time when the rude and ignorant people received ſo readily the diſpenſations of the Pope, to drive out their owne Kings and naturall Lords.

Wholſome remedy ſhewed againſt the Popes pride.

The true and only remedy, ſir, is, that ye cauſe to be holden a holy and free Councell, where ye ſhould be chiefe, and not the Pope and his, who ought but only to defend their cauſes by the holy Scriptures; that in the meane while ye may ſeek out men not corrupted, ſuſpected, nor partiall, whom ye may charge to give report faithfully unto you of the true ſenſe of the holy Scriptures. And this done, after the example of the good Kings, Joſaphat, Ezechias, and Joſias, ye ſhall take out of the Church all Idolatry, ſuperſtition, and abuſe which is found directly contrary to the holy Scriptures of the old and new Teſtament, and by that meanes ye ſhall guide your people in the true and pure ſervice of God, not regarding in the meane time the cavilling pretences of the Papiſts, which ſay that ſuch queſtions have been already anſwered at generall Councels: for it is knowne well enough, that no Councell hath beene lawfull ſince the Popes have uſurped the principality and tyranny upon mens ſoules, but they have made them ſerve to their covetouſneſſe, ambition, and cruelty; and the contrary which is among thoſe Councels, maketh enough for their diſproofe, beſide a hundred thouſand other abſurdities againſt the Word of GOD, which be in them. The true proofe for ſuch matters is in the true and holy Scriptures, to the which no times nor age hath any preſcription to bee alledged againſt them; for by them wee receive the Councels founded upon the Word of God, and alſo by the ſame we reiect that doctrine which is repugnant.

A blinde ſhift of the Papiſts to ſtop Princes from calling generall Councels.

The contrarieties in the Popes Councels enough for their diſproofe.

Prophecie againſt the French king.

And if ye do thus ſir, God will bleſſe your enterpriſe, he will increaſe and confirme your reigne and Empire, and your poſterity. If otherwiſe, deſtruction is at your gate, and unhappy are the people which ſhall dwell under your obedience. There is no doubt but God will harden your heart as he did Pharaohs, and take off the Crown from your head, as he did to Ieroboam, Nadab, Baza, Achab, and to many other Kings, which have followed mens traditions, againſt the commandement of God, and give it to your enemies to triumph over you and your children.

And if the Emperor Antonine the meeke, although hee were a Pagan and Idolater, ſeeing himſelfe bewrapt with ſo many warres, ceaſed the perſecutions which were in his time againſt the Chriſtians, and determined in the end to heare their cauſes and reaſons, how much more ought you that beare the name of moſt Chriſtian King, to be carefull and diligent to ceaſe the perſecutions againſt the poore Chriſtians, ſeeing they have not troubled, nor doe trouble in any wiſe the ſtate of your Kingdome, and your affaires; conſidering alſo that the Iewes be ſuffered through all Chriſtendome, although they be mortall enemies of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, which we hold by common accord and conſent for our God, Redeemer, and Saviour; and that untill ye have heard lawfully debated, and underſtand our reaſons, taken out of the holy Scriptures, and that your Majeſty have judged, if we be worthy of ſuch puniſhments. For if wee bee not overcome by the Word of God, the fires, the ſword, nor the cruelleſt torments ſhall make us affraid. Theſe bee exerciſes that GOD hath promiſed to his, the which hee foretold ſhould come in the laſt times, that they ſhould not be troubled when ſuch perſecutions ſhall come upon them.

Tranſlated out of the French Booke, intituled Commentaries of the ſtate of the Church and publike weale, &c. pag. 7.

The ſtory and end of the French king.

The ſtory and end of Henry 2. the French K. that would not be warned.

WHoſoever was the author or authors of this letter above prefixed, herein thou ſeeſt (good Reader) good counſell given to the king. If he had had the grace to receive it, and had followed the ſame, no doubt but Gods bleſſing working with him, he had not only ſet that Realme in a bleſſed ſtate from much diſturbance, but alſo had continued himſelfe in all flouriſhing felicity of princely honour and dignity. For ſo doth the Lord commonly bleſſe and advance ſuch Kings and Princes as ſeeke his honour, and ſubmit their wils to his obedience. But commonly the fault of Kings and Potentates of this world is, that being ſet about with Paraſites, either they ſeldome heare the truth told them, or if they doe, yet will they not lightly be put from their owne wils, diſdaining to be admoniſhed by their inferiours, be their counſell never ſo wholeſome and godly. Which thing many times turneth them to great plagues and calamity, as by plentifull examples of Kings deſtroyed, wounded, impriſoned, depoſed, drowned, poyſoned, &c. may well to them that reade Hiſtories appeare: but eſpecially this preſent example of Henry the French King, the ſecond of that name, is in this our age notoriouſly to be conſidered. Who being well warned before (as may ſeeme) would not yet ſurceaſe his cruell perſecution againſt the Lords people, but rather was the more hardened in heart, and inflamed againſt them; inſomuch that he ſaid to Anne du Bourg, one of the high Court of Parliament in Paris, threatning him, that he would ſee him burne with his owne eyes.

What commeth to kings that refuſe good counſell.

{ Anno 1558. }

Henry 2. the French king wholly ſet to perſecute the Church of Chriſt.

Further, how his purpoſe was to extend his power and force likewiſe againſt other places moe, in perſecuting the Goſpel of Chriſt and profeſſors thereof, to the uttermoſt of his ability, I leave it to the report of them, which in this matter know more than I here will utter.

Gods mighty power againſt his enemies.

But notwithſtanding all theſe crakes and threatnings of the King (to ſee what the LORD can doe in making high Kings to ſtoope) even the ſame day when the King was in his moſt rage againſt theſe good men, Almighty God, taking the cauſe in hand to fight for his Church, ſo turned the matter, that he made the great enemy of his, both with his mouth and with his hand to worke his owne deſtruction; with his mouth in commanding, with his hand, in giving him the Lance into his hand, which the ſame day gave him his deaths wound, as by the ſequele hereof in reading ye may underſtand.

The ſtroke of Gods hands upon Henry 2. French king.

KIng Henry being in the Parlament houſe, which was kept at the Frier Auguſtines at Paris, becauſe the Palace was in preparing againſt the marriage of his daughter, and his ſiſter, and having heard the opinion in Religion of Anne du Bourg Counſellor in the Law, a man eloquent and learned, he cauſed the ſayd Anne du Bourg, and Loys du Faur, Counſellors, to bee taken priſoners by the Conſtable of France, who apprehended them, and delivered them into the hands of the County of Montgommery, the which carried them to priſon. Againſt whom the King being wrathfull and angry, among other talke, ſayd to the ſayd Anne du Bourg; Theſe eyes of mine ſhall ſee thee burnt: And ſo on the 19. of Iune, Commiſſion was given to the Iudges to make his Proceſſe.

Henry 2. the French king ſore ſet againſt the poore Proteſtants.

During this meane while, great feaſts and banquets were preparing in the Court, for joy and gladneſſe of the marriage that ſhould bee of the Kings daughter and ſiſter, againſt the laſt day of Iune ſave one. So when the day and time above prefixed was come, the King employed all the morning in examining as well the Preſidents as Counſellors of the ſayd Parliament againſt theſe priſoners, and other their companions that were charged with the ſame doctrine, which being done, they went to dinner.

The King, after he had dined, for that he was one of the defendants at the Tourney, which was ſolemnly made in Saint Antonies ſtreete, neere to the priſon where the foreſayd priſoners were committed, entred into the Liſts; and therein juſting, as the manner is, had broken many ſtaves right valiantly as could bee, running as well againſt the County of Montgommery, as other moe.

Henry 2. the French king in his triumph juſteth againſt Montgommery.

Whereupon hee was highly commended of the lookers on. And becauſe he had done ſo valiantly, and was thought now to have done enough, he was deſired to ceaſe with praiſe. But he being the more inflamed with the hearing of his prayſe, would needes runne another courſe with Montgommery: who then refuſing to runne againſt the King, and kneeling upon his knees for pardon not to runne; the King being eagerly ſet, commanded him upon his allegeance to run, and (as ſome affirme) did alſo himſelfe put the ſtaffe in his hand, unto whoſe hands he had committed the foreſaid priſoners a little before. Montgommery thus being inforced whether hee would or no to runne againſt the King, addreſſed himſelfe after the beſt wiſe to obey the Kings commandement.

Montgomery againſt his will commanded to Juſt againſt the King.

Whereupon he and the King met together ſo ſtoutly, that in breaking their ſpeares the King was ſtricken with the counter-blow, ſo right in one of his eyes, by reaſon that the viſour of his Helmet ſuddenly fell downe at the ſame inſtant, that the ſhivers entred into his head; ſo that the braines were periſhed, and thereupon ſo feſtered, that no remedy could be found, although Phyſitians and Surgeons were ſent for from all places in the Realme, as alſo from Brabant by King Philip, but nothing availed, ſo that the 11. day after, that is, the 10. of July, 1559. he ended his life in great dolour, having reigned 12. yeeres, three moneths, and 10. dayes.

Henry 2. the French king ſtricken and killed in his owne juſting.

The devliſh perſwaſion of the Cardinall of Loraine at the death of the F. king.

Some report, that among other words he ſayd, that hee feared hee was ſtricken for caſting the poore Chriſtians wrongfully in priſon: but the Cardinall of Loraine ſtanding by (as he was alwayes at hand) ſaid unto him, that it was the enemy that tempted him, and that he ſhould be ſtedfaſt in the faith. By this means the Hall, which was prepared for a place of joy and gladneſſe, did now ſerve for a Chappell to keepe the corps, being dreſſed with blacke mourning cloth, and night and day there was nothing heard but mourning and lamenting for the ſpace of 40. dayes.

Certain Gentlemen executed at Amboiſe for ſtanding againſt the houſe of Guiſe.

About two yeeres after this, which was the yeere of our Lord, 1561. there were certaine Gentlemen put to death at Amboiſe, for taking armes againſt the houſe of Guiſe. Touching which Gentlemen this is to be noted, that as one of them ſhould be brought to the place of execution, where the other lay dead before him, he thruſt his hands into the bloud of two of his companions which were there beheaded, and then lifting them up to heaven, cried with a loud voice; Lord, behold the bloud of thy children: thou wilt in time and place revenge it.

The Lords puniſhment upon the Chancellor Olivier for his ſentence given againſt certaine Gentlemen, Proteſtants.

Not long after the ſame, the Chancellor Olivier, who was condemner of them, at the inſtigation and purſuit of the Cardinall of Loraine, through great remorſe of conſcience fell ſicke, and in a frenſie caſting out ſighes unceſſantly, and afflicting himſelfe after a fearefull and ſtrange faſhion for his unrighteous ſentence, and more than barbarous cruelty, ſhrieked upon a ſudden with an horrible cry, and ſaid; O Cardinall, thou wilt make us all to be damned. And within a very few dayes after he died.

The death of Francis 2. French king after he began to withſtand the courſe of the Goſpel. How the Lord worketh for his Goſpel.

Francis the ſecond of that name, King of France, at the perſwaſion of the Cardinall of Loraine, and of certaine others, cauſed an aſſembly of the Eſtates of the Realme in the Towne of Orleans, among other things to maintaine the Papall See, to the overthrow of thoſe which would live after the ſincerity of the Goſpel: but being fallen ſicke, ſhortly after, in the foreſayd place, of a feaver, through an impoſtume in his left eare hee dyed the fourth of December, 1561. having reigned but one yeere, and about five moneths.

It was ſaid of this King Francis (as the author above mentioned reporteth) that when hee was drawing toward his end, the Cardinall of Loraine made him to ſay and pronounce theſe words which follow; Lord forgive me my treſpaſſes, and impute not unto me the faults which my Miniſters have done under my name and authority.

The words of king Francis at his death.

The terrible ſtroke of Gods revenge upon Carol. 9. the French king.

Neither is it unworthy of obſervation, that after the father it happened in much like ſort by Gods mighty judgement unto Carol. 9. his ſecond ſonne, and brother to Francis above mentioned, in theſe our later dayes; who after the horrible and bloudy murder of the Admirall, and other true profeſſors of Chriſts Goſpel, both men, women, and children, to the number of many thouſands of divers Cities, inſomuch that the priſons and ſtreets are ſayd to be coloured with bloud, ſmoaking after ſuch a cruell ſort, as in our time or country the like hath not hitherto beene ſeene; by the terrible ſtroke of Gods juſt revenge, the ſame King, by credible report of ſtory, is ſaid to dye of bleeding, not only at his eares and noſe, but in all other places of his body, where bloud might have any iſſue.

The death of Charles the Emperor.

Unto theſe afore recited hiſtories of King Henry and his two ſonnes, might alſo be added the death of the Emperor Charles the fifth. Who in like manner being an enemy, and a great terrour to the Goſpel, was cut off likewiſe for doing any more hurt to the Church, much about the ſame time, Anno 1558. which was but three moneths before the death of Queene Mary, and ten moneths before the death of the ſaid Henry the ſecond. Touching the death of which Charles and Henry, and Francis, this Epitaph following was written in Latine Verſes, and printed in the French ſtory booke above alledged.

An Epitaph upon Charles Emperor, H. 2. French K. and Francis his ſon.

The ſudden death of Preſident Minard.

Not long after Anne du Bourges death, the Preſident Minard, who was a ſore perſecutor, and the condemner of the ſaid Anne du Bourg, as he returned from the Palace or Councell chamber to his owne houſe, being upon his Mule, even hard by his houſe, was ſlaine with a dagge; but who was the doer thereof, or for what cauſe he was ſlaine, for all the inquiſition and diligent ſearch that could be made, it was never knowne.

The puniſhment of God upon the K. of Navar, after he had revolted from the Goſpel to Popery.

Among many other examples worthy to bee noted, let us alſo conſider the end of the King of Navar, brother to the worthy Prince of Condy, who after hee had ſuſtained a certaine time the cauſe of the Goſpel, at length being allured by the flattering words of the Duke of Guiſe, and the Cardinall of Loraine his brother, and upon hope to have his lands reſtored againe, which the King of Spaine retained from him, was contented to alter his religion, and to joyne ſide with the Papiſts, and ſo being in campe with the Duke of Guiſe, at the ſiege of Roane, was there ſhot in with a pellet. After which wound received, being brought to a Towne three miles from the campe, called Preaux, he did vehemently repent and lament his backſliding from the Goſpel, promiſing to God moſt earneſtly, that if he might eſcape that hurt, hee would bring to paſſe that the Goſpel ſhould bee preached freely through all France: Notwithſtanding, within five or ſixe dayes after he died.

Neither did the Duke of Guiſe himſelfe, the great Arch-enemy of God and his Goſpel, continue in life long after that, but both hee and the whole Triumvirat of France, that is, three the greateſt Captaines of Popery were cut off for doing any more hurt, to wit, the Duke of Guiſe before Orleance, the Conſtable before Paris, the Marſhall of S. Andrew before Dreux.

Of the Emperor Sigiſmundus.

AMongſt others, here is not to bée paſt over nor forgotten the notable example of Gods iuſt ſcourge upon Sigiſmundus the Emperor, of whom mention is made before, in the condemnation of Iohn Huſſe, and Hierome of Prague. After the death and wrongfull condemnation of which bleſſed Martyrs, nothing afterward went proſperouſly with the ſayd Emperor, but all contrary; ſo that hée both died without iſſue, and in his warres hée ever went to the worſt. And not long after, Ladiſlaus his daughters ſonne King of Hungary, fighting againſt the Turke, was ſlaine in the field. So that in the time of one generation all the poſteritie and off-ſpring of this Emperor periſhed. Beſides this, Barbara his wife came to ſuch ruins by her wicked lewdneſſe, that ſhée became a ſhame and ſlander to the name and ſtate of all Quéenes. Whereby all Chriſtian Princes and Emperors may ſufficiently bée admoniſhed, if they have grace, what it is to defile themſelves with the bloud of Chriſts bleſſed Saints and Martyrs.

A note of Chriſtopher Parker.

CHriſtopher Parker, called Parker the wilde, mentioned before in this book of Monuments, who being a perſecutor of Richard Woodman, did manacle his hands with a cord, did caſt himſelfe into a pond, and ſo drowned himſelfe at Herſtmonceux, in Suſſex, the 8. September, 1575.

The ſtory of one Drainer of Kent, commonly called Iuſtice Nine-holes.

The ſtory of one Drainer, otherwiſe called Iuſtice Nine-holes.

I May not in this place omit the tragedie of one Drainer of Smarden in the Countie of Kent, Eſquire, who bearing grudge againſt one Gregorie Dods, Parſon of the ſayd Towne, for reproving his vicious life, ſent for him by two men, which tooke him and brought him before him, where he was had into a Parlour, as it were to breake-faſt. In which behinde the doore hée had placed one Roger Matthew ſecretly, to beare witneſſe what he ſhould ſay, no more being in ſight but the ſayd Drainer and one of his men, who willed and perſwaded him to ſpeake fréely his minde, for that there was not ſufficient record of his words to hurt him. But the Lord kept his talke without perill, whereby the ſayd Drainer ſent him to the next Iuſtice called M. George Dorell; who, perceiving it to bee done more of malice than otherwiſe, delivered him upon ſureties, to appeare at the next Seſſions at Canterbury, and at length he was baniſhed the Countrie.

A malicious practice to intrap a good man.

This ſaid Drainer afterward, being choſen Iuſtice, to ſhew himſelfe diligent in ſéeking the trouble of his neighbours, made in the Roode loft nine holes, that hée might looke about the Church in Maſſe time. In which place alway at the ſacring thereof, he would ſtand to ſée who looked not, or held not up his hands thereto; which perſons not ſo doing he would trouble and puniſh very ſore. Whereby he purchaſed a name there, and is called to this day Iuſtice Nine-holes, who now (God bée thanked) is Iohn out of office, and glad of his neighbours good will.

It ſo fell out, that ſince this was publiſhed, the ſayd Drainer came to the Printers houſe, with other aſſociates, demanding: Is Fox here? To whom anſwer was given, that Maſter Foxe was not within. Is the Printer within (quoth Drainer?) It was anſwered, Yea. Whereupon being required to come up into his houſe, he was aſked what his will was. Mary, ſayth hee, you have printed me falſe in your booke. Why, ſayth the Printer, is not your name Maſter Drainer, otherwiſe called Iuſtice Nine-holes? It is falſe ſayth he, I made but five with a great Augure, and the Parſon made the reſt. It was anſwered, I have not read that a Iuſtice ſhould make him a place in the Roode loft, to ſee if the people held up their hands. He ſayd, whereras you alledge, that I did it to ſee who adored the ſacrament, or who not, it is untrue; for I ſet as little by it, as the beſt of you all. Indeede, ſayth the Printer, ſo wee underſtand now; for you being at ſupper in Cheapeſide among certaine honeſt company, and there burdened with the matter, ſayd then, that you did it rather to looke upon faire wenches, than otherwiſe. He being in a great rage, ſware, ſaying to this purpoſe; Can a man ſpeak nothing but you muſt have underſtanding thereof? But, ſayth he, did I any man any hurt? It was anſwered, that he meant little good to Maſter Dods aforeſaid, eſpecially procuring a ſecret witneſſe behinde his doore, to catch ſome words that might tend to Dods deſtruction. Which thing Drainer ſware, as before, was not true. To whom the Printer replied, that it was moſt true, for that the party there ſecretly hidden, hath ſince upon his knees, aſking forgiveneſſe for his intent, confeſſed the ſame to Dods himſelfe. I will hang that knave, ſaith he: And ſo he departed in a rage; and ſince is deceaſed, whoſe death and order thereof, I referre to the ſecret Iudge,

A lamentable hiſtory of Iohn Whitman, Shoomaker, who ſuffered moſt cruell torments at Oſtend in Flanders, for the teſtimony of Ieſus Chriſt, and the truth of his Goſpel, Anno 1572.

A lamentable hiſtory of Iohn Whitman, Shoomaker.

IOhn Whitman Shoomaker, being about the age of 49. yeeres, borne in Tinen a Towne in Brabant, after his comming over into England, dwelt in Rie in the County of Suſſex, being married 23. yeeres: alwaies a profeſſor of the Goſpel, as well in the time of the freedome thereof, as in time of perſecution. About Candlemas, in the yeere 1572. unknowne to his friends in Rie, underſtanding of ſhipping in Rie, which was readie bound for Oſtend in Flanders, he went aboord the Saturday morning, and arrived at Oſtend that night, where hee lodged with one of his kinſmen there dwelling. The next day being Sunday, in the morning hee accompanied with his ſaid kinſman, tooke his journie, as it were to have paſſed higher into the countrie.

When they were about three miles on their way out of the Towne, ſuddenly Whitman ſtaied and would goe no further; but immediately returned backe againe to Oſtend, whither ſo ſoone as he was come, it being ſervice time in their Church, hee forthwith addreſſed himſelfe thither, and at the time of the heave-offering ſtept to the ſacrificer, and tooke from over his head his Idoll, ſaying theſe words in the dutch tongue; Is this your God? and ſo breaking it, caſt it downe under his feete, and trode thereon. Forthwith the people in an uproare came to lay hold on him, and hardly in the Church eſcaped he death by the ſouldiers there preſent, but being reſcued by ſome, to the intent to be further examined and made a publike ſpectacle hee was carried immediately to priſon. Upon the next day, being Munday, the Iudges and other Counſellors being aſſembled, hee was brought forth into the common Hall, and examined of his fact, the intent, the counſell and abettors thereof, and alſo of his faith: where he very conſtantly in defence of his Chriſtian faith, and great deteſtation of Idolatrie, demeaned himſelfe in ſuch ſort, that he wrung teares from the eyes of divers, both of the chiefe, and others preſent. So was he committed againe to priſon. The next day being Tueſday, he was brought out againe before the Iudges into the ſame place, And being examined as before, he no whit abated, but increaſed in his conſtancie. Whereupon ſentence was given upon him, to have his hand cut off, and his bodie ſcorched to death, and after to bée hanged up. So the day following, being Wedneſday, he was brought out of priſon to the Towne-hall, ſtanding in the Market place, all things belonging to execution being made readie there. Which when they were all readie, the Hangman went into the hall, and with a cord tied the hands of Whitman, and came out leading him thereby. So ſoone as Whitman was out of the houſe, hée made ſuch haſte, and as it were, ranne ſo to the place of execution, that hée drew the Hangman after him. There was a poſt ſet up with ſparres from the top thereof, a ſlope, downe to the ground, in manner of a tent, to the end that he ſhould bée only ſcorched to death, and not burned. When he was come to the place, the Hangman commanded him to lay downe his right hand upon a blocke, which he immediately with a hatchet ſmote off: the good man ſtill continuing conſtant, the Hangman ſtept behinde him, and bid him put out his tongue, which hée forthwith did, as farre as he could out of his mouth, through the which he thruſt a long inſtrument like a packe-néedle, and ſo let it ſticke. Then the Iudges, ſtanding by in the common hall, reade againe his fact and ſentence. Whereunto he could make no anſwer, his tongue hanging out of his head: ſo was he ſtripped out of his Caſſocke, his hoſe being put off in priſon, and put within his tent, and made faſt with two chaines, and fire was put round about, which broiled and ſcorched his bodie moſt miſerably, all blacke, he not being ſéene, but heard to make a noyſe within the tent. When hée was dead, hée was carried out to bée hanged upon a gibbet beſide the Towne.

Admonition to the Reader concerning the examples above mentioned.

IT hath béen a long perſwaſion gendred in the heads of many men theſe many yéeres, that to ground a mans faith upon Gods Word alone, and not upon the Sée and Church of Rome, following all the ordinances and conſtitutions of the ſame, was damnable hereſie, and to perſecute ſuch men to death, was high ſervice done to God. Whereupon have riſen ſo great perſecutions, ſlaughters, and murders, with ſuch effuſion of Chriſtian bloud through all parts of Chriſtendome by the ſpace of theſe 70. yéeres, as hath not before bin ſéen. And of theſe men Chriſt himſelfe doth full well warne us long before, truely propheſying of ſuch times to come, when they that ſlay his Miniſters and ſervants ſhould thinke themſelves to doe good ſervice unto God, Iohn 16. Now what wicked ſervice, and how deteſtable before GOD this is, which they falſly perſwade themſelves to be godly, what more evident demonſtrations can we require, than theſe ſo many, ſo manifeſt, and ſo terrible examples of Gods wrath pouring downe from heaven upon theſe perſecutors, whereof part we have already ſet forth; for to comprehend all (which in number are infinite) it is unpoſſible. Wherefore, although there bée many which will neyther heare, ſée, nor underſtand, what is for their profit, yet let all moderate & well diſpoſed natures take warning in time. And if the plaine Word of God will not ſuffice them, nor the bloud of ſo manie Martyrs will move them to imbrace the truth, and forſake errour, yet let the deſperate deaths and horrible puniſhments of their owne Papiſts perſwade them, how perillous is, the end of this damnable doctrine of Papiſtry. For if theſe Papiſts, which make ſo much of their painted Antiquitie, do think their procéedings to be ſo Catholike, and ſervice ſo acceptable to GOD, let them joyne this withall, and tell us how come then their procéedings to be ſo accurſed of God, & their end ſo miſerably plagued, as by theſe examples above ſpecified, is here notoriouſly to be ſéene? Againe, if the doctrine of them be ſuch hereſie, whom they have hitherto perſecuted for heretikes unto death; how then is Almightie GOD become a maintainer of heretikes, who hath revenged their bloud ſo grievouſly upon their enemies and perſecutors?

Three Arguments againſt the Papiſts. Gods Word. Bloud of Martyrs. Gods puniſhment.

The putting out of the French Kings eyes, which promiſed before with his eyes to ſée one of Gods true ſervants burned, who ſéeth not with his eies to be the ſtroke of Gods hand upon him? Then his ſon Francis after him, not regarding his fathers ſtripe, would yet néeds procéede in burning the ſame man: and did not the ſame God, which put out his fathers eyes, give him ſuch a blow on the eare, that it coſt him his life? If the plat-forme of Stephen Gardiner had béen a thing ſo neceſſary for the Church, & ſo gratefull unto God, why then did it not proſper with him, nor he with it, but both he and his plat-forme lay in the duſt, & none left behinde him to build upon it? After the time of Stephen Gardiner, and at the Councell of Trent, what conſpiracies and policies were deviſed? what practices and traines were laid through the ſecret confederacie of Princes and Prelates, for the utter ſubverſion of the Goſpel and all Goſpellers, which if God had ſéene to have béen for his glory, why then came they to none effect? yea, how or by whom were they diſcloſed and forepriſed, but by the Lord himſelfe, which would not have them come forward?

The vehement zeale of Quéene Mary was like to have ſet up the Pope here againe in England for ever, if it had ſo much pleaſed the Lord God as it pleaſed her ſelfe; or if it had béen ſo godly as it was bloudy, no doubt but Gods bleſſing would have gone withall. But when was the Realme of England more barren of all Gods bleſſings? what Prince ever reigned here more ſhorter time, or leſſe to his owne hearts eaſe than did Quéene Mary?

The Conſtable of France, when he covenanted with God that if he had the victory of St. Quintines, he would ſet upon Geneva, thought (no doubt) that hée had made a great good bargaine with God; much like unto Julian the Emperor, who going againſt the Perſians, made his vow, that if he ſped well, he would offer the bloud of Chriſtians. But what did God? came not both their vowes to like effect?

The examples of ſuch as revolted from the Goſpell to Papiſtrie be not many; but as few as they were, ſcarce can any be found which began to turne to the Pope, but the Lord began to turne from them, and to leave them to their ghoſtly enemy; as we have heard of the King of Navar in France, of Henry Smith, and Doctor Sharton in England, with other in other Countries moe, of whom ſome died in great ſorrow of conſcience, ſome in miſerable doubt of their ſalvation, ſome ſtricken by Gods hand, ſome driven to hang or drowne themſelves.

King of Navar, Henry Smith, D. Sharton.

The ſtinking death of Stephen Gardiner, of John de Roma, of Twyford, of the Bailiffe of Crowland: The ſudden death of the Suffragan of Dover, of Doctor Dunning, of Doctor Geffrey, of Berrie the Promoter: The miſerable and wretched end of Poncher Archbiſh. of Towers, of Cardinall Creſcentius, Caſtellatus: The deſperate diſeaſe of Rockwood, of Latomus, of Guarlacus: The earthly ending of Henrie Beauford Cardinall of Wincheſter, of Eckius, of Thornton called Dicke of Dover: The wilfull and ſelfe murder of Pauter, of Richard Long; of Bomelius, beſides infinite other: The dreadfull taking away and murren of ſo many perſecuting Biſhops, ſo many bloudie Promoters, and malitious adverſaries, in ſuch a ſhort time together with Quéen Marie, and that without any mans hand, but only the ſecret working of Gods juſt judgement.

To adde to theſe alſo the ſtinking death of Edmund Boner, commonly named the bloudie Biſhop of London; who not many yeares agoe, in the time and reigne of Quéene Elizabeth, after he had long feaſted and banquetted in durance at the Marſhalſea, as hée wretchedly died in his blinde Poperie, ſo as ſtinkingly, and as blindely at midnight was he brought out and buried in the outſide of all the City, amongſt théeves and murderers, a place right convenient for ſuch a murderer; with confuſion and deriſion both of men and children, who, trampling upon his grave, well declared how he was hated both of God and man. What elſe be all theſe (I ſay) but plaine viſible arguments, teſtimonies, and demonſtrations even from heaven againſt the Pope, his murdering Religion, and his bloudie Doctrine? For who can deny their doings not to bee good, whoſe end is ſo evill?. If Chriſt bid us to know men by their fruites, and eſpecially ſeeing by the end all things are to be tried, how can the profeſſion of that doctrine pleaſe God, which endeth ſo ungodly? Eſaias, Chapt. 50. propheſying of the end of Gods enemies, which would needs walke in the light of their owne ſetting up, and not in he light of the Lords kindling, threatneth to them this finall malediction, in doloribus (ſaith he) dormietis, i. In ſorrow ſhall ye ſleepe. Let us now take a ſurvey of all thoſe perſecutors, which of late have ſo troubled the earth (and almoſt have burned up the world with fagots and fire, for maintenance of the Popes Religion) and ſee what the end hath been of them that are now gone, and whither their religion hath brought them, but eyther to deſtruction, or deſperation, or confuſion and ſhame of life. So many great Doctors and Biſhops have cried out of late ſo mightily againſt Prieſts marriage; and have they not, by Gods juſt judgment working their confuſion, beene detected themſelves, and taken the moſt part of them in ſinnefull adulterie, and ſhamefull fornication? Cardinall Joannes Cremenſis the Popes Legate here in England, after he had ſet a law that Prieſts ſhould have no wives, was he not the next day after, being taken with his whores, driven out of London with confuſion and ſhame enough, ſo that afterwards he durſt not ſhew his face here any more? Beſides the two Biſhops in the late Councell of Trent moſt ſhamefully taken in adulterie, mentioned before. Alſo beſides innumerable other like forraine ſtories, which I let paſſe, to come now to our own domeſticall examples, I could well name halfe a ſcore at leaſt of famous Doctors, and ſome Biſhops, with their great Maſters of Poperie, who, in ſtanding earneſtly againſt the marriage of Prieſts, have afterward been taken in ſuch diſhoneſt facts themſalves, that not only they have carried the publike ſhame of adulterous lecherers, but ſome of them the marks alſo of burning fornication with them in their bodies to their graves. Whoſe names, although I ſuffer here to bee ſuppreſſed, yet the examples of them may ſuffice to admoniſh all men that bee wiſe, and which will avoid the wrath of Gods terrible vengeance, to beware of Poperie.

A ſecret note of Papiſts which have bin great cryers out of Prieſts marriage, and themſelves after taken in open adultery.

Compariſon between the end of Popiſh perſecutors and the goſpellers.

And thus having hitherto recited ſo many ſhamefull lives and deſperate ends of ſo manie Popiſh perſecutors ſtricken by Gods hand; now let us conſider againe on the contrarie ſide the bleſſed ends given of Almighty God unto them, which have ſtood ſo manfully in the defence of Chriſts Goſpel and the reformation of his religion, and let the Papiſts themſelves here be iudges. Firſt, what a peaceable and heavenly end made the worthy ſervant and ſingular Organ of God Martin Luther?

To ſpeake likewiſe of the famous John Duke of Saxonie and Prince Elector, of the good Palſgrave, af Philip Melancton, of Pomeranus, Urbanus, Rhegius, Berengarius, of Ulricus Sminglius, Oecolampodius, Pillicanus, Capito, Muuſtreus, Joannes Caluinus, Petrus Martyr, Martin Bucer, Paulus Phagius, Johannes Muſculus, Biblander, Geſnerus, Hoſman, Auguſtinus Marloratus, Lewes of Bourbon Prince of Condie, and his godly wife before him, with many moe, which were knowne to be learned men, and chiefe ſtanderds of the Goſpel ſide againſt the Pope, and yet no man able to bring forth any one example eyther of theſe, or of any other true Goſpeller, that eyther killed himſelfe, or ſhewed forth any ſignification or appearance of deſpaire, but full of hope and conſtant in faith, and repleniſhed with the fruit of righteouſnes in Chriſt Jeſus, ſo yeelded they their lives in quiet peace unto the Lord.

The godly end of the goſpellers to be noted.

From theſe Forreiners, let us come now to the Martyrs of England, and marke likewiſe the end both of them, and ſemblably of all others of the ſame profeſſion. And firſt to beginne with the bleſſed and heavenly departure of King Edward the ſixth, that firſt put downe the Maſſe in England, and alſo of the like godly end of his good Uncle the Duke of Sommerſet, which died before him, with an infinite number of other private perſons beſides of the like religion, in whoſe finall departing no ſuch blemmiſh is to bee noted, like to the deſperate examples of them above recited. Let us now enter the conſideration of the bleſſed Martyrs, who although they ſuffered in their bodies, yet reioyced they in their ſpirits, and albeit they were perſecuted of men, yet were they comforted of the Lord with ſuch inward ioy and peace of conſcience, that ſome writing to their friends profeſſed they were never ſo merrie before in all their lives, ſome leapt for ioy, ſome for triumph would put on their Scarfes, ſome their wedding garment, going to the fire, other kiſſed the ſtake, ſome embraced the fagots, ſome clapt their hands, ſome ſung Pſalmes, univerſally they all forgave, and prayed for their enemies, no murmuring, no repining was ever heard amongſt them: ſo that moſt truely might bee verified in them, which their perſecutors were wont to ſing in their Hymnes.

them in the flaming fire moved no more, then the ſtake whereunto they were tied. In fine, in them moſt aptly agreed the ſpeciall tokens which moſt certainly follow the true children of God, that is, outward perſecution, and inward comfort in the holy Ghoſt. In the world (ſaith Chriſt our Saviour) yee ſhall have affliction, but in me ye ſhall have peace, &c.

And likewiſe the words of S. Paul be plaine. Whoſoever (ſaith hee) ſtudieth to live godly in Chriſt, ſhall ſuffer perſecution.

But then what followeth with this perſecution? the ſaid Apoſtle again thus declareth, ſaying, As the paſſions of Chriſt abound in us, ſo aboundeth alſo our conſolation by Chriſt, &c. according as by the examples of theſe godly Martyrs right perfectly we may perceive. For as their bodies outwardly lacked no perſecutions by the hands of the wicked: ſo amongſt ſo many hundreds of them that ſtood and dyed in this religion, what one man can be brought forth, which either hath beene found to have killed himſelfe, or to have dyed otherwiſe than the true ſervant of GOD, in quiet peace, and much comfort of conſcience?

The wretched end of Papiſts giveth teſtimony againſt their own doctrine.

Which being ſo, what greater proofe can wee have to juſtifie their cauſe and doctrine againſt the perſecuting Church of Rome, then to behold the ends of them both? Firſt, of the Proteſtants, how quietly they tooke their death, and cheerefully reſted in the Lord, and contrariwiſe to mark theſe perſecutors, what a wretched end commonly they doe all come unto.

The end and death of Edm. Boner.

Experience whereof wee have ſufficient in the examples above declared, and alſo of late in Boner, who albeit hee died in his bed unrepentant, yet was it provided by God, that as he had beene a perſecutor of the light, and a childe of darknes, ſo his carkaſſe was tumbled into the earth in obſcure darkneſſe, at midnight, contrary to the order of all other Chriſtians; and as hee had beene a murderer, ſo was hee layd amongſt theeves and murderers, a place by Gods judgement rightly appointed for him.

Admonition to perſecutors which yet remaine alive.

And albeit ſome peradventure, that have beene notable perſecutors in times paſt, doe yet remaine alive, who, being in the ſame cauſe as the other were, have not yet felt the weight of Gods mighty hand, yet let not them thinke, that, becauſe the judgement of God hath lighted ſooner upon other, therefore it will never light upon them; or becauſe God of his mercie hath granted them ſpace to repent, let not them therefore of Gods lenitie build to themſelves an opinion of indemnitie. The bloud of Abel cried long, yet wrought at length. The ſoules of the Saints ſlaine under the altar, were not revenged at the firſt, Apoc. 6. but reade forth the Chapter, and ſee what followed in the end. Bloud, eſpecially of Chriſts ſervants, is a perillous matter, and cryeth ſore in the eares of God, and will not be ſtilled with the Lawes of men.

God maketh the perſecutors of his people commonly to be their own perſecutors.

Wherefore let ſuch bloud-guilty homicides beware, if not by councell, at leaſt by the examples of their fellowes. And though Princes and Maieſtrates, under whoſe permiſſion they are ſuffered, doe ſpare their lives, let them not thinke therefore (as ſome of them ſhame not to ſay) that man hath no power to hurt them, and ſo thinke to eſcape unpuniſhed, becauſe they bee not puniſhed by man, but rather let them feare ſo much the more. For oftentimes ſuch as have been perſecutors and tormentors to Gods children, God thinketh them not worthy to ſuffer by man, but eyther reſerveth them to his own judgement, or elſe maketh them to be their own perſecutors, and their own hands moſt commonly hangmen to their own bodies.

Saul murdered of himſelfe.
Achitophel murderer of himſelfe.

So Saul, after he had perſecuted David, it was unneedfull for David to purſue him againe: for he was revenged of him, more than he deſired. It was needleſſe to cauſe Achitophel to bee hanged: for he himſelfe was the ſtifler or ſtrangler of his own life.

Iudas murderer of himſelfe.

Neither for the Apoſtles to purſue Iudas that betrayed their Maſter: for hee himſelfe was his own hangman, and no man elſe, that his bodie bruſt, and his guts braſt out.

Senacherib murdered of his own ſons.

Senacherib, had he not for his perſecutors his own ſons, and it coſt Ezechias nothing to bee revenged of him for his tyrannie?

Herod & Antiochus murdered by lice.

Antiochus and Herod, although the children of God, whom they ſo cruelly perſecuted, laid no hand upon them, yet they eſcaped not unpuniſhed of Gods hand, who ſent lice and wormes to bee their tormentors, which conſumed and eate them up.

Pilate murderer of himſelfe.

Pilate, after he had crucified Chriſt our Saviour, within few yeares after was hee not driven to hang himſelfe?

Nero murderer of himſelfe.

Nero, after his cruell murders and perſecutions ſtirred up againſt the Chriſtians, when hee ſhould have beene taken by the Romanes, God thought him not ſo worthie to be puniſhed by the hands of them, but ſo diſpoſed the matter, that Nero himſelfe when hee could finde no freind nor enemy to kill him, made his own hands to bee his own cut-throat.

Diocleſianus & Maximinus Emperors depoſed themſelves.

Diocleſianus, with Maximinian his fellow Emperor, which were the authors of the tenth and laſt perſecution againſt the Chriſtians, being in the middeſt of their furious tyrannie againſt the name of Chriſt, needed no mans helpe to bridle them and plucke them back: for God of his ſecret judgement put ſuch a ſnaffle in the mouthes of theſe Tyrants, that they themſelves of their own accord depoſed and diſpoſſeſſed themſelves of their imperiall function, and lived as private perſons all their lives after: And notwithſtanding that Maximinian, after that, ſought to reſume his imperiall ſtate againe, yet by Maxentius his Son hee was reſiſted, and ſhortly after ſlaine.

Maximinus eaten up with lice.

What ſhould I here ſpeake of the cruell Emperor Maximinus? who when he had ſet forth his Proclamation engraven in braſſe, for the utter aboliſhing of Chriſt and his religion, was not puniſhed by man, but had lice and vermin guſhing out of his entrailes to bee his tormentors, with ſuch a rotten ſtinch laid upon his bodie, that no Phyſitians could abide to come neere, and was cauſed to be ſlaine for the ſame.

Maxentius & K. Pharaoh, both drowned in their own harneſſe.

Maxentius the ſon of Maximinian, and Pharaoh the King of Egypt, as they were both like enemies againſt God and his people, ſo dranke they both of one cup, not periſhing by any mans hand, but both in like manner, after, were drowned with their harneſſe in the water.

Achaz, Achab, Ieſabel, Manaſſes, Ioachim, Zedechias, puniſhed of God for their perſecutions.

Furthermore, and briefly in this matter to conclude, if the Kings among the Iewes, which were bloudy and wicked, were not ſpared, as Achaz, Achab, Ieſabel, Manaſſes, Ioachim, Zedechias, with many other, but had at length, although it were long, the hire of their iniquitie: let not theſe bloudy Catholikes then think, which have beene perſecutors of Chriſts Saints, that they being in the ſame cauſe as the other above recited were, ſhall eſcape the ſame judgement, which the longer it is deferred, the ſorer many times it ſtriketh, unleſſe by due repentance it be pretended in time: which I pray God it may.

The murdering mother church with her bloudy children admoniſhed.

Innumerable examples moe to the ſame effect and purpoſe might bee inferred, whereof plentifull ſtore wee have in all places, and in all ages of men to bee collected. But theſe hitherto for this preſent may ſuffice, which I thought here to notifie unto theſe our bloudie children of the murdring mother Church of Rome, of whom it may well be ſaid, Manus veſtræ plenæ ſunt ſanguine, &c. Your hands be full of bloud, &c. Eſay, Chap. 1. to the intent that they, by the examples of their other fellowes before mentioned, may be admopiſhed to follow the Prophets councel, which followeth and biddeth, Lauamini, mundi eſtote, &c. Be you waſhed and make your ſelves clean, &c. Eſay 1. and not to preſume too farre upon their own ſecuritie, nor thinke themſelves the further off from Gods hand, becauſe mans hand forbeareth them.

What the lawes of this realm could ſay againſt the perſecutors in Q. Maries time.

I know and grant, that man hath no further power upon any, than God from above doth give. And what the lawes of this realme could make againſt them, as againſt open murderers, I will not here diſcuſſe, nor open that I could ſay (becauſe they ſhall not ſay that wee deſire their bloud to be ſpilled, but rather to bée ſpared) but yet this I ſay, and wiſh them well to underſtand, that the ſparing of their lives, which have béene murtherers of ſo many, is not for want of power in Magiſtrates nor lacke of any juſt law againſt them, whereby they might juſtly have béen condemned, if it had ſo pleaſed the Majeſtrates to procéede (as they might) againſt them; but becauſe almighty God peradventure in his ſecret purpoſe, having ſomething to doe with theſe perſecutors, hath ſpared them hitherto, not that they ſhould eſcape unpuniſhed, but that peradventure he will take his own cauſe into his own hand, eyther by death to take them away (as he did by Boner. and by all Promoters in a manner of Quéene Maries time) or elſe to make them to perſecute themſelves with their own hands, or will ſtir up their conſcience to bée their own confuſion, in ſuch ſort as the church ſhall have no néed to lay hands upon them.

The nature of the church is not to perſecute with bloud.

Wherefore with this ſhort admonition to cloſe up the matter, as I have exhibited in theſe Hiſtories the terrible ends of ſo many Perſecutors plagued by Gods hand: ſo would I wiſh all ſuch whom Gods lenitie ſuffereth yet to live, this wiſely to ponder with themſelves, that as their cruell perſecution hurteth not the Saints of God, whom they have put to death, ſo the patience of Chriſts Church, ſuffering them to live, doth not profit them but rather heapeth the greater judgement of God upon them in the day of wrath, unleſſe they repent in time: which I pray God they may.

In that the perſecutors of the Church be ſuffered of the Church to live, it is to their confuſion.

And now to re-enter againe to the time and ſtorie of Q. Elizabeth where we left before.

In whoſe advancement and this her Princely governance, it cannot ſufficiently bée expreſſed, what felicitie and bleſſed happineſſe this Realme hath received in receiving her at the Lords Almighty and gracious hand. For as there have béene divers Kings and Rulers over this realme, and I have read of ſome, yet I could never finde in Engliſh Chronicle the like that may bee written of this our noble and worthie Queene: whoſe comming in was not only ſo calme, ſo joyfull, and ſo peaceable, without ſhedding any bloud, but alſo her reigne hitherto (reiguing now 24. yeares and more) hath beene ſo quiet, that yet (the Lord have all the glory) to this preſent day her ſword is a Virgin, ſpotted and polluted with no drop of bloud. In ſpeaking whereof, I take not upon me the part here of the morall or of the divine Philoſopher, to judge of things done, but only keep me within the compaſſe of an Hiſtoriographer, declaring what hath been before, and comparing things done with things now preſent, the like whereof, as I ſaid, is not to bee found lightly in Chronicles before. And this as I ſpeak truly, ſo I would to bee taken without flatterie, to bee left to our poſteritie, ad ſempiternam clementiæ illius memoriam. In commendation of which her clemency, I might alſo here adde how mildely her grace, after ſhe was advanced to her Kingdome, did forgive the foreſaid ſir Henry Benifield without moleſtation, ſuffering him to enjoy goods, life, lands and libertie. But I let this paſſe.

Anno 1558.

Sir H. Benifield forgiven.

Thus haſt thou, gentle Reader, ſimply, but truly deſcribed unto thee the time, firſt of the ſorrowfull adverſitie of this our moſt Soveraigne Queen that now is, alſo the miraculous protection of God, ſo graciouſly preſerving her in ſo many ſtraits and diſtreſſes, which I thought here briefly to notifie, the rather for that the wondrous works of the Lords ought not to be ſuppreſſed, and that alſo her Majeſtie, and we likewiſe her poore ſubjects, having thereby a preſent matter alwaies before our eyes, bee admoniſhed both how much we are bound to his divine Majeſtie, and alſo to render thankes to him condignely for the ſame.

Now remaineth likewiſe in proſecuting the order of this, as of other hiſtories before, to notifie and diſcourſe of things memorable eſpecially in the Church, ſuch as happened in the time of this her Majeſties quiet and joyfull government. And firſt here I let paſſe by the way the death of Cardinall Poole, which was the next day after the death of Queene Marie, the death alſo of Chriſtopherſon Biſhop of Chicheſter, Hopton Biſhop of Norwich, omitting alſo to ſpeake of Doctor Weſton, who being chiefe diſputer againſt Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, as is before declared, firſt fell in diſpleaſure with the Cardinall and other Biſhops, becauſe he was unwilling to part from his Deanry and houſe of Weſtminſter unto the Monkes, whom indeede he favoured not, although in other things a maintainer of the Church of Rome. Then being removed from thence, he was made Deane of Windſor, where he, being apprehended in advoutry, was by the ſame Cardinall put from all his ſpirituall livings. Wherefore he appealed to Rome, and flying out of the Realme, was taken by the way and clapt in the Tower of London, where he remained untill this time that Q. Elizabeth was proclaimed. At which time being delivered, he fell ſicke and dyed.

November 13

D. Weſton.

Alſo I let paſſe the coronation of this our moſt noble and Chriſtian Princeſſe, and the order of the ſame, which was the fifteenth day of January, Anno 1559. To paſſe over alſo the triumphant paſſage and honourable entertainment of the ſaid our moſt dread Soveraigne, thorow the city of London, with ſuch celebrity, prayers, wiſhes, welcommings, cries, tender words, Pageants, Enterludes, declamations and verſes ſet up, as the like hath not commonly bin ſeene, arguing and declaring a wonderfull earneſt affection of loving hearts toward their Soveraigne. Item, to pretermit in ſilence the letters gratulatory, ſent to her Majeſtie from divers and ſundry forraine places, as from Zuricke, Geneva, Baſill, Berne, Wittemberge, Argentine, Frankeford, &c. Theſe I ſay with many other things to let paſſe, we will now (God willing) begin with the diſceptation or conference betweene the Popiſh Biſhops, and the learned men exiled in Germany, had at Weſtminſter; after that firſt we have inſerted a certaine Oration of a worthy Gentleman called M. John Hales, ſent and delivered to the ſaid Queene Elizabeth in the beginning of her reigne, the copy whereof is this.

An

Anno 1558.

¶ An Oration of Iohn Hales to the Queenes Majeſtie, and delivered to her Majeſtie by a certaine Noble man, at her firſt entrance to her reigne.

To the Noble Queene Elizabeth.

Great benefits and treaſures do nothing profit, where the uſe of them cannot be enjoyed.

Albeit there be innumerable gifts & benefits of Almightie God, whereof every one would wonderfully comfort any perſon, on whom it ſhould pleaſe his goodneſſe to beſtow it: yet is none of them either ſeparate by it ſelfe, or joyned with any other, or yet all mingled together, to bée companied to this one; that it hath pleaſed God of his mercy to deliver this realme our Countrie from the tyrannie of malicious Mary, and to commit it to the government of vertuous Elizabeth. For if a man had all the treaſure of Solomon, and might not bee ſuffered to have the uſe thereof, in what better caſe were hée than miſerable Tantalus, over whoſe head the Apples continually hung, yet being hunger-ſtarved hée could never touch them? If a man had as ſtrong a bodie as had Sampſon, and beſides, were as whole as a fiſh, as the Proverbe is, yet if hée were kept in bands, what ſhould it avayle him? Yea, rather if it bée well conſidered, it is a hurt to him, if continuance of torments and paines may bee a hurt.

If a man had as many children as had Gedeon the Judge, and might not bée ſo ſuffered to bring them up in the feare of GOD, and good knowledge and manners, had hee not béen more happie to bée without them, than to have them? If a man had as much knowledge of God as had Saint Paul, and durſt not profeſſe it openly with mouth, as hée is commanded, but for feare of death ſhould declare the contrarie in deede, ſlander the word of God, and denie Chriſt, which is forbidden, ſhould it not rather bée a furtherance to his damnation than otherwiſe?

And to be ſhort, if any one man had all theſe gifts together, or generally all the gifts of fortune, the bodie, the minde, and of grace, yet if hée might not have the uſe of them, what ſhould they profit him? Verily nothing at all. For felicitie is not in having, but in uſing; not in poſſeſſing, but in occupying, not in knowledge, but in doing.

Felicity not in having, but in uſing.

But alas, our naturall mother England, which hath béene counted to bée the ſureſt, the richeſt, and of late alſo the moſt godly Nation of the earth, hath béene theſe whole five yeares moſt violently by Tyrants forced to lacke the uſe of all the gifts and benefits wherewith God and nature had endued her. Her naturall and loving children could not bée ſuffered to enioy their right inheritance, whereby they might relieve and ſuccour her or themſelves; but whatſoever they had, was eyther by open force, or by craftie dealing pulled from them. And ſurely this had bin tolerable, if none other miſchiefe had beene therewith intended.

He is a gentle thiefe (if theeves may be counted gentle) that only robbeth a man of his goods, and refraineth violent hands from his perſon. For ſuch loſſe with labour and diligence may be recovered. Hee may bee called a mercifull murtherer, that only killeth the aged parents, and uſeth no force on the children.

For nature hath made all men mortall, and that in like ſpace; and to kill the parents, is as it were but a prevention of a ſhort time, if it were to the uttermoſt enioyed. But theſe tyrants were more ungentle than common theeves, more empty of mercie than common murderers. For they were not only not contented to have the goods of the people, but they would have it delivered to them by the owners owne hands, that it might bee ſaid to the world they gave it with their heart, and were not therewith pleaſed, but they would have their lives, that they ſhould not bewray them; and yet herewith they were not ſatiſfied, but they meant to roote out the whole progenie and nation of Engliſhmen, that none ſhould bee left to revenge and crie out on their extremities, and to bring our Countrie into the Spaniards dominion.

Wicked practiſes of moſt cruell tyrants.

It is an horrible cruelty for one brother to kill another, much more horrible for the children to lay violent and murdering hands on their parents, but moſt horrible of all to murther the children in the ſight of their parents, or the parents in the ſight of their children, as theſe moſt cruell tormentors have done.

But what doe I ſtand in theſe things which have ſome defence, becauſe the Turkes perchance uſe ſo to doe, and Ethnikes kill one another, to make ſacrifice of men to their phantaſticall gods?

It was not enough for theſe unnaturall Engliſh tormentors, tyrants, and falſe Chriſtians, to bee the Lords of the goods, poſſeſſions, and bodies of their brethren and country men: but being very Antichriſts, and enemies of Chriſts croſſe, they would be gods, and reigne in the conſciences and ſoules of men. Every man, woman, and childe muſt denie Chriſt in word openly, abhorre Chriſt in their deeds, ſlander his Goſpel with word and deed, worſhip and honor falſe gods as they would have them, and themſelves did, and ſo give bodie and ſoule to the Divell their Maſter, or ſecretly flee, or after inward torments be burned openly. O crueltie, cruelty, farre exceeding all cruelties committed by thoſe antient and famous tyrants, and cruell murderers, Pharaoh, Herod, Caligula, Nero, Domitian, Maximine, Diocleſian, Decius, whoſe names for their cruell perſecution of the people of God, and their owne tyrannie practiſed on the people, have been, be, and ever ſhall be in perpetuall hatred, and their ſoules in continuall torment in hell. If any man would take upon him to ſet forth particularly all the acts that have been done theſe full fiue years, by this unnaturall woman; (No, no woman, but a monſter, and the divell of hell covered with the ſhape of a woman) as it is moſt neceſſarie for the glory of God, and the profit of his Church, and this realme, it ſhould be done: he ſhall finde it a matter ſufficient for a perfect great Hiſtory, and not to be contained in an Oration, to be uttered at one time by the voyce of man. But to comprehend the ſumme of all their wickedneſſe in few words; Behold, whatſoever malice in miſchiefe, covetouſneſſe in ſpoile, cruelty in puniſhing, tyrannie in deſtruction could doe that all this poore Engliſh nation theſe full five years eyther ſuffered already, or ſhould have ſuffered, had not the great mercy of God prevented it.

Cruelty of late dayes far exceeding al cruelties committed by the ancient and famous tyrants in times paſt.

And albeit there have béene many that have hazzarded and loſt thyir lives to ſhake off this moſt rough brake (wherewith this Viragin, rather than Virgin as ſhée would be called and taken, boaſted herſelfe to bée ſent of GOD, to ride and tame the people of England) albeit there have béene many that have gone about to looſe their brethren out of the yoke of this moſt miſerable captivity, and albeit ſome have proved to breake the bands of this moſt cruell tyranny, yet could they never bring to paſſe that which they ſo earneſtly laboured, and ſo manfully attempted.

And

Anno 1558.

And it is nothing to bée wondred, let the Papiſts boaſt thereof what it pleaſeth them. For almightie God being a moſt indifferent governor, puniſhing evill, and rewarding good, could not of his juſtice ſuffer his ſcourge ſo ſoone to be taken from this our land, if he meant the ſalvation of the people, as moſt manifeſtly it appeareth he did. For having once given to this realme the greateſt Jewell that might be, that is, the free uſe of his lively word (which if they had imbraced and followed, it would have reformed all diſorders and ſinnes for which his wrath was kindled and provoked) the people nothing regarded it, but eyther utterly contemned it, or abuſed it, and many made it a cloake and colour to cover their miſchiefe. So that if hée ſhould ſuddenly have withdrawne this plague, as tyrants and evill Governors be the plague of God, they would neither have paſſed on his juſtice, nor yet ſhould they have felt the ſwéetneſſe of his mercy. For commonly the people regard but things preſent, and neither remember things paſt, nor yet paſſe on things to come, unleſſe they be warned by excéeding extremities.

Tyrants and evill governors be the plagues of God.

Beſides this, it is moſt evident, that he had determined to make this noble conqueſt alone with his owne hand and mighty power, and would not that it ſhould bée done by man, leſt man ſhould impute any part of the glory of this victory to his owne ſtrength, or to his owne policy, or that Fortune ſhould ſéeme to beare any ſtroke in ſo glorious a conqueſt, and ſo bée partaker, in mens opinions, of the triumph ſo worthy.

God worketh all things to his owne glory.

Neither did his almighty power worke this when man would have it diſpatched, that is, as ſoone as the enemy beganne to gather their force; for it is not ſo great a victory to diſcomfit a few diſperſed people, as it is to deſtroy a perfectly united army; but he ſuffered them to make their force as great as was poſſible, to worke whatſoever miſchiefes by ſmile, baniſhment, priſonment hanging, heading, burning, or otherwiſe could be imagined.

Neither would his moſt provident wiſedome doe it out of ſeaſon: but as the good huſbandman doth not crop his trée, till it have rendered his fruit: ſo would hee not roote out theſe peſtilent Tyrants, till the moſt profit might bée taken thereof.

When hée had given ſufficient leaſure to all kinde of men to declare themſelves who were Crocodiles, ſometime lying in water, ſometime on land, that is, both Goſpellers and Papiſts; who were ſpunges, ſuſpected whether they had life or no life, whether they were Chriſtians or Epicures: who were Chameleons, that could turne themſelves into all colours, with Proteſtants, Proteſtants, with Papiſts, Papiſts, with Spaniards, Spaniards, with Engliſhmen, Engliſhmen; who were Gnatoes that could apply themſelves to every mans appetite that was in authoritie; who were Marigolds, that followed Maries mad affections; who were weather-cocks, that did turne with every winde; who were Maſtives, that could bite and barke not; who were curres, ever barking; who were Foxes, that would promiſe much, and performe nothing; who could binde themſelves with many oathes, and doe cleane contrary; who were Caines, that ſought the innocent Abels deaths; who were the Wolves, that worried the lambes; and finally, when he had ſuffered the ſpirituall ſhavelings to ſpue out their venome, and every man plainly to declare outwardly what he was inwardly; then doth he work this moſt victorious conqueſt. And with his works he ſéemeth plainly to ſay thus unto us: Ye ſée (my people) what I have done for you, not for your ſakes, which nothing regarded the benefits that I moſt plenteouſly poured on you, and have deſerved moſt grievous puniſhment for your unthankfulneſſe: but of mine infinite mercy, and for my glories ſake, which I will have opened to all the world in theſe later dayes, to the fear of the evill doers, and to the comfort of the well doers. Provoke no more my wrath: ye ſée what will follow it: be hereafter more prudent and wiſe than ye were before, Yée may, if ye will, be more circumſpect in time to come, than ye have béene in time paſt: ye may if ye liſt put me to leſſe trouble, and kéep your ſelves in more ſafety. I have not only diſcovered mine, yours, and my land of Englands enemies, and all the crafts, ſubtilties, and policies that have béene, or may be uſed by them, or any like hereafter, but I have alſo taken away their head and captaine, and deſtroyed a great number of them, that yée ſhould not be troubled with them, and ſome of them have I left, that ye may make them ſpectacles and examples to the terror and feare of their poſterity. Love me, and I will love you: ſeeke my honor and glory, and I will worke your commodity and ſafety: walke in my wayes and commandements, and I will be with you for ever. Surely, if we conſider the wonderfull mercy that it hath pleaſed GOD to uſe towards us, in the delivering of the realme and us his people, out of the hands of theſe moſt cruell tyrants, as we cannot but doe, unleſſe wee will declare our ſelves to bee the moſt unthankfull people that ever lived, wee muſt needs judge it not only worthy to be compared, but alſo farre to exceede the deliverance of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt from the tyranny of Pharaoh, and from the powers of Holofernes and Senacherib. For it is not read, that either Pharaoh or the other two ſought any other thing, than to be the Lords of the goods and bodies of the Iſraelites, they forced them not to commit adultery, and to ſerve falſe gods, as theſe Engliſh tyrants did.

Affliction tryeth men whether they bee good or evill.

God plenteouſly poureth his benefits upon us, not for our ſakes, but of his infinit mercy, and for his glories ſake.

Wonderfull is Gods mercy in delivering this realme from the tyranny of the Papiſts.

But beſides, if wee will note the wonderfull workes of God in handling this matter, we ſhall well perceive, that farre much more is wrought to his glory, and to the profit of his Church and people, than perchance all men at the firſt doe ſee. For hee hath not only diſpatched the realme of the chiefe perſonages and head of theſe tyrants, but alſo as it were declareth, that hee minded not that either they or their doings ſhould continue. For albeit that all acts, done by tyrants tyrannouſly, be by all lawes, reaſon and equity, of no force, yet becauſe no Diſputation ſhould follow on this, what is tyrannouſly done, and what is not tyrannouſly done, he hath provided that this queſtion needeth not to come in queſtion. For he utterly blinded their eyes, and ſuffered them to build on falſe grounds which can no longer ſtand, than they bee propped up with rope, ſword, and fagot. For her firſt Parliament whereon they grounded and wrought a great part of their tyranny, and wherein they meant to overthrow whatſoever King Edward had for the advancement of Gods glory brought to paſſe, was of no force or authority. For ſhee perceiving that her enemies ſtomacke could not bee emptied, nor her malice ſpued on the people by any good order, ſhee committeth a great diſorder. Shee by force and violence taketh from the commons their liberty, that, according to the ancient lawes and cuſtomes of the Realme, they could not have their free election of Knights and Burgeſſes for the Parliament. For ſhee well knew, that if either Chriſtian men, or true Engliſhmen ſhould

The Papiſts buildings ſtand ſo long only as they be propt up with rope, ſword and fagot.

Burgeſſes unlawfully, diſorderly, and violently thruſt out of the Parliament houſe in Q. Maries dayes.

The third Parliament in Q. Maries dates, not orderly & formally called, and therefore of none effect.

be elected, it was not poſſible that to ſucceed which ſhe intended. And therfore in many places divers were choſen by force of her threats, meete to ſerve her malicious affections. Wherefore that Parliament was no Parliament, but may be juſtly called a conſpiracie of tyrants and traitors. For the greater part, by whoſe authoritie and voices things proceeded in that Court, by their acts moſt manifeſtly declared themſelves ſo: the reſt being both Chriſtians and true Engliſh men, although they had good wills, yet were not able to reſiſt or prevaile againſt the multitude of voices and ſuffrages of ſo manie evill, falſe to God, and enemies to their Countrie. Alſo divers Burgeſſes being orderly choſen, and lawfully returned, as in ſome places the people did what they could to reſiſt her purpoſes, were diſorderly and unlawfully put out, and others without any order of law in their places placed. Doctor Taylor Biſhop of Lincolne a Chriſtian Biſhop and a true Engliſhman, being lawfully and orderly called to the Parliament, and placed in the Lords houſe in his degree, was in his robes by violence thruſt out of the houſe. Alexander Nowell with two other, all three being Burgeſſes for divers ſhires, and Chriſtian men and true Engliſhmen, and lawfully choſen, returned, and admitted, were by force put out of the houſe of the Commons: for the which cauſe the ſaid Parliament is alſo voyd, as by a Preſident of the Parliament holden at Coventrie in the 38. yeare of King Henrie the ſixth, it moſt manifeſtly appeareth. And the third Parliament called in the name of her huſband, and of her evill grace, wherein they would have undone that her noble Father and the Realme had brought to paſſe for the reſtitution of the libertie of the Realme, and for extinguiſhment of the uſurped authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome, is alſo void, and of none authority. For that the title and ſtile of ſupreme head of the Church of England, which by a Statute made in the 35. yeare of the reigne of the ſayd King Henrie, was ordained, that it ſhould bee united and annexed for ever to the imperiall crowne of this Realme, was omitted in the writs of ſummoning. Wherefore as a woman can bring forth no childe without a man, ſo cannot thoſe writs bring forth good and ſure fruit, becauſe this part of the title, which was ordained by the Parliament for the forme to be alwaies uſed in the Kings ſtile, was left out. For greater error is in lacke of forme, than in lacke of matter. And where the foundation is naught, there can nothing builded thereon be good. There is no law ſpirituall nor temporall (as they terme them) nor any good reaſon, but allow theſe rules for infallible principles. And if any man will ſay, that it was not in the free choice, libertie, and pleaſure of the King of this realm and the Queen, whether they would expreſſe the ſaid title in their ſtile, or not, as that ſubtile ſerpent Gardiner, being Chancellor of the realme, and traiterouſly ſending out the writs of Parliament without the ſame ſtile, perceiving hee had over-ſhot himſelfe in calling the Parliament, and having committed many horrible murthers and moſt miſchievous acts, would have excuſed it, as appeareth by a peece of a Statute made in the ſame Parliament, in the eighth chapter and two and twentieth leafe, it may be juſtly and truly anſwered, that they could not ſo doe. For albeit every perſon may by law renounce his own private right, yet may he not renounce his right in that which toucheth the common-wealth or a third perſon.

And this title and ſtile more touched the common wealth, and realms of England, than the King. For, as I ſaid before, it was ordained for the conſervation of the libertie of the whole Realme, and to exclude the uſurped authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome. And therefore no King nor Queene alone could renounce ſuch title: but it ought (if they would have it taken away) to bee taken away orderly and formally by Act of Parliament ſufficiently called and ſummoned. For the naturall and right way to looſe and undoe things, is to diſſolve them by that meanes they were ordained. And ſo it moſt manifeſtly appeareth, that all their doings, from the beginning to the end, were and be of none effect, force, or authoritie: but all that they have done, hath beene meere tyrannie. O moſt marvellous providence of almightie God, that alwaies and in all things doth that is beſt for the wealth of his people. O moſt mightie power, that ſo ſuddenly overthroweth the counſels of the wicked, and bringeth their devices to nought. O infinite mercie, that ſo gently dealeth with his people, that hee ſaveth them whom hee might moſt juſtly deſtroy. O moſt joyfull, moſt merrie, and never to bee forgotten Hopewedneſday, in which it hath pleaſed thee O God, to deliver thy Church, this Realme and thy people from ſo horrible tyranny. No tongue can expreſſe, no pen can indite, no eloquence can worthily ſet out, much leſſe exornate theſe thy marvellous doings. No, no heart is able to render unto thy goodneſſe ſufficient thanks for the benefits we have received. Who could ever have hoped this moſt joyfull time? Yea, who did not looke rather for thy moſt ſharpe viſitation, and utter deſtruction of this realme, as of Sodome, Gomorra, and Jeruſalem.

A joyfull day.

But wee ſee and feele, good Lord, that thy mercie is greater than all mens ſinnes, and farre above all thy workes. And albeit there is no Chriſtian and naturall Engliſhman, woman, or childe, either preſent, or that ſhall ſucceede us, which is not or ſhall not be partaker of this moſt exceeding mercie and wonderfull benefit of almighty God, and therefore is bound continually to praiſe and thanke him: yet there is not one creature that is more bound ſo to doe, than you noble Queene Elizabeth. For in this horrible tyranny, and moſt cruell perſecution, your grace hath beene more hunted for, than any other. Divers times they have taken you, ſometime they have had you in ſtrong hold, ſecluded from all libertie; ſometime at libertie, but not without moſt cruell Gaolers cuſtodie; and many times they determined, that without juſtice ye ſhould be murdered privily. They thought, if your Grace had beene ſuppreſſed, they ſhould have fullie prevailed: If yee had beene deſtroyed, their doings for ever ſhould be eſtabliſhed: If yee had beene taken out of the way, there were none left that would or could undoe that they had ordained. But he that ſitteth on high, and laugheth at their madneſſe, would not ſuffer that the malicious purpoſes, and moſt cruell deviſed injuſtice ſhould have ſucceſſe. He tooke upon him the protection of you. He only hath been your Jeoſeba, that preſerved you from this wicked Athalia. Hee onely was the Joiada, that deſtroyed this cruell Athalia. He only hath made you Queen of this realme, in ſtead of this miſchievous Marana. No earthly creature can claime any peece of thanks therefore, no mans force, no mans counſell, no mans aide, hath been the cauſe thereof. Wherfore the greater his benefits have beene toward you, the more are you bound to ſeek his glory, and to ſet forth his honor. Ye ſee his power what he is able to doe; he alone can ſave, and hee can deſtroy, he can pull downe, and he can ſet up. If yee feare him and ſeeke to doe his will, then will hee favour you, and preſerve you to the end from all enemies, as he did King David. If yee now fall from him, or juggle with him, looke for no more favor than Saul had ſhewed to him. But I have a good hope that both his juſtice and benefits bee ſo printed in your heart, that yee will never forget them, but ſeeke by all meanes to have the one, and to feare to fall into the other. I truſt alſo your wiſedome will not only conſider the cauſes of this late moſt ſharpe viſitation, but alſo to your uttermoſt power endevor to out-roote them.

God preſerveth the innocent, and maketh fruſtrate the malicious purpoſes of the wicked.

And foraſmuch as beſides this infinite mercie poured on your grace, it hath pleaſed his divine providence to conſtitute your Highneſſe to bee our Debora, to be the governeſſe and head of the body of this realme, to have the charge and cure thereof, it is requiſite above all things, as well for his glorie and honor, as for your diſcharge, quietneſſe and ſafety, to labour that the ſame body now at the firſt be cleanſed, made whole, and then kept in good order. For as if the body of man bee corrupted and diſeaſed, he is not able to manage his things at home, much leſſe to doe any thing abroad: ſo if the body of a realme bee corrupt and out of order, it ſhall neither bee able to doe any thing abroad, if neceſſitie ſhould require, nor yet proſper in it ſelfe. But this may not bee done with peecing and patching, cobling and botching, as was uſed in time paſt, whileſt your moſt noble father and brother reigned. For as if a man cut off one head of the Serpent Hydra, and deſtroy not the whole body, many will grow in ſtead of that one; and as in a corrupt bodie that hath manie diſeaſes, if the Phyſitian ſhould labour to heale one part, and not the whole, it will in ſhort time breake out afreſh: ſo unleſſe the bodie of a Realme or Common wealth bee cleane purged from corruption, all the particular lawes and ſtatutes that can be deviſed ſhall not profit it.

An apt ſimilitude.

Wee neede no forreigne examples to prove it: looke upon this Realme it ſelfe, it will plainely declare it. And as it is not enough to cleanſe the bodie from his corruption, but there muſt be alſo preſervatives miniſtred to keepe it from putrefaction; for naturally of it ſelfe it is diſpoſed to putrefie: ſo after the bodie of a realme is purged, unleſſe there bee godly ordinances for the preſervation thereof ordained and duely miniſtred, it will returne to the old ſtate. For this body, which is the people, is univerſally naturally diſpoſed to evill, and without compulſion will hardly do that is his duty.

Thus muſt your grace doe, if ye minde the advancement of Gods glorie, your owne quietneſſe and ſafetie, and the wealth of this your politike bodie. And they be not hard to bring to paſſe, where goodwill will vouchſafe to take to her a little paine. The Realme will ſoone be purged, if vice and ſelfe love be utterly condemned. It will bee in good ſtate preſerved, if theſe three things, Gods word truely taught and preached, Youth well brought up in godly and honeſt exerciſes, and Juſtice rightly miniſtred, may be perfectedly conſtituted. And without this foundation, let men imagine what it pleaſeth them, the ſpirituall houſe of God ſhall never be well framed or builded, nor the publike ſtate of your Realme well ordered. For in what bodie GODS word lacketh, the unitie and charity, that ought to be among the members thereof, and which knitteth them together, is ſoone extinguiſhed. Where the youth is neglected, there can no good ſucceſſe be hoped, no more than the husbandman can looke for a good crop where he ſowed no good ſeed. And where Juſtice is not truly and rightly miniſtred, there the more lawes and ſtatutes be heaped together, the more they be contemned. And ſurely, if this thing could not without exceeding charges be compaſſed, as God forbid that charges ſhould be weighed be they never ſo great, where Gods glory and the wealth of the Realme may bee furthered: yet ought it not to be neglected. What charges did King David the father, and King Solomon his ſon, imploy to build the ſtony houſe of God? How much more charges ſhould a Chriſtian Prince imploy to build and ſet up the lively houſe of God? But verily, I am fully perſwaded, that it ſhall not be chargeable to do this. No, a great deal of ſuperfluous charges, which otherwiſe your Grace ſhall be forced to ſuſtaine, ſhall thus bee cleane cut away, and ſo your revenues by a meane moſt profitable, and to no good perſon hurtfull, increaſed.

Three things which preſerve the good eſtate of a realme or cõmon wealth

Charges not to be weighed, where Gods glorie is to be furthered.

Wherefore for Gods ſake noble Queene, let not the opportunitie, now by God offered, bee by your Grace omitted. A Phyſitian can in nothing ſo much declare his good will and cunning, nor purchaſe himſelfe ſo great eſtimation, as when he findeth his patient throughly ſicke and weakened, and doth reſtore him to his perfect health and perfection. Likewiſe if a Prince ſhould deſire of God a thing whereby hee might declare the zeale that he beareth to God, or whereby he might winne fame and glorie, hee could deſire nothing ſo much, as to come into a ſtate corrupted, as this Realme of England, at this preſent is, not to deſtroy it as did Cæſar, but to make it as did Romulus.

If your Grace can bring this to paſſe, as I am out of all doubt yee may quickly; yee ſhall doe more than any of your progenitors did before you. All men ſhall confeſſe that you are not only for proximitie of bloud preferred, but rather of God ſpecially ſent and ordained. And as the Queene of Saba came from farre off to ſee the glorie of King Solomon, a woman to a man: even ſo ſhall the Princes of our time come, men to a woman, and Kings marvell at the vertue of Queene Elizabeth. Thus ſhall we your ſubjects be moſt bound to praiſe God, and to thinke our ſelves moſt happy, that comming ſo ſuddenly from the worſe, be forthwith preferred to the beſt, rid from extremeſt calamitie, and brought to the greateſt felicitie; and it ſhall bee beſides an example for all evill Princes, to leave their perſecution of Chriſt and his members, to ceaſe from their tyrannie, wherewith they continually oppreſſe their poore ſubjects. And ſo all people, not only we of this your Realme, but of all other nations, ſhall have juſt cauſe to pray for your Graces health, and increaſe of honor.

This Oration of Maſter Hales being premiſed, now let us proſecute, the Lord willing, that which we promiſed, concerning the diſputation or conference had at Weſtminſter. The copie whereof here followeth.

The Conference or Diſceptation had and begun at Weſtminſter, the laſt of March, upon certaine queſtions or articles of Religion propoſed, and alſo of the breaking up of the ſame, by the Papiſts default, at the firſt beginning of Queene Elizabeth.

SO it pleaſed the Queenes moſt excellent Majeſtie, having heard of the diverſitie of opinions in certaine matters of religion amongſt ſundrie of her loving ſubjects, and being very deſirous to have the ſame reduced to ſome godly and chriſtian concord (by the advice of the Lords and others of the privie Councell, as well for the ſatisfaction of perſons doubtfull, as alſo for the knowledge of the verie truth in certaine matters of difference) to have a convenient choſen number of the beſt learned of either part, and to conferre together their opinions and reaſons, and thereby to come to ſome good and charitable agreement. And hereupon by her Majeſties commandement, certaine of her privie Councell declared this purpoſe to the Archbiſhop of Yorke (being alſo one of the ſame privie Councell) and required him that hee would impart the ſame to ſome of the Biſhops, and to make choiſe of eight, nine, or ten of them, and that there ſhould bee the like number named of the other part. And further alſo they declared to him (as then was ſuppoſed) what the matter ſhould bee. And as for the time, it was thought meete to be as ſoone as poſſible might bee agreed upon. And then after certaine dates paſt, it was ſignified by the ſaid Archbiſhop, that there were appointed, by ſuch of the Biſhops to whom hee had imparted this matter, eight perſons, that is to ſay, foure Biſhops, and foure Doctors. The names of whom here follow under written.

Who were content, at the Queens Majeſties commandement, to ſhew their opinions, and, as the ſaid Archbiſhop termed it, render accompt of their faith in thoſe matters which were mentioned, and that eſpecially in writing, although he ſaid, they thought the ſame ſo determined, as there was no cauſe to diſpute upon them. The matter which they ſhould talke upon, was comprehended in theſe three propoſitions, hereunder ſpecified.

1. It is againſt the word of God, and the cuſtome of the ancient Church, to uſe a tongue unknowne to the people, in common prayer, and the adminiſtration of the Sacraments.

2. Every Church hath authority to appoint, take away, and change ceremonies and Eccleſiaſticall rites, ſo the ſame be to edification.

3. It cannot bee proved by the word of GOD, that there is in the Maſſe offered up a ſacrafice propitiatory for the quicke and the dead.

It was hereupon fully reſolved by the Queenes Majeſtie, with the advice aforeſaid, that according to their deſire, it ſhould bee in writing on both parts, for avoyding of much altercation in words; and that the ſayd Biſhops ſhould, becauſe they were in authority of degree ſuperiors, firſt declare their mindes and opinions to the matter, with their reaſons in writing. And the other number, being alſo eight men of good degree in ſchooles, and ſome having beene in dignity in the Church of England, if they had any thing to ſay to the contrary, ſhould the ſame day declare their opinions in like manner, and ſo each of them ſhould deliver their writings to the other, to bee conſidered what were to bee improved therein, and the ſame to declare againe in writing at ſome other convenient day, and the like order to bee kept in all the reſt of the matters. All this was fully agreed upon with the Archbiſhop of Yorke, and ſo alſo ſignified to both parties.

And immediately hereupon, divers of the Nobility and ſtates of the realme underſtanding that ſuch a meeting and conference ſhould be, and that in certaine matters, whereupon (the Court of Parliament conſequently following) ſome lawes might bee grounded; They made earneſt meanes to her Majeſty, that the parties of this conference might put and reade their aſſertions in the Engliſh tongue, and that in the preſence of them of the Nobility and others of her Parliament houſe, for the better ſatisfaction and enabling of their owne judgements, to treat and conclude of ſuch Lawes as might depend hereupon.

This alſo, being thought very reaſonable, was ſignified to both parties, and ſo fully agreed upon, and the day appointed for the firſt meeting to bee the Friday in the forenoone, being the laſt of March, at Weſtminſter Church. At which foreſaid day and place, both for good order and for honour of the conference, by the Queenes Majeſties commandement, the Lords and others of the privy Councell were preſent, and a great part of the Nobility alſo. And notwithſtanding this former order appointed, and conſented unto by both parties, yet the Biſhop of Wincheſter and his Collegues alledged they had miſtaken that their aſſertions and reaſons ſhould bee written, and ſo onely recited out of the booke, ſaying their book was not then ready written, but they were ready to argue and diſpute, and therefore they would for that time repeate in ſpeech, that which they had to ſay to the firſt probation.

This variation from the former order, and eſpecially from that which themſelves had by the ſayd Archbiſhop in writing before required, adding thereto the reaſon of the Apoſtle, that to contend with words is profitable to nothing, but to ſubverſion of the hearer, ſeemed to the Queenes Majeſties Councell ſomewhat ſtrange, and yet was it permitted without any great reprehenſion, becauſe they excuſed themſelves with miſtaking the order, and agreed that they would not faile but put it in writing, and, according to the former order, deliver it to the other part; and ſo the ſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter and his Collegues appointed Doctor Cole Deane of Pauls, to bee the utterer of their mindes; who partly by ſpeech onely, and partly by reading of authorities written, and at certaine times being informed of his Collegues what to ſay, made a declaration of their meanings and their reaſons to their firſt propoſition: which being ended, they were aſked by the privy Councell if any of them had any more to bee ſayd, and they ſayd, No. So as the other part was licenced to ſhew their minds, which they did according to the firſt order, exhibiting all that which they meant to be propounded, in a book written; which, after a prayer and invocation made moſt humbly to almighty GOD for the enduing of them with his holy ſpirit, and a proteſtation alſo to ſtand to the doctrine of the Catholike Church builded upon the Scriptures, and the doctrine of the Prophets and the Apoſtles, was diſtinctly read by one Robert Horne, Batchelor in Divinitie, late Deane of Dureſme, and after Biſhop of Wincheſter. The copie of which their Proteſtation here followeth according as it was by him penned and exhibited, with their Preface alſo before the ſame.

FOr as much as it is thought good unto the Queenes moſt excellent Majeſty (unto whom in the Lord all obedience is due) that we ſhould declare our judgement in writing upon certaine propoſitions; we, as becommeth us to do herein, moſt gladly obey.

Seeing that Chriſt is our only maſter, whom the father hath commanded us to hear; and ſeeing alſo his word is the truth, from the which it is not lawfull for us to depart, no not one haires bredth, and againſt the which (as the Apoſtle ſaith) we can doe nothing; we doe in all things ſubmit our ſelves unto this truth, and doe proteſt that we will affirme nothing againſt the ſame.

And foraſmuch as we have for our mother the true and Catholike Church of Chriſt, which is grounded upon the doctrine of the Apoſtles and Prophets, and is of Chriſt the head in all things governed; we do reverence her judgement, we obey her authoritie as becommeth children; and wee doe devoutly profeſſe, and in all points follow the faith which is contained in the three Creedes, that is to ſay, of the Apoſtles, of the Councell of Nice, and of Athanaſius.

And ſeeing that wee never departed, neither from the doctrine of God which is contained in the holy Canonicall Scriptures, nor yet from the faith of the true and Catholike Church of Chriſt, but have preached truly the word of God, and have ſincerely miniſtred the ſacraments according to the inſtitution of Chriſt, unto the which our doctrine and faith the moſt part alſo of our adverſaries did ſubſcribe not many yeares paſt (although now as unnaturall they are revolted from the ſame) wee deſire that they render account of their backſliding, and ſhew ſome cauſe wherefore they doe not onely reſiſt that doctrine which they have before profeſſed, but alſo perſecute the ſame by all meanes they can. We doe not doubt, but through the equitie of the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie, wee ſhall in theſe diſputations be intreated more gently than in yeares late paſt, when we were handled moſt unjuſtly, and ſcantly after the common manner of men. As for the judgement of the whole controverſie, we referre unto the moſt holy Scriptures, and the Catholike Church of Chriſt (whoſe judgement unto us ought to bee moſt ſacred:) notwithſtanding by the Catholike Church wee underſtand not the Romiſh Church, whereunto our adverſaries attribute ſuch reverence, but that which Saint Auguſtine and other Fathers affirme, ought to bee ſought in the holy Scriptures, and which is governed and ledde by the Spirit of Chriſt.

The firſt propoſition.

It is againſt the word of God, and the cuſtome of the Primitive Church, to uſe a tongue unknowne to the people in common prayers and adminiſtration of the ſacraments.

By theſe words (the word of God) we meane onely the written word of God, or Canonicall Scriptures.

And by the cuſtome of the Primitive Church, we meane the order moſt generally uſed in the Church for the ſpace of 500. yeares after Chriſt, in which times lived the moſt notable Fathers, as Juſtine, Ireneus, Tertullian, Cyprian, Baſill, Chryſoſtome, Hierome, Ambroſe, Auguſtine, &c.

Two parts of the propoſition.

This aſſertion above written hath two parts. Firſt, that the uſe of the tongue not underſtood of the people, in common prayers of the Church, or in the adminiſtration of the Sacraments, is againſt Gods word.

The ſecond, that the ſame is againſt the uſe of the Primitive Church.

The firſt part of the propoſition.

The firſt part is moſt manifeſtly proved by the fourteenth Chapter of the Epiſtle to the Corinthians, almoſt throughout the whole Chapter. In the which Chapter S. Paul intreateth of this matter, ex profeſſo, purpoſely. And although ſome doe cavill that Saint Paul ſpeaketh not in that Chapter of praying, but of preaching, yet is it moſt evident to any indifferent reader of underſtanding, and appeareth alſo by the expoſition of the beſt Writers, that he plainly there ſpeaketh not only of Preaching and Prophecying, but alſo of prayer and thankeſgiving, and generally of all other publike actions, which require any ſpeech in the Church or Congregation. For of praying he ſaith; I will pray with my ſpirit, and I will pray with my minde, I will ſing with my ſpirit, and I will ſing with my minde. And of thankeſgiving (which is a kinde of prayer) thou giveſt thankes well, but the other is not edified. And how ſhall he which occupieth the roome of the unlearned ſay, Amen, to thy giving of thankes, when he underſtandeth not what thou ſayeſt? And in the end, deſcending from particulars to a generall propoſition, concludeth, that all things ought to be done to edification. Thus much is cleere by the very words of Saint Paul, and the ancient Doctors Ambroſe, Auguſtine, Hierome, and other, do ſo underſtand this Chapter, as it ſhall appeare by their teſtimonies which ſhall follow afterward.

¶ Upon this Chapter of S. Paul we gather theſe reaſons following.

The argument, or probation.

1. All things done in the Church or Congregation, ought ſo to be done as they may edifie the ſame.

But the uſe of an unknowne tongue, in publike prayer or adminiſtration of Sacraments, doth not edifie the Congregation.

Therefore the uſe of an unknowne tongue, in publike prayer or adminiſtration of Sacraments, is not to be had in the Church.

The major proved.

The firſt part of this reaſon is grounded upon S. Pauls words, commanding all things to be done to edification.

The minor proved.

The ſecond part is alſo proved by S. Pauls plain words. Firſt by this ſimilitude. If the trumpet give an uncertain ſound, who ſhall be prepared to battell? Even ſo likewiſe when ye ſpeake with tongues, except ye ſpeak words that have ſignification, how ſhall it be underſtood what is ſpoken? for ye ſhall but ſpeak in the ayre, that is to ſay, in vain, and conſequently without edifying.

And afterward in the ſame Chapter he ſaith, how can he that occupieth the place of the unlearned, ſay Amen, at thy giving of thankes, ſeeing he underſtandeth not what thou ſayeſt? for thou verily giveſt thankes well, but the other is not edified.

These be S. Pauls words, plainly proving, that a tongue not underſtood, doth not edifie. And therefore both the parts of the reaſon thus proved by Saint Paul, the concluſion followeth neceſſarily.

Another argument or probation.

2 Secondly, nothing is to bee ſpoken in the Congregation in an unknowne tongue, except it bée interpreted to the people, that it may bee underſtood. For ſaith Paul, If there bee no Interpreter to him that ſpeaketh in an unknowne tongue, taceat in Eccleſia, let him hold his peace in the Church. And therefore the common prayers and adminiſtration of ſacraments, neither done in a known tongue, neither interpreted, are againſt the commandement of Paul, and not to be uſed.

Another argument.

The Miniſter in prayer or adminiſtration of ſacraments uſing language not underſtood of the hearers, is to them barbarous, an alien, which of Saint Paul is accounted a great abſurditie.

The fourth argument or probation.

It is not to bee counted a Chriſtian common prayer, where the people preſent declare not their aſſent unto it by ſaying Amen, wherein is implied all other words of aſſent.

Ambroſ. per hos enim impletur confirmatio precis, qui reſpondent Amen.

But S. Paul affirmeth, that the people cannot declare their aſſent in ſaying Amen, except they underſtand what is ſaid, as afore.

Therefore it is no Chriſtian common prayer where the people underſtand not what is ſaid.

The fifth argument.

Paul would not ſuffer in his time a ſtrange tongue to bée heard in the common prayer in the Church, notwithſtanding that ſuch a kinde of ſpéech was then a miracle, and a ſingular gift of the holy Ghoſt, whereby infidels might bée perſwaded and brought to the faith; much leſſe is it to be ſuffered now amongſt Chriſtian and faithfull men, eſpecially being no miracle nor eſpeciall gift of the holy Ghoſt.

The ſixth argument.

Some will peradventure anſwer, that to uſe any kinde of tongue, in common prayer or adminiſtration of ſacraments, is a thing indifferent.

Objection diſſolved.

But S. Paul is to the contrary. For he commandeth all things to be done to edification, hée commandeth to kéep ſilence if there bée no interpreter, and in the end of the Chapter he concludeth thus, If any man bee ſpirituall or a Prophet, let him know that the things which I write, are the commandements of the Lord. And ſo ſhortly to conclude, the uſe of a ſtrange tongue, in prayer and adminiſtration, is againſt the word and commandement of God.

To theſe reaſons, grounded upon Saint Pauls words, which are the moſt firme foundation of this aſſertion, divers other reaſons may bee joyned, gathered out of the Scriptures and otherwiſe.

The 7. reaſon.

In the old teſtament all things pertaining to the publike prayer, benedictions, thankeſgivings, or ſacrifices, were alwaies in their vulgar and naturall tongue. In the 2. booke of Paralipom. Chapt. 29. it is written, that Ezechias commanded the Levites to praiſe God with the Pſalmes of David, and Aſaph the Prophet, which doubtleſſe were written in Hebrew their vulgar tongue. If they did ſo in the ſhadowes of the law, much more ought we to doe the like, who (as Chriſt ſaith) muſt pray, in ſpiritu & veritate.

The 8. reaſon.

The finall end of our prayer (as David ſaith) is, ut populi conveniant in unum, & annuncient nomen Domini in Sion, & laudes ejus in Hieruſalem.

But the name and praiſes of God cannot bee ſet forth to the people, unleſſe it bée done in ſuch a tongue as they may underſtand, therefore common prayer muſt bee had in the vulgar tongue.

The 9 reaſon.

The definition of publike prayer out of the words of S. Paul, Orabo ſpiritu, orabo & mente, Publicè orare, eſt vota communia mente ad Deum effundere, & ea ſpiritu, hoc eſt, lingua teſtari. Common praier is to lift up our common deſires to God with our minds, and to teſtifie the ſame outwardly with our tongues, which definition is approved by S. Auguſtine, De magiſtro, cap. 1. Nihil opus eſt (inquit) loquutione, niſi forte ut ſacerdotes faciunt, ſignificandæ mentis cauſa, ut populus intelligat.

The 10 reaſon.

The miniſtration of the Lords ſupper and baptiſme are as it were Sermons of the death and reſurrection of Chriſt.

But Sermons to the people muſt be had in ſuch language as the people may perceive, otherwiſe they ſhould be had in vaine.

The 11 reaſon or probation.

It is not lawfull for a Chriſtian man to abuſe the gifts of G O D: but he that prayeth in the Church in a ſtrange tongue, abuſeth the gifts of God. For the tongue ſerveth onely to expreſſe the minde of the ſpeaker to the hearer. And Auguſtine ſaith, De doctrina Chriſtiana, lib. 4. cap. 10. Loquendi omnino nulla eſt cauſa, ſi quod loquimur non intelligunt, propter quos, ut intelligant, loquimur. There is no cauſe why we ſhould ſpeak, if they for whoſe cauſe we ſpeak, underſtand not our ſpeaking.

The 12. reaſon or probation.

The heathen and barbarous nations of all countries and ſorts of men, were they never ſo wilde, evermore made their prayers and ſacrifices to their gods in their owne mother tongue. Which is a manifeſt declaration that it is the very light and voyce of nature.

¶ Thus much upon the ground of S. Paul and other reaſons out of the Scriptures, joyning therewith the common uſage of all nations, as a teſtimonie of the law of nature.

The ſecond part of the firſt propoſition.

Now for the ſecond part of the aſſertion, which is, that the uſe of a ſtrange tongue in publike prayer and adminiſtration of ſacraments, is againſt the cuſtome of the Primitive Church; it is a matter ſo cleere, that the deniall of it muſt needs proceede either of great ignorance, or elſe of wilfull malice.

Iuſtinus Apol. 2.

The firſt argument out of Iuſtine Martyr.

For firſt of all Iuſtinus Martyr deſcribing the order of the Communion in his time, ſaith thus. Die ſolis urbanorum ac ruſticorum cœtus fiunt, ubi Apoſtolorum Prophetarumq; literæ, quoad fieri poteſt prælegumtur: Deinde ceſſante lectore, præpoſitus verba facit adhortatoria, ad imitationem tam honeſtarum rerum invitans. Poſt hæc conſurgimus omnes, & preces offerimus, quibus finitis profertur (ut diximus) panis, vinum & aqua; tum præpoſitus, quantum poteſt, preces offert, & gratiarum actiones, plebs verò Amen accinit. That is to ſay, Upon the Sunday aſſemblies are made both of the Citizens and Country men, whereas the writings of the Apoſtles and of the Prophets are read, as much as may be. Afterwards when the Reader doth ceaſe, the head miniſter maketh an exhortation, exhorting them to follow ſo honeſt things. After this we riſe all together and offer prayers, which being ended (as we have ſaid) bread and water are brought forth. Then the head Miniſter offereth prayers and thankſgiving, as much as he can, and the people anſwereth Amen.

¶ Theſe words of Iuſtine, who lived about 160. yeares after Chriſt, conſidered with their circumſtance, declare plainely, that not onely the Scriptures were read, but alſo that the prayers and adminiſtration of the Lords ſupper were done in a tongue underſtood.

The ſecond argument out of Baſill.

The Liturgies both of Baſill and Chryſoſtome declare, that in the celebration of the Communion, the people were appointed to anſwer to the prayer of the miniſter, ſometimes Amen, ſometimes, Lord have mercie upon us, ſometimes, And with thy ſpirit, and, We have our hearts lifted up unto the Lord, &c. Which anſwers they could not have made in due time, if the prayer had not been made in a tongue underſtood.

Baſilius. Epiſt. 63.

And for further proofe, let us heare what Baſill writeth in this matter to the Clerkes of Neocæſarea. Cæterum ad objectum in Pſalmodiis crimen quo maxime ſimpliciores terrent calumniatores, &c. As touching that is laid to our charge in Pſalmodies and ſongs, wherewith our ſlanderers doe fray the ſimple, I have thus to ſay, that our cuſtomes and uſages in all Churches be uniforme, and agreeable.

For in the night the people with us riſeth, goeth to the houſe of prayer, and in travell, tribulation, and continuall teares, they confeſſe themſelves to God, and at the laſt riſing againe, goe to their ſongs or pſalmody, where being divided into two parts, they ſing by courſe together, both deeply weighing and confirming the matter of the heavenly ſayings, and alſo ſtirring up their attention and devotion of heart, which by other meanes bee alienated and plucked away. Then appointing one to begin the ſong, the reſt follow, and ſo with divers ſongs and prayers paſſing over the night, at the dawning of the day, all together, even as it were with one mouth and one heart, they ſing unto the Lord a ſong of Confeſſion, every man framing to himſelfe meet words of repentance.

If you will flie us from henceforth for theſe things, ye muſt flie alſo the Egyptians, and both the Libians, ye muſt eſchew the Thebanes, Paleſtines, Arabians, the Phenices, the Sirians, and thoſe that dwell beſides Euphrates; and to be ſhort, all thoſe with whom watchings, prayers, and common ſinging of Pſalmes are had in honor.

Teſtimonies of Saint Ambroſe, written upon the fourteenth to the Corinthians, the firſt Epiſtle, Super illud, qui enim loquitur linguis.

Ambroſius. Another argument of S. Ambroſe.

HOc eſt quod dicit, quia qui loquitur incognita lingua, &c. This is it that he ſaith; becauſe he which ſpeaketh in an unknowne tongue, ſpeaketh to God. For he knoweth all things, but men know not, and therefore there is no profit of this thing.

Ambroſe.

The ſame author afterwards, Super illud, ſi benedixeris ſpiritu.

Hoc eſt, ſi laudem Dei lingua loquaris ignota, &c. Upon theſe words, if thou bleſſe or give thankes with the ſpirit, how ſhall he that occupieth the roome of the unlearned, ſay, Amen, at thy giving of thankes, ſeeing he underſtandeth not what thou ſayeſt?

That is (ſaith Ambroſe) if thou ſpeak the praiſe of God in a tongue unknowne to the hearers. For the unlearned, hearing that which he underſtandeth not, knoweth not the end of the prayer, and he anſwereth not Amen. That is as much to ſay as (true) that the bleſſing or thankſgiving may be confirmed. For the confirmation of the prayer is fulfilled by them which doe anſwer, Amen. That all things ſpoken might be confirmed in the mindes of the hearers, through the teſtimony of the truth.

Ambroſe.

¶ Afterward in the ſame place upon theſe words, If any Infidell or unlearned come in.

Quum enim intelligit & intelligitur, &c. For when he underſtandeth, and is underſtood, hearing God to be praiſed and Chriſt to be worſhipped, he ſeeth perfectly that the Religion is true, and to bee reverenced, wherein hee ſeeth nothing to be done colourably, nothing in darkneſſe, as among the heathen, whoſe eyes are covered, that they ſeeing not the things which they call holy, might perceive themſelves to be deluded with divers vanities. For all falſhood ſeeketh darkneſſe, and ſheweth falſe things for true. Therefore with us nothing is done privily, nothing covertly, but one God is ſimply praiſed, of whom are all things, and one Lord Ieſus, by whom are all things. For if there be none which can underſtand, or of whom he may bee tryed, hee may ſay, there is ſome deceit and vanity, which is therefore ſung in tongues (not underſtood, hee meaneth) becauſe it is a ſhame to open it.

Vpon this place, Omnia ad ædificationem fiant.

Ambroſe.

Concluſio hæc eſt, ut nihil in caſſum in Eccleſia geratur; hocque elaborandum magis, ut & imperiti proficiant, ne quid ſit corporis per imperitiam tenebroſum. Let all things be done to edifie.

This is the concluſion, that nothing ſhould be done in the Church in vaine, and that this thing ought chiefly to be laboured for, that the unlearned alſo might profit, leſt any part of the body ſhould be dark through ignorance.

Againe, Si non fuerit interpres, taceat in Eccleſia.

Ambroſe.

Hoc eſt, intra ſe tacite oret aut loquatur Deo, qui audit muta omnia. In Eccleſia enim ille debet loqui qui omnibus proſit.

If there be no interpreter, let him keep ſilence in the Church.

That is, let him pray ſecretly, or ſpeak to God within himſelfe, which heareth all dumb things: for in the Church he ought to ſpeake which may profit all men.

Teſtimonies out of Saint Hierome, upon that place of Paul, Quomodo qui ſupplet locum idiotæ, &c.

Hieronymus.

PEr illum, ſaith Saint Hierome, qui ſupplet locum idiotæ, laicum intelligit, qui nullo gradu Eccleſiaſtico fungitur. It is the lay man, ſaith he, whom Paul here underſtandeth to be in the place of the ignorant man, which hath no Eccleſiaſticall office. How ſhall he anſwer Amen to the prayer that he underſtandeth not?

And a little after upon theſe words, Nam ſi orare lingua, &c.

Hoc dicit, quoniam ſi quis incognitis aliis linguis loquatur, mens ejus non ipſi efficitur ſine fructu, ſed audienti. Quicquid enim dicitur, ignorat. This is Pauls meaning, ſaith Hierome, If any man ſpeaketh in ſtrange and unknowen tongues, his minde is not to himſelfe without fruit and profit, but he is not profited that heareth him.

¶ And in the end of his Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Galathians, he ſaith thus:

Quod autem (Amen) conſenſum ſignificat audientis, &c. That (Amen) ſignifieth the conſent of the hearer, and is the ſealing up of the truth, Paul in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians teacheth, ſaying, But if thou ſhalt bleſſe in ſpirit, who ſupplyeth the place of the ignorant, how ſhall he at thy prayer anſwer (Amen) ſeeing he knoweth not what thou ſayeſt? Whereby he declareth, that the unlearned man cannot anſwer, that that which is ſpoken is true, unleſſe he underſtand what is ſaid.

The ſame Hierome ſaith in the Preface of S. Pauls Epiſtle to the Galathians, that the noiſe of (Amen) ſoundeth in the Roman Church like an heavenly thunder.

Baſil ho. 4. hexam.

As Hierome compareth this ſound of common prayer to thunder, ſo compareth Baſill it to the ſound of the ſea, in theſe words, If the Sea bée faire, how is not the aſſembly of the congregation much farer? in the which a joyned ſound of men, women and children, as it were of the waves beating on the ſhore, is ſent forth in our prayers unto our God.

Chryſoſt. in 2. ad Cor. ca. 14.

Cum populus ſemel audivit, εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων ſtatim omnes reſpondent, Amen.

When the people once heare theſe words (world without end) they all forthwith anſwer, Amen.

Idem eodem loco, in illa verba, ſi ingrediatur infidelis, aut indoctus.

And the ſame writer upon the ſame chapter, upon theſe words, How ſhall hée that occupieth the roome of the unlearned, ſay Amen? En rurſus amuſſi (quod dicitur) ſaxum applicat, Eccleſiæ ædificationem ubique requirens, &c. Behold again, he applieth the ſtone unto the ſquire (as the Proverbe is) requiring the edifying of the Congregation in all places. The unlearned he calleth the common people, and ſheweth that it is no ſmall diſcommoditie, if they cannot ſay, Amen.

Another argument out of Chryſoſtome.

And againe the ſame Chryſoſtome, Quin & in precibus viderit quis populum multum ſimul offerre, tum pro energumenis, tum pro pœnitentibus. Communes enim preces & á ſacerdote & ab illis fiunt, & omnes dicunt unam orationem, orationem miſericordia plenam. Iterum, ubi excluſerimus à ſacerdotalibus ambitibus eos qui non poſſunt eſſe participes ſanctæ menſæ, alia facienda eſt oratio, & omnes ſimiliter ſurgimus, &c. that is, Yea in the prayers you may ſée the people offer largely, both for the poſſeſſed and the penitents. For the Prieſts and the people pray altogether commonly, and all one prayer, a prayer full of mercy and pitie. And excluding out of the Prieſts limits all ſuch as cannot bée partakers of the holy table, another prayer muſt bée made, and all after one ſort lye downe upon the earth, and all againe after one ſort riſe up together. Now when the peace is given, wée all in like manner ſalute one another, and the Prieſt in the reverent myſtries wiſheth well to the people, and the people unto him: for Et cum ſpiritu tuo, is nothing elſe but this. All things that belong to the ſacrament of thankſgiving, are common to all. But he giveth not thankes alone, but all the people with him.

Hereby it may appeare, that not the Prieſt alone communicated nor prayed alone, nor had any peculiar prayer, but ſuch as was common to them all, ſuch as they all underſtood, and all were able to ſay with the Prieſt, which could not have béen, if hée had uſed a ſtrange tongue in the miniſtration of the ſacraments.

Dionyſius.

Dionyſius deſcribing the manner of the miniſtration of the Lords ſupper, ſaith, That hymnes were ſaid of the whole multitude of the people.

Cyprian. ſer. 6. de or. dominica.

Cyprian ſaith, The Prieſt doth prepare the mindes of the brethren, with a preface before the prayer, ſaying, Lift up your hearts: that whiles the people doth anſwer, wée have our hearts lifted up to the Lord, they may bée admoniſhed that they ought to thinke of none other thing than of the Lord.

Aug. in Pſal. 18

S. Auguſtine, Quod hic ſit, intelligere debemus, &c. What this ſhould be we ought to underſtand, that we may ſing with reaſon of man, not with chatting of birds. For Owſels and Popinjaies, and Ravens, and Pies, and other ſuch like birds are taught by men to prate they know not what. But to ſing with underſtanding, is given by Gods holy will to the nature of man.

Aug. de Magiſ.

The ſame Auguſtine, There néedeth no ſpéech when wée pray, ſaving perhaps as the Prieſts do, to declare their meaning, not that God, but that men may heare them, and ſo, being put in remembrance by conſenting with the Prieſt, may hang upon God.

Novell conſtitut. 113.

To theſe teſtimonies of the ancient writers, we will joyne one conſtitution of Juſtinian the Emperor, who lived 527, yeares after Chriſt, Iubemus ut omnes Epiſcopi pariter & Presbyteri, &c. We command that all Biſhops and Prieſts doe celebrate the holy oblation, and the prayers uſed in holy Baptiſme, not ſpeaking low, but with a cléere or loud voyce, which may be heard of the people, that thereby the mindes of the hearers may bée ſtirred up with greater devotion, in uttering the praiſes of the Lord God. For ſo the holy Apoſtle teacheth in his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, ſaying, Truely, if thou onely bleſſe or give thankes in ſpirit, how doth he which occupieth the place of the unlearned, ſay the Amen, at the giving of thankes unto God? for hée underſtandeth not what thou ſayeſt. Thou verily giveſt thankes well, but another is not edified. And againe, in the Epiſtle to the Romanes he ſaith, Cordu creditur ad juſtitiam, ore autem fit confeſſio ad ſalutem, with the heart a man belééveth unto righteouſnes, and with the mouth confeſſion is made unto ſalvation.

Therefore for theſe cauſes it is convenient, that amongſt other prayers, those things alſo which are ſpoken in the holy oblation, bée uttered and ſpoken of the moſt religious Biſhops and Prieſts unto our Lord Jeſus Chriſt our God with the Father and the holy Ghoſt, with a loud voice. And let the moſt religious Prieſts know this, that if they neglect anie of theſe things, the dreadfull judgement of the great GOD and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, neither will we when we know it, reſt, and leave it unrevenged.

Out of this conſtitution of Iuſtinian the Emperour, three things are worthy to be noted.

Firſt, that the common prayer and miniſtration done with a loud voice, ſo as may bee heard and underſtood of the people is a meane to ſtirre up devotion in the people, contrary to the common aſſertion of Eckius and other adverſaries, who affirme that ignorance maketh a great admiration and devotion.

Secondly, that Juſtinian maketh this matter of not ordering common miniſtration and prayers, ſo as it may bee underſtood of the people, not a matter of indifferencie, but ſuch a thing as muſt bée anſwered for at the day of judgment.

Thirdly, that this Emperor, being a Chriſtian Emperor, doth not onely make conſtitution of Eccleſiaſticall matters, but alſo threatneth revenge and ſharp puniſhment to the violaters of the ſame.

¶ Theſe are ſufficient to prove that it is againſt Gods word, and the uſe of the Primitive Church, to uſe a language not underſtood of the people, in common prayer and miniſtration of the ſacraments. Wherefore it is to be marvelled at, not only how ſuch an untruth and abuſe crept at the firſt into the Church, but alſo how it is maintained ſo ſtiffely at this day, and upon what ground theſe, that will bée thought guides and paſtors of Chriſts Church, are ſo loth to returne to the firſt originall of S. Pauls doctrine, and the practice of the Primitive Catholike Church of Chriſt.

¶ The God of patience and conſolation, give us grace to be like minded one towards another in Chriſt Ieſus, that we all agréeing together, may with one mouth praiſe God the father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, Amen.

And the ſame being ended with ſome likelihood, as it ſéemed, that the ſame was much allowable to the audience; certaine of the Biſhops began to ſay contrary to their former anſwer, that they had now much more to ſay to this matter, wherein although they might have béene well reprehended for ſuch manner of cavillation; yet for avoiding of any more miſtaking of orders in this colloquy or conference, and for that they ſhould utter all that which they had to ſay, it was both ordered and thus openly agréed upon of both parts in the full audience, that upon the Munday following, the Biſhops ſhould bring their mindes and reaſons in writing to the ſecond aſſertion, and the laſt alſo if they could, and firſt reade the ſame: and that done, the other part ſhould bring likewiſe theirs to the ſame. And being read, each of them ſhould deliver to other the ſame writings. And in the meane time, the Biſhops ſhould put in writing, not only all that which Doctor Cole had that day uttered, but all ſuch other matters as they any otherwiſe could thinke of for the ſame: and as ſoone as they might poſſible, to ſend the ſame book touching that firſt aſſertion to the other part, and they ſhould receive of them that writing which Maſter Horne had there read that day, and upon Munday it ſhould be agréed what day they ſhould exhibite their anſwers touching the firſt propoſition. Thus both parts aſſented thereto, and the aſſembly was quietly diſmiſſed.

The order of the ſecond daies talke.

The Lord Keeper of the great Seale, the Archbiſhop of Yorke, the Duke of Northfolke, and all the Councell being ſet, the Biſhops on the one ſide, and the Proteſtants, that is, the late baniſhed Preachers on the other ſide, thus began the Lord Keeper.

My Lords and Maſters, I am ſure ye remember well, what order of talke & writing was appointed to be had this day in this aſſembly, at our laſt méeting, which I will not refuſe now to repeat again for the ſhortneſſe of it, which was, that ye appointed here on both ſides ſhould bring in Engliſh writing, what ye had to ſay in the ſecond queſtion, and in this place appointed to reade the ſame. Therefore begin my Lords.

Wincheſt. I am determined for my part that there ſhall be now read, that which we have to ſay for the firſt queſtion.

L. Keeper. Will ye not then procéed in the order appointed you?

Wincheſt. I am, as I ſaid, provided for the firſt queſtion or propoſition: and we ſhould ſuffer prejudice, if ye permit us not to intreat of that firſt, and ſo we would come to the ſecond queſtion, and this is the order we would uſe. I judge all my brethren are ſo minded.

Biſhops. We are ſo determined.

L. Keeper. I know not what you would do for your determined order: but ye ought to look what order is appointed you to kéepe, which ye by this meanes do break and little regard.

Wincheſter. Sith our adverſaries part, if it pleaſe your Grace and Honours, have ſo confirmed their aſſertion and purpoſe, we ſuffer a prejudice or damage, if ye permit us not the like. Hereat Doctor Watſon Biſhop of Lincolne, being at this talke very deſirous to have ſpoken, ſaid now to the Biſhop of Wincheſter; I pray you let me ſpeake, which was permitted him: we are not uſed indifferently, ſince that you allow us not to open in preſent writing what we have to ſay for the declaration of the firſt queſtion, inſomuch, as that which ye take for the infirmation of the ſame, was meant nothing to that purpoſe, for that which Maſter Cole ſpake in this laſt aſſembly, was not prepared to ſtrengthen our cauſe, but he made his Oration of himſelfe, and ex tempore, that is, with no fore-ſtudied talke.

At ſuch the Biſhops words the Nobility and other of the audience much frowned and grudged, ſith that they all well knew, that Maſter Cole ſpake out of a writing which he held in his hand, and often read out of the ſame, and in that the ſame places which the Biſhops informed him, and appointed him unto with their fingers; all which things doe well declare the matter to be premeditate, and not done ex tempore, for that Maſter Cole was appointed by them to be their ſpeaker. Whereupon this of the Biſhop of Lincolne was the worſe taken, notwithſtanding he went onward complaining, and ſaid; we are alſo evill ordered as touching the time, our adverſaries part having warning long before, and we were warned only two daies before the laſt aſſembly in this place. What with this buſineſſe, and other trouble we have béen driven to, have béen occupied the whole laſt night. For we may in no wiſe betray the cauſe of God, nor will doe, but ſuſtaine it to the uttermoſt of our powers, as we ought ſo to endeavour by all maner of means. But hereunto we want preſently indifferent uſing.

L. Keeper. Take ye héed that ye deceive not your ſelves when it ſhall come to juſt triall of the matter, and that then it be not proved againſt you, that ye complain without cauſe, when the order and your manner towards it ſhall be duly weighed. I am willing and ready to heare you after the order taken and appointed for you to reaſon therein, and further or contrary to that I cannot deale with you.

Lich. Cov. Let us ſuffer no miſorder or injury herein, but be heard with indifferency, that is convenient and méet we ſhould have here.

L. Keeper. I pray you ſirs heare me, and mark it you well. It was concluded on by my Lords of the Councell, who you well know of, that their writing, which ye are now ſo willing to have heard, ſhould have béen read the firſt day, and then did we underſtand that Maſter Cole had ſaid what you would have him, and as much as you willed him to ſay, and upon that indifferency among us. I judge ye were aſked in the end of Maſter Coles rehearſall, whether that which he ſpake, was it yée would have him ſay, and ye granted it. Then whether ye would that he ſhould ſay any more in the matter, Yée anſwered no, whereupon the other part was heard, which you hearing then indéed without all good indifferency or plaine dealing, ye pretended that ye had more to ſay. So marks you with how ſmall equity you uſed your ſelves.

The B. We had indéed more to ſay, if we might have béen indifferently heard.

L. Keeper. Give me leave I ſay, and look what gaines you ſhould have if your preſent requeſt ſhould be granted you, that call ſo much of indifferent uſing, how you ſhould uſe thoſe other men? For many who are here preſent, were then away, ſo would you have your writing now read to them, which heard not this. Marke ye whether it had not béen more fit that yée had provided it againſt the firſt day, when they orderly read theirs, ſith to my knowledge, and as far as I have had to doe in the matter, you were of both ſides (I am ſure) warned at one time. Howbeit to ſatisfie your importunitie and earneſtneſſe of this crying out to have your firſt writing heard, I might well allow, if it ſo pleaſed the reſt of the Quéenes moſt honourable Councell, that you diſpatch the worke of the ſecond queſtion, appointed for this day, and give us up your writing for the firſt, ſo that when the day commeth that each of you ſhall anſwer the other in confirmation of the firſt queſtion, then the ſame day ye ſhall have time to reade this your firſt writing, which ye now would ſo faine reade. To this order all the Councell willingly condeſcended.

Lich. Cou. Nay, my Lords, they reading one, and we two bookes in one day, we ſhould not have time enough to reade them both. It would occupie too much time.

L. Keep. For my part I might well ſtay at the hearing of them both, and ſo I judge would the reſt of the Councel, and likewiſe the whole audience. At which ſaying there was a ſhout, crying on all ſides; Yea, yea, we would heare it gladly.

Lincolne. We cannot reade them both at one time: for their writing (I am ſure) would require an houre and a halfe, if ſo be it be ſo long as their laſt was, and then our anſwer would require no leſſe time after the firſt queſtion.

L.Keeper. I have ſhewed you we could be well contented to tarrie out the time when it commeth thereunto. Therefore ye néede not to be therein ſo curious, and we granting you thus much, and yet ye will obey no orders, I cannot tell what I ſhall ſay unto you.

Lincolne. We have béen wonderfully troubled in the order of this diſputation. For firſt it was appointed us by my Lord the Archbiſhop, that we ſhould diſpute, and that in Latine, and then had we another commandement that we ſhould provide a Latine writing, and now at laſt we are willed to bring forth our writings in Engliſh.

At theſe words the Lord Kéeper of the great Seale, the Archbiſhop, with all the Councell much muſed, and many murmured at ſuch his wrong report of the order well taken. Whereupon with an admiration the Lord Kéeper anſwered; I marvell much of the uſing of your ſelfe in this point, ſith I am aſſured the order was never otherwiſe taken than that you ſhould bring forth in Engliſh writing what you had to ſay for your purpoſe.

Hereupon the Biſhops of Lichfield and Chicheſter, to excuſe my Lord of Lincolne, ſaid; We ſo underſtood the order, my Lords.

L.Keeper. How likely is that, ſith that it was ſo plainly told you? But to end theſe delayes, I pray you follow the order appointed, and begin to intreate of the ſecond queſtion.

Lich.Cou. We were appointed this day by your Honours to bring in what we had to ſay in the firſt queſtion.

At the which ſaying the audience much grudged, who heard the former talke, contrarie to ſuch his report.

L.Leeper. The order was taken, for that your writings were not ready the laſt time, that yée ſhould yéeld the ſame to theſe men, meaning the Proteſtants, as ſoone as yée might, and upon the receipt of your writings, you ſhould have theirs, and this day you ſhould intreate of the ſecond queſtion, and of the third, if that ye had leaſure enough. This was the order, my Lords, except my memorie much faile me. The ſame all the Councell affirmed.

Lincolne. We were willed then to bring in this day our writing for the firſt queſtion alſo.

L.Keep. Ah ſirs, if ye be ſo hard to be ſatisfied, and to encline to the truth, let my Lords here ſay what was then determined.

B.Yorke. Ye are to blame to ſtand in this iſſue, for there was a plaine decréed order taken for you to intreate of the ſecond queſtion. Wherefore leave you your contention herein, and ſhew what ye have to ſay in the ſecond queſtion.

L.Keep. Goe to now, begin my Lords.

Lich.Cou. It is contrarie to the order in diſputations, that we ſhould begin.

Cheſter. We have the negative; the affirmative therefore they muſt begin.

Lich. Cou. They muſt firſt ſpeake what they can bring in againſt us, ſith we are the defending part.

Cheſter. So is the Schoole manner, and likewiſe the manner in Weſtminſter Hall is, that the Plaintifes part ſhould ſpeake firſt, and then the accuſed party to anſwer.

Lich. Cou. I pray you let the propoſition bee read, and then let us ſée who hath the negative part, and ſo let the other begin.

L.Keeper. The order was taken that ye ſhould begin.

Lich.Cou. But then we ſhould doe againſt the Schoole order.

L.Keeper. My Maſters, yee inforce much the Schoole orders. I wonder much at it, ſith divers of thoſe orders are oftentimes taken for the exerciſe of youth, and ought to maintaine a faſhion, and many preſcriptions, which we néede not here to recite, much leſſe obſerve. We are come hither to kéep the order of God, and to ſet forth his truth, and hereunto we have taken as good order as we might, which lieth not in me to change.

Carlile. We are of the Catholike Church, and abide therein, and ſtand in the poſſeſſions of the truth; and therefore muſt they ſay what they have to alledge againſt us, and ſo we to maintaine and defend our cauſe.

Lich.Cou. Yea, even ſo muſt the matter bee ordered.

Cheſter. When they bring any thing againſt us, it is ſufficient for us to denie it: Therefore muſt they begin.

Lich. And when they affirme any thing, and we ſay nay, the proofe belongeth to them, and ſo it behooveth them to ſhew firſt what they affirme, and for what cauſe and purpoſe.

L.Keeper. Here reſteth our purpoſe and whole matter, whether you will begin, if they doe not, ſith it was determined ye ſhould begin.

Lich,Cou. We heard of no ſuch order.

L.Keeper. No did? Yes, and in the firſt queſtion ye began willingly. How commeth it to paſſe that ye will not now doe ſo?

Cheſter. Then had wee the affirmation, which ſith that our adverſaries have now, they ſhould preſently begin.

This the Proteſtants denied, ſaying, that they in the firſt day had the negative, wherein they did not yet refuſe to begin.

L.Keeper. If you have any thing to ſay, my Lords, to the purpoſe, ſay on.

Lich. A particular ſort of men can never breake an Univerſall Church, which wee now maintaine: and as for theſe men, our adverſarie part, I never thought that they would have done ſo much as have named themſelves to be of the Catholike Church, challenging the name as well as we.

Proteſtants. We doe ſo, and we are of the true Catholike Church, and maintaine the veritie thereof.

Lincolne. Yet would ye overthrow all catholike order.

Horne. I wonder that yee ſo much ſtand who ſhould begin.

Lincolne. You count it requiſite that we ſhould follow your orders, as we have taken the queſtions at your hands, in that ſort as you have aſſigned them.

Lich, Coven. Yea, even ſo wee be driven to doe now.

L. Keeper. Nay, I judge if ye mark the matter well, the queſtions are neither of their propounding them to you, nor of your device to them, but offered indifferently to you both.

Horne. Indeede my Lords of the Queens moſt honourable Councell, theſe queſtions or propoſitions were propoſed unto us by your Honours, and they then having the preheminence, choſe to themſelves the negative, and yet freely began firſt: now againe why doe they not the like?

Lichfield being angrie that he ſhould ſo ſtraitly ſpeake againſt them, went quite from the matter, ſaying; My Lord Keeper of the great Seale, and you the reſt of the Queenes moſt honourable Councell, I hope that you all, and the Queenes Majeſtie her ſelfe, are inclined to favour the veritie in all things, and the truth of the Catholike Church, which we muſt, will, or can doe no otherwiſe, but earneſtly maintaine to the uttermoſt of our power, and to this purpoſe let us now well weigh who are of the true Catholike Church, they or we.

L. Keeper. Tarrie, now you goe from the matter, and make queſtions of your owne.

Lichfield yet not ſtraying from his digreſſion, ſaid thus; We muſt needes goe to worke, and trie that firſt, what Church they be of. For there are manie Churches in Germanie. Maſter Horne, Maſter Horn, I pray you which of theſe Churches are you of?

Horne. I am of Chriſts Catholike Church.

L. Keeper. Ye ought not thus to runne into voluntarie talke of your owne inventing, nor to deviſe new queſtions of your owne appointment, and thereby enter into that talke; ye ought not ſo to doe. But ſay on, if you have any thing to ſay in this matter.

Lich. Nay, we muſt firſt thus goe to work with them, as I have ſaid, if that wee will ſearch a truth: howbeit of the truth we have no doubt, for that we aſſuredly ſtand in it. Theſe men come in, and they pretend to bee doubtfull. Therefore they ſhould firſt bring what they have to impugne or withſtand us withall.

Winch. Let them begin; ſo will we go onward with our matter.

Cheſter. Otherwiſe, my Lords, if they ſhould not begin, but end the talke, then ſhould the veritie on our ſides bee not ſo well marked; for they ſhould depart ſpeaking laſt, cum applauſu populi, with the rejoycing triumph of the people.

Winch. Therefore I am reſolved that they ſhall begin ere that we ſay any thing.

Cheſter. I am ſorrie my Lords, that we ſhould ſo long ſtand in the matter with your Honours, and make ſo many words, and ſo much adoe with you, whom we ought to obey: howbeit there is no indifferencie if they begin not; and ſurely wee thinke it meete, that they ſhould for their parts give us place.

Lichfield. Yea, that they ſhould and ought to doe where any indifferencie is uſed.

Aelmer. We give you the place (doe we not?) and deprive you not of the preheminence, becauſe you are Biſhops; therefore I pray you begin.

The Biſhop. A goodly giving of place, I aſſure you: yea marie ye gave place, ſuch words they uſed, with more ſcoffes.

L. Keeper. If ye make this aſſembly gathered in vaine, and will not goe to the matter, let us riſe and depart.

Winch. Contented, let us be gone; for we will not in this point give over.

I pray you my Lords, require not at our hands that wee ſhould be any cauſe of hinderance or let to our religion, or give any ſuch evill example to our poſterity, which we ſhould doe if we gave over to them, which in no wiſe we may, or will doe.

L. Keeper. Let us then breake up, if you be thus minded. With theſe words the Biſhops were ſtraightwaies riſing. But then ſaid the Lord Keeper; Let us ſee whether every one of you be thus minded. How ſay you my Lord of Wincheſter, will you not begin to reade your writing?

Winch. No ſurely, I am fully determined, and fully at a point therein, howſoever my brethren doe.

Then the Lord Keeper asked how the Biſhop was called, who ſate next to Wincheſter in order. It was the Biſhop of Exceter, who being inquired his minde herein, anſwered that he was none of them. Then the Lord Keeper asked the other in order; and firſt Lincolne, who ſaid he was of the ſame minde that Wincheſter was of: and likewiſe anſwered Lichfield Coven. Cole, and Chadſey. Then Cheſter, being asked his ſentence, ſaid; My Lords, I ſay not that I will not reade it, if ye command us; but we ought not to doe it: yet I deſire your Honours not ſo to take it, as though I would not have read it. I meane not ſo.

L. Keeper. How ſay you to it, my Lord of Carlile?

Carlile. If they ſhould not reade theirs this day, ſo that our writing may be laſt read, ſo am I contented that ours ſhall be firſt read.

L. Keeper. So would yee make orders your ſelves, and appoint that we ſhould ſpend one day in hearing you.

Abbot. Then the Abbot of Weſtminſter was asked his minde, who ſaid; If it pleaſe your Honours, I judge that my Lords here ſtay moſt on this point, that they feare when they ſhall begin firſt, and the other anſwer thereupon, there ſhall be no time given to them to ſpeake, which my Lord miſliketh.

L. Keeper. How can it otherwiſe bee in talke appointed in ſuch aſſembly and audience: thinke you that there can be continuall anſwering one another? when ſhould it after that ſort have an end?

Lich, Coven. It muſt be ſo in diſputation to ſeek out the truth.

L. Keeper. But how ſay you my Lord Abbot, are you of the minde it ſhall be read?

Abbot. Yea forſooth, my Lord, I am very well pleaſed withall. Harpsfield being inquired his minde, thought as the other did.

L. Keeper. My Lords, ſith that ye are not willing, but refuſe to read your writing after the order taken, we will breake up and depart: and for that ye will not that we ſhould heare you, you may perhaps ſhortly heare of us.

Thus have we declared the order and manner of this communication or conference at Weſtminſter, betweene theſe two parties, wherein if any law or order were broken, judge (good Reader) where the fault was, and conſider withall what theſe Papiſts be, from whom if ye take away their ſword and authority, you ſee all their cunning how ſoone it lyeth in the duſt, or elſe why would they not abide the triall of writing? why would they or durſt they not ſtand to the order agreed upon? Whether ſhould we ſay ignorance or ſtubbornneſſe to be in them more, or both together? Who firſt being gently (as is ſaid) and favourably required to keep the order appointed, they would not. Then being ſecondly (as appeared by the Lord Keepers words) preſſed more earneſtly, they neither regarding the authority, &c. of that place, nor their own reputation, nor the credit of the cauſe, utterly refuſed that to doe. And finally, being againe particularly every of them apart diſtinctly by name required to underſtand their opinions therein, they all ſaving one (which was the Abbot of Weſtminſter, having ſome more conſideration of order and his duty of obedience than the other) utterly and plainly denied to have their book read, ſome of them as more earneſtly than other, ſo alſo ſome other more undiſcreetly and unreverently than others. Whereupon giving ſuch example of diſorder, ſtubbornneſſe, and ſelf-will, as hath not beene ſeene and ſuffered in ſuch an honourable aſſembly, being of the two eſtates of this Realm, the Nobility and the Commons, beſides the preſence of the Queens Majeſties moſt honourable privy Councell, the ſame aſſembly was diſmiſſed, and the godly and moſt Chriſtian purpoſe of the Queens Majeſtie made fruſtrate. And afterward, for the contempt ſo notoriouſly made, the Biſhops of Wincheſter and Lincolne, having moſt obſtinately both diſobeyed common authority, and varied manifeſtly from their owne order, and ſpecially Lincolne, who ſhewed more folly than the other, were condignely committed to the Tower of London, and the reſt (ſaving the Abbot of Weſtminſter) ſtood bound to make daily their perſonall appearance before the Councell, and not to depart the City of London and Weſtminſter, untill further order were taken with them for their diſobedience and contempt.

Biſhops committed to the Tower.

Beſides the former proteſtation or libell written and exhibited by the Proteſtants concerning the firſt queſtion, there was alſo another like writing of the ſaid Proteſtants made of the ſecond queſtion, but not publiſhed, which if it come to our hand, we will likewiſe impart unto thee.

As theſe Biſhops above named were committed to the Tower, ſo Boner Biſhop of London, about the ſame time was commanded to the Marſhalſea, where he both in his blinde bloody hereſie, and alſo in his deſerved captivity, long remained, abiding the Queenes pleaſure. Gods pleaſure I beſeech him ſo be wrought on that perſon, that the Church of Chriſts flocke, if they can take or look for no goodneſſe of that man to come, yet they may take of him and of other no more harme hereafter than they have done already. We all beſeech thee this O Lord eternall, Per Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum, Amen.

Boner caſt in the Marſhalſea.

About this time, at the beginning of the flouriſhing reigne of Queene Elizabeth, was a Parliament ſummoned and holden at Weſtminſter, wherein was much debating about matters touching Religion, and great ſtudy on both parts imployed, the one to retaine ſtill, the other to impugne the doctrine and faction which before in Queene Maries time had been eſtabliſhed. But eſpecially here is to be noted, that though there lacked no induſtry on the Papiſts ſide, to hold faſt that which they moſt cruelly from time to time had ſtudyed, and by all meanes practiſed to come by: yet notwithſtanding, ſuch was the providence of God at that time, that for lacke of the other Biſhops, whom the Lord had taken away by death a little before, the reſidue that there were left, could doe the leſſe; and in very deed, God be praiſed therefore, did nothing at all in effect. Although yet notwithſtanding there lacked in them neither will nor labour to doe what they could, if their cruell ability there might have ſerved. But namely amongſt all other, not onely the induſtrious courage of Doctor Story, but alſo his words in this Parliament are worthy to be knowne of poſterity: who like a ſtout and furious champion of the Popes ſide, to declare himſelfe how luſtie he was, and what he had and would doe in his Maſters quarrell, ſhamed not openly in the ſaid Parliament houſe to braſt out into ſuch an impudent ſort of words, as was a wonder to all good eares to heare, and no leſſe worthy of hiſtorie.

D. Stories impudent words in the Parliament.

The ſumme of which his ſhameleſſe talk was uttered to this effect: Firſt, beginning with himſelfe, he declared, that whereas he was noted commonly abroad, and much complained of, to have been a great doer, and a ſetter forth of ſuch religion, orders, and proceedings, as of his late Soveraigne that dead is, Q. Mary, were ſet forth in this realm, he denied nothing the ſame, proteſting moreover that he therein had done nothing, but that both his conſcience did leade him thereunto, and alſo his Commiſſion did as well then command him, as now alſo doth diſcharge him for the ſame, being no leſſe ready now alſo to doe the like, and more, in caſe he by this Queene were authoriſed likewiſe, and commanded thereunto. Wherefore, as I ſee (ſaith he) nothing to be aſhamed of, ſo leſſe I ſee to be ſorry for, but rather ſaid that he was ſorry for this, becauſe he had done no more than he did, and that in executing thoſe lawes they had not been more vehement and ſevere. Wherein he ſaid there was no default in him, but in them, whom he both oft and earneſtly had exhorted to the ſame, being therefore not a little grieved with them, for that they laboured only about the young and little ſprigs and twigs, while they ſhould have ſtriken at the roote, and cleane have rooted it out, &c. And concerning his perſecuting and burning them, he denied not, but that he was once at the burning of an Herewigge (for ſo he termed it) at Uxbridge, where he toſt a fagot at his face as he was ſinging Pſalmes, and ſet a Winebuſh of thornes under his feet, a little to prick him, with many other words of like effect. In the which words he named moreover Sir Philip Hobby, and another Knight of Kent, with ſuch other of the richer and higher degree, whom his counſell was to plucke at, and to bring them under coram, wherein (ſaid he) if they had followed my advice, then had they done well and wiſely. This or much like was the effect of the ſhameleſſe and tyrannicall excuſe of himſelfe, more meet to ſpeake with the voice of a beaſt, than a man.

The words of D. Story in the Parliament houſe.

This Martyr burnt at Uxbridge was Maſter Denley.

Although in this Parliament ſome diverſity there was of judgement and opinion betweene parties, yet notwithſtanding, through the mercifull goodneſſe of the Lord, the true cauſe of the Goſpell had the upper hand, the Papiſts hope was fruſtrate, and their rage abated, the order and proceedings of King Edwards time concerning religion was revived againe, the ſupremacy of the Pope aboliſhed, the Articles and bloody Statutes of Queene Mary repealed; briefly, the furious fire-brands of cruel perſecution which had conſumed ſo many poore mens bodies, were now extinct and quenched.

Finally, the old Biſhops were depoſed, for that they refuſed the oath in renouncing the Pope, and not ſubſcribing to the Queenes juſt and lawfull title. In whoſe roomes and places, firſt for Cardinall Poole ſucceeded Doctor Matthew Parker, Archbiſhop of Canterburie. In the place of Heth ſucceeded Doctor Young. Inſtead of Boner, Edmund Grindall was Biſhop of London. For Hopton, Thurlby, Tonſtall, Pates, Chriſtopherſon, Peto, Coates, Morgan, Feaſie, White, Oglethorpe, &c. were placed Doctor John Parkuſt in Norwich, Doctor Coxe in Ely, Jewel in Saliſbury, Pilkenton in Dureſme, Doctor Sands in Worceſter, Maſter Downam in Weſtcheſter, Bentam in Coventry and Lichfield, David in Saint Davies, Ally in Exceter, Horne in Wincheſter, Scory in Hereford, Beſt in Carliſle, Bullingham in Lincolne, Scamler in Peterborough. Bartlet in Bathe, Geſt in Rocheſter, Barlo in Chicheſter, &c.

And here to make an end of this Story. Now it remaineth to proceed further to the Appendix, in ſupplying ſuch things as have either been omitted, or newly inſerted, as followeth.

The Appendix of ſuch Notes and Matters, as either have been in this Hiſtory omitted, or newly inſerted.

IN the ſtory of Sir Roger Acton above mentioned, I finde that with him were taken many other perſons, that all the priſons in and about London were repleniſhed with people. The chiefe of them, which were twenty and nine, were condemned of Hereſie, and attainted of high Treaſon, as movers of war againſt their King, by the temporall Law in the Guildhall, the twelfth day of December, and adjudged to be drawne and hanged for Treaſon, and for Hereſie to be conſumed with fire, Gallowes and all, which judgement was executed in Januarie following on the ſaid Sir Roger Acton, and twenty eight other.

Some ſay that the occaſion of their death was the conveighance of the Lord Cobham out of priſon. Other write that it was both for treaſon (as the Adverſaries termed it) and hereſie.

Certaine affirme, that it was for faigned cauſes ſurmiſed by the ſpiritualty, more of diſpleaſure than truth, as ſeemeth more neere to the truth.

Concerning Iohn Frith, of his life and ſtory this followeth more to be added.

FIrſt, this John Frith was borne in the town of Weſtrame in Kent, who after by diligent eſpials was taken in Eſſex flying beyond the Seas, and brought before the Councell, ſir Thomas More then being Chancellor, and ſo from them committed unto the Tower, where he remained priſoner the ſpace of a quarter of a yeare, or thereabout. It chanced that Doctor Currein, ordinary Chaplaine unto King Henry the eighth, preached a Sermon in Lent before his Majeſty. And there very ſore inveighing againſt the Sacramentaries (as they them termed and named) which favored not the groſſe opinion that Chriſts body was carnally reall in the Sacrament, he ſo far diſcourſed in that matter, that at the length he brake out thus far and ſaid; It is no marvell though this abominable hereſie do much prevaile among us; for there is one now in the Tower of London ſo bold as to write in the defence of that hereſie, and yet no man goeth about his reformation, meaning John Frith, who then had anſwered ſir Thomas More in writing againſt a confutation of that erroneous opinion, which of late before the ſaid Maſter More had written againſt John Friths aſſertion in that behalfe. This Sermon of purpoſe was deviſed and appointed by the Biſhop of Wincheſter and other to ſeeke the deſtruction of Frith, by putting the King in remembrance that the ſaid Frith was in the Tower there ſtaid, rather for his ſafeguard than for his puniſhment, by ſuch as favoured him, as the Lord Cromwell, who being Vicegerent in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall came then into ſuſpition therefore. For in ſuch ſort was the matter handled before the King, that all men might well underſtand what they meant. The K. then being in no point reſolved of the true and ſincere underſtanding of the doctrine of that Article, but rather a perverſe ſtout adverſary to the contrary, called to him my Lord of Canterbury and my Lord Cromwell, and willed them forthwith to call Frith unto examination, ſo that he might either be compelled to recant, or elſe by the Law to ſuffer condigne puniſhment.

Friths long protract in the Tower without examination was ſo hainouſly taken of the King, that now my Lord of Canterbury with other Biſhops, as Stokeſly then Biſhop of London, and other learned men were undelayedly appointed to examine Frith. And for that there ſhould be no concourſe of Citizens at the ſaid examination; my Lord of Canterbury removed to Croydon, unto whom reſorted the reſt of the Commiſſioners. Now before the day of execution appointed, my Lord of Canterbury ſent one of his Gentlemen and one of his Porters, whoſe name was Perlebeane, a Welchman borne, to fetch John Frith from the Tower unto Croidon. This Gentleman had both my Lords letters and the Kings ring unto my Lord Fitzwilliams Conſtable of the Tower, then lying in Canon rowe at Weſtminſter in extreame anguiſh and paine of the Strangullion, for the delivery of the priſoner. Maſter Fitzwilliams more paſſionate than patient, underſtanding for what purpoſe my Lords Gentleman was come, banned and curſed Frith and all other Heretikes, ſaying; Take this my ring unto the Lieutenant of the Tower, and receive your man your heretike with you, and I am glad that I am rid of him. When Frith was delivered unto my Lord of Canterburies Gentleman, man, they twaine with Perlebeane ſitting in a Wherry, and rowing towards Lambeth: The ſaid Gentleman much lamenting in his minde the infelicity of the ſaid Frith, began in this wiſe to exhort him to conſider in what eſtate he was, a man altogether caſt away in this world, if he did not looke wiſely to himſelfe. And yet though his cauſe were never ſo dangerous, he might ſomewhat in relenting to authority, and ſo giving place for a time, help both himſelfe out of trouble, and when opportunity and occaſion ſhould ſerve, prefer his cauſe which he then went about to defend, declaring further, that he had many well-willers and friends, which would ſtand on his ſide ſo far forth as poſſibly they were able and durſt doe; adding hereunto, that it were great pitty that hée being of ſuch ſingular knowledge both in the Latine, Gréek, and both ready and ripe in all kinde of learning, and that namely as well in the Scriptures, as in the ancient Doctors, ſhould now ſuddenly ſuffer all thoſe ſingular gifts to periſh with him with little commodity or profit to the world, and leſſe comfort to his wife and children, and other his kinsfolkes and friends. And as for the verity of your opinion in the Sacrament of the body and blood of our Saviour Chriſt, it is ſo untimely opened here among us in England, that you ſhall rather doe harme then good: wherefore be wiſe, and be ruled by good counſell, untill a better opportunity may ſerve.

This I am ſure of (quoth the Gentleman) that my Lord Cromwell and my Lord of Canterbury much favouring you, and knowing you to be an eloquent learned young man, and now towards the felicity of your life, young in yéeres, olde in knowledge, and of great forwardneſſe and likelihood to be a moſt profitable member for this Realme, will never permit you to ſuſtaine any open ſhame, if you will ſomewhat be adviſed by their counſell: on the other ſide, if you ſtand ſtiffe to your opinion, it is not poſſible to ſave your life. For like as you have good friends, ſo have you mortall foes and enemies.

I moſt heartily thanke you, quoth Maſter Frith unto the Gentleman, both for your good will, and for your counſell: by the which I well perceive that you minde well unto me; howbeit my cauſe and conſcience is ſuch, that in no wiſe I either may or can for any worldly reſpect, without danger of damnation ſtart aſide and flie from the true knowledge and doctrine which I have conceived of the Supper of the Lord, or the Communion, otherwiſe called the Sacrament of the Altar: For if it be my chance to bée demanded what I thinke in that behalfe, I muſt néeds ſay my knowledge and my conſcience, as partly I have written therein already, though I ſhould preſently loſe twenty lives if I had ſo many. And this you ſhall well underſtand that I am not unfurniſhed, either of Scriptures or ancient Doctors, Schoolemen, or other for my defence; ſo that if I may be indifferently heard, I am ſure that mine adverſaries cannot juſtly condemne me or mine aſſertion, but that they ſhall condemne with me both S. Auguſtine, and the moſt part of the old Writers: yea, the very Biſhops of Rome of the oldeſt ſort ſhall alſo ſay for me, and defend my cauſe. Yea marry, quoth the Gentleman, you ſay well; if you might bée indifferently heard. But I much doubt thereof, for that our Maſter Chriſt was not indifferently heard, nor ſhould be, as I thinke, if he were now preſent againe in the world, ſpecially in this your opinion, the ſame being ſo odious unto the world, and wée ſo farre off from the true knowledge thereof.

Well, well (quoth Frith then unto the Gentleman) I know very well, that this doctrine of the ſacrament of the Altar, which I hold, and have opened contrary to the opinion of this Realme, is very hard meat to be digeſted both of the Clergy and Laity. But this I will ſay to you, taking the Gentleman by the hand, that if you live but twenty yéeres more, whatſoever become of me, you ſhall ſée this whole Realme of mine opinion concerning this ſacrament of the Altar: namely, the whole eſtate of the ſame, though ſome ſort of men particularly ſhall not be fully perſwaded therein. And if it come not ſo to paſſe, then account me the vaineſt man that ever you heard ſpeake with tongue: Beſides this, you ſay that my death would be ſorrowfull and uncomfortable unto my friends.

I grant (quoth he) that for a ſmall time it would ſo be. But if I ſhould ſo mollifie, qualifie, and temper my cauſe in ſuch ſort as to deſerve only to be kept in priſon, that would not only be a much long griefe unto me, but alſo to my friends would bréed no ſmall diſquietneſſe both of body and minde. And therefore all things well and rightly pondered, my death in this cauſe ſhall bée better unto me and all mine, than life in continuall bondage and penuries. And Almighty God knoweth what he hath to doe with his poore ſervant, whoſe cauſe I now defend, and not mine owne; from the which I aſſuredly doe intend (GOD willing) never to ſtart, or otherwiſe to give place, ſo long as God will give me life.

This communication, or like in effect, my Lord of Canterburies Gentleman and Frith had comming in a Wherry upon the Thames, from the Tower to Lambeth.

Now when they were landed, after ſome repaſt by them taken at Lambeth, the Gentleman, the Porter, and Frith, went forward towards Croydon on foote. This Gentleman ſtill lamenting with himſelfe the hard and cruell deſtinie towards the ſaid Frith: namely, if he once came amongſt the Biſhops; and now alſo perceiving the excéeding conſtancy of Frith, deviſed with himſelfe ſome way or meanes to conveigh him cleane out of their hands; and thereupon conſidering that there were no moe perſons there to conveigh the priſoner, but the Porter and himſelfe, he tooke in hand to winne the Porter to his purpoſe. Quoth the Gentleman unto Perlebeane the Porter (they twaine privately walking by themſelves without the hearing of Frith) you have heard this man I am ſure, and noted his talke ſince he came from the Tower. Yea, that I have right well marked him (quoth the Porter) and I never heard ſo conſtant a man, nor ſo eloquent a perſon. You have heard nothing, quoth the Gentleman, in reſpect both of his knowledge and eloquence: if he might liberally either in Univerſity or Pulpit declare his learning, you would then much more marvell at his knowledge. I take him to be ſuch a one of his age in all kinde of learning and knowledge of tongues, as this Realme never yet in mine opinion brought forth; and yet thoſe ſingular gifts in him are no more conſidered of our Biſhops, than if he were a very Dolt or an Idiot; yea, they abhorre him as a devill therefore, and covet utterly to extinguiſh him as a member of the devill, without any conſideration of Gods ſpeciall gifts. Marry (quoth the Porter) if there were nothing elſe in him but the conſideration of his perſonage both comely and amiable, and of naturall diſpoſition, gentle, méeke, and humble; it were pitty he ſhould be caſt away. Caſt away (quoth the Gentleman?) He ſhall be ſure caſt away.

way if we once bring him to Croydon, and ſurely (quoth the Gentleman) before God I ſpeak it, if thou Perlebeane were of my minde, we would never bring him thither. Say you ſo, quoth the Porter? I know that you bee of a great deale more credit than I am in this matter; and therefore if you can deviſe honeſtly or finde ſome reaſonable excuſe, whereby we may let him goe and provide for himſelfe, I will with all my heart condeſcend to your deviſe. As for that (quoth the Gentleman, it is already invented how and which waies hee ſhall conveigh himſelfe without any great danger or diſpleaſure taken towards us, as the matter ſhall bee handled. You ſee (quoth the Gentleman) yonder hill before us named Briſtow Cawſie, two miles from London, there are great woods on both ſides, when we come there we will permit Frith to goe into the woods on the left hand of the way, whereby he may conveigh himſelfe into Kent among his friends, for he is a Kentiſh man borne, and when he is gone, we will linger an houre or twaine about the High-way, untill that it ſomewhat draw towards the night. Then in great haſt we will approach unto Streatham, which is a mile and a halfe off, and make an out-crie in the Towne that our priſoner is broken from us into the woods on the right hand towards Wayneſworth, ſo that wee will draw as many as we may of the Towne to ſearch the country that way for our priſoner, declaring that we followed above a mile or more, and at length loſt him in the woods, becauſe we had no more company, and ſo we will rather than faile lie out one night in ſearching for him, and ſend word from Streatham to my Lord of Canterbury at Croydon in the evening of the priſoners eſcape, and to what coaſt he is fled. So that by the morning, if hee have any good lucke at all, he will ſo provide for himſelfe, that the Biſhops ſhall faile of their purpoſe. I aſſure you (quoth Perlebeane) I like very well the deviſe herein; and therefore goe ye to Frith, and declare what we have deviſed for his delivery: for now we are almoſt at the place.

When my Lord of Canterburies Gentleman came nigh to the hill, he joyned himſelfe in company with the ſaid Frith, and calling him by his name, ſaid; Now Maſter Frith, let us twaine commune together another whiles: you muſt conſider, that the journie which I have now taken in hand thus in bringing you to Croydon, as a ſheep to the ſlaughter, ſo grieveth me, and as it were overwhelmeth me in cares and ſorrowes, that I little paſſe what danger I fall in, ſo that I could finde the meanes to deliver you out of the Lyons mouth. And yet yonder good fellow and I have ſo deviſed a meanes, whereby you may both eaſily eſcape from this great and imminent danger at hand, and we alſo be rid from any vehement ſuſpicion. And thereupon declared unto Frith the full proceſſe diſcourſed before, how every thing in order ſhould be handled.

When Frith had diligently heard all the matter concerning his delivery, he ſaid to the Gentleman; Oh good Lord, with a ſmiling countenance, is this the effect of your ſecret conſultation, thus long betweene you twaine? Surely, ſurely, you have loſt a great deale more labour in times paſt, and ſo are you like to doe this; for if you ſhould both leave me here, and goe to Croydon, declaring to the Biſhops, that you had loſt Frith, I would ſurely follow after as faſt as I might, and bring them newes that I had found and brought Frith againe. Doe you think (quoth he) that I am affraid to declare my opinion unto the Biſhops of England in a manifeſt truth?

You are a fond man (quoth the Gentleman) thus to talke: As though your reaſoning with them might doe ſome good. But I doe much marvell, that you were ſo willing to flie the Realme before you were taken, and now ſo unwilling to ſave your ſelfe. Marie there was and is a great diverſitie of eſcaping betweene the one and the other, quoth Frith.

Before, I was indeede deſirous to eſcape, becauſe I was not attached, but at liberty, which liberty I would faine have enjoyed for the maintenance of my ſtudie beyond the ſea, where I was Reader in the Greek tongue, according to Saint Pauls counſell. Howbeit, now being taken by the higher power, and as it were by Almighty Gods permiſſion and providence delivered into the hands of the Biſhops, only for Religion and Doctrines ſake, namely, ſuch as in conſcience and under paine of damnation I am bound to maintaine and defend, if I ſhould now ſtart aſide and runne away, I ſhould runne from my GOD, and from the teſtimonie of his holy Word, worthy then of a thouſand hels. And therefore I moſt heartily thanke you both for your good wils toward me, beſeeching you to bring me where I was appointed to be brought; for elſe I will goe thither all alone. And ſo with a cheerefull and merry countenance he went with them, ſpending the time with pleaſant and godly communication, untill they came to Croydon, where for that night hee was well entertained in the Porters lodge. On the morrow he was called before certaine Biſhops and other learned men, ſitting in commiſſion with the Lord of Canterbury, to be examined, where he ſhewed himſelfe paſſing ready and ripe in anſwering to all objections, as ſome then reported, incredibly and contrary to all mens expectations. And his allegations both out of Saint Auguſtine and other ancient Fathers of the Church were ſuch, that ſome of them much doubted of Saint Auguſtines authority in that behalfe. Inſomuch, that it was reported of ſuch as were nigh and about the Archbiſhop of Canterbury (who then was not fully reſolved of the ſincere truth of that article) that when they had finiſhed their examination of Frith, the Archbiſhop conferring with Doctor Heath privately betweene themſelves, ſaid; This man hath wonderfully travelled in this matter, and yet in mine opinion he taketh the Doctors amiſſe. Well, my Lord, ſhould Doctor Heath ſay, there was no man that could avoide his authorities of S. Auguſtine. Wherein, ſaid my Lord? Then D. Heath began to repeat yͤ ſaid authorities of S. Auguſtine again, inferring and applying them ſo ſtraightly againſt my L. of Canterbury, that my Lord was driven to this ſhot anker, and ſaid; I ſee by it, quoth he to Heath, that you with a little more ſtudy will be eaſily brought to Friths opinion, or ſuch like words in effect: and ſome chaplains there were of my L. of Canterburies, which openly reported, that D. Heath was as able to defend Friths aſſertions in the ſacrament, as Frith was himſelfe.

This learned young man being thus throughly ſifted at Croydon, to underſtand what he could ſay or doe in his cauſe, there was no man willing to preferre him to anſwer in open diſputation as poore Lambert was. But now without regard of learning or good knowledge hee was ſent and detained unto the Butchers ſtall; I meane Biſhop Stokeleyes Conſiſtory, there to heare not the opinion of Saint Auguſtine and other ancient Fathers of Chriſts Primitive Church of the ſaid ſacrament, but either to be inſtructed and to heare the maimed and halfe cut-away ſacrament of Antichriſt, the Biſhop of Rome, with the groſſe and fleſhly imagination thereof, or elſe to periſh in the fire, as he moſt conſtantly did, after he had before the Biſhop of London, Wincheſter, and Chicheſter, in the Conſiſtorie in Pauls Church, moſt plainely and ſincerely confeſſed his doctrine and faith in this weighty matter, &c.

A note of William Plane.

IN the later dayes of King Henry the eighth, about that time Anne Aſkew was in trouble, one Doctor Crome was travelled withall to recant, for that he had preached ſomewhat againſt things maintained of the Papiſts in the Church. And one M. Tracy hearing thereof, brought a letter ſecretly to one Plane dwelling in Bouge Rowe, and deſired him to carry it to D. Crome, which letter tended to the end to perſwade him not to recant, but to ſtand in the truth. When this good man William Plane had it, as he was ever willing to further the truth, ſo he gladly delivered the ſame to Doctor Crome. Which when he had received, and read it, hée laid it downe upon the table, and after the ſayd William Plane was gone, an arch-papiſt came thither to perſwade him to recant, and in travelling with him hée found the ſayd letter on the board, which when hée had read, he examined him from whence it came; ſo what through flattery and threatning, he declared who was the meſſenger that brought it. Then was William Plane ſent for, caſt in the Tower, where he lay miſerably thirtéene wéekes, none admitted to come to him, in which time he was extremely racked, within halfe a finger breadth as farre as Anne Aſkew: but they could never get of him of whom he had the letter, nor for all their extremity would he accuſe any man; ſo in the end he was delivered out of the Tower, and lived about thrée yéeres after, and ſo godly ended his life. But unto this day would that Tracy never inquire in what condition his wife and children were left, although he was his meſſenger in carrying the letter: But (good Lord) the ſtrange diſeaſe that grew upon him by that extreme racking, as it is odious to rehearſe, ſo I will wiſh them to repent that were the inſtruments of his torments, if they be alive, and warne other Papiſts to the ſame, in whom any cruelty hath béen in the like cauſe.

A note of Lady Iane.

THe Lady Jane, ſhe whom the Lord Guilford married, being on a time, when ſhe was very young, at Newhall in Eſſex at the Lady Maries, was by one Lady Anne Wharton deſired to walke, and they paſſing by the Chappell, the Lady Wharton made low curteſie to the Popiſh Sacrament hanging on the Altar: which when the Lady Jane ſaw, ſhe marvelled why ſhe did ſo, and aſked her whether the Lady Mary were there, or not. Unto whom the Lady Wharton anſwered no: but ſhe ſaid that ſhe made her curteſie to him that made us all. Why (quoth the Lady Jane) how can he be there that made us all, and the Baker made him? This her anſwere comming to the Lady Maries eare, ſhe did never love her after, as is credibly reported, but eſtéemed her as the reſt of that Chriſtian profeſſion.

The copy of Queene Maries letter to the Duke of Northfolke.

A letter of Q. Mary to the Duke of Northfolke.

RIght truſty and right intirely beloved Couſin, we gréete you well, and having by the aſſiſtance of God and our loving ſubjects diſcomfited Wyat and the other Rebels of our County of Kent, who having paſſed the River of Kingſton, came backe againe towards London, and were encountred above Charing Croſſe, and there were overthrowne, and the moſt part of them were there ſlaine, Wyat, and thrée of the Cobhams, Bret, Knevet, Rudſtone, Iſeley, and other the chiefe Captaines taken priſoners: We have thought good as well to give you knowledge hereof, to the end ye may with us and the reſt of our loving ſubjects rejoyce, and give God thankes for this our victory, as alſo further to ſignifie unto you, that where the ſaid rebell did alway pretend the matter of our marriage to be the cauſe of this unlawfull ſtirre, now plainely appeareth by good and ſubſtantiall examinations of divers of the ſaid Traitors, that whatſoever they pretended, the finall meaning was to have deprived us from our eſtate and dignity Royall, and conſequently, to have deſtroyed our Perſon. Which thing, as we doe aſcertaine you of our Honour to be matter of trueth, ſo we pray you to cauſe the ſame to be publiſhed in all places of thoſe our Counties of Northfolke, and Suffolke, to the intent our good and loving ſubjects thereof be no more abuſed with ſuch falſe pretenſes, or other untrue rumours or tales, by whomſoever the ſame ſhall be ſet forth. And now things being in this ſort quieted, we cannot but give you thankes for the readineſſe that you have béene in with the force of our ſaid Countrie, to have ſerved us if néede had béene, praying you to doe the like on our behalfe to all the Gentlemen and others with you, with whom nevertheleſſe we require you to take ſuch orders as the force of our ſaid countrie may be ſtill in like readineſſe, to be imployed under good and ſubſtantiall Captaines, to be choſen of the Gentlemen inheritors within the ſaid Shire, for our further ſervice upon one houres warning, whenſoever we ſhall require the ſame. And in the meane time our pleaſure is, that ye have good regard to the quietneſſe and good order of the countrie, ſpecially to the apprehenſion of ſpreaders of falſe and untrue tales and rumours, whereby ye ſhall both deſerve well of your whole countrie, and alſo doe acceptable ſervice, which we will not faile to remember accordingly. Yeoven under our Signet at our Palace of Weſtminſter, the eight of February, the firſt yéere of our reigne. In haſte.

A Treatiſe of M. Nicholas Ridley, in the name, as it ſeemeth, of the whole Clergy, to King Edward the ſixth, concerning Images not to be ſet up, nor worſhipped in Churches.

¶ Certaine reaſons which moue us that we cannot with ſafe conſciences giue our aſſent, that the Images of Chriſt, &c. ſhould be placed and erected in Churches.

FIrſt the words of the commandment, Exod. 20. Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe any graven Image, &c. And the ſame is repeated more plainely, Deut. 27. Maledictus homo qui facit ſculptile & conflatile, &c. ponitque illud in abſcondito, &c. That is, Curſed is the man which maketh a graven or molten Image, &c. and ſetteth it in a ſecret place, and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

In the firſt place theſe words are to be noted, Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe, that is, to any uſe of religion.

In the later place theſe words, And ſetteth it in a ſecret place; for no man durſt then commit Idolatry openly. So that conferring the places, it doth evidently appeare, that Images both for uſe of religion, and in place of perill for Idolatry, are forbidden.

God, knowing the inclination of man to Idolatry, ſheweth the reaſon why he made this generall prohibition, Ne forte errore deceptus adores ea & colas. That is to ſay: Leſt peradventure thou being deceived, ſhouldſt bow downe to them and worſhip them.

This generall law is generally to be obſerved, notwithſtanding that peradventure a great number cannot be hurt by them, which may appeare by the example following.

God forbade the people to joyne their children in marriage with ſtrangers, adding the reaſon; Quia ſeducet filium tuum, ne ſequatur me. That is: For ſhe will ſeduce thy ſon, that he ſhall not follow me, Deut. 7.

Moſes was not deceived or ſeduced by Iethroes daughter, nor Booz by Ruth, being a woman of Moab. And yet for all that, the generall law was to bee obſerved, Thou ſhalt joyne no marriage with them. And ſo likewiſe, Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe any graven Image, &c.

Deut. 4. God giveth a ſpeciall charge to avoide Images. Beware (ſayth he) that thou forget not the Covenant of the Lord thy God which he made with thee, and ſo make to thy ſelfe any graven Image of any thing which the Lord hath forbidden thee, for the Lord thy God is a conſuming fire, and a jealous God.

If thou have children and nephewes, and doe well in the land, and being deceived, doe make to your ſelves any graven Image, doing evill before the Lord your God, and provoke him to anger, I doe this day call heaven and earth to witneſſe, that you ſhall quickly periſh out of the land which ye ſhall poſſeſſe, ye ſhall not dwell in it any longer time, but the Lord will deſtroy you, and ſcatter you amongſt all nations.

Note what ſolemne obteſtation God uſeth, and what grievous puniſhments he threatneth to the breakers of the ſecond commandement.

In the tabernacle and temple of God no Image was by God appointed openly to be ſet, nor by practiſe afterwards uſed or permitted, ſo long as religion was purely obſerved; ſo that the uſe and execution of the law is a good interpreter of the true meaning of the ſame.

If by vertue of the ſecond commandement Images were not lawfull in the temple of the Iewes, then by the ſame commandement they are not lawfull in the Churches of Chriſtians. For being a morall commandement, and not ceremoniall (for by conſent of Writers, only a part of the precept of obſerving the Sabbath is ceremoniall) it is a perpetuall commandement, and bindeth us as well as the Iewes.

The Iewes by no meanes would conſent to Herod, Pilate, or Petronius, that Images ſhould bee placed in the temple at Ieruſalem, but rather offered themſelves to the death, than to aſſent unto it. Who, beſides that they are commended by Ioſephus for obſerving the meaning of the law, would not have indangered themſelves ſo farre, if they had thought Images had been indifferent in the temple of God. For as S. Paul ſayth, 2 Cor. 6. Quid templo Dei cum ſimulachris, &c. Ioſeph. Antiq. lib. 17. cap. 8. li. 18. cap. 5. and 15.

Gods Scripture doth in no place commend the uſe of Images, but in a great number of places doth diſallow and condemne them.

They are called in the booke of Wiſedome, the trap and ſnare of the feete of the ignorant.

It is ſayd that the invention of them was the beginning of ſpirituall fornication: And that they were not from the beginning, neyther ſhall they continue to the end.

In the 15. Chapter of the ſame booke it is ſayd, Vmbra pictura, labor ſine fructu, &c. And againe, they are worthy of death both that put their truſt in them, and that make them, and that love them, and that worſhip them.

The Pſalmes and Prophets are full of like ſentences, and how can we then praiſe the thing which Gods ſpirit doth alwayes diſpraiſe?

Furthermore, an Image made by a father (as appeareth in the ſame booke) for the memoriall of his ſonne departed, was the firſt invention of Images, and occaſion of Idolatry, Wiſedome 14.

How much more then ſhall an Image made in the memory of Chriſt, and ſet up in the place of religion, occaſion the ſame offence? Euſeb. Eccleſ. hiſtor. lib. 7. cap. 18. Images have their beginning from the Heathen, and of no good ground; therefore they cannot bee profitable to Chriſtians. Whereunto Athanaſius agreeth, writing of Images againſt the Gentiles. Athanaſius cont. Gentes, ἡ τῶν εἰδώλων εὕρεσις οὐκ ἀπὸ ἀγαθοῦ, ἀλλὰ ἀπὸ κακίας γέγονε, τὸ δὲ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἔχον κακὴν, ἐν οὐδενί ποτε καλὸν κρίνειν, ὅλον ὂν φαῦλον. That is to ſay: The invention of Images came of no good, but of evill, and whatſoever hath an evill beginning can never in any thing bee judged good, ſeeing it is wholly naught.

Saint Iohn ſayth, my little children beware of Images, but to ſet them in the Churches, which are places dedicated to the ſervice and invocation of God, and that over the Lords table, being the higheſt and moſt honourable place where moſt danger of abuſe both is, and ever hath been, is not to beware of them, nor to flee from them, but rather to imbrace and receive them. Tertullian expounding the ſame words, writeth thus, Lib. de corona militis. Filioli, cuſtodite vos ab Idolis; non iam ab idlololatria quaſi ab officio, ſed ab Idolis. i. ab ipſa effigie eorum. That is to ſay: Little children, keepe your ſelves, from the ſhape it ſelfe, or forme of them.

Images in the Church either ſerve to edifie or to deſtroy. If they edifie, then is there one kinde of edification which the Scriptures neither teach nor command, but alwayes diſallow; if they deſtroy, they are not to be uſed, for in the Church of God all things ought to be done to edifie, 1 Corinth. 14.

The commandement of God is, thou ſhalt not lay a ſtumbling blocke or a ſtone before the blind: and curſed is hee that maketh the blinde wander in his way.

The ſimple and unlearned people, who have been ſo long under blinde guides, are blinde in matters of religion, and inclined to errour and Idolatry. Therefore to ſet Images before them to ſtumble at (Nam laquei pedibus inſipientium ſunt, that is, They be ſnares and trappes for the feete of the ignorant) or to leade them out of the true way, is not only againſt the commandement of God, but deſerveth alſo the malediction and curſe of God, Wiſd. 14.

The uſe of Images is to the learned and confirmed in knowledge neither neceſſary nor profitable. To the ſuperſtitious a confirmation in errour. To the ſimple and weake an occaſion of fall, and very offenſive and wounding of their conſciences; and therefore very dangerous. For Saint Paul ſaith, 1 Cor. 9. offending the brethren, and wounding their weake conſciences, they ſinne againſt Chriſt. And Matthew 18. Woe bee to him by whom offence or occaſion of falling commeth, it were better that a milſtone were tied about his necke, and hee caſt into the ſea, than to offend one of the little ones that beleeve in Chriſt. And where objection may bee made, that ſuch offence may be taken away by ſincere doctrine and preaching, it is to be anſwered, that that is not ſufficient, as hereafter more at large ſhall appeare.

And though it ſhould be admitted as true, yet ſhould it follow, that ſincere doctrine and preaching ſhould alwayes and in all places continue as well as Images; and ſo whereſoever an Image to offend were erected, there ſhould alſo of reaſon a godly and ſincere Preacher bée continually maintained: for it is reaſon that the remedy be as large as the offence, the medicine as generall as the poyſon, but that is not poſſible in the Realme of England that Images ſhould bée generally allowed, as reaſon and experience may teach.

As good Magiſtrates, which intend to baniſh all whoredome, doe drive away all naughty perſons, ſpecially out of ſuch places as be ſuſpected; even ſo Images, being Meretrices, i. Whores, for that the worſhipping of them is called in the Prophets fornication and adultery, ought to be baniſhed, and eſpecially out of Churches, which is the moſt ſuſpected place, and where the ſpirituall fornication hath béen moſt committed.

It is not expedient to allow and admit the thing which is hurtfull to the greateſt number, but in all Churches and Common-wealths the ignorant and weake are the greateſt number, to whom Images are hurtfull, and not profitable.

And where it is commonly alledged, that Images in Churches doe ſtirre up the minde to devotion, it may be anſwered, that contrariwiſe they doe rather diſtract the minde from praier, hearing of Gods Word, and other godly meditations, as we reade, that in the Councell chamber of the Lacedemonians no picture or Image was ſuffered, leſt in conſultation of weighty matters of the Common-weale, their mindes by the ſight of the outward Image might bée occaſioned to bée withdrawne, or to wander from the matter.

The experience of this preſent time doth declare that thoſe parts of the Realme, which thinks and are perſwaded that G O D is not offended by doing outward reverence to an Image, doe moſt deſire the reſtitution of Images, and have béen moſt diligent to ſet them up againe: Reſtitution therefore of them by common authority ſhall confirme them more in their errour to the danger of their ſoules, than ever they were before. For as one man writeth:

Nihil magis eſt certum, quàm quod ex dubio factum eſt certum. That is to ſay: Nothing is more certaine or ſure, than that which of doubtfull is made certaine.

The profit of Images is uncertaine, the perill, by experience of all ages and ſtates of the Church (as afore) is moſt certaine.

The benefit to bée taken of them (if there bée any) is very ſmall; the danger in ſéeing of them, which is the danger of Idolatry, is the greateſt of all other. Now to allow a moſt certaine perill for an uncertaine profit, and the greateſt danger for the ſmalleſt benefit, in matters of faith and religion, is a tempting to God, and a grievous offence.

Probations out of the Fathers, Councels, and Hiſtories.

FIrſt, it is manifeſt, that in the Primitive Church Images were not commonly uſed in Churches, Oratories, and places of aſſembly for religion; but they were generally deteſted and abhorred, inſomuch that the want of Imagery was objected to the Chriſtians for a crime.

Origen reporteth, that Celſus objected the lacke of Images, lib. 4. contra Celſum.

Arnobius ſayth alſo, that the Ethnikes accuſed the Chriſtians that they had neither Altars nor Images.

Zephirus in his Commentary upon the Apology of Tertullian, gathereth thus of Tertullians words; Qui locus perſuadendi frigeret penitus, niſi perpetuo illud teneamus: Chriſtianos tunc temporis odiſſe maximè ſtatuas cum ſuis ornamentis, &c. That is to ſay: Which place of perſwaſion were very cold, and to no purpoſe at all, except we hold this alwayes; That Chriſtians in thoſe dayes did hate moſt of all Images with their trimme decking and ornaments.

Ireneus lib. 1. cap. 24. reproveth the heretikes called Gnoſtici, for that they carried about the Image of Chriſt made in Pilates time after his owne proportion (which were much more to bée eſtéemed than any that can be made now) uſing alſo for declaration of their affection towards it, to ſet garlands upon the head of it.

Lactantius affirmeth plainly; Non eſt dubium, quin religio nulla ſit, ubicunque ſimulachrum eſt: lib. Divin. inſtit. 2. cap. 19. That is to ſay; It is not to be doubted, that there is no religion whereſoever is any Image. If Chriſtians then had uſed Images, he would not have made his propoſition ſo large.

St. Auguſtine De Civitate Dei, lib. 4. cap. 31. commendeth Varro the Roman in theſe words: Quum Varro exiſtimauerit caſtius ſine ſimulachris obſervari religionem, quis non videt, quantum appropinquaverit veritati? That is to ſay: When as Varro thought religion might be kept more purely without Images, who doth not ſée how néere he came to the truth? So that not only by M. Varroes judgement, but alſo by St. Auguſtines approbation, the moſt pure and chaſte obſervation of Religion, and néereſt the truth, is to be without Images.

The ſame S. Auguſtine in Pſal. 113. hath theſe words; Plus valent ſimulachra ad curuandam infoelicem animam, quàm ad docendam: That is to ſay; Images have more force to bowe downe and crooke the ſilly ſoule, than to teach it.

And upon the ſame Pſalme hée moveth this queſtion; Quiuis puer, imo quævis beſtia ſcit non eſſe Deum quod vident, cur ergo Spiritus ſanctus toties monet cavendum quod omnes ſciunt? That is to ſay: Every childe, yea every beaſt knoweth that it is not God which they ſée, why then doth the holy Ghoſt ſo oft give warning to beware of that thing which all doe know?

Saint Auguſtines anſwer.

Quoniam cum ponuntur in Templis, & ſemel incipiunt adorari à multitudine, ſtatim naſcitur ſordidiſſimus affectus erroris. That is to ſay; For when they are ſet in Churches, and begin once to be worſhipped of the multitude or common people, ſtraightway ſpringeth up a moſt filthy affection of errour.

This place of Saint Auguſtine doth well open how weake a reaſon it is to ſay, Images are a thing indifferent in Chambers and in Churches. For the alteration of the place, manner, and other circumſtances, doth alter oftentimes the nature of the thing. It is lawfull to buy and ſell in the Market, but not ſo in Churches. It is lawfull to eate and drinke, but not ſo in Churches. And therefore ſaith St. Paul, Annon habetis domos ad edendum ac bibendum? An Eccleſiam Dei contemnitis? That is to ſay: Have you not houſes to eate and drinke in? Doe you contemne the Church of God?

Many other actions there be which are lawfull and honeſt in private places, which are neither comely nor honeſt, not onely in Churches, but alſo in other aſſemblies of honeſt people.

Tertullian ſaith, he uſed ſometimes to burne frankincenſe in his chamber, which was then uſed of Idolaters, and is yet in the Romiſh Churches, but he joyneth withall; Sed non eodem ritu, nec eodem habitu, nec eodem apparatu, quo agitur apud Idola, That is to ſay: But not after ſuch a rite or ceremony, nor after ſuch a faſhion, nor with ſuch preparation or ſumptuouſneſſe, as it is done before the Idols.

So that Images placed in Churches, and ſet in honorabili ſublimitate, that is to ſay, in an honourable place of eſtimation, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, and eſpecially over the Lords Table, which is done (uſing the words of Tertullian) eodem ritu, & eodem habitu, that is, after the ſame manner and faſhion which the Papiſts did uſe, eſpecially after ſo long continuance of abuſe of Images, and ſo many being blinded with ſuperſtitious opinion towards them, cannot be counted a thing indifferent, but a moſt certain ruine of many ſouls.

Epiphanius in his Epiſtle to John Biſhop of Jeruſalem (which Epiſtle was tranſlated out of the Greeke by S. Jerome, being a likelihood that Jerome miſliked not the doctrine of the ſame) doth write a fact of his owne, which doth moſt cleerely declare the judgement of that notable learned Biſhop concerning the uſe of Images, his words are theſe: Quum veniſſem ad villam quæ dicitur Anablatha, vidiſſemque ibi præteriens lucernam ardentem, & interrogaſſem quis locus eſſet, didiciſſemque eſſe Eccleſiam, & intraſſem ut orarem: inveni ibi velum pendens in foribus ejuſdem Eccleſiæ tinctum atq; depictum, & habens imaginem quaſi Chriſti vel ſancti cujuſdam, non enim ſatis memini cujus fuit. Cum ergo hoc vidiſſem in Eccleſia Chriſti contra authoritatem Scripturarum, hominis pendere imaginem, ſcidi illud, &c. Et paulo poſt. Et præcepi in Eccleſia Chriſti iſtiuſmodi vela quæ contra religionem noſtram veniunt non appendi, &c. That is to ſay: When I came to a village called Anablatha, and ſaw there as I paſſed by a candle burning, and enquiring what place it was, and learning that it was a Church, and had entered into the ſame to pray, I found there a vaile or cloth hanging at the doore of the ſame Church, dyed and painted, having on it the Image of Chriſt as it were, or of ſome Saint (for I remember not well whoſe it was.) Then when I ſaw this, that in the Church of Chriſt againſt the authority of the Scriptures the Image of a man did hang, I cut it in peeces, &c. And a little after. And commanded that ſuch manner of vailes or clothes, which are contrary to our religion, be not hanged in the Church of Chriſt.

Out of this place of Epiphanius divers notes are to be obſerved.

Firſt, that by the judgement of this ancient Father, to permit Images in Churches is againſt the authority of the Scriptures, meaning againſt the ſecond commandement, Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe any graven Image, &c.

Secondly, that Epiphanius doth reject not only graven and molten, but alſo painted Images: forſomuch as he cut in peeces the Image painted in a vaile hanging at the Church doore; what would he have done, if he had found it over the Lords Table?

Thirdly, that he ſpareth not the Image of Chriſt: for no doubt that Image is moſt perillous in the Church of all other.

Fourthly, that he did not only remove it, but with a vehemency of zeale cut it in peeces, following the example of the good King Ezechias, who brake the braſen ſerpent, and burnt it to aſhes.

Laſt of all, that Epiphanius thinketh it the duty of vigilant Biſhops to be carefull, that no ſuch kinde of painted Images be permitted in the Church.

Serenus Biſhop of Maſſilia broke downe Images, and deſtroyed them when he did ſee them begin to be worſhipped, Greg. in regiſt. epiſt. 109.

Experience of the times ſince hath declared, whether of theſe two ſentences were better. For ſince Gregorius time the Images ſtanding in the Weſt Church, it hath been overflowed with Idolatry, notwithſtanding his or other mens doctrine: Whereas if Serenus judgement had univerſally taken place, no ſuch thing had happened. For if no Images had been ſuffered, none could have been worſhipped: and conſequently, no Idolatry committed by them.

¶ To recite the proceſſe of Hiſtories and Councels about the matter of Images; it would require a long diſcourſe, but it ſhall be ſufficient here briefly to touch a few.

It is manifeſt to them that reade Hiſtories, that not only Emperors, but alſo divers and ſundry Councels in the Eaſt Church have condemned and aboliſhed Images both by decrees and examples.

Petrus Crinitus de honeſta diſciplina, li. 9. ca. 9. ex libris Auguſtatibus hæc verba tranſcripſit. Valens & Theodoſius Auguſti Imperatores præfecto prætorio ad hunc modum ſcripſerint. Quum ſit nobis cura diligens in rebus omnibus ſuperni numinis religionem tueri: Signum Salvatoris Chriſti nemini quidem concedimus coloribus, lapide, aliave materia fingere, inſculpere, aut pingere, ſed quocunque reperitur loco tolli jubemus, graviſſima pœna eos mulctando qui contrarium decretis noſtris, & imperio quicquam tentaverint. That is to ſay, Petrus Crinitus in his booke of honeſt diſcipline, the 9. book, the 9. chap. wrote out of the Emperors bookes theſe words: Valens and Theodoſius the Emperors wrote to the high Marſhall or Lieutenant in this ſort. Whereas we are very carefull, that the religion of Almighty God ſhould be in all things kept, We permit no man to caſt, grave, or paint the Image of our Saviour Chriſt, either in colours, ſtone, or other matter; but whereſoever it be found, we command it to be taken away, puniſhing them moſt grievouſly that ſhall attempt any thing contrary to our decrees and Empire.

Leo the third, a man commended in Hiſtories for his excellent vertues and godlineſſe, who (as is judged of ſome men) was the author of the Booke De re militari, that is, Of the feat of War, being tranſlated out of the Greek by ſir John Cheeke, and dedicated to King Henry the eighth, your Highneſſe father, by publike authority commanded aboliſhing of Images, and in Conſtantinople cauſed all the Images to be gathered together on a heap, and burned them unto aſhes.

Conſtantine the firſt his ſon, aſſembled a Councell of the Biſhops of the Eaſt Church, in which Councell it was decreed, as followeth. It is not lawfull for them that beleeve in God thorow Jeſus Chriſt, to have any Images, either of the Creator, or of any creatures ſet up in Temples to be worſhipped, but rather that all Images by the law of God, and for the avoiding of offence, ought to be taken out of Churches. Which decree was executed in all places where any Images were, either in Greece or in Aſia. But in all theſe times, the Biſhops of Rome rather maintaining the authority of Gregory, weighing like Chriſtian Biſhops the perill of the Church, alwaies in their aſſemblies allowed Images.

Not long after, the Biſhop of Rome, practiſing with Tharaſius Patriach of Conſtantinople, obtained of Irene the Empreſſe, her ſonne Conſtantine being then young, that a Councell was called at Nice, in the which the Popes Legates were Preſidents, which appeared well by their fruits: for in that Councell it was decréed, that Images ſhould not onely bee permitted in Churches, but alſo worſhipped, which Councell was confuted by a book written by Carolus Magnus the Emperor, calling it a fooliſh and an arrogant Councell.

Soone after this Councell, aroſe a ſharpe contention betwéene Irene the Empreſſe, and her ſonne Conſtantine the ſixth, the Emperor, who deſtroyed Images. And in the end, as ſhe had before wickedly burned the bones of her father-in law, Conſtantine the fifth; ſo afterward unnaturally ſhe put out the eyes of her ſon Conſtantine the ſixth.

About which time, as Eutropius writeth, the Sunne was darkened moſt terribly for the ſpace of ſeventéene daies, God ſhewing, by that dreadfull ſigne, how much he miſliked thoſe kindes of procéedings.

To be ſhort, there was never thing that made more diviſion, or brought more miſchiefe into the Church, than the controverſie of Images: by reaſon whereof, not onely the Eaſt Church was divided from the Weſt, and never ſince perfectly reconciled, but alſo the Empire was cut aſunder and divided, and the gate opened to the Saracens and Turkes to enter and overcome a great piece of Chriſtendome. The fault whereof moſt juſtly is to be aſcribed to the Patrones of Images, who could not bée contented with the example of the Primitive Church, being moſt ſimple and ſincere, and moſt agréeable to the Scripture: (For as Tertullian ſaith; Quod primum verum, quod poſterius adulterinum, That is to ſay: What as is firſt, that is true, and that that is later is counterfeit.) But with all extremitie maintained the uſe of Images in Churches, whereof no profit nor commoditie did ever grow to the Church of God. For it is evident, that infinite millions of ſoules have béen caſt into eternall damnation by the occaſion of Images uſed in place of religion, and no Hiſtory can record, that ever any one ſoule was wonne unto Chriſt by having of Images. But leſt it might appeare that the Weſt Church had alwaies generally retained and commended Images: It is to be noted, that in a Councell holden in Spaine, called Concilium Eliberinum, the uſe of Images in Churches was cléerely prohibited in theſe forme of words: Placuit in Eccleſiis picturas eſſe non debere, ne quod colitur aut adoratur in parietibus depingatur. That is to ſay: We decree, that pictures ought not to be in Churches, leſt that be painted upon the wals, which is worſhipped or adored.

But this notwithſtanding experience hath declared, that neither aſſembling in Councells, neither writings, preachings, decrees, making of lawes, preſcribing of puniſhments, hath holpen againſt Images, to the which Idolatry hath been committed, nor againſt Idolatry whileſt Images ſtood. For theſe blinde Bookes and dumbe Schoolemaſters (which they call Lay-mensbooks) have more prevailed by their carved and painted preaching of Idolatry, than all other written bookes and preachings in teaching the truth, and the horrour of that vice.

Having thus declared unto your Highneſſe a few cauſes of many which doe move our conſciences in this matter, we beſeech your Highneſſe moſt humbly not to ſtraine us any further, but to conſider that Gods word doth threaten a terrible judgement unto us, if we, being Paſtors and Miniſters in his Church, ſhould aſſent unto the thing which in our learning and conſcience wee are perſwaded doth tend to the confirmation of errour, ſuperſtition, and Idolatry: and finally, to the ruine of the ſoules committed to our charge, for the which wée muſt give an account to the Prince of Paſtors at the laſt day, Hebrewes 1 . 1. Pet. 5. We pray your Majeſtie alſo not to be offended with this our plainneſſe and liberty, which all good and Chriſtian Princes have ever taken in good part at the hands of godly Biſhops.

Saint Ambroſe writing to Theodoſius the Emperor, uſeth theſe words; Sed neque imperiale eſt libertatem dicendi negare, neque ſacerdotale quod ſentiat non dicere. Item, in cauſa verò Dei quem audies, ſi ſacerdotem non audies cujus majore peccatur periculo? quis tibi verum audebit dicere, ſi ſacerdos non audeat? Epiſt. lib. 5. Epiſt. 29. That is to ſay: But neither is it the part of an Emperor to denie frée liberty of ſpeaking, nor yet the dutie of a Prieſt not to ſpeake what he thinketh. And againe; In Gods cauſe whom wilt thou heare, if thou wilt not heare the Prieſt, to whoſe great perill the fault ſhould bée committed? Who dare ſay the truth unto thee, if the Prieſt dare not? Theſe and ſuch like ſpéeches of S. Ambroſe, Theodoſius, and Valentinianus the Emperors did alwaies take in good part, and we doubt not but your Grace will doe the like, of whoſe not only clemencie, but alſo beneficence, we have largely taſted.

We beſéech your Majeſty alſo, in theſe and ſuch like controverſies of religion, to referre the diſcuſſement and deciding of them to a Synod of our Biſhops and other godly learned men, according to the example of Conſtantinus Maximus, and other Chriſtian Emperors, that the reaſons of both parts being examined by them, the judgment may be given uprightly in all doubtfull matters.

And to returne to this preſent matter, we moſt humbly beſéech your Majeſty to conſider, that beſides weighty cauſes in policie, which we leave to the wiſedome of your honourable Counſellors, the ſtabliſhment of Images by your authoritie ſhall not only utterly diſcredit our Miniſters, as builders up of the things which we have deſtroied, but alſo blemiſh the fame of your moſt godly father, and ſuch notable fathers as have given their life for the teſtimonie of Gods truth, who by publike law removed all Images.

The almighty and everliving God plentifully indue your Majeſty with his ſpirit and heavenly wiſedome, and long preſerve your moſt gracious reigne and proſperous government over us, to the advancement of his glorie, to the overthrow of ſuperſtition, and to the benefit and comfort of all your Highneſſe loving ſubjects.

A note of M. Ridley.

MAſter D. Ridley ſometime Biſh. of London of whom mention is made, was a man ſo reverenced for his learning and knowledge in the Scripture, that even his very enemies have reported him to have bin an excellent Clerke, whoſe life if it might have bin redeemed with the ſumme of 10000. markes, yea, 10000. pounds, the Lord Dacres of the North, being his kinſman, would have given it to Q. Mary, rather than he ſhould have been burned. And yet was ſhe ſo unmerciful, for all his gentleneſſe in King Edw. dayes, that it would not bee granted for any ſute that could bee made. Oh, that ſhe had remembred his labour for her to K. Edw. the 6. with Cranmer before mentioned, in ſuch ſort that even ſhe had yeelded but the reward of a Publicane, Mat. 5. then had the earth not ſo been bereft of him as it was; but the Lord forgive us our ſins which were the cauſe thereof, and grant that we never ſo provoke his anger againe, if it be his bleſſed will, Amen.

Reade before.

Another note of M. Ridley.

Maſter Ridley late Biſhop of London, being priſoner in the Tower, had there given him the liberty of the ſame, to prove belike whether he would goe to Maſſe or no, which once he did. And M. Bradford being there priſoner alſo the ſame time, and hearing thereof, taketh his pen and ink, and writeth to him an effectual letter to perſwade him from the ſame, and ſheweth the occaſion that thereby ſhould enſue, which (God be honored) did M. Ridley no little good: for he repented his fact therein, as he himſelfe maketh mention, writing againe in the later end of the book of Marcus Antonius, which he ſent to M. Bradford, and never after that polluted himſelfe with that filthy dregs of Antichriſtian ſervice.

A Commiſſion ſent from the Pope, with the ſentence definitive to proceed againſt the reverend Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Thomas Cranmer.

PAulus Epiſcopus ſervus ſervorum Dei chariſſimo in Chriſto filio Philippo Regi, & chariſſimæ in Chriſto filiæ Mariæ Reginæ Angliæ, Franciæ, illuſtribus ac venerabilibus fratribus Londinenſi & Elienſi Epiſcopis ſalutem, & Apoſtolicam benedictionem. Dudum per literas veſtras chariſſime fili Philippe Rex, & Chriſtiana filia Maria Regina nobis ſignificatur, quod iniquitatis filius Thomas Cranmerus, olim Archiepiſcopus Cantuarienſ, in hæreſes aliaq; tam grandia & enormia crimina erat prolapſus, quod non ſolum regimine Eccleſiæ Cantuarienſis ſe reddiderat indignum, verum etiam majori pœnæ ſe fecerat obnoxium. Nos de præmiſſis certam notitiam non habentes, & tanta crimina ſi vera eſſent, impunita, Eccleſiamq; ipſam ſine paſtore idoneo derelinquere nolentes, dilecto filio noſtro Iacobo, tituli Sanctæ Mariæ in via, tunc ſancti Simeonis, Presbytero Cardinali, de puteo nuncupato, vel de præmiſſis etiam ſummariè, ſimpliciter, & de plano ſine ſtrepitu & figura judicii, ac ſine ulla terminorum ſubſtantialium vel telæ judiciariæ obſervatione, citato dicto Thoma ſe informaret, & quicquid inveniſſet nobis referret, per ſpecialem commiſſionem manu noſtra ſignatam, dedimus in mandatis, ſibi attribuentes poteſtatem in curia, & extra, citandi, & inhibendi, ac literas compulſoriales, generales & ſpeciales ac remiſſorales, in forma conſueta ad partes decernendi, & perſonas quaſcunque, ſi opus eſſe arbitrarer, ad exhibendum jura, ſive ad perhibendum teſtimonium, etiam per cenſuras Eccleſiaſticas cogendi, & compellendi, ſeu, ſi pro celeriori expeditione ſibi videretur, ad recipiendum informationem hujuſmodi, aliquem probum virum in dignitate Eccleſiaſtica conſtitutum in partibus iſtis commorantem cum ſimili citandi, inhibendi & cogendi facultate, deputandi, ac ſubdelegandi: ac ſicut exhibita nobis nuper pro parte veſtra, fili Rex, & filia Regina petitio continebat, dictus Iacobus Cardinalis, commiſſionis hujuſmodi vigore, citatione ad partes contra eundem Thomam ad veſtram, fili Rex & filia Regina, inſtantiam decreta, venerabilem fratrem noſtrum Epiſcopum Gloueeſtrenſem, una cum certis aliis ejus in ea parte collegis, & eorum quemlibet in ſolidum ad informationem ſuper præmiſſis recipiendum ſubdelegavit, eiſq; vices ſuas in præmiſſis commiſit. Et poſtquam dictus Epiſcopus Glouceſtrenſis in cauſa hujuſmodi ad certos actus proceſſerat, & ipſum Thomam ſuper præmiſſis examinaverat, citatione prædicta, una cum ejus legitima executione in partibus facta, coram eodem Iacobo Cardinali judicialiter producta, & proceſſu per audientiam literarum noſtrarum contradictarum contra eundem Thomam citatum & non comparentem decreto, cum proceſſu coram dicto Epiſc. Superpellicium degradando extrahit Pontifex degradator, dicens.

AVtoritate Dei omnipotentis, patris, & filii, & ſpiritus ſancti, ac qua fungimur in hac parte, tibi auferimus habitum clericalem, & nudamus te religionis ornatu, atque deponimus, degradamus, ſpoliamus & exuimus omni ordine, beneficio, & privilegio clericali, & velut clericali profeſſione indignum redigimus te in ſervitutem “ & ignominiam habitus ſecularis ac ſtatus.

“ The ſecular ſtate ignominious, and diſdained with the proud Clergy.

Eum forficibus tondere incipiat Pontifex degradator, & per Barbitonſorem ibidem præſentem totaliter tonderi faciat caput degradandi, dicens.

Te velut ingratum filium à ſorte Domini ad quam vocatus fueras abjicimus, & coronam tui capitis regale quidem ſignum ſacerdotii de tuo capite amovemus propter tui regiminis pravitatem.

Deinde ſi velit Pontifex, dicat.

Quod ore cantaſti, corde non credidiſti, nec opere impleviſti, ideo cantandi officium in Eccleſia Dei à te amovemus.

Tum Miniſtri pontificis exuunt degradatum veſte, & habitu clericali, & ipſum induunt habitu ſeculari.

Si degradatus tradi debeat curiæ ſeculari.

Pontifex degradator degradatum amplius non tangit, ſed in hunc modum pronunciat, dicens.

Denunciamus ut hunc exutum omni ordine ac privilegio clericali, curia ſecularis in ſuum forum recipiat.

Rogat judicem ſecularem ut citra mortis periculum, &c.

Domine judex, rogamus vos cum omni effectu quo poſſumus, ut amore Dei, pietatis & miſericordiæ intuitu, & noſtrorum interventu precaminum miſerrimo huic nullum mortis vel mutilationis periculum inferas.

A note concerning Doctor Cranmer in his Diſputation.

THat day wherein Doctor Cranmer late Biſhop of Canterbury anſwered in the Divinity Schoole at Oxford, there was alledged unto him by Doctor Weſton, that he the ſaid Cranmer in his booke of the ſacrament falſly falſified the ſaying of the Doctors, and ſpecially the ſaying of Saint Hilarie in theſe words, Vero for Vere, ſhewing a print or two thereof, to have defaced his doings therein: but Doctor Cranmer with a grave and fatherly ſobriety anſwered, that the print of S. Hilaries workes, whereout he took his notes, was verbatim according to his book, and that could his bookes teſtifie if they were there to be ſeen. Saying further, that he ſuppoſed D. Smith in that order rehearſed it in his book of the ſacrament, to the which D. Smith there preſent (though he were demanded the anſwer thereof) ſtood in ſilence, As Canis mutus non valens latrare. But by and by D. Weſton without ſhame, to ſhadow D. Smiths ſilence, ſpitefully ſaid to Cranmer; belike you took your learning out of Maſter D. Smiths book.

All this already is teſtified before.

IT chanced at that preſent to be in the Schoole one William Holcot Gentleman then a ſojourner in the Univerſity Colledge; he hearing the ſame untruth, and remembring that he had amongſt his bookes in his ſtudy the ſaid booke of Doctor Smith, at his returne to his ſaid ſtudy, deſirous to ſee the truth therein, found it agreeable to the writing and affirmation of Doctor Cranmer. And the ſaid Holcot, then and there better remembring himſelfe, found amongſt his bookes the booke of Stephen Gardiner, intituled the devils Sophiſtrie. In which booke was the ſaid ſaying of Saint Hilarie alledged by the ſaid Stephen verbatim, both in Latine and Engliſh according to Doctor Cranmers confirmation. Then the ſaid William Holcot intending (for the manifeſt opening and triall of the truth therein) to have delivered the ſaid Gardiners booke to Doctor Cranmer, brought it to Bocardo the priſon of Oxford, where Doctor Cranmer then remained; but there in the delivery thereof he was apprehended by the Bailiffes & by them brought before Doctor Weſton and his Collegues then at dinner at Corpus Chriſti Colledge, who ſtraight wayes laid Treaſon to the charge of the ſaid William Holcot, for the maintenance of Cranmer in his naughtineſſe (as they called it) and ſo upon ſtrait examination, to know who were privy to his doings in delivery of the ſaid Gardiners booke, committed him to the ſaid priſon of Bocardo, where he ſojourned and ſlept in the ſtraw that night.

And in the morrow in the morning, Doctor Cole yet alive, then Deane of Pauls, and Doctor Jeffrey, two of them then Viſitours, further examined the ſaid Holcot of that his doings; threatning him to lay treaſon to his charge, and ſo to ſend him for the triall thereof to the then Lord Chancellor Stephen Gardiner, willing him preſently to ſubſcribe to the Articles then in queſtion, but he refuſed, deſiring reſpite untill the lawes of the realme had determined the ſame. And ſo was he againe committed to the ſaid priſon. And after three daies Doctor Weſton and the reſidue of the Viſitors ſolemnely in Saint Maries Church pronouncing ſentence againſt the late Biſhops, Cranmer, Ridley, and Lattimer; amongſt other called there before them the ſaid Holcot, willing him to ſubſcribe to their three Articles. He demanding them then theſe demands, firſt, whether they thought in their Conſciences that the Articles, whereunto they willed him to ſubſcribe, were according to the Scriptures, and that the religion then they went about to plant were the true Religion of Chriſt: they anſwered all with one voice, Yea, yea. Then asked he them whether they thought themſelves able to anſwer, and would anſwer before GOD for him if he ſubſcribed thereunto as they willed him: And they likewiſe anſwered, Yea, yea. And ſo hee the ſaid Holcot cot through feare and frailtie of the fleſh (as Neophitus) upon their threates ſubſcribed. Then they with many faire flattering words delivered him, but would not let him have againe his booke brought to Bocardo, leſt (as it ſeemed) he ſhould ſhew it to their ſhame. And they privily willed the Maſter and the fellowes of the ſaid Univerſitie Colledge to ſee the ſaid William Holcot forth comming: And if they within a fortnight after did not heare from the then Lord Chancellor what ſhould be done with him, that then they at the fortnights end ſhould expell him out of the ſaid Colledge, which they would have done, if the then Vicechancellour had not willed them to the contrary. Which Holcot, though then an Apoſtata, is yet now a penitent Preacher.

Epiſcopis, Decanis, Archidiaconis, & cæteris Cleri ordinibus in Synodo Londinenſi congregatis, gratiam & pacem a Domino.

NOn vos latet (Viri doctiſſimi) in rebus arduis, ambiguis, & cauſis difficilioribus, judicium apud veteres (juxta mandatum Dei) delatum fuiſſe ſemper ad Sacerdotes, Levitas, & ad præſidem, qui pro tempore judicis munere fungebatur; ut omnes hi cauſas & lites difficiliores explicarent, ex præſcripto Legis Dei. Ita qualeſcunque controverſiæ fuerunt; ex ſententia Sacerdotum & præſidis, ad normam & præſcriptum Legis Dei latæ, componebantur. Et ab eo quod judices partibus litigantibus ſtatuiſſent, nullo modo erat declinandum. Quod ſi quis contumacius ſacerdoti aut præſidi non paruiſſet, juxta legem Dei ſententiam pronuncianti, pœnas contumaciæ morte luebat, quo populus, hac ultione & contumaciæ vindicta admonitus, metueret, & deinceps inſoleſcere deſiſteret. Quàm difficiles, imo quàm periculoſæ, inter nos & vos, de re Euchariſtica lites agantur, veſtræ conciones, ſcripta, & libelli teſtantur: nos vero qui meliorem, veriorem, & antiquiſſimam fidem ſuſtinemus, confiſcatione omnium bonorum noſtrorum, dura & inhumana carceris ſervitute ſentimus. Quare mei ipſius nomine, ac omnium fratrum qui mecum eandem Catholicæ ac ſanctæ religionis veritatem profitentur, vos omnes in Chriſto Ieſu obteſtor, ut cauſam hanc, vel aliquam quamcunque ob religionem ortam inter nos & vos, deferre dignemini ad ſupremam Curiam Parliamenti; ut ibi utraque pars coram ſacro & excelſo ſenatu ſeſe religioſe, & animo ſubmiſſo, judicio & autoritati verbi Dei ſubjiciat. Et ſi veſtram religionem, quam ſanctam, orthodoxam, ac catholicam eſſe contenditis, ex verbo Dei aſſerere poteſtis, illam & nos libenter amplexabimur, noſtram, quam modo pro ſacroſancta defendimus, repudiantes: Gratias item Deo & vobis agentes quam maximas, quod per vos ab erroribus liberati, ad veritatis cognitionem revocemur, Non ſolum autem hoc à vobis obteſtamur, ut vos veſtramque cauſam judicio verbi Dei coram ſummo parliamento deferatis; verum etiam ut nobis commodum detur tempus, quo veterum ſcripta & ſacras literas evolvamus, à ſancto ſenatu impetrare dignemini. Et ſi ibi juſtas ac legitimas rationes fidei noſtræ non reddiderimus, judicio magiſtratus nos ipſos ſubmittimus, ut debitam ultionem noſtri ſceleris & impietatis nobis infligat. Si hæc facere non recuſaveritis, religio quam caſtam, illibatam, et ſalvam, ac ab omnibus amplectendam eſſe contenditis, glorioſius de veſtra fide & religione, ac de nobis ipſis (qui illam impiam eſſe & falſam conteſtamur) victoriam reportabit. Nam ſi veſtra religio & cultus in cauſa Euchariſtiæ fontem & originem ducunt ex verbo Dei; procul dubio ſanctam, & ſempiternam eſſe oportet. Et ſcitis quod res ſancta & vera quo magis examinatur, et per verbum Dei exploratur, eo fit illuſtrior & purior. Et quanto purior et illuſtrior fit, tanto magis ab omnibus deſideratur, & obuiis ulnis excipitur. Quis enim non deſideraret & amplecteretur religionem & cultum à Deo mandatum, & ab illius verbo ſancitum ac confirmatum? Quare ſi veſtra religio & cultus dei res ſit adeo vera, ſancta, & à Deo mundo exhibita; non eſt quod ei metuatis. Nam quod variis modis tentatur ac probatur, modò pium ac ſanctum fuerit, jacturam ab hoſtibus nullam ſentit, ſed potius hoſtes conculcat ac interficit. Solis radii ſterquiliniorum ſordibus non coinquinantur; veritaſque divini verbi errorum tenebris & caligine non offunditur. Nec eſt quod vobis ipſis metuatis; modo re ipſa id præſtetis, quod ubique jactatis. Nam quotquot veſtras partes non ſequuntur, aliquo graviſſimo ignominiæ genere nimis ſuperbè afficitis: nos omnes omnino indoctos eſſe prædicatis, aut planè dementatos affirmatis. Vobis autem pluſquam divinam vendicatis prudentiam; nobis vero pluſquam belluinam ſtoliditatem tribuitis. Iam quam facile erit doctis indoctos, hominibus ſanæ mentis inſania percitos, ingenio & prudentia flagrantibus ſtolidos & ignaros vincere; ſacer Parliamenti conventus nullo negotio intelliget. Ideo, ſi omninò ob Chriſtum & illius cauſæ gloriam quam nos defendimus, aut ob ſalutem noſtram, ut veſtra prudentia nos ſtultitiæ arguamur, veſtraque doctrina & eruditione nos ignorantiæ accuſemur, hoc facere non vultis; tamen, ut publicè impietatis convincamur coram ſummo ſenatu, hoc præſtate. Et ſi iſtis rationibus nihil moveamini; tamen veſtra ipſorum cauſa certè poſtulat, ut palam eæ lites inter nos componantur, idque coram competenti judice; ne apud omnes pios male audiat, & fortaſſis hac ſuſpicione laboret, quaſi lucem & publicum examen fugiat, ne impietatis, & idololatriæ per verbum Dei deprehendatur. Et vos qui malam cauſam, imo peſſimam, ferro & igne defenditis, non tam docti nec pii, ut omnino videri & haberi vultis, inveniamini: ſed potius ignorantiæ & ſtultitiæ, quas nobis impingitis, redarguamini. Non vos fugit quomodo publice, palam, & in facie ac in præſentia omnium ſtatuum hujus regni, in ſumma curia Parliamenti, veritas verbi Dei per fidos, doctos, & pios miniſtros de veſtra impia miſſa glorioſe victoriam reportavit: quamvis per trecentos annos non ſolum locum & templum Dei occupaverit, verum etiam corda hominum (tanquam Deus) inhabitaverit. Sed quocunque titulo, nomine, honore, reverentia, ſanctitate, tempore, patronis, univerſalitate ſplenduit, ubi per ſanctiſſimum Regem Edovardum ſextum ſanctiſſimæ memoriæ ad vivum lapidem lydium verbi Dei examinari per proceres, heroes, ac doctos hujus regni erat mandatum; ſtatim evanuit, & nihil aliud apparuit, quam ſpurciſſimum & immundiſſimum idolum ſub pallio & nomine Dei impie contectum. Aequa & juſta petimus, ut palam & publice lites inter nos componantur. Si igitur veſtræ cauſæ & vobis ipſis non diffidatis, una nobiſcum apud ſanctum Senatum agere dignemini, ut coram illo, authoritate verbi Dei, quis noſtrum veriorem partem defenderit, dignoſcatur. Nullis enim legibus ſanctis & juſtis unquam fuit permiſſum, ut una pars litigans de altera parte judex conſtitueretur. Nam in omnibus controverſiis et cauſis difficilioribus (maxime in Religione) medius aliquis, & neutra litigantium pars in judicem eligenda eſt. Nec Chriſtus ipſe (quamvis ipſa veritas) æterni Patris Filius, hanc poteſtatem & imperium judicandi ſibi vendicavit: quandocunque lites de ejus doctrina, inter illum & Phariſæos, vel quoſcunque alios contigerunt. Sed ſemper ad legem appellavit, adverſarioſque ſuos ut legis præſcripto & ſententiæ ſtarent, rogavit; ſcrutamini (inquiens) Scripturas. Nos etiam à vobis nihil aliud in nomine Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti, ſupplices petimus & rogamus, niſi ut cauſa de qua inter nos litigatur, ſententia & authoritate Verbi Dei decidatur ac finiatur. Et ſi per Verbum Dei fidem noſtram parum candidam & piam oſtendere valetis; porrigemus vobis herbam, dabimuſque dextras. Nec in impios Arrianos pii & ſancti Patres, hanc judicandi poteſtatem ſibi aſſumpſerunt; ſed adfuit diſputationi pius Princeps Conſtantinus Imperator, qui rationes partium litigantium diligenter perpendit, & ſententiam atque judicium cauſæ ſoli authoritati Verbi Dei detulit. Quid hoc eſt igitur? quo jure contenditis? vultis & noſtri & cauſæ noſtræ teſtes, accuſatores, & judices eſſe? nos tantum Legem & Evangelium Dei, in cauſa religionis, judicem competentem agnoſcimus; illius judicio ſtet vel cadat noſtra cauſa. Tantum (iterum atque iterùm) petimus, ut coram competenti judice detur nobis, qui vincula & carceres ſuſtinemus, amicum Chriſtianumque auditorium: atque haud dubitamus, quin noſtras rationes, & argumenta authoritate Verbi divini ſumus ſtabilituri, ac veſtra planè ſubverſuri. Hactenus præjudicio injuſtè gravamur; nec mirum, cum una pars litigantium judex alterius partis conſtituatur. Quapropter ad Verbum Dei, tanquam unicum & ſolum competentem, in cauſa religionis, judicem appellamus. Si præter & contra hanc legem Dei, falſa & impia (ut cœpiſtis) vi & dolo promovere non deſiſtetis; ſed fratres veſtros truculenter perſequendo pergetis; nos in tantis periculis conſtituti ad miſericordiam Dei confugiemus, qui ſolus & poſſit & velit nos à veſtris erroribus incolumes & ſalvos conſervare. Præterea, ut olim aliqui ex nobis, pro ſalute & incolumitate aliquot veſtrum, apud Magiſtratum civilem interceſſimus; ſic & nunc pro omnium veſtrum ſalute in Chriſto Ieſu apud Patrem cœleſtem intercedere non deſiſtemus, ut tandem ad meliorem & ſinceriorem mentem reverſi unicum Chriſtum Ieſum quem præcinuerunt Prophetæ, prædicaverunt Apoſtoli, quemque omnes pii agnoſcunt jam ([illegible] ad humanitatem) ſedentem ad dextram Pa[illegible] cœlis amplectamini, & exoſculemini; repudiato conficto & ementito illo Chriſto, ex pane confecto, quem non ſolum juvenes, virgines, & ſenes, verum etiam oves & boves, pecoraque campi, volucres cœli, & piſces maris panem agnoſcunt ac ſentiunt, & non Deum. Deſiſtite, rogamus, igitur enixe ulterius oculos piorum perſtringere. Verus enim Chriſtus, quatenus homo, jam amplius ſurſum ac deorſum per manus Sacerdotum agitari & immolari non poteſt. Infernum vicit, peccata veſtra in Cruce perlitavit, mortem deſtruxit, & jam aſtra tenet; quem olim videbitis venientem in nubibus cœli cum poteſtate magna & gloria, ſempiterniſque pœnis vos plangetis, niſi hic pœnitentiam falſæ & impiæ veſtræ doctrinæ egeritis. Si Deus autem, pro ſua inexhauſta bonitate & clementia, per Verbum ſuum lites iſtas inter nos componi dignetur; non dubito quin oculos veſtros ita ſit aperturus, ut quàm horribiliter & impiè Dei ac hominum teſtimonio & ſcriptis vos abuti videatis. Sed ſi furioſo & excandeſcenti ſpiritu veſtras partes, citra authoritatem Verbi Dei, defendere velitis; actum eſt omnino de veſtra æterna ſalute, quod Dominus propter Filium ſuum unicum avertat. Cogitate etiam apud vos ipſos an hoc ſit piorum Miniſtrorum Eccleſiæ officium, vi, metu, & pavore corda hominum in veſtras partes compellere? Profectò Chriſtus non ignem, non gladium, non carceres, non vincula, non violentiam, non confiſcationem bonorum, non regineæ majeſtatis terrorem, media organa conſtituit, quibus veritas ſui verbi mundo promulgaretur: ſed miti ac diligenti prædicatione Evangelii ſui mundum ab errore & idololatria converti præcepit. Vos non Chriſti ſed Antichriſti armis utimini, quibus populum invitum ad veſtra ſacra compellitis; & non volentem & inſtructum Verbo Dei trahitis. Sed quàm malus cuſtos perpetuitatis ſit timor, non ignoratis. Certè qui timet, niſi Dei ſpiritu ſemper revocetur, odit. Tradite igitur ſaluberrima præcepta Legis & Evangelii populo Dei, ut pro Chriſti Miniſtris per verbum Chriſti ab omnibus agnoſcamini. Ideò enim Miniſtri Eccleſiæ Chriſti eſtis conſtituti, ut tantùm Chriſti doctrinam populum Dei doceretis, & non ut novam, & à Chriſto alienam obtruderetis. Quæ jam vos in Eccleſia agitis, ſi coram æquo judice amicam ac Chriſtianam diſputationem non recuſaveritis; ex Verbo Dei oſtendemus, vel à Lege Moſaica mutuata, vel per Antichriſtum, & pſeudominiſtros in Eccleſiam fuiſſe introducta, ut hoc brevi tractatu excelſæ Parliamenti curiæ facilè conſtabit. Scio inter vos eſſe tam turgido & iniquo ſpiritu prædicatos, qui putant nos tantùm inanis gloriæ, ſuperbiæ, arrogantiæ, & famæ noſtræ fumo duci, & ideo velle potius ſemper malè currere, quàm admonitos de errore bene recurrere. Sed hoc Dèus novit, quod tantùm illius gloriam, noſtramque ſalutem in Chriſto quærimus, dicant adverſarii quid velint. Meminerint autem noſtri adverſarii & cogitent, quanquam apud illos nec pro doctis nec piis hominibus habeamur (& haud dubie nos ipſos omnis impietatis & peccati apud Deum quotidie accuſamus) tamen homines ſumus ratione prædití. Et quis (niſi inſanus) jactura & amiſſione omnium bonorum ſuorum, uxoris, liberorum, libertatis & vitæ redimeret famæ aut inanis gloriæ titulum? Profecto tanti pœnitere (ut dicitur) non emerimus. Igitur illius verbi veritatem noſtris bonis omnibus ac vitæ ipſi præferimus: Et ſi centies (Deo nos adjuvante) moriendum nobis fuerit; ad idololatriam & impium cultum Dei, quæ Dei miſericordia hactenus reliquimus, non revertemur. Domini ſumus, ſive vivimus, ſive morimur; ejus igitur voluntas in vobis & in nobis cum miſericordia fiat, Amen.

Veſtræ ſalutis in Chriſto

ſtudioſiſſimus.

A note of Biſhop Farrer.

Doctor Leiſon, Doctor of law, a Civilian, a Juſtice of Peace, the ſame who is mentioned before, would not ſuffer Biſhop Farrer (when hée was at the ſtake to be burnt) to ſpeake his minde, and about halfe a yéere after the ſaid Doctor Leiſon died, and when he would have ſpoke himſelfe he could not.

The trouble and examination of Thomas Hitton, Martyr, with his examinations, anſweres, condemnation, and martyrdome, Anno 1529. the 20. of February.

Thomas

Reade before. The ſtory and martyrdome of Tho. Hitton.

THomas Hitton of Martham in the Dioceſſe of Norwich, an honeſt poore man and religious, ever fearing God from his youth; and loving his word; when perſecution for the ſame word in the dayes of King Henry the eighth grew to be ſomewhat hote, tooke his journey toward Rocheſter in Kent, intending to have gone to Dover, and ſo to have croſſed the Seas into France and other countries for a time, where repoſing himſelfe a while, he might be free from the heate of perſecution. As he was going on his intended journey, one Thomas Swaineſland, Baily to William Warrham Archbiſhop of Canturburie, meeting him by the way, and ſuſpecting him to bee (as they called them) an Heretike, cauſed him to be ſtayed, and brought before the ſaid William Archbiſhop of Canturburie, his Maſter; who demanded of him from whence he came, and whither he intended to have gone, if he had not bin intercepted? The ſaid Thomas anſwered, that he came out of the Dioceſſe of Norwich, and purpoſed to have gone beyond the Seas, if God had ſo permitted. Then the Biſhop asked him, if hée had ever béene beyond the ſeas before, and what bookes he had brought over. He anſwered, that he had béene once beyond the ſeas before, and had brought certaine bookes with him from thence, namely, two new Teſtaments, and one Primer in Engliſh. The Biſhop asked him to whom he gave the ſaid bookes. He anſwered, he would not declare. For (ſaith he) ſuch is your bloudy crueltie, that you would never ſléepe quietly, till you had ſucked their bloud, as you meane to doe mine. The Biſhop ſéeing he could extort no more out of him, and perceiving his conſtant ſpirit and fervent zeale to the Truth, commanded him to priſon till further opportunitie might ſerve for the ſhedding of his bloud.

W. Warrham Archbiſhop of Canturbury.

The examination of Tho. Hitton before the Archbiſh.

The ſecond appearance of Thomas Hitton before the ſaid Archb. of Canturbury.

WIthin a while after, the Biſhop commanded the ſaid Thomas to be brought before him againe, who demanded of him how he judged and beléeved of the religion then in force, and of the authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome. The ſaid Thomas anſwered, that the Religion then uſed was moſt abominable Idolatrie, and contrarie to the holy Word of God. and as for the Pope (quoth he) he is Antichriſt, the firſt borne of Satan, and hath no more power or authoritie, then any other Biſhop hath in his owne Dioceſſe, nor ſo much neither. The Biſhop hearing this, was in ſuch a pelting chafe, that at that time he would talke no more with him, but returned him from whence he came, namely, to Bocardo, with commandment to appeare before him againe, upon the thirteenth day of the ſame moneth following, at his Manor of Knoll, to anſwer to ſuch articles and interrogatories as ſhould be objected ex officio, againſt him.

The third appearance of Thomas Hitton before the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canturbury.

THe ſaid Thomas Hitton at the day prefixed, made his perſonall appearance before the Biſhop at the place appointed, to whom the Biſhop miniſtred certaine Articles and Interrogatories for him to anſwer unto, commanding him to ſweare, to anſwer truely and unfainedly unto them, and every part of them. The ſaid Thomas Hitton refuſed to ſweare, ſaying, It is againſt Gods Lawes and good conſcience for any man to ſweare to ſhed his owne blood, for ſo he ſhould be a murtherer of himſelfe, and become guilty of his owne death. But notwithſtanding that he refuſed to ſweare to anſwer, yet he anſwered truely and directly to every particular Article and Interrogatorie propounded unto him, but ſo as was ſmally to their contentation, yet no doubt to the great glory of God, and comfort of the godly. This done, the Biſhop brake off his Seſſion for that time, and commanded him to priſon again, and to appeare before him in the place aforeſaid upon the Friday next following, to anſwer further as ſhould be demanded of him, granting him liberty withall to adde to, or ſubtract from his former anſwers, or elſe utterly to deny and revoke the ſame.

Tho. Hitton refuſeth to ſweare againſt himſelfe.

The fourth appearance of Thomas Hitton before the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canturburie.

THe day and time approaching, the ſaid Thomas Hitton appeared againe accordingly, and having heard his former anſwers and confeſſions diſtinctly by the Notarie read unto him, hee reformed them in certaine points; to ſome hee added, from other ſome hée ſubſtracted, but none hée denied. Then the Biſhop perceiving his unmoveable conſtancie in the truth, ſetting learning and reaſon apart, being not able to convince him by arguments and truth, nor yet to improve the ſpirit which ſpake in him, fell to exhorting of him to have reſpect to his ſoules health, and not ſo wilfully (as they termed it) to caſt away himſelfe for ever, but to repent, and to abjure his errors, and in ſo doing, he would be good unto him, he ſayd. When the Biſhop with all his perſwaſions could do no good with him to withdraw him from the truth of Gods word, then the Doctors and other the aſſiſtants attempted the like: all which notwithſtanding, the ſaid Thomas Hitton would not deſiſt nor ſhrinke one iote from the truth, but both affirmed and confirmed his former articles and confeſſions to the end; Inferring withall, that they ſinned againſt the holy Ghoſt, in as much as they knew that Gods word was the truth, and that the Maſſe and all Popiſh religion is nothing elſe but idolatrie, lies, and open blaſphemy againſt the Maieſtie of GOD and his word, and contrarie to Gods word in everie reſpect, and yet they would allow and maintaine the ſame, contrarie to their own conſciences: whereat all the Bench was greatly offended, and commanded him to priſon againe, aſſigning him a day to come before them againe.

The conſtancy of Tho. Hitton in his confeſſion.

The fifth appearance of Thomas Hitton before the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canturbury.

AT the day appointed, the ſaid Thomas Hitton appeared, to whom the Biſhop ſaid, Thomas, doeſt thou beléeve that any man eyther ſpirituall or temporall, is of ſufficient authoritie to ſet forth any law or ſanction of himſelf, the breach whereof is mortall or veniall ſinne? To whom Thomas Hitton anſwered, that no man eyther ſpirituall or temporall might make any law or ſanction, the breach whereof is mortall or veniall ſinne, except the ſame law or ſanction be drawne out of the word of God, or elſe grounded upon the ſame with a good conſcience. And therefore the Church cannot ſet forth any law, the breach whereof is Mortall or Veniall ſinne, unleſſe it bée grounded upon the Word of GOD alſo. But if any man, or the Church of God it ſelfe, doe ſet forth any Law grounded upon the word of God and good conſcience; the breach thereof to the violater is mortall and deadly ſinne. After all manner of wayes and meanes attempted to draw this poore man from Chriſt and his truth, the Biſhop, ſeeing that he could not prevaile, determined to ſend him to the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and ſo did, who aſſayed by all meanes poſſible to remove him from his former profeſſed truth. But ſeeing all his endeavors fruſtrate, and that he profited nothing, he ſignified the ſame to the Archbiſhop, and withall both went himſelfe unto him, and carried the poore priſoner with him thither alſo.

In the afternoone of the ſame day, the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canturbury, the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and divers other aſſiſtants, called the ſaid poore man before them againe, and cauſed all the former Articles, Interrogatories, and demands to be read unto him in Engliſh, to the end he ſhould either have revoked the ſame, or elſe recanted them altogether, uſing both threates and faire promiſes to the performance thereof, but all in vaine: for his faith was built upon the rocke Chriſt Ieſus, and therefore unable to be removed with any ſtormes of perſecution whatſoever.

The ſentence of condemnation againſt Tho. Hitton.

In fine, the Archbiſhop (with mature judgement you muſt beleeve) conſulting with the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and other, proceeded to his condemnation, reading the bloudy ſentence of death againſt him, and ſo was he, being condemned, delivered to the ſecular power, who carried him to the priſon, and ſoone after he was burned for the teſtimony of Ieſus Chriſt, as you may ſee more at large in his ſtory, for whoſe conſtancy in the truth, the everlaſting God be praiſed, Amen.

A note of a certaine good man troubled in Bulloyn the firſt yeare of King Edward the ſixth, for the Goſpel.

THe examination of mee William Haſtlen Gunner, in the Caſtle of high Bulloyne, in the yeere of our Lord, 1547. and the firſt yeere of the reigne of King Edward the ſixth. As I was in the Church of Bulloyne, called the Stals, upon the 10. of April being Eaſter Tueſday, reading of a godly Booke, called the lamentation of a Chriſtian, againſt the Citizens of London, betweene the houres of three and foure at afternoone, there came certaine men to me as I ſtood at an altar in the Church reading to my ſelfe, and aſked me what good booke I had: and I ſaid, they ſhould heare if they pleaſed: then they deſired me to reade out that they might heare, and ſo did I very gladly; but I had not read long, but the Prieſts and Clerkes were at their Latine Evenſong, and I reading mine Engliſh booke, there came a tipſtaffe for me, taking my two bookes from me, and commanded me to goe with him, for he ſaid I muſt go before the Councell of the towne. Then went I forthwith with him, and a little without the Church doore, ſir Iohn Bridges met us, and bade the Tipſtaffe carry me to ſir Leonard Beckwith Knight, to be examined; and comming before his preſence, he aſked me what bookes they were that I had at the Church, and was reading of one of them openly in the Church to the people: and I ſaid ſo farre as I had read them they were good godly bookes: and he ſaid, they were hereſie, and with that he aſked me how I did beleeve of the Sacrament of the Altar, whether I did not beleeve that to be the very body of Chriſt, fleſh, bloud, and bones: and I aſked him whether he meant that, that was in the Pixe or no? and hee ſaid, Yea, even that in the Pixe: and I ſaid, that ſince I had ſure knowledge of Scriptures, I did not beleeve it to be the body of Chriſt, but a bare piece of bread, nor by Gods helpe will I ever beleeve it otherwiſe to be: then he ſaid, I was an Heretike, and aſked me what I made of the Sacrament: and I ſaid, if it were duely miniſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution, that then I did beleeve that the faithfull Communicants, in receiving that bleſſed Sacrament, did receive into their inward man, or ſoule, the very body and bloud of our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt. Then ſaid he, doeſt thou not beleeve it to remaine the very body of Chriſt after the words of conſecration pronounced by the Prieſt? And I ſaid, No. Then ſaid he, What doeſt thou make of the Church? I ſaid, as it is now vſed, it is a denne of Theeves, and the Synagogue of Sathan. Thou Heretike, ſaid he, there remaineth the very body of Chriſt. But I ſaid, that Chriſt being God and man, dwelleth not in temples made with mens hands: much other communication had we at that time, but this was the effect that day. Then he aſked me whether I would bee forthcomming till to morrow. And I ſaid, Sir, if you thinke that I will not, you may lay me where as I ſhall ſo be. Then he let me goe for that night, and ſaid, we ſhall talke further with thee to morrow; ſo I departed home. And about the ſpace of two houres after, Maſter Huntington the Preacher (which did much good with his preaching in Bulloyne at that time) came to me, and ſaid, that he heard me ſpoken of at my Lord Grayes, which was then Lord Deputy of the Towne and Countrey of Bulloyne, and I perceive ſaid he, that you are in great danger of trouble, if you eſcape with your life: for there are ſome of the Councell marvellouſly bent againſt you. I ſaid, the Lords will be done: well ſaid he, without you feele in your ſelfe a full purpoſe, by Gods help, to ſtand earneſtly to the thing that ye have ſpoken, you ſhall doe more hurt then good: wherefore, ſaid he, if you will goe to Calice, I will ſend you where you ſhall be well uſed, and be out of this danger. Then I thanked Maſter Huntington, ſaying, I purpoſe by Gods aſſiſtance to abide the uttermoſt that they can doe unto me. Well then (ſaid he) I can tell you, you will be ſent for to morrow betimes before the whole Councell: that is (ſaid I) the thing that I looke for. Then roſe I betimes in the morning, and went into the Market-place, that I might ſpie which way the Officer ſhould come for me; I had not tarried there long, but I ſpied a Tipſtaffe, and went toward him, and aſked him whom hee ſought, and hee ſaid, A Gunner of the great Ordnance in the Caſtle of Bulloyne: and I ſaid that I am he: Then ſaid he, you muſt goe with me to my Lords: and I ſaid, therefore I looked. When I came there, I ſaw my Lord and the whole Councell were aſſembled together in a cloſe Parlour. Doing my duetie to them, my Lord ſaid to me, it is informed me that thou haſt ſeditiouſly congregate a company together in the Church, and there in the time of Service thou diddeſt reade unto them an Hereticall Booke, and haſt not reverently uſed ſilence in the time of the divine Service, what ſayeſt thou to this? I ſaid, if it pleaſe your Honour, I was in the Church a good while before any Service began, and no body with mee, reading to my ſelfe alone, upon a Booke that is agreeable to GODS word, and no Hereſie in it that I read, and when it drew toward Service time, there came men to the Church, and ſome of them comming to me whom I knew not, aſking me what good booke I had, I ſaid it was a new booke that I have not yet reade over: then they prayed me that I ſhould reade ſo that they might heare ſome part with mee, and ſo I did, not calling, pointing, nor aſſembling any company to me. And for the Service being in Latine, that for the ſtrangeneſſe of the tongue, beſides much ſuperſtition joyned with it, was not underſtood of the moſt part of them that ſaid or ſung it, much leſſe of them that ſtood by and did heare it, whereas by the word of God all things in the Church or congregation ſhould be done to the edifying of the people: and ſeeing I could have no ſuch thing by their Service, I did endeavor to edifie my ſelfe, and other that were deſirous of reading of godly bookes. And becauſe the Church is ſo abuſed contrary to the word of God, being beſet round about with a ſort of abhominable idols, before whom no man ought to kneele, nor doe any manner of reverence, becauſe the Scriptures doe curſe both the Idoll, and the Idoll-maker, and all that doe any worſhip or reverence unto them, or before them, for that cauſe I uſed no reverence there. Well, ſayd my Lord, I would thou couldſt anſwer to the reſt as well as thou haſt done to this: but I feare me thou canſt not: for it is told me, that thou haſt ſpoken againſt the bleſſed Sacrament: and I ſaid, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip, that did I never in all my life, nor ever will doe by the Grace of God. With that my chiefe accuſer, ſir Leonard Beckwith Knight, ſaid to me, Diddeſt thou not ſay to me yeſterday, that thou didſt not beleeve the ſacrament of the altar, after the words of conſecration by the Prieſt, to bee the very body of Chriſt, fleſh, bloud, and bones, as it was borne of the Virgin Mary? It is true indeede that I ſayd ſo, for neither doe I beleeve it to remaine Chriſts body, nor ever will by the grace of God beleeve it ſo to be: for I beleeve that Chriſt with that body that was conceived and borne of the Virgin Mary, did aſcend up into heaven, and there (according to our beliefe) he ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father, and from thence that body ſhall come at the day of judgment to judge the quick and the dead; and yet in the mean while I beleeve, that (the ſacrament duly miniſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution) all the faithfull receivers of this ſacrament, lifting up the eyes of their minde into heaven where Chriſts body is, they doe receive in that ſacrament, into their ſoule or inward man, the very body of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: yea and I beleeve further, that Chriſt concerning his divine power, or the power of his Godhead, is whereſoever two or three be gathered together in his name, that he is in the midſt even amongſt them; and that hee is ſo with his faithfull flocke even to the worlds end. Then they layd their heads together, and had privy talke: after that two of them ſaid to me, that it was ranke hereſie that I did beleeve it to remain bare bread after the Prieſt had conſecrated it; and not beleeving it to be the very body of Chriſt, I was worthy to be burned: then ſaid I earneſtly unto them, Thinke you not, though I be a vile abject in your light, and he that is moſt buſie among you to ſeeke my bloud, but that my bloud ſhall be required at his, or their hands? Then had they privy talk together againe, after the which my Lord ſaid unto me, Thou heareſt that they here lay hereſie to thy charge, and I am a man of war, and have no ſkill in ſuch high myſteries, wherfore thine accuſers ſay, that thou muſt ſuffer here as an heretike, that all the reſt of the gariſon may beware by thee that they fall not into the like hereſie, and ſo caſt away themſelvs. Then ſaid I, I appeale from this Councell to the Councell of England: then ſaid my Lord, I am very glad that thou haſt appealed to the Councell of England, for there are learned men, and Divines that can ſkill of ſuch matters, thither ſhalt thou be ſent ere it be long. Then was I carried to ſir John Abridges houſe, and having pen and inke, I was bidden to write mine articles, which were in effect thoſe points of religion which you have heard before in my examination: then on the morrow being thurſday, and the 15. of April, I was brought to the priſon in the towne, called the Marſhalſea, where I was very gently uſed: for a good Gentleman one Maſter Waghan was the Keeper there at that time, but ſurely when I was apprehended, I had not ſo much as one peny to help my ſelfe with; for we had beene long unpaid: furthermore I thought in that town of war, that there were very few or none that favoured the word of God, for I looked for no help there, but to be hated and deſpiſed of all men there: for I knew not paſt two or three there that had any love to the Goſpel, till I was in priſon, and then there came very many ſouldiers unto me that I never knew before, and gave me mony, ſo that I had as good as three pound given me in a ſmall time that I was in priſon. The 14. day of May toward night, I was ſent into England, one M. Meſſenger, and one other man brought me to London, even the ſame day, being Sunday at night, and 15. day of May. There was a great talke over all the City of one D. Smith that recanted that day they brought me to the Marſhalſea, and there left me, I hearing no more of them that brought me thither: but M. Huntington as a faithfull Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt, that gave me warning before of all this trouble, came from Bulloyne to London, cauſing my articles to be ſeene, ſo that by his painfull diligence to the Councell for me, after that I had bin there little more than one moneth, I was diſcharged out of priſon, and bid get me home to Bulloyn to my living againe.

But ſurely if I had not appealed to the Councell of England, I had been burned in Bulloin, for it was told me of them that knew much in that matter, that it was already determined, ſhortly to have been accompliſhed, if I had not appealed: for the which deliverance, I give praiſe to the everliving God.

This was layd in Queene Maries Cloſet upon her deske againſt her comming unto her prayers,

O Loveſome Roſe moſt redolent,
Of vading flowers moſt freſh:
In England pleaſant is thy ſent,
For now thou art peereleſſe.
This Roſe which beareth ſuch a ſmell,
Doth repreſent our Queene:
O liſten, that I may you tell
Her colours freſh and greene.
The love of God within her heart,
Shall beautifie her grace:
The feare of God on the other part,
Shall ſtabliſh her in place.
This love and feare her colours are,
Whereby if ſhe be known,
She may compare both nigh and farre,
Unable to be overthrown.
The love of God it will her cauſe,
Unfained if it be,
To have reſpect unto his lawes,
And hate idolatry.
If that ſhe have the feare of God,
And be thereto right bent:
She will doe that he her bode,
And not her owne intent.
O noble Queene take heed, take heed,
Beware of your own intent:
Look ere you leap, then ſhall you ſpeed,
Haſte maketh many ſhent.
Remember Saul that noble King,

What ſhame did him befall:
Becauſe that unto the Lords bidding
He had no luſt at all.
The Lord hath bid you ſhall love him,
And other gods defie.
Alas take heed, do not begin
To place idolatry.
What greater diſobedience
Againſt God may be wrought
Than this; to move mens conſcience
To worſhip things of nought?
What greater folly can you invent
Than ſuch men to obey?
How can you ſerve your owne intent
Not foreſeeing your owne decay?
And whereas firſt yee ſhould maintain
Your realme in perfect unity:
To rent the peoples hearts in twaine
Through falſe idolatry.
Is this the way to get you fame
Is this to get you love?
Is this to purchaſe you a name,
To fight with God above?
Is this your care, to ſet up Maſſe,
Your ſubjects ſoules to ſtroy?
Is this your ſtudy, no more to paſſe,
Gods people to annoy?
Is this to reigne, to ſerve your will,
Good men in bonds to keepe,
And to exalt ſuch as be evill,
And for your grace unmeet?
Such as made that fond divorce,
Your mother to deface,
Are higheſt you in power and force,
And moſt bounden unto your grace.
Well, yet take heed of had I wiſt,
Let Gods word beare the bell:
If you will reigne, learn to know Chriſt,
As David doth you tell.
What great preſumption doth appeare,
Thus in a week or twaine,
To worke more ſhame than in 7. years
Can be redreſt againe?
All is done without a law,
For will doth work in place:
And thus all men may ſee and know
The weakneſſe of your caſe.
That miſerable maſking Maſſe,
Which all good men do hate,
Is now by you brought up againe,
The roote of all debate.
Your Miniſters that love Gods word,
They feele this bitter rod;
Who are robbed from houſe and goods
As though there were no God.
And yet you would ſeeme mercifull
In the midſt of tyranny,
And holy, whereas you maintaine
Moſt vile idolatry.
For feare that thou ſhould hear the truth,
True Preachers may not ſpeak;
But on good Prophets you make ruth,
And unkindly them intreat.
Him have you made Lord Chancellor
Who did your bloud moſt ſtaine,
That he may ſuck the righteous bloud,
As he was wont againe.
Thoſe whom our late King did love,
You doe them moſt diſdaine:
Theſe things doe manifeſtly prove
Your colours to be but vaine.
Gods word you cannot abide,
But as your Prophets tell:
In this you may be well compared To wicked Jeſabell.
Who had 400 Prophts falſe,
And fifty on a rout:
Through whoſe falſe preaching
Poore Ely was chaſed in and out.
Gods Prophets you doe evill intreat,
Baals Prieſts defend your grace:
Thus did the Jewes put Chriſt to death,
And let goe Barrabas.
Hath God thus high exalted you,
And ſet you on a throne:
That you ſhould priſon and deface
His flocke that maketh mone?
The Lord which doth his flocke defend,
As the apple of an eye,
Of this full quickly will make an end
And baniſh cruelty.
Therefore my counſell pray you take,
And think thereof no ſcorne:
You ſhall finde it the beſt counſell,
Ye had ſince you were borne.
Put away blinde affection,
Let Gods word be umpere,
To try out true religion,
From this evill favoured geere.

The inſtruction of King Edward the 6. given to ſir Anthony Seyntleger Kt. of his privy chamber, being of a corrupt judgement of the Euchariſt. Upon this ſaying of an ancient Doctor of the Catholike Church.

Dicimus Euchariſtiam Panem vocari in Scripturis, Panis in quo gratiæ actæ ſunt, &c.

IN Euchariſt then there is bread,
Whereto I do conſent:
Then with bread are our bodies fed,
And further what is meant?
I ſay that Chriſt in fleſh and bloud
Is there continually,
Unto our ſoule a ſpeciall food,
Taking it ſpiritually.
And this Tranſubſtantiation I
Beleeve as I have read:
That Chriſt ſacramentally
Is there in forme of bread.
S. Auſten ſaith, the word doth come
Unto the element:
And there is made, he ſaith in ſumme,
A perfect ſacrament.
The Element doth then remaine,
Or elſe muſt needes enſue,
S. Auſtens words be nothing plaine,
Nor cannot be found true.
For if the word, as he doth ſay,
Come to the Element:
Then is not the Element away,
But bides there verament.
Yet whoſo eateth that lively foode,
And hath a perfect faith,
Receiveth Chriſts fleſh and bloud,
For Chriſt himſelfe ſo ſaith.
Not with our teeth his fleſh to teare
Nor take bloud for our drinke:
Too great an abſurdity it were,
So groſly for to think.
For we muſt eate him ſpiritually,
If we be ſpirituall:
And whoſo eates him carnally,
Thereby ſhall have a fall.
For he is now a ſpirituall meate,
And ſpiritually we muſt
That ſpirituall meat ſpiritually eat,
And leave our carnall luſt.
Thus by the ſpirit, I ſpiritually
Beleeve, ſay what men liſt,
None other Tranſubſtantiation I

Beleeve of the Euchariſt.
But that there is both bread and wine,
Which we ſee with our eye:
Yet Chriſt is there by power divine
To thoſe that ſpiritually
Do eate that bread and drinke that cup,
Eſteeming it but light;
As Iudas did, which eate that ſop,
Not judging it aright.
For I was taught not long agone,
I ſhould leane to the ſpirit:
And let the carnall fleſh alone,
For it doth not profit.
God ſave him that teaching me taught,
For I thereby did winne
To put from me that carnall thought,
That I before was in.
For I beleeve Chriſt corporally
In heaven doth keep his place:
And yet Chriſt ſacramentally
Is here with us by grace.
So that in his high myſtery
We muſt eate ſpirituall meat,
To keep his death in memorie,
Leſt we ſhould it forget.
This doe I ſay, this have I ſaid,
This ſaying ſay will I:
This ſaying though I once denaid,
I will no more to die. FINIS.

This young Prince became a perfect ſchoolemaſter unto old erroneous men, ſo as no Divine could amend him, and therefore this piece is worthy of perpetual memory to his immortal fame & glory. When Queene Mary came to her reigne, a friend of M. Sentlegers charged him with this his Pamphlet. Well, quoth he, content your ſelfe. I perceive that a man may have too much of Gods bleſſing. And even here Peter began to deny Chriſt, ſuch is mens frailty.

¶ A note of a letter of one Iohn Melvin, prisoner in Newgate.

¶ Chriſti electis ſalutem,
Eſdr. 4.

¶ Hoc ſeculum fecit altiſſimus propter multos; futurum autem propter paucos.

¶ The Almighty Lord hath made this world for many, but the world or life to come but for a few.

Pauci electi. Matthew 20.

MOſt certain it is dearly beloved, that Chriſts elect be but few in compariſon of that great number which goe in the broad way into everlaſting perdition, which live after the fleſh, loving this preſent evil world, deny God in word and deed, whoſe eyes are blinded, and their hearts hardened.

Pauci qui ſalvabuntur, Luke 13. 2. Tim. 2. Cognovit Dominus qui ſunt ejus.

Moſt certain it is alſo, that our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt hath and knoweth his owne, whoſe names are written in the booke of life, redeemed with the moſt precious bloud of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. So that the eternall Father knoweth them that be his.

Sanctis qui ſunt in terra, & præclaris his toto animo delector.

The almighty and eternall God grant, that we may have the teſtimonie of our conſcience, and the ſpirit of God to beare record with our ſpirits, that we be his elect children, walking in the ſpirit, not fulfilling the luſts of the fleſh, but as Chriſts members, having Chriſt Jeſus fixed before our eyes, he being to us the true way, the infallible verity, and the eternall life. Chriſt hath given us example, let us follow him as deare children, for Gods delight is to behold his Saints which bee in the earth. Let us put on the whole armour of God, and walke in the light in theſe evill daies, in the which Satan in his Angels ſeeketh whom he may devoure. The almighty Lord deliver us from the mouthes of thoſe unſhamefaſt dogges. They truly ſeeke ours, and not us unto the Lord. Eſdras ſaith, and writeth truly, The world is made for them, and they for the world. Dearely bought, let us remember Chriſt which ſaith, I have choſen you out of the world, you ſhall be hated of all worldly men. Did ever the covetous, Idolaters, Oppreſſors, or Whoremongers love us? Nay, they love Maſſemongers, which ſay, Peace, peace, when there is no peace. Nay, either they flatter the ears, or elſe they ſay nothing, as dumb dogs not able to barke, of whom be you ware, for though they come in ſheepes clothing, they be ravening Wolves, whoſe damnation ſleepeth not, from whoſe captivity the holy will of God ſave and preſerve you, Amen.

Ego vos elegi e mundo. Regnum meum non eſt de hoc mundo.

Ezek. 33. & 34.

Dearely beloved, we having the record of our conſcience that wee bee very members in Chriſts body, ſeparate from that malignant Antichriſts Church: Let us rejoyce in conſcience, and in the Lord, having heavenly hope in all his promiſes, which be eternall and moſt ſure to us in Chriſt our Saviour, who loſeth none of all them, whom the eternall Father hath given him, but at his appearing to be our mercifull Judge, ſhall raiſe us up at the laſt day, for the trumpet of God ſhall blow, and bee heard of all Adams poſteritie; ſounding, Venite ad judicium; Come unto judgment, come and be judged. Let us therfore bee prepared, having the wedding garment, yea the whole armour of God, the marriage garment, cleare lampes, that is, pure hearts, and burning heavenly light in the ſame. Let us prepare our ſelves richly to reſtore to our Lord and Maſter our talents, with the increaſe of heavenly living and occupying; then without all doubt, we ſhall heare that moſt bleſſed wiſh of our alone Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall then ſay, Rejoyce good ſervants, I will make you Stewards over many things: Enter into the everlaſting reſt, and kingdome, which hath been prepared for you from the beginning. This is the kingdom of Jeſus Chriſt, which at this preſent is in Babylon, and baniſhed to the deſert, the troubleſome waters of Satan in the Antichriſt and his ſhavelings, ſpewed out of Chriſts mouth. The Lord be our aide, avenger and deliverer when his holy will is, Amen.

John 17.

Auguſtine.

Dearely bought with the moſt precious bloud of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, that we be not deceived by the Antichriſt, let us ponder, weigh, marke, and ſtudy the heavenly doctrine of our Saviour Chriſt in his laſt Supper: the Text is, Benedixit, dixit bene, gratias egit, he ſpake heavenly and well, he gave thankes, he tooke bread, brake it, and gave it to his Diſciples, ſaying, Take, eate this ſacramentall bread, and me the bread of life which came downe from heaven, which giveth life to the world, take true faith, heavenly hope kindled with Chriſtian charity, thankſgiving for my death; let theſe heavenly vertues enter into your ſoules, then enter I. This is my body. This is the true eating of my body, which is given to the death of the croſſe, for the ranſome and ſins of Gods elect. Likewiſe after ſupper hee tooke the cup, he ſpake well, gave thanks, and gave it them, ſaying, Drinke yee all of this: drinke I ſay by this infallible verity, and everlaſting word joyned and annexed with this cup, my bloud which is ſhed from before the beginning of the world, for many, in remiſſion of ſinnes: hee or ſhee that thus dwelleth in mee, and I in him, eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my bloud. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Why prepareſt thou thy tooth and belly? beleeve and thou haſt eaten. Saint Bernard ſaith, When faith, hope, chriſtian loue, and thankſgiuing for Chriſts death enter into a Chriſtian, Chriſt entereth. And againe St. Auguſtine ſaith upon theſe words of Chriſt, You ſhall alwaies haue the poore with you, but mée ſhall ye not haue alwaies with you: The Church had him but a few dayes touching his humanitie, now they haue him by faith, with theſe eyes they doe not ſée him. O Ieſus Chriſt thou Son of the liuing God, which art in the boſome of thy Father, God with God, the very image of God the Father eternall, giue us victorie ouer this Antichriſt in thy moſt precious bloud. Be faithfull to the end, and our Sauiour ſhall crowne us in glorie; let us ſanctifie the name of God in thought, word, and déed.

Quid paras dentem & ventrem? crede & manducaſti.

Eccleſia eum paucis diebus habuit quantũ ad humanitatem, modo fide tenet, oculis non videt.

I ſay unto the Papiſt, and will not flatter,
our God is in heauen whom they will not ſee:
And is no ſuch little pretty matter,
as their god the Pope faineth him to bee.
Pray for all the Preachers of the verity, that God may giue us grace and conſtancy.
They ſing and ſay they haue him in a ſtring:
tye not the dog ſo, for feare of hanging.
To all the faithfull, whoſe names in generall,
in the booke of life, by Chriſt are written all.
The godly thought and patient minde doth libertie in priſon finde.
Whoſo to patience can attaine, ſhall finde in priſon is no paine.
Thrall, trouble, bound, or free,
as pleaſeth God, ſo ſhall all bee.
Wherefore I neuer will forſake
what pleaſeth God lay on my backe.

Iohn Melvin, Preacher and priſoner in Newgate.

¶ A note concerning the trouble of Iulius Palmer, lately come to my hands.

To his aſſured friend and brother in Chriſt, M. Perry, Preacher at Beuerſtone, giue theſe.

MAſter Perrie, after my hearty commendations in the Lord Ieſus Chriſt unto you and your wife, &c. whereas you haue written unto me for my help in ſtopping the malicious and envious mouth of Thomas Thackam, I would be as glad as any man to teſtifie the truth, both for that I know of the ſhameleſſe malice of the ſaid party, againſt the members of Chriſt, as alſo the godlie and vertuous behauiour of Palmer both before he was in priſon, and after in priſon, with the credit of that good and godly worke of that hiſtory: but ſurely many things are out of my head, which I cannot as yet remember. And for theſe things I know, I write unto you. And firſt as touching the friendſhip ſhewed unto the Lady Vane, and his zeale therein uttered, truth it is that he receiued her into his houſe for mony for a ſmall ſpace, in the which time they two did not well agrée, for that ſhe could not ſuffer his wickedneſſe of words and geſtures unreproued, but that his wife many times, being of more honeſtie, made the matter well againe: but to be ſhort, ſuch was his friendſhip in the end towards that good Lady, being out of his houſe, that ſhe feared no man more for her life than him. And I being her man, ſhée gaue me great charge alwayes to beware of him. As touching his friendſhip towards Iohn Bolton in priſon, I am ſure hée neuer found any, as they that uſed to viſit him can ſomewhat ſay: Except you accompt this friendſhip, that he being bereft of his ſenſes, Thackam wrought him to yeelde unto the Papiſtes, and as a right member of them became his ſuretie that hée ſhould bée obedient unto them. And hée, being burdened in conſcience therewith, fled away unto Geneva: for the which flying, Thackam had nothing ſaid unto him, which ſheweth that he was their inſtrument. And this friendſhip to Iohn Bolton; for Downer I haue heard no euill of him; for Gateley and Radley now Vicar of Saint Laurence, and Bowyer a Tanner, they thrée left no meanes unpractiſed to catch and perſecute the members of Chriſt, as I my ſelfe can well proue. As touching Palmer, for that I many times frequented his company in his lodging, he would utter ſometimes unto me the griefe of his minde. Among other things once he told me, that for that he heard he was ſomewhat ſuſpected with the woman of the houſe, hée was much grieued withall, the which he uttered with many tears. I then counſelling him to depart thence to avoyde the occaſion of offence, he ſaid no, but the Lord ſhould try him ere it were long: for, ſaid hee, Thackam hath let me his ſchoole, and now would haue it againe, and becauſe I will not let him haue it, this he hath brought upon me, but God forgiue him. Afterward being in priſon, I talking with him at the grate, hée ſhewed me his iudgement of the Scriptures, and deliuered it unto me, what became of it I know not now. He praiſed God highly for his eſtate, and then he ſaid he truſted it would appear whether Thackam had ſaid of him well or not. And further hée ſaid, that now Thackam hath his will to haue his ſchoole againe: for if I would haue yéelded up the ſchoole, hee would haue ſent mee away. I neuer truſted him ſo well, ſaid hee, to communicate my minde unto him before witneſſe, but ſometime alone, and therefore he hath deuiſed a letter in my name, and brought it to light, to cauſe me to be examined of my conſcience. This is as much as I can ſay at this time. Thus fare you well in the Lord, Amen. From Corſly this 18. of May.

Yours to command in Chriſt
Iohn Moyer, Miniſter.

Haue mée commended, I pray you, to all my friends at Reading.

A note of Iulius Palmer.

ALſo being at Magdalene Colledge about a moneth before he was burned, and reaſoning againſt one Barwike Maſter of Art, ſometime his familiar friend and old acquaintance in the ſaid Colledge, after much talke, Barwike ſaid unto him, Well Palmer, now thou talkeſt boldly and ſtoutly at thy pleaſure; if thou wert brought to a ſtake, thou wouldeſt tell me another tale. Take héed, it is an hard matter to burne. Hereunto Palmer anſwered, Indéed it is a hard matter for him to burne that hath his ſoule linked to his body, as a thiefes foot is tyed in a paire of fetters. But if a man be once able, through Gods help, to ſeparate and diuide the ſoule from the body, for him it is no harder thing to burne, than for me to eate this crumme of bread.

A true copy of the confeſſion of Patrick Patingham, ſent out of Newgate to certaine of his friends.

I Patricke Patingham, being condemned for the verity of Gods truth, that is to ſay, in confeſsing of one God, which was the Creator of all things viſible and inuiſible, and alſo that he made thoſe by his Son, whom he hath made heire of all things. And alſo I confeſſe, that he is the onely begotten Sonne of God, in whom we have redemption, even the forgiveneſſe of ſinnes. And alſo in confeſſing Gods moſt holy Church, being builded upon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, Chriſt Ieſus being the head corner-ſtone. In whom, ſaith Saint Paul, every building coupled together, groweth to an holy Temple in the Lord, in whom I beléeve I am builded together as a member, and made an habitation for GOD in the ſpirit. And alſo I confeſſe, that Chriſt is the head of the holy Church, as S. Paul ſaith, and that God is Chriſts head.

And alſo I had ten Articles, that is to ſay, againſt their wicked traditions and commandements which they uſe, which are againſt the commandements of God, whereof they did condemn me, not ſuffering me to ſpeake in the Conſiſtorie houſe, but condemning mee, my cauſe not heard. But yet I did proteſt unto them, that their Church or Synagogue is of Sathan, that is to ſay, Sathan being the head thereof. Furthermore, my friend or friends unknowne, I have received your letter, and read it over, wherein you ſay that I am in a blaſphemous errour. Indéede friends I confeſſe, that it is an errour; If you will make my beliefe, that is to ſay, that Chriſt is the Sonne of the living God, to bée an errour, and to beléeve that there is one God, as Saint Paul ſaith, and one Mediatour betwixt God and man, even the man Chriſt Ieſus. And although there be that are called Gods, whether in heaven or in earth, as there be Gods many, and Lords many, yet unto us there is but one God, which is the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him, and one Lord Ieſus Chriſt, by whom are all things, and we by him. I beléeve that there is but one Lord, one Faith, one Baptiſme, and one God in all, and above all, and through all, which only God, as Saint Paul ſaith, worketh in all creatures that beléeve in him, and ſpeaketh in them, as Saint Paul ſaith; God in times paſt diverſly and many wayes ſpake unto the Fathers by Prophets, but in theſe laſt dayes he ſpake unto us by his Sonne, whom hée hath made heire of all things. My friend or friends, be it knowne unto you, that this is no errour, as ye ſuppoſe, but it is the truth of Gods will, that we ſhould beléeve, as Saint Iohn ſaith; That Chriſt Ieſus is the Sonne of the living God, and in ſo beléeving wée ſhould have everlaſting life. Thus with love I write unto you, praying God night and day to deliver you from evill which is in you, and to kéepe you from it. Wherefore my friend or friends, you are not crucified with Chriſt, you are not dead with him in Baptiſme, nor doe you know God, or his Son whom he hath ſent, or his commandements which he hath commanded, and yet will ye teach other, with moſt heartie prayer praying to God for you continually.

Patricke Patingham.

A note of a certaine letter of William Tymmes.

GRace, mercie, and peace from God the Father, through the mercies of his deare Sonne Ieſus Chriſt, our Lord and only Saviour, with the comfort of his holy ſpirit, that as you have full godly begun, even ſo you may continue to the end, to the glorie of God, and your everlaſting comfort, which thing to do I pray God to give you grace, who is the giver of all good and perfect gifts, to the glory of his holy name, Amen.

My deare ſiſters, after moſt hearty commendations unto you, and alſo moſt hearty thankſgiving unto you for all the great kindneſſe that you have alwayes ſhewed unto me moſt unworthy of the ſame: I certifie you that I am very glad to heare of your good health, which I pray GOD long to continue to his glory. And eſpecially I do much rejoyce in your moſt godly conſtancie in the Goſpell of Chriſt, which is the power of God unto ſalvation, unto ſo many as beléeve it. Therefore (my deare hearts) goe forward as you have godly begun: for the time will come that theſe cruell tyrants, which now ſo cruelly perſecute the true members of Chriſt, ſhall ſay for very anguiſh of minde; Theſe are they whom we ſometime had in deriſion, and jeſted upon. We fooles thought their life to have béen very madneſſe, and their end to have béen without honour: But loe how they are counted among the children of God, and their portion is among the Saints. Therefore wée have erred from the way of truth. The light of righteouſneſſe hath not ſhined unto us, and the ſunne of underſtanding roſe not upon us. We have wearied our ſelves in the way of wickedneſſe and deſtruction. Tedious wayes have we gone, but as for the way of the Lord wée have not knowne it. What good hath our pride done unto us? or what profit hath the pompe of riches brought us? All theſe things have paſſed away as a ſhadow, or as a meſſenger running before: As a Ship that paſſeth over the waves of the water, which when it is gone, by the trace thereof cannot bee found, neither the path in the flouds, &c. For as ſoone as we were borne, we began inordinately to draw to our end, and have ſhewed no token of vertue, but are conſumed in our owne wickedneſſe. Such words ſhall they that thus have ſinned ſpeake in the hell, &c. But the righteous ſhall live for evermore, their reward is alſo with the Lord, and their remembrance with the Higheſt: therefore ſhall they receive a glorious Kingdome, and a beautifull Crowne at the Lords hands: for with his right hand ſhall he cover them, and with his holy arme ſhall hée defend them, &c. The ſoules of the righteous are in the hands of God, and the paines of death ſhall not touch them, but in the ſight of the unwiſe they appeare to die, and their end is taken for very deſtruction, but they are in reſt. And though they ſuffer paine before men, yet is their hope full of immortalitie. They are puniſhed but in few things, nevertheleſſe in many things ſhall they be well rewarded; for God proveth them, and findeth them méete for himſelfe: yea, as the gold in the furnace doth hee trie them, and receiveth them as a burnt offering; and when the time commeth, they ſhall be looked upon, the righteous ſhall ſhine as the ſparkes that runne through the red buſh, they ſhall judge the Nations, and have dominion over the people, and their Lord ſhall reigne for ever. They that put their truſt in him ſhall underſtand the truth, and ſuch as bee faithfull will agrée unto him in love, and hee ſhall be a pillar in the Temple of God, and ſhall no more goe out, and there ſhall be written upon him the name of GOD. And they ſhall lie under the altar (which is Chriſt) crying with a loude voice, ſaying: How long tarrieſt thou Lord, holy and true, to judge and avenge our bloud on them that dwell on the earth? and they ſhall have long white gaments given unto them, and it ſhall be ſaid unto them, that they ſhould reſt yet for a little ſeaſon, till the number of their fellowes and brethren of them, that ſhould be killed as they were, were fulfilled. For, as Saint Iohn ſaith, they are worthy that thus overcome, to bee clothed in white aray, and their names ſhall not be put out of the Booke of life, but ſhall bee ſeparated from the Goates, and ſet on Chriſts right hand, hearing his ſweete and comfortable voice, when he ſhall ſay; Come ye bleſſed of my Father, and poſſeſſe the Kingdome prepared for you from the beginning of the world: And the very ready way to obtaine the ſame, is, as our Maſter Chriſt ſaith, to forſake our ſelves, taking up our Croſſe, following our Maſter Chriſt, which for the joy that was ſet before him abode the Croſſe, and deſpiſed the ſhame, and is ſet downe on the Throne at the right hand of God: therefore let us follow his example in ſuffering for his Word, ſeeing that he of his mercifull goodneſſe ſuffered ſo much for us when wee were his enemies: for it was our ſinne that killed Chriſt, and hee by his death hath made us alive. Therefore with joy (ſeeing all theſe his mercifull benefits purchaſed for us onely by his death and bloud-ſhedding) let us with boldneſſe confeſſe his holy Word before this wicked generation, even to death, when we be called thereto, and ſo be well aſſured, that our lives be not in the hands of men, but in Gods hands. Therefore (my deare ſiſters) as you have godly begun, ſo goe forward even through manie tribulations, even into the everlaſting Kingdome of heaven. To the which, GOD the Father of all mercie, for his deare Sonne Chriſts ſake, bring both you and all yours, Amen.

Yours to command,
to my poore power,

Another Sermon of Maſter Latimer concerning his playing at Cardes,

NOw you have heard what is meant by this firſt card, and how you ought to play with it, I purpoſe againe to deale unto you another card, almoſt of the ſame ſute; for they be of ſo nigh affinitie, that one cannot bee well played without the other. The firſt card declared, that you ſhould not kill, which might be divers waies, as being angrie with your neighbour, in minde, in countenance, in word, or deede. It declared alſo how you ſhould ſubdue the paſſions of Ire, and ſo cleere evermore your ſelves from them: and where this firſt card doth kill in you theſe ſtubborne Turkes of Ire; this ſecond card will not onely they ſhould bee mortified in you, but that you your ſelves ſhall cauſe them to bee likewiſe mortified in your neighbour, if that your ſaid neighbour hath been through your occaſion moved unto Ire, eyther in countenance, word, or deede. Now let us heare therefore the tenour of this card.

When thou makeſt thine oblation at mine Altar, and there doeſt remember that thy neighbour hath any thing againſt thee, lay downe there thy oblation, and goe firſt and reconcile thy neighbour, and then come and offer thy oblation. This card was ſpoken by Chriſt, as teſtifieth Saint Marke in his fifth Chapter, againſt all ſuch as doe preſume to come unto the Church to make oblation unto God eyther by prayer, or any other deed of charitie, not having their neighbours reconciled. Reconciling is as much to ſay, as to reſtore thy neighbour unto charitie, which by thy words or deedes is moved againſt thee: then if ſo be it that thou haſt ſpoken to, or by thy neighbour, whereby hee is moved to ire or wrath, thou muſt lay downe thy oblation. Oblations bee prayers, almeſ-deedes, or any worke of charitie; theſe bee called oblations to God. Lay downe therefore thine oblation, begin to doe none of theſe foreſayd workes before thou goeſt unto thy neighbour, and confeſſe thy fault unto him, declaring thy minde, that if thou haſt offended him, thou art glad and willing to make him amends, as farre forth as thy words and ſubſtance will extend, requiring him not to take it at the worſt. Thou art ſorrie in thy minde, that thou ſhouldeſt be occaſion of his offending. What manner of card is this will ſome ſay? Why? What have I to doe with my neighbours or brothers malice? as Caine ſaid; Have I the keeping of my brother, or ſhall I anſwer for him and for his faults? This were no reaſon: As for my ſelfe, I thanke God I owe no man malice nor diſpleaſure, if other owe mee any, at their owne perill be it. Let every man anſwer for himſelfe. Nay ſir, not ſo, as you may underſtand by this Card: for it ſaith; If thy neighbour hath any thing, any malice againſt thee, through thine occaſion, lay even downe, ſaith Chriſt, thine oblation; Pray not to mee, doe no good deeds for mee, but goe firſt unto thy neighbour, and bring him againe unto my flocke, which hath forſaken the ſame through thy naughtie words, mockes, ſcornes, or diſdainous countenance, and ſo forth: and then come and offer thine oblation, then doe thy devotion, then doe thy almeſ-deedes, then pray, if thou wilt have me heare thee. O good Lord, this is an hard reckoning, that I muſt goe and ſeeke him out that is offended with me, before I pray or do any good deede. I cannot goe unto him. Peradventure he is an hundred miles from me, beyond the ſeas, or elſe I cannot tell where; if he were here nigh, I would with all my heart goe unto him. This is a lawfull excuſe before God on this faſhion, That thou wouldeſt in thy heart be glad to reconcile thy neighbour, if hee were preſent, and that thou thinkeſt in thy heart, whenſoever thou ſhalt meete with him, to goe unto him, and require him charitably to forgive thee, and ſo never intend to come from him, untill the time that you both depart one from the other true brethren in Chriſt. Yet peradventure there be ſome in the world that be ſo divelliſh and ſo hard-hearted, that they will not apply in any condition unto charity. For all that, doe that lieth in thee by all charitable meanes to bring him to unitie: If he will in no wiſe apply thereunto, thou mayſt bee ſorrowfull in thy heart, that by thine occaſion that man or woman continueth in ſuch a damnable ſtate: this notwithſtanding, if thou doe the beſt that lieth in thee to reconcile him, according to ſome Doctors minde, thou art diſcharged towards God. Nevertheleſſe, St. Auguſtine doubteth in this caſe, whether thy oblations, prayers, or good deedes, ſhall availe thee before God, or no, untill thy neighbour come againe to good ſtate, whom thou haſt brought out of the way. Doth this noble Doctor doubt therein? what aileth us to be ſo bold, and count it but a ſmall fault or none, to bring another man out of patience for every trifle that ſtandeth not with our minde? You may ſee what a grievous thing this is to bring another man out of patience, that peradventure you cannot bring in againe with all the goods that you have: for ſurely after the opinion of great wiſe men, friendſhip once broken will be never well made whole againe. Wherefore you ſhall heare what Chriſt ſaith unto ſuch perſons; Saith Chriſt, I came downe into this world, and ſo tooke on mee bitter paſſion for mans ſake, by the merits whereof I intended to make unitie and peace in mankinde, kinde, to make man brother unto me, and ſo to expell the dominion of Sathan the devill, which worketh nothing elſe but diſſention: and yet now there be a great number of you that have profeſſed my name, and ſay you be Chriſtian men, which doe rebell againſt my purpoſe and minde. I goe about to make my fold; you goe about to breake the ſame, and kill my flock. How dareſt thou (ſaith Chriſt) preſume to come unto my altar, unto my Church, or unto my preſence, to make oblation unto me, that takeſt on thee to ſpoile my Lambes? I goe about like a good Shepheard to gather them together: and thou doeſt the contrary, evermore ready to divide and loſe them. Who made thee ſo bold to meddle with my ſilly beaſts, which I bought ſo dearely with my precious blood? I warne thee out of my ſight, come not in my preſence, I refuſe thee and all thy workes, except thou goe and bring home againe my Lambes which thou haſt loſt: wherefore, if thou thy ſelfe intend to be one of mine, lay even downe by and by thine Oblation, and come no further toward mine Altar, but goe and ſeeke them without any queſtions, as it becommeth a true and faithfull ſervant. A true and faithfull ſervant, whenſoever his Maſter commandeth him to doe any thing, he maketh no ſtops ne queſtions, but goeth forth with a good minde: and it is not unlike he continuing in ſuch a good minde and will, ſhall well overcome all dangers and ſtops, whatſoever betides him in his journey, and bring to paſſe effectually his Maſters will and pleaſure. In the contrary, a ſlothfull ſervant, when his Maſter commandeth him to doe any thing, by and by he will aſke queſtions, where, when, which way? and ſo forth, and ſo he putteth every thing in doubt, that although both his errand and way be never ſo plaine, yet by his untoward and ſlothfull behaviour, his Maſters commandement is either undone quite, or elſe ſo done, that it ſhall ſtand to no good purpoſe. Goe now forth with the good ſervant, and aſke no ſuch queſtions, and put no doubts, be not aſhamed to doe thy Maſters and Lords will and commandement. Goe, as I ſaid, unto thy neighbour that is offended by thee, and reconcile him (as is aforeſaid) whom thou haſt loſt by thy unkinde words, by thy ſcornes, mockes, and other diſdainous words and behaviours, and be not nice to aſke of him the cauſe why he is diſpleaſed with thee, require of him charitably to remit, and ceaſe not till you both depart one from the other true brethren in Chriſt. Doe not like the ſlothfull ſervant thy Maſters meſſage with cautels and doubts; come not to thy neighbour whom thou haſt offended, and give him a peniworth of ale, or a banquet, and ſo make him a faire countenance, thinking that by thy drinke or dinner he will ſhew the like countenance. I grant you may both laugh and make good cheare, and yet there may remaine a bag of ruſtie malice, twenty yeare olde, in thy neighbours boſome; when he departeth from thee with a good countenance, thou thinkeſt all is well then. But now I tell thee it is worſe then it was, for by ſuch cloaked charity, where thou doeſt offend before Chriſt but once, thou haſt offended twice herein: for now thou goeſt about to give Chriſt a mocke, if he would take it of thee: Thou thinkeſt to blinde thy Maſter Chriſts commandement. Beware, doe not ſo, for at length he will overmatch thee, and take thee tardy whatſoever thou be, and ſo as I ſaid, it ſhould be better for thee not to doe his meſſage on this faſhion, for it will ſtand thee in no purpoſe. What? ſome will ſay, I am ſure hee loveth me well enough. He ſpeaketh faire to my face, yet for all that thou maieſt be deceived. It proveth not true love in a man to ſpeake faire. If he love thee with his minde and heart, he loveth thee with his eyes, with his tongue, with his feete, with his hands and his body; for all theſe parts of a mans body be obedient to the will and minde. He loveth thee with his eyes that looketh chearefully on thee, when thou meeteſt with him, and is glad to ſee thee proſper and doe well. He loveth thee with his tongue, that ſpeaketh well by thee behinde thy backe, or giveth thee good counſell. He loveth thee with his feete, that is willing to goe to helpe thee out of trouble and buſineſſe. He loveth thee with his hands, that will helpe thee in time of neceſſity, by giving ſome almeſ-deeds, or with any other occupation of the hand. He loveth thee with his body, that will labour with his body, or put his body in danger to doe good for thee, or to deliver thee from adverſity, and ſo forth, with the other members of his body. And if thy neighbour will doe according to theſe ſayings, then thou maieſt thinke that he loveth thee well, and thou in like wiſe oughteſt to declare and open thy love unto thy neighbour in like faſhion, or elſe you bee bound one to reconcile the other, till this perfect love be ingendered amongſt you. It may fortune thou wilt ſay, I am content to doe the beſt for my neighbour that I can, ſaving my ſelfe harmeleſſe. I promiſe thee Chriſt will not heare this excuſe; for he himſelfe ſuffered harme for our ſakes, and for our ſalvation was put to extreame death. I wis if it had pleaſed him, hee might have ſaved us and never felt paine; but in ſuffering paines and death, he did give us example and teach us how we ſhould doe one for another, as he did for us all. For, as he ſaith himſelfe, he that will be mine, let him deny himſelfe, and follow me in bearing my croſſe and ſuffering my paines. Wherefore we muſt needs ſuffer paine with Chriſt to doe our neighbour good, as well with the body and all his members, as with heart and minde.

Now I truſt you wot what your Card meaneth, let us ſee how that we can play with the ſame. Whenſoever it ſhall happen you to goe and make your Oblation unto GOD, aſk of your ſelves this queſtion, Who art thou? the anſwer as you know is, I am a Chriſtian man. Then you muſt again aske unto your ſelf, What Chriſt requireth of a Chriſtian man? by and by caſt downe your trumpe, your heart, and looke firſt of one Card, then of another. The firſt Card telleth thee thou ſhalt not kill, thou ſhalt not be angry, thou ſhalt not be out of patience. This done, thou ſhalt looke if there be any more Cards to take up, and if thou looke well, thou ſhalt ſee another Card of the ſame ſute, wherein thou ſhalt know that thou art bound to reconcile thy neighbour. Then caſt thy trump unto them both, and gather them all three together, and doe according to the vertue of thy Cards, and ſurely thou ſhalt not loſe. Thou ſhalt firſt kill the great Turkes, and diſcomfit and thruſt them downe. Thou ſhalt againe fetch home Chriſts ſheepe that thou haſt loſt, whereby thou maieſt goe both patiently, and with a quiet minde unto the Church, and make thy Oblation unto God, and then without doubt he will heare thee. But yet Chriſt will not accept our Oblation (although we be in patience, and have reconciled our neighbour) if that our Oblation be made of another mans ſubſtance, but it muſt be our owne. See therefore that thou haſt gotten thy goods according to the lawes of God and of thy Prince. For if thou'getſt thy goods by polling and extortion, or by any other unlawfull waies, then if thou offer a thouſand pound of it, it will ſtand thee in no good effect, for it is not thine. In this point a great number of executors doe offend, for when they be made rich by other mens goods, then they will take upon them to build Churches, to give ornaments to God and his Altar, to gilde Saints, and to doe many good workes therewith; but it ſhall be all in their owne name, and for their own glory. Wherefore (ſaith Chriſt) they have in this world their reward, and ſo their Oblations be not their owne, nor be they acceptable before God. Another way God will refuſe thy voluntary Oblation, as thus: If ſo be it, that thou haſt gotten never ſo truly thy goods, according both to the lawes of God and man, and haſt with the ſame goods not relieved thy poore neighbour, when thou haſt ſeen him hungry, thirſty, and naked, he will not take thy Oblation when thou ſhalt offer the ſame, becauſe he will ſay unto thee: When I was hungry, thou gaveſt me no meate; when I was thirſtie, thou gaveſt me no drinke; and when I was naked, thou diddeſt not clothe me. Wherefore I will not take thy oblation, becauſe it is none of thine. I left it thee to relieve thy poore neighbours, and thou haſt not therein done according unto this my commandement, Miſericordiam volo, & non ſacrificium, I had rather have mercy done, than ſacrifice or oblation. Wherefore untill thou doeſt the one more than the other, I will not accept thine Oblation. Evermore beſtow the greateſt part of thy goods in workes of mercy, and the leſſe part in voluntary workes. Voluntary workes be called all manner of offering in the Church, except your foure offering daies, and your tithes; ſetting up candles, gilding and painting, building of Churches, giving of ornaments, going on pilgrimages, making of High-waies, and ſuch other, bee called voluntary works, which works be of themſelves marvellous good, and convenient to bee done. Neceſſary workes, and workes of mercy are called the commandements, the foure offering daies, your tithe, and ſuch other that long to the commandements; and workes of mercy conſiſt in relieving and viſiting thy poore neighbours. Now then, if men be ſo fooliſh of themſelves, that they will beſtow the moſt part of their goods in voluntary workes, which they be not bound to keep, but willingly and by their devotion; and leave the neceſſary workes undone, which they are bound to doe, they and all their voluntary works are like to goe unto everlaſting damnation. And I promiſe you, if you build an hundred Churches, give as much as you can make to gilding of Saints, and honouring of the Church, and if thou goe as many Pilgrimages as thy body can well ſuffer, and offer as great Candles as Oakes, if thou leave the workes of mercy and the commandements undone, theſe workes ſhall nothing availe thee. No doubt the voluntary workes be good, and ought to be done; but yet they muſt be ſo done, that by their occaſion the neceſſary works, and the works of mercy be not decayed and forgotten: If you wil build a glorious Church unto God, ſee firſt your ſelves to be in charity with your neighbours, and ſuffer not them to bee offended by your workes. Then when ye come into your Pariſh Church, you bring with you the holy temple of God; as S. Paul ſaith, you your ſelves be the very holy temples of God: And Chriſt ſaith by his Prophet; In you will I reſt, and intend to make my manſion & abiding place: Again, if you liſt to gilde and paint Chriſt in your Churches, and honour him in veſtiments, ſee that before your eyes the poore people die not for lacke of meat, drinke, and clothing. Then do you decke the very true temple of God, and honour him in rich veſtures, that will never be worn, and ſo forth uſe your ſelves according unto the commandements; and then finally ſet up your candles, and they will report what a glorious light remaineth in your hearts, for it is not fitting to ſee a dead man light candles. Then, I ſay, goe your Pilgrimages, build your materiall Churches, doe all your voluntary workes, and they will then repreſent unto God, and teſtifie with you, that you have provided him a glorious place in your hearts. But beware I ſay againe, that you doe not run ſo far into your voluntary workes, that ye do quite forget your neceſſary workes of mercy, which you are bound to keepe: you muſt have ever a good reſpect unto the beſt and worthieſt works toward God, to be done firſt and with more efficacy, and the other to be done ſecondarily. Thus if you doe, with the other that I have ſpoken of before, you may come according to the tenor of your Cards, and offer your Oblations and Prayers to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who will both heare and accept them to your everlaſting joy and glory, to the which he bring us, and all thoſe whom hee ſuffered death for, Amen.

A note of William Gie.

One William Gie, ſervant with Maſter Revet, Merchant, bought a Bible and Service booke of Richard Waterſon, who then dwelt with Maſter Duixle in Pauls Church-yard, and one Spilman bound the booke: and when the ſaid Gie had inquired for the ſaid Richard to have his book at Duixles, anſwer was made that he was not within, and ſo the ſaid Gie went his way to Spilmans for the book; and becauſe he found it not done, he left it there, and immediatly ſearch was made in Spilmans houſe, and the ſaid Bible and Service book was found and carried to Boner then Biſhop of London. He having the bookes, commanded Spilman for the binding thereof to Lollards Tower; and as Clump went for the key thereof Spilman conveighed himſelfe away. After that, Waterſon and Gie being apprehended by Robin Calie, John Hill, and John Avales, and being two daies in the Counter, were brought before Boner and other Commiſſioners. Being examined: Doctor Story demanded Gie; Wherefore he bought the Bible? He anſwered, to ſerve God withall. Then ſaid Boner; Our Lady Mattins would ſerve a Chriſtian man to ſerve God. The Bible, ſaid Story, would breed hereſies; a bibble bable were more fit for thee. So they concluded that either of them ſhould have forty ſtripes lacking one, and Boner ſaid it was the law. And they ſaid to Waterſon, if he would pay forty pound, he ſhould be releaſed of his ſtripes: at length they came to 10. pound, and when they ſaw he would not, they made a Warrant to Maſter Grafton, and ſent Waterſon and Gie to Bridewell to be beaten upon the Croſſe. And becauſe the matter ſhould not be ſlightly handled, Story was ſent with them to ſee it done. Gie being whipped upon the Croſſe, interceſſion was made that he might be forgiven part of his penance.

A note of Michaels wife.

Michaels wife aforementioned, being priſoner in Ipſwich for Religion, reſorted daily from the priſon to her huſbands houſe, and returned againe, keeping faith and promiſe. And her huſband thereat being fearefull, ſhe would comfort him, ſaying, ſhe came not to trouble him, neither ſhould he ſuſtaine trouble by her. Wherefore ſhe would will him to be of good cheere, for her comming was of good will to ſee him and her children, and not to bring them into trouble, but to ſhew her duty therein while ſhe might have liberty.

A note

A note of Iohn Spicer.

IN Quéene Maries time, there was one Iohn Spicer, of whom mention is made before, he being at the Stake, ready to giue his life for the truth, a bagge of Gunpowder was brought him by his ſonne. And another ſtanding by (one named Maſter Beckinham) tooke the Gunpowder of his ſonne, and put it under the girdle of the ſaid Spicer, and exhorted him to be ſtrong in the Lord; alſo diuers of the Sheriffes ſeruants comforted him in like manner, and deſired him not to faint. Unto whom Spicer anſwered; Doubt you not of me (ſaith he) my ſoule is quiet; but be ye ſtrong and ſtand faſt in the Lord Ieſus, and commit your ſelues to him in the confeſſion of his holy name, and profeſſion of his truth.

A note of Mandrell.

MAndrell ſtanding at the Stake, as is mentioned before, Doctor Geffery the Chancellor ſpake to him, wiſhing him to yéeld to the Doctors, who many hundred yéeres had taught otherwiſe then he doth beléeue, &c. To whom Mandrell anſwered; Maſter Chancellor (ſaid he) trouble me with none of your Doctors whatſoeuer they ſay; but bring me the Booke of God, the old Teſtament and the New, and I will anſwer you. What ſayeſt thou Mandrell (quoth he) by the Saints in the Church, the Image of our Lady, of the Crucifixe, and other holy Saints? be they not neceſſary, &c. Yes, Maſter Chancellor (ſaid he) very neceſſary to roſt a ſhoulder of Mutton. Then Doctor Billing a Friar once, ſtanding by, ſaid; Maſter Chancellor (quoth he) heare how theſe Heretikes ſpeake againſt the Crucifixe and the holy Croſſe, and yet the holy Croſſe is mentioned in all the tongues, both Hebrew, Gréeke, and Latine. For in Latine it is called t. in Gréeke tau, &c. Whereupon one Thomas Gilford, a Merchant of Poole, ſtanding by, ſaid; Ah mercifull Lord (ſaid he) is not this a marvellous matter for a poore man thus to be charged, and put to the paines of fire for t. tau?

When Mandrell and Spicer were examined before the Chancellor, the Chancellor called them, ſaying: Come on, come on, ſaith he, thou Spicer art too blame, for thou haſt taught Mandrell theſe Hereſies. Thou art by thy occupation a Bricklaier: Yea, that I am. And can ſing in the Quire: Yea, that I can, ſaith he. And can play on the Organes. True, ſaith he. Well then, ſaid the Chancellor, and thou haſt marred this poore man, and haſt taught him all theſe Hereſies. No, Maſter Chancellor (quoth he) I haue not taught him, but I haue read him. He is able, thankes be to God, to teach both you and me.

A note of Elizabeth Pepper.

ELizabeth Pepper before mentioned, when ſhe was burned at Stratford, was eleuen wéekes gone with childe, as ſhe then teſtified to one Boſomes wife, who then unlooſed her neckerchiefe; and moreouer, when ſhe was aſked, why ſhe did not tell them, anſwered; Why (quoth ſhe) they knew it well enough. Oh ſuch are the bloudy hearts of this cruell generation, that no occaſion can ſtay them from their miſchieuous murdering of the Saints of the Lord, that truely profeſſe Chriſt crucified onely and alone, for the ſatisfaction of their ſinnes.

A note of one confeſſing Gods truth at the Gallowes.

A Notorious Fellon, one Dicke Adams, being upon the Gallowes, making his confeſſion, and ready to be caſt downe from the ladder, was deſired at that inſtant by one Miſtreſſe Harris, the Grammar Schoolemaſters wife, to remember the bleſſed ſacrament before he died, to whom the ſaid Adams ſaid; Marry Miſtreſſe neuer in better time, who went up to the top of the ladder, and ſaid it was the moſt abominable Idoll that euer was, and willed all men to take it ſo; for we haue béene greatly deceiued thereby. Whereupon the Sheriffe cauſed him to hold his peace, and to take his death patiently. He went downe to his place, and was caſt from the ladder, ſpeaking to his laſt word, that it was an abominable Idoll: his body therefore was buried out of the Church yard by the High-way; who although hée was a théefe in his life, yet he earneſtly repented thereof, ſo that I doubt not but hée died the childe of God, and not unworthy to bée put in the regiſter of the Lords accepted Confeſſors.

A note of Gertrude Crockhay.

Referre this to the yeere of the Lord, 1556

IN the late dayes of Quéene Mary, among other ſtrange dealings of the Papiſts with the faithfull, this is not with the reſt to be forgotten, that a godly Matron named Gertrude Crockhay, the wife of Maſter Robert Crockhay, dwelling then at Saint Katherines by the Tower of London, abſtained her ſelfe from the Popiſh Church. And ſhe being in her husbands houſe, it happened in Anno 1556. that the fooliſh Popiſh Saint Nicholas went about the Pariſh, which ſhe underſtanding, ſhut her doores againſt him, and would not ſuffer him to come within her houſe. Then Doctor Mallet hearing thereof (and being then Maſter of the ſaid Saint Katherines) the next day came to her with twentie at his taile, thinking belike to fray her, and aſked why ſhe would not the night before let in Saint Nicholas, and receiue his bleſſing, &c. To whom ſhe anſwered thus; Sir, I know no Saint Nicholas, ſaid ſhée, that came hither. Yes (quoth Mallet) here was one that repreſented Saint Nicholas. Indéede ſir (ſaid ſhe) here was one that is my neighbours childe, but not Saint Nicholas. For Saint Nicholas is in Heauen. I was affraid of them that came with him to haue had my purſe cut by them. For I haue heard of men robbed by Saint Nicholas Clerkes, &c. So Mallet perceiuing that nothing could be gotten at her hands, went his way as he came, and ſhe for that time ſo eſcaped.

Then in Anno 1557. a little before Whitſontide, it happened that the ſaid Gertrude anſwered for a childe that was baptiſed of one Thomas Saunders, which childe was chriſtened ſecretly in a houſe, after the order of the Seruice booke in King Edwards time, and that being ſhortly knowne to her enemies, ſhe was ſought for, which underſtanding nothing thereof, went beyond the ſea into Gelderland, to ſée certaine lands that ſhould haue come to her children in the right of her firſt husband, who was a ſtranger borne. And being there about a quarter of a yéere, at the length comming homeward by Antwerp, ſhe chanced to méet with one John Johnſon, a Dutchman, alias John De wille of Antwerp Shipper, who ſéeing her there, went of malice to the Margrave, and accuſed her to be an Anabaptiſt, whereby ſhe was taken and carried to priſon. The cauſe why this naughty man did thus, was for that he claimed of Maſter Crockhay her huſband a péece of monie, which was not his due, for a ſhip, that the ſaid Maſter Crockhay bought of him; and for that he could not get it, he wrought this diſpleaſure. Well, ſhe being in priſon, lay there a fortnight; in which time ſhe ſaw ſome that were priſoners there, who privily were drowned in Rheniſh wine fats, and after ſecretly put in ſackes, and caſt into the River. Now the good woman, thinking to be ſo ſerved, tooke thereby ſuch feare, that it brought the beginning of her ſickneſſe, of the which at length ſhe died.

Then at the laſt ſhe was called before the Margrave, and charged with Anabaptiſtry, which ſhe there utterly denied, and deteſted the errour, declaring before him in Dutch her faith boldly without any feare. So the Margrave hearing the ſame, in the end being well pleaſed with her profeſſion, at the ſute of ſome of her friends delivered her out of priſon, but tooke away her booke, and ſo ſhe came over into England againe. And being at home in her huſbands houſe, hée thinking to finde meanes to get her to goe abroad, made one Vicars a Yeoman of the Tower his friend, who was great with Boner, to worke that libertie for her. Now this Vicars making meanes to Boner for the ſame, Boner put the matter over to Darbiſhire his Chancellor, who enioyned her to give certaine monie to poore folkes, and to goe on the Wedneſday and Sunday after to Church to Evenſong, which ſhe ſo did, and afterward had ſuch trouble in her conſcience thereby, that ſhée thought verily God had caſt her off, and that ſhée ſhould be damned, and never be ſaved: ſo not long after this, it hapned that Maſter Rough, of whom mention is made before, came to her houſe, unto whom ſhe made mone of her unquietneſſe for going to Church, and deſired his counſell what ſhe might doe, that ſhould beſt pleaſe God, and eaſe her troubled ſoule, &c. Unto whom Maſter Rough replyed many comfortable ſentences of Scripture to comfort her, and in the end gave her counſell to goe to the Chriſtian congregation, which ſecretly the perſecuted had, and confeſſe her fault unto them, and ſo to be received into their fellowſhip againe; who hearing that was glad, and intended ſo to doe, and ſo would have done, if ſore ſickneſſe had not immediately prevented the ſame. But when Doctor Mallet heard by one Robert Hemmings Woodmonger, that ſhée lay very ſicke indéede, which Hemmings was her great enemy, he came to her twice to perſwade her to recant, and to receive (as the Papiſts terme it) the rites of the Church. Unto whom ſhe anſwered, ſhe could not, nor would, for that ſhe was ſubiect to vomit; and therefore he would not (ſhe was ſure, ſhe ſaid) have her to caſt up their God againe, as ſhe ſhould doe, if ſhe did receive it. And ſo immediately vomited indéede; wherefore he ſéeing that, went from her into the Hall to her daughter named Clare Sacke, and told her, if her mother would not receive, ſhe ſhould not be buried in Chriſtian buriall, as he termed it. Then Clare went and told her ſicke mother what he ſaid unto her. Who hearing the ſame, ſpake theſe words following; Oh (ſaid ſhe) how happy am I, that I ſhall not riſe with them, but againſt them. Well (quoth ſhe) the earth is the Lords, and all that therein is; and therefore I commit the matter to him, &c.

Reade before.

Shortly hereupon, that is, the 27. day of March 1558. the ſaid Doctor Mallet came againe to her with one Doctor Weſt, Quéene Maries Chaplaine. And comming in, he ſaluted her, and told her that he had brought her a good learned man to perſwade her, who was one of the Quéenes Chaplaines, &c. and therefore hée deſired her to heare and beléeve him in that hée ſhould ſay, &c. Then Doctor Weſt exhorted her to receive their Sacrament, and to be aneled, for he ſaid, ſhe was ſtrong enough for it, &c. Unto whom ſhe anſwered, that ſhe was able and ſtrong enough to receive it indéede, but ſhe would not, for that it was abominable, &c. Then ſaid Weſt, ye be in an ill minde; Doe ye thinke to die a Chriſtian woman? Yea, ſaid ſhe, that I doe. I pray you, ſaid Weſt, how came you firſt into that opinion. Marie, ſaid ſhe, there is he that firſt taught it me (meaning Doctor Mallet) at the Marriage of my Brother and his Siſter, where I heard him earneſtly preach this Doctrine, which I now doe hold. And if God ſhall lay our ſinnes to our charge, if we repent not, much more damnable is his offence, being once a publike Preacher of the ſame, and now to turne from it. Then Mallet told her hée was then deceived by little new-fangled two pennie bookes, as you be now (ſaid he) but now I am otherwiſe perſwaded, as I would have you, and to receive the Sacrament, which if you would, you ſhould, I warrant you, be ſaved, my Soule for yours. At whoſe words ſhe earneſtly deſired them to be content: for (ſaith ſhe) ye be come to robbe and to draw me from my Chriſt, which I tell you truth you ſhall not doe, for I will never conſent to you while I live. When Weſt heard her ſay ſo, he drew his ſtoole nigher to heare her ſpeake, and being drunken, he fell downe, whereby Mallet was faine to helpe him up againe, and ſo immediately after they departed thence. And the thirteenth day of April next after that, ſhe died conſtantly in the Lord, and yéelded her ſoule and life into his holy hands, with theſe words; Oh Lord, into thy hands receive my ſoule, and ſo immediately gave up her life unto the Lord, to whom be praiſe for ever, Amen.

While ſhe was beyond ſea, as it is ſaid before, Maſter Crockhay her huſband, by the procurement of Doctor Mallet, was cited to come before Maſter Huſſey the Commiſſarie who (had it not béene for that he made meanes unto the ſaid Huſſey before) would have ſent him to priſon, and bound him in recogniſance to ſéeke her out. But he more eaſily eſcaped their hands by friendſhip, as before I have ſaid.

Now when Doctor Mallet heard of her death, Maſter Crockhay, and one Robert Hemmings Bayliffe of Saint Katherines, being before him for the burying of her, he ſaid plainely, ſhée ſhould be buryed nigh to ſome High-way, and a marke ſet up, in token that an Heretike was buryed there. Then the ſaid Hemmings told him, the Hogges would ſcrape her up, which were not decent, nor beſt; and Maſter Crockhay intreated ſhe might be buried in his garden, which at length he granted, and willed the ſaid Hemmings to ſée it done, and that he ſhould be ſure he buried her there indéede.

After, when the corpes was brought to the ſaid Garden, the ſaid Robert Hemmings the Bayliffe would néedes ſée it opened: which when the cover was taken off, the wife of the ſaid Hemmings put her hand within the ſhéete, and felt the haire of the ſaid dead corpes, ſaying; Now will I iuſtifie that ſhe is here, and ſo ſhe did, telling Mallet that thoſe her hands did féele her; this is the effect of this ſtorie.

Now ſince the comming in of Quéene Elizabeth, the ſaid Doctor Mallet came to the ſaid Maſter Crockhay, and aſked him forgiveneſſe, alledging this Verſe of the Poet.

Amantium iræ amoris redintegratio eſt.

The Lord give him repentance and grace to ſéeke perfect friendſhip with him, if it be his bleſſed will, Amen.

A note of William Wood.

The notable deliverances of W. Wood.

ACcording as I have ſent unto you the true record of my examination before the Doctors above mentioned, ſo I thought it not inconvenient to ſend you likewiſe certaine notes of my other two deliverances in Quéene Maries time, and this I doe not (as God knoweth) to get any praiſe to my ſelfe, or to reproach any other, but that God may be glorified in his workes, and that our brethren may know, that though there be many times but little helpe on earth, yet that there is more in heaven. About a moneth after my examination, one Apleby and his wife (that were perſecuted from Maidſtone in Kent) came to my houſe in Strowde, and deſired me that hée might have a place in my houſe for him and his wife for a time, becauſe perſecution was ſo hott, that hée could no longer ſtay there; and I at his inſtance let him have a place with me: but within a fortnight after the Papiſts eſpied him, and complained of him to the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and the Biſhop ſent his chiefe man, called Ralph Crowch, and he carried him to Rocheſter before the Biſhop, and the ſaid Apleby ſtood in the defence of the truth boldly; and the Biſhop ſent both him and his wife to the Iayle of Maidſtone, and there they were burned for the teſtimony of the Goſpel of God. And the Friday fortnight after I was in the Market at Rocheſter talking with another man, and the ſayd Ralph Crowch was ſent for me; and he comming within a ſtones caſt of me where I was talking with my neighbour George Smally, one William Stanley a Papiſt, dwelling alſo in Strowde, met with the ſayd Crowch, and they two talked together a while, and I doubted that they talked of me, becauſe many times in their talke they looked on me, and then the ſayd Ralph Crowch went over the ſtréete to another Officer or Conſtable which knew not me, and ſent the ſaid Conſtable for me, and comming for me, knowing my neighbour George Smally, tooke him in ſtead of me, and carried him to the Biſhop, and when he came before him, the Biſhop ſayd to the Officers, this is not he knave, this is not he knave, and the Biſhop checked the Maior and his Officers, and ſayd that they mocked him, becauſe hée carried the other man for me, ſuch was the mighty providence of GOD to defend me, and the Maior the ſame night ſent forty bils and men with other weapons to beſet my houſe to take mée, but the Lord kept mée from them, and delivered me out of their hands, to him be glory therefore, Amen.

The third time that the Lord delivered mée was on Eaſter day next after. I had béen at London all the Lent, and on Eaſter Even at night I came home to Strowde to my wife, and a childe of thrée yéeres old told one of the neighbours that her father was come home. And on Eaſter day, after their Popiſh Evenſong was done, came Maſter Reade, Thomas Crowch, brother to the aboveſayd Ralph Crowch, William Stanly, Thomas Bets, Lionell Newman, and Roger Braunch, with thréeſcore people or thereabouts, and ſearched my houſe very ſtraitely for mée: but as Gods providence was, there was Mault a drying upon the Kill, and they ſearched ſo narrowly for mée, that I was glad to heave up a corner of the haire whereon the Mault lay, and went into the Kill hole, and there ſtood till they were gone, and ſo I eſcaped from them; but within an houre after there came a woman to my wife to borrow a bruſh, and ſpied mée thorow the key-hole of the doore, and there ſhe carrying tydings abroad, immediately came a great company of men and beſet my houſe round about, and I ſayd to my wife, You ſee that theſe foure men ſeeke for my life, that is, Maſter Reade, Thomas Crowch, William Stanley, and Thomas Bets: for I doe think that none of the reſt will lay hands on me; and therefore I pray thee wife follow theſe foure men, and talke loude to them that I may heare, and ſo eſcape, and if they ſearch on the backſide, I may avoide on the ſtreete ſide; and be of good comfort, for our lives are in Gods hand, and though there be little helpe here on earth, yet there is helpe enough from heaven; and when theſe men were ſearching on the backſide, I went into the ſtreete, among (as I gheſſe) an hundred people, and none of them laid hands on me, neither ſayd they any thing to me, ſo I went out of the Towne, and lay there at an honeſt mans houſe at the Pariſh of Cobham that night.

And at the ſame time alſo two of my neighbours, honeſt men and of good wealth, the one called Iohn Pemmet a Fiſherman, the other named Iohn Baily a Glover, becauſe they came not to their Popiſh Church to buy ſome of their Idolatrous wares, were complained of to the Iuſtices, who did binde them to anſwer for their faith before the Iudges at the Aſſiſes which were holden at Midſummer after (as I remember) at Rocheſter in the palace yard; and there was at that time a ſaile cloth of a ſhip tied to the top of the Biſhops Palace wall, to keep away the Sun from the Iudges, becauſe it was hott, and the winde blew and ſhooke the ſaile, ſo that when theſe two men were called to be examined, and when they ſhould have anſwered, there fell from the top of the wall three or foure great ſtones upon the Iudges neckes, ſo that ſome of them which ſate on the Bench were ſore hurt and maimed, ſo that they aroſe ſuddenly all amazed, and departed, and the two men were delivered.

The ſtory of Iohn Alcocke.

THis Iohn Alcocke or Aucocke, of whom mention is made before, was a very faithfull honeſt man, by his occupation a woad ſetter, ſingularly well learned in the holy Scriptures, and in all his converſation a iuſt and righteous man, that feared God, and ſtudied to doe indeede that thing that hee had learned in the Scriptures. Now after that ſir Richard Yeoman was driven away, and the people on Sundaies and other daies came to the Church, and had no man to teach them any thing (for as yet Parſon Newell was not come to Hadley to dwell, nor had gotten any Curate. Beſides that, the lawes made by King Edward were in force, and the Latine mumblings not received every where.) Iohn Alcocke therefore tooke the Engliſh booke uſed by King Edward, exhorting the people to pray with him, and ſo read certaine prayers in Engliſh before them: and moreover, hee gave them godly leſſons and exhortations out of the Chapters that he read unto them. For this, the Biſhop of Wincheſter Stephen Gardiner ſent for him, and caſt him into Newgate at London: where after many examinations and troubles, for that he would not ſubmit himſelfe to aske forgiveneſſe of the Pope, and to be reconciled to the Romiſh religion, he was caſt into the lower dungeon, where with evill keeping, and ſickneſſe of the houſe, hee died in priſon. Thus died he a Martyr of Chriſts verity, which hée heartily loved and conſtantly confeſſed, and received the Garland of a well foughten battell at the hand of the Lord. His body was caſt out, and buried in a dunghill; for the Papiſts would in all things bée like themſelves; therefore would they not ſo much as ſuffer the dead bodies to have honeſt and convenient ſepulture.

He wrote two Epiſtles to Hadley, which follow here.

The firſt Epiſtle of Iohn Alcocke.

Gal. 1.

GRace be with you, and peace from the Father, and our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, which gave himſelfe for our ſins, that hée might deliver us from this preſent evill world, according to the will of God our Father, to whom be praiſe for ever and ever, Amen.

Oh my brethren of Hadley, why are ye ſo ſoone turned from them which called you in the grace of Chriſt, unto another doctrine? which is nothing elſe but that there be ſome which trouble you, and intend to pervert the Goſpel of our Lord and Saviour Ieſus Chriſt. Nevertheleſſe though theſe ſhould come unto you that have béen your true Preachers, and preach another way of ſalvation, than by Ieſus Chriſts death and paſſion, hold them accurſed. Yea, if it were an Angell came from heaven, and would tell you that the ſacrifice of Chriſts body upon the Croſſe once for all ever, for all the ſinnes of all thoſe which ſhall be ſaved, were not ſufficient; accurſed be he. If hée were an Angell, or whatſoever hée were, that would ſay that our ſervice in Engliſh were not right Gods ſervice, but will better allow the moſt wicked mumming that you now have: Thoſe, whatſoever they bée, except they doe repent and allow the Goſpel of Ieſus Chriſt, they ſhall never come into that Kingdome that Chriſt hath prepared for thoſe that be his. Wherefore, my dearly beloved brethren of Hadley, remember you well what you have béen taught heretofore of the Lord Gods true and ſimple Prophets, that only did wiſh your health and conſolation.

Heb. 9. 10.
Chriſts ſacrifice.

Church ſervice.

True Prophets.

Doe not (my good brethren) I pray you, forget the comfortable word of our Lord and Saviour Ieſus Chriſt, Matthew 11. Come unto me all you that are troubled and loden, with the dangers that ye are in theſe ſtormy daies, and heare my words, and beléeve them, and you ſhall ſée the unſpeakable comfort that you ſhall receive. The Lord is my Shephard, ſayth the Prophet David, ſo that I can want nothing, Pſal. 23. He féedeth his ſhéepe in gréene paſtures, and leadeth them unto cléere and wholeſome waters of comfort. I am that good Shepheard, ſaith our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt, Iohn 10. for I give my life for my ſhéep, and I know my ſhéepe, and my ſhéep know me; but my ſhéepe will not know an hireling: for he careth not but only for his god the belly, and ſo ſéeketh the deſtruction of their ſoules. Therefore beware of hirelings, you that count your ſelves the ſhéep of Ieſus Chriſt. Be ſure that ye know his voyce and obey it, and be not deceived through ſtrange voyces, but goe from them, and earneſtly abide by your profeſſion that you have made in your Baptiſme, and ſhrinke not from it. For if you doe, you ſhall declare your ſelves to be a vaine people, and without underſtanding. And for this cauſe doth God plague his people, and ſuffereth them to be deceived with falſe Prophets and wicked men. I pray you note what the Prophet Eſay ſaith to the people of thoſe dayes, Eſay 1. becauſe they were ſlipping from the Lord their God, which had done ſo marvellous workes for them, as you well doe know in the hiſtories of the Bible. Heare O heaven (ſayth he) and hearken thou earth, for the Lord hath ſpoken, I have nouriſhed and brought up children, but they have done wickedly againſt me. The Oxe hath knowne his owner, and the Aſſe his Maſters Crib; but Iſrael hath received no knowledge, my people hath no underſtanding. Alas for this ſinfull nation, a people of great iniquity, a froward generation, unnaturall children.

Hirelings.

A vain people.

They have forſaken the Lord, they have provoked his wrath, and are gone backward. Hearken alſo what the Prophet Ieremy ſayth, Ier. 2. Be aſtonied ye heavens, be affraid and aſhamed at ſuch a thing, ſaith the Lord, for my people hath done two evils. They have forſaken mée, the Well of the waters of life, and digged them broken pits that can hold no water. Is Iſrael a bond ſervant or one of the houſhold of the Lord? Why then is hée ſo ſpoyled? Why then doe they roare and cry upon him as a Lyon? Underſtand thoſe things now in theſe dayes that the Prophet ſpake of them. Oh my brethren of Hadley, why commeth this plague upon us, that wée have now in theſe dayes and other times? Hearken what the Prophets ſay; Commeth not this upon thée becauſe thou haſt forſaken the Lord thy God? Thine owne wickedneſſe ſhall reprove thée, and thy turning away ſhall condemne thée, that thou maiſt know and underſtand how evill and hurtfull a thing it is, that thou haſt forſaken the Lord thy GOD, and not feared him, ſaith the Lord God of hoſts, the holy One of Iſrael, that is to ſay, he that maketh Iſrael holy. And underſtand by Iſrael the children of GOD, and thoſe things that were ſpoken to the carnall Iſrael, are ſpoken unto us, that are or ſhould be the ſpirituall Iſrael. Grace be with you all, Amen.

An evill and hurtfull thing

Iſrael.

The ſecond Epiſtle of Iohn Alcocke.

A letter.

MY brethren of Hadley, note well what Saint Paul ſaid in the tenth Chapter to the firſt of the Corinthians. Brethren, I would you ſhould not be ignorant of this, that our fathers were all under the cloud, and all paſſed through the ſea, and were baptiſed under Moſes in the cloud, and in the ſea, and did eate one ſpirituall meate, and dranke of one ſpirituall drinke. They dranke of that ſpirituall Rocke that followed them, which Rocke was Chriſt: Nevertheleſſe in many of them had God no delight, for they were over ſmitten in the wilderneſſe. Theſe are examples unto us, that we ſhould not luſt after evill things as they luſted, that is ſay, we ſhould ſtand forth to defend the verity of God, which wée would doe right well, alas, were it not for loſſe of goods: we doe ſo much luſt after them, that we will rather ſay there is no God, than wée will profeſſe his Word to be truth to the loſing of our goods. And our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, Mark 10. he that is not content to forſake father and mother, wife and children, houſe and land, corne and cattell, yea, and his owne life for my truths ſake, is not méet for me. And if we be not for our Lord God, then we muſt néeds be méet for the Divell, and we muſt néeds be ſervants to one of them. If we be not aſhamed of the Goſpel of our Lord and Saviour Ieſus Chriſt, but earneſtly confeſſe it to the uttermoſt of our power, then are we ſure to be confeſſed of our Lord and Saviour Ieſus Chriſt, and that before the Angels in heaven, to be his ſervants. But if we will ſo luſt to kéepe our goods, and rather deny him, then to loſe our goods, then doth it follow whoſe ſervants we are. Therefore (my deare brethren of Hadley) beware that you doe not conſent to any thing againſt your conſcience. For if you doe, beware of Gods great wrath: I exhort you therefore (my beloved brethren in our Lord and Saviour Ieſus Chriſt) to ſtand faſt in your profeſſion, and become not manifeſt run-awayes from the trueth of our Lord God, but ſticke earneſtly to it, and doubt not but our Lord God will be unto you a ſtrong defence and refuge in the needfull time. Bow downe thine eare, O Lord (ſaith David, Pſal. 86.) and heare me: for I am poore and in miſery. Be mercifull unto me, O Lord, for I will call daily upon thee: comfort the ſoule of thy ſervant; for unto thee, O Lord, doe I lift up my ſoule. For thou Lord art good and gracious, and of great mercy, unto all them that call upon thee. Give eare Lord unto my prayer, and ponder the voyce of my humble petition. All nations whom thou haſt made, ſhall come and worſhip thee, O Lord, and ſhall glorifie thy name. For thou art great, and doeſt wonderfull things: thou art God alone. Teach me thy wayes, O Lord, and I will walke in thy trueth: Oh knit my heart unto thee, that I may feare thy name. I will thanke thee, O my God, with all my heart, and will praiſe thy name for ever. O you Chriſtian people of Hadley, comfort your ſelves one another in theſe notable Pſalmes of David, and the whole Bible. Embrace the noble Iewell of our Lord God the Bible, and indeavour your ſelves to walke the way that it doth teach you.

Luſt after evill things.

Inuocati[illegible] and pray[illegible].

Pſalmes of David are comfortable. The Bible is a Iewell.

My good brethren, we as helpers, ſaith Saint Paul, 2 Cor. 6. doe exhort you that you receive not the grace of God in vaine. For behold now is the accepted time, now is the day of Salvation. Let us beware that we take ſure hold while we have time; for time will away. While ye have the light walke in it, leſt when ye would deſire it, ye cannot have it. Underſtand the light to be the knowledge of Chriſt, and to obey, that is to have the light. For that cauſe came our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt, to make himſelfe knowne, Iohn 12. Unto thoſe that did receive him, he gave power to be the ſonnes of God, and ſo to be made inheritors of his kingdome, which ſhall never end, Iohn 1. who would not be glad to become the Kings ſonne, that he thereby might be partaker of the kingdome that never ſhall have end? O vaine man, what art thou that wilt refuſe everlaſting life for a day or two, or an houre? thou canſt not tell how ſhort. Open thine eyes, and ſee thine owne comfort and refuge to Chriſt. O flie and refuſe this worldly wiſedome: for worldly wiſedome doth ſhut out the wiſedome of God. For the word of the croſſe is fooliſhneſſe unto them that periſh; but unto us which are ſaved it is the power of God. For it is written, 1. Cor. 1. I will deſtroy the wiſedome of the wiſe, and will caſt away the underſtanding of the prudent. Where are the wiſe? where are the Scribes? where are the diſputers of this world? hath not God made the wiſedome of this world fooliſhneſſe? For inſomuch as the world by the wiſedome thereof knew not GOD in his wiſedome, it pleaſed God through fooliſhneſſe of preaching to ſave them that beleeve. For the Iewes require tokens, and the Greekes aſke after wiſedome; but we preach Chriſt crucified, ſaith St. Paul, to the Iewes an occaſion of falling, and unto the Greekes (a people that are wiſe in their owne conceits) to them is the preaching of Chriſt crucified fooliſhneſſe. But unto them that are called, both Iewes and Greekes, we preach Chriſt, the power of God and the wiſedome of God. For the fooliſhneſſe of God is wiſer then men, and the weakeneſſe of God is ſtronger then men.

Vanity of this life worldly wiſedome.

Brethren, looke upon your calling, how that not many wiſe men after the fleſh, not many mighty, not many of high degree are called. But that which is fooliſh before the world hath GOD choſen; that he might confound the wiſe; and that which is deſpiſed before the world hath he choſen, and that which is nothing, that he might deſtroy that which is ought, that no fleſh ſhould rejoyce. Of the ſame are ye alſo in Chriſt Ieſus, which is made of God unto us wiſedome and righteouſneſſe, and ſanctifying and redemption, according as it is written, that he that rejoyceth ſhould rejoyce in the Lord, that your faith ſhould not ſtand in the wiſedome of men, but in the power of God. We ſpeake of this wiſedome among them that are perfect, not the wiſedome of this world, nor the rulers of this world, which goe to nought, but we ſpeake of the wiſedome of God, which the carnall man doth not underſtand. The naturall man perceiveth nothing of the ſpirit of God. It is fooliſhneſſe with him. But God hath opened it to us by his Spirit; for the Spirit ſearcheth out all things. Wherefore (my deare brethren) trie your ſelves well, whether you have the ſpirit of Chriſt, or no. If you have the Spirit of Chriſt, then are ye dead concerning ſinne; but ye are alive unto God through Ieſus Chriſt. If this ſpirit dwell in you, then will ye increaſe and goe forward in your profeſſion, and not feare what fleſh may doe unto the carkaſſe. Therefore ſtand faſt in the libertie wherewith Chriſt hath made you free, and be not wrapped up againe in the yoke of bondage, that is to ſay, to goe from God by wicked life, or ſerve God another way then hee hath commanded in his holy Word. I truſt you goe forward (my deare brethren and ſiſters) in your promiſe that you made to your Lord God in your Baptiſme: I pray GOD open unto you the knowledge of himſelfe, and lighten the eyes of your underſtanding, that you may know what is the hope of your calling, and what the riches of his glorious inheritance is upon the Saints. For ye are the choſen generation, the kingly Prieſthood, that holy nation, that peculiar people, that ſhould ſhew the vertues of him which hath called you out of darkneſſe into his marvellous light, that is to ſay, to feare God, and to worke righteouſneſſe, and ſo to receive the end of your faith, the ſalvation of your ſoules. This is a true ſaying; If we bee dead with Chriſt, we ſhall live with him alſo. If we be patient, we ſhall alſo reigne with him. If we deny him, he alſo ſhall deny us. If we beleeve not, yet he abideth faithfull, he cannot deny himſelfe. The very God of peace ſanctifie you throughout, and I pray God that your ſpirit, ſoule, and bodies be kept blameleſſe, unto the comming of our Lord Ieſus. Faithfull is he that hath called you, which will alſo doe it. Brethren, pray for us, and greete all the brethren among you.

Newgate.

Give glory to God.

GOd be mercifull to thee (O England) and ſend thee a great number of ſuch faithfull Fathers and godly Paſtors, as Doctor Tailor was, to guide thee, feede thee, and comfort thee after thy great miſeries and troubles, that thou haſt ſuffered under the tyrannous captivitie and rage of the Romane Antichriſt, and ſuch ravening Wolves, as have without all mercy murdered the godly and learned Preachers, and give all men grace to conſider that ſuch horrible plagues and mutations have juſtly fallen upon this Realme for ſinne, and with unfained hearts to turne to GOD, who as he hath ſcourged us with leſſe plagues then we deſerved, ſo he calleth us againe by his undeſerued and unſpeakable mercy unto repentance and amendment of our living. It is doubtleſſe now high time to turne unfainedly to God, and to correct our ſinfull livings, and to remember what Saint John Baptiſt ſaid, Matth.3. The axe is now ſet to the roote of the tree, and every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit ſhall be hewen downe and caſt into the fire. For this may all men aſſure themſelves of, both rich and poore, high and lowe, old and young, that the Almighty, Jealous, and Righteous God, will not ſuffer the ſinfull and wicked life of the ungodly unrepentant that contemne his mercy now proffered unto them, to bee unpuniſhed, but as hee hath from the beginning of the World ſhewed himſelfe a righteous Judge, and puniſher of wickedneſſe, even ſo will hee doe ſtill now. God expulſed our firſt Parents Adam and Eve from Paradiſe, and laid upon them and upon us all theſe miſeries, ſickneſſes, calamities, and death, that we daily feele, and miſerably are oppreſſed withall, Gen.3. God in Noahs dayes drowned the whole world, onely eight perſons were preſerved, Geneſ.8.9. God burnt up Sodome and Gomorrah with fire and brimſtone from Heaven, and deſtroyed thoſe Cities and all the Countrie about, Geneſ.18. God gave over Jeruſalem, called the holy Citie of God, and delivered his owne people the Jewes into perpetuall captivity, Luke 19. If we ſeeke the cauſe of theſe puniſhments, was it not ſinfull living and unrepentant hearts? What ſhould I recite the calamity of other lands, ſeeing Gods judgements have not beene unexecuted upon this Realme of England for ſinfull living? The old Britaines were with Cadwallader their King conſtrained to flee and leave this land, becauſe of Peſtilence and Famine: What miſeries and deſtructions brought the Danes in with them? and what troubles ſuſtained the inhabitants of this Realme afore the ſame were againe driven out? What bloodſhed was here in King William Conquerors dayes? were not the Noble men ſlaine, and Gentlemen brought into bondage? were not their Matrones defiled, and their daughters given to be Kitchin drudges under the Normans proud Ladies? were not their lands, houſes, and poſſeſſions divided by lot unto ſtrangers? Their gold and ſilver wherein they truſted, was the baite that their enemies hunted after: What a plague was the civill war betweene the Kings and Barons? what horrible bloodſhed was in this Realme? till at the laſt Gods mercifull providence ended thoſe miſeries by the happy joyning of the two regall houſes together in the Marriage of King Henry the ſeventh. What miſeries have chanced in our time, we have not onely ſeene and heard, but wee have felt them; and God bee praiſed, had our parts of them. Doubtleſſe this all hath chanced for the ſinnes of the people, as the Prophet Jeremy plainely teacheth, ſaying, Iere.6 Who is a wiſe man that underſtandeth this? And to whom ſhal the word of the Lords mouth come, that he may Preach it forth? why hath the land periſhed, and is burnt like a wilderneſſe, ſo that no man may paſſe through it? And the Lord ſaith, becauſe they have forſaken my Law which I have given them, and they have not heard my voyce, and have not walked in them, and have gone after the vanitie of their owne hearts, and after Baalim the Images of Baal, which they have learned of their fathers. We ſee here plainely the contempt of Gods Word, and of the Preachers of the ſame, walking after their covetous mindes and lewdneſſe of their hearts, and following of their idolatrous inventions, brought the wrath of God upon the people, as witneſſed alſo Jeſus Syrach, ſaying, Eccleſ.10. Becauſe of unrighteous dealing, wrong, blaſphemies, and divers deceits, a Realme ſhall be tranſlated from one people to another. And a little after hee ſaith; The Lord hath brought the Congregation of the wicked to diſhonour, and deſtroyed them unto the end. God hath deſtroyed the ſeats of proud Princes, and ſet up the meeke in their ſtead. God hath withered the roote of proud Nations, and planted the lowly among them. God hath overthrowne the lands of the heathen, and deſtroyed them unto the ground. He hath cauſed them to wither away: He hath brought them to nought, and made the memoriall of them to ceaſe from the earth. But what availeth it to reade ſuch threates of God, if we beleeve them not? Or, if we beleeve them to be Gods threates, and deſpiſe them? Doubtleſſe, the Lord is Righteous, a Jealous God, a puniſher of ſinne, as he himſelfe ſaith, Exod.20. I puniſh the ſinnes of the fathers upon their children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me. God give us grace to remember this, and with ſpeedy and unfained repentance to turne unto God, I ſay (unfained repentance) and not (alas) as we have done in times paſt like Hypocrites to diſſemble with God and man, making Gods holy Word nothing elſe but a cloake to cover our malice, covetouſneſſe, whoredome, pride, exceſſe, gluttony, wrath, envie, hatred, murder, with all other wicked living moſt deteſtable in the ſight of God. If men will well conſider themſelves, they have long enough diſſembled, and heaped the wrath of God heavy enough upon their heads. It is now high time to become a new people, to amend indeede, and to follow the counſell of the holy Ghoſt, ſaying unto us by the Prophet Jeremy, Ierem.3. Why doe mortall men murmure againſt God? let them murmure againſt their owne ſins. Let us ſearch our owne wayes, and let us ſeeke & returne unto the Lord. Let us lift up our hearts & hands unto the Lord in heaven; for we have done wickedly, & provoked the Lord to wrath: and therefore wilt thou not be intreated. Doubtleſſe, the Lord will not be intreated, except men very earneſtly turne unto him. We have felt in our ſelves, and ſeene before our eyes, that when God ſtriketh, no man can be able to abide the heavy ſtroake of his fiſt. He hath hitherto corrected us with mercy, as a father, let us thanke him, and returne unfainedly, ſo will he not extend his wrath as a Judge. His will is, that we ſhould returne and live, and not periſh with the wicked. I live (ſaith the Lord) and will not the death of a ſinner, but that he be converted & live, Ezech.33. Here the godly oath certifieth us of forgiveneſſe, and requireth an unfained converſion unto God, that is, that men acknowledge in heart their wicked living, and bee ſorry that ever they have with wicked living offended againſt that ſo good and loving a father, and truſt to have forgiveneſſe through Chriſts blood, and fully and firmely ſet their hearts to ſerve God, and to walke the wayes of his cõmandements all the dayes of their life. Then ſhall we be true Chriſtians, built upon the corner ſtone Chriſt, not wavering or changing at every puffe of winde, not ſeeking an Epicuriſh life in all voluptuous and vaine vanity, not ravening, extortioning, or with uſurie, oppreſſing the poore and needy, but ſtedfaſt, unmoveable, living in the feare of Gods judgements, and truſt upon his mercy, mortifying our brutiſh and carnall luſts, being mercifull and helpefull to the poore and needy, waiting for the bleſſed time when Chriſt ſhall call us, to bee ready and accepted before him. Our mercifull Lord and good father grant us grace ſo to doe, for the love

Certaine Cautions of the Author to the Reader, of things to be conſidered in reading this ſtory.

Amongſt other eſcapes and overſights in the Edition of this ſtory committed, part of them we leave to thine owne gentle caſtigation, gentle Reader: certain other ſpecialities there be, whereof we thought it good and expedient to give thee warning, as hereafter followeth.

Cautions of the Author to the Reader.

Firſt, when mention is made of Peters being at Rome, and ſuffering at Rome, following certaine Authors; yet foraſmuch as other Writers there bee, and reaſons to prove that hee was not at Rome, I deſire thee therefore that this my affirmation may not prejudice other mens judgements, if any ſee or can ſay further in that matter.

Touching the ſtory of the Turkes, whereas I in following our Chriſtian Authors writing of the Turkes, have noted Solimannus to bee the 12. Turke after Ottomannus, as they doe all record: I have found ſince by the computation of the Turkes ſet forth in the table of their owne deſcent, the ſaid Solimannus to be the ſixth Emperour of the Turkes; and this Solimannus his ſon, which now reigneth, to be but the twelfth. Which I thought here to ſignifie unto thee, becauſe of their owne Turkiſh propheſie noted before, leſt in conſtruing of that prophecie, being in the ſame place expounded, thou be deceived.

Item, where Maſter George Blag is named to be one of the privie Chamber; here is to be noted alſo, that although hee were not admitted as one of the privie Chamber, yet his ordinarie reſort thither, and to the Kings preſence there was ſuch, as although hee were not one of them, yet was he ſo commonly taken.

Item, in the ſtorie of the Duke of Somerſet, where it is ſaid, that at the returne of the Earle of Warwicke out of Norfolke, there was a conſultation amongſt the Lords aſſembling themſelves together in the houſe of M. Yorke, &c. againſt the Duke of Somerſet; here is to be noted, that the comming of the Lords to the ſaid houſe of M. Yorke was not immediately upon the Duke of Northumberlands returne, but firſt he went to Warwicke, and from thence after a ſpace came to the houſe aforeſaid.

Item, here is alſo to be noted touching the ſaid Duke of Somerſet, that albeit at his death relation is made of a ſudden falling of the people, as was at the taking of Chriſt, this is not to be expounded, as though I compared in any part the Duke of Somerſet with Chriſt.

And though I doe ſomething more attribute to the commendation of the ſaid Duke of Somerſet, which dyed ſo conſtantly in his religion, yet I deſire thee (gentle Reader) ſo to take it, not that I did ever meane to derogate or impaire the martiall praiſe or facts of other men, which alſo are to bee commended in ſuch things where they well deſerved.

Item, touching the ſame Duke of Somerſet, where the ſtory ſaith, he was attainted, read indited

Item, where mention is made of one Nicholas Underwood to bee the betraier of the Duke of Suffolke; joyne with the ſaid Underwood alſo Nicholas Laurence, alias Nicholas Ethell, Keeper of Aſteley Parke, who taking upon him and promiſing to keep the Duke for two or three dayes, untill he might finde ſome meanes to eſcape, conveighed him into an hollow tree, and after moſt traiterouſly bewraied him.

This Nicholas Underwood dwelleth now at Coton by Nunne Eaton, and Laurence in Nunne Eaton.

Item, in the ſtorie of ſir Thomas Wyat there is alſo to be corrected, that where the ſtorie ſaith that he was taken by ſir Clement Parſon, which was not ſo, and he no ſuch Knight, amend it thus: that he firſt came to Clarentius, being ſent unto him, and afterward yeelded him to ſir Moris Bartley. Briefly and in generall, beſides theſe caſtigations above noted, if thou finde any other committed in the printing hereof, gently I deſire thee (gentle Reader) to beſtow a little pains with thine owne hand to amend them.

Notes omitted of them that were burnt at Briſtow.

William Sarton, Martyr, burnt at Briſtow.

The eighth day of Auguſt was brought William Sarton, Weaver of Briſtow, before one Dalby Chancellor of Briſtow aforeſaid, and by him committed to priſon, and alſo condemned, for holding that the ſacrament was a ſigne of an holy thing; alſo he denied, that the fleſh and bloud of Chriſt is there after their words of conſecration: he was burned the eighteenth of September, Anno 1556, and as hee went to the fire, he ſung Pſalmes. The Sheriffe, John Griffith, had prepared greene wood to burne him; but one Maſter John Pikes, pitying the man, cauſed divers to goe with him to Ridland, halfe a mile off, who brought good ſtore of helme ſheaves, which indeed made good diſpatch with little paine, in compariſon to that he ſhould have ſuffered with the greene wood. In the meane ſpace, whileſt they went for the ſheaves, the ſaid Sarton made many good exhortatious to the people, and after died conſtantly and patiently with great joyfulneſſe.

A note of Preſts wife of Exceter,

Preſts wife of Exceter, Martyr.

In Cornwall not farre from Lanceſton, within the Dioceſſe of Exceter, in Queene Maries dayes, dwelled a poore man, whoſe name was Preſt, his wife being an honeſt woman, very ſimple, but of good zeale and upright life, being taught by GOD in hearing of his Word (albeit it was in thoſe dayes very ſeldome preached any where) and feeling a ſweete taſte thereof, framed her life anew after the rule of the ſame. And baniſhed quite from her all the Popiſh dregs of ſuperſtition and hypocriſie, and gave her ſelfe wholly to prayer, and invocating the name of God, both for the afflicted Church of Chriſt in thoſe daies very dangerouſly toſt and turmoiled; as alſo for her owne inward contentation and ſpirituall conſolation, which ſhe not a little felt to her unſpeakable joy and incomparable comfort. And when ſome, who before had knowne her, ſaw that marvellous change in her, and (as the cruell Serpent) envied her felicitie, they went upon the ſame immediately, and accuſed her to certaine Juſtices of the Shire, being extreme enemies to the truth, and very perſecutors of the ſame; who taking the matter in hand, as very glad of ſuch occaſion, ſent for her to the place where ſhee was, and began at the ſecond, if not at the firſt daſh, to demand her beliefe in their Popiſh ſacrament of the altar.

The good poore woman, who had learned not to be aſhamed to confeſſe her Maſter Chriſt before men.

men, and to render account of her faith when it was aſked, told freely and frankly her opinion therein, and hid backe nothing that eyther ſhe thought might profit them, if they had any grace to receive it, or elſe might ſound to Gods glory and praiſe, though it were never ſo much by them threatned and rebuked. Whereupon ſhee was forthwith committed to the Goale of Lanceſton, where ſhee remained a quarter of a yeere, or thereabouts, and afterwards was diſpatched of that vile and filthy priſon, and delivered over to the hands of two champions of the Popes, the one called Doctor Raynolds, Deane of Exceter, and the other named Maſter Blaxton, Treaſurer of the ſame Church, men ſurely fervent hote in the furtherance of the Romiſh affaires, and in withſtanding the truth of the pure Evangelicall Goſpel. So the time that this good poore woman was under their hands, ſhe had many ſore conflicts by them. And the ſaid Blaxton having a Concubine, which ſundry times reſorted to him with other of his Goſſips, alwayes when they came, this ſaid good woman was called forth to his houſe, and there to make his Minion with the reſt of his company ſome mirth, hee would examine her, with ſuch mocking maner, in deriding the truth, that it would have vexed any Chriſtian ſoule to have ſeene it. Then when hee had long uſed his fooliſhneſſe in this ſort, and had ſported himſelfe enough in deriding this Chriſtian Martyr; in the end hee ſent her to priſon againe, and there kept her very miſerably, ſaving ſometimes he would ſend for her, when his foreſaid gueſt came to him, to uſe with her his accuſtomed folly aforeſaid. But in fine, the vile wretches (after many combates, and ſcoffing perſwaſions) when they had played the part of a Cat with a Mouſe, at length they condemned her, and delivered her over to the ſecular power, who within ſhort ſpace after moſt cruelly brought her forth to the place where ſhe ſhould ſuffer, and there in great contempt of the truth (which ſhee moſt conſtantly confeſſed) they conſumed her carkaſſe immediately with fire into aſhes; which ſhe very patiently ſuffered, and moſt joyfully received, yeelding her ſoule and life unto the Lord, and her body to the tormentors; for the which the Lords name therefore be prayſed, Amen.

The martyrdome of one Snel, burned about Richmond in Queene Maries time, omitted in this Hiſtory.

The Martyrdome of one Snel by Richmond.

AT Bedaile a Market Towne in Yorkſhire, were two men in the later dayes of Queene Mary, the one named John Snel, and the other Richard Snel. Who being ſuſpected for religion, were ſent unto Richmond, where Doctor Dakins had commiſſion from the Biſhop of Cheſter to have the examination of them.

This Doctor Dakins many times conferred with them, ſometimes threatning fire and fagot if they would not recant, and ſometimes flattering them with faire fables if they would returne into the holy Catholike Church. But they ſtood conſtantly to the ſure Rocke Jeſus Chriſt, in whom they put their whole truſt and confidence, whileſt at laſt being ſo ſore impriſoned, that their toes rotted off, and the one of them could not goe without crouches, they brought them to the Church by compulſion, where the one of them heard their abominable Maſſe, having a certaine ſumme of money given him by the benevolence of the people, and ſo departed thence: but the firſt newes that was heard of him within 3. or 4. dayes, was, that he had drowned himſelfe in a river running by Richmond, called Swaile.

Gods puniſhment upon the Doctor that condemned Snel.

Immediately after, Doctor Dakins giving ſentence that the other ſhould bee burnt, came home to his houſe, and never joyed after, but died. The Commiſſary of Richmond, named Pillings, preached at his burning, exhorting him to returne to the Church; but his labour was in vaine, the conſtant Martyr ſtanding ſtrongly to the faith which he profeſſed.

Then being brought to the ſtake, whereunto he was tied by a girdle of iron, there was given unto him Gunpowder, and a little ſtrawe was laid under his feete, and ſet round about with ſmall wood and tarre barrels; the fire was put in the ſtrawe, which by and by flaming about his head, he cried thrice together; Chriſt helpe me: Inſomuch that one Robert Atkinſon being preſent, ſaid; Hold faſt there, and we will all pray for thee. Thus this bleſſed Martyr ended his life.

A ſtory of one Laremouth, omitted in the bodie of this ſtory.

The marvellous deliverance of one Laremouth.

ALbeit I am loth to inſert any thing in this Booke which may ſeeme incredible or ſtrange to ordinary working for quarrelling adverſaries, which doe nothing but ſpie what they may cavill: yet forſomuch as beſides other reporters, the perſon is yet alive, called Thorne, a godly Miniſter, which heard it of the mouth of the party himſelfe, I thought therefore firſt for the incredible ſtrangeneſſe thereof, neither to place this ſtory in the body of theſe Acts and Monuments, and yet in ſome out-corner of the Booke not utterly to paſſe it untouched, for the Reader to conſider it, and to credit it as hee ſeeth cauſe. The ſtory is this: There was one Laremouth, otherwiſe called Williamſon, Chaplaine to Lady Anne of Cleve, a Scottiſhman, to whom being in priſon in Queen Maries daies, it was ſaid, as he thought, thus ſounding in his eares; Ariſe, and goe thy wayes. Whereunto when hee gave no great heede at the firſt, the ſecond time it was ſaid to him againe in the ſame words. Upon this, as he fell to his prayers, it was ſaid the third time likewiſe to him; Ariſe, and goe thy way, which was about halfe an houre after. So he ariſing upon the ſame, immediately a peece of the priſon wall fell downe, and as the Officers came in at the outward gate of the Caſtle or Priſon, he leaping over the ditch eſcaped, and in the way meeting a certaine Begger, changed his coate with him, and comming to the Sea ſhore, where he found a veſſell ready to goe over, was taken in, and eſcaped the ſearch, which was ſtraitely laid for him in all the countrey over.

A little ſhort letter of William Hunter ſent out of priſon to his Mother a little before his Martyrdome, to be referred and placed in his Story.

A letter of Wil. Hunter to his mother a little before his burning.

MOſt reverend and loving Mother, after my moſt humble wiſe I have me moſt heartily commended unto you, deſiring you to pray unto God moſt heartily for me, that I may have his bleſſing and yours, the which I eſteeme more worth unto me, then any worldly treaſure. In this preſent letter you ſhall underſtand the cauſe of my writing unto you at this time, that I am in good health and proſperity, as ever I was in this preſent life. Wherefore I render thankes unto Almighty God for it, who alone is moſt worthy of all praiſe, truſting in GOD you be in health alſo. Furthermore, I certifie you wherefore my father continueth here, to the intent to heare ſome godly and joyfull tidings, both for ſoule and body, which I truſt it ſhall be to your ſingular comfort and conſolation, and to the great rejoycing of all other of my friends. Therefore I deſire you (gentle mother) to admoniſh my brother unto a godly life, with diligent attendance, and to pray for me, conſidering his bound duetie, that God may by your faithfull prayer aide and ſtrengthen mée in this my proſperous journy and courſe which I run, truſting to obtaine a crowne of everlaſting life, which doth ever endure.

No more unto you at this time, but God preſerve you unto everlaſting life.
So be it.

IT is given to the Quéenes Majeſty to underſtand, that certaine of her ſubjects by their evill diſpoſitions doe ſowe and ſpread abroad divers ſeditions, to the derogation and diſhonour, firſt of Almighty God, in the ſtate of religion ſtabliſhed by the lawes of this Realme, and alſo to the diſhonour of her Highneſſe in diſproving her lawfull right of ſupremacie amongſt her ſubjects. And this that they do, is not done as in ſecrecie or by ſtealth, but openly avouched, and in all companies diſputed on. And thus by their bold attempts they ſéeme not to obey or regard the authority of lawes, nor the quiet of her ſubjects. As for example, by bringing in and ſpreading abroad divers lewd libels, and ſeditious bookes from beyond the ſeas, and in ſuch boldneſſe, that they doe commend thoſe writers in their ſeditious bookes, containing manifeſt matter againſt the eſtate eſtabliſhed. Which boldneſſe of men, ſo univerſally and every where ſéen and heard, cannot be thought to be done but by the comfort and aide, or at the leſt way winkt at by them whom the Quéenes Highneſſe hath placed in authority to repreſſe theſe inſolencies. And the Quéenes Highneſſe cannot more juſtly charge any for this diſorder, than ſuch who be in commiſſions choſen to repreſſe theſe diſorders. If it bée anſwered mée, that they cannot ſée ſuch open boldneſſe and factious diſorders, I muſt ſay that they have no eyes to ſée; and if they heare not of ſuch contemptuous talke and ſpéech, I may ſay that they have no eares. I would have thoſe men judge what will come of theſe unbridled ſpéeches in the end, if reformations be not had thereof. What commeth of factions and ſeditions, wée have béen taught of late yéeres, and what the fruits thereof bée, which I beſéech God long to defend us from. If ſuch diſorders be not redreſſed by law, then muſt force and violence reforme. Which when they take place, may fortune fall as ſoone on them that ſéem to have leaſt conſideration in this matter. If force and violence prevaile, then ye know that law is put to ſilence, and cannot be executed, which ſhould only maintaine good order. If it be replyed againſt me, that to the ſuppreſſing of theſe open talkes there is no law, which by ſpeciall letter can charge any man offender; I muſt ſay, that whatſoever the letter of the law be, the meaning of the law was and is cleane contrary to the liberty of theſe doings. If it be ſaid, that no man can be charged by the law, except it can bee proved againſt him, that his ſpéech and deeds be done maliciouſly; what ye call malice I cannot tell. But if the bringing in of theſe ſeditious bookes make mens mindes to be at variance one with another, diſtraction of mindes maketh ſeditions, ſeditions bring in tumults, tumults worke inſurrections and rebellion, inſurrections make depopulations and deſolations, and bring in utter ruine and deſtruction of mens bodies, goods, and lands: And if any ſowe the roote whereof theſe men come, and yet it can be ſaid that he hath no malice, or that he doth not maliciouſly labour to deſtroy both publike and private wealth, I cannot tell what act may be thought to be done maliciouſly. And further, if it be ſaid to me, that the man which ſhould be charged with offence, muſt be proved to have done his act adviſedly: To that I anſwer. If any bring in thoſe bookes, diſtribute them to others, commend and defend them, and yet cannot be charged to have done adviſedly, I have no ſkill of their adviſedneſſe. If it be ſaid, that the law entreateth of ſuch acts as be directly derogatorie and of none other, what is direct overthwarting the law, when the contrary thereof is plainely treated, holden, and defended, and the truth by arguments condemned? It may be ſaid againe, that the world doth not now like extremitie in lawes penall, and calleth them bloudie lawes. As for extreme and bloudy lawes, I have never liked of them; But where the execution of ſuch lawes toucheth halfe a dozen offenders, and the not execution may bring in danger halfe a hundred, I thinke this law nor the execution thereof may juſtly bée called extreme and bloudy. In ſuch like compariſon I may utter my meaning, as to make a difference betwéen whipping and hanging. Indéede, though whipping may be thought extreme, yet if by whipping a man may eſcape hanging, in this reſpect, not whipping bringeth in this bloudineſſe and extremitie, and not the execution of the law; and better it were, a man to be twice whipped, then once hanged: The paines doe differ, but wiſe men will ſoone conſider the diverſitie. The truth is, to ſuffer diſobedient ſubjects to take boldneſſe againſt the lawes of God and their Prince, to wink at the obſtinate mindes of ſuch as be unbridled in their affections; to maintaine a foraine power of the Biſhop of Rome, directly againſt the Princes prerogative ſtabliſhed by lawes, is not this to hatch diſſention, and to cheriſh ſedition? To extoll the writings of ſuch, who by all their wits deviſe to ſupplant the Princes lawfull authoritie? If theſe doings bee not meanes to the diſturbance and utter ruine of this Realme, I know not what is good governance. If theſe be not the ſparkes of rebellion, what be they? Thus much having ſpoken to your wiſedomes, I doubt not of your aſſenting with me, the rather alſo becauſe I utter them unto you as from the Quéenes Majeſty by commandement, who doth require of us all a more diligence in execution of lawes, than is ſpied commonly abroad: Whereby we ſhall doe our duties to almightie God the better, declare our allegiance to our Soveraigne, regard the maieſtie of the lawes, love the quiet of our country, and procure the ſafetie of our ſelves.

God ſave the Queene.

And here I truſt, we are now come to an end of all our Engliſh Martyrs which hitherto have béen burnt for the veritie of the Goſpel, if we adde beſides to the ſame a godly countriman of ours, one named Richard Atkins an Hartfordſhire man, who of late about two yéeres paſt in the reigne of this our gracious Quéene, An. 1581. moſt miſerably was tormented at Babylon, that is, in the Citie of Rome. The cauſe and manner of whoſe ſuffering and martyrdome here enſueth, taken out of a certaine late printed ſtorie, and teſtified by ſuch as were preſent witneſſes and beholders of the ſame moſt tragicall execution. The purport of which ſtorie in words, as it is put downe by the ſayd reporter, here under followeth.

A true report of the horrible and mercileſſe martyrdome of one Richard Atkins, an Engliſhman, with extreme torments, and moſt cruell rage of furious tyrants, perſecutors, put to death at Rome.

ABout the moneth of July, Anno 1581. one Richard Atkins borne in Hartfordſhire, an Engliſh man, came to Rome, and having found the Engliſh Colledge, knocked at the doore. To whom divers of the Students there came out, to welcome him, underſtanding that hee was an Engliſh man. Among other talke had with him, they willed him to goe to the Hoſpitall, and there to receive his meate and lodging, according as the order was appointed: whereunto he anſwered, I come not (my Countrimen) to any ſuch intent, as you judge, but I come lovingly to rebuke the great miſorder of your lives, which I grieue to heare, and pitie to behold: I come likewiſe to let your proud Antichriſt underſtand, that hee doth offend the heavenly Maieſty, robbe God of his honour, and poyſoneth the whole world with his abominable blaſphemies, making them doe homage to ſtockes and ſtones, and that filthy ſacrament, which is nothing elſe but a fooliſh Idoll. When they heard theſe words, one Hugh Griffin, a Welchman, and a Student in the Colledge, cauſed him to bee put in the Inquiſition; where, how they examined him, and how he anſwered them, I know not, but after certaine dayes hee was ſet at libertie againe. And one day going in the ſtréete, he met a Prieſt carrying the ſacrament; which offending his conſcience, to ſée the people ſo crouch and bow downe to it, he caught at it to have throwne it downe, but miſſing of his purpoſe, and it being iudged by the people, that he did catch at the holineſſe that (they ſay) commeth from the ſacrament, upon méere devotion, he was let paſſe, and nothing ſaid to him: few dayes after he came to St. Peters Church, where divers Gentlemen and other were hearing Maſſe, and the Prieſt at the elevation; he uſing no reverence, ſtepped among the people to the altar, and threw downe the Chalice with the wine, ſtriving likewiſe to have pulled the cake out of the Prieſts hands; for which divers roſe up and beate him with their fiſts, and one drew his rapier, & would have ſlaine him: ſo that in briefe he was carried to priſon, where he was examined, wherefore he had committed ſuch a haynous offence; whereunto he anſwered, that he came purpoſely for that intent, to rebuke the Popes wickedneſſe and their Idolatrie. Upon this hee was condemned to be burned; which ſentence (he ſayd) hée was right willing to ſuffer, and the rather, becauſe the ſumme of his offence pertained to the glory of God. During the time hée remained in priſon, ſundrie Engliſh men came unto him, willing him to be ſorrie for that hée had done, and to recant from his damnable opinion; but all the meanes they uſed were in vaine, he confuted their dealings by divers places of Scripture, and willed them to bée ſorrie for their wickedneſſe, while God did permit them time, elſe they were in danger of everlaſting damnation; theſe words made the Engliſh men depart: for they could not abide to heare them. Within a while after, he was ſet upon an Aſſe without any ſaddle, he being from the middle upward naked, having ſome Engliſh Prieſts with him to talke with him, but he regarded them not, but ſpake to the people in ſo góod a language as he could, and told them they were in a wrong way, and therefore willed them for Chriſts ſake, to have regard to the ſaving of their ſoules. All the way as he went, there were foure that did nothing elſe but thruſt at his body with burning Torches, whereat he never moved, nor ſhrunke one jot, but with a chéerefull countenance laboured to perſwade the people, often bending his bodie to méete the Torches, as they were thruſt at him, and would take them in his owne hand, and hold them burning ſtill upon his body, whereat the people not a little wondred. Thus he continued almoſt the ſpace of halfe a mile, till he came before St. Peters, where the place of execution was. When he was come to the place of execution, there they had made a device, not to make the fire about him, but to burne his legges firſt, which they did, he not diſmaying any whit, but ſuffered all marvellous chéerefully; which moved the people to ſuch a quandary as was not in Rome many a day. Then they offered him a croſſe, and willed him to imbrace it, in token that he died a Chriſtian; but he put it away with his hand, telling them that they were evill men to trouble him with ſuch paltrie, when he was preparing himſelf to God, whom he beheld in majeſty and mercy, ready to receive him into the eternall reſt. They ſéeing him in this minde, departed, ſaying; Let us goe and leave him to the Divell, whom hée ſerves. Thus ended this faithfull Souldier and Martyr of Chriſt, who is, no doubt, in glory with his Maſter: whereunto GOD grant us all to come, Amen.

This is faithfully avouched by John Yong, who was at that time, and a góod while after in Rome, in ſervice with Maſter Doctor Morton; who ſéeing the martyrdome of this man, when he came home to his houſe, in preſence of Maſter Smith his ſon, M. Créed, and the ſaid John Yong, ſpake as followeth. Surely this fellow was marvellous obſtinate, hée nothing regarded the góod counſell which was uſed to him, nor ſhrunke all the way when the Torches were thruſt at his naked body. Beſide, in the place of execution he did not faint nor cry one jot in the fire, albeit they tormented him very cruelly, and burned him by degrées, as his legges firſt to put him to the greater paine; yet all this he did but ſmile at. Doubtleſſe, but that the Word of God cannot be but true, elſe we might judge this fellow to bée of God; for who could have ſuffered ſo much pains as hee did? but truely I beléeve the Divell was in him.

The curſed life and bloudy end of Doctor Story, a cruell perſecutor of Chriſt in his members.

I Had thought (Chriſtian Reader) here to have made an end, and to have concluded the volume of this Booke, had not the remembrance of Doctor Story, an Arch-enemy to Chriſts Goſpel, and a bloody perſecutor of Gods people, come into my minde. The diſcourſe of whoſe life and doings, I thought good here briefely to lay open to the view of the world, as followeth. This Doctor Story being an Engliſh man by birth, and from his infancy not onely nuſled in Papiſtry, but alſo even as it were by nature earneſtly affected to the ſame, and growing ſomewhat to riper yeeres, in the dayes of Queene Mary became a bloody Tyrant, and cruell perſecutor of Chriſt in his members (as all the ſtories in this booke almoſt doe declare.) Thus he raging all the reigne of the foreſaid Queene Mary againſt the infallible truth of Chriſts Goſpel, and the true profeſſors thereof, never ceaſed till he had conſumed to aſhes two or three hundred bleſſed Martyrs, who willingly gave their lives for the teſtimony of his trueth; and thinking their puniſhment in the fire not cruell enough, hee went about to invent new torments for the holy Martyrs of Chriſt, ſuch was his hatred to the trueth of Chriſts Goſpel: but in the end the Lord God looking upon the affliction and cruell blood ſhedding of his Servants, tooke away Queene Mary the great Pillar of Papiſtry. After whom ſucceeded Lady Elizabeth now Queene of England, who ſtaying the bloody ſword of perſecution from raging any further, cauſed the ſame Doctor Story to be apprehended, and committed to ward, with many other his complices, ſworne enemies to Chriſts glorious Goſpel. The ſaid Story having beene a while detained in priſon, at the laſt, by what meanes I know not, brake forth of hold, and conveighed himſelfe over the Seas, where hee continued a moſt bloody perſecutor, ſtill raging againſt Gods Saints with fire and ſword. Inſomuch as he growing to be familiar and right deare to Duke Dalva in Antwerpe, received a ſpeciall Commiſſion from him to ſearch the ſhips for goods forfeited, and for Engliſh Bookes, and ſuch like.

Story apprehended.

Story conveighed himſelfe over the ſeas, where he continued a bloody perſecutor.

Story obtained a commiſſion to ſearch for Engliſh bookes.

And in this favour and authority he continued there for a ſpace, by the which meanes hee did much hurt, and brought many a good man and woman to trouble and extreme perill of life through his blood-thirſty cruelty: but at the laſt the Lord (when the meaſure of his iniquity was full) proceeded in judgement againſt him, and cut him off from the face of the earth, according to the prayers of many a good man; which came to paſſe in order as followeth. It being certainely knowne (for the bruit thereof was gone forth into all lands) that hee not onely intended the ſubverſion and overthrow of his native countrey of England, by bringing in forraine Hoſtility, if by any meanes he might compaſſe it; but alſo dayly and hourely murthered Gods people, there was this platforme laid (by Gods providence no doubt) that one Maſter Parker a Merchant ſhould ſaile unto Antwerpe, and by ſome meanes conveigh Story into England.

Story intendeth the overthrow of England.

A platforme laid to apprehend Story.

This Parker arriving at Antwerpe, ſuborned certaine to repaire to Doctor Story, and to ſignifie unto him, that there was an Engliſh Ship come, fraught with Merchandize, and that if he would make ſearch thereof himſelfe, hee ſhould finde ſtore of Engliſh bookes, and other things for his purpoſe. Story hearing this, and ſuſpecting nothing, made haſte towards the Ship, thinking to make the ſame his prey; and comming aboorde, ſearched for Engliſh Hereticall bookes (as he called them) and going downe under the Hatches, becauſe he would be ſure to have their blood if he could, they clapped downe the Hatches, hoiſed up their Sailes, having (as God would) a good gale, and ſailed away into England; where they arriving preſented this bloody Butcher, and Traiterous Rebell Story, to the no little rejoycing of many an Engliſh heart. He being now committed to Priſon, continued there a good ſpace: during all which time he was laboured and ſolicited dayly by wiſe and learned fathers, to recant his divelliſh and erroneous opinions, to conforme himſelfe to the trueth, and to acknowledge the Queenes Majeſties Supremacy. All which he utterly denied to the death, ſaying, that he was ſworne ſubject to the King of Spaine, and was no ſubject to the Queene of England, nor ſhe his Soveraigne Queene; and therefore (as he well deſerved) he was condemned (as a traitor to God, the Queens Majeſty, and the Realme) to be drawne, hanged, and quartered; which was performed accordingly, he being laid upon an hurdle, and drawne from the Tower along the ſtreetes to Tiborne, where he being hanged till he was halfe dead, was cut downe and ſtripped; and (which is not to be forgot) when the executioner had cut off his privie members, he ruſhing up upon a ſudden, gave him a blow upon the eare, to the great wonder of all that ſtood by: and thus ended this bloody Nemrod his wretched life, whoſe judgement I leave to the Lord.

Story ſearched the Engliſh Ships for bookes, and is apprehended, and brought into England.

Story a traitor hanged, drawne, and quartered.

A note of Ralph Lurdane, perſecutor of George Eagles.

IN the hiſtory of George Eagles, alias Trudge-over-the-world, mention is made of his apprehenſion in a corne field, where, by the benefit of the height of the corne, and breadth of the field, he had eſcaped, had not one of his perſecutors with more malicious craft climbed a high tree to view over the place, and ſo deſcried him. This perſecutor named Ralph Lurdane (as we have ſince learned) a lewd fellow of life for theft and whoredome, was, within few yeeres after he had apprehended the foreſaid George Eagles for gaine of money, attached of fellony for ſtealing horſe, condemned, and hanged in the ſame place and towne of Chelmeſford, where George Eagles before ſuffered martyrdome.

A briefe note concerning the horrible Maſſacre in France, Anno 1572.

HEre, before the cloſing up of this booke, in no caſe would be unremembred the tragicall and furious Maſſacre in France, wherein were murthered ſo many hundreds and thouſands of Gods good Martyrs. But becauſe the true narration of this lamentable ſtory is ſet forth in Engliſh at large, in a booke by it ſelfe, and extant in print already, it ſhall the leſſe neede now to diſcourſe that matter with any new repetition; onely a briefe touch of ſummarie notes for remembrance may ſuffice. And firſt for brevitie ſake to overpaſſe the bloudy butchery of the Romiſh Catholikes in Orange againſt the Proteſtants, moſt fiercely and unawares breaking into their houſes, and there, without mercy, killing man, woman, and childe; of whom ſome being ſpoyled and naked, they threw out of their lofts into the ſtreetes; ſome they ſmothered in their houſes with ſmoake, with ſword and weapon, ſparing none, the carkaſes of ſome they threw to dogges, which was An. 1570. in the reigne of Charles 9. Likewiſe to paſſe over the cruell ſlaughter at Roane, where the Proteſtants being at a Sermon without the city wals upon the Kings edict, the Catholikes in fury ranne upon them comming home, and ſlew of them above 40. at leaſt, many moe they wounded. This example at Roane ſtirred up the Papiſts in Diepe to practiſe the like rage alſo againſt the Chriſtians there returning from the Sermon; whoſe ſlaughter had beene the greater, had they not more wiſely before beene provided of weapon, for their owne defence at neede. All which happened about the ſame yeare aforeſaid, Anno 1570. But theſe with ſuch like I briefly overſlip, to enter now into the matter aboue promiſed, that is, briefly to entreat of the horrible and moſt barbarous maſſacre wrought in Paris, ſuch as I ſuppoſe was never heard of before in any civill diſſenſion amongſt the very Heathen. In few words to touch the ſubſtance of the matter.

The horrible maſſacre at Paris.

The Kings diſſembled pretence.

The names of all the favourers of the Admirall deſcribed.

A bloudy marriage betweene the Kings ſiſter and Prince of Navarre.

After long troubles in France, the Catholike ſide, foreſeeing no good to bee done againſt the Proteſtants by open force, beganne to deviſe how by craftie meanes to entrap them, And that by two manner of wayes: The one by pretending a power to bee ſent into the lower countrey, whereof the Admirall to bee the Captaine; not that the King ſo meant indeede, but onely to underſtand thereby what power and force the Admirall had under him, who they were, and what were their names. The ſecond was by a certain marriage ſuborned, betweene the Prince of Navarre, and the Kings ſiſter. To this pretenſed marriage, it was deviſed that all the chiefeſt Proteſtants of France ſhould be invited, and meete in Paris. Among whom firſt they beganne with the Queene of Navarre, mother to the Prince, that ſhould marry the Kings ſiſter, attempting by all meanes poſſible to obtaine her conſent thereunto. She being then at Rochell, and allured by many faire words to repaire unto the King, conſented at length to come, and was received at Paris; where ſhee after much adoe, at length being wonne to the Kings mind, and providing for the marriage, ſhortly upon the ſame fell ſicke, and within five dayes departed, not without ſuſpition, as ſome ſaid, of poyſon. But her body being opened, no ſigne of poyſon could there be found, ſave only that a certaine Pothecarie made his brag, that he had killed the Queene by certaine venemous odours and ſmels by him confected.

Admirall wounded with a piſtolet ſhot out of a window.

Admirall ſlain in his bed, and throwen out of the window.

After this notwithſtanding the marriage ſtill going forward, the Admirall, Prince of Navarre, Condee, with divers other chiefe States of the Proteſtants, induced by the Kings letters and many faire promiſes, at laſt were brought to Paris. Where with great ſolemnity they were received, but eſpecially the Admirall. To make the matter ſhort: The day of the marriage came, which was the eighteenth of Auguſt. Anno 1572. Which marriage being celebrate and ſolemnized by the Cardinall of Borbone, upon an high ſtage ſet up of purpoſe without the Church walls, the Prince of Navarre and Condee came downe, waiting for the Kings ſiſter being then at Maſſe. This done, they reſorted all together to the Biſhops Palace to dinner. At evening they were had to a Palace in the middle of Paris to ſupper. Not long after this, being the two and twentieth of Auguſt, the Admirall comming from the Councell Table, by the way was ſtrucken with a Piſtolet, charged with three Pellets, in both his armes. Hee being thus wounded, and yet ſtill remaining in Paris, although the Vidam gave him counſel to flee away, it ſo fell out that certaine ſouldiers were appointed in divers places of the city to bee readie at a watchword at the commandement of the Prince. Upon which watchword given, they burſt out to the ſlaughter of the Proteſtants, firſt beginning with the Admirall himſelfe, who being wounded with many ſore wounds, was caſt out of the window into the ſtreet, where his head being firſt ſtriken off, and embalmed with ſpices to bee ſent to the Pope, the ſavage people raging againſt him, cut off his armes and privie members, and ſo drawing him three dayes thorow the ſtreetes of Paris, they dragged him unto the place of execution out of the Citie, and there hanged him up by his heeles to the greater ſhew and ſcorne of him.

10 Thouſand ſlaine in three dayes.

Ex hiſtoria Ric. Dinothi, lib. 5

After the Martyrdome of this good man, the armed Souldiers with rage and violence ranne upon all other of the ſame profeſſion, ſlaying and killing all the Proteſtants they knew or could finde within the City gates incloſed. This bloody ſlaughter continued the ſpace of many dayes, but eſpecially the greateſt ſlaughter was in the three firſt dayes, in which were numbred to be ſlaine, as the ſtory writeth, above ten thouſand, men, women, old and young, of all ſorts and conditions. The bodies of the dead were carried in carts to be throwne in the river: ſo that not onely the river was all ſtained therewith, but alſo whole ſtreams in certaine places of the Citie did runne with gore blood of the ſlaine bodies. So great was the outrage of that Heatheniſh Perſecution, that not only the Proteſtants, but alſo certaine, whom they thought indifferent Papiſts, they put to the ſword in ſtead of Proteſtants. In the number of them that were ſlaine of the more learned ſort, was Petrus Ramus, alſo Lambinus, another notorious learned man; Plateanus, Lomenius, Chapeſius, with others.

Petrus Ramus Lambinus, with other, ſlaine.

Commentarii de ſtatu Galliæ part. 3.

And not onely within the walls of Paris this uprore was contained, but it extended further into other Cities and quarters of the Realme, eſpecially Lyons, Orleans, Tholous, and Roane. In which cities it is almoſt incredible, nor ſcarce ever heard of in any nation, what cruelty was ſhewed, what numbers of good men were deſtroyed; inſomuch that within the ſpace of one moneth, thirtie thouſand at leaſt of religious Proteſtants are numbred to be ſlaine, as is credibly reported and ſtoried in the Commentaries of them which teſtifie purpoſly of the matter.

The ſpirit and charity of the Pope to be noted.

28. of Auguſt.

S. Bartholomew, a bloudy day.

Furthermore here is to be noted, that when the Pope firſt heard of this bloudy ſtirre, he with his Cardinalls made ſuch joy at Rome, with their proceſſion, with their gunſhot, and ſinging of Te Deum, that in honour of that feſtivall act, a jubile was commanded by the Pope with great indulgence, and much ſolemnity. Whereby thou haſt here to diſcerne and judge, with what ſpirit and charity theſe Catholikes are moved to maintaine their Religion, which otherwiſe would fall to the ground without all hope of recovery. Likewiſe in France no leſſe rejoycing there was upon the 28. day of the ſaid moneth, the King commanding publike proceſſions thorow the whole Citie to be made, with bonefires, ringing, and ſinging; where the King himſelfe, with the Queene his mother, and his whole Court reſorting together to the Church, gave thankes and laud to God, for that ſo worthy victory atchieved upon S. Bartholomewes day againſt the Proteſtants, whom they thought to be utterly overthrowne and vanquiſhed in all the realme for ever.

The great diſtreſſe of the Proteſtants in France.

And in very deede to mans thinking it might appeare no leſſe after ſuch a great deſtruction of the Proteſtants, having loſt ſo many worthy and Noble Captaines as then were cut off, whereupon many, for feare revoking their religion, returned to the Pope, divers fled out of the Realme, ſuch as would not turne, keeping themſelves ſecret, durſt not be knowne nor ſeene, ſo that it was paſt all hope of man, that the Goſpel ſhould ever have any more place in France: but ſuch is the admirable working of the Lord, where mans helpe and hope moſt faileth, there he moſt ſheweth his ſtrength and helpeth, as here is to bee ſeene and noted. For whereas the little ſmall remnant of the Goſpel ſide, being now brought to utter deſperation, were now ready to give over unto the King, and many were gone already againſt conſcience, yeelding to time, yet the Lord of his goodneſſe ſo wrought, that many were ſtaied and reclaimed againe through the occaſion firſt of them in Rochell: Who hearing of the cruell Maſſacre in Paris, and ſlaughter at Tholous, moſt conſtantly with valiant hearts (the Lord ſo working) thought to ſtand to their defence againſt the Kings power; by whoſe example certaine other Cities hearing thereof tooke no little courage to doe the like: as namely Montalbane, the Citie called Nemanſium, Sanſere in Occitamia, Milialdum, Mirebellum, Fuduzia, with other Townes and cities moe: who being confederate together, exhorted one another to be circumſpect, and take good heede of the falſe diſſembling practices not to bee truſted of the mercileſſe Papiſts, intending nothing but bloud and deſtruction.

Gods helping hand at need.

The towne of Rochel example to other townes.

The Cities of the Proteſtants take courage to defend themſelues.

These things thus paſſing at Rochell, the King hearing thereof, giveth in commandement to Captaine Strozzius and Guardius to ſee to Rochell. After this he ſendeth a Noble man, one Bironius, requiring of the Rochel men to receive him for their Governour under the King. Of this great conſultation being had, at length the Rochel men began to condeſcend upon certaine conditions; which being not eaſily granted unto, and eſpecially they hearing in the meane time what was done to others of their fellowes, which had ſubmitted themſelves, thought it ſo better to ſtand to the defence of their lives and conſciences, and to adventure the worſt. Whereupon began great ſiege and batterie to be laid againſt Rochell both by land and ſea, which was Anno 1572. about the fourth day of December. It would require another volume to deſcribe all things, during the time of this ſiege, that paſſed on either ſide, betweene the Kings part, and the Towne of Rochell; briefly to runne over ſome parts of the matter: In the beginning of the next yeere following, which was Anno 1573. in the moneth of January, commandement was given out by the King to all and ſundry Nobles and Peeres of France, upon great puniſhment, to addreſſe themſelves in moſt forcible wiſe to the aſſaulting of Rochell. Whereupon a great concourſe of all the Nobility, with the whole power of France, was there aſſembled, amongſt whom was alſo the Prince of Aniow, the Kings brother (who there not long after was proclaimed King of Polonie) accompanied with his other brother Duke Alanſon, Navarre, Condee, and other a great number of ſtates beſides. Thus the whole power of France being gathered againſt one poore Towne, had not the mighty hand of the Lord ſtood on their ſide, it had beene unpoſſible for them to eſcape. During the time of this ſiege, which laſted about ſeven moneths, what ſkirmiſhes and conflicts were on both ſides, it would require a long tractation. To make ſhort, ſeven principall aſſaults were given to the poore Towne of Rochell, with all the power that France could make. In all which aſſaults ever the Popes Catholike ſide had the worſt. Concerning the firſt aſſault thus I find written, that within the ſpace of 26. dayes were charged againſt the wals and houſes of Rochell, to the number of thirty thouſand ſhot of iron bullets and globes, whereby a great breach was made for the adverſary to invade the Citie: but ſuch was the courage of them within, not men onely, but alſo of Women, Matrones, and Maidens, with ſpits, fire, and ſuch other weapon as came to hand, that the adverſary was driven backe, with no ſmall ſlaughter of their ſouldiers: onely of the Towneſmen were ſlaine and wounded to the number of ſixty perſons. Likewiſe in the ſecond aſſault 2000. great field peeces were laid againſt the Towne; whereupon the adverſary attempted the next day to invade the towne: but through the induſtry of the Souldiers and citizens, and alſo of women & maides, the invaders were forced at length to flie away faſter then they came. No better ſucceſſe had all the aſſaults that followed: Whereby conſider (gentle Reader) with thy ſelfe, in what great diſtreſſe theſe good men were, not of Rochell onely, but of other Cities alſo, during theſe ſeven moneths above mentioned, had not the mighty hand of the Lord almighty ſuſtained them. Concerning whoſe wondrous operation for his ſervants in theſe hard diſtreſſes, three memorable things I finde in hiſtory to be noted.

Bironius.

Rochell men ſtand to their defence.

Rochell firſt beſieged by Bironius. Anno 1573.

The whole power of France ſet againſt Rochel.

The ſiege of Rochell during ſeven moneths.

7. Aſſaults againſt Rochel.

The one concerning the ſiege of Sanſer; which Citie being terribly battered and razed with gunſhot of great Canons, and field peeces, having at one ſiege no leſſe then three thouſand bullets and gunſtones flying upon them, wherwith the creſts of their helmets were pierced, their ſleeves, their hoſe, their hats pierced, their weapons in their hands broken, their wals ſhaken, their houſes rent downe; yet not one perſon ſlaine nor wounded with all this, ſave onely at the firſt a certaine maiden, with the blaſt of the ſhot flying by her, was ſtrucken downe, and died.

Three notable examples of Gods great mercy in preſerving his ſervants.

The ſecond thing to be noted is this, that in the ſame Citie during all the time of the ſiege, which laſted ſeven moneths and a halfe, for all the ordinance and Battering peeces diſcharged againſt them, which are numbred to ſixe thouſand, not ſo much as 25. perſons in all were ſlaine.

The ſecond example.

The third example, no leſſe memorable, was at Rochell: Whereas the poorer ſort began to lacke corne and victuall, there was ſent to them every day in the river (by the hand of the Lord no doubt) a great multitude of fiſh (called Surdones) which the poorer people did uſe in ſtead of bread. Which fiſh, the ſame day as the ſiege brake up, departed and came no more. Teſtified by them which were preſent there in Rochell all the time.

The third miraculous worke of God, in ſending in fiſh.

What number was loſt on both ſides during all this ſeven moneths warre, it is not certainely knowne. Of the Kings campe what number was ſlaine, by this it may be conjectured, that 132. of their Captaines were killed and ſlaine, of whom the chiefeſt was Duke-Damoule.

132. Captaines of the Kings army ſlaine.

To cloſe up this Tragicall Story, concerning the breaking up of this ſeven moneths Siege: thus it fell out, that ſhortly after the ſeventh aſſault given againſt Rochell, which was Anno 1573. about the moneth of June, word came to the Campe, that Duke Andius the Kings brother was proclaimed King of Polonie. Whereat great joy was in the Campe. By occaſion whereof the new King, more willing to have peace, entred talke with them of Rochell: who, as he ſhewed himſelfe to them not ungentle, ſo found he them againe to him not unconformable. Whereupon a certaine agreement pacificatory was concluded betweene them upon conditions. Which agreement the new Polonie King eftſoones preferred to the French King his brother, not without ſome ſute and interceſſion to have it ratified. The King alſo himſelfe, partly being weary of theſe chargeable warres, was the more willing to aſſent thereunto. And thus at length, through the Lords great worke, the Kings royall conſent under forme of an Edict was ſet downe in writing, and confirmed by the King, containing 25. Articles. In which alſo were included certaine other Cities of the Proteſtants, granting to them benefit of Peace and liberty of Religion. This Edict or Mandate ſent downe from the King by his Herald at Armes, Bironius in the Kings name cauſed to be ſolemnely proclaimed at Rochel. An. 1573. the tenth day of June.

Anno 1573. Iunii 10.

The yeere next following, 1574. for two things ſeemeth fatall and famous; for the death firſt of Charles the ninth the French King, alſo moſt of all for the death of Charles, Cardinall of Loraine, brother to Guiſe. Of the manner of the Cardinals death, I finde little mention in ſtories. Touching the Kings death, although Ric. Dinothus ſaith nothing, for feare belike, becauſe he being a French-man, his name is expreſſed and knowne: but another ſtory (whom the ſaid Dinothus doth follow) bearing no name, ſaith thus: That he died the 25. day of May, upon Whitſon even, being of the age of 25. yeeres: and addeth more; Profluvio ſanguinis illum laboraſſe certum eſt, Certaine it is, that his ſickneſſe came of bleeding. And ſaith further: Conſtans fert fama, illum dum è variis corporis partibus ſanguis emanaret, in lecto ſæpe volutatum, inter horribilium blaſphemiarum diras, tantam ſanguinis vim projeciſſe, ut paucas poſt horas mortuus fuerit. That is, The conſtant report ſo goeth, that his blood guſhing out by divers parts of his body, he toſſing in his bed, and caſting out many horrible blaſphemies, laid upon pillowes with his heeles upward, and head downeward, voided ſo much blood at his mouth, that in few houres he died. Which ſtory, if it be true, as is recorded and teſtified, may be a ſpectacle and example to all perſecuting Kings and Princes polluted with the blood of Chriſtian Martyrs. And thus much briefly touching the late terrible perſecution in France.

The death of Charles the ninth the French King, and of the Cardinall of Loraine.

The maner of Charles the French kings death, to be noted.

The Conclusion of the Worke.

AND thus to conclude (good Chriſtian Reader) this preſent tractation, not for lacke of matter, but to ſhorten rather the matter for largeneſſe of the Volume, I here ſtay for this preſent time, without further addition of more diſcourſe, either to over-weary thee with longer tediouſneſſe, or overcharge the booke with longer prolixity, having hitherto ſet forth the Acts and Proceedings of the whole Church of Chriſt, namely, of the Church of England, although not in ſuch particular perfection, that nothing hath overpaſſed us; yet in ſuch generall ſufficiency, that I truſt not very much hath eſcaped us, neceſſary to be knowne, touching the principall affaires, doings, and proceedings of the Church and Churchmen. Wherein may be ſeene the whole ſtate, order, deſcent, courſe, and continuance of the ſame, the increaſe and decreaſe of true Religion, the creeping in of Superſtition, the horrible troubles of Perſecution, the wonderfull aſſiſtance of the Almighty in maintaining his trueth, the glorious conſtancy of Chriſts Martyrs, the rage of the Enemies, the alteration of Times, the travels and troubles of the Church, from the firſt Primitive age of Chriſts Goſpel, to the end of Queene Mary, and the beginning of this our gracious Queene Elizabeth. During the time of her happy Reigne, which hath hitherto continued (through the gracious protection of the Lord) the ſpace now of 24. yeeres, as my wiſh is, ſo I would be glad the good will of the Lord were ſo, that no more matter of ſuch lamentable Stories may ever be offered hereafter to write upon. But ſo it is, I cannot tell how, the elder the World waxeth, the longer it continueth, the neerer it haſteneth to his end, the more Sathan rageth, giving ſtill new matter of writing Bookes and Volumes: Inſomuch, that if all were recorded and committed to Hiſtory, that within the ſaid compaſſe of this Queenes Reigne hitherto hath happened, in Scotland, Flanders, France, Spaine, Germany, beſides this our owne Countrey of England and Ireland, with other Countries moe, I verily ſuppoſe one Euſebius or Polyhiſtor, which Pliny writeth of, would not ſuffice thereunto. But of theſe incidents and occurrents hereafter more, as it ſhall pleaſe the Lord to give grace and ſpace. In the meane time the grace of the Lord Ieſus worke with thee (gentle Reader) in all thy ſtudious readings. And while thou haſt ſpace, ſo imploy thy ſelfe to reade, that by reading thou mayeſt learne dayly to know that which may profit thy ſoule, may teach thee experience, may arme thee with patience, and inſtruct thee in all ſpirituall knowledge more and more, to thy perpetuall comfort and ſalvation in Chriſt Ieſus our Lord; to whom bee all glory in Secula Seculorum, Amen.

Edward

Edward Bulkeley to the Chriſtian Reader.

WHereas that excellent man, both for learning and godlineſſe, Maſter Iohn Foxe of bleſſed memory, ended this worthy Worke with this ſhort declaration of that horrible Maſſacre and Murther of Gods Saints and Servants in France; I have thought good to ſet downe the ſame more particularly and largely, and afterward to adde thereunto a Declaration of other outragious cruelties, committed in France by the fauourers and followers of the Church of Rome upon faithfull Chriſtians, both before and after the ſaid Maſſacre: All faithfully collected and taken out of the Hiſtory of that honourable man Iames Auguſt Thuanus, Preſident of the Parlament of Paris, and Counſellor of Eſtate to the late French King Henry the fourth. And this I have done, that we may thereby be the more moved to hate and abhorre that bloody Babylon of Rome, and to take the better heede, that by our ſinnes and contempt of Gods holy Word, by his great mercie committed unto us, we doe not againe fall into the cruell clawes thereof, and into the bloody hands of her followers; as moſt certainely we had done, if God in great mercy had not prevented that ſavage, barbarous, and monſtrous Powder-treaſon.: of which great and mercifull deliverance God make us mindefull and truely thankfull in glorifying his name, and ſerving him in true holineſſe, and righteouſneſſe all the dayes of our life, Amen.

Iacob. Auguſt Thuan. Hiſtor lib.52.pag.17

WHen the Admirall was wounded in both his armes, he immediately thereupon ſaid to Maure, Preacher to the Queene of Navarre deceaſed; O my brother, I doe now perceive that I am beloved of my God, ſeeing that for his moſt holy names ſake I doe ſuffer theſe wounds. Pag.18. Then he whiſpered in the eare of one of them that bare up his arme, that hee ſhould deliver an hundred crownes to Marlin his Preacher, to be given to the poore of the Church of Paris.

Pag.36. The Admirall was ſlaine by Bemjus, of whom Alineus (one of them that came to kill him) did afterwards report, that he never ſaw man in ſo preſent perill, ſo conſtantly & confidently ſuffer death.

Pag.38. Many honourable men and great perſonages were then murthered, as Count Rochfulcaud, Telinius the Admirals ſonne-in-law, Antonius Claromontus Marqueſſe of Ravely, Pag.39. Lewes Buſſius, Bandineus, Pluvialius, Berntus, &c.

Pag.41. Francis Nompar Caumontius, being in bed with his two ſons, was ſlaine with one of them: the other was ſtrangely preſerved, who after came to great honour and dignitie.

Pag.43. Stephen Cevalerie Prime, chiefe Treaſurer to the King in Poytiers, a very good man, and carefull of the Common-wealth, after he had paid for his life a good ſumme of money, was cruelly murthered by ſome cut-throates, whom Stephen Fargon Patandery, that gaped for his office, had ſent for that purpoſe.

Pag.48. Magdalene Briſſonet, an excellent woman and learned, the widow of Ibermus, Maſter of Requeſts to the King, flying out of the Citie in poore apparrell, was taken, cruelly murthered, and caſt into the river.

Pag.52. Two thouſand were murthered in one day; and the ſame libertie of killing and ſpoyling continued certaine dayes after.

Pag.55. Peter Placie was ſtabbed in with daggers, and killed.

Pag.62. At Meldis two hundred were caſt into priſon, and being brought out as ſheepe to the ſlaughter, were cruelly murthered. There alſo twentie five women were ſlaine, Pag.63.

Pag.63. At Orleance a thouſand of men, women, and children were murthered.

Pag.64. The Citizens of Auguſtobona, when they heard of the Maſſacre at Paris, ſhut the gates of their Towne that no Proteſtant might eſcape, and caſt all that they ſuſpected into priſon, which afterward were brought forth and murthered.

Pag.65. At Avaricum in like manner the ſuſpected for Religion were caſt into priſon, and afterward murthered.

Ibidem. At the Towne of Charite, a troupe of Lewes Gonzagaes horſemen killed eighteene perſons.

Pag.68. At Lions there were eight hundred moſt miſerably and cruelly murthered; the children hanging at their fathers neckes, and the fathers imbracing their children, &c. Three hundred were ſlaine in the Archbiſhops houſe. Pag.69. The Monkes would not ſuffer their bodies to be buried.

At Romanium ſeven were killed, Pag.71.

Pag.72. At Tholoſſa 200. were murthered.

Pag.73. At Roane five hundred were put to death. At the laſt Thuanus writeth thus; This example paſſed unto other cities, and from cities to townes and Villages, ſo that it is by many publiſhed, that in all the Kingdome above 30000. were in theſe tumults divers wayes deſtroyed; although I thinke the number was ſomewhat leſſe.

Pag.23. A little before this Maſſacre, a man, nurſe, and infant carried to be Baptiſed, were all three murthered.

Lib.53. Pag.87. There was wonderfull great ioy in Rome for this Maſſacre, and the Pope with his Cardinals went in ſolemne Proceſſion to the Church of Saint Marke, to give thankes unto God for this great benefit beſtowed upon the See of Rom and the Chriſtian world. And the munday following there was ſolemne Service in the Church of Minerva, at which the Pope and the Cardinalls were preſent. Pag.88. A Iubily alſo was publiſhed, and in the evening the great Ordnance was ſhot off in the Caſtle of St. Angely. The Cardinall of Loraine gave a thouſand crownes to him that brought newes of it.

Pag.112. Bricamotius an old man of ſeventie yeeres, and Cavagnius were laid upon hurdles, and drawne unto execution; and being in the way reviled, and defiled with dirt caſt upon them, they were hanged. Bricamotius might have beene pardoned, if he would publikely confeſſe, that the Admirall had conſpired againſt the King; which he refuſed to doe.

Pag.117. Caſter, a citie in the countie of the Albingens, held by the Proteſtants, being upon the Kings great promiſes of their ſafety, delivered up into the hands of Crucete a noble man, was notwithſtanding with murthers and ſpoile cruelly waſted.

Pag.120,121. At Burdeaux, by the inſtigation of a Monke, called Enimund Angerius, were 264. cruelly murthered, of whom ſome were Senators. This Monke continually provoked them in his Sermons to this ſlaughter.

Pag.177. There was great rejoycing in the campe of the Duke of Alba, for the murther in Paris.

¶ I have thought good to adde hereunto of the like cruelty, committed at ſundry other times before this Maſſacre, by the followers of the Church of Rome, againſt the true profeſſors of Chriſt his Goſpel; taken alſo out of the hiſtories of the ſaid honourable man Iames Auguſt Thuanus, who in the firſt part of his ſecond Tome, lib. 29. writeth thus.

Pag.195. Anno Dom. 1562. AT Agendicum in Maine, a cruell ſlaughter of the Proteſtants was committed by the inſtigation of Aemarus, Inquiſitor of criminall cauſes, Cardinall Guiſe (as was thought) not being ignorant thereof, being Archbiſhop of that Citie, who, to the ſtirring up of more hatred againſt him, was accuſed to have béene at the ſtirre and ſlaughter at Vaſſey. A rumour being ſpread abroad, that the Proteſtants had taken ſecret counſell to invade and ſpoile the Churches, above an hundred of every eſtate and ſexe were by the enraged people killed, or drowned in the river Igonna, which runneth by the Citie; the houſes of many were ſpoiled; the Church without the Citie where the Proteſtants aſſembled, was pulled downe and made equall to the ground, and their Vines pulled up by the rootes.

Lib.30 pag. 232. The Duke of Guiſe entred into Bloeſe; which although he got without any fight, yet all furious libertie was permitted to the ſouldiers, houſes were ſpoiled, many Proteſtants which had remained were ſlaine, or drowned in the river; neither were women ſpared, of whom ſome were defiled, and moe murthered. Amongſt whom, one matron of good birth, having eſcaped drowning in water, could not eſcape from the hands of the murtherers. From thence he went to Mere, a Towne two leagues from Bloeſe, where Proteſtants had frequent aſſembly at Sermons; which for many dayes together was ſpoiled, and many killed, and Caſſobonius the Paſtor was drowned in the next river.

Pag.233. At Ligolium certaine men were ſtrangled, the Preachers eyes pulled out, and he burned by a ſoft and ſlow fire.

Pag.236. At Aniou, Albiacus the Paſtor was murthered, certaine women ſlaine, and ſome defiled; amongſt which, two ſiſters were abuſed in the ſight of their father, who was bound to a Well to behold that ſight.

Pag.238. John Turry a Preacher, above 70. yéeres old, being taken, was drowned in the river Clauium.

Pag.239. An hundred and twentie being put into the Church at Ceſaroduum, were cruelly murthered and drowned in the river Liger. Ibidem. Many moe men and women, which would not goe to Maſſe, were ſlaine by the procurement of one Antonie Pleſſiac Richell, who had béene a Monke, and was then a leader of footmen. Children that had béene baptiſed by the Proteſtants, were by them rebaptiſed.

Ibidem. John Burgeolus, Preſident of Turon, an old man, being ſuſpected to be a Proteſtant, having bought with a great ſumme of money his life and ſafety, was notwithſtanding taken and beaten cruelly with clubs and ſtaves, and being ſtripped of his clothes, was brought to the banke of the river Liger, and was hanged his féete upward, and head downeward in the water up to his breaſt; then (he yet alive) they opened his belly, pulled out his guts, and threw them into the river, and taking his heart, put it upon a ſpeare, carrying it with contumelious words about the citie.

Pag.247. Renatus Campanus did throw above fiftie whom either for religion he ſuſpected, or otherwiſe hated, into his great water pond, which in jeſt he uſed to call his great cup. In the water pooles of one Bojordanus were found above fiftie bodies of men that had béene cruelly ſlaine.

Pag.247. At Samararobridge certaine were ſlaine, Bibles in the French tongue and other bookes were burned, and the Pulpit overthrowne.

At Abbats-villa, Robert Sandeliſius Altocurius was ſlaine, and his ſon Francis, who firſt was wounded and left in the way for dead, and after being alive, and carried into an Inne, was taken out and killed. Francis Cantalupe Seconvilla, and Antony Cancelerte Altamrius kinſman flying away, were taken and killed.

Pag.246. At Valonia a tumult of purpoſe was raiſed, Huſuill, and Cocavill dwelling thereby were ſlaine with certaine men of the Towne, of whom was one John Gifford; who being overwhelmed with ſtones, and being ſuppoſed to be dead, yet after lifting up his head, and calling for helpe, was with ſpits and ſpeares thruſt thorow and killed; the hatred of the furious people being ſcarcely ſatisfied with his double death.

Pag.249. In Andomaribridge the Paſtor or Preacher lying ſicke, was taken, and having his eyes put out, and his eares cut off, was ſlaine, and his body was drawne thorow the Towne unto the Gallowes.

Lib.31. Pag.248. Thrée women were drawne thorow the ſtréets, and caſt into the river, and drowned.

Ibidem. The Towne of Barre being taken by the Papiſts, all kinde of cruelty was there uſed, children were cut up, and the guts of ſome of them and hearts pulled out, which in rage they gnawed with their téeth. They that were in the Caſtle, when they had yéelded themſelves to the will of the conqueror, were almoſt all hanged. One Ralet ſpared not his owne ſonne, but ſuffered him in that tumult to be hanged.

Pag.292. The Italians which ſerved the King did for hatred of religion breake forth into ſuch fury, that they did rip up a living childe, did take his liver, being as yet red hote, and eate it as meate.

Pag.294. A yong maid of 16. yéeres old was murthered.

Pag.300. When the city Matiſcon was taken by corrupting the Kéeper of the keyes, whom yet they killed, great crueltie was ſhewed, ſo that they counted it a ſport to cut off mens legges and armes.

Pag.302. Sanpontius inviting Gentlewomen to Supper, would walke with them, and having his Souldiers about him, uſed to caſt ſome of his Priſoners (of which hee had many) from the bridge into the River, and with that ſpectacle did ſatisfie the eyes of his gueſts; of whom he would often aſke, whether they did ever ſée men leape better.

Pag.304. Anno Dom. 1562. When Gondrinius a follower of the Duke of Guiſe was ſlaine, there were found among his papers letters of the ſaid Duke; wherein he gave commandement for ſlaying of the Proteſtants in every Citie of his government.

Pag.342. Somaribius having taken without bloudſhed the Towne of Ciſtertion, yet abſtained not from ſhedding of bloud; but having killed above 200.

of them that did not reſiſt him, ſpoiled the towne.

Lib.32. Pag.376. Anno 1562.

At Albia of Cahors upon the Lords day the 16. kal. of December, the papiſts at the ringing of a bell did breake open the doores, where the Proteſtants were aſſembled, and killed without difference, ſome in the place, ſome as they were fleeing away, were here and there ſlaine, among whom was one Guacerius a rich Merchant; who being drawne into his own houſe, was with his wife and children murthered, and his houſe ſpoiled. About 45. were in that tumult murthered, and their bodies contumeliouſly uſed.

Pag.395. Ibidem.

At Galliacum, which is a towne by the river Tarvis, a great ſlaughter of Proteſtants was committed by the meanes of Laurence Stroſſius Cardinall, Biſhop of Albiens, in which, above 150. were murthered: of which, ſome were drawn thorow the ſtreets, and after death caſt into the fields, to be eaten of Kites; others were drowned in the river, or caſt headlong from an high place. Proteſtants houſes were marked with chalke to be murthered.

Lib.33. Pag.427.

In a Towne called Penna, 300. (notwithſtanding the ſafety of their lives was promiſed to them) were cruelly murthered by Spaniards, which were newly come to ſerve the French King; who alſo killed certain women there, ſcoffingly ſaying, that they were Lutheran men, diſſembling their ſex by their apparell.

Lib.34. Pag.512. Anno 1563.

Columbarius was ſlain in the ſiege of Montalbane, whoſe cruelty had been ſo great, that hee counted it but a ſport to burne women, children, and old men in an houſe together.

Pag.514.

The Towne of Nonne being yeelded to the Papiſts, upon condition, that the forraine ſouldiers ſhould depart ſafe with horſe and armour, leaving their Enſignes, and that the enemies ſouldiers that were footmen ſhould not enter into the Towne, and that no harme ſhould be done to the Towneſmen; but that they might (if they would) goe into the Caſtle: after the yeelding of it, the gates were ſet open, and ſtraight they came to murthering and ſpoiling without any regard of the foreſaid conditions. Men and women without difference were killed; the ſtreetes ſounded with miſerable mourning, blood flowing in the waies, and the laſcivious ſouldiers ſwords ſhining in the flames of the fire, which they had caſt upon the houſes. Many were cruelly killed, being throwne downe headlong from on high. Among others, this example of inordinate filthineſſe and cruelty is reported. A certaine woman being drawne out of a privy place, into the which to avoid the rage of the ſouldiers ſhe had fled with her huſband, was in his ſight ſhamefully defiled: and then being commanded to draw a ſword, not knowing to what end, was forced by others, who ordered her hand, to give her huſband a deadly wound, whereof he dyed; the ſouldiers not being content to defile her body, but alſo to make her to defile her hands with the ſlaughter of her huſband.

Pag.628. Anno 1564.

Thuanus in his 36. booke, maketh a large declaration of a horrible conſpiracy of ſome in France with King Philip, for the taking and deſtruction of the Queen of Navarre, her ſon Henry, and Katherine her daughter, which was by Gods providence ſtrangely diſcovered and defeated, but the conſpirators not puniſhed.

Pag.638.

In Turone the Proteſtants being aſſembled to heare a Sermon, ſome were beaten, and ſome ſlaine; the preacher in the Pulpit thruſt thorow and ſlaine.

Ibidem.

Philibert Cureus, a noble and vertuous man, and an earneſt Proteſtant, was by conſpiracy of adverſaries ſlaine, as he was hunting and going to his brother.

Lib.39. Pag.880. Anno 1566.

An Auguſtinian Frier called Pulvarelius, comming to the towne Furium, and falſly lying, in ſaying that the Proteſtants, whom he called Hugonites, had killed all the Catholikes in Apamea, cauſed 35. Proteſtants to be pulled out of their houſes, and to be murthered.

Lib.44. Pag.271. Anno 1568.

At Samarobridge in Picardy, in time of peace, above an hundred Proteſtants were murthered: and at Autiſſiodore, which the Proteſtants having held in the laſt war, had now yeelded up, 150. were cruelly killed, and their dead bodies were drawne, and caſt partly into jakes, and partly into the river.

Pag.272. Anno 1568.

Cipierius, the Count of Tendas ſon, as he was returning from the Duke of Savoy his kinſman, was with his retinue, to the number of 35. cruelly murthered at Forum Julii.

Pag.273.

Within the ſpace of three moneths, in time of peace, were about 10000. murthered.

Pag.309.

Bordius a Captaine under the Prince of Condee at Mirabellum, was contrary to promiſe cruelly killed, and his naked body caſt into the ſtreete, that being unburied the dogges might eate it.

Lib.45. Pag.337. Anno 156

The Prince of Condee being taken priſoner, and his life promiſed him, was ſhot in the necke by Monteſquius, Captaine of the Duke of Anjoyes Guard, of whom Thuanus writeth thus; Hic exitus fuit Ludovici Borbonii Condæi regiæ ſtirpis, viri ſupra natalium ſplendorem magnitudine animi ac virtute illuſtriſſimi; qui fortitudine, conſtantia, ingenio, ſolertia, rerum uſu, comitate, facundia, liberalitate, quæ omnes ſimul virtutes in illo uno excellebant, paucos æquales, neminem ſua ætate, vel inimicorum confeſſione, ſuperiorem habuit: That is, This was the end of Lewes Bourbon Prince of Condee, of the Kings blood, a man above the honour of his birth moſt honourable in courage and vertue; who in valiancy, conſtancy, wit, wiſedome, experience, curteſie, eloquence, and liberality, all which vertues excelled in him, had few his equals, and none, even by the confeſſion of his enemies, ſuperiour to him.

Pag.338.

Robert Stuart (a valiant Scottiſh Gentleman) being taken priſoner, was notwithſtanding ſtabbed with daggers, and killed.

Pag.380.

At Orleance an hundred men and women being committed to priſon, were by the furious people that ruſhed in moſt cruelly murthered.

Lib.46.

Nucetium was yeelded up by the ſouldiers, upon promiſe made to them of the ſaving of their lives; yet moſt of them being brought to Auguſtobona, were cruelly ſlaine by the furious people.

Lib.50. Pag.777. Anno 1572.

Many men and women were murthered for the ſpace of 3. daies at Orange.

Hitherto out of the hiſtory of Jacobus Auguſtus Thuanus (who is reported to be a Catholike) which endeth in the yeare 1578. wherein I have for ſhortneſſe ſake omitted ſundry particular outrages and murthers committed by that bloody Babylonicall generation; from whoſe bloody hands God in mercy defend and preſerve us.

Hereunto I will only adde the murthering of Henry the third, and Henry the fourth, late French Kings, by Papiſts: the former murthered by Clement a Monk; the other by Francis Ravilliac a Franciſcan Frier: and to make up the full meaſure of impiety and cruelty, the barbarous and monſtrous Powder plot ſhall follow; whereby it was intended and purpoſed to have blowne up the Parliament houſe, when our gracious King James, Prince Henry, all the Nobility, Biſhops, Knights, and Burgeſſes ſhould be aſſembled therein. To the effecting of which devilliſh device, about thirty foure barrels of Gunpowder were laid under the ſaid Parliament houſe, and there found. This bloody conſpiracy was practiſed by preciſe Papiſts; whoſe conſciences would not permit them to come to our Churches; but did eaſily ſuffer and allow them to attempt this ſavage and horrible practice: viz. Francis Treſham, two Winters, ſir Everard Digby, Percy, &c. Hereunto alſo three Jeſuites (or rather Jebuſites) Henry Garnet (who ſuffered death for it) Oſwald Teſmond, and John Gerrard were privy and conſenting. Teſmond encouraged Bates unto it, abſolved him; and miniſtred the ſacrament to him. Gerrard miniſtred the oath of ſecrecy to Cateſby, Percy, John Wright, Thomas Winter, and Fawkes; abſolved them, and miniſtred the ſacrament unto them, as it is more largely declared in the booke intituled, The relation of the proceedings againſt the barbarous traitors, Garnet a Ieſuit, and his confederates, pag. 50. & 62. & 133. This bloody device ſhould have been executed the fifth of November, 1605, but was by Gods great mercy diſcovered and defeated, to the juſt deſtruction of thoſe deteſtable traitors, who fell into the pit that they digged for others, and to the eternall ſhame and confuſion of that bloody Babylon of Rome, and her favourers and followers.

Iohn 8. 44.

Ye are of your father the devill, and the luſts of your father ye will doe: he hath been a murtherer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, becauſe there is no truth in him. When he ſpeaketh a lie, then ſpeaketh he of his owne; for he is a lyar, and the father thereof.

A TREATISE OF AFFLICTIONS AND PERSECVTIONS OF THE FAITHFVLL, PREPARING THEM WITH PATIENCE TO SVFFER MARTYRDOME.

CHAP. I.

Shewing, That ſuch as will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus muſt needs ſuffer afflictions.

WE are all prone by nature to decline afflictions, each one ſuppoſing to finde out ſome backe way to eſcape them. Firſt, Some are of opinion, that they can quit themſelves by playing the Temporizers; Secondly, Others, by hiding and concealing themſelves; Thirdly, Another ſort, by flying from thoſe places where Tyrants vexe and domineere; Fourthly, a fourth, thinking to beare off blowes by their greatnes and credit they have gotten in the world; Fifthly and laſtly, a fifth ſort imagining to find ſome evaſion, either by reaſon of their allyes, or good ſervices which they have done; dreaming forſooth, that either theſe or the like projects ſhould yeeld them good reſpect, and preſerve them from being called into queſtion by thoſe that hate them. In a word, which of us hath not ſome fetch or other to breake looſe, if he ſhould be either examined or purſued?

This is the true cauſe that ſo few are prepared, and carefull timely to foreſee what belongs to ſuffering ſhame and diſgrace for the truth, as the diſcommodities of long impriſonment, or what appertaines to the conſtant and patient bearing of hideous torments and death for the cauſe of the Goſpell. But alas, all theſe are but as fig leaves, and vaine hopes, which being ſomwhat pleaſing to the fleſh do only dull and deceive us; cauſing us to grow ſecure and careleſſe, and ſo unprovided to ſuffer, till we be ſurpriſed, and in ſafe cuſtody in our enemies hands. So that, when we ſhould be able to give a reaſon of the hope that is in us, we have not a word to ſay. 1 Pet.3.15.

To prevent theſe ſo great inconveniences, let us hold this for a ſure principle, That it is impoſſible to live godly, and not ſuffer perſecution. For God hath ſo decreed, that if we will partake of the glory of his Sonne, we muſt firſt be conformed to him in his 2 Tim.3.12. Rom.8.29.

Mat.7.14. ſufferings. Yea,this is that ſtrait gate and narrow way which leadeth unto life. Through much tribulation we muſt enter into the Kingdome of God, Acts 14.22.and whoſoever Luke 14.27. beares not the Croſſe of Chriſt,following him,cannot be his Diſciple. The Apoſtle in Heb.12.7. the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes plainly tels us,That if we be children, wee muſt taſte of that diſcipline which God nurtures his withall in his Family. It is and muſt be the portion Mat.10.16. of Gods beloved ones, to live in this world as ſheep amongſt wolves.

Indeed,if wee could live without ſin, we might then conceive ſome hope of freedome from the Croſſe. But whileſt corrupt nature lives in us, and brings forth ſuch bitter fruits,God hath,and will in all ages raiſe up ſome Tyrant or other, as means to mortifie and tame the pride and rebellion thereof.Devils may as ſoone ceaſe to be,as that enmity
Gen.3.15. ſhould ceaſe between the ſeed of the woman and the ſeed of the ſerpent. As long as the Mat.8.24. Church continues to be Chriſts poore Barque in the ſalt ſea of this world, ſhe muſt make her account to be toſſed with ſtorms and tempeſts of perſecutions.

What ſhould I ſay, no Crowne is to be expected in Heaven, if we will not fight the 2 Tim.4 7. good fight of faith here on earth; nor to reap in joy, if in this world we refuſe to ſow in Pſal.126.5. teares:The life of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt cannot be manifeſt in us, except we beare about 2 Cor.4 10. in our body the dying of the Lord Ieſus.

Let every Chriſtian then hold this for certaine, That when the world ceaſeth to hate the Children of God, and the Devill to envy them, then may they looke,and not before, to live in the world without perſecutions.

Iohn 16 33. Hath not the Way,the Life,and the Truth ſaid it ? In the world you ſhall have tribulation. And therefore let not the great ones of the World thinke to be exempted out of this ranke,more than the ſmall·For to the Saints and members of the true Church afflictions are even as ordinary,as is Baptiſme,Faith,and the Spirit of Adoption.

Exod.2.15. Was not Moſes the adopted ſonne of Pharaohs daughter, faine to fly out of Ægypt to Act.7.29. ſave his life ? Was not David, though anointed King, hunted by Saul his purſuer as a Heb.11.27. Partridge into the mountaines ? Iſaiah and Daniel were of the bloud Royall, yet they eſ-
1 Sam.26.20: caped not;the one,from being cruelly rent in ſunder with a Saw,after he had preached to Saint Ierome in his Commentary upon Iſaiah. his Nation ſixty yeares;nor the other (although next unto the King he ſwayed the affairs Dan 6.16. of the Babylonish Empire)to be caſt into the lyons den.

In the times of the great perſecutions under Diocleſian the Emperour of Rome, who were the firſt that were ſacrificed, but Nicomede, and the principall Favourites of the Court? Who is ignorant that two of the moſt noble Princes of our times that ever Germany had,notwithſtanding their munition and meanes,were taken priſoners by the Emperour, or held captive five or ſix yeares in great diſtreſſe? What ſhould I here mention
Lady Iane Gray proclaimed Queene of England,and yet cruelly put to death? Or Thomas Cranmer,Primate of England, burned to aſhes at Oxford? Or the Lord Cobham that religious and valiant Knight, hanged, and burned hanging in Saint Giles in the fields ? All theſe,with many more, were apprehended, and not long after put to death, even then when they might ſeeme moſt to have flouriſhed in the World.

Seeing then that neither age,ſex,power nor place can ſecure us from ſufferings,which Act.20.23. are every where foretold in the holy Scriptures to abide us, whether wee be high or low, let us in the name and feare of God prepare to take up the Croſſe of Chriſt betimes; Prov.6.6. learne we of the ſilly Ant in Summer to ſtore up food againſt the cold and ſtormy Winter of Affliction: Imitating thoſe who dwelling in defenced cities are carefull to provide themſelves of munition before they be beſieged.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

Shewing, How the Faithfull ought to beare perſecutions patiently.

FOraſmuch as afflictions are thus neceſſary and inevitable to beleevers, that whether they will or no, they muſt paſſe this ſtrait way: they ought to bethinke them how to make hard things eaſie. And herein to follow the dealing of the Phyſitian with his patient, who, intending to give him ſome bitter Potion or Pill, is wont to ſweeten the one with Syrrup, and to wrap up the other in gold, leſt he ſhould abhor to take in, or ſwallow downe, either the one or the other. Even ſo are we, by committing to memory ſome elect and choice ſentences of holy Scriptures concerning the Croſſe, to cover over the ſame therewith, that it may not appeare ſo dreadfull unto us, as we apprehend it to be. For that which cauſeth us to fly and feare perſecution, is a prejudicate opinion we have conceived in our mindes, that ſome deadly poiſon lurks under it. And therefore wee ſhun ſo much as to taſte a little ſup thereof, in regard we imagine it to be the only bitter drug in the world.

Now, that which makes us fall into, and breeds in us this error, is becauſe (as therein ſo almoſt in all things elſe) we are led rather by ſenſe, than by the word, by which wee ought to ballance and regulate all our perſwaſions and reſolutions. For could we beleeve what the Prophets and Apoſtles (inſpired of God) have preached and written for the uſe of poſterity, as touching perſecutions, wee would not onely have them in a more honourable eſteeme, but thankfully and patiently beare them.

To which end, let us endeavour firmly to imprint in our minds theſe and the like ſen-tences. Saint Paul tels us, that if we be reproached for the name of Chriſt, we may think our ſelves happy; for the ſpirit of glory and of God (ſaith he) reſteth upon you. And 1 Pet.4.14.
Saint Paul ſpeaking of himſelfe and his aſſociates, ſaith thus, And not onely ſo, but we Rom.5.3.

than the manacles wherewith their hands are bound. In the Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory it is reported of a good Biſhop, who by the Emperor Decius being caſt into a filthy ſtinking priſon or hole for the name of Chriſt, with as many yrons as he could beare, intreated his friends (who ſomtime came to viſit him) that after his death they would bury with him the ſignes and tokens of his valour, meaning his bolts and fetters which were put upon his legs and hands, teaching us, That when we ſee it is the will of God to impoſe them upon us, and thereby to dub us Knights of his Order, we ſhould eſteem our ſelves no leſſe honored, than if a King, by way of gratifying a valiant champion for ſome great ſervices done for him, ſhould reward the ſame with ſome of his owne precious jewels, and then no leſſe to brave it out in theſe our Ornaments, than a woman when ſhe ſees her ſelfe decked with all coſtly array from top to toe.

In his book of Offices.

If that which Cicero writes be true, That no vertue gives to man greater luſtre than Magnanimity, we may thence ſafely conclude, That none ought in this kinde to be preferred before a Chriſtian Martyr; who neither loves, deſires, or admires ought, ſave that which is honeſt and praiſeworthy, nor gathers any riches to himſelfe but what he knows to be laſting, and hopes to poſſeſſe for ever in the Kingdome of Heaven: and therefore ſleighting either mens favours or diſpleaſures, as thoſe that are high borne contemne the one, when they ſeem to ſmile, and are not much daunted with the frowns of the other, knowing right well that all things under the Sun are but vanity, and ſubject to change with their ages and ſeaſons.

We read in the Eccleſiaſticall ſtory of one Phanutius Biſhop of Thebaides, who under the tyranny of Maximinus, having one of his eyes put out, never preſented himſelſe before Conſtantine the Great, but that good Emperour embracing of him would kiſſe that eye, which being loſt, wee know how unſeemly it cauſeth that part to be. But thus the Emperour would ſhew, That nothing ought to be in higher eſteeme with us, than the croſſe of Chriſt, and the markes thereof when we beare or weare them on any part of our bodies.

If the good and holy life of a Chriſtian be ſo much ſet by of us, then muſt the death of ſuch a one be much more glorious, when for the name of Chriſt, hee takes the ſame joyfully. Who could be more deare in the eye of God the Father, than his Son Ieſus Chriſt? Yet gave he him to ſuffer death for our ſins, and by ſuffering the ſame, according to the will and appointment of his heavenly Father, hath he not obtained a name which is above every name, That at the name of Ieſus every knee ſhould bow, &c.

Mat. 3.17.

If Gods glory ought to be preferred before all things, yea, our owne ſalvation; and that Chriſt by dying to ſave us hath obtained the greateſt glory that ever was; what may we judge of that death we endure for his honour, his word, and for the maintenance of his pure worſhip and ſervice?

Abraham never performed a more honourable act, than in offering up his ſon Iſaac at Gods command, nor for which he is more praiſed. I demand then, that ſeeing our owne life is more deare and precious to us than the life of another, whether the Martyrs, who according to the will of God, and for his honour, have been ſo prodigall of their bloud, have not deſerved greater, or at leaſt an equall praiſe and commendation with Abraham?

The Biſhops of old had ſuch an honourable eſteem of martyrdome, that they preferred it before their Epiſcopall dignities; ſo as both themſelves, and their Diſciples and followers whom they had taught, were ſo ambitious thereof, that when they wanted opportunity to ſuffer, being excluded therefrom by the interceding of friends, or were not the firſt that ſuffered, they took it ſo to heart, that ſome of them carried the grief thereof to their graves.

Thinke I pray you what a ſhame it were for a Gentleman, who, being called by his Prince to fight in his warres, ſhould buſie himſelfe onely about combing, curling, and perfuming his haire, tooting all day in a Looking-glaſſe, to decke and attire himſelfe: and then judge by that, what valiant ſouldiers we are, and what a goodly reputation wee ſhall reap either at the hands of God, or of good men, if in our ſpirituall warfare, wherein we are to be imployed during our whole life, whileſt the alarme is ſtrucken up, and every one mounted to give the onſet in the face of the enemy, we in the meane time will play leaſt in ſight, hiding our ſelves behind every buſh, as Schollers that are loth to go to Schoole for feare of the rod.

Good God? That men of noble ſpirits ſhould ſo much affect the renowne of being valiant, fearing nothing more than to be reputed for baſe fellows and cowards; yea ſome are ſo jealous thereof, that they cannot endure to heare ſo much as a ſuſpition of flying, and yet all this their valour tends only to covet a fame which conſiſts in skill how to kill and deſtroy mens lives.

Now we being kings then and the adopted children of God, if either greatneſſe of our courage, or nobleneſſe of our houſe or birth whence we are deſcended, may prevaile any thing with us: then who I pray you ought to ſhew forth more valour than the faithfull, or more dread the ſtaining of their honour by playing the daſtards; This being yet one argument more to put ſpirits in them; namely, that their proweſſe tends not to kill and ſlay mens bodies, as that of worldlings doth, but to ſave, heale, ſupport and ſuccour, as the arme and power of God, which is far more honourable than the other.

CHAP. III.

Manifeſting the great profit and benefit which the faithfull reap by Perſecution.

HAving ſhewed in the former Chapter that a more honorable condition cannot befall a Chriſtian than to ſuffer affliction for the name of Chriſt; wee are here to ſhew how nothing is more beneficiall and profitable, which will the better appeare if wee reckon up ſome few particulars thereof. To begin with the firſt then. In affliction God manifeſts his readineſſe to comfort us, and his power in ſuſtaining and upholding us, that we ſinke not under the weight of them. Examples whereof we have in Ioſeph and David, and ſundry others; who, by the afflictions they ſuffered for righteouſneſſe ſake, were prepared (in that which God had appointed) the one to be Governour over the land of Ægypt, the other over the kingdome of Iſrael. For as in the time of warre, a Captaine or a Generall of an army, takes occaſion there to let his ſouldiers ſee his fidelity, vigilancy, fortitude and skill he hath in leading them out and in; and as a Phyſitian among the ſicke and diſeaſed, is occaſioned to exerciſe the profundity of his art and experience he hath atchieved; Or as friends, when we are in diſtreſſe, doe give us to underſtand what love they beare towards us, and how mindfull they are of us; Even ſo, or much more, doth God declare how greatly he loveth us, and how faithfull he is in performing his promiſes, in the time of our diſtreſſes, which is no meane benefit.

Three ſimilies

For the experience which we get from his bounty, love, power, and care of our welfare, cauſeth us with greater confidence to ſtay and reſt our ſelves wholly upon him; and the tryall alſo of his fidelity doth more and more confirme us in waiting for the performance of his promiſes, which conſequently occaſions him to accompliſh the ſame in us.

Againe, had we no other good for which wee ought to rejoyce in afflictions, and accuſtome our ſelves to beare them both patiently and thankfully, but this, that they ſerve to ſet forth Gods glory, which after a ſort ſhines in us, while during our troubles he upholds us in them, and in due time delivers us out of them; what can we deſire more? For his glory ought to be ſo deare unto us, that if our damnation it ſelfe might be a means to advance it, we ſhould not refuſe to undergoe it, but freely and willingly offer our ſelves to be caſt into hell. Subjects and ſervants joy in nothing more than in ſeeing their lords and maſters highly honoured, as on the contrary nothing vexeth them more, than when they ſee them diſeſteemed, or ought to be broached tending to the impeaching or obſcuring their eſtimation or honour. Shall we then who are not only ſubjects and ſervants, but have obtained the prerogative to be accounted ſons and friends in our fathers houſe and family, ſhall not we I ſay rejoyce? The ſecond fruit which we reap from affliction, is, that hereby God multiplies his gifts and graces upon us, as it is written, My grace is ſufficient 2 Cor. 12. 9.

for thee : for my power is made perfect in weakneſſe,2 *Cor.*12.9. Humility, Faith,Patience, Prudence, and Repentance,are augmented and increaſed in us by ſuffering perſecutions. For look as bodily exerciſe is an help to increaſe health, ſtrength, and heate in the outward man ; and catechiſing or poſing of children (to which we often call them) is the way whereby they grow in knowledge;even ſo the ſeverall tryals and troubles, through which God exerciſeth,and makes proofe of our faith, cauſe it to grow from a leſſe meaſure and degree thereof unto a greater.

A Captaine, who hath once or twiſe beſieged a city or caſtle, becomes much more expert,hardy, and wary than a freſh water ſouldier;ſo alſo is the prudence,counſell,courage,fortitude,and zeale much greater,and reſolution ſtronger, in ſuch as have often paſſed through the pikes of tribulations, than theirs who never knew what ſuch tryalls meant. Yet I affirme not that perſecutions have alwaies this effect in all, who have but once burnt their fingers in this fire of afflictions;as if they ſhould not cauſe them ſometimes to grow cold,and forſake their ſtanding:for as concerning ſuch, their faith was never truly grounded in them,they have only had the outſide and ſhadow of Faith. Even as the ſeed ſowed upon the ſtones eaſily drieth away,for lack of good moiſture,and rooting, by the exceſſive heating of the Sun;ſo this formall profeſſor, with his painted ſhewes of Religion,and outward appearance of faith,when the heat of perſecution approcheth, vaniſheth away and comes to nothing.

But where faith is livily rooted in the heart of the Beleever, and alwaies watered by the holy Ghoſt, although through ſtormes and tempeſts it may come to be ſhaken, yet doe the roots thereof grow more ſtrong and ſetled ; as the root of a tree planted in a high place,which hath the winds ſtill beating upon it,is fortified,and growes daily by the ſap, which the other wants that is ſeated in a low and ſhady place.In a word,perſecution may be compared to fire,which hardens the clay, and melts the waxe, and conſumes the ſtubble:ſo it works divers effects, according as it meets with ſundry ſubjects ; for either it addes courage to one ſtrong in faith,or elſe ſoftens ſuch as are yet weake,or in the end ruines ſuch as are Backſliders and Apoſtata's. Exo.14.22,28. So did the red Sea ſave the people of God, who beleeved in him and his promiſes,and drowned Pharaoh and his hoſt(being Infidels) in the bottome thereof as a ſtone.

Now whereas I ſaid, That perſecutions doe cauſe unto us the multiplying of Gods ſpirituall gifts and graces,my meaning is not only concerning the ſpirituall,but even of temporall good things alſo : for howſoever the latter of theſe happens not ſo uſuall to the faithfull as the firſt, becauſe the Lord according to his wiſe diſpenſation (knowing mans nature to be altogether corrupted) would not occaſion ſuch,by enriching them, to forget him,and fixing their minds on things earthly, to make them their treaſure ; yet hath it oft come to paſſe, that the Faithfull have been greatly enriched even by perſecutions.

Gen.13.2.6. Among others, Abraham proſpered more in power and worldly ſubſtance amongſt Heathens and ſtrangers, than ever he had like to have done in his owne countrey. Alſo Gen.27.21. & 41.45. Ioſeph, in his Fathers houſe but a ſilly Shepheard, being baniſhed thence by the hatred and perſecutions of his Brethren,became the Governour of a whole kingdom,*Gen.*42.6. Dan.2.48. & 5.29. Did not Daniel alſo obtaine ſuch honours and dignities in Babylon among Idolaters, as he could never have expected to be raiſed to the like in the land of Iudæa ? But to ſay no more of antient examples, I could alleadge many the like, and that of late yeares. But theſe formerly mentioned may ſuffice;but only this I thinke,that of all ſuch as have been perſecuted for the Truths ſake, there is not one(if he would ſpeake uprightly) but muſt acknowledge, that he was never unprovided for in his afflictions, nor left altogether without neceſſaries;God therby teaching him by experience,what care he had over him.

Let not perſecution therefore too much daunt us, leſt we or our poſterity ſhould by means thereof fall into poverty. For as we read in the hiſtory of Iob, after the Sabeans and Chaldeans had ſtripped him of all that ever he had, yet God in the end reſtored to him more than he had loſt.Say then that our goods be confiſcated by Tyrants,let us not feare we ſhall be utterly impoveriſhed thereby ; for it is the courſe which God takes in providing us of food and raiment, by way of rendring us a reward when wee have loſt our livelihood in his ſervice.

Simile. Kings are uſually wont to recompence ſuch as have ventured the loſſe of their lives and Livings in their quarrell. And do we not ſee many Italians baniſhed out of Naples and other parts, who have obtained great penſions in France? Shall we thinke then, that God hath leſſe love or reſpect of his, who ſhew themſelves forward to defend his Kingdome and honour? We may therefore aſſure our ſelves, that if we walke with a right foot in the way of Gods commandements, it is in a manner impoſſible for us to eſcape perſecution; but yet on the other ſide, wee ought much more to beleeve, that his bleſſings ſhall never ceaſe to accompany us, and to reſtore unto us an hundred fold backe againe that which Tyrants either can or would ſnatch away from us, be it food or rayment.

The third fruit which we may reap out of our afflictions is, That God uſeth them as his fatherly rods to correct the offences which we his children have and daily doe commit againſt him: So as they are no leſſe needfull for a Church than rods in a ſchoole, or houſhold diſcipline in a well governed Family. For we cannot long perſiſt in the right way without them, our nature being ſo corrupt as it is; we ſhould grow to be diſordered, if we were not held in by perſecutions and afflictions. What ſhould become of a Commonwealth, if every one were left to do as him liſted? So if God ſhould forbeare to correct his children, the city of God would in time come to be a Sodome, and the ſheepfold of Chriſt an Hog-ſtie or a Colledge of a Devils.

Afflictions ſerve in the church, as rods hanged up here and there in ſchooles.

A loving father, that puts forth his ſonne to be a ſcholler, intreats his Maſter now and then to correct him: And if through indulgency he neglects to doe it, the father will complaine of him that he marres his child. Would we be Schollers in Chriſts School, and not ſuffer him to doe that to us, which we would a Schoolemaſter ſhould do to our children? So indeed, if we ſhall refuſe to beare the yoke in our youth, we may worthily be condemned with the world when we are old. It is good for a man, ſaith the holy Prophet, That he beare the yoke in his youth, for ſuch is the untamedneſſe of our ſimple nature, that if it be not betimes curbed, & continually kept ſhort, it will hardly be reclaimed or brought within compaſſe. But if God once take the rod into his hands, we begin then to have ſome feare of offending him; and if we doe, we are ready to confeſſe it. The rod wakens the dead and drowſie conſcience: It makes us mourn and weep, as alſo to accuſe and condemne our ſelves for our ingratitude towards ſo good and gracious a Father; we begin to toſſe and roule our ſelves this way and that way to find eaſe, waiting from whence it will ſpring forth unto us.

Lam. 3.27.

In this perturbation and anxiety of conſcience the holy ſpirit of God, ſeeing us caſt downe and humbled, ſets before our eies Gods mercy in Chriſt: Whoſe bloud applyed by faith purgeth and heales the wound which is made therein. This done, he will carry ſuch an hand over us as ſhall withhold us from vice, and draw us on to the love of vertue. And thus we ſee how the Lord doth by little and little correct our ſinnefull diſpoſition, by exerciſing us with manifold afflictions; whereby the whileſt hee provides for his owne glory. Let us therewith conſider his admirable bounty, ſeeing thus he covers our ſhame: for whereas he might juſtly cauſe us to ſuffer for our ſinnes which we have committed againſt his Majeſty, he in ſtead thereof turns it to ſuffering for his truth and holy names ſake; putting this honourable Title as a veile over us, to ſhadow our nakedneſſe.

For firſt he alters the nature of the puniſhment, which is due unto us for our miſdeeds, into an aſſured hope of recompenſing all our labour and travell we undergoe for righteous cauſes. And in the ſecond place, he turnes the diſhonour which we ought to receive, as a token of the vengeance which he might to our ignominy execute upon us, into an immortall Trophee of Honour, wherewith wee are crowned in the preſence of God and of his Angels. Thirdly, hereby he graciouſly provides for the peace of our conſciences, which, in ſtead of ſorrow and griefe wherewith they might be wounded for guilt of ſinne, on the contrary do ſenſibly rejoice and glory in theſe ſufferings for the name of Chriſt. And fourthly in the midſt of all theſe joyes, and moſt ſingular conſolations, yet the conſcience (for all that) ceaſeth not to retain a ſcruple or dramme of Rubarb mingled herewith, to purge out now and then ſome corrupt humors, and by perſecutions to put us in mind of our ſinnes committed againſt the Lord in times paſt.

But yet he ſo tempers and moderates theſe his drugges, and that in ſo exquiſite and artificiall a manner, that while he humbleth us with his left hand, hee ſupporteth us with his right hand; if he cauſeth griefe, by and by he comforts us; in ſmiting he heals us; in which mixture and tempering of things, ſo much diffring in nature and quality, conſiſts the ſalvation of our ſoules. Even as the skilfull and expert Phyſitian, by meaſuring out an equall and juſt proportion of contrary drugs meeting with our corrupt humors, provides for the ſafety of our bodies.

Simile.

We ſee that an hot or dry Summer, or a faire Spring time, brings many diſeaſes therwith; and how faſt weeds ſprout forth among the good herbs; beſides filling our houſes with flies, fleas, and like annoyances; the aire and ſtreets with unſavory and infectious ſmels: all which in Winter, in cold and froſty weather, do take their leave and are gone: So whileſt outward joy and proſperity with other contentments laſt, the body of the Church is peſtered with ſundry and divers ſpirituall bad humors and dangerous diſeaſes; which on the contrary it is preſerved and freed from by the variety of Gods fatherly rods and chaſtiſements.

(4) Now to proceed to the fourth benefit of afflictions, which is to kill the pride of our rebellious nature: The Hebrewes uſe theſe two words, to afflict and humble, for one and the ſame thing; as if the latter were the fruit of the former. Nor doe we want examples which may ſufficiently admoniſh us, that as worldly proſperity uſually cauſeth our hearts to ſwell, and to be puffed up; ſo on the contrary, adverſities and afflictions deject and humble us. Whileſt Nebuchadnezzar abounded in all his delights, his heart was ſwolne ſo farre with pride, that he began not only to oppreſſe his ſubjects, but to juſtle even againſt God himſelfe by his blaſphemies. But when God had once caſt him into the furnace of affliction, hee then became as meeke and humble a perſon as was in all his kingdome.

Dan.4.30.
Dan.3.15.

2 Chr.33. from verſe 1. to verſ 24.

Manaſſes raigning in peace and liberty over the people of Iudah, grew ſo inſolent, that there was no impiety or injuſtice wherein he overflowed not; but being ſurpriſed by his enemies, and laid in yron bands and fetters, he was changed in an inſtant, and became as low in his owne eſteeme as ever he thought himſelfe high: which appeareth in his prayer made to God in his affliction, wherein he proſtrates himſelfe before him, confeſſing his offences with great compunction of heart and humility.

Acts 9. from verſe 1. to verſe 24.

Saint Paul bare himſelfe like a fierce and cruell Lyon all the while hee enjoyed favor from the high Prieſts, raging hither and thither, breaking forcibly into houſes, and apprehending ſuch as he found to be profeſſors of the Goſpell; but the ſame man, being touched by Gods hand in the way as he was journying towards Damaſcus (intending there to exerciſe his Commiſſion upon the Saints and ſervants of Chriſt) ſuddenly became alſo as meeke as a Lambe, and was ready to proffer his ſervice in whatſoever the Lord would enjoyne him to doe.

Euſebius, in his Prologue to the eighth booke of his Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory, relates, how God ſeeing the pride which began to bud and ſpring forth in the Church, and principally among the Paſtors thereof (who out of their ambition ſtrove about dignities and preferments therein) was moved for that very thing to raiſe up that great perſecution which befell the Church under the reigne of Diocleſian and Maximinian, to crack their pride, and to provoke them to prayer, yea rather to watch over their flocks, than to contend who ſhould be the greateſt.

Wherein we may ſee, that by the bleſſing of God there is a kind of vertue in afflictions, to humble and bring thoſe home who through proſperity have forgotten themſelves, and ſtrayed out of the right way. Nay, ſo forcible are they to abate and take downe the pride of ſuch who otherwiſe are hardened and growne obſtinate, that even Pharaoh, as rebellious and ſtiffe necked as he was, ſeemed ſomtimes to bend and bow under the mighty hand of God. Whilſt God gave him ſome reſpite, it is true, he ſtill hardened his heart; but when the next judgement fell upon him and his people, he by and by became as pliable as a glove for ones hand.

Exo.8.8.& 9. 27.& 10,16.

Seeing then all of us naturally are thus inclined, to waxe proud by proſperity, a vice which God ſets and oppoſeth himſelfe againſt above other, as moſt abhominable in his ſight, we ought not me thinkes ſo much to be terrified at the approach of perſecutions, foraſmuch as they withhold from, and correct in us the ſame our pride, ſooner than all the inſtructions which are taught us by word of mouth.

The next benefit afflictions bring us, is to quicken us up to the prayer of faith, which is never better diſcerned than when afflictions lie heavieſt upon us. In my diſtreſſe (ſaith David) I cried unto the Lord. For as our deſires to obtaine mercy grow ſtronger, ſo are Pſal.120.1. our requeſts more or leſſe fervent; our deſire alway being according to our neceſſity. Let a man be ſicke, poore, or lie under any other greater tryall, the prayers of ſuch do beyond compariſon exceed in earneſtneſſe and fervour theirs, who are well and at their hearts eaſe. David in many of his Pſalmes preſſed the Lord in ſuch wiſe by prayer, Pſal.17.1,2. when troubles lay heavy upon him, as if he meant to take no deniall. & 28.1,2.

With what vehemency prayed the Apoſtles to God for ſtrength, being perſecuted Act 4.5,6. by the Rulers, Elders, and Scribes of Ieruſalem, inſomuch as the place was ſhaken where 24.9. they were aſſembled? He that ſhall duely weigh with what prayers and teares our Lord Heb.5.7. Ieſus Chriſt ſolicited his father in his paſſion, being nigh unto his death, will confeſſe Luke 22.44. that fire is not more apt to be kindled by the winds which blow upon it, than the prayer of Faith is fired and augmented by affliction. Would any man have imagined that ever ſuch voices of prayers and prayſes ſhould have been made in the belly of a Whale, as Ionas made being there as it were in the bottome of hell? Ionah 2. reade the whole chapter.

CHAP. IV.

Wherein is ſhewed that afflictions are not onely profitable, but pleaſant alſo.

I Grant that afflictions conſidered in themſelves are no way joyous but grievous, as the Apoſtle declareth, Heb.12.11. becauſe they are rather meſſengers of Gods diſpleaſure; the root alſo from whence they ſpring being indeed our ſins. But as we ſee how our Apothecaries in their ſhops have the skill to mixe poiſons with good and healthfull medicines: So our God, being infinitely more wiſe, knows ſo to temper our afflictions for our good, that out of things, bitter and diſtaſtefull to us in the owne nature, hee can compoſe not only a profitable, but a moſt pleaſant potion.

Yea, even as Bees out of the bittereſt herbs draw the moſt ſweet honey, ſo the Lord out of the tarteſt troubles extracts ſuch ſweets, that at length wee ſhall with Sampſon be Iudg.14.14. forced to ſay, Out of the Eater came forth meat, and out of the ſtrong came forth ſweetneſſe. Hunger in it ſelf is ſharp, and hard to be endured; yet our taſt is greatly delighted, when we can eat with an appetite. Could any man judge how beneficiall a fire were, if he were not ſometimes pinched with cold? Or with what delight could we accept of drink in the heat of Summer, if we were not almoſt dried up with thirſt? Or how acceptable reſt is, if we were not tyred out with travell and labour? As we ſee then, that theſe accidents (how grievous or incommodious ſoever, now incident unto our nature corrupted by ſinne) doe notwithſtanding diſpoſe us to receive exceeding contentments therefrom: So perſecutions, albeit in and of themſelves naturally abhorred, proceeding partly (as we have ſaid) from Gods diſpleaſure, and partly from Satan and his inſtruments; yet doe they fit and prepare us for the injoying of thoſe great conſolations which God hath promiſed to his Elect. Afflictions cauſe us to feele, firſt, That God is the Father of mercies, and of all comfort: Secondly, That the Office of Chriſt his Sonne is, To revive the 2 Cor 1. deſolate and broken in heart; Thirdly, That the holy Ghoſt is the comforter of his Church: Fourthly, That the word of God is it that miniſters comfort to us in all our tribulations and adverſities which for the moſt part befall us for adhering thereto. Rom.

For as he who would taſte meat ſavoury to his palate, uſeth ſalt therewith; ſo if wee would (to purpoſe) finde the Word of God taſtefull to us, commonly it is when wee are in affliction. When did the Apoſtles rejoyce more, than after they had taſted of the whip for the name of Chriſt? When did Saint Stephens face appeare as if it had been the face Acts 5.4 of an Angell, but when he ſtood before the Councell at Ieruſalem to anſwer for his life? Acts 6.

Dan.3.25. He that looked upon the three young men in the hot fiery furnace,ſaw them walking up and downe there,as in ſome pleaſant and delightfull medow or garden. Behold that antient father Ignatius, who (as himſelfe records) being led from Syria to Rome, there to be devoured, accompanied by ſea and land with a band of ſouldiers (which he tearmes ten Leopards) wiſhed by the way as he went, that he were in the middeſt of thoſe beaſts which were ready to rent him in pieces, and that their appetites might be whetted to diſpatch him quickly;fearing leſt it ſhould happen to him as to ſome other Martyrs, that the beaſts out of a kind of reverence and humanity would not dare to approch unto him; being ready, he ſaid, rather to provoke them to the fight, than that they ſhould ſuffer him ſo to eſcape.Pardon me,I pray you,ſaith he, for I know what is profitable for me: I now begin to be a Diſciple of Chriſt,I affect nothing this world affords ? What is ſo deare to me as Chriſt ? If it be not ſufficient for me to be torne with beaſts, let fires and all the tortures of men and Devils be prepared for me ; let all my body be diſmembred, my bones bruiſed to pieces, ſo that I may enjoy communion with my God, and come into the preſence of my Saviour. And when he heard the Lyons roaring, he ſaid, I am the Lords wheat, I muſt be ground with the teeth of wilde beaſts, that I may be found pure bread.

Simile. May we not now conjecture by the wiſhes of this holy Biſhop, what ſweet delight hee found in himſelfe in approaching nigh unto his Martyrdome?As a Queen then, or great Lady takes no greater content than when ſhe perceives in her husband ſome apparent ſignes of his favor, eſpecially then when ſhe hath conceived ſome ſuſpition of alienating his affection from her,or it ſeems to be any way cooled or abated : So the faithfull ſoule, who loves the Lord entirely,deſires nothing more, nor taketh at any time more delight, than when ſhe feeles from her husband Chriſt love for love, but chiefly in the houre of temptation and tribulation,which oft times cauſeth our heads and hearts to be poſſeſſed with jealouſies and ſuſpitions that we are out of his favour. Let us conclude then, that ſeeing (in regard of the reaſons heretofore alleadged) perſecutions are ſo honourable, every way profitable and delectable to the true Chriſtian ; What cauſe hath he either to be grieved or terrified when they befall him ? Nay, he ought with the Apoſtles and Martyrs to triumph and rejoyce.

To which purpoſe may fitly bee applyed that ſaying of Themiſtocles to his children, when hee ſaw the great honors that the King of Perſia had conferred upon him by their exile,finding kinder entertainment among ſtrangers than in their owne countrey ; We had periſhed,ſaid he,if we had not periſhed. So may we ſay, That did not our naturall life periſh here by perſecutions,we had never been ſaved in the kingdome of heaven.

Run we then(my brethren) with patience the race that is ſet before us ; let us not be aſhamed with Simon the Cyrenian to carry the reprochfull Croſſe of Chriſt;and ſeeing we muſt die once, let us deſire rather to die glorioully for righteouſneſſe ſake,than ignominiouſly by ſhunning it. If Princes had rather die in a breach than in their bed; and to loſe their life in the field,than an eye at tilt or tourney ; let us imitate them in this our ſpiritual conflict:earneſtly intreating the Lord,if it be his bleſſed will, that we may fight and die valiantly in the defence of his Truth,and for the honour of his ſonne. If worldly minded men can and will ſuffer many hard adventures,ſome for their honour,others for their profits and pleaſures,though but vaine and temporary ; with what longing ſhould we aſpire to that certaine and eternall happineſſe, reſt, and glory, wherewith all thoſe ſhall be crowned who fight manfully and conſtantly for the cauſe of Chriſt ?

But the world and worldlings ſmile at this wiſedome, counting it fooliſhneſſe ; the fleſh alſo joyning therewith thinks all we have ſaid to be either idle phantaſies,or meere paradoxes;and no marvell,for both of them being from the earth can ſavour nothing but what is earthly, as Chriſt ſaith. Betweene the judgement of the Church and that of the World there is a broad difference, when the queſtion is of determining what is true honour, profit, or pleaſure ; whence it is that in a manner the one ſcornes that which the other admires and adores. So as they never conſent in approving or condemning with one voice that which is queſtioned;for the belly hath no eares. If therefore we meane to be ruled aright either in the matter of faith or outward manners, let us not bee guided therein either by the worlds judgement, or yet that of the fleſh ; for the world is poreblinde,and the belly,as we have ſaid,hath no eares.

Ponder we then theſe things, that ſo wee may be prepared to obey the will of God: let us not wilfully ruſh into dangers; onely if God ſhall call us forth to ſuffer, purpoſing thereby to conforme us to our Head, and ſo to accompany that great cloud of witneſſes through the narrow way that leads to his kingdome, yeeld wee our neckes to beare the ſweet and eaſie yoke of Chriſt. Be it that Satan and his confederates doe perſecute the Church of Chriſt, yet hath ſhe an aſſured hiding place. The faithfull may be impriſoned, but in the meane while they leave the world in a worſe priſon, viz. ſhut up under the wrath of God. They may be in bonds, yet is not that ſo bad as to lie bound in the bonds of iniquity; they are oft ſhut up in darke and unſavoury places, but how can darkneſſe be grievous to them who are the children of light, eſpecially when God ſhines upon them with the light of his countenance? Stinking holes and odious ſmels cannot ſo offend and annoy them, but that the ſweet ſavour of a good conſcience, purified by faith, ſurmounts all. They may be put into dungeons in the world, yet being choſen of God out of the world, they have their converſation in heaven. Be it that they loſe a few commodities here, it is but as if they forſook counters to receive gold, things terreſtriall for celeſtiall. A Chriſtian may ſuffer, but he cannot die; he may loſe his life, but hee cannot loſe Chriſt; when he leaves the world he goes to God.

Wherefore let us then put on the whole armour of God, and as good ſouldiers of Ieſus Chriſt enure our ſelves to endure hardneſſe. So ſhall it come to paſſe, that continuing faithfull in this ſpirituall Warfare unto the death, we ſhall at length receive the crowne of eternall life.

THE HISTORY OF FOVRE MARTYRS BVRNT AT LILE IN FLANDERS, IN THE YEARE, 1556. WHOSE NAMES ARE ROBERT OGVIER, AND HIS WIFE, BAVDICON, AND MARTIN, their two Sonnes.

THe example which is ſet before us in this ſo godly a Family may well ſerve for an entrance to the Continuation of the Hiſtory of forrein Martyrs, in that wee may thence learne, what thoſe true ornaments are wherewith both parents and their children ought to bee decked and adorned, namely with ſuch a light ſhining forth from the ſound knowledge of the Goſpell, as whereby the Church of God may be edified and confirmed in ſeeing them to hold the profeſſion of their faith conſtantly even unto the death.

Anno 1556.

THe City of LILE may well bee placed in the firſt ranke of thoſe Cities of Merchandiſe in the Low-countrey of Flanders, Artois and Haynault, upon which the Lord hath multiplied his bleſſings, not ſo much of worldly good things, as of his ſpirituall graces; yea; in ſo abundant meaſure, that even under the tyranny of Antichriſt in the Countries aforenamed, few places can be named where the Goſpell in that time was more freely publiſhed and preached, or with greater zeale received than there.

For, for three yeares together the Goſpell was ſecretly taught among them, ſometime in houſes, then, in woods, in fields, and in caves of the earth, not without the hazarding of their deareſt life, if they had been diſcovered: yet could not theſe apparent dangers under ſuch tyranny coole or abate the burning zeale which almoſt conſumed the heart of this people, hungring and thirſting after the ſpirituall food of their ſoules.

What was among them preached, was accordingly practiſed: workes of mercy and charity were there exerciſed, not onely towards thoſe of the houſhold of Faith, but even towards them which were without; ſo as many by means hereof were drawn and brought on to the knowledge of Chriſt. They ordained in their aſſembly certaine Deacons to receive the almes which were given; men fearing God, being well approved of, who went weekely from houſe to houſe to collect the almes of ſuch as they knew to be faithful: admoniſhing every one how to carry themſelves in their vocations, and of their duty in contributing towards the reliefe of the poore Saints.

And thus each one according to his place endevoured to expreſſe and manifeſt his faith by the fruits thereof, namely good works.

In a very ſhort ſpace of time, the Lord by the Miniſtry of his Word (though preached in ſecret) erected here a flouriſhing Church, ſo as the Congregation conſiſted of a competent number of men, women, and children, not onely of the city, but out of foure or five Villages beſides bordering nigh unto it, who came alſo with an eager appetite to be inſtructed.

In the meane while, you may conceive that ſatan and his adherents ceaſed not to ſtorm and rage hereat, not being able long to endure theſe their holy meetings; but when the time was now come, that God had given them power to prove and try his Church, they foreſlowed not to exerciſe their cruelty upon it, which long before they had plotted and contrived.

Upon Saturday then the ſixth of March, Ann. 1556. betweene nine and ten of the Clocke in the night, the Provoſt of the City with his Sergeants armed themſelves to make ſearch, if they could finde any met together in houſes; but as then there was no aſſembly. Therfore they came to the houſe of one whoſe name was Robert Oguier, which was a little Church: for all both great and ſmall, men-ſervants and maids were familiarly inſtructed there in the knowledge of God, as the iſſue well manifeſted.

Being violently entred into the ſaid houſe, and ſeeking here and there for their prey, they found certaine bookes which they carried away. But he whom they principally aimed at was not then in the houſe; viz. Baudicon the ſonne of the ſaid Robert Oguier, who at that time was gone abroad to commune and talke of the word of God with ſome of the brethren, as he oft uſed to do. Returning home, he knocked at the dore: Martin his younger brother, watching his comming, bad him be gone, willing him not to come in. But Baudicon, thinking his brother miſtooke him for ſome other, ſaid, it is I, open the dore: with that, the ſergeants approching nigh unto it, opened the ſame, and cauſing him to enter in, ſaid, Ah Sir, you are well met,to whom he anſwered,I thank you my friends,you alſo are welcome hither.

Then ſaid the Provoſt,I arreſt you all in the Emperors name,and with that commanded each of them to be bound,to wit,the husband & his wife with their two ſons, leaving their two daughters to looke to the houſe. Now as they conveied them along through the ſtreets, Baudicon with a voice ſomewhat extended (which might eaſily be heard at that time of the night)ſaid, O Lord,aſſiſt us by thy grace not onely to be priſoners for thy name ſake, but to confeſſe thy holy truth in all purity before men, ſo farre as to ſeale the ſame with our blouds for the edification of thy poore Church.

The prayer which Baudicon made as he was led to priſon.

Thus were they brought into ſeverall priſons, where they were ſeverally handled; yet ceaſed they not to praiſe and bleſſe the Lord with one conſent; within a few daies after,the priſoners were preſented before the Magiſtrates of the City, and examined as touching their courſe of life, who directed their ſpeech firſt to Robert Oguier in theſe words : It is told us that you never come to maſſe, yea, and alſo diſſuade others from comming thereto; wee are further informed that you maintain conventicles in your houſe, cauſing erroneous doctrines to be preached there contrary to the ordinance of our holy Mother the Church, whereby you have tranſgreſſed the lawes of the Imperiall Maieſty.

Robert Oguier anſwered, whereas firſt of all you lay to my charge that I goe not to Maſſe;I refuſe ſo to do,indeed, becauſe the death and pretious bloud of the ſonne of God, and his ſacrifice is utterly aboliſhed there,and troden under foot. For Chriſt by one ſacrifice hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified. The Apoſtle ſaith, by one offering. For do we read in all the ſcriptures, that either the Prophets, Chriſt, or any of his Apoſtles ever ſaid maſſe? for they knew not what it meant. Chriſt indeed inſtituted the holy Supper,in which all Chriſtian people doe communicate together,but they ſacrificed not. If you pleaſe to read the Bible over, you ſhall never finde the Maſſe once mentioned therein. And therefore it is the meer invention of men. You know then what Chriſt ſaith, In vain do they worſhip me, teaching for doctrines the commandements of men. If either my ſelfe,or any of mine had beene at Maſſe, which is ordained by the commandement of men,Chriſt would have told us,we had worſhipped him in vaine.

Heb.10.14.

Mat.15.9.

As for the ſecond accuſation, I cannot nor will deny, but there have met together in my houſe honeſt people fearing God;I aſſure you not with intention to wrong or harme any, but rather for the advancement of Gods glory, and the good of many. I knew indeed that the Emperor had forbidden it,but what then? I knew alſo that Chriſt in his Goſpell had commanded it. Where two or three,ſaith he,are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midſt of them. Thus you ſee I could not well obey the Emperour, but I muſt diſobey Chriſt. In this caſe then,I choſe rather to obey my God,then man.

Mat.18.20.

One of the Magiſtrates demanded what they did when they met together.

To which Baudicon the eldeſt ſon of Robert Oguier anſwered ; if it pleaſe you my Maſters to give mee leave, I will open the buſineſſe at large unto you.

The Sheriffes ſeeing his promptnes, looking one upon another ſaid, well, let us heare it then. Baudicon, lifting up his eies to heaven, began thus:when we meet together in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt to heare the word of God,we firſt of all proſtrate upon our knees before God, and in the humility of our Spirits doe make a confeſſion of our ſinnes before his divine Maieſtie. Then we pray that the word of God may be rightly divided,and purely preached : wee alſo pray for our Soveraigne Lord the Emperour, and for all his honourable Counſellors, that the Common-wealth may be peaceably governed to the glory of God ; yea we forget not you whom we acknowledge our ſuperiors ; intreating our good God for you, and for this whole City,that you may maintaine it in all tranquillity. Thus I have ſummarily related unto you what we do : thinke you now, whether wee have offended ſo highly in this matter of our aſſemblies. Moreover if you will not be offended to heare the tenour of the prayers we make there, I am ready to recite the ſame unto you.

One of the Magiſtrates gave him a ſigne by which hee might underſtand that they deſired to heare it. Baudicon then kneeling downe before them,prayed with ſuch fervency of affection, that the like ardency of zeale never appeared in him in ſo admirable a maner as at that time; Inſomuch that the Magiſtrates were forced to burſt forth into tears;beholding what a gratious Spirit the yong man was endued withall. Then ſtanding up,hee ſaid, now your Maſterſhips may take a ſcantling by this, how wee are imployed in our meetings.

Whilſt they were thus examined,ech of them made an open confeſſion of the faith which they held. After this being returned againe into priſon,they not long after were put to the torture,to make them confeſſe who they were that frequented their houſe, but they would diſcover none,unleſſe ſuch as were well knowne to the Judges,or elſe were at that time abſent. About foure or five daies after, they were convented againe before their Judges,namely, the father & his two ſons : and after many words paſſed , they asked them whether they would ſubmit themſelves to the will of the Magiſtrates. Robert Oguier and Baudicon his ſonne,with ſome deliberation,ſaid, yes,we will.

Then demanding the ſame of Mart.the younger brother,he anſwered, that he would not ſubmit himſelfe thereto, but would accompany his Mother;ſo he was ſent backe againe to priſon, whileſt the father and the ſon were adiudged to be burned alive to aſhes. Now as they went to receive the ſentence,one of the Judges ſitting in his place,after ſentence pronounced, ſaid, to day you ſhall go to dwell with all the Devils in hell fire(which he ſpake as one tranſported with fury in beholding the great patience of theſe two ſervants of Chriſt)for they tooke all things quietly, vanquiſhing their enemies cruelty by patient bearing the Croſſe, and in prayſing God for the ſame. Having received the ſentence of death,they were returned to the priſon whence they came, being ioyfull that the Lord did them that honor to be enrolled in the number of his Martyrs. No ſooner entred they the priſon,but a band of Fryers came in thither:one amongſt the reſt told them, the houre was come in which they muſt finiſh their daies. Robert Oguier and his ſon anſwered, we know it well. But bleſſed be the Lord our God, who now delivering our bodies out of this vile priſon, will receive our ſoules into his glorious and heavenly kingdome.

One of the Fryers whoſe name was Lazard, a notable limme of Antichriſt, endeavoured to turne them from their faith, ſaying,Father Robert,thou art an old man,let mee intreat thee in this thy laſt houre to think of ſaving thine owne ſoule.And if thou wilt give eare to mee, I warrant thee thou ſhalt do well.

The old man anſwered, poore man,how dareſt thou attribute that to thy ſelfe which belongs to the eternall God, and ſo rob him of his honour ; for it ſeemes by thy ſpeech, that if I will hearken to thee, thou wilt become my Saviour. No, no, I have one only Saviour Ieſus Chriſt, who by and by will deliver me from this miſerable world. I have one Doctor, whom the heavenly Father hath commanded me to heare, and I purpoſe to hearken to none other.

Anno 1556.

Mat.17.5.

A Fryer, called the Father of Saint Clare, exhorting him to take pitty of his ſoule which Chriſt had redeemed: Thou willeſt me, ſaid Robert, to pitty mine owne ſoule, doeſt thou not ſee what pitty I have on it, when for the name of Chriſt I willingly abandon this body of mine to the fire, hoping to day to be with him in Paradiſe? I have put all my confidence in God, and my hope wholly is fixed upon the merits of Chriſt his death and paſſion, he will direct me the right way to his Kingdome. I beleeve whatſoever the holy Prophets and Apoſtles have written, and in that faith will I live and die.

The Fryer hearing this, ſaid, Out Dog, thou art not worthy the name of a Chriſtian; thou and thy ſon with thee are both reſolved to damne your bodies and ſoules with all the devills in the bottome of hell.

As they were about to ſever Baudicon from his father, he ſaid, Let my father alone, and trouble him not thus, he is an old man, and hath an infirme body, hinder him not I pray you, from receiving the Crowne of Martyrdome.

Another of the Fryers ſaid, Away varlet, thou art the cauſe of thy fathers perdition. The Friers then turning themſelves towards the Executioner, ſaid, On, on, Officer, doe thine Office, for we will be gone, we loſe but our labour, ſeeing the devill hath bewitched them.

Baudicon was then conveyed into a chamber apart, and there being ſtripped of his clothes was fitted to be ſacrificed; now as one brought him Gunpowder to put to his breaſt, an odde fellow ſtanding by ſaid, Wert thou my brother, I would ſell all that I am worth to buy Fagots to burne thee, thou findeſt but too much favour. The yong man anſwered, Well Sir, the Lord ſhew you more mercy. Some that were preſent, ſaying, Good God, is it not a pittifull ſight to behold theſe poore men? A Doctor being by anſwered, And what pity would you have ſhewed towards them? I would in ſtead of allowing them this powder have them fryed on Gridirons, as S. Laurence was.

Saint Laurence was roſted on a gridiron by Pagans. In this age the godly find in a manner the like from falſe and fained Chriſtians.

A gentle perſwaſion.

Whileſt they ſpake thus to Baudicon, ſome of the Fryers cloſed in with the old man, perſwading him at leaſt to take a Crucifixe into his hands, leſt the people (ſaid they) ſhould murmure againſt you; adding further, that he might for all that lift up his heart to God, becauſe you know, ſaid they, it is but a peece of wood.

Thus they faſtened it betweene his hands, but as ſoone as Baudicon was come downe, and eſpied what they had done to his father, he ſaid, Alas father, what doe you now, will you play the Idolater even at your laſt houre. And then pulling the idoll out of his hands which they had faſtned therein, he threw it away, ſaying, What cauſe hath the people to be offended at us, for not receiving a Ieſus Chriſt of wood? We beare upon our hearts the Croſſe of Chriſt the Son of the everliving God, feeling his holy word written therein in Letters of Gold.

As they were led to execution, a band of ſouldiers were attendant upon them, no leſſe then if a Prince had been conducted into his kingdome. Being come to the place where they were to ſuffer, they aſcended up the ſcaffold which was there prepared for them. Then Baudicon asked leave of the Sheriffes to make a confeſſion of his faith before the people. Anſwer was made, That hee was to looke unto his ghoſtly Father and Confeſſor; confeſſe your ſelfe (ſaid they) to him. He was then haled rudely to the ſtake, where he began to ſing the ſixteenth Pſalme. The Fryer cryed out, Doe you not heare my Maſters, what wicked errours theſe hereticks ſing, to beguile the people withall. Baudicon hearing what he ſaid, replyed thus; Now ſimple idiot, calleſt thou the Pſalmes of the Prophet David, errors? But no marvell, for thus you are wont to blaſpeme againſt the Spirit of God.

Then turning his eye towards his father, who was about to be chained to the ſtake, he ſaid, Be of good courage father, the worſt will be paſt by and by. As the executioner was faſtening him to the poſt, he chanced to hit him with his hammer on the foot, to make him ſtand neerer to the ſame. The old man being ſenſible of the blow, ſaid, Friend, thou hurteſt my foot, why doeſt thou abuſe me thus? The Frier hearing this, ſaid, Ah theſe heretickes! They would be counted Martyrs forſooth; but if they be but touched a little, they cry out as they were killed. To which Baudicon thus replyed: Thinke you then that we feare the tormentors? No ſuch matter; for had we feared the ſame, we had never expoſed our bodies to this ſo ſhamefull and painfull a kinde of death.

Then he often reiterated theſe ſhort breathings, O God, Father everlaſting, accept the ſacrifice of our bodies, for thy well beloved Sonne Ieſus Chriſts ſake. One of the Friers cried, Heretike, thou lieſt, he is none of thy father, the Devill is thy father. And thus, during theſe conflicts, he bent his eyes to heaven, and ſpeaking to his father, ſaid; Behold, for I ſee the heavens open, and millions of Angels ready preſt to receive us, rejoycing to ſee us thus witneſſing the truth in the view of the World. Father, let us be glad and rejoyce, for the joyes of heaven are ſet open unto us.

Then ſaid one of the Fryers, I ſee hell open, and millions of Devils preſent to carry you thither. But the Lord, who never forſakes any that put their truſt in him, ſtirred up the heart and opened the mouth of a poore man who ſtood among the multitude, beholding this ſpectacle, who being moved with compaſſion, cryed aloud, Be of good comfort Baudicon, ſtand thou to it, thou fighteſt in a good quarrell, I am on thy ſide; after which words he departed thence, and a way being made for him, ſaved himſelfe from danger.

Fire was forthwith put to the ſtraw and wood which burnt beneath, whileſt they (not thinking for the paines) ſpake one to another; Baudicon often repeating this in his fathers eares, Faint not father, nor be afraid, Yet a very little while and wee ſhall enter into the heavenly manſions.

In the end the fire growing hot upon them, the laſt words they were heard to pronounce, were Ieſus Chriſt thou Sonne of God, into thy hands we commend our ſpirits. And thus theſe two ſlept ſweetly in the Lord.

Within eight dayes after, Iane the mother, and Martin her ſonne were executed in the ſame City of Lile; but of this more hereafter.

Iane the wife of Robert Oguier, and Martin her ſonne, Martyrs.

THe wife here followes her husband, and accompanies her ſonne: her converſion is admirable; for being ſevered from him, the Friers having ſeduced her laboured with her to turne her ſonne alſo out of the right way; but he underſtanding thereof recovers his mother againe, and ſo they both gaue their lives for the truth, to the great confuſion of their enemies.

Anno 1556.

But before we come to deſcribe their happy ends, we will, as briefely as may be, note by the way the great conflicts of ſpirit which both of them ſuſtained.

There were ſent unto them many of the popiſh rabble, to turne them from their faith. Now that this their devilliſh enterpriſe might the rather be effected, they ſundred one of them from the other, ſo as by the politique deuice of a Monke, the poore woman began to waver, and let goe her firſt faith. At this their enemies reioyced not a little, whileſt the poore little flocke of Chriſt, hearing ſuch ſad newes, were in continuall perplexity, but the Lord left them not in this mournfull condition.

For on a day one of the Monkes reſorted to her in the priſon, counſelling her to win her ſonne Martin, and to draw him from his errors: which ſhe promiſed to doe. But when he was come to his Mother, and perceiued that ſhe was not onely fallen, but alſo quite turned out of the right way, he began with teares to bewayle her miſerable eſtate.

O Mother, ſaith he, what have you done? Have you denyed him who hath redeemed you? Alas, what evill hath he done you, that you ſhould requite him with this ſo great an iniury and diſhonour. Now I am plunged into that woe, which I have moſt feared. Ah good God, that I ſhould live to ſee this, which pierceth me to the very heart.

His Mother hearing theſe his pittifull complaints, and ſeeing the teares which her ſonne ſhed for her, began againe to renue her ſtrength in the Lord, and with teares cryed out, O Father of mercies, be mercifull unto me miſerable ſinner, and cover my tranſgreſſion under the righteouſneſſe of thy bleſſed Sonne; Lord enable me with ſtrength from above, to ſtand to my firſt confeſſion, and make me to abide ſtedfaſt therein even unto my laſt breath.

It was not long after this her change, but the ſame inſtruments of Satan, who had ſeduced her, came in, ſuppoſing to finde her in the ſame minde wherein they left her: whom ſhe no ſooner eſpied, but with deteſtation ſaid, Avoyd Satan, get thee behinde me: for henceforth thou haſt neither part nor portion in me. I will by the help of God ſtand to my firſt confeſſion; And if I may not ſigne it with Inke I will ſeale it with my blood. And ſo from that time this fraile veſſell, who for a while relented, after her recovery grew ſtronger and ſtronger.

The Iudges ſeeing their conſtancy, delayed not to diſpatch them out of the way, condemning them to be burned alive, and their bodies being reduced to aſhes, the ſame to be ſcattered and diſperſed in the aire. The mother and the ſonne having heard their ſentence read, in the way as they were going backe againe to priſon, ſaid, now bleſſed be our God, who cauſeth us thus to triumph over our enemies: This is the wiſhed houre, our gladſome day is come. Let us not then, ſaid Martin, forget to be thankefull for the honour he doth us, in thus conforming us unto the Image of his Sonne. Let us remember thoſe who have traced this path before us: for this is the high way to the Kingdome of heaven. Let us then good Mother goe on boldly out of the Campe with the Son of God, bearing his reproach, with all his holy Martyrs; for ſo we ſhall finde paſſage into the glorious Kingdome of the everliving God.

Heb.13.13.

Some of the company hearing, but not being able to brooke theſe words, ſaid, we ſee now thou heretique that thou art wholly poſſeſſed body and ſoule with a divell, as was thy father and brother who are both in Hell. Martin ſaid, Sirs, as for your railings and curſings, our God will this day turne them into bleſſings in the ſight of himſelfe and of all his holy Angels.

A certaine temporizer ſaid to Martin, thou ſilly youth thou ſayeſt thou knoweſt not what; thou art too well conceited of thy ſelfe and of thy cauſe. Seeſt thou not all this people here about thee? what thinkeſt thou of them? they beleeve not as thou doeſt, and yet I doubt not but they ſhall be ſaved. But you imagine to doe that which will never come to paſſe, though you pretend never ſo much that you are in the faith, and have the Scriptures for you.

See here the ſundry ſleights of Satan.

The good woman hearing this, anſwered, Sir, Chriſt Jeſus our Lord ſaith, that it is the wide gate and broad way which leades to deſtruction, and therefore many goe in thereat: but the gate, ſaith he, is narrow that leades to life, and few there be that finde it. Doe ye then doubt whether we are in the ſtraight way or no, when ye behold our ſufferings? would you have a better ſigne then this, to know whether we are in the right way or no? Compare our Doctrine with that of your Prieſts and Monkes: we for our parts are determined to have but one Chriſt and him crucified; we onely embrace the Scriptures of the old and new Teſtament. Are we deceived in beleeving that which the holy Prophets and Apoſtles have taught?

Mat.7.12.

How we may know we are in the right way.

One of the Fryers turning towards Martin, ſaid, young man, be well adviſed; for thy father and thy brother have acknowledged the ſeven Sacraments of the Church together with us: and thou poore ſilly youth haſt heard ſome wicked Heretique who hath deluded thee: thinkeſt thou thy ſelfe wiſer then ſo many learned Doctors as have lived in ſo many ages? Martin anſwered, I pray you Sir, doth not Chriſt our Lord tell us, that his Father hath hid the ſecrets of his Kingdome from the wiſe and prudent, and revealed them to babes? And doth not the Lord oftentimes catch the wiſe in their owne craftineſſe?

Mat.11.25.
Iob 5.13.

And whereas you ſay my Father and Brother have confeſſed ſeven Sacraments, I well perceive by this that I ought not to give credit to ought you ſay; know ye not that the Devill is the father of lies, and all liers? Is it not ſufficient that I acknowledge ſo many Sacraments as God himſelfe hath inſtituted and ordained, to wit, Baptiſme and the Supper of the Lord?

Then came there into the priſon two men of great authority in the City of Liſle, the one called Mounſieur Barras, the other Beaufremes, who promiſed Martin great matters, if he would recant and returne to the Roman Church. Beaufremes among other ſpeeches ſaid thus unto him, Young man, I have compaſſion on thy tender yeeres, if thou wilt be ruled by us, I will promiſe thee thou ſhalt not die this ſhamefull death: moreover, I will give thee one hundred pounds ſterling.

100li. amount to two hundred crownes, but this faithfull Martyr of Chriſt was not like Iudas, who for love of money ſold his Maſter.

Martin gave him this anſwere. Sir, you preſent before me many temporall commodities: but alas, doe you thinke me ſo ſimple, as to forſake an eternall Kingdome for enjoying of a ſhort tranſitory life? No ſir, it is too late to ſpeake to me now of worldly commodities, but of thoſe ſpirituall, which God hath prepared for me to day in his Kingdome: nor doe I purpoſe to hearken after any other: onely, I pray you let me crave one houres reſpite to give my ſelfe to prayer, and calling upon the Name of my God: for you know now it is eight daies ſince my father departed this world, and hitherto I have ſcarce enioyed an hours reſt; That which I have had, hath rather been to ſlumber in, then have any quiet ſleepe, having continually had eight or nine perſons invironing me about, and talking unto me.

After theſe great men were forced to goe even as they came, Martin declared the effect of this his combat to certaine Brethren who were there detained with him in priſon; ſaying moreover, Let us lift up our heads Brethren, the brunt is over, this I hope is their laſt aſſault; forget not, I pray you, the holy doctrine of the Goſpell, nor thoſe good leſſons which you have learned from our Brother " Guy. Manifeſt it now to all, that you have received them not only into your eares, but alſo into your hearts; follow me, we leade you the way; feare not, God will never leave nor forſake you: farewell Brethren, ſaid he, and ſo departed from them.

It is very likely hee meanes Guy de Brez a godly Miniſter, of whom you ſhall read more, God willing, hereafter.

Soone after Martin and his mother were bound and brought to the place of their Martyrdome: His mother having aſcended the ſcaffold, cryed to Martin, Come up, Come up my ſonne. And as he was ſpeaking to the people, ſhe ſaid, Speake out Martin, ſaith ſhe, that it may appeare to all, that we die not Heretiques. Martin would have made a confeſſion of his faith, but could not be ſuffered. His mother being bound to the ſtake, ſpake in the hearing of the Spectators, We are Chriſtians, and that which we now ſuffer is not for murther or theft, but becauſe we will beleeve no more than that which the Word of God teacheth us: Both rejoycing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer for the ſame.

The fire being kindled, the vehemency thereof did nothing coole or abate the fervency of their zeale, but they continued conſtant in the faith, and with lifting up their hands to heaven, in an holy accord ſaid, Lord Ieſus into thy hands we commend our ſpirits. And thus they bleſſedly ſlept in the Lord. Theſe were the fruits which theſe holy aſſemblies in the City of Liſle brought forth. None need to enquire whether the reſt were ſuffered to live in peace; for what other ſpectacles were to be eſpied in the high waies and fields, but poore fugitives flying hither and thither, for ſafegard of their lives. So great was the cruelty which was then and there exerciſed among them: and yet, when all is done, God will be glorified in his Saints and children.

The happy death of the mother and her ſonne.

THis Robert had his tongue cut out becauſe he would not pronounce Ieſus Maria, to joyne them both in one prayer; for being urged thereunto with great threats, he boldly anſwered, that if his tongue ſhould but offer to utter thoſe words at their bidding, himſelfe would bite it aſunder with his teeth.

A Martyrs tongue cut out for refuſing to call upon the virgin Mary.

¶ Bartholomew Hector, Martyr, was burned according to the ſentence of the parliament of Turin in Piedmont, in the yeer 1556. Iune the 19.

BEing called before Authority to be examined, he would anſwer them to nothing before he had made his prayer to God. Whereupon falling downe there on his knees, he beſought him to open his mouth, and to direct his ſpeech onely to utter that which might tend to his honor and glory, and to the edification of his Church. Afterwards, when he was bound to the ſtake, gunpowder and brimſtone was brought to be placed about him, he lifting up his eyes to heaven, and ſaying, Lord, how ſweet and welcome is this to me?

The Martyr would not anſwer the Adverſary till he had firſt craved aſſiſtance from God.

¶ Charles Covincke, or le Roy de Gand, once a Friar Carmelite at Gand in Flanders, was apprehended and executed at Bruges in the ſame Countrey, Anno 1557. Aprill 27.

BEing perſwaded by his brother to returne againe to his Order, and take upon him his fryers habit; he made him this direct anſwer, what needs that, ſaith he? now I have caſt off that popiſh weed I will never reſume it againe. Chriſt hath now ſet me free, I will be no longer of the Order of the ſlaves of Satan.

Charles would none of his popiſh habit which he had once rejected.

One of the Magiſtrates of Bruges conferring with him, promiſed to procure his deliverance if he would yeeld but a little; and if his fryers coate diſpleaſed him, he would get him a diſpenſation from the Pope to forbeare the wearing of it, and provide him a Canonſhip. Sir, ſaid Charles, I give you many thankes for your good will and theſe your kinde offers: would to God I could accept of them without offending his Majeſty; you offer me a Canonſhip, that I might live quietly and in ſecurity; but know you ſir, That reſt is no true reſt and quietnſſe which is obtained againſt the peace of a good conſcience?

That is not worthy the name of reſt which is procured with offence of conſcience.

A few dayes after his execution, one of them, who had his hand deepeſt in procuring his cruell death, died himſelfe in ſuch terror and horror of conſcience, that it gave ſufficient teſtimony to thoſe of Bruges, that they had put to death an Innocent, and that God was highly offended with thoſe that had perſecuted him.

A judgement of God upon a perſecutor.

¶ Philibert Hamelin of Tournay, Miniſter and Martyr, was there executed in the yeere 1557.

WHileſt he remained priſoner ſome of his friends dealt with him to breake priſon, and offered him meanes tending thereto. But he on the contrary, having reſolved to give his life for ſo juſt a quarrell as he maintained, refuſed, ſaying, I eſteeme it altogether unbeſeeming for a man that is called to preach Gods Word to others, to run away and breake priſon for fear of danger, but rather to maintaine the Truth taught even in the midſt of the flaming fire.

Preachers muſt be no breakers of priſons.

After ſentence of death was paſſed upon him by the court, whereby he knew he had not long to live, yet did he eat his dinner with the reſt of the priſoners as joyfully as though he had been in no danger, ſpeaking unto them of the happineſſe of eternall life, comforting all that ſate at table with him in the Conciergery.

A good conſcience is a continuall feaſt.

That none might hear what he ſaid at the place of execution, the trumpets were cauſed to be ſounded continually; yet might it be ſeene, both by his geſtures and cheerefulneſſe of his countenance, that they could not let him from ſpeaking to God.

¶ Archambant Seraphon, Martyr, in the yeere 1557.

BEing demanded what he thought of the Pope and his authority, he anſwered, I think verily that ſame is he of whom Saint Paul ſpeakes in his ſecond Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, Chapter the ſecond. Which words he being willed to ſigne with his hand; Yea, yea ſir, ſaid he, I am now ready to ſigne it with my blood rather than with Inke.

A practiſe of the Papiſts.

The Martyrs ready to ſeale the truth with their blood.

Hee reports in a Letter written to his wife and friends, that whereas this Jaylor was wont to carry himſelfe as ſternly towards him as a Lyon, roaring alwaies in ſuch wiſe upon him that all the priſoners were amaſed at it, the Lord had now ſo mollified his heart, that he became as meek as a Lambe, declaring how he would come and viſite him himſelfe in his priſon, and as well as he was able comforted him, ſaying, Take no care, God will aſſiſt you; nor ſhall it be ſo ill with you as you thinke for. For what doe your enemies ſay, Alas he is but a ſilly pedler, who, paſſing along this way, broached his opinions to none: that alſo which he holds concerning the ſame, he keepes to himſelfe; therefore be of good cheere. Sir, ſaid he, I praiſe God I am of good comfort, being ready to receive whatſoever it ſhall pleaſe him to appoint; If life, life; if death, death be it.

A Jaylor of a Lyon became a Lamb.

One thing I had like to have omitted concerning him, which yet is worth the noting, namely, this.

An exhortation to get the Pſalmes without booke.

This Archambant, in a letter to his wife, puts his brethren in minde to learn Davids Pſalms; My brethren, ſaith he, I exhort you in the Name of God, that you would learne, yea, learne the Pſalmes without booke whileſt you have time and leaſure; for when you ſhall be caſt into dark priſons (I ſay when God ſhall call you to ſuffer for his ſake) you ſhall then have no booke with you, whether of a ſmall or great Print, to ſee what part ſucceeds another; which I now utter to my great griefe and ſhame; for if I ſhould tell you I lacked forewarning long agoe, you can beare witneſſe to the contrary: Nor doe I know now what to doe, but even to humble my ſelfe before the Lord, crying unto him, Mercy, mercy, Lord have mercy upon me. Bleſſed and happy are they who are carefull to get knowledge and faith, as oyle into their veſſels, before the Bridegroome come.

When he looked on his hands, he was wont to ſay, ô fleſh, thou muſt ſuffer and be turned into aſhes, untill the laſt day.

Ieffery Vergale Martyr in the yeare 1557. He was burned at Turin the laſt of December.

STanding upon a ſtoole at the ſtake, the executioner according to the cuſtome prayed him to forgive him his death.

Ieffery anſwered him, I not onely forgive thee, but thoſe alſo who firſt impriſoned me at Burges, yea, thoſe that brought me to this City, and have condemned me to this death. Be not afraid, doe thine office, my death ſhall not be unprofitable.

The death of the Martyrs is not without fruit.

Nicolas Ieuville Martyr in the yeere 1557. who with two others mentioned hereafter were burned in the place called Mawbert without Paris in France.

THis godly Martyr being condemned to be burned alive, and his tongue to be cut out, the Tormentor being there preſent offered to put the halter about his necke, but he repulſed him twice, appealing from the Sentence. But becauſe he was preſſed upon to receive it the third time, and thinking his appeale would not take place, he took it, ſaying; Prayſed be God, for I am now counted worthy to be one of the heavenly Order.

Two innocents condemned to ſuffer death, the one of them being called Henry the Taylor.

THis Henry rejoyced at the hearing of the ſentence read, ſaying, This is the day we have long expected, and therefore give our ſelves willingly to die, but as for the puniſhment, my maſters, that we leave to you: yet we pray that God would pardon you this injuſtice.

These two were burnt at Antwerpe. The Martyrs willingly give their necks to the blocke, but left the puniſhment to their perſecutors.

At which ſpeeches the Magiſtrates turned away their faces not willing to heare it; but Adrian, who was the other Martyr, told them boldly, That God would require the blood of the juſt at their hands whom they daily put to death.

The next day being appointed for their execution, a great multitude were aſſembled into the Market place, to behold the behaviour of theſe godly men, who, as they were led to death, proteſted, That the cauſe why they dyed, was only for bearing witneſſe to the truth of the Goſpell, which words they uttered with ſuch courage, that the officers, who invironed them round about, ſtrove to damp the ſame by a great noiſe; which they made, leſt their voice ſhould be underſtood. Whileſt the executioner faſtened them to the ſtake, there was on an inſtant ſuch an hurly burly amongſt the people, that with one voice they cryed, Kill, kill, ruſhing one in upon another. By and by the ſhops and doores of houſes were ſhut up. The hangman let fall all his preparations, leaving the two patients ſtanding at the ſtake. The Margrave being on horſeback could by no meanes get away, being compaſſed in on each ſide. The Officers trembling for feare threw downe their halberds. The ſpy who attended there to hearken, not knowing where to beſtow himſelfe, forſook his horſe, and ran into a Church for feare.

There were they in great feare, where no feare was, for as ſaith the Pſalmiſt, God is in the generation of the righteous. Pſal. 14.5.

And though one told him that a cutpurſe had cauſed all this adoe, he would not be drawn to beleeve him, but ſaid, I know we are but dead men; it is not the Theefe, but the ſeditious people who now begin to work their revenge. Thus God confounded theſe bloodthirſty, ſhewing how he could have brought all their preparations to nothing if it had pleaſed him.

As ſoon as this hubbub was quieted, the ſervant of the executioner ran and ſtrangled the two Martyrs, who had now a good ſpace been faſtened to the ſtake, ſtill calling upon the name of the Lord. The fire being afterward kindled, the bodies were conſumed to aſhes the 19. of January, 1559.

A Recantation fathered upon a Martyr called Cornelius Hallewin, which he never conſented to, and how he tooke the ſame, in the yeare 1559.

THe father of this Cornelius, ſolliciting the Margraue & his wife (who as it was thought was Godmother to Cornelius) to get his ſonne out of priſon; It was ſo agreed among them, that a libell ſhould be framed under the name of Cornelius, wherein he ſhould now acknowledge his error, be confeſſed to a Prieſt, would alſo receive his Maker, and come againe into the ſtate of grace, as a good childe of his holy mother the Church. And further ſhould ſay, That Sermons were of no worth, because they were not made upon holy ground. Alſo requiring that if hee had failed in ought elſe, the ſame ſhould be attributed to his young yeares, and therefore craued pardon. Howbeit the ſaid Cornelius wrote letters daily in the meane while to the brethren, ſhewing forth an admirable conſtancy in defending the faith; gladding the hearts of many, who gaue God thankes for the graces of his good Spirit wherewith he had indued him.

The Miniſter of the Flemiſh Church hearing of this Libell, by the meanes of ſome friends, got a Copy thereof, and hauing read it, conſidering how the tenor thereof tended to a great ſcandall, made the Elders and Deacons of the Church acquainted therewith, who were not a little grieued for the infirmity of their weake brother. Whereupon, the Miniſter wrote a ſharpe letter vnto him, willing him to turne and repent him of his backeſliding, by making a true Confeſſion thereof before the councel. When Cornelius had receiued this letter, & read it, he was ſo vexed & perplexed in his ſpirit, that he knew not how to demean himſelfe, ſo as all the godly his Priſon fellowes had much adoe to ſtay and comfort him. The blood guſhed out of his noſe, hée ſpread abroad his armes, and made pitifull outcries. What, to deny the truth (ſaid he) God forbid? Oh that the faithfull ſhould conceiue ſo hardly of me! Good God thou knoweſt that I am guiltleſſe, nor haue I this way offended. Then the reſidue of the brethren aduiſed him to get a ſight of his inditement, which if it contained no ſuch thing, then to ſend it to the Church, and ſo manifeſt to them his innocency touching that whereof he was accuſed: beſides, making a plaine confeſſion of his faith, to impart the ſame to the Councell, & therewithall to ſhew how he was abuſed by the Margraue and his Parents, which he accordingly did.

The ſaid Cornelius being condemned to die, the Margraue offered him ſo much more fauour as to die a more eaſie kinde of death, if he would but giue eare to the prieſts whom he had brought with him into the priſon. Cornelius replied, no Sir, God forbid I ſhould do ſuch a thing: doe ye with my body what ye will. As they bound him, & Herman Janſſen (who both ſuffered together) Herman willed the Margraue to take héed what he did: for, ſaith he, this will not goe for paiment in Gods ſight in bereauing vs thus of our liues. I wiſh you to repent therefore before it be too late, you cannot long continue this tyrannous courſe, for the Lord will ſhortly auenge it. The Margraue commanded they ſhould haue a croſſe or crucifixe put into their hands, promiſing Cornelius that if he would ſo doe, he ſhould only be beheaded and not burned: but they both reiected the Croſſe, ſaying; They would not give the leaſt ſigne that might be of betraying the truth, and that it was all one to them what death they put them to, ſo they dyed in and for the Lord. The puniſhment, they ſaid, could laſt but for a while, but the glory to come was eternall.

Then were they led towards the Market place, and Herman reioycing in the Lord ſung the hundred and thirtieth Pſalme. Cornelius followed him, and gaue the people godly exhortations. Being come to the place of execution, the ſword was laid there ready to behead them, if they would take the Croſſe into their hands, and admit the Friers into their company: But becauſe they would not yéeld one whit vnto them, wood was made ready to burne them. Then Cornelius fell on his knées, praying God to forgiue his enemies who had ſinned through ignorance. After which they were put into a little lodge made of fagots, and ſtrangled at the ſtake. But whileſt this was a doing, there fell out ſuch a tumult amongſt the people, that they were not a little afraid of an vprore; the hangman he caught hold of his ſword to defend himſelfe, thinking they would kill him firſt; but the buſineſſe was as ſuddenly quieted as raiſed. The fire being kindled flamed forth vpon the bodies of theſe holy Martyrs. The Margraue thought according to the vſuall courſe to haue quenched the fire, that ſo conueying the bodies away halfe burnt, they might be laid vpon the whéeles nigh vnto the city, in the accuſtomed places where they were to lie, as ſpectacles to be gazed on. But the peoples wrath being ſtirred croſſed him in his purpoſe, ſo as his Serieants and Halberdiers leauing him, he ſtood as one aſtoniſhed cauſing the executioner to finiſh out the reſt of this Tragedy.

Notes upon the occaſion of a ſedition at Paris, the fifth of March 1559.

THe fifth day of March, there was a great vprore raiſed in the church of Saint Innocents in Paris. The preachers all the Lent neuer ceaſed to moue the people to kill all the Lutherans they could méet withall, & not leaue the execution thereof to the Magiſtrates. Amongſt the reſt a Minorite, who preached in the ſaid Church, ſpent all his Sermons vpon that ſubiect. The ſame day taking his text out of the eight of Saint Johns Goſpel concerning the woman taken in adultery being brought to Jeſus Ch: he vttered execrable things againſt the Magiſtrate: ſhewing that it was no wonder if the Judges did not caſt the firſt ſtone at the Lutherans, becauſe they themſelues were alſo Lutherans; and therefore the people were not to attend them any longer, but to riſe & make open war againſt them, yea, vpon the chiefeſt of them, which were but ſuſpected to hold that doctrine. In this garboile a poore Prieſt (with a brother of his, a Captain, paſſing by, and thinking by faire language to pacifie the diſordered tumult) had his foot no ſooner out of the Church dore, but he was ſet vpon by this blood-thirſty crue, who although he asked forgiueneſſe in the name of the Saints, deſiring to be confeſſed, and ſhewed all outward ſignes of being one of their owne ſide, yet could he of this headleſſe beaſt the multitude obtaine no fauour, but was ſtabbed into the belly with a dagger, and fell downe dead. And yet they were not ſatisfied ſo, but the very meaneſt among them had a blow at him, raking with their hands in his wounds, and then in Triumph lifting him vp, bragged that they had bathed their hands in the blood of a Lutheran.

And thus thinking to martyr the Chriſtians, by the prouidence of God, it fell on thoſe of their owne ſide.

The Captain with much adoe getting into the Vicars houſe, they beſet the houſe leſt he ſhould eſcape their fingers. And hearing that the magiſtrate was comming to deliuer him, they feared not with one voice to ſay, that they would ſpare none, no not the King himſelfe though hée came in his owne perſon. If any more pitifull than the reſt vttered but ſo much as the leaſt word tending to compaſſion, they were cruelly handled on all ſides, ſo as many met with hard vſage euen for that.

Not fully a yeare before this, there fell out the like, if not a worſe ſpectacle of cruelty in the Church of Saint Euſtate.

For a Doctor of the Sorboniſts, commonly called the ſoule of Picardy, who in his ſermons preached out nothing but fire and fagots, incouraged the Pariſians to ſlaughter the Lutheranes, making many goodly promiſes to all ſuch as would vndertake ſuch a bloody deſigne: which was not ſo ſoone propounded, as accepted of by the people. For a poore ſcholler, who out of deuotion was preſent at the ſermon, happening (vpon ſome accident) to laugh at his fellow Pupill; an old turnecoate ſitting by and obſerving it cryed out forthwith, that a Lutherane mocked the Preacher. The people at the ſound of this voice began to ſtir, not knowing upon what ground: and haling him out of the Church miſerably maſſacred him, till they had forced both his eyes out of his head, buffeting him with their fiſts; and one among the reſt cauſed his horſe to trample upon him thrice.

John Barbeville of Normandy being queſtioned by three of the Counſell about the ſacrament, anſwered, that in the holy Supper being adminiſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution, hee received by faith the body and blood of the Lord, but not after any carnall manner; foraſmuch as being now aſcended into heaven, hee ſhall not returne thence, till he come to iudge the quicke and the dead. Upon which article one of the Counſell added this ſcoffe, which aſcended into heaven, and drew the ladder up after him.

See here what mock-gods theſe be who cōdemne the poore chriſtians.

Upon ſome occaſion they ſaid unto him that he was but a ſilly aſſe, and therefore could not underſtand the Scriptures. Well ſaith he, be it that I am an aſſe, yet did you never reade, that God opened the mouth of the Prophet Balaams Aſſe to reprove him, for loading him with ſtripes when he was going to utter his lies againſt the Children of God? If God opened the Aſſes mouth, doe yee now wonder if he opens mine, to cauſe me to ſpeake againſt the falſehood and lies which you ſpread abroad againſt the people of God? For as the Aſſe ſpake being overcharged with blowes, which the falſe Prophet gave him, ſo now in regard of the heavie burden wherewith in times paſt you have oppreſſed me by your traditions, I am conſtrained to ſpeak as I doe.

A retorting ſpeech well applyed.

Another inquiſitor a Monke called Benedict told him that he was come to comfort and inſtruct him in the truth. How can you, ſaid Barbeville, ſay, you come to inſtruct me in the truth, when your ſelfe doth weare the habit of a lyar? I cannot expect it from you; for no man can gather figs of thiſtles, nor grapes of thornes.

¶ God ſo wrought here, and the truth ſo prevailed, that though it was plainly confeſſed, yet the Priſoners were delivered, Anno 1559.

THe court of the parliament of Paris, willing to moderate the cruelties uſed againſt thoſe of the reformed religion, ſollicited them what they could, to diſſemble and to yeeld in ſome points; wherein the well minded of that ſide were not yet rightly informed: but to this their aduice they would by no meanes conſent. Then they tooke another courſe, and that was ſimply to examine them touching the manner of eating Chriſts bodie in the Sacrament, without mentioning Tranſubſtantiation, or any carnall preſence; hoping this way to free them from the crime of ſacramentaries, upon which point for the moſt part the ſentence of death was pronounced: ſeeing they had heard formerly from the priſoners, That the churches of France held, how the body of Chriſt was receiued by the faithfull not in imagination, but truly and indeed, and that the ſignes were neither naked nor empty elements, but exhibited that whereof they were ſignes.

This was propounded to foure yong men who were in the flowre of their age, and lying priſoners in the Conſciergerie of the palace, if it might be, to ſatisfie them. Now when this confeſſion was preſented to the Court, all that were well affected were glad of it, in regard it was drawne ſo favorably; ſome being of opinion that it would worke their deliverance. Others there were which oppoſed this project, and requeſted they might be examined what they thought of the Maſſe, it being ſo neceſſarie an article; provided, that there might be ſome moderation in the ordinary courſe of ſuch interrogations. Notwithſtanding it was thought, that this would rather hinder than further their deliverance; yet did the better part perſiſt in their purpoſe of freeing them.

Being therefore asked again what they thought of the Maſſe, they anſwered, that they would ſtand to their firſt confeſſion. It was replyed, That the Court would reſt ſatisfied with that anſwer, if ſo be they would now only go to Maſſe. But with one voice they affirmed, that they would never yeeld to come there where God was ſo diſhonoured. The Court, to make it appeare that no advantage ſhould be taken againſt them for this their anſwer, gave them leave ſeverally to ſhew their reaſons. This pleaſed the priſoners well, and therefore they ſpared not to paint forth the Maſſe in its lively colours; that all might perceive there was cauſe ſufficient why they ſhould deteſt it.

First, one of them by way of oppoſition ſhewed how contrary the Maſſe was to the Lords ſupper. The ſecond declared, it was blaſphemy to affirme, that there was any other propitiatory ſacrifice for ſinnes then the blood of Chriſt. The third avouched, that if the article of Tranſubſtantiation (whereon the Maſſe depends) were allowed, Chriſt his deity and his humanity ſhould be aboliſhed, and therefore it muſt be flat idolatry to worſhip Almighty God in a corruptible peece of paſte. The fourth told them, that the fruits of the Sacramant could not be received where the Word was not joyned with the ſigne, where one of the ſignes were withheld, or where there was no Communion.

The Maſſe deciphered in its colours.

Thus was the Maſſe anatomiſed, with the abhominations thereof, with all boldneſſe; ſo as ſome of the Judges were conſtrained to averre openly, that there was a great abuſe in it indeed, being a manifeſt wrong done to the inſtitution of Chriſt; as alſo that the Laity were there deprived of the Cup, and the Bread only given, the whole being performed in a language which the poore people underſtood not.

It was beyond the expectation of all men, that ſo free a confeſſion would have paſſed for currant in that place, in which whoſoever came before them formerly, and made the like, was condemned to die. But now the Truth ſo prevailed, that againſt all hope and ordinary proceedings in times paſt, yea, contrary to the mindes of thoſe which were Gods chiefeſt enemies, the order was this, That howſoever ſentence of death had been pronounced againſt three others of this company, by the inferiour judges, yet theſe foure ſhould have their lives ſaved; provided, that they departed the countrey within fifteene daies. Which exception, though it ſavoured of ſome injuſtice, yet was it nothing in compariſon of the former cruelties; and this baniſhment turned rather for a benefit to them, than an hurt, for by this meanes they had liberty to go to ſuch places where God was purely ſerved.

Foure witneſſes of the truth gently entreated by their Judges.

¶ The ſtory of Peter Chevet, Martyr.

BEing asked whether he durſt affirme that he had the ſpirit of God? Yea, ſaid he, for I am one of Gods children, and therefore have the ſpirit of God given unto me, as the earneſt of my adoption.

He was in outward appearance a ſilly poore man, a vinedreſſer, of the age of 60. yeares and upwards.

It is to be feared, ſaid ſome, that you will bring your ſelfe in danger of the law, and ſo be burned.

Truly.

Anno 1559.

Truly, ſaid he, I doe not thinke to eſcape better cheape; and though you ſcortch and roſt me alive, yet will I never renounce Ieſus Chriſt. Is it not written, He that ſhall confeſſe me before men, him will I confeſſe before my Father which is in heaven, &c? Being asked whether he deſired not to be abſolved, confeſſed, and to receive pardon, having ſtood excommunicate now three yeares; he anſwered, I confeſſe my faults every day to my God, but where is that goodly abſolver that will take upon him to pardon me? The Officiall anſwering, ſaid, That is even I. Now poore man, ſaid Peter, it is a queſtion whether thou canſt ſave thy ſelfe, and wilt thou take upon thee then to ſave others? The Officiall finding himſelfe galled with this anſwer, threatned him with longer impriſonment. Alas, alas, ſaith he, though I ſhould rot in priſon, yet ſhall you ſtill finde me the ſame man.

Mat.10.32.

Being come to the place where he was to ſuffer, the Executioner would not take the paines to helpe him from off the cart, but tumbled him downe with his head forward. Notwithſtanding all this and other cruelties, he manfully overcame the ſame with invincible conſtancy. And when they pulled off his cloathes, he was heard to ſay intelligibly, How happy, how happy, ô how happy am I? with his eyes ſtill lifted up to heaven.

He was burned in the place called Maubert, nigh to the city of Paris, the 11. of March, 1559.

Hee could ſay the new Teſtament by heart, & was ſo prompt therein in all his anſwers, that the people who heard him, ſaid, if hee were ſuffered to ſpeake, hee would convert all the City of Paris.

¶ A notable ſpeech uttered by Anne du Burg Counſellor for the King in Parliament, in the moneth of Iune, An. 1559.

AMong the reſt there was a Counſellor called Anne du Burg, a man of ſingular underſtanding and knowledge, bred and nurſed up in the boſome of the Church of Chriſt. This man having rendred thankes to God, for mooving the Kings heart to be preſent at the deciſion of ſo waighty a cauſe as that of religion is, and having exhorted him well to conſider thereof, being the cauſe of Chriſt himſelfe, which of good right ought to be maintained by Princes, ſpake boldly therto, as God gave him utterance; It is not, ſaith he, a matter of ſmall conſequence, to condemne ſuch as in the middeſt of the fiery flames call upon the name of Ieſus Chriſt. This I doe but note here by the way, becauſe the conſequence is touched before by Maſter Iohn Foxe, where he mentions the terrible end of ſuch as were perſecutors of the truth.

Only one thing more touching the ſaid Anne du Burg I could not here omit, and it is this. A certaine woman being priſoner (for the ſame cauſe) right over againſt him, had a little window in her chamber which opened towards that where Maſter du Burg lay; from whence either by words or ſignes (when ſhe was not otherwiſe letted) ſhe encouraged him to perſevere conſtantly in the truth; by whom he was ſo comforted, that the ſame du Burg, being importuned by ſome of his friends to recant, uſed theſe words, nay, I trow not, ſaid he, for a woman hath taught me my leſſon, how I ought to carry my ſelfe in this buſineſſe to which God hath called me, feeling in himſelfe as it ſeemed the force and power of the godly admonitions of this poore woman.

In the Hiſtory of the martyrs mention is made of one Peter Brundeau, whoſe cōſtancy was ſo admirable in ſuffering the extremity of death, that it was the meanes to imbolden this worthy counſellor Anne Du Burg with others to ſuffer for the cauſe of the Goſpell.

Whoſe godly zeale was ſuch, as that her ſtory may not (as I thinke) be well omitted, but fully ſet downe as I finde it recorded in the volume of the French Martyrs. Her name was Margaret Rich, who ſuffered the nineteenth of Auguſt in the place called Maubert, not far from the City of Paris in France.

Chriſtian women, ſaith the Hiſtorian, behold here the courage and zeale of this Margaret your ſiſter, who is ſet before you for a patterne to imitate: ſhe encouraged both great and ſmall, who at that ſame time were priſoners with her.

Margaret Rich was born in Paris, the Wife of Anthony Ricant Bookſeller, dwelling in Paris in the place called the Mount of Saint Hillary, at the ſigne of the great Quaile. This woman was as vertuouſly diſpoſed as could be; ſhee had gotten ſome ſmall inſight into the myſtery of iniquity, by meanes of her husband, who yet ſuffered her to obſerve the ſuperſtitions of Popery, without urging her any further, for he was a man indifferent in the matter of Gods ſervice: but yet her conſcience gave her, that knowing her courſe to be evill, it was not ſufficient to forſake that, unleſſe ſhee did cleave to the contrary good which leads to life and ſalvation, namely to ſerve God according to his Word. Underſtanding then, that there were godly meetings of good Chriſtians, which aſſembled together in the City, ſhee found the meanes to come in amongſt them, and profited ſo well thereby, that ſhe reſolved in her ſelf never to goe again to the Maſſe, but to die rather.

At length being hardly uſed by her husband becauſe of this her ſudden change, hee threatned her ſo far as to carry her himſelfe to the Maſſe, (the next day which was Eaſter-Sunday) rather than that ſhee ſhould not goe. After ſhee had endured much from this man who would have her to play the diſſembler, ſhee to preſerve her ſelfe therefrom, being alſo afraid of her husbands fury, upon Eaſter day withdrew her ſelfe to a friends houſe of hers: thinking it ſafer to diſpleaſe her husband, than God, to whom ſhee had dedicated her ſelfe.

This day being paſt, becauſe ſhee would not over-long abſent her ſelfe from her owne home, ſhee determined to returne back againe to him, whom God had bound and conjoyned her with, though ſhee could not but foreſee the great evills and inconveniences which would follow thereupon, in regard of her ſaid husbands crooked diſpoſition. Shee came no ſooner home, but ſhee was diſcovered by the Curate of Saint Hillary, committed priſoner, & brought into the Conſciergery. They asked her where ſhe had kept her Eaſter: ſhe without faining told them, ſhe abſented her ſelf from home, that ſhe might abide a while with ſome of her loving friends, leſt ſhee ſhould be urged to prophane the ſupper of the Lord, as others uſually did; and therefore had kept the ſame according to Gods ordinance, in the aſſembly of faithfull & devout chriſtians. Being asked whether indeed ſhee had been preſent at thoſe ſecret meetings: ſhee anſwered yea, and eſteemed her ſelfe happy that ever ſhee came among them. And thus being queſtioned by the Counſell, with other priſoners, about the Maſſe, purgatory, auricular confeſſion, and ſuch other points, ſhee freely told them what ſhee had learned concerning the ſame out of Gods word; ſo as the fifth of May ſhe was ordered to be ſent to the Biſhop, or his officiall, to ſee if by any meanes ſhe might be reclaimed. But the officiall prevailing nothing with her, becauſe ſhe perſiſted conſtant in the profeſſion of the truth, he pronounced ſentence againſt her, declaring her to be a pertinacious and obſtinate heretique; yea ſuch a one as was to be redelivered over to the ſecular power, and thence to be ſent back to the Conſciergery.

Being brought back into the Court, certaine Doctors and others were ſent to reaſon with her: yet her faith for all that ſtaggered not, but remained victorious, notwithſtanding all their batteries laid againſt it,

Then by the ſentence of the Court ſhee was condemned to be carried in a dung cart to the place called Maubert, a gagge to be put into her mouth, and there to be burned and conſumed to aſhes. But before ſhe ſhould ſuffer death, ſhe was ſentenced to be put to the extraordinary torture, to make her confeſſe, whom ſhe knew, and was converſant withall, and to name the houſe where ſhee received the Communion: yet did this woman undergo all theſe her afflictions, with incredible joy, ſinging Pſalmes, and praiſing God continually: ſhe was never ſeen to ſhrinke at her impriſonment, ſhe daily exhorted the women who were priſoners with her, & comforted them. Such of the Martyrs as went from the Conſciergery to ſuffer death, paſſed by the chamber where ſhee lay, yet was ſhe not diſheartened to ſee them in the hands of their executioners, but cryed to them, exhorting them to rejoyce, and with patience to beare the reproach of Chriſt.

But to returne to the manner of her death; after ſentence ſhee was led to the Chappell, as the manner is; yet ſhee ceaſed not all the way to exhort the people, and to ſing Pſalmes, till ſhe was put into a Dung-cart to be conveyed to the place of execution. The renowne of her conſtancy was ſo famous from the beginning of her troubles, that no ſmall multitude of people were gathered together in the ſtreets, for the deſire they had to behold her: God ſo appointing that the great and more than ordinary graces of his ſpirit (which were in this woman) might be manifeſted before ſo great a confluence of ſpectators, and eye-witneſſes. She paſſed on then, as it were triumphing, through the middeſt of this aſſembly, not ſhewing any ſigne of the feare of death, but with a freſh colour and cheerefull countenance paſſed on with her eyes lifted up to heaven, nor did her gagge ſo disfigure her, but that ſhe ſhewed an amiable aſpect upon all that viewed her. So as even the rude and obſtinate multitude admired her; ſaying one to another, Doe you not ſee how this heretike ſmiles and laughes?

Comming to the place of her martyrdome, they told her if ſhee would relent, ſhee ſhould be ſtrangled. She anſwered, That her reſolution was ſo rightly founded upon the word of God, that ſhee never meant to change. And to let them ſee that death terrified her not, ſhee began to diſrobe her ſelfe without troubling the hangman at all. Being hoiſed up in the ayre, they asked her againe, if ſhee would not accept of the grace which the court offered her, to be ſtrangled? She gave them a ſigne, that ſhee would not. Then was the fire kindled, and ſo ſhee yeelded up her ſoul into the hands of God.

How one that was naturally deafe helped himſelfe.

He was exceedingly maligned of his neighbours for his piety, but eſpecially becauſe he had a little infant of his baptized ſecretly, & then for working upon a light holyday, which was the cauſe of his apprehenſion & death.

IT is recorded of John Beffroy a Lock-ſmith dwelling in Paris, that he had a long time behaved himſelfe very religiouſly, never denying his houſe for Chriſtian meetings, what danger ſoever might enſue thereupon. He had an incredible deſire to profit by the preaching of the Goſpell. And therefore being hindered by a naturall infirmity of deafeneſſe to underſtand what was ſpoken, hee uſed this help, commanding a Lad which he kept to hearken to the ſermon attentively, and at his returne home made the ſaid boy to tell him in his eare all that he had heard. Inſomuch that he became exceedingly expert in the knowledge of the truth, wherin he perſiſted conſtantly to the death, and was (after he had received the extraordinary torture) burned for the ſame in the place called the Grave, in the Moneth of December, Anno 1549.

Another relation of Anne du Burg.

DU Burg, being asked if he had conferred with any about certaine articles formerly mentioned, anſwered, That he had conferred with his bookes, but eſpecially the holy Scriptures.

Having framed a Confeſſion of his faith which he intended to have preſented to the court of parliament, certain counſellors which were advocats in the ſaid Court pretending friendſhip towards him, being yet but time-ſervers, ſhewing themſelves alſo diſcontented therewith, laboured with him to make another Confeſſion, not directly contrary to the truth, but ſomewhat ambiguous and doubtfull, ſo as it might give ſatisfaction to his Judges. Du Burg, having of a long time reſiſted, was in a manner overcome (by their intreaties) to conſent to their Counſell; telling him, it ſufficed that himſelfe underſtood his owne true meaning, though ambiguouſly expreſſed; as alſo that his Judges would not ſtand ſtrictly to examine ſuch a confeſſion as had only an outward appearance of conſenting to their doctrine. Now this diſguiſed confeſſion was no ſooner come into the hands of his Judges, but great hopes were conceived of his inlargement. But when the aſſembly had got a true copy thereof, they were greatly greeved, being more carefull of the ſaving his ſoule, of Gods glory, and the edification of his Church, then of ſuch a deliverance, which could not be obtained without great diſhonour to God.

And therefore they gave order to M. Auguſtin * Marlorate to write a large diſcourſe concerning the duty of ſuch as were called of God to beare witneſſe to his eternall truth before the Magiſtrate; wherein were alſo ſet downe Gods threatenings and judgements againſt ſuch as either directly or indirectly in what kinde ſoever did diſavow the ſame. 1 Exhorting him more highly to prize the glory of God, than his owne liberty; 2 the truth of the Goſpell, than a ſhort and tranſitory life. 3 That it beſeemed him not now to give over, having already made ſo happy a beginning, and ſo good a progreſſe in his Chriſtian courſe. 4 That the report of his conſtancy was ſpread not only through the kingdome of France, but throughout all Chriſtendome. 5 That he had beene a meanes to confirme many weak ones, and cauſed others to enquire after the meanes of Salvation. 6 That the eyes of all were fixed on him, to expect the manner of his comming out of priſon. So as if now through feare, or faintheartedneſſe he ſhould enterpriſe ought that might contradict his firſt confeſſion, he would thus become an occaſion of much ſcandall and offence. And therefore exhorted him to give glory to God, to edifie his Church, aſſuring him that God would never leave nor forſake him. Theſe Letters wrought in the conſcience of Du Burg a ſenſe of his ſinne: for which asking pardon of God, without any further delay, he ſent a petition to his Judges, in which retracting this his laſt confeſſion he proteſted to ſtand unto his firſt.

* Of the manner of whoſe death you ſhall read hereafter.

Slanders raiſed by the Sorboniſts againſt the Proteſtants of Roan in France, and what was the iſſue thereof.

THree Doctors of the Sorboniſts, whoſe names were Secard, Columbell, and Fancillon, in their collations to their pariſhioners accuſed thoſe of the Religion with their wonted ſlanders, as, that they committed whoredome one with another after after the candles were put out, and were taught to rebell againſt their King and governors; which governors alſo theſe Sorboniſts accuſed to connive and hold with them, inciting the people to run upon thoſe of the religion, ſince the Magiſtrates forbare to do their duty. But here God catched the wiſe in their owne craftineſſe; for by meanes hereof many began to looke into theſe matters whereof the godly were accuſed; Namely, to enquire both what they did and ſpake in their aſſemblies. Where ſeeing and finding the clean contrary to theſe accuſations before mentioned, they were drawne to abhorre theſe lying ſpirits, and by little and little came to cleave unto the ſaid aſſemblies themſelves; yea many who were lewdly given, and came in among them to another end.

But theſe accuſers, not content herewith, went in the night into Churches, not ſparing to deface the images that ſtood therein, and then charged the Proteſtants to be the onely actors thereof. Whereupon the Cardinall of Burbon Archbiſhop of Roan was often faine to repaire them with many ceremonies. But at laſt a Monke of Magdalens hoſpitall was taken with the manner of breaking downe theſe Images in the churchyard of Saint Marke. For which he received no correction, excuſing the matter, by ſaying, that whatſoever he had done therein proceeded from a good meaning. Yet among all theſe diſorders the church of Roan ſtill ſubſiſted, though not without great perill and danger.

¶ The ſtory of a Lockſmith, Martyr, who being dry had holy water given him to drinke.

ABout this time was a Lockſmith burnt in the city of Agen, upon the clamours and ſeditious ſermons of a frier called Melchior Flavin, who denounced this Lockſmith to be an heretike, becauſe he had made a Chriſtian and good confeſſion, and therefore purſued him unto the death. A little before he was to die, Redon the lieutenant of Agen asked him if he would drinke. Sir, ſaith the priſoner, if you pleaſe to give me drink, I will. Then the Lieutenant brought him a glaſſe of water, of which he dranke a little. Now, ſaid the other unto him, what haſt thou drunke? the priſoner anſwered, Water. Saith the other, Thou haſt drunke holy-water, which I gave thee to drive the divell out of thee. I know, ſaith the poore man, that every creature of God is good in its owne nature; but had you told me it had beene ſuch as now you ſay it is, I would not have drunke it, for it is defiled with idolatry. At this anſwer the Lieutenant hurled the glaſſe of water at the poore mans face with ſuch force, that the glaſſe breaking to pieces hurt him. For which inhumane act hee was reproved by his fellowes, and amerced to pay ten pounds. But the Lockſmith tooke his death patiently, and endured it conſtantly.

¶ The miſerable death of a Conſul who was both an accuſer and a Iudge.

IOſias Simler, a learned Divine of our time, in the life of Maſter Henry Bullinger, a worthy ſervant of God, and a faithfull Miniſter of the church of Zuricke, recordeth an hiſtory which he ſaith hapned in a city of Suitzerland among the papiſts, An. 1559. He expreſſeth neither the Conſuls name, nor the city, the thing being ſufficiently knowne to the inhabitants thereabouts. This Conſul, being a rich and potent man, intending to build a brave and magnificent houſe, ſent far and neere for the rareſt and moſt exquiſite workemen he could heare tell of. Amongſt the reſt he ſent to the city of Trent (ſo much renounced among Papiſts in regard of the laſt Councell the Pope had there) for an excellent carver and maſter Builder called John, a man very religious, and a lover of the Truth: for which cauſe the ſaid John refuſed at the firſt to goe thither, alledging for himſelfe that he was of a contrary religion to that which the Conſull profeſſed, and therefore could not ſafely inhabit among ſuch as would obſerve his contempt of the Maſſe and their other ceremonies. The Conſull promiſed him ſafety in reſpect of his perſon, and that he ſhould be forced to nothing againſt his conſcience. Upon this his promiſe, John came and wrought a long time with the conſull: but when he came to demand his wages they entred into ſome termes of diſcontent. In the end at the command of this Conſull, John was committed to priſon, and by the ſame Conſull accuſed for a ſleighter of the Romiſh religion, yea, to have ſpoken unreverently thereof: wherefore he was condemned to be beheaded.

As they led him to execution he went towards it with undaunted courage, and died very conſtantly; proteſting in the preſence of all the Spectators, that he moſt gladly layd downe this life preſent, for the maintenance of that religion whereof he had made profeſſion, beleeving undoubtedly that it was the Truth; but added, that the conſull who was the author of his death ſhould himſelfe die within three daies, and appeare before Gods judgement ſeat to render an account of his ſentence. Which came to paſſe according as this pious man foretold: for the Conſull being then in the prime of his youth, and of an healthfull diſpoſition of body, from that day began to be aſſailed firſt with an exceeding heate, and then with an extraordinary cold; and thus was he ſmitten with a new kinde of ſickneſſe, ſo as within three dayes he followed him, of whom he had bin both the moſt unjuſt accuſer and judge.

¶ The ſpeech of a poore Porter called Chevillon whipped for the Truth, and after confined to the Gallies.

BEing whipped thorow the ſtreets of Romans, he ſaid to him that laſhed him, Lay on my friend, lay it on and ſpare not, chaſtiſe this fleſh which hath ſo often rebelled againſt his God: thinking himſelfe happy that he ſuffered in ſo good a quarrell.

¶ The miſerable end of one called Aubeſpine, a Counſellor of Grenolle, and a perſecutor.

AFter theſe bloody perſecutions, this Aubeſpine fell in love with a gentlewoman, and therein gave ſuch way to his paſſion, that he forſooke his calling, caſting off all care of his owne welfare, to follow her whitherſoever ſhe went. But ſhe diſregarding him, he tooke it ſo to heart, that he neglected his owne perſon: by reaſon whereof ſwarming full of lice, he could by no meanes be rid of them; for they increaſed upon him, and came out at all the parts of his body, as they are ſeen to iſſue out of a dead carkaſſe. It was not long before his death, but feeling himſelfe ſmitten with Gods hand, he began to deſpaire of his mercy, and to ſhorten his dayes he concluded to famiſh himſelfe: in the meane while the lice gathered ſo thick about Anno 1559. his throat, as if they would ſtrangle him. Some beholding this ſo lamentable a ſpectacle, being much mooved therewith in commiſerating his eſtate, agreed to make him eat whether he would or no, forcing him to take ſome broth, or a Cullis, which he reſiſting with all his might, they bound his armes, gagging his mouth with a ſticke to keepe it open, whileſt they put ſomewhat thereinto. Being thus gagged he died like an inraged beaſt, with the abundance of lice which crept towards his throat. And thus it was ſpoken even by ſome of the Romiſh Religion, that looke what torment he had deviſed for the miniſters of Valence, ſending them gagged to their execution, he was by the iuſt iudgment of God puniſhed after a ſort in the ſame kind.

Gag them ſaid he, for if wee ſuffer them to ſpeake, they will doe more harme at their death than in their life: which practiſe was not onely liked but executed.

Iohn Ponce of Leon a Gentleman of Seuill in in Spaine.

AMong thoſe that with a firme faith ſealed the truth of the Goſpel with their bloud in the Spaniſh inquiſition at Sevill the foure and twentieth of September 1559. Don Iohn Ponce of Leon, the ſonne of Roderic Ponce of Leon Count of Baylen, may of good right deſerve to be placed in the firſt ranke. For beſides the noble race from whence he ſprang, the Lord had indued him with ſingular vertues well beſeeming ſo worthy and Chriſtian a Gentleman. Thoſe who were of his familiar acquaintance, and did well obſerve his converſation, gave this teſtimony of his ſincerity, that his like was not knowne in Spaine of a long time, in that a man of his eſtate was ſo forward to exerciſe his charity towards ſuch in whom he ſaw but any good inclination to religion: yea, his yearely revenues, which were alſo great, were not onely imployed, that way, but he ſeemed to exceede the chiefeſt of his ranke, in yeelding his helpe and aide towards the reliefe of the poore. All which the world taking knowledge of, attributed (as it is woont) that which proceeded from his ſo Chriſtian bounty, rather unto waſtfulneſſe and prodigality.

The Inquiſitors of Sevill envying the ſweete ſavour of ſuch a life and converſation as he led before them, flowing from an inward taſte of true Religion, ſpared him no more than thoſe of meaner condition. For having gotten him into their hands, they left no meanes unaſſayed, but uſed the utmoſt of their devices to weaken his faith. The truth is, that at the firſt this noble perſonage was much perplexed, but at the laſt the Lord fortified him ſo with his grace, that he was ſet in the firſt rounde of the guilty. Concerning his ſentence (howſoever this holy tribunall mixed the ſame with many untruths to bleare the eyes of the ignorant withall) yet may it eaſily be collected out of the tenor of his ſentence, what he confeſſed and profeſſed.

For in the ſaid ſentence were read his articles for which he was principally condemned to the fire; namely, That hee abhorred the Idolatry which is committed in adoring the Sacrament, calling it a breaden god. Alſo, that when he met it as it was carried through the ſtreets, either in ſolemnity or to ſome ſicke body, he paſſed into another ſtreet going apace before it, that he might give no reverence unto it. That comming often into the Cathedrall Church where maſſe was ſaid, he turned his back towards yͤ Prieſt, becauſe he would not ſee him elevate his God. That hee uſed much to walke to and fro about the ſcaffold where the faithfull were executed, with a kinde of delight, coveting to ſtand neere unto them, that by accuſtoming himſelfe in beholding the place, and torments he ſaw others indure, he might bee the better emboldened to ſuffer the like when God ſhould call him thereunto.

Theſe were in effect the Articles which were inſerted in his ſentence, a part whereof alſo was drawne out of the confeſſion of his faith, the ſum being this: Firſt. That a man is iuſtified and accepted of God onely for the merrit of Ieſus Chriſt apprehended by faith. That the popes pardons and indulgences ſent from Rome are meere deluſions, and that the Pope is Antichriſt, &c. That it was the deſire of his heart to be burned, or to ſuffer ſome other extremity for the maintenance of the Faith which he profeſſed. That he endevored to imploy the goods and riches wherwith God had bleſſed him, only for the defence and further inlarging of the doctrine of the Goſpel; Yea, to forſake life, wife, children, and all, for the ſame: to which end hee had daily ſent up many hearty prayers to God.

In all this buſines, the holy tribunall labored by cunning devices to obſcure this confeſſion, cauſing it to be bruited that he held not out to the end, with many other like inventions to make the people beleeve they had turned him to their Law: but herein they ſhewed themſelves not well adviſed, in that they belied both him and themſelves. For in publiſhing his crimes and offences with the manner of his death, what did they elſe but declare and manifeſt the truth of the fact, which plainly appeareth in theſe words of the ſentence; Iohn Ponce of Leon, burned for an heretike and an obſtinate Lutheran, &c. Which words made their fraudulent dealing apparent to ſuch as doubted any way of the conſtancie and perſeverance of this pious Chriſtian knight.

Iohn Gonzalve a Preacher in Sevill, Martyr: with whom were executed two of his ſiſters, their mother remaining in priſon, reſerved to act her part in another tragedie.

GOnzalve a renowned Preacher throughout the Countrey of Andalouſie, was alſo led in this inquiſitoriall triumph: who forſaking his Schoole Divinity, in which learning he excelled all his fellowes, gave himſelfe wholly to the ſtudy of the holy Scriptures, according to the purity whereof his whole converſation was ordered, both inwardly and outwardly. Hee was often obſerved in all his Sermons to ayme at this marke, namely to deliver mens minds from that blind conceit of meriting by workes; that ſo way might be made for iuſtification onely by Faith in Chriſt Ieſus, and deeply to ingraft into them the knowledge of the ſole merit of his plenary ſatisfaction. For which his labour hee expected to receive from man the ſame reward which all the true ſervants of God have had in their times.

Being then ſeized upon by thoſe of this Spaniſh inquiſition, hee yeelded a reaſon of his faith in that purity and ſincerity, as did the aforeſaid Iohn Ponce; who as they had beene friends and of familliar acquaintance, ſo were they ioyned together in the ſame confeſſion, and led to the ſame execution together. The night before he ſuffered he had a ſore conflict with an old ſect of Prieſts, who were of the Inquiſition, but in the end he cauſed them to returne vanquiſhed and aſhamed. He was led from the caſtle and priſon of Trion with his two ſiſters unto the place appointed for his end, that they with him might drinke of the ſame cup, leaving his mother and one of his brethren behind him in priſon, reſerved to be executed when their turn came about. He never ſhewed the leaſt ſigne of being diſmaid; but contrariwiſe with great conſtancy and courage of heart ſtanding above all the people, to whom he had formerly preached and delivered the patterne of ſound Doctrine; He began with a loud voyce to recite the Pſalme which begins thus, O Lord my Rocke be not thou ſilent to me, &c. not changing his countenance at all upon the Scaffold, though they had gagged him there, becauſe he comforted and freely exhorted one of his ſiſters to be conſtant: whoſe ſpirit he feared might otherwiſe faint. Hearkening very attentively to his ſentence which was there againe recited, he was not any thing at all abaſhed or troubled thereat, but tooke his ſolemne degrading patiently, receiving the markes and garments of his confeſſion, to wit, his yellow robe, an haltar, and a painted miter, with a joyfull and cheerefull heart; knowing that howſoever they were diſgracefull in the eyes of the world, yet he eſteemed of them as ornaments of honour in the ſight of God and his Angels; abhorring his maſſing attire, whereof they had diſrobed him.

When the time was come that thoſe which ſhould be burned were brought to the place of execution, they were every one commanded to recite the articles of their beleefe, which they willingly did: but when they came to the Article, I beleeve the holy Catholique Church, they were bidden to adde this word Romane, whereupon they were ſilent: then did the Monkes and Fryers importune Gonzalves ſiſters, and other Chriſtian women who were to be burned with them, to repeat the ſaid word Romane; who anſwered they would, if they might heare John Gonzalva pronounce it (not that they intended ſo to doe, but being confident of his renouncing the ſame) hoping by this meanes to free him of his gagge, and ſo to obtaine the liberty of ſpeech, by which he might render a reaſon of his faith, and ſo of this article among the reſt. Being ungagged, the firſt word he ſpake was, that they ſhould be of good courage, and not to adde one word more than what they had recited. Upon this their laſt confeſſion they were forthwith ſtrangled, as the fire was kindled upon them, to burne and conſume them.

AMong all the moſt ancient profeſſors of true religion that had their abode in the Church of God at Sevill (who in a manner were all waſted by the Tyranny of the Inquiſition) the power of faith appeared in theſe foure women above ſpecified. Now howſoever they were all endued with ſingular piety and godlineſſe, yet the yonger of them named Bohorques, being under the age of one and twenty, was inſtructed above the reſt in holy letters, & by dayly reading and conference with good and godly men, wherewith Sevil at that time was well furniſhed, ſhee had obtained ſuch promptneſſe in the knowledge of the Texts of the old and new Teſtament, that many who were eſteemed learned in that City, have confeſſed they were often put to a non-plus by ſuch reaſons as ſhee alledged out of the Scriptures.

As touching the firſt of theſe, Vaenia; her houſe was a ſchoole or colledge of piety, being the place alſo where all the meetings were, to publiſh the praiſes of God. No evill example was to bee ſeene there, nor ought that ſavoured of feigned hineſſe, but ſuch as proceeded from uprightneſſe of heart and ſincerity. But the Inquiſitors, who alwayes lye in waite to take hold, though but with the leaſt thred of their net, caught theſe foure women with other their neighbours, in the ſame, when God knew they were fitted for the confeſſion of his holy truth. Now as the Latine tongue did much aide the ſaid Mary Bohorques to retaine her in reading of the holy Bible, whileſt the Popes Tyranny forbad the ſame to be read in the vulgar tongue; ſo ſhe came quickly to be invironed with the more adverſaries during her captivity. Doctor Egidus (whoſe memory was renowned throughout Spaine among all ſuch as truly worſhipped God) had been her Inſtructor, and was wont to ſay of this Maide, that he alwaies went from her more learned by conferring with her, then when he came to her.

Would to God many maids in theſe daies might deſerve to be ſo commended.

During her Captivity there came many Monkes to diſpute and reaſon with her; above all, thoſe of the order of Saint Dominicke, who were enforced to admire the ſpirit of wiſdome, wherewith this Damoſell was inſpired, as alſo at the pregnant anſwers which ſhe gave to their demands. Shee ſuffered ſo many kindes of torments, that by the violence thereof they forced her to nominate her ſiſter Jane Bohorques, and to confeſſe that ſhe had often been preſent at the Preaching of the Goſpell. This Jane was the wife of one called Francis Varquis, Lord of Higueras, a man of excellent note. Shee was ſixe Moneths gone with child when ſhe was committed to priſon, and therefore was not ſo ſtraitly uſed, nor hardly dealt withall as other of the priſoners were. But within eight daies after her delivery, her childe was taken from her, and then giving her no longer time of breathing, they began to deale with her after the guiſe of the Spaniſh Inquiſition, forming her inditement agreeable to the rigour and ſeverity thereof. In which her extremity ſhee had comfort of none, but of a vertuous young maiden, who afterwards was burned for the profeſſion of the truth: which maid being one day brought by the Inquiſitors to the torture, was in a manner diſmembred, and then layd upon a bed of ſtraw, whereon both were laid in the priſon, ſerving rather to vexe then any way to eaſe them, yet did the other yeeld her all the reliefe which her ſelfe or the place could poſſibly afford. Scarſe had this poore Damoſell recovered ſome eaſe after theſe intolerable bruiſes, but this aforeſaid Jane Bohorques taſted of the ſame bitter Cup, where ſhee was ſo cruelly tormented on the Burro, as they call it, which is a bench or forme whereon they give the Towell or Napkin, that the cords pierced through the fleſh into the bones, both of her armes and leggs: and in this pitifull plight the bloud guſhing out, ſhee was returned to her priſon, where within eight daies after it pleaſed God to free her out of the clutches of theſe bloudthirſty, into his eternall happineſſe and glory. Now they were very loth it ſhould bee bruited abroad that this gentlewoman, ſo well borne and delicately bred, ſhould dye under ſo cruell torments: but they who were the beholders of ſuch inhumanity could not be ſilent. Yet theſe good fathers, being under no controle, take their liberty thus to imbrue their hands in the bloud of Gods ſaints.

Her ſiſter Mary being led with the reſt of her fellowes to the place where they were to ſuffer, ſhe went thereto with ſuch joy and gladneſſe, as one triumphing over her enemies: which the whole tribunall obſerving, and fearing leſt others would be imboldened by her conſtant defence of the truth and ſinging of Pſalmes as ſhe went, gagged her. And when ſhe came to the place of execution, that they might obſcure the glory of this heavenly conſtancy they preſently ſtrangled her.

¶ Iulian Hernaudes burned in Sevill in Spaine, Anno 1559.

THis Julian, who for his ſmall ſtature was called, le petit, was ſervant to John Piers a Spaniard, and miniſter of the Goſpell in Geneva, where, through much reſrot of many learned men thither, religion flouriſhed. At which time being moved with godly zeale, rather then being counſelled thereto, he undertooke a buſineſſe, which as it was of great importance, ſo of no ſmall perill and imminent danger; for he brought with him thence and cauſed a great number of Bookes of the holy Scriptures in Spaniſh to be conveied into Spaine, earneſtly thirſting after the increaſe and growth of the light of the Goſpell in his native countrey; which godly enterprize of his the Lord ſo guided, that he brought the ſame to a proſperous Iſſue; Yea, which is yet the more admirable, even within the walles of Sevill, notwithſtanding all the watch and ward the Officers of the Inquiſition uſed.

These books to the poore Chriſtians there were welcommed with no leſſe joyfulneſſe, then the rain when it ſhowers downe upon the parched ground. For the Goſpell by meanes hereof grew, and was enlarged; ſo as the Lord thereby reaped a very great Harveſt. But the newes hereof comming to the eares of the holy Fathers, firſt, by the indiſcretion and foole-hardineſſe of one more zealous then wiſe, and then by the treachery of wily ſpies of the Inquiſition, who counterfeited a profeſſion of the Goſpell, meerely to enſnare and betray the ſincere profeſſors thereof, by their diſloyall practiſes: no ſooner had theſe venerable Fathers, or hunters rather, gotten a ſent of this game where it lay, but comming violently upon them, tooke the damme with her young ones. By which great ſurpriſall the whole flocke was ſcattered; but ſo many was the number of them even at their firſt apprehenſion, that it amaſed the huntſmen themſelves.

Pſal.72.6.

Deut.21.6.

For the priſons were ſo repleniſhed, that they were faine to borrow private houſes to ſhut up the priſoners in. At once they burned twenty and upwards of them together, whilſt in Sevill they detayned in bonds 800. Amongſt whom this Julian was one of the firſt which they met withall, whom they kept in priſon above three yeeres laden with Irons: during which time, every day afforded new ſpectacles of catching their prey. But ſuch was his wonderfull conſtancy, that he wearied his tormentors from vexing him any more; ſo as new forces never failed this little leane body, to ſuffer any tortors the Inquiſition could deviſe. He was naturally of a cheerefull ſpirit, and God ſo increaſed the ſame in him, that he came from the torture with no leſſe courage then when he was wont to come unto it: ſo as neither paine of the racke, nor the threats of the Officers, nor yet the cruelties they exerciſed upon him could withhold him from manifeſting to his priſon fellowes, as he went along by them, his conqueſt and victory, to the ſhame and reproach of his adverſaries, uſing to ſay in Spaniſh; Theſe hypocrites are gone away confounded, no leſſe then Wolves which have beene long hunted.

See what great increaſe God can bring out of weake beginnings.

Such honor have all Gods Saints.

After many fierce encounters and ſharpe diſputes with the Monkes and others of the popiſh crew, being brought out of the priſon into the Caſtle, there to receive the mark and livery of Chriſt the ſonne of God, with the reſt of the priſoners, it was reported, that he with a bold courage and ſetled countenance thus ſpake unto them; Courage my valiant and conſtant Brethren, now is the houre come in which, as the true Champions of Ieſus Chriſt, we muſt witneſſe his truth before men, and for a ſhort triall for his ſake wee ſhall triumph with him for ever and ever. But the officers of the Inquiſition interrupted him inſtantly, by putting a gagge in his mouth, with which he continued untill a little before he dyed. Mounting then upon the ſcaffold where he was to ſuffer, by manifold ſignes he ſhewed the conſtancy and ſtedfaſtneſſe of his faith, which by words he could not. For in aſcending up the ſteps of the ſcaffold, kneeling downe he kiſſed them; and being faſtned to the ſtake, invironed and compaſſed round abut with fagots, he ſundry times bowed his head within the pile of wood, as if he deſired to die by fire, and ſo rendred up his ſoule into the hands of God, to the great admiration of the Spectators, and the animating of his fellow Martyrs who were to ſuffer with him. When he was to die, a certaine Doctor called Ferdinando Rodrigo, contrary to his intention, made the faith of this our little Julian much more glorious: for he thinking by terrifying him with the apprehenſion of the preſent torment he was to endure, obtained ſo much favour of the Sheriffe, as to permit him to ſpeake; thinking thereby to give the people ſome intimation of his recantation; which is the utmoſt triumph that theſe holy Fathers of the Inquiſition thirſt after: but it proved cleane contrary: for Julian recovering liberty of ſpeech, did yeeld a more cleere evidence and demonſtration of his faith than formerly he had done, and ſo confuted this Doctor Rodrigo, (calling him a ſeducer, and one that ſpake againſt his conſcience) that by and by in an outrage, to cover his ſhame, he cryed out like a Bedlam; Muſt Spaine, which commands ſilence to ſo many, be thus troubled now with this ſo contemptible a wretch? Kill him, diſpatch him, &c. At which words, the tormentors being there at a becke, forthwith kindled the fire upon him.

When the Martyrs were hindred to manifeſt their faith by ſpeech, yet they would by outward geſtures do it as well as they could.

¶ Now having thus formerly mentioned what tortures are exerciſed upon the bodies of Gods Saints by the mercileſſe Inquiſitors of Spaine, and that alſo upon thoſe of their owne Nation: it ſhall not be much from the purpoſe if from thence we take occaſion more particularly here to relate unto thee (Chriſtian Reader) with what inhumanity ſuch are uſed who for the cauſe of religion fall into the hands of theſe carnall tyrants, according as I finde the ſame ſet forth at large by my Author, whoſe footſteps in the whole Work I endeavour to follow.

WHen they purpoſe to torture any one, the Jaylor is commanded to bring forth his priſoner into the accuſtomed place where it is to be given; which place is under the earth, and very obſcure. Then going thorow many turnings, and thorow ſundry doores, ſo as the horrible cryes of thoſe who are there tortured can in no wiſe be heard, there is a ſeat prepared for the Inquiſitors on high, with a Regiſter alſo to behold that tragicall act. The torches being lighted, thoſe who are to act their parts in this wofull Tragedy are brought in: the tormentor who attends their comming, is covered all over with a blacke garment, cloſe to his body, and on his head a blacke Hood, which hides his face from being ſeene; having only two or three holes made therein for himſelfe to ſee and breathe at; and all this is the way to terrifie the poore Patient, who beholdeth as it were a grimme devill ready to torment him. Theſe Fathers being ſet upon their ſeat begin againe to charge the Priſoner voluntarily to confeſſe the truth: which if he refuſe to do, and if it then happen that an arme or any other member of his body be broken, or that they die on the torture (for that is all the favour he hath ſhewed him) they make it his own fault and none of theirs. After they have uſed all the terrible threates that can be, they cauſe him to be ſtripped ſtarke naked, whether man, woman, or maide, though they be never ſo modeſt and baſhfull. Many having fallen into their bloody fingers, thus to have their ſhame diſcovered to the ſight of others, was more greevous than all their torments beſides which they indured. Laying aſide then all humanity in unclothing them, they put upon them (a ſhame it is to ſpeake it) linnen breeches, as if their ſecret parts were better & more honeſtly covered with breeches than with a ſhirt or ſmocke, or as if the torments they meant to put them to would not pierce deepe enough as well in the one as in the other: with ſuch ſhameleſſe ſpectacles the chaſte Inquiſitors fed their ages, and with ſuch a cruell luſt ſatisfied their infamous and deteſtable virginity.

The man or woman ſtanding naked then, and their nakedneſſe covered only with little breeches, as was ſaid, they becken to the tormentor, ſignifying thereby what kinde of torture he is to put them to. For herein, as alſo in many things of a like nature, they have ſome ſecret watchword or ſigne among themſelves; and the Officers being well acquainted therewith can readily diſcerne what torments the holy Fathers would have men put unto, to teach them the faith of the Romane Church. The moſt uſuall are the cords with the pullies, ſinewes, fire, and water, of all which we will ſpeake in place convenient. Whileſt they thus ſtand naked, they exhort them once againe to tell the truth. If the Patient be to endure the Cord, they tie his hands behinde his back, pulling him up eight or ten times, according to the number of twitches limited by the Inquiſitor to the Tormentor; that ſo nothing may be done (there forſooth) without order. At the firſt incounter are reckoned up to him all his Articles; and then, beſides the binding of his hands, they tie his thumbes very hard together with a ſmall Cord, then they tie his hands and thumbes unto a greater Cord, hoiſing him up by a pully very high, which done, they put upon his legs heavy bolts, if hee have them not on before; to which are yet added, for the firſt pull, an iron weight of five and twenty pound, which is hanged to theſe bolts betweene his feet. Being thus arayed the Tormentor drawes him up on high, the Regiſter and the Inquiſitor mixing therewith their former exhortations to confeſſe. When he comes to touch the pulley with his head, they will him yet then to confeſſe: if he obey, they preſently let him down; if not, then they let him hang in this condition, untill he have anſwered their demands. Now, after he hath hung thus without making any confeſſion, they let him downe, to redouble on his feet the former weight. And then pulling him up againe, threaten him to hang till he there die, if hee declare not to them that which they aske of him; commanding the Tormentor to let him hang a long while in the aire, that through the heavineſſe of the weight which hangs at his feet, all his members and joynts be ſtretched out beyond meaſure. When the Patient through extremity of torment, which he endures, cryes out, they in like ſort cry as loud as they can, that he ſhould now confeſſe what he knowes: if not, then they let him fall. For when they perceive he continues conſtant, then they command the officer to let goe the Cord, which is as ſoone done as ſpoken, yet not wholly and altogether to the mid way, but to a certain ſtop, which hinders his falling to the ground, by reaſon whereof he receives ſuch a ſudden checke, that there is neither nerve, muſcle, ſinew, nor joynt in the arms or legs, nor in the whole body, which are not with extreame torture diſjoynted and diſplaced; ſo as being thus ſtopped in his fall in the mid way, his body is pittifully and miſerably ſtretched out.

But yet this ſufficeth not. For then if through their importunity he will confeſſe nothing, they augment the weight the third time, and thus in a manner being as good as dead, cauſe him to bee pulled up: to which cruelty they adde railing and reviling ſpeeches, calling him dog and heretike, who being obſtinate conceals the truth from them, and therefore deſerves to be left dying there. If the poore creature in regard of his intolerable agony cryeth unto Jeſus Chriſt to helpe him, and to have mercy upon him (as all ſuch doe as ſuffer for tha truth) then they ſcoffe and mocke him, ſaying, Ieſus Chriſt, Ieſus Chriſt, let this Ieſus Chriſt alone a while, and tell us what that Ieſus Chriſt is thou calleſt upon? Confeſſe to us that which we demand of thee; the which teſtifies to their faces how odious and hatefull a thing it is unto them to heare ſuch as ſuffer in the quarrell of Chriſt to call upon his name. If the ſorrowfull wretch deſire to be let downe, promiſing to confeſſe and to tell them ſomewhat, they will for all that torment him againe. For having pauſed a little, then they tell him that is not all, and ſo continue threatning him with the Strappado as before.

Impious blaſphemies.

This helliſh torture beginneth at nine of the clocke, and laſts till noone, or one of the clocke; and when they pleaſe to make an end, then they aske of the Tormentor if he have his other Engines ready, which they doe to ſtrike the greater terror into the bruiſed and martyred Patient, whom they now have in their hands. He anſwers he hath them not there; then they command him to fit and prepare them againſt the next day, and not to faile: we will ſee, ſay they, whether we can fetch the whole truth out of this fellow or no. And at their going out, they comfort the deſolate ſoule thus; This ſhall ſuffice for this time, but looke betweene this and to morrow thou adviſeſt thy ſelfe well, what thou oughteſt to confeſſe, otherwiſe thou art like to die on the torture; nor think to eſcape by what thou haſt endured, for that is but as a bed of Roſes in regard of the torment which is to come. Being gone, the Hangman indevours to ſet together the joynts of the Patients legges and armes, as well as he can. Then his clothes being put on, he is brought againe into his priſon, and if he be not able to goe, then hee is carried thither; and ſometimes this help proves a vexation unto him, in that they churliſhly hale him by his armes and legges. The Jaylour alſo in ſcorne askes of him, if he need a Chirurgion: now if they meane to torture him no more, then he is called for two or three dayes after, and as he paſſeth from the priſon, they make him come nigh the doore where he was tortured, where the Tormentor preſents himſelfe before him in all points as hath formerly been related, that at this very ſight the priſoner in his paſſage might be put in minde of what he had but a while ſince ſuffered. When he is come before them, there he findes the Inquiſitor, the Regiſter with others ſet in their ſeates attending for him, where according to the guiſe, they adjure him to ſpeak the truth. If at that time they can draw nothing out of him, they ſend him to priſon againe. But if he happen to diſcloſe ought ſerving their turne, then they ply him hard to utter all: and thereupon make him turne thence to the torture, hoping thereby to get ſomething more out of him.

If they purpoſe to exerciſe this their cruelty with all extremity upon the ſame Patient, they ſend for him the third day, whileſt his ſinews and joynts are in the prime of their paine, and ſo renew their horrible threats unto him, to reveale his hereſies, and thoſe which had formerly mentioned, and who they be that are of his opinion; otherwiſe he muſt prepare himſelf for the torture, wherein if he any way miſcarry in his body, or if death it ſelfe doe follow, the fault ſhall be his, and not theirs. If he continue unmoveable in his mind, they cauſe the Jaylor to bring him to the place of torture, and there they ſitting in their Tribunall, command him to be ſtripped naked, and then tormented as you have formerly heard. Beſides, as an addition thereto, they tie his thighs & hamſtrings together with a ſmall cord, forcing the ſame ſo with pieces of wood, that the ſaid cords do eate into his very fleſh; in which extremity they leave him for ſome three or foure houres, or as they pleaſe, plying him the while with infinite threats and deriſions, which is all the comfort they miniſter to him in this his miſerable condition.

They have yet another kinde of torment, which Juſtices in other places exerciſe upon ſuch as are the moſt notorious offendors, whereof this holy Tribunall make uſe, as fitting well to their cruell humour. They call it the Burro, which is a planke of timber made hollow in forme of a gutter or trough, wherein a man may lie on his back; now juſt where the back bone ſhould repoſe it ſelfe, there is a round peece of wood lying overthwart, keeping up the backe from reſting in the bottome of the hollow place, ſo as it giveth no reſt to him that is tormented thereon. Now this trough is ſo framed, that the heeles of him who is put therein lie much higher than his head. Being put into this caſe or coffin, his legges, armes, and thighes are bound hard with ſmall cords, which by little and little are ſo ſtrained with certain ſticks, that they eate into the fleſh, yea pierce to the bare bone. Then they lay a linnen cloth on his face, to hinder his breathing at the noſthrils, whileſt they poure water into his mouth, which is diſtilled from above by this cloth to a certaine quantity, (as it ſeemes good to his Judge) not by drops, but ſtreaming downe, to cauſe the ſaid cloth to goe downe into his throat. The poore patient the whilſt lies in theſe torments as one in a manner dead, not being able either to ſtir or breathe. Now when this wet cloth is pulled out of the depth of his throate, to make him to anſwer unto their demands; If you ſhould behold how blood and water comes out together, you would imagine they had plucked the very bowels out of his belly: in which wofull plight he is held as long as they thinke good, even untill with horrible threats and torments he be returned back again to priſon.

If they pleaſe to proceed further in adding moe torments, within a moneth or two after the ſaid cruelties are renewed, either in more terrible or moderate manner, to ſome once, to others to the ſixt time.

There is yet another torment which is peculiar to this holy ſeat of the Inquiſitors. They cauſe a great fire of hot burning coales to be brought, which they apply nigh unto the ſoles of his feet whom they intend to torment, which are firſt thorowly anointed with greaſe or ſuet, that the heat of the fire may pierce more deeply.

Thus much be ſaid as touching theſe torments uſed by thoſe cruell tormentors of the bloody Inquiſition of Spaine upon the bodies of poore Chriſtians.

¶ A note of Francis Oliver Chancellor of France.

This Chancellor, who in the former perſecutions not behaving himſelfe according to a good conſcience, (being in times paſt ſo far enlightned as to make profeſſion of the truth) was viſited with a mortall diſeaſe; in which ſickneſſe he was obſerved to caſt forth hideous ſighs without ceaſing. In which perplexity the Cardinall of Lorraine came to viſit him, ſtanding aloofe off from him. To whom the Chancellor uttered theſe words; Ah Cardinall, thou wilt damne us all. It is alſo reported, that he much and often bewailed the death of Anne du Burg, of whom mention was made heretofore. And thus living a while in this miſerable condition he ended his dayes.

Gods judgement upon an Apoſtata.

¶ A Papiſt defined by Iaques de Lo.

Having called the vowes of papiſts papiſticall vowes, he was asked what a papiſt was. He is a Papiſt, ſaid De Lo, who ſquares his actions and converſation according to the Popes lawes. Anno 1560.

Being preſſed by the papiſts to confeſſe whom he knew of the reformed religion, he would name none but ſuch as had ſuffered; and withall further added, I entreat you my Brethren in the name of God, that you conceive no ſiniſter opinion as touching me in this behalfe: for I am reſolved, by the help of my God (without whoſe aſſiſtance I can doe nothing, and with which I can doe all things) to ſuffer my fleſh rather to be rent in pieces, then to reveale any whoſe perſons might thereby be endangered.

Note his admirable conſtancy.

¶ The notable converſion of a notorious evill liver, by name Iohn Herwin, of Houtkerk in Flanders, Martyr; who by degrees was ſo far brrught into Chriſts Fold, that hee was called forth to beare witneſſe of the Truth, from which he was once as farre remote as the heavens are from the earth, in the yeare 1560.

This John Herwin, born in Geeſtercorne, &c. in the Weſt ſide of Flanders, was of a diſſolute life, ſuch as ſouldiers for the moſt part are of; but God having a purpoſe to ſhew forth in him the admirable worke of converſion, to draw him to Chriſt, put it into his heart to leave his owne countrey, and come to the City of London. Beeing arrived there about Eaſter, the Lord going on with his worke brought him by his providence into a Brewhouſe, being a Brewer by his calling, where he met with a maſter and fellow ſervants fearing God; a thing ſeldome ſeen in men of that Profeſſion, ſeeing ordinarily they are exceſſive drinkers. His maſter cauſed him oft to reſort to the Dutch Church in the ſaid city of London, where by ordinary hearing of the Word preached he began firſt to taſte, and after to increaſe more and more in the ſaving knowledge of Chriſt. Newes comming over, that warres were likely to be in Flanders, cauſed him to leave England, and to returne againe into his owne countrey. He came thither at the ſame time that three other martyrs were there apprehended, but he was not taken with them.

The Bailiffe of Furne when he ſaw he could not meet with him, underſtanding that he was at Ponſcot, advertiſed the Bailiffe of the ſaid place, that he might take him at his ſiſters houſe. As ſoone as he heard thereof he delayed no time, but in the night time came with his Sergeants & apprehẽded him. Now leading him to priſon, the bailiffe meeting certaine drunkards in the ſtreets, ſaid; they ſay, Wee have many Goſpellers in Houſcot, but it little appeares by theſe diſorders.

John Herwin hearing him ſay ſo, and not willing to balke it, replyed, Is drunkenneſſe a ſin, Maſter Bayliffe? Then ſayd the Bayliffe, What of that? Herwin made this concluſion; Why then commit you not theſe fellowes to priſon, ſeeing it is your office to puniſh vice, and to protect ſuch as feare God. The Bayliffe was mute: yet for all that Herwin was faine to take up his lodging in priſon, where hee behaved himſelfe ſo vertuouſly, that every one admired it. But becauſe hee was not called forth before the Magiſtrates of Houſcot ſo ſoone as hee deſired and expected, hee grew heavy and ſad, asking of ſome whom he knew well, if they could tell why they ſo delayed the matter? For his heart was fired with an holy zeale to confeſſe Jeſus Chriſt before his judges. Many feared him much, who knew what hee had been in times paſt; hee being as yet but a Novice, and a new commer on in the profeſſion of the Goſpell; in which caſe men for the moſt part have but ſome glimmering of the light, and are unſetled in their judgements.

At length hee was brought before the ſheriffes of the towne, who commanded a Prieſt to diſpute with him. At the firſt Encounter he asked Herwin how long it was ſince hee was confeſſed? alſo what hee thought of confeſſion, asking him ſundry other triviall queſtions, to which Herwin anſwered no leſſe modeſtly then Chriſtianly, in ſo much as they who were of ſound judgement eaſily diſcerned how hee was not the man hee had been in times paſt, but that his priſon had been to him a good ſchoole where hd had well conned his leſſon. The Prieſt demanded further whether he beleeved there were ſeven ſacraments or no? The bayliffe helping the Prieſt, ſaid, whats that to the purpoſe, whether there be ſeven or two, hee will acknowledge no more then hee liſt (for he had confeſſed there were but two.) The chiefe ſheriffe demanded of him in theſe termes, whither hee beleeved that the Lord remained upon the Altar, fleſh, body, and bone. I anſwer (ſaith Herwin) with Saint Steven, that the higheſt dwelleth not in temples made with hands. Heaven, ſaith the Lord, is my throne, and the earth is my footſtoole; what houſe will yee then make unto mee, and where is the place of my reſt? Hath not my hand made all theſe? And then tooke occaſion to admoniſh the Judges which ſate there, to examine the Doctrine of the Romane Church, by the true touchſtone which is the holy ſcripture, that ſo they might diſcern how oppoſite and contrary the one is to the other. Conſider alſo, ſaith hee, what the words of ſaint Peter import, where hee affirmes that we ought to obey God rather then man. Yea it is high time for you to thinke upon what I ſay, and that ſeriouſly alſo, for at the laſt day it is neither your prieſts, nor your placcards (which you thinke to ſtop our mouths withall) that ſhall any way excuſe you then. And as for the title of the Romane Catholike Church, which you hold out againſt us; I deny not but in the Apoſtles time and afterwards there was a true Church in Rome, as well as in Corinth, Galatia, among the Philippians, and in other churches; but after that ſhe fell from the pure word of God, and falſified the Sacraments thereof, turning eccleſiaſticall diſcipline into auricular confeſſion, God hath alſo forſaken her, ⁊ ſhe ought now no more to bee called a Church of God, but rather the Synagogue of Satan. As ſoone as the chiefe Sheriffe (who is called the firſt ſpeaker) heard this, he commanded him away.

Iſai. 66. 1, 2.

Act. 4. 19. & 5. 29.

A godly admonition to Judges and Magiſtrates.

When the church of Rome was a true Church.

Having then given ſufficient teſtimony of his Faith, before thoſe of Houſcot, he craved for Juſtice either one way or another. But they on the contrary urged him to deſiſt from his opinion. To which he anſwered, that his faith was not built of an opinion, but ſaid he, the Lord hath taught me to eſchew evill and do good. Yea, ſaid they, but ſeeſt thou not how theſe opinions have troubled the World? And alſo how many of the learneder ſort do contradict them? Anſwer. So far is it off that the doctrine of the Goſpell ſhould be the cauſe of troubles, that it only is the meanes of quieting the troubles, debates, and ſtrifes which raigne in the world. Theſe troubles ariſe indeed from the malice of men. And as touching your learned men you ſpeake of, it is impoſſible for humane wiſdome to comprehend the doctrine of God: for which cauſe Chriſt ſaith. Father I thanke thee, that thou haſt hid theſe ſecrets from the wiſe men of the World, and haſt revealed them to babes. Now as the Sergeants conveyed him to priſon, they counſelled him to ſpeake more mildly, and then he might doe well enough.

Pſal. 14.

Mat. 11. 25. Luke 10. 21.

Before his death he was ſorely ſet upon by certaine Sophiſters, who alledged to him the ſayings of many of the ancient Fathers upon the point of the Lords Supper; but he overcame them, by holding cloſe the true ſenſe of Chriſts words. In priſon he comforted himſelfe in ſinging of Pſalmes and ſpirituall Songs, ſome of which he indited himſelf. The Canons and prieſts ſeeing the people flock together to the priſon doore to heare him, eſpecially upon the Sundayes and holy daies, ſtrove by all meanes to put him by his ſinging. They coupled him with two malefactors, to be a griefe unto him: who obtaining certaine inſtruments by the helpe of their conſorts, brake priſon and fled. Herwin might thus have eſcaped if he would; but fearing his flight might be imputed to the godly Chriſtians in the City, he reſolved rather to remaine there, than to flie. His ſentence in the meane while comming from the Court, he was no ſooner advertiſed of it, but hee thanked God for advancing him to ſo high an honour as to be counted worthy to ſuffer for his name: Teſtifying the joy he inwardly had, by a Letter which he ſent to the brethren; praying and exhorting them to be conſtant and to perſevere in that Doctrine which they had received from God.

The fourth day of November betweene foure and five of the clocke in the morning, Herwin was ſent for by the Magiſtrates from priſon into the place of Judgement, where by intreatings and goodly promiſes they urged him to recant and receive their breaden God, which was then to bee offered up; or at leaſt to confeſſe that Jeſus Chriſt was there corporally preſent, upon which he ſhould by and by be delivered out of all dangers. Now Herwin refuſing their offer was bound and brought by force into the Chappell: but he in ſign of his deteſtation, turned his backe alwayes upon it, ſhutting his eyes, and ſtopping his eares. At the elevation of their Hoſt, one who was kneeling to it, asked him if Jeſus Chriſt was not now betweene the Prieſts hands. No, no, ſaid Herwin, he is in Heaven at the right hand of his Father.

Soone after the ſentence of death was read againſt him, ⁊ ſo was he delivered into the hands of the Tormentor. As he paſſed out of the townhouſe, ſtanding upon the firſt ſtep, ⁊ viewing the people who waited to ſee him, See here (ſaith he) how this wicked World rewards the poore ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt. Whileſt I gave my ſelfe to drunkenneſſe, to playiug at Cards and Dice, living in all diſſolution and ungodly behaviour, I was never in danger of theſe hands (lifting up his hands which were bound) I was then counted a good fellow, and at that time who but I? But no ſooner began I by converſion to aske after a godly life, but the world made war upon me, and became my enemy, perſecuting and impriſoning me, and now laſt of all ſending me to the place where I muſt pay my laſt debt. But the ſervant is no better than his Lord: For ſeeing they perſecuted him, no queſtion they will perſecute us.

Mat. 10. 24.
Iohn 15, 20.

Being come to the place where he was to ſuffer, one of the aſſembly reaching him forth his hand drew nigh unto him, comforting him, never leaving him till he entred into the Cabbin of wood in which he was to be burnt. He then began to ſing the thirtieth Pſalme, of which having ſung only the firſt ſtaffe, a Fryer hearing the ſame haſtned towards him (not without much difficulty) through the throng, that he might come neere to interrupt him, who kneeling on his knees ſaid, Oh Iohn, turne, there is yet time and ſpace. The Martyr, ſleighting his gloſing words, turned his back upon him. And many there preſent cryed to the Fryer, Turne thou, thou hypocrite: and thus was he ſuffered quietly to finiſh the Pſalme. The Fryer ſeeing himſelfe diſappointed this way of his purpoſe, continuing ſtill in his impudency, ſaid to the people, be ye not offended good people in hearing this Heretique ſing of God. They cryed againe to him, Hold thy peace thou Balaamite, here is no body offended. Many ſung with a ſoft voice with the Martyr, and ſome againe ſung aloud without faining.

There were more than foure hundred which encouraged him to continue to the end, as he had well begun. Then he ſaid unto them, Brethren, I fight under the Standard and in the quarrell of my great Lord and Captaine Chriſt.

Having ended the pſalme he made his prayer to God upon his knees. Then riſing up, and being about to enter into his lodge made with an heape of fagots, he ſaid to the people, I am now going to be ſacrificed; follow you me when God of his goodneſſe ſhall call you to it. When he was gone in, the Fryer put him in minde againe, that yet there was time to repent: but he, as one little minding what this deceiver ſaid, commended his ſpirit into the hands of God. Hee that reached him forth his hand ſtood in the midſt of the Sergeants, and not far off from the Tormentor, ſtill encouraging the Patient, and yet none laid hold on him; they were ſtricken with ſuch aſtoniſhment, partly with the Martyrs courage, and partly with their owne ſhame in putting to death an innocent. The Executioner not being his craftſmaſter ſtrangled and burnt him moſt cruelly, ſo as the people were heard to bewaile the manner of it, whileſt the Martyr yeelded up the ghoſt the ſaid fourth day of November, Anno 1560. His body was conſumed to aſhes, which were buried in the Market place of Honſcot.

¶ Here it ſhall not be amiſſe to inſert a godly prayer which a like notorious wretch (before his converſion) made at his death after he was converted, and ſuffered for the ſame cauſe. His name was Lieuin Blekere , by his Trade a Painter, who dwelt in a little village in the Low Countries , called Pamelle, Anno 1566.

O Heavenly Father, I give thee thankes that thou haſt pulled me out of darkneſſe, and haſt revealed the light of thy Goſpell unto me, for elſe I had periſhed everlaſtingly. O father, thou diddeſt ordaine me to be one of thy Witneſſes, even from my mothers wombe, yea, before the foundation of the world was laid. Now therefore Lord let this ſacrifice be acceptable unto thee, receive me thy poore ſervant into thy grace and favour, and pardon the ſin of my perſecutors.

To one that ſtood by he ſaid, Brother, fight the good fight of faith with me, and pray for me ſo long as you ſee life to be in me. And while he was yet ſpeaking the tormentor ſtrangled him. The dead body, being a little ſcortched with the fire was taken thence and hanged on a gibbet by Pamelle, whence he was taken downe in the night and buried.

¶ Iohn de Boſchane drowned in a tub in priſon, the twenty eighth day of February, in the City of Antwerpe, Anno 1561.

The evening before he ſuffered many of the faithfull expected what ſhould be done unto him. But the Magiſtrates of the towne fearing an uprore, knowing that he was a man free of ſpeech, and beloved of the people, tooke counſell to drowne him ſecretly in the priſon, which could not be executed without murther and cruell torment. For the tub (in which he ſhould be drowned) being neither large nor deep enough, the Martyr himſelfe being tall of ſtature, and the executioner having provided ſo little water that he could not poſſibly be drowned therein; therefore he was conſtrained, for the ſhortning of this ſo cruell a torment, to wound him in the body with divers ſtabs of a dagger, which were to be ſeen thereon after he was dead. Thus finiſhed this Boſchane Martyr his life, being twenty ſix yeares of age, in the City of Antwerpe, in the yeare of our Lord 1560.

A ſure way to make an end of him.

¶ The ſtory of one Iohn de Buiſons, who was beheaded in the priſon, as Iohn the Baptiſt was, in the night.

This holy ſervant of Chriſt having valiantly ſtood to the profeſſion of the Goſpell, was ſoone after condemned to die. Now fearing leſt any tumult or ſedition ſhould be raiſed in the City of Antwerp, he was beheaded in the priſon about one or two of the clocke in the night, to the glory of God, and the confuſion of his adverſaries, Anno 1561.

¶ Simon Harme Martyr, who had ſentence of death pronounced two ſeverall times upon him in the City of Liſle in Flanders.

This Simon was accuſed to have uttered ſome ſpeeches long ſince againſt the Church of Rome. Witneſſes being produced againſt him in the towne-houſe, the Magiſtrate condemned him to be beheaded. Now according to their cuſtome in that place, his hat being taken from him after ſentence pronounced, he was returned backe againe to priſon, expecting the houre of his execution. Then were ſent unto him certaine friers to confeſſe, or rather to vexe and torment him. But this godly man being throughly fenced with the ſword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, made them know to their ſhame that they were greatly miſtaken: for the Friers returning backe to thoſe who had imployed them in this buſineſſe, reported that this Simon was a moſt notorious heretique; which the Magiſtrates of the Citie hearing, cauſed him by and by to be called to judgement, ſending him his hat againe which they tooke from him, in token that they had revoked the ſentence firſt pronounced, to enter a new proceſſe againſt him. Thus got Simon ſome leaſure the better to diſpoſe of his affaires, alſo to comfort and counſell his friends by Letters, not weighing the torments of death which he was to endnre. Three dayes before he ſuffered, ſentence was pronounced touching another kind of death, namely to be burned, and his body to be conſumed to aſhes. Which kind of Martyrdome did manifeſt to all the people of the ſayd City the admirable power of the Lord, by how much more the paines were exceeding great, beholding how this his ſervant ſweetly gave up the ghoſt in peace in the midſt of the fiery flames.

The Martyr had his hat ſent him which was taken from him.

¶ A note of one Iohn Martin, who bragged he would cut off a Miniſters noſe.

THe Church of God increaſing ſo farre in the Valleyes of Angrongne in France, that they were faine to build a Church wherein to preach the Word publikely, in regard of concourſe of people reſorting thither, it happened that the forenamed John Martin, boaſting every where that he would cut off the miniſters noſe of Angrongne, was ſoone after ſet upon by a mad wolfe, who did indeed eat his noſe from his face, dying mad thereof himſelfe, and yet it was never obſerved that this Wolfe had ever hurt any before. Which terrible judgement was ſo manifeſt, that it was noyſed among all the neighbour Villages thereabouts, An. 1561.

A remarkable judgement of God.

¶ A miſchiefe mercifully prevented by the meanes of prayer and calling upon the name of God.

A Certaine Preſident being come into the city of Pigneroll, ſent for one of Saint Johns (very neere unto Angrongne) who at that time dwelt there, asking him if he had not cauſed a childe of his to be baptiſed at Angrongne, and why he had done ſo? The poore ſilly man anſwered, hee had done it becauſe Baptiſme was there adminiſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution. The Preſident hearing him ſay ſo, in great fury, commanded him in the kings name, upon paine of being burned, to get it rebaptiſed, The Father of the child beſought him that he would permit him to pray unto God before he gave him his anſwer. Which being done in the Hall before all the company, he further intreated him under his hand and Seale to cauſe it to be ſet downe, how he could diſcharge him of committing ſo great a ſinne; and that if he would take the guilt thereof upon himſelfe and his, then he would anſwer him. The Preſident hearing how he came about him, was ſo confounded in himſelfe for a while, that hee could not ſpeake. But by and by he bad take away the Villaine, and ſo he was never called before him againe.

AMong other things (ſaith my Author) this is to be obſerved, that during theſe troubles in the Valleyes of Angrongne from the yeare 1555 unto the yeare 1561. The Papiſts which dwelt in the Country conveyed their daughters away into the Mountaines, and committed the cuſtody of them to theſe poore perſecuted Chriſtians of Vandois, for feare leſt their chaſtities ſhould be violated by the common ſouldiers, according as they had beene threatned by them, who were given over to all villainy and cruelty.

¶ An aſſemble of the faithfull, deſcried nigh to Antwerpe, was by the enemies of the Goſpel put to flight, of which three being apprehended, two eſcaped, and one named Barthelemi de Hoy was executed Anno 1561.

THe third day of the moneth of Auguſt in the yeare 1561, when great triumphs were uſually made in the city of Antwerpe about the plays and prizes of Rhetorike (as they call them) to the ſight and hearing whereof there commonly came great multitudes from many places: thoſe of the Religion being willing to take all opportunities to meete together in the feare of God, whileſt others were buſied in ſeeing and beholding thoſe vanities: a great number withdrew themſelves out of the City, and entered into a wood, nigh unto Markſem, that there they might heare the word of God preached with lively voice by the preachers thereof.

The Dorſart of Marklem being advertiſed thereof, reſorted thither with his Officers, being conducted to the place by certaine poore youths, being Nete-heards, whom he promiſed to apparell, if they could bring him to any place of the wood where the aſſembly was; Whileſt himſelfe ſtaying without, with two or three other on horſebacke, ſent the reſt of his Officers with the boyes into the wood. At the appearing of theſe wolves the poore ſheepe of Chriſt began to be affrighted, and to flie. The Miniſters and others ſeeing this diſorder admoniſhed the aſſembly not to ſtir, ſhewing how great inconveniences would follow upon ſuch an inconſiderate flight. The perſecutors were not above five or ſix, but the perſecuted were about foure or five hundred perſons; ſo as without any great difficulty they might have had the better hand of them. The principall aime which the Officers had, was to apprehend the Miniſter. For having caught one of the aſſembly, thinking hee had beene the man, they cryed one to another, Hold the Prieſt faſt, ſtriking him with their Piſtols and ſtaves, and ſo brought him out of the wood. The Dorſart, perceiving that this was not the Miniſter, kept him notwithſtanding as his prey, and left not purſuing this ſcattered flock untill night. After this hee tooke two others in the Lordſhip of Akeram.

Thus having apprehended theſe three priſoners, and withall having taken up many cloakes, hats, vailes, foreparts, and other accoutrements, which the poore diſperſed had loſt and let fall, theſe they tooke away as a ſpoyle, and returned to Markeſem, ſem. This Dorſart layd hold on two others by the way, whom he ſuppoſed to be of that number, one of which was Barthelemi de Hoye, a Joyner, of the age of twenty foure yeares. Theſe five were committed to priſon one from another, ſome at Markſem, and others at Damme. Soone after the firſt three which had beene taken in the Juriſdiction of Akerem had the means to eſcape without any danger or detriment, by the aſſiſtance of their friends. Barthelemi onely remained in the cuſtody of the Dorſart, before whom he endured many baitings through the Parſon of that place, being ſet on by him: Beſides many others who daily by way of ſcorne queſtioned with him; asking, Why ſuch a young man as he could not content himſelfe with their religion and glorious Church, adorned with ſilver, gold, and precious ſtones, in which there was ſuch melodious muſick, both of voices and inſtruments, but muſt needes joyne himſelfe to that Church which was hated, deſpiſed, and expoſed to all inconveniences whatſoever. But Barthelemi overcame all theſe temptations by the grace and power of the Almighty, manifeſting it to all, that that which is greatly eſteemed amongſt men is altogether an abhomination in the ſight of God. Having then often juſtified the cauſe of God, and reproved the Roman Church of falſe doctrine, knowne by the fruits thereof, viz. the hatefull lives of the prieſts, &c. he was after a few daies brought out of Priſon, and at laſt beheaded the nine and twentieth of Auguſt, betweene foure and five of the Clocke in the morning, Ann.1561.

Luk.16.45.

THe Duke of Guiſe being arrived at Joinville, asked of ſuch as he was familiar withall, whether thoſe of Vaſſy uſed to have ſermons preached conſtantly by their miniſter. It was anſwered they had, and that they encreaſed daily more and more. At the hearing of which report falling into a grievous chafe, upon Saturday the laſt of February, 1562. that he might the more covertly execute his conceived wrath againſt the religious ſort in Vaſſy, he departed from Joinville, accompanied with the Cardinall of Guiſe his brother, and thoſe of their traine, and lodged in the village of Dammartin the free, which is diſtant from Joinville about two French miles and a halfe.

The next day being Sunday, which was the firſt of March, after he had heard Maſſe very early in the morning, being attended with about two hundred men armed with harquebuſes, Piſtols, and Coutelaxes, he left Dammartin, paſſing along to Vaſſy. As he went by the Village of Bronzevall, which is diſtant from Vaſſy but a ſmall quarter of a mile, the bell (after the uſuall manner) rang to the Sermon. The Duke hearing it, asked ſuch as he met with by the way, why yͤ bell rung ſo loud at Vaſſy. They told him it was to give the people warning of the Sermon which was to be made there. Then one called La Montague ſaid, It is for the aſſembling of the Huguenots: adding moreover, that there were many in the ſaid Bronzevall who frequented the ſermons preached at Vaſſy; and therefore that the Duke ſhould do well to begin there, and offer them violence. But the Duke anſwered, March on, march on, we ſhall take them among the reſt of the aſſembly. Many who followed the Duke, to wit, pages and footmen, rejoyced not a little concerning this bloudy enterpriſe; not ſticking to ſay, that the booty and pillage would fall to their ſhares; ſwearing by blood and wounds, that there would be good ſtore of Huguenots there.

Now there were certaine ſouldiers and archers accompanying the, Duke, who compaſſed about Vaſſy; for, having beene muſtered at Monthierender, in ſtead of returning home, as they were wont to do after the muſter was ended, they took their way thence to Vaſſy, moſt of them being lodged in the houſes of Papiſts. The Saturday before the ſlaughter they were ſeene to make ready their weapons, harquebuſes, and Piſtols: but the Faithfull not dreaming of ſuch a conſpiracy, thought the duke would offer them no hard meaſure, being the Kings ſubjects; alſo, that not above two moneths before the Duke and his brethren paſſing by nigh unto the ſaid Vaſſy, gave no ſigne of their diſpleaſure.

The Duke of Guiſe being arrived at Vaſſy with all his troupes, a young man a ſhoomaker ſtepping out of his houſe not farre from the doore where the aſſembly was, Montague pointing to him with his finger ſaid he was one of the Miniſters. Whereupon the Duke called this ſhoomaker to him, and asked of him whether he were a Miniſter, and of what Univerſity he was. Hee anſwered, that he was not of that Calling, neither was he a ſcholler. Notwithſtanding he hardly eſcaped from this troupe, which had invironed him round about: only one of the company told him, That if he had beene a Miniſter he had taken upon him a very baſe Calling.

So it is deemed in the eye of the world.

From thence the Duke, La Broſſe, and La Montague paſſed on in the ſaid City with their ſouldiers, as if they minded to take their way towards the village of Eſclairon, where it was given out hee meant to dine. But paſſing by the market houſe of Vaſſy, which is right over againſt and nigh unto the monaſtery in the way leading to Eſclairon, he turned and went directly toward the Common Hall or market houſe, and then entred into the Monaſtery; where having called to him one named Deſſalles, the Prior of Vaſſy, and another whoſe name was Claude le Sain, being the Provoſt of the ſaid Vaſſy, he talked a while with them, and iſſuing haſtily out of the Monaſtery was attended by many of his Followers. Then commandement was given to ſuch as were Papiſts, to retyre into the Monaſtery, and not to be ſeene in the ſtreets, unleſſe they would venture the loſſe of their lives. The Duke perceiving others of his retinue to be walking to and fro under the towne Hall and about the Churchyard commanded them to march on towards the place where the ſermon was, being in a Barne diſtant from the Monaſtery about ſome hundred paces, quite oppoſite to that way which the Duke ſhould take to Eſclairon. This command was by and by put in execution by ſuch of the company as went on foot, going directly thither. Hee that marched formoſt of this rabble was La Broſſe, and on the ſide of theſe marched the horſemen, after whom followed the Duke with another company, as of his own followers, ſo likewiſe of thoſe of the Cardinall of Guiſe his brother.

By this time Maſter Leonard Morel the Miniſter, after the firſt prayer ended, and having begun his ſermon before his auditors, which might amount to about 1200 perſons, conſiſting of men, women, and children: The horſemen firſt approching to the Barne within a matter of twenty five paces, ſhot off two harquebuſes right upon thoſe who were placed in the galleries joyning to the windows. The people within perceiving that, they who were nigh to the doore uſed means to ſhut it, but were diſappointed, becauſe this diſordered company preſſed in upon them: who forthwith unſheathing their ſwords, cried furiouſly out, Death of God, kill, kill theſe Huguenots.

The

Anno 1559.

The firſt they ſeized on was a poore Cryer of Wine, who ſtood next the doore, asking him, if he were not a Huguenot, and in whom he beleeved? Having anſwered that he beleeved in Jeſus Chriſt, they ſmote him twice with a ſword upon his body, which felled him to the ground. Being got up againe thinking to recover himſelfe, they ſtrucke him the third time, whereby being overcharged with wounds he fell downe and dyed inſtantly. Two other men at the ſame time were ſlaine at the entry of the ſaid doore as they were preſſing out to eſcape.

Then did the Guiſe with his company violently enter in among them, ſtriking downe maine blowes upon the poore people with ſwords, daggers, and Coutelares, not ſparing any age or ſex. Beſides, they within were ſo aſtonied that they knew not which way to turne them, but running hither and thither fell one upon another, flying as poore ſheepe before a company of ravening Wolves entring in among the flocke.

Some of the murtherers ſhot off their peeces againſt them that were in the Galleries; others cut in peeces ſuch as they lighted upon; others had their heads cleft in twaine, their arms and hands cut off, and did what they could to hew them all to peeces; ſo as many of them gave up the ghoſt even in the place. The walls and Galleries of the ſaid Barne were Dyed with the blood of thoſe who were every where murthered: yea, ſo great was the fury of the murtherers, that part of the people within were forced to break open the roofe of the houſe, if peradventure that way they might ſave themſelves upon the top thereof.

Being got thither, and then fearing to fall again into the hands of theſe cruell tygers, ſome of them leaped over the walls of the Cty, which were very high, flying into the woods and amongſt the vines, which with moſt expedition they could ſooneſt attaine unto; ſome hurt in their armes, others in their heads and other parts of their bodies. The Duke preſented himſelfe in the houſe with his ſword drawne in his hand, charging his men to kill, eſpecially the yong men. Onely in the end women with child were ſpared. But purſuing thoſe who preſſed to get upon the houſe top, they cryed, Come downe ye dogges, come downe, uſing many cruell threatning ſpeeches unto them.

The cauſe why women with childe eſcaped, was, as the report went, for the Dutches ſake his wife, who paſſing along by the walls of the City, hearing ſo hideous out-cries which were made amongſt theſe poore creatures, with the noyſe of the peeces and piſtols continually diſcharged, ſent in all haſte to the Duke her husband with much entreaties to ceaſe this perſecution, for frighting women with childe.

The dutcheſſe intreats for a pacification; that thoſe of her ſex being with childe might not bee affrighted.

During this ſlaughter the Cardinall of Guiſe remained before the Church of the ſaid Citie of Vaſſi, leaning upon the wals of the church-yard, looking towards the place where his followers were buſied in killing and ſlaying whom they could. Many of this aſſembly being thus hotely purſued, did in the firſt brunt ſave themſelves upon the roofe of the houſe, not being diſcerned of thoſe which ſtood without: but at length ſome of this bloody crue eſpying where they lay hid, ſhot at them with long pieces, wherewith many of them were hurt and ſlain. The houſhold ſervants of Deſſalles Prior of Vaſſi, ſhooting at the roofe people, cauſed them to fall downe from the roofe like pigeons: one of that wretched company was not aſhamed to boaſt after the maſſacre was ended, That he for his part had cauſed fire at the leaſt to tumble downe in that pittifull plight, ſaying, that if others had done the like, not many of them could poſſibly have eſcaped.

A lamentable ſpectacle.

The Miniſter in the beginning of the maſſacre ceaſed not to preach ſtill, till one diſcharged his piece againſt the pulpit where he ſtood, after which falling downe upon his knees, he entreated the Lord not onely to have mercy upon himſelfe, but alſo upon his poore perſecuted floke. Having ended his prayer, he left his gowne behinde him, thinking thereby to keepe himſelfe, as unknown: bnt whileſt he approached towards the doore, in his fear he ſtumbled upon a dead body, where he received a blow with a ſword upon his right ſhoulder. Getting up againe, and then thinking to get forth, he was immediately laid hold on and grievouſly hurt on the head with a ſword, whereupon being felled to the ground, and feeling himſelfe mortally wounded, he cryed, Lord into thy hand I commend my ſpirit, for thou haſt redeemed me, thou God of truth.

Pſal.31.5.

Whileſt he thus prayed, one of this bloody crue ran upon him to have houghed him, but it pleaſed God his ſword brake in the hilts. Now to let you underſtand by what meanes he was delivered from ſo imminent a death, two gentlemen taking knowledge of him, as the reſt were about to kill him, ſaid, it is the Miniſter, let him be conveyed to my Lord Duke. Theſe leading him away by both the armes, brought him before the gate of the Monaſtery, from whence the Duke and the Cardinall his brother comming forth, ſaid, come hither, and asked him, ſaying, Art thou the Miniſter of this place? who made thee ſo bold to ſeduce this people thus? Sir, ſaid the Miniſter, I am no ſeducer, for I have preached to them the Goſpell of Jeſus Chriſt. The Duke perceiving that this ſhort and pithy anſwer condemned his cruell fact, began to curſe and ſweare, ſaying, Death of God, doth the Goſpell preach ſedition? Provoſt, goe and let a Gibbet be ſet up, and hang this bougrer.

At which words the Miniſter was delivered into the hands of two Pages, who miſuſed him vilely. The women of the City being ignorant Papiſts caught up dirt to throw in his face, and with extended outcries ſaid, Kill him, kill this varlet, who hath been the cauſe of the ſlaughter of ſo many. Much adoe there was to hold off the women from being revenged upon the poore Miniſter.

Whilſt the Pages had him thus in their handling, the Duke went into the barn, to whom they preſented a great Bible, which they uſed for the ſervice of God. The Duke taking it into his hands, calling his brother the Cardinall ſaid, Loe here the Title of the Huguenot books. The Cardinall viewing it, ſayd, There is nothing but good in this book, for it is the Bible, to wit, the holy Scriptures. The Duke being offended for that his anſwer ſuited not to his humor, grew into a greater rage than before, ſaying, Blood of God, how now? what? the holy Scripture. It is a thouſand and five hundred yeerey agoe ſince Jeſus Chriſt ſuffered his death and paſſion, and it is but a yeere ſince theſe bookes were imprinted, how then ſay you that this is the Goſpell? by the death of God you ſay you know not what. This unbridled fury of the Duke diſpleaſed the Cardinall, ſo as he was heard ſecretly to mutter, An unworthy Brother. This Maſſacre continued a full houre, the Dukes trumpeters ſounding the whilſt two ſeverall times. When any of theſe deſired to have mercy ſhewed them for the love of Jeſus Chriſt, the murtherers in ſcorne would ſay unto them, you uſe the name of Chriſt, but where is your Chriſt now become? And when they ſaid Lord God, they blaſphemingly would ſay, Lord devill.

A grievous ſcorne.

There dyed in this Maſſacre within a few daies fifty or threeſcore perſons; beſides theſe, there were about two hundred and fifty others as well men as women who were wounded and ſpoiled, whereof ſome died, ſome were maimed, loſing ſome a leg, ſome an arme; ſome their fingers cut off from their hands, and caried away. The poores box which was faſtned to the doore of the Church with two Iron hookes, was wreſted thence, with twelve pounds therein, and never reſtored again. Nothing was to be ſéene in the ſtréets but Women with their haire hanging about their eares, faces beſmeared with blood, being wounded in many places with ſwords and daggers, with wéepings and lamentations. Barbers and Chirurgians were ſo ſet on worke, that he which had leaſt had thréeſcore under his hand to be dreſſed, and many periſhed for want thereof.

The poores mony violently taken away and never after reſtored.

The Miniſter was kept cloſe priſoner, ſo as for foure and twenty houres none were permitted to ſupply him with any neceſſaries at all, nor any ſuffered to ſée him or ſpeake with him, and was oft threatned by his kéepers to be ſowed up in a ſack and drowned. Faine would they have drawn him to have kept his Eaſter after the Popiſh guiſe, under faire promiſes of his inlargement; but he would by no means conſent thereto. Thus continued he priſoner untill the eight day of May, 1563. at which time he was ſet frée by the ſuit of the moſt illuſtrious prince of Portion.

Whileſt the Duke was at Eſclairon, the Lackeys and others of their ſort put to ſale, unto ſuch as would give moſt, cloaks, hats, girdles, Coifes, Kerchieſes, with other things which they had ſpoiled the maſſacred of; Crying them with a loud voyce, as if a common cryer had cryed houſhold ſtuffe to be ſold.

A memorable deliverance.

ONe called John of the Gardens, having lived a long time with his wife and childe (in regard of the preſent troubles) abroad in the fields nigh to a City called Seulis in France, at length determining to goe backe againe into the Citie, caſting himſelfe and his upon the providence of God, were met in the ſuburbs by two of the Citie, who willed the ſouldiers to put them to the ſword. The mother of the childe knéeling downe asked not her owne life, but requeſted that if they muſt néeds dye, they would firſt kill her child, becauſe ſéeing it die before her, ſhe might die with the leſſe ſorrow, fearing leſt the poore babe ſhould otherwiſe (in ſuch a time of trouble) be left to ſhift for it ſelfe; which ſpéech of hers ſo wrought upon the ſouldiers, that they ſaved all their lives.

*The ſtrange deliverance of a godly Miniſter of the Church of Chaalons in Champaign called I. * Fournier, after he had indured many hard uſages.*

* He at the firſt was doctor of the Sorboniſts; a man well learned and of an unblameable life.

FIrſt being apprehended and ſpoyled of all that he had, they ſtripped him of his good apparell, and then put an old thred-bare Cloke upon him, and carried him away in a Cart, in regard of a hurt which he had formerly gotten in one of his féet; by reaſon whereof he was diſabled to go, and ſo was conducted with infinite jeſts broken upon him, and at every moment in danger of his life for ſixe miles together, till he came to Manehon, where he had like to have béene pulled in pieces by the rude multitude, but was preſerved notwithſtanding even by thoſe who had already determined to be his death; the priſon alſo being nigh unto the gate of the City.

The thirtéenth of September, a Captaine called Fraiine came to the priſon where he was detained, accompanied with many ſouldiers, who with mocks and threats mingled together ſware that within thrée houres he ſhould be hewed and hacked in péeces, and ſo ſhould be made a May-game to all the Citie; with which words he left him. Godet the kings Lievetenant with other of the Juſtices came in after him, demanding wherfore he was brought to S. Manchon, & forthwith commanded the Jaylour to load him with yrons, telling him in ſcorne, you are no better than ſaint Peter I am ſure, whom they laid in yron. But if you have as much faith as he, God will then deliver you, as he did him, by ſending an Angell unto you. I will not, ſaid the priſoner, compare my ſelfe with ſaint Peter: yet it is not twelve yeres agoe ſince (for preaching the ſame doctrine that Saint Peter did (I was impriſoned at Touiouſe, and yet admirably delivered: and though Saint Peter was delivered out of priſon, yet in the end he glorified God by his death. And if I ſhall be counted worthy to ſuffer with him for the truth, may it not be ſaid that I have the like pretious faith as Saint Peter had? but for that time he eſaped thoſe bolts, having hurt his leg and foot very ſore at his apprehenſion: His Shackles at that time were turned into a far more ſtraight priſon.

The Duke of Nevers was a good friend unto this Fournier, by whoſe mediation he was the rather ſpared. But the ſaid Duke receiving an hurt at Dreux whereof he dyed, and the Duke of Guiſe ſucceeding him in the government of Champaigne, his enemies began to renue their former grudge againſt him, who brought him to be examined by torture.

Where firſt they ſtrayned both his thumbs ſo hard with a ſmall Cord, that the blood came forth. Then turning his armes behinde his backe, they hoyſed him with a rope put betwéene his thumbs ſo tyed; twitching him up five or ſixe times thereby, ſometimes letting him down, and then letting him hang againe, till his ſpirits and ſpéech fayled him. But not content therewith they tyed a great ſtone to both the great toes of his féet, and then examined him; firſt if he had not a purpoſe to preach at Werdun, if the company who conducted him thither came together; his anſwer was, That he could not determine to doe that which he had no hope to performe, nor came it into his thought.

Then they asked him where he had thoſe clothes hee wore, ſéeing he was but barely cloathed when he came into priſon? He anſwered, That the Marqueſſe D'Jle when ſhe went from Chaalons, ſent them unto him by her Taylor. Being further asked who taught him to refuſe his judge, his anſwer was, That his owne reaſon counſelled him ſo to doe, & none elſe. This was the effect of that for which he was ſo miſerably tortured, and ſo in concluſion they let him fall with ſuch violence on his face, that he was grievouſly hurt thereon.

Being from thence removed to another priſon according to their cuſtome for two or thrée houres, and then returned to that he was in before, he could not be permitted to have ſo much as a Chirurgion to cure him of the gaſhes the Cords had made in his Fleſh, even to the bare bones: by reaſon whereof he continued in excéeding torment and anguiſh, not being able to bring his hands to his mouth, which were alſo ſo wrung that he thought if God ſhould grant him life, yet he ſhould yet be deprived of the uſe of his limbes.

His inditement being framed, and his condemnation ſubſcribed by ſundry Judges thereunto to appointed, ſome other being of another opinion diſappointed that determination. The newes alſo of the Duke of Guiſes death comming in the neck of it, changed theſe Foxes into another ſhape. The names of the principall whereof were Cocot and Buſſi. Some that had been his Iudges, comming into the priſon, demanded of him if he bare them not ill will: he anſwered, that men of his profeſſion and religion ought not to malice any, no not their enemies, being rather enjoyned by God to love and pray for thoſe that perſecuted them; ſhewing furthermore, that whatſoever troubles had befallen him were none other but ſuch as God had foreordained for the ſetting forth of his owne glory; for which he eſteemed himſelfe moſt happy: only he warned them to bethinke themſelves well what wrong they had offered him, leſt the vengeance of God might ſometime or other overtake them.

The next day, being the twelfth of April, Buſſi, having received letters from the Conſtable for the enlargement of Fournier, being ſollicited thereto by the Captaine of La Tournelle; in ſtead of obeying the Conſtables command ſware that he ſhould be delivered indeed, that is to ſay, into the hands of the multitude: and thus ſtiffely refuſing either the publication of the letters, or to obſerve the Edict, cauſed three of his priſoners of the religion to be put into the dungeon, becauſe he heard them ſing Pſalmes.

In the meane while the Prince of Portien bringing backe the Germane ſouldiers, and paſſing by Chaalons, the chiefe men of that City, fearing to be overrunne, met him; whom he threatned to leave neither village nor houſe ſtanding, unleſſe they reſtored to him the ſaid Fournier in ſafety. Which they promiſing to doe, at their returne they ſo far prevailed with Buſſi, that he conſented to what they had ſo promiſed. And thus on the laſt of April (which was eight moneths ſince Fournier was firſt impriſoned) the Lieutenant Godet, and the Abbat of All Saints, with ſome others reſorted to him, declaring that they were willing now to ſet him at liberty; entreating him now to forgive and forget that which was paſt, that the Prince might ſee how forward they were to gratifie him herein. Fournier was brought into a Cathedrall Church not farre from the priſon, where he found the Captaine of the City with a great company of armed men ready to conduct him out of towne. But the place was forthwith beſet with people whom Buſſi to that purpoſe had ſtirred up, ſo that had it not been for thoſe who defended him within, and an extraordinary ſhowre of raine comming betweene of long continuance; which cauſed the greater part of the ſeditious to depart, Fournier had hardly eſcaped their hands, if a meanes had not been found to let him out by a back doore.

It is here to be noted, that upon the eighth day of October the Biſhop of Chaalons calling Fournier into his garden, endeavouring to turne him from the faith, ſaid, I marvell how you, being an ancient Doctor in Divinity, of the age of fifty eight yeares, and ſo well learned in the tongues, ſhould be thus led aſide with theſe opinions, giving credit ſo ſuddenly to the writings of Calvin and others. To Calvin? ſaid Fournier, you ſhould rather have ſaid, by beleeving and giving credit to the Word of God.

Godet beſtirring him, and being now farre more willing to ſave the ſaid Fourniers life, than he had been formerly to deprive him of it, in the evening bringing him to his owne houſe, and lodging him in his owne bed, did what he could the next day very early to ſend for the keyes of the City gates. Which when he could not obtain of Buſſi, who kept the gates faſt ſhut for feare of the Swart Ruttors, he then endeavoured to bring the ſaid Fournier ſecretly by a back way, to an houſe neere to the gate of the ſaid City; ſo as at eleven of the clocke, certaine Coaches going out, he was ſhuffled out amidſt them, and himſelfe brought him on the way about a quarter of a mile; where he was by and by received by thoſe who attended there for him, with a charge to bring him to their Prince, who at that time was in the Caſtle of Songz: Where he was kindly welcommed of the ſaid Lord, and of all his friends beſides, having compaſſion on him, in regard that now being fifty eight yeares old, he had ſuffered ſo many hard encounters. And within two dayes after he preached before the prince and all his Followers; and the day following, at the inſtant requeſt of thoſe of Vitri, went thither to preach and baptiſe children, the Prince being preſent there in his own perſon. At length Fournier, gathering a Church together at a place called Ver, ſpent ſome ſmall portion of time among his Flocke there, with wonderfull fruit: being ſore weakned when he was in priſon, (what with ſtrait dyet, and the extremity of the torture) he ſoone after finiſhed his courſe, leaving to poſterity a rare memory of his conſtancy and piety.

¶ Savage cruelties committed upon the perſons of the godly at Bar upon Seine.

SUch was the cruelty of the Executioners after they had ſlaine thoſe of the religion, that cleaving their bodies in twaine, they ſtucke not to plucke their hearts thence, as they lay upon the ground, gnawing them betweene their teeth, and ſo reaching them from one to another, ſaying, now they knew they had eaten the heart of a Huguenot before they dyed.

¶ The violent rage of the ſouldiers at Iſſondun, who proceeded ſo far as to re-baptiſe the young Children of Proteſtants after the Popiſh manner.

THe ſouldiers in this City of Iſſondon tooke little children who had beene baptiſed by the Miniſters of the Church there, and cauſed them to be re-baptiſed by their Prieſts, impoſing upon them other names; yea, they re-baptiſed a girle of thirteene yeares old, whom they preſented ſtark naked to the Font. Yet the yong Infants which began only to ſpeake declared both by evident ſignes and words that they would not be re-baptiſed, ſo as a girle of two yeares old, being brought naked to the Font, with much ſtruggling cryed with a loud voice, that their doings were too ſhamefull; ſaying that ſhe would not be baptiſed againe, and therewithall ſtrooke the Prieſt with all the power ſhe had. Alſo the ſon of Iean Haies, of the ſame age, tooke the Prieſt by the beard, and defended it ſelfe as well as it could. But for all this the Prieſts would not give over.

¶ Another

Anno 1563.

¶ Another barbarous cruelty committed by the Peſants of Freſnay in the County of Main.

IN the village of Freſnay, diſtant about ſome ten miles from the City of Mans, a little after that thoſe of the religion had forſaken the City, a certaine Weaver called Hagannot, who was wont to reade the prayers in the aſſembly among ſome few of the godly in that place, was haled in the night out of his houſe by the Peſants there, who having cut his throat afterward filled his mouth with the leaves of a new Teſtament which they found about him.

¶ Execrable blaſphemies and outrages committed in the City of Angiers.

A Company of rake-hels breaking into a merchants houſe, found there many Bibles, which they burned in the City; but chooſing out a great Bible amongſt the reſt, gilt and faire ruled, they faſtned it upon the point of an halberd, and going thence, went in proceſſion therewith through the high ſtreets of the City, with a great cry, ſaying, Lo, here the truth hangeth, the verity of the Huguenots, the truth of all the devills; lo, here the God, the mighty God hath ſpoken. And in this manner they paſſed along untill they came to the bridge, where they threw it into the river, ſaying, Behold the truth of all the devills drowned.

Voila la veritié pendue, la veritié des Huguenots, la veritié de tous les Diables: voila la Dieu le fort, l'eternel parlara, &c.

¶ A ſtrange courſe to make victuals cheape.

IN the City of Bloys, whileſt thoſe of the religion were cruelly handled, it ſo fell out, that in ſuch a diſorder even the Romane Catholiques themſelves dranke with them of the ſame cup; in regard whereof complaint was made on both parts, to the Duke of Guiſe, in hope of ſome redreſſe. His anſwer was, that the Kingdome was but too much repleniſhed with people, and therefore his purpoſe was to cut off as many as he could, that ſo all kinde of victuals might be ſold better cheape.

¶ An outrage done to poore women, who met together to comfort one another.

THere was an honeſt woman of the City of Blois, whoſe name was Nichole, the wife of one Iohn le Manchet, a maker of Sun-Dials, in whoſe houſe certaine neighbours meeting together to comfort and edifie one another, and to pray one with and for another, to the number of nine or thereabouts, with their daughters, theſe Murtherers hearing of it ranne violently in among them, thinking to have found a Miniſter preaching to them; but when they ſaw how they were miſtaken, they dragged them out by the haire of the head into the middeſt of the ſtreet; where loading them with abundance of ſtripes they caſt them into the river: in which calamity God endued them with ſuch ſtrength and ſkill, being unbound, that endeavouring to ſwimme, at length they arrived at an Iſle: where being ſeiſed upon againe by certaine Ferrimen, they were ſtripped naked, and then throwne againe into the River: and thinking yet to ſave themſelves, they were in the end knocked downe by the ſeditious in the ſuburbs of Vienna.

¶ A pitifull and tragicall ſpectacle.

A Certaine poore woman of Tours, whoſe husband they had not long before drowned, having an Infant about ſixe or ſeven weekes old ſucking at her breaſts, and holding by the hand a daughter of hers, very beautifull to looke upon, of the age of 15. or 16. yeares, was by many inſolencies haled to the river ſide, where having made her prayer upon her knees, the childe ſucking at her breaſt, ſhe ſhifted it there in the ſun, and after laid it upon the graſſe, then kneeling downe againe, commended it to God. Meane while this helliſh-rable uſed many words to turne the yong maiden from her religion, ſome uſing ſore threats, others making her many faire promiſes. One of the ſoldiers, being a braver gallant than the reſt, promiſed her marriage, ſo as the poore wench ſtood in a mammering, not knowing what to doe. Her Mother ſeeing her wavering, earneſtly exhorted her to perſiſt in the truth, her ſelf being at that inſtant ready to be plunged into the water. The daughter beholding ſuch an outrage, crying out uſed theſe words (all which was afterwards teſtified by thoſe who were conſenting to this murther, being alſo converted themſelves by ſuch a rare example of conſtancy) I will ſaid ſhe live and die with my mother, whom I know to be a vertuous woman: as for your threates and promiſes, I regard them not, do with me as you pleaſe. The Mother was not yet dead when theſe mercileſſe wretches threw in the daughter after her, who making towards her Mother and they both embracing each other, yeelded up their ſoules into the hands of God. The poore Infant was taken up by a ſoldier, who, having kept it a day and a night from the breaſt, laid it the next day in a Church porch, whence being taken up, and given to a nurſe to keep, it would never take the breaſt after, but within two daies it dyed.

¶ An hiſtory containing the ſingular conſtancy of a Chriſtian Woman, together with her gracious Anſwers to her adverſaries.

IN the ſame City of Tours, the death of an honeſt Matron called Olee is very remarkable. This woman having much profited in the knowledge of Gods word, was preſented before Chavigny, before whom ſhe gave a reaſon of her faith, confirmed by teſtimonies of ſcripture, with ſuch conſtancy in the preſence of certaine Fryers and Prieſts, that in the end they gave her no other anſwer but this, that ſhe was in a damnable eſtate. It ſeemes ſo indeed, ſaid ſhee, being now in your hands; but I have a God that will neither leave nor forſake me for all that. Thou haſt, ſaid they, renounced the Faith. It is true, ſaid ſhe, I have renounced your faith; which I am able to ſhew is rejected and accurſed of God, and therefore deſerves not ſo much as to be called Faith. Vpon this they committed her to priſon, where ſhe was againe ſollicited to recant; to which purpoſe they ſent certaine women unto her into the priſon; but all in vaine: for on the contrary ſhe ſpake her minde freely, and comforted the priſoners which were in the ſame priſon with her for religion.

Now it happened one morning, as ſhee was about to take ſome bodily refreſhing, newes was brought her that ſhee was condemned to be hanged with three men alſo. Which newes ſhe received with ſuch joy and rejoicing, that the officer had no ſooner ended his meſſage, but forthwith ſhe kneeling on her knees began to praiſe and magnifie the name of God, in that he had ſhewed her ſo much mercy, as to deliver her by ſuch a kinde of death out of the troubles of this wretched world; as alſo for that it pleaſed the Lord to honor her ſo far as to die for his truth, and to weare his livery, meaning the halter which the hangman had now put about her necke. Then ſitting downe at table to breake her faſt with the reſt of the company, giving thanks to God, ſhee exhorted them to be of good courage, and to truſt unto the end in his free and only mercy. Laſtly, having ſent her children ſome ſuch ſmall trifles as ſhee then had about her, ſhee called for a cleane linnen Waſtecote, making her ſelfe ready, as if ſhee had been going to a wedding.

Being conducted thus with the reſt of the priſoners about two of the clocke in the afternoone, and paſſing by Saint Martins Church, ſhe was commanded to receive a torch into her hand, and to acknowledge ſhee had offended God and the King, Away, away, ſaid ſhe, with it; I have neither offended God nor the King, according to your meaning, nor in reſpect of the cauſe for which I ſuffer. I am I confeſſe a ſinnefull woman; but I need no ſuch light, for helping me to aske forgiveneſſe of God for my ſins paſt or preſent: uſe ſuch things your ſelves, who ſit and walke in the darkneſſe of ignorance and error.

Then one of her kinsfolkes met her in the way, and preſented unto her view her little children, praying her to have compaſſion on them, ſeeing that by renouncing her religion ſhe might yet preſerve her life, and ſee them provided for. Upon this meeting her motherly affection cauſed her to ſhed plenty of teares: but by and by taking unto her new courage, I muſt needs tell you, ſaid ſhe, that I love my children dearly: but yet neither for love I bear to them or any thing elſe in this world, will I renounce the truth, or my God, who is and will be a Father unto them, to provide better for them than I could have done; and therefore to his providence and protection I commend and leave them; and ſo paſſed on cheerfully without being any further daunted.

Drawing nigh to the place of execution, ſhe called upon God without ceaſing, lifting her hands up to Heaven. Now the men which came with her being ready to ſuffer, when ſhee ſaw them about to die ſilent, and not to call on God, ſhe exhorted them thereto, and began aloud to rehearſe the confeſſion of ſinnes, which begins thus, Lord God Almighty and everlaſting Father, &c. and ſo continuing forth the ordinary prayers, reciting alſo the Lords prayer, and the Articles of the Creed, ſhee with much peace and joy in the holy Ghoſt finiſhed her life.

¶ A Note touching the King of Navarre that then was.

DUring the ſiege of Rovan, Anthony of Bourbon King of Navarre, being forſaken of his faithfull friends and ſervants for conniving with the campe of Trium-Zirat, was ſhot into the right ſhoulder with an Harquebuſe, the fifteenth day of October, whereof he dyed the ſeventeenth following. Not many houres before his death, with teares in his eyes, he asked pardon of God, making a confeſſion of his faith, according to the forme then uſed amongſt thoſe of the Religion; proteſting that if he might be cured of his wound he would cauſe the goſpell to be preached throughout all the Kingdome of France. Hee was a Prince endowed with many good gifts of God, naturally of a gentle diſpoſition, and yet a valarous and couragious warriour, but ſo addicted to follow his pleaſures and delights, that to enjoy them, he eaſily abandoned the care of his more weighty affaires, and ſo was ſubject to no ſmall inconvenience, namely to be ill ſerved aud obeyed; in the meane while neglecting the ſervices of ſuch as had been his loyall and affectionate ſubjects: An imperfection which hath coſt France a million of mens lives, with innumerable ruines beſides; an end whereof is not ſuddenly to be expected.

And yet but eight daies before, through ill counſel and the ſolicitation of the Biſhop of Mande (one of them that betrayed him) he was confeſſed in the eare of the officiall of Rovan, & communicated after the popiſh manner.

The death and Martyrdome of Auguſtine Marlorat, one of the Miniſters of the reformed Church in Rovan, as alſo of three other perſonages, who ſuffered with him at the ſame time, Anno, 1562.

AMongſt the garboyles which by the ſeditious were moved at Rovan, Captaine Saint Eſtevo ſeized upon the bodies of Auguſtine Marlorat, of Du-Boſck, Sieur de Mandreville, Cruchet, Sieur de Soquence, and Noel Cotton. Mandreville perceiving this Captaine to be no well willer of theirs, yet promiſed him a thouſand Crownes, if he would ſave his life and the life of Marlorat, one of their Miniſters: which he having promiſed to doe, by and by he ſhewed him the place whereinto Marlorat was retired, namely a tower into which himſelfe, his wife and children were put, with ſome others. Thus being both brought together, the doore was preſently faſt ſhut upon them.

The ſeven and twentieth of October the Conſtable (accompanied with the Duke of Guiſe) comming to view the place, deſired to ſee Marlorat, to whom he ſaid, you are he who have ſeduced the people. To which he replyed, That if he had ſeduced them, it was God that had beene the doer of it rather than he; for, ſaid he, I have preached nothing unto them but his Divine truth. The Conſtable told him, that he was a ſeditious perſon, and the cauſe of the ruine of that City. To which he anſwered, As for that imputation, I refer my ſelfe to all that have heard me preach, bee they Papiſts or Proteſtants, whether I ever medled with matters of politike State or no: but contrariwiſe have according to my ability, labored to inſtruct them out of the holy Scriptures. The Conſtable with an oath replyed, That he and his abettors plotted together to make the Prince of Conde, King, the Admirall Duke of Normandy, and Andelot Duke of Britaine. To which Marlorat anſwering and teſtifying the innocency of thoſe noble perſonages, gat onely this for his labour, the Conſtable told him (confirming it with a ſolemne oath, that within a few dayes hee ſhould ſee whether his God could deliver him out of his hands or no; and ſo departed in great rage.

Not long after, theſe foure, to wit, Marlorat, Mandreville, Soquence and Cotton, and other chiefe men of the Church were brought into the palace.

pallace. But the names of the foure above ſpecified were onely taken, and forthwith their inditement drawne; whence preſently ſucceeded the ſentence at the inſtance of Bigot Advocate for the King: which ſentence here followeth.

The Court having been informed by the Interrogatories and confeſſions of the ſeditious in the city of Rovan, and other parts of the countrey, namely by M. Io. du Boſc of Mandreville, Preſident of the court of Requeſts in Rovan, Vincent Gruchet Seignior of Sequence, an antient Counſellor in the ſaid City, Noel Cotton ſeignior of Barthonville, the Kings Notary and Secretary, and Counſellor alſo of the ſaid City, with Auguſtine Marlorat Preacher and Miniſter in the ſaid City, Monke and Prieſt, having a wife, being all priſoners in the “Conſciergery of the ſaid Court; concluſions againſt them being taken by the Kings Atturney generall, all and every thing and circumſtance conſidered, the court hath and doth declare the foure perſons aforeſaid guilty and convicted of high treaſon in every particular: for the puniſhment and ſatiſfaction whereof the court hath adjudged and doth adjudge the ſaid Boſc to be drawne naked, onely a ſhirt upon him, on a ſled or hurdle, into the old market place, and there to be beheaded upon the ſcaffold of the city; which done, his head to be ſet upon a pole and placed upon the bridge of the ſaid City; and his body divided into foure parts to be ſet upon foure gibbets, for a ſpectacle to the beholders.

The name of a ſpacious priſon.

And as touching Gruchet and Cotton it is decreed, that they ſhall alſo be drawne in like manner upon a ſled before the towne houſe of the City, there to be hanged upon a gibbet, and afterwards their heads, being ſeparated from their bodies, to be affixed and ſet up upon the bridge of the ſaid City, and afterwards to be carried to the gibbet.

And as touching the ſaid Morlorat, the Court teſtifies that he is attainted and guilty of beeing one of the authors of the great aſſemblies, which have been the cauſe of rebellion and Civill wars. And therefore as a puniſhment, to ſatisfie the law for theſe crimes, the Court hath condemned and doth condemne the ſaid Marlorat, otherwiſe called Paſquier, to be drawne upon a ſled, and to be hanged upon a gibbet before our Ladies Church in Rovan: this done, his head to be ſtriken off from his body, and ſet upon a pole upon a bridge of the ſaid City. All their goods and heritages to be confiſcate to the Kings uſe, &c.

And underneath it was written;

¶ This preſent ſentence was pronounced and executed in the preſence of the Lords and Commiſſaries, Alexander Moyſi, Morterule, and Sirend Meſſengers, the laſt of October, Anno 1562.

The death of Mandravill.

MAndraville at his death ſhewed a wonderfull conſtancy, expecting the ſtroke without being bound, calling earneſtly upon God, ſpeaking in the juſt defence of the reformed Churches, in the faith of which doctrine he profeſſed he was now preſt to yeeld up his ſoule into the hands of God.

AS touching Auguſtine Marlorat, a man excellently learned, and of an unblameable life, who had the teſtimony even of the Papiſts themſelves, that in his ſermons he never uttered ought that tended to ſedition or rebellion; they were not content to ſee him drawne upon a hurdle with ſhame and contempt, but alſo the Conſtable loaded him with a thouſand diſgraces and outrages; as alſo a ſon of his called Nombron ſlain ſoone after in the battell of Dreux. Beſides, Villebon gave him a ſwitch with a wand, not without reproachfull ſpeeches alſo. But he notwithſtanding bare all indignities very meekly and patiently.

Marlorate uſed diſgracefully as he went to be executed.

When he was come to the place where hee ſhould ſuffer, he made an excellent ſpeech, according as the time there permitted him; exhorting Gruchet and Cotton, who were to ſuffer with him, to ſtand faſt in the faith unto the end: which they alſo did. And yet the rage of the people not being herewith ſatisfied, a ſoldier with his ſword ſtrooke at Marlorats leg, being already dead. Upon which inſolencies God within a while after executed his juſt vengeance; for the Captaine who ſurpriſed Marlorat was ſlaine within the ſpace of three weekes by one of the baſeſt ſoldiers in all the band. And as concerning his Judges, two of them dyed ſoone after ſtrangely; namely one of them, to wit the Preſident, by a fluxe of blood, which they could by no meanes ſtanch: the other (which was a Counſellor) making water at his fundament, with ſuch ſtinch, that none could endure to come nigh him.

His behaviour at his death.

Strange judgements of God befalling ſuch as had an hand in perſecuting of him.

As for Villebon, he eſcaped at no better rate; for the ſixteenth day of February the Marſhall of Vieille Ville, comming to Rovan to take order about the affaires of Diepe, having invited him to dinner, among other talke betweene them, ſitting together after they had dined, the Marſhall lamenting the miſerable eſtate of that City, exhorted Villebon to uſe ſome meanes for the redreſſe of ſuch diſorders, being the Kings Lieutenant there. Which words Villebon tooke very harſhly, ſaying, That if any would dare to taxe him for not carrying himſelfe as he ought in his place, he would againe tell him to his face he lyed. Which words (with often repetitions) he uſed after ſuch a manner, as the Marſhall being therewith very much urged, was forced for ſaving of his honour to draw his ſword, wherewith he let drive with ſuch violence at Villebon, that if he had not received the blow with his hand, he had cleft his head downe to his teeth. So Villebon eſcaped at that time with the loſſe of his hand, wherewith he had diſhonorably ſmitten Marlorat at the place of execution. Which hand he cauſed to be buried with greater ſolemnity than himſelfe could attain unto afterwards.

A relation of ſuch troubles and perſecutions as happened to thoſe of the Religion in the City af Caen and other Cities of France, as hereafter follow in the yeare 1562.

Caen.

SUch and ſo long continued the troubles in the City of Rovan, that many were driven to eſcape for their lives into this City of Caen; for albeit the King had commanded, that the pillaging and ſacking of Rovan ſhould not laſt above twenty foure houres, the ſeditious there continued it above twenty foure weekes; and albeit they were forbidden to carry any goods out of that City, yet the Merchants of Paris, of Amiens, Beauvais, and others beſides, ceaſed not to load carts by land, and veſſels by water: which ſome of them notwithſtanding enjoyed not long; for ſuch as were the receivers of theſe ſpoiles were ſpoiled thereof by theeves which met them upon the way.

Anno 1562.

Valougnes.

The body of Coqueville being ſtripped naked was dragged by the murtherers (of this town being in low Normandy) up and down his houſe with all deriſion into a chamber of his, where the exhortations were wont to be made; and there ſpurning the dead body with their feet, they bad him now pray to his God, and preach if hee could; yea the Prieſts who were then preſent ſtuck not with the points of their halbards to ſtuffe the mouths and wounds of the dead with the leaves of bibles, ſaying to the poore dead corpſes, Preach the truth of your God, and call upon him now to help you.

Thalouſe.

A Trumpeter and the common Cryer in the City called Nicholas Boſche, being commanded by the ſeditious to ſay, Ave Maria, anſwered with a ſtedfaſt countenance, Ah, the bleſſed Virgin! where is ſhe that I might ſalute her? Then looking about him this way and that way, he ſayd, I ſee ſhe is not here, ſhe is in heaven, and thither will I goe to find her, and ſo being brought to the place of execution, he dyed conſtantly.

Gaillac.

The murthers which were committed in this place were cruell and horrible; inſomuch as ſome were forced to goe up to the top of an high and great rocke whereon the Abbey of Saint Michael was built, having underneath it the river of Tar very deep, into which they were throwne downe headlong, meeting in the paſſage with another rocke; on which ſome were burſt and daſhed all to pieces; and if any fell into the river eſcaping with life, he was knocked downe immediately by the murtherers, who attended waiting in boats upon ſuch occaſions.

Among the reſt Peter Domo, the ſervant of an Apothecary, requeſted he might have leave to caſt himſelfe from a place higher than that from which others were throwne downe; on condition that if God ſhould in the fall preſerve him from being hurt he might then eſcape with life. He was carried up upon the top of the Abbey, where having made his prayers unto God, fetching his leap, he flew ſo right forth, that miſſing the rocke, he fell ſafely into the river, whence endeavouring to ſwim out, hee alſo was knocked down, notwithſtanding their promiſe made to him as touching the contrary.

Souraize.

A Poore woman called Caſtille Roques being a widow, aged about ſixty yeares, being in her poore Cottage in the City of Souraize, was ſet upon by Captaine Durre, having at his command three hundred men. Hee cauſed this widow to be faſt bound with cords, with another faſtened about her necke all night. The next day having halfe ſtrangled her by haling her here and there, he asked her how oft ſhe had plaied the whore with thoſe of her religion: to whom ſhe boldly anſwered, That in their Chriſtian meeting no ſuch villanies were committed. Durre, fretting and fuming at this her anſwer, tooke her by both the cheekes, forcing her head againſt a wall with ſuch violence, and ſo often therewithall, that he had almoſt beaten out her braines, and then willed her to give him ſeven hundred pieces of gold, which he ſayd ſhe had hidden: to which ſhe replying told him ſhe was a poore woman, and had onely a French penny; he chafing thereat drew her againe by the necke with the cord, and then applyed roſted egges even as they came hot out of the fire, under her arme-holes, ſo as they were much bliſtered therewith, and afterwards in deriſion bad her cry to her father which is in heaven. She anſwered, I will not cry aloud for thee, and yet hee can heare me well enough, and when his will is, he will alſo deliver mee out of thy hands; being more afflicted with the blaſphemies which this varlet uttered, then with all the torments which ſhe endured on her body. He having bemauled her ſhinnes with the pattents ſhee wore upon her feet, ſhee told him his cruelty farre exceeded that of the Turkes and Infidels.

Va tourneie.

Whereupon he calling her a Huguenot whore, told her, That theſe were but the beginnings of her ſorrowes, ſo as if ſhe did not diſcloſe unto him her ſeven hundred pieces of gold, hee would draw her cheeks and breaſts with Lard, and then faſten her to a forme, and burne her quicke, and after mount her up to the higheſt ſteeple in the City, and caſt her thence downe headlong. Well, ſaid ſhe, though my body fall never ſo low, that ſhall not let my ſoule from being carried up into heaven. This Captaine being herewith more inflamed with ire than before, ſeeing that none of theſe cruelties could ſhake the faith and conſtancy of this poore woman, he ſaid unto her, eat this Sugar, taking loame or mortar from off the wall, cauſing her to open her mouth with his dagger, and to ſwallow it downe. But not contenting himſelfe herewith, the villaine forced her to drink a glaſſe of Urine, which himſelfe had made in her preſence, and then threw the glaſſe, with what remained therein, in her face. Laſtly, he cauſed her to paſſe along through the troups of ſouldiers, with intention to have had her ſlaine among them: yet compaſſion moving them to ſpare her, he brought her into his lodging, where this inraged Wolfe by ſtrange cruelties would have cauſed her to loſe her life, had not ſome of the inhabitants by giving him ten crownes redeemed her, and ſo conveyed her to her owne houſe, where within a ſhort time after ſhe finiſhed her dayes.

One buried alive.

Peter Roch, ſervant to the Lievtenant of Dignes, being met withall in the countrey, was buried alive; they conſtrained him to dig his owne grave himſelfe, and ſo try whether it were large enough or no; unto which he was compelled by Bartholomew Chauſe-groſſe, and his complices.

Maſcon.

THe Murtherers in this city having ſeiſed upon the body of Bonnet Bor in Maſcon, one of the moſt noble houſes of the ſame, a man of great learning, and of an unblameable life, who in other places had ſerved in the Miniſtry twenty yeares, having been ranſommed three ſeverall times, was carried along with a thouſand ſcoffes and frumps, ſmitten with fiſts through the corners of the ſtreets, with crying, That whoſoever would heare this devout and holy man preach, ſhould come to the ſlaughterhouſe. Whither having brought him, they buffeted and mocked him two full houres.

Hee onely requeſted before hee died, that they would permit him to make his prayers to God. Whereupon cutting off the one halfe of his noſe, and one of his eares, they ſaid, Now pray as long as thou wilt, and then wee will ſend thee to all the Devils. Then he kneeled down, and lifting up his eies to Heaven prayed with ſuch fervency of ſpirit, that hee cauſed ſome of his murtherers to ſigh within themſelves.

Then directing his ſpeech to him who had cut off his noſe, he ſaid, Friend, I am here ready to ſuffer what thou haſt yet further to inflict upon me. But this I intreat of thee and thy companions, to bethinke you well of the outrages committed by you againſt this poore city; for know there is a God before whoſe Tribunall you muſt give an account of theſe your cruelties. At theſe words the bloud iſſued ſo faſt out at his noſe, that it hindred him from proceeding on in that hee was about to have ſaid.

A Captaine paſſing by cryed to the ſouldiers, Send this wretched man to the Devill. Which one of them hearing, tooke him by the hand, and brought him to the brimme of the river Saone, ſomewhat above the ſlaughter houſe, pretending to waſh and cleanſe him from the bloud wherwith his viſage was beſmeared, conducting him to a boat for this purpoſe; into which he was no ſooner entred, but he there preſently turned him over into the river; wherein he ſtriving for life, and crying to God for mercy, theſe tyrants battered him with ſtones till he ſunke under the water and ſo died.

See here in part (ſaith the Hiſtoriographer) the lamentable eſtate of the poore churches of France, during the firſt troubles, which ended with the end of the Duke of Guiſe, the principall actor therein; who was ſlaine at the ſiege of Orleance, not without the immediate hand of God, in the yeare 156[illegible]. by a poore gentleman whoſe name was Iohn Poltrot, a man very deſperate, but of ſmall ſtature, and therefore commonly called the little Spaniard; who ſhooting the Duke into the ſhoulder with a piſtoll, as he was riding to his tent in an evening upon a little negge, was for the ſame fact adiudged to be drawne in pieces by foure horſes, his head to be cut off, and his torne body to be burnt to aſhes.

¶ A very comfortable Letter written by Wouter Oom Priſoner and Martyr in the City of Antwerpe, and full of conſolation againſt the feare of perſecution: directed to a Brother and Siſter of his.

Grace and peace from God the Father, and from his Sonne Ieſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

WElbeloved brother and ſiſter, whom I love dearely for the truths ſake and for your faith in Chriſt Ieſus. Theſe are to certifie you that I am in bodily health, and enjoy the comfort of a good conſcience, I praiſe my Lord God therefore, who is able to increaſe the ſame more and more, by the powerfull operation of his holy ſpirit. Whoſoever they be that will forſake this preſent evill world, and become followers of their Captain Chriſt, muſt make account to meet with many perſecutions and afflictions: for Chriſt hath told us aforehand, that we ſhould be hated, perſecuted, and baniſhed out of the world, for his names ſake. And this they will doe, ſaith he, becauſe they have neither knowne the father, nor me. But be not afraid, ſaith he, for I have overcome the world. Saint Paul alſo witneſſeth the ſame thing, ſaying, all that will live godly in Chriſt Ieſus muſt ſuffer perſecution. And again, to you it is given for Ieſus Chriſt, not onely to beleeve in him, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake. And doth not our Lord Ieſus Chriſt ſay, bleſſed are you when men perſecute you, and ſpeake all manner of evill falſly againſt you for my name ſake? Rejoice therefore and be glad, for great is your reward in heaven. Now whereto ſerveth all this, my beloved, but to bring us into a conformity with our Lord and Maſter Ieſus Chriſt? For Chriſt hath ſuffered for us, ſaith the Apoſtle ſaint Peter, leaving us an example, that we ſhould walke in his ſteps: who alſo endured the croſſe, and deſpiſed the ſhame for the obtaining of that joy which was ſet before him, and became poore to make us rich, Cor.8.9.

By him alſo are we brought by faith into that ſtate of grace, wherein we ſtand, rejoycing in the hope of the glory of God, knowing that tribulation worketh patience, ꝛc. Wherefore deare brother and ſiſter, be not afrayd of the fiery tryall which is now ſent amongſt us to prove us. For what Father loving his childe doth not correct it? Even ſo doth the Lord chaſtiſe thoſe whom he loveth: for if we ſhould be without correction, whereof all true Chriſtians are partakers, then were we baſtards and not ſons. And therefore Salomon ſaith, my ſonne, deſpiſe not the chaſtening of the Lord, neither faint when thou are corrected of him, for whom the Lord loveth, the ſame he correcteth, even as a Father the ſonne in whom he delighteth. Feare not then to follow the footſteps of Chriſt; for he is the head and we are his members. Even as Chriſt then hath obtained full joy & glory by ſuffering of anguiſhes and ſorrowes; ſo we alſo according to his example muſt through many tribulations enter into the heavenly places, even into the new Ieruſalem. Let us then ſay with ſaint Paul, Chriſt unto me is in life and in death advantage. Let us cry out with him, O wretched creatures that we are, who ſhall deliver us from this body of death? Abraham they had an eye to that holy City, which hath foundations, whoſe builder and maker is God. Let us then, my beloved, cheerefully and willingly follow the Lord, poſſeſſing our ſoules by patience. For it is a good thing, as ſaith the Prophet Jeremiah, both to hope and quietly to waite for the ſalvation of the Lord; and good alſo it is for a man to beare the yoke in his youth, for ſuch the Lord will comfort in the end, and reſtore unto them the joy of his ſalvation.

Lam.3.26.

Loe here deare brother and ſiſter, what conſolations our God hath treaſured up for us in his holy word; for us I ſay, whoſe deſire it is to feare the Lord, and to truſt in his grace and mercy. For the ſalvation of the righteous is of the Lord: hee is their ſtrength in the time of trouble. Wherfore (q) giving all diligence, let us adde to faith vertue, and to vertue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godlineſſe, and to godlineſſe brotherly kindneſſe, and to brotherly kindneſſe love; for if theſe things be in us and abound, they will cauſe us neither to be idle nor unfruitfull in the knowledge of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: The which God our Father grant us for his Sonnes ſake our Lord, Amen.

Out of my hole, December the eleventh, 1562.

Wouter Oom priſoner for the truth.

Now becauſe ye may ſee that this Letter was not without its happy effect, hearken to the relation of the Hiſtory following.

There was one John Wolfe of the City of Audenard, who becauſe he could no longer inhabite there, without either the danger of his life, or wounding of his conſcience, his wife being great with childe, and as yet but weake in the knowledge of the Goſpell, he was forced for theſe reſpects to joyne himſelfe to the aſſembly of the Church in Antwerpe, where thinking himſelfe in ſafety, a neighbour of his owing him ill will accuſed him to the Margrave about the baptiſing of his childe. Whereupon being then committed, and examined where and in whoſe preſence his childe was baptized, he without ſtaggering anſwered, that he had it baptiſed according to the inſtitution of Chriſt, by a Miniſter ſet apart to that Office. The Margrave, not content with this anſwer, often preſſed him with ſundry threats of the torture to accuſe ſuch as he knew. But the ſharpeſt combat he endured was from his owne fleſh, counſelling him during his impriſonment, for the ſafegard of his life, to diſſemble and halt betweene two opinions. The cauſe was from the inward affection he bore towards his wife and childe, being yet but young and of ſingular beauty; in regard whereof many of the congregation expected no other but that he would ſinke under this tryall.

But in the middeſt of theſe aſſaults hee was heard, with prayers and ſighes, to cry mightily to God to bee delivered from this temptation. Which prayers of his were heard in due ſeaſon, even then when in the judgement of man he was ſuppoſed to be overcome thereof, meanes was made of bringing to his hands conſolatory letters: as alſo the ſaid Wouter Oom then priſoner with him, comforted him not a little by his letters. Whereby in the end he continued ſo ſtrong in the Lord, as alſo conſtant in the confeſſion of the truth, that in concluſion he received the ſentence of death with the aforeſaid Wouter. After which his wife came unto him, and they were permitted to talke together, burſting out each of them into ſuch abundance of teares, that it would have moved the moſt ſtony heart that ever was. At parting, with a bitter cry hee commmended her to Gods mighty protection, and his childe to be trained up in the true Religion. Soone after, hee was drowned in the tub or fat of the priſon, and the next day hanged upon one of the Gibbets neer unto the City.

Whither wee ought to fly in time of temptation.

¶ A relation of the troubles and martyrdome of Chriſtian Quekere, Iaques Dienſſart, and Iean de Salomez of Steenwerk in Flanders.

To whom God gave ſuch ability to anſwer their enemies demands, as if they had come from perſons much more learned. Which ſhewes, that God meaſures out to all the gifts and graces of his holy Spirit, according to his good will and pleaſure.

Whileſt the perſecution continued at this time in ſundry places of Flanders, under Philip King of Spaine, and that many fled into England under the protection of Queene Elizabeth; theſe three above mentioned were of the ſame number, who joyned themſelves to the Dutch Church in London, having given publique teſtimony of their faith before all the Congregation. In which place they continuod not long, but they were conſtrained upon ſome ſpeciall occaſions to returne into their owne countrey againe, taking boat about the end of June, Anno 1560.

They were no ſooner arrived at Nieuport, but two of them, to wit, James and Jeane, endeavored to paſſe on to Honſcot, leaving Chriſtian to come at his leiſure, becauſe he was not well at eaſe, having alſo a fardel of ſmall books of religion.

The Bailiſe with ſome others meeting him upon the way, asked him whence he came and whither he was going, as alſo what he was. Chriſtian framed them ſuch an anſwer that they could take no advantage againſt him (travelling as hee did upon the way) onely they ſpied about him that fardell of books, by occaſion whereof they brought him backe into the City: and having learned that he came over with two others, the Bailiffe forthwith ſent his lievtenant towards Honſcot; who ſo wilily handled the matter, that in the end he caught them, and brought them bound to the City of Furn. Where for a few daies they were priſoners together with the foreſaid Chriſtian; in which condition they mutually comforted and encouraged one another: but their adverſaries ſone ſeparated them, thinking therby to weaken their ſtrength, conſtancy, and fortitude.

Upon the firſt of their interrogatories (which was about the third and fourth of July) they asked James why he ſeparated from the church of Rome

Anſ. Becauſe it is not the church of Chriſt.

Queſt. How know you that?

Anſwer. Becauſe it hath neither the Word of God ſoundly preached, the Sacraments duly adminiſtred, nor the Eccleſiaſticall Diſcipline after a right manner executed. James gave good and ſolid reaſons hereof; ſhewing, that in their Church was taught, that ſoules muſt bee ſaved by ſaying of Maſſes, long prayers, invocation of ſaints, pilgrimages, with other ſuch vaine and deceivable hopes; yea, ſaid the Prieſt, doe you thus judge of thoſe who give to Jeſus Chriſt bread when he is hungry, and drinke when he is thirſty, and cloath him being naked, &c. And ſo went on with multiplying many words, not ſuffering the ſaid James to finiſh what he was about to have ſaid. Others asked him if he could prove that they had not the true adminiſtration of Baptiſme.

Anſwer. You have ſo obſcured it with your owne additions, that a man can ſcarce diſcerne it to be Baptiſme.

Queſt. What thinke you then of your owne Baptiſme.

Anſw. Were I now to be baptiſed, I would not receive it from your Church, ſo well it likes me that I have received it from you. Being demanded what he ſaid to the Sacrament of the Altar, he proved evidently how farre off it was from the firſt inſtitution of the Lords ſupper. And as concerning the Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, hee uttered more of their corrupting of it, then they were willing to heare.

After this, they were examined by two friers, who were choſen out for the purpoſe; one of them was John Campo, ſuperintendent of the Gray Friers of Dixmude, the other was called Peter Pennet Prior of the Carmelites in Ypre. Theſe two examined the three priſoners firſt upon the articles of the faith; and then, if they beleeved that Chriſt was made of the ſeed of the woman? James anſwered, we are all perſwaded that Jeſus Chriſt was made of the ſeed of the woman, according as God hath promiſed, Gen. 3.15. Moreover, of the ſeed of Abraham, and of David; and that he was in all things made like unto his brethren, ſinne onely excepted.

Gal. 4.4.
Rom. 1.3.
Heb. 4.15.

After many other queſtions upon divers points, they were asked, whether in the conſecration of the Maſſe the body of Chriſt was preſent there or no? No, ſaid James, It is nothing like the Lords Supper which Chriſt gave to them that ſate at table with him: According to which inſtitution the faithfull being aſſembled together, Acts 2.42. brake bread, &c. Nor ſhall ye find in the Scriptures, that one alone receiveth, or that the reſt ſtood and looked on. And if Saint Paul juſtly challenged the Corinthians, becauſe every one was forward to eat his owne ſupper apart, much more are you worthy of their reprehenſion. I doe therefore ranke you amongſt thoſe falſe prophets which our Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath warned us of, who will ſay thus unto us, Lo, here is Chriſt, and there he is.

1 Cor. 11.20.
Mat. 24 23.

Hereunto the adverſaries replyed, Doth not Chriſt in expreſſe words ſay, This is my body; This is my bloud?

Anſwer. The words muſt not be taken as they found in a literall ſence, for ſo they ſhall have no agreement with other like places of Scripture. You know the words belonging to the antient Sacraments were expounded by the holy Ghoſt himſelfe; Circumciſion is called the Covenant, and the Lambe is called the Paſſeover, albeit they were but the ſignes thereof.

They asked if God were not omnipotent.

Yes, ſaid James, but yet he will doe nothing againſt his Word.

1 Cor. 11.29.

Queſt. If the bread be not changed, why doth Saint Paul affirme, That whoſoever eats of this bread unworthily, eats judgement to himſelfe, not diſcerning the Lords body.

Wee acknowledge all this, ſaid they, becauſe a man ought to examine himſelfe, before he preſume to come to that holy banquet; for in the Supper we receive not only bread and wine, but doe alſo truly partake of the body and bloud of Chriſt, as Saint Paul teacheth us.

1 Cor. 10.16.
Matrimony.

In the fourth place, they were asked if mariage were not a Sacrament? No, ſaid James, for ſacraments are not things indifferent to Chriſtians, as mariage is; for Saint Paul ſaith, he that gives his Virgin in mariage doth well, but hee that gives her not in mariage doth better. We hold wedlocke to be an holy ordinance of God, inſtituted in Paradiſe from the beginning of the world, honoured by Jeſus Chriſt with his firſt miracle, yea we adde further, that as mariage is honourable among all, and the bed undefiled, ſo whoremongers and adulterers God will judge.

1 Cor. 7.8. 29.38.
Gen. 2.
John 2.
Heb. 13.4.

Queſt. But ſaint Paul ſaith, it is a great Sacrament.

Epheſ. 5.32.

Anſwer. Why doe you forbid it then? But that place of Paul by you alledged is not to bee underſtood of mariage, but is meant of that ſpeciall myſticall union and Communion which is betweene Chriſt and his Church.

Confeſſion.

Queſt. They asked him if confeſſion were a Sacrament.

Anſwer. I finde but two Sacraments mentioned in the New Teſtament. If you can finde but any more, you ſhall doe well to ſhew them. But as touching confeſſion, it is to God, to whom we muſt confeſſe our ſinnes, according to Davids example, and of the Prodigall ſonne, and ſundry others, who with true repentance acknowledged their offences to God, who is faithfull and juſt to pardon and forgive them. But to confeſſe them to a prieſt, it is ſo farre off from being neceſſary, that I hold it altogether unlawfull. Theſe Fathers had their refuge to their wonted place of ſaint James, Confeſſe your faults one to another.

Pſal. 32.5.
Luke 15.18, 21.
1 John 1.9.
James 5.16.

Anſwer. The Apoſtle would have us to confeſſe our faults to ſuch as we have wronged by word or deed. Alſo God enjoynes us to reconcile our ſelves one with another by ſuch a confeſſion, if we would obtaine pardon of him.

Mat. 6.12.
Mat. 16.19.

Then they alledged that place of ſaint Mathew, That whatſoever they bound on earth was bound in heaven.

Anſwer. Chriſt ſpeakes there of Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, which ought to bee obſerved amongſt Chriſtians, by admonitions, and then by applying the cenſures, according to the doctrine of the Goſpell, that ſo obſtinate ſinners may be caſt out of the Church. But all the world may ſee that you know not what this true diſcipline of Chriſt meaneth, nor what a right Miniſtry is in your Churches.

Extreme unction.

Queſt. At leaſt you acknowledge Extreme unction to bee a Sacrament, ſeeing Saint James ſpeaks ſo cleerly of it.

James 5.14.
Marke 6.13.

Anſwer. The anointing that Saint James ſpeakes of is nothing like to your anointings. For that was a miraculous anointing for healing of the body, and that, whilſt the gift of healing was uſuall in the Church. But you anoint ſuch as lye drawing on, and doe it for the ſalvation of their ſoules. It is needfull, I grant, to ſend for the Miniſter, to comfort the ſicke, and to pray with them and for them, but not to beſmeare and greaſe them.

Confirmation.

Queſt. Well, what ſay you to Confirmation? is not that a Sacrament?

Anſwer. In all the Scripture (ſaid James) do I not finde ſuch a thing as your confirmation, as you now uſe it, and therefore I know not what it is. Here they cauſed the Regiſter to write, Non credit.

Then came they to the order of prieſthood, and asked if that were not a Sacrament.

1 Pet. 2.9.
Rev. 1.6.

Anſwer. No, no more than the reſt. I am not ignorant that S. Peter cals the faithfull a choſen generation, a royall Prieſthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people: nor yet where Saint John ſaith, that Chriſt hath made us Kings and Prieſts; but what is all this to your Biſhops and Prieſts?

Queſt. What thinkeſt thou of the Pope.

Anſwer. I thinke him to be the ſame that Daniel

Anno 1560.

niel and Saint Paul foretold he ſhould be. For he ſhewes himſelfe ſuch a one as they have deſcribed him to be, comming with falſe ſignes, and lying wonders, ſitting in the Temple of God, and exalting himſelfe above all that is called God forbidding marriage, which God hath ordained, and meat which God hath commanded to be received with giving of thankes.

2 Theſſ.2.9 10.

1 Tim.4 3.

Purgatory.

Queſtion. What ſay you then unto Purgatory?

1 Iohn 17.

Anſwer. We acknowledge none other Purgatory, but the blood of Chriſt, which only cleanſeth us from all our ſinnes.

Queſt. Doe not the Saints pray for us, and ought we not to pray to them?

Prayer to Saints.

Anſwer. God alone is to be worſhipped, and prayed unto. Whileſt the Saints were on earth they would not endure to be adored. Acts 10.25, 26. Which they then would rather have permitted (being clothed with corruption, and with naturall deſires of being honoured) then now when they have put off all carnall and humane affections. The Angels themſelves would not accept of Divine worſhip, Revelat. 19.10. and 22.9. They had many other diſputes, which Iames could not write for want of paper, as he intimated to them of the Church.

The fourteenth of Auguſt they were examined the third time by Peter Titleman Dean of Renay, Inquiſitor generall of Flanders, whoſe cruelties and extortions were exerciſed upon all the faithfull, in all the perſecutions and deaths which they ſuffered in the ſaid Countrey. This morning was brought before him Iane Solomez, of whom he diligently enquired of theſe of the City of Steenewerke where ſhe was borne; but eſpecially if ſhe knew one Charles Vanderkaw, a man renowned among the faithfull there. She anſwered ſhe knew him, but he was now dead. After he had asked her name, he queſtioned with her, eſpecially about the Sacraments, yea ſomewhat concerning the Lords Supper, holding her in theſe diſcourſes about two houres before him.

To Iames Dienſart he propounded no queſtions, but came about him with theſe flattering ſpeeches; My ſon, you are yong and in the prime of your youth: Therefore the Magiſtrate of this City is very deſirous you ſhould be withdrawne from holding this new doctrine, that ſo you might be brought againe into the right way; but as I underſtand, you ſo perſiſt therein, that there is no removing of you. Iames anſwered that it could not be called a new doctrine, which was built upon the Prophets and Apoſtles.

To whom the Inquiſitor replyed, That Martin Luther was the firſt that broached it.

Anſwer. And what ſay you then to ſo many learned men which lived before him, as Io. Wickliffe, Iohn Hus, &c. and ſome after him, as Calvin, Iohn Alaſco, Martin Micron, and others in England, France, and Frieſland? And though neither you nor I knew them, God knowes them as well as he did the ſeven thouſand of the godly, whom Elias in his dayes was ignorant of. The Inquiſitor, perſiſting in his old ſong, preſſed him with the ſucceſſion of his Prelates and Biſhops. Iames put him in minde of another marke of the true Church, namely that it was alwaies under perſecution; and thence inferred that himſelfe was a true member thereof.

1 Kin.19.28.

The Inquiſitor ſaid, we are now perſecuted in England: for now they begin to impriſon ſome of our Prieſts there.

Anſwer. It is true that Boner late Biſhop of London was committed to priſon, but not for his good deeds. The reſt of them have their liberty.

Now this Inquiſitor among other matters willing him to ſhew what ſervice was due to the Virgine Mary, ſaid, Is it not written, Honour all men? And what honour owe we then to the mother of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt?

1 Pet.2.17.

You give her (ſaid Iames) a goodly honour in bowing the knee before an Image of wood or ſtone, praying thereto as to your God. You may be aſhamed of ſuch abhominable practiſes and blaſphemies. Much other reaſonings they had, which the ſaid Iames, for lacke of paper and leiſure, could not commit to writing.

The ſame day in the afternoon Chriſtian Luckere, who was put into priſon apart, was alſo preſented before this inquiſitor, and examined upon many Articles. In all his anſwers he ſhewed much courage; and when the other went about to prove that Ieſus Chriſt was corporally preſent in the Sacraments, Chriſtian uſed ſixe or ſeven ſtrong reaſons to the contrary drawne out of the holy Scriptures, That it could by no meanes be granted, being repugnant to the truth. The adverſaries perceiving the conſtancy of theſe three priſoners, ſought by all meanes to vexe and weaken them. Firſt they ſevered them one from another to deprive them of mutuall comfort and conſolation. Secondly, gave charge, that in viſiting them none ſhould be ſo bold as to bring them ought to eate or drink. Thirdly, They were ſollicited by wicked ones to yeeld, and not wilfully to hazard their lives. Moreover, they had many other great provocations, and therefore by their Letters inſtantly requeſted the continuall prayers of the Churches to God for them.

When the godly ſtrangers in England were advertiſed of theſe their aſſaults, they ſollicited their Superintendent Edmund Biſhop of London, at the requeſt of the Archbiſh. of Canterbury, and others, to ſend Letters to the Magiſtrates of Furne, intreating that they would releaſe theſe three priſoners, whom they had apprehended as they paſſed along by the high waies ſide, without any misbehaving of themſelves, or holding any diſpute with any, and were innocent in regard of committing ought againſt the Lawes of the Countrey. As touching their Faith which ſome called into queſtion, they ſhould not for that bee moleſted; becauſe in like manner her Maieſty hath given free power and leave in caſe of Religion hitherto, that none of the Subiects of the Low-Countries, comming into England, and carrying themſelves modeſtly, ſhould be medled withall. But if they ſhall deale ſo hardly with thoſe of the Religion, who have ſubmitted themſelves as her Maieſties ſubiects under her protection, then ſhe ſhall be conſtrained, though to her great ſorrow, to mete out the ſame meaſure to thoſe of other Nations; but ſhe hoped and expected the contrary, both from the wiſdome and equity of the Magiſtrates of Furne.

These Letters were dated the 26. of Iuly 1560. and ſubſcribed.

Matthew Archbiſhop of Canterbury.
Edmund Biſhop of London.
William Meyne.
William Haddon,
Maſter of the Requeſts, &c.

The Magiſtrates of Furne having received theſe Letters ſent them to Bruxels, where they were read before the Kings privy Counſell. But to extenuate the authority thereof, it was noiſed that they were forged by ſome Lutherans; ſo as in the end they reſolved (notwithſtanding) to proceed againſt the ſaid priſoners, according to extremity of the Lawes eſtabliſhed by the King.

Now

Anno 1562.

Now theſe of Furne having in vaine by all meanes aſſayed to turne the priſoners from their Faith, they reſolved to execute them. Many of the City, and others not dwelling far off, hearing the report of their purpoſed diſpatch, prepared to come to the ſight thereof, thinking it would have been on Wednesday which was Market-day. But the Magiſtrates taking notice of the multitude were ſomewhat amaſed, and cauſed him that was to doe execution to ride through the middeſt of the Market at high noone, as if he had been taking his journey out of the City, and ſo to make the people beleeve that they intended not their execution as yet. But on Wednesday towards the evening, the chiefe Bailiffe accompanied with ſome of the Magiſtrates, came ſecretly into the priſon, ſolliciting each of the ſaid priſoners with many intreaties and intiſing perſwaſions to recant; promiſing to ſet them free forthwith, if they would ſpeake but one word to that purpoſe. But the Lord ſtrengthned them ſo, that they overcame this dangerous aſſault. The adverſaries, ſeeing their expectations fruſtrated, cauſed all things the ſame night to be made ready for their execution the next day; to wit, chaines, ſtakes, fagots, &c. Now the Lord, who hath the diſpoſing of the moments of time in his owne hands, diſappointed this project by a vehement ſhower of raine, which he ſent, continuing all the forenoone.

The two Fryers formerly mentioned were called for; each of them accompanied with one of their own coat. Theſe began to aſſaile the priſoners from morning till eight of the clock, either to weaken, or elſe to turne them from their faith. Which becauſe they could effect neither upon James nor Chriſtian, they dealt with Jane, thinking to have prevailed with her; but to as little purpoſe as with the two others. Being thus diſappointed of their hopes, then they fled to their accuſtomed lies, which they term Fraudes pieuſes, pious beguilings, ſaying thus unto her; Will you only ſhew your ſelfe ſingular in cleaving to this opinion, whereas your priſon fellowes have renounced it?

The holy Virgin was nothing abaſhed thereat, but gave them this anſwer, That ſhe could not beleeve it; and albeit it were ſo, yet would ſhee never goe back from ſo certaine a truth, grounded not upon man, but upon Jeſus Chriſt?

Theſe lying Fryers, nothing prevailing with her neither, went their way. Then the priſoners encouraging one another, and preparing themſelves for death, ſang the ſeventy fourth Pſalme. The Magiſtrates of Furne, that they might with the more ſecurity execute their ſentence, cauſed the gates of the city to be ſhut; and yet many got in, leaving their ſwords and ſtaves at the gate. Now as they brought the priſoners along to the towne-houſe, every one as they went reached forth their hand to them, and bad them that they ſhould be of good courage.

Appearing before the Magiſtrates they were denounced heretiques. To which Chriſtian, in the name of the reſt, ſaid, Not one of your doctors can prove us heretiques, nor can they convince us by Scripture. It was replyed that they ſleighted the Sacraments. To which they freely anſwered, We hold and allow thoſe Sacraments inſtituted by God, in much more reverence than you. Upon this the Magiſtrates conſulted together apart, and after a while came to their ſeats againe, pronoucing ſentence againſt theſe three, viz. to be ſtrangled, and then burned or ſcortched, and the remainder of the bodies to be hanged on the gibbet. They thanked the judges for their ſentence; yet advertiſing them well to bethinke themſelves of what they had done. As they were paſſing forth of the houſe to be led to the ſlaughter, many of the godly bad them farewell; comforting, incouraging, and exhorting them to continue conſtant. Whereat the head Bailiffe being much vexed puſhed Jane ſo violently with his foot, that ſhe fell downe the ſtaires, at which the people were much moved. Chriſtian went formoſt, Jane next, and James followed. In beholding of which ſpectacle few there were which brake not forth into ſighings, cryings, and teares, whileſt they gave the people ſo holy and godly exhortations. One of the Monks called John Vels, being by, gave to Jane (many of good credit hearing it) this counſell in his Language, Fight valiantly, the crowne of immortality is ready for you. Whileſt the executioner began to faſten their neck and feet with chaines to the ſtake, they ſung the hundred and thirtieth Pſalme, Out of the deep.

Fryer John Campone, being impatient of ſuch an harmony, yelled out like a mad man, ſaying, This ſhewes you are not Chriſtians; for Chriſt went to his death weeping. One in the middle of the aſſembly cryed as faſt on the other ſide, Thou lieſt thou falſe Prophet. Having finiſhed the two firſt ſtaves of the Pſalme, the hangman being about to ſtrangle Chriſtian, the other two ceaſed, crying to their brother; Be of good cheere and play the man. And Chriſtian, lifting up his eyes to heaven, ſaid twice or thrice, Lord God heavenly father into thy hands I commend my ſpirit. And then againe, Lord forgive their ſin who have put us to death. James and the maide made the like prayer. But becauſe James was laſt ſtrangled, and the people moved with compaſſion began to ſtir, the hangman kindled the fire upon James being but halfe ſtrangled. The people ſeeing him to die in the midſt of the fire, were yet more moved, ſo as the tormentor being in a maze got a ſtaffe out of a Boat headed with iron, and ſmote the Martyr twice or thrice on the right ſide, to make an end of him. Theſe three having a while lien in the fire, they were carried thence in a cart to the gibbet, where being put apart upon three poles they were afterward taken downe and buried.

Nicaiſe of Tombe born in Tournay, Martyr.

Whoſe conſtancy is to be imitated and followed of every good Chriſtian, in ſuffering for the truth of the Goſpell.

Nicaiſe dwelling in Tournay, and following the trade of Say-making, towards the end of his life, was then by the mercy of God brought to the knowledge of true religion. Now that he might be the more throughly inſtructed therein, he went with his wiſe and family into the City of Weſell in baſe Almaine. In which City there was at that time an aſſembly of ſtrangers, and eſpecially of thoſe who are called Wallons, exerciſing themſelves in hearing the word of God purely preached, and in receiving the holy ſacraments. But Satan the mortall enemy of Gods children, envying their happineſſe, ſoon after troubled this aſſembly in ſuch wiſe with ſundry queſtions, that ſome retyred to Frankfort, others to Strausburg, and ſome to other places. Nicaiſe returned to Tournay whence he came, not to communicate there with the ſuperſtitions and abhominations in which he had formerly been inwrapped, but to joyne himſelfe to the Chriſtian aſſembly which met together in that place; to maniſeſt the truth of that heavenly knowledge, which he had received out of the word of God.

Where notice being taken of him, they received him into their ſociety, amongſt whom he carried himſelfe in ſo Chriſtian a ſort, as they well perceived him to be a man of an holy converſation, joyned with an earneſt deſire to advance the glory of God, and the kingdome of Chriſt, in the edification of his Church. Now foraſmuch as affliction is the true touchſtone whereby the faithfull are diſcerned from Hypocrites; Nicaiſe then ſhewed outwardly what he was within. For being importuned to take an oath from thoſe who were deputed thereunto by the King of Spaine, to live according to the cuſtome of the Romiſh Church, and to obſerve the traditions invented by her; he, notwithſtanding the threats and injuries done unto him, conſtantly held out againſt the ſaid oath, not caſting how deare it might coſt him in the end. Some of his kindred wiſhed him at leaſtwiſe to withdraw himſelfe aſide for awhile into another City, till the urging of this oath was over, as alſo that his wife ſhould change her lodging in his abſence.

2 Theſ.2.9.10.

To this counſell he conſented; but the Lord, who governes all our intentions and purpoſes, had otherwiſe determined of him, namely to ſet him forth as an example of conſtancy unto others, and to beare witneſſe ſo farre to the truth of the Goſpell, as to ſeale the ſame with his bloud, by ſtaying him at that time in the City. For being ready to take his journey, a neere neighbour of his, being an enemy of the Goſpell, accuſed him to the commiſſioners for one that neither had nor would take the oath according to the forme appointed. Nicaiſe requiring to heare the tenour of the oath, before he would make them an anſwer, they told him that he muſt ſweare to keep & obſerve all antient cuſtomes; to receive in the ſacrament of the altar his creatour thrice in the yeare, and on Sundaies and Holidaies to heare Maſſe, morning and evening. As ſoone as hee had underſtood their meaning, hee told them, hee intended not at all to take any ſuch oath, nor to wound his conſcience in conſenting to things ſo manifeſtly contradicting the word of God; therewithall yeelding them the reaſons of this his reſolution; accuſing as well them for urging ſuch an oath, as thoſe alſo who gave their conſents thereto. Upon this he was committed and laid amongſt fellons, in the Gaole called Pipigne, untill Friday the twelfth of November, on which day he received ſentence of death; namely to be bound and ſo led into the Market place of the City, and there upon a Scaffold to be burned and conſumed to aſhes.

Having heard this ſentence, as he roſe up, hee ſaid, now praiſed be God; and as he was about to have ſpoken more at large, the Procurer fiſcall bing preſent prevented him, and thruſting him forward bad him march on. By and by they brought him to the place of execution; and as it well fell out, having no Prieſt accompanying him, when he was come downe to the Market place, a neere friend of his comming to him commended him to God, and ſo they kiſſed each other.

Being come nigh to the „ Befroy of the City, ſeeing there a great multitude of people, who were aſſembled together to ſee him paſſe by, lifting up his voice, he ſpake thus; O yee men of Tournay open your eyes, awake ye that ſleepe, and ſtand up from the dead, and Chriſt ſhall give you light.

„ which is a watch tower ſtanding before the City hall where the Clocke is.

He alſo prayed all whom he had any way offended to forgive him, as he for his part was ready to forgive all the world. The people hearing him ſay ſo, began to be moved, and to make a great muttering. The multitude alſo that were come together were ſo many, that the ſouldiers who incompaſſed the Patient (being now ready to ſuffer) could neither march nor keep ranke; ſo as they were about to ſhoot. Which the people perceiving began to be moved ſo much the more, ſo as there had like to have been a great tumult. But going on they drew nigh to the place where the ſcaffold was.

Nicaiſe all the while ſpent the time in prayer unto God, and being at the place of execution, hee uttered theſe words; Lord, they have hated mee without a cauſe; and aſcended up joyfully to the ſcaffold: where the Tormentors readily received him, and led him to the ſtake; and as they were faſtening him to it, he ſaid, Eternall Father, have pitty and compaſſion upon me, according as thou haſt promiſed to all that aske the ſame of thee in thy ſonnes name. Other prayers he made there to his God, and ſo continued to his laſt gaſpe. And albeit the multitude made ſuch a noiſe, and the beating of the drummes hindred his words from being all fully heard; yet he ſo often pronounced, and that with ſuch vehemency, the word Jeſus, that it notwithſtanding might plainly be underſtood as long as the breath was in his body. And thus yee have heard the godly life and bleſſed end of this conſtant martyr.

¶ Martin Bayart, Claude du Flot, with Io. Dantricourt, borne in the Countrey of Artois, and Noel Tournemine, of Hering neere Seclin, Martyrs, 1566.

YOu may eaſily diſcerne by the former Hiſtories, that the cruelties exerciſed againſt the Faithfull in Flanders nothing diminiſhed the increaſing of them; for the innocent bloud thus ſhed was a meanes to bring many ignorant ſoules to the knowledge of the Truth. Theſe foure above named, dwelling in the City of Liſle, walked in the feare of the Lord, with zeale according to knowledge, as the event well manifeſted.

There was a Jeſuit in the ſaid City who had a ſervant that was couſin to one of the Martyrs, with whom they laboured, not without ſome perill, firſt to ſhew him the odiouſneſſe of that ſect, and then to inſtruct him in the doctrine of the Goſpell. To which purpoſe they lent him a booke containing good inſtructions drawne out of the holy Scriptures. The ſilly fellow, not conſidering the hurt that might follow, ſhewed it ſoone after to his Maſter. The falſe Prophet by and by knew that this booke was not forged upon his anvile, and therefore diligently enquired of his man where he had it. Now that he might with the more expedition attaine his deſire, he gave him a piece of ſeven ſtivers, telling him he ſhould do well to bring him to the knowledge of them from whom he had received it; which was not hard to doe, in regard they all foure wrought upon their Trade (which was to dreſſe ſayes) in an honeſt widowes houſe who profeſſed the ſame Religion with them.

The Jeſuite comming to the knowledge hereof failed not, according to their guiſe, to reveale it to the Magiſtrate. Now leſt he might be ſuſpected to be the betrayer of them, the Fox withdrew himſelfe the ſame time out of the City, whilſt on a ſaturday morning about two of the clocke theſe foure were apprehended and impriſoned by the Magiſtrate. It fell out the ſame day, that certain writings were ſet up upon the Towne-houſe againſt the horrible tyranny of the Spaniſh Inquiſition, which was then intended to be brought in and executed throughout the Low-Countries, which no doubt was the meanes whereby the Magiſtrates were the rather incenſed againſt the priſoners. But foraſmuch as they were not found guilty of having any hand in this buſineſſe, they were onely examined about matters concerning their Faith. To which they anſwered with ſuch courage and conſtancy, without varying or wavering, that the Jailour wondred how they could anſwer the Judges ſo directly and pertinently (as it were with one conſent) being notwithſtanding ſevered one from another in the priſon.

their

The ſecond of March, 1566. they were condemned for heretiques by the Provoſt of the City, to which they replyed, that if they were Heretiques then Gods word muſt needs be hereſie, which could not be; and therefore they freely proteſted before all, that they were Chriſtians, and held nothing but that which was agreeable to the word of God. They were asked if they would ſubmit themſelves to the will of the Magiſtrates. They anſwered they would ſubmit themſelves to the will of God. Then was ſentence of death forthwith pronounced upon them, which was, that they ſhould be burned alive before the Towne-houſe. When they were brought out of Priſon to be executed, Noels father came and embraced him, and kiſſing him ſaid, Art thou led my ſon in this ſort unto death? This is nothing, Father, ſaid hee, for now am I going to life. And howſoever Noel wept in going up to the Scaffold, ſeeing his father ſo diſſolved into teares; yet recovering himſelfe, and being armed with new courage, he cryed, O yee Prieſts, if we would have gone to your Maſſe, we needed not to have been here: but Jeſus Chriſt never commanded nor inſtituted any ſuch thing.

The Prieſts ſtanding at the foot of the ſcaffold laboured to make the people beleeve they were Heretiques, and that their faith was the faith of devills, becauſe they rejected the Sacraments. But to that one of them anſwered, that their Faith was nothing like to that of devills; and as touching the Sacraments, they held ſo many as Chriſt ordained. Then ſaid Martin, ſuffer us to die in peace, for we are in the right way, and are going to Jeſus Chriſt, hinder us not in this our journey; with theſe and the like ſpeeches the Prieſts mouthes were ſtopped, not daring to come up upon the Scaffold, as they were wont to doe.

John Dauticourt comming up recited the articles of the Creed, adding ſomewhat by way of expoſition upon every Article. Thoſe who knew him before his impriſonment marvelled to heare him ſpeake ſo judiciouſly. The executioner thinking to pleaſe his Maſters offered to gag him: but the patient promiſed to hold his peace. Yet being ſtraitly faſtened to the ſtake by the necke, he ſaid to the people; O my friends, were it for ſpeaking wickedly that they commanded me to be ſilent, it were ſomewhat, but I cannot be permitted to ſpeake unto you the word of God, and with a loud voice ſaid, Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? ſhall tribulation, or anguiſh? O Lord, we are delivered to death for thy ſake, and are appointed as ſheepe for the ſlaughter. But let us be of good cheere my brethren, for wee ſhall be more than conquerours, through him that loved us.

Mat.7.14.

The other three on their parts cryed and ſaid, This, this is the way that leads to life; this is the ſtrait way by which we muſt enter thereinto, as Chriſt our Lord hath taught us. Noel likewiſe ſaid, Enter you my brethren, and whileſt I am alive pray for me; for after death prayers prevaile not. When all of them were faſtened to their ſtakes, and covered with fagots, with fire ready to ſet thereto, they began with one voice to ſing the firſt part of the ſeven and twentieth Pſalme, and after that the ſong of Simeon to the end: after which the fire began to be kindled, in the middeſt whereof they were heard to cry ten or twelve times to the Lord, eſpecially John and Noel, with loud voices calling and ſaying, Lord receive us this day unto mercy, and unto thy kingdome. And thus ceaſing to cry any more, they yeelded up their ſoules into the hands of God. This conſtancy of theirs, proceeding from the worke of Gods Spirit, was not without ſingular fruit, for the inlarging of the Church; for many being touched therewith went home thence, as if they had gone from a powerfull ſermon.

¶ Francis D' Aloſt in Flanders, Martyr, in the yeare 1566.

THis yong man, being by his trade a Cutler, during the time of his ignorance frequented the Court much, and tooke great delight in the vanity of this world, which gat him much reſpect of many, but chiefly among thoſe of the Romiſh Religion, namely Prieſts and Monkes, who willingly converſed with him, taking much contentment in his carriage and courſe of life. But as ſoone as God of his goodneſſe by the meanes of his word had revealed unto him his ſon Jeſus Chriſt, he by and by altered and changed his former converſation: for having before lived in great diſſoluteneſſe, he now ſharply reproved ſuch as he knew to follow ſinfull wayes; yea, he often tared the Prieſts as well for their ſcandalous living as for their falſe doctrine, wherewith they abuſed the people; but principally for making them to fall downe to ſuch a god as could not defend nor keep himſelfe from Rats and Mice, and which is worſe, to offer it up for the ſins of the quick and the dead.

For theſe with other ſuch like ſpeeches, thoſe who erewhiles loved him began now to turne their love into hatred, inſomuch as he was faine to flie from them, yea, and out of the Countrey alſo, being baniſhed thence; threatning him, that if he were taken there againe, he ſhould be put to death, not as an heretike, but as one having offended the penall Lawes. But not long after the Lord wrought ſuch an alteration not only in the Politicall but in the Eccleſiaſticall ſtate alſo, that not the Lawes concerning hereſie alone were diſanulled, but free liberty was granted to the Faithfull of the Low-countries, to returne home into their houſes againe, and to have the exerciſes of Religion, publikely and openly. Among theſe Francis returned at that time unto the City in which he was borne. But this freedome ſo ſuddenly granted laſted not long. For the devill, not enduring the light ſo to ſhine out, ſtirred up Imps afreſh to oppreſſe the godly. Francis then apprehending the danger, was minded one morning to depart out of the City; but God had another worke for him to doe. For as he was paſſing along, he was apprehended in the ſtreete by one of the City, who with the Bailiffe met him. The Bailiffe would faine have baulked him, as if he had not ſeene him; but ſaid the other, here he is, hold him faſt; ſo they took him. Being conducted to priſon, among other ſpeeches he ſaid, now yee have taken me, you thinke to deprive me of life, and ſo have your will of me, purpoſing my great dammage and hurt; but you are deceived, for it is all one, as if you tooke Counters from me, to fill my hand with a great ſumme of gold.

In priſon he had many diſputes with Prieſts and Cloiſter-men. But the Jailour of all other dealt harſhly with him, who could not endure to heare him ſpeake of God. But if at any time he heard him ſing Pſalmes and ſpirituall Songs, he would rage like a Bedlam. Once being very drunke, he ſet open the priſon doores, and ſitting on a bench he called to Francis, ſaying, come out thou naughty and wicked heretique, I will now ſee, if thy God can deliver thee out of my hands. Francis ſaid, as the caſe ſtands it might eaſily be effected; If I were minded to eſcape away now, as I was heretofore, I could eaſily doe it, but I will not; for God hath called me to ſuffer, and not to flie away, and therefore I will not reſiſt, but rather obey his will.

The drunkard hearing him ſpeake with ſuch mildnes, and moderation, and ſeeing that he would not come forth, being provoked thereto by him, in his fury he tooke up his ſtoole on which he ſat, and laid at him therewith, ſo as he had felled him to the ground, if the ſervant had not ſtepped betweene, who tooke it out of his Maſters hands by force: yet was the poore priſoner very ſorely hurt, and lay long in the Chirurgions hands before his head could bee healed. But to make him amends, this cruell jaylour dieted him ſo ſtrictly both for meate and drinke, that hee had died with hunger, had not God inclined the heart of his ſervant now and then, to relieve him, by conveying meate to him in ſecret.

After the Lord had thus by ſundry trials proved the patience and conſtancy of this his good ſervant, the Magiſtrates of the City of Aloſt conſulted how to put him to death, having oft called the Executioner to this their conſultation; but they could not agree in the manner how to effect it. Some were of opinion it were beſt to have him put to death ſecretly in the priſon; others adviſed to execute him openly, leſt they ſhould incurre the blot of being murderers. In the end waxing more hardy, having long detained him in bonds, they called him forth into judgment, and pronounced ſentence upon him, which was, that becauſe he had done contrary to the Kings Lawes, in returning againe to the City from which he was baniſhed, he had therefore deſerved to die, ſeeing alſo hee held certaine opinions directly oppoſite to the Church of Rome.

Francis hearing his ſentence read, without any ſhew of diſtemper, ſaid, Now ſeeing you are ſo thirſty after bloud, I willingly yeeld it into your hands, and my ſoule into the hands of my mercifull Lord God Almighty. Francis, ſaid they, we command you to hold your peace; for if you will not, wee will take order to bridle your tongue. Hee then promiſed them to obey their command. As hee went to ſuffer hee uſed that ſpeech of the Apoſtle ſaint Peter, I muſt now ſhortly put off this my earthly tabernacle, which the love of Chriſt Ieſus my Lord conſtraines me to doe. Being come into the market place where he was to be offered up a ſacrifice, he kneeled downe; and having ended his prayer, he ſayed to the executioner, doe now what you are commanded, the will of God bee done: and ſo preſenting himſelfe cheerefully to the ſtroke of death, he was beheaded the firſt of May, in the yeere 1566. his body being afterwards expoſed to the foules of the aire for a prey.

2 Pet. 1.14.
2 Cor. 5.14.

¶ Iohn Tuſcaen of Andenard in Flaunders, Martyr, Iune the eighth, Anno 1566.

Behold here how God meant to awaken the men of this time out of their bru- tiſh ſecurity, as it were with a thunder clap from heaven.

This young man a maker of Tapiſtry about the age of two and twenty yeeres, the ſon of one called Simeon Tuſcaen dwelling in the ſuburbs of Andenard, was trained up from his youth in all godly nurtrature. He hearing newes that things went more aukly to paſſe in Bruxels then hee could have wiſhed, determined in himſelfe to make it knowne by the effect, that the adoring of a breaden God, which the Roman Church ſo much worſhipped, was nothing elſe but an abhominable and execrable ſacriledge. Having caſt to and fro in his minde, and thoughts, the weightineſſe of the buſines he was to undertake, at length hee determined to demonſtrate the ſame more fully and apparently in a publike aſſembly, which was the thirtieth day of May in the ſaid yeare 1566. (which after the cuſtome of the Romaniſts is called the feaſt of God, or Corpus Chriſti day.) Now by reaſon that two Cities of Andenard and Pamelle are joyned as it were in one, there were two Temples dedicated there, not to the Lord, but the one to ſaint Walburgne, called the Church of Andenard, and the other to their Lady, which is within the juriſdiction of the Lord of Pamelle.

Iohn Tuſcaen directed his courſe towards this Church, to performe that which long before he had in his owne thoughts projected. Being come into the Quire of the Church in Pamelle, beholding there a multitude of People utterly eſtranged from the true worſhip of God, ready to fall downe and proſtitute themſelves before a breaden cake, forthwith (not caſting what ſhould be the iſſue) being urged thereto through a zeale of Gods glory, drew towards the Prieſt, while he was elevating and ſhewing the people that which they call the hoſt; and with great vehemencie ſnatched it out of his hands, caſt it to the ground, and brake it all to pieces, ſpeaking with a loud voice; ſee here, my Maſters, your goodly God, who you ſee is not able to helpe himſelfe, but is here broken all to pieces. How long, how long, O ye ſenſeleſſe Prieſts, will you thus defile the holy ſupper of the Lord? ſhall wee never ſee an end of your filthy Idolatries? If the authority of the holy ſcripture can nothing move you, yet at length be warned and admoniſhed by this preſent example, that there is not a jot of divinity in this bread, ſeeing it is ſubject to be thus handled: will yee worſhip a dead Idoll, your ſelves being living men?

At this ſo vehement and bold an exhortation, accompanied with ſuch conſtancy, all the people there preſent ſtood amazed and in ſuch an extaſie, (but yet withall ſuch a noiſe and buſtling throughout the Church) that the Curate of the pariſh, who before was in ſome by-corner there, comming towards the Quire, met Tuſcaen, as hee was paſſing through the preaſe without any feare or let. The Curate ſaluted him, not knowing what he had done, much leſſe ſuſpecting that he was the cauſe of all that tumult and ſtirre; for he was his couſin. Howbeit Iohn would take no knowledge of his ſalutation, but began to reprove him for deluding and abuſing the poore ſilly people, being their overſeer; for a day will come, ſaid he, in which you ſhall render an account to God for them. In the hearing of this, the Curate called upon the people to lay hold upon the ſaid Iohn Tuſcaen, as hee was going out of the Church faire and ſoftly. So that it had been eaſie for him to have quite himſelf out of their fingers, if he had but haſtned his pace a little, becauſe none offered to touch or apprehend him. The Curate ſeeing that, delaied not, but with all ſpeed got him to the under Bailiffe of Pamelle, by whoſe outcries and importunities the Bailiffe could doe no leſſe but goe with him to apprehend the great Heretique. As they were making towards him, hee ſhewed no more ſemblance of eſcaping, then before.

Then they tooke and impriſoned him without any reſiſtance. Dinner being ended, he was preſented before the Magiſtrates of Pamelle to be examined in the preſence of the Curate: after they had enquired of him who they were that incited and ſet him on to doe ſuch an outragious act unto the hoſt, they asked him what he held the bread in the Maſſe to be, and whether he did not beleeve it was the body of Chriſt: If, ſaith he, you conſider well what the Angell ſayd to the Apoſtles at his aſſumption. viz. Act. 1. 11. this ſame Jeſus, which is taken up from you into heaven, ſhall ſo come in like manner as ye have ſeene him goe into heaven; You may plainely diſcerne that we are not to ſeeke him here below.

Where Chriſt is to bee ſought.

After many other queſtions and anſwers, beeing ſent againe to priſon, he was the ſecond time examined: and being asked whether he was himſelfe when he did it, or diſtracted? Hee anſwered, That he had done it, not raſhly, but upon mature deliberation. Beeing further demanded what ſhould move him to commit ſo hainous an act? If this, ſaith he, ſeemeth ſo ſtrange unto you, then I pray you tell me who moved Moſes to breake the Tables of ſtone written with the finger of God? They perceiving that he ſecretly aimed at their Idolatrie, ſent him to priſon againe.

Exod. 32. 19.

The eighth of June he was brought betimes in the morning into the judgment Hall, to receive their ſentence which was to be pronounced againſt him; where two friers Minorites were purpoſely ſent to ſee if they could turne him from his conſtancy: to which purpoſe asking him, if he did not beleeve that God was included in the bread which is lifted up in the Maſſe? He anſwered them by another queſtion; namely, whether the Potter could make a pot? They ſayd yes, but what was that to the purpoſe? He asked them againe, if the pot could make a Potter? The good fathers, ſeeing whereabouts he went, forthwith left him. When he ſaw he had thus ſtopped their mouths, he thanked God.

Then the Magiſtrates of the city went up into the judgement ſeat, and gave ſentence againſt him; which was, firſt to have that hand ſtricken off, with which he had taken the Hoſt out of the prieſts hands, and his body to bee burned to aſhes, which afterward was to be ſcattered into the river.

Hearing this ſentence hee was very joyfull, thanking his Judges, and the Lord of Pamelle. But the Bailiffe of Audenard wiſhed him rather to aske forgiveneſſe of God and of the people, for the offence he had commited. If I have offended any (ſaid hee) I aske them forgiveneſſe. Then was he led forth to be executed; and as he went, he ſung in his own mother tongue the Lords praier with ſuch confidence, as argued the inward peace of his Conſcience, in dying in ſo good a quarrell.

The tormentor willed him to ſtretch forth his arme that his hand might be cut off; which he did, ſuffering the ſame with ſuch a patience, as if hee had felt no paine. And then with his eyes lifted up to heaven, he ſaid, O Lord God, it is for the glory of thy name that I endure theſe things: inable mee now with ſtrength from above, that I may finiſh this ſacrifice. Forthwith the fire was kindled, which made him at the firſt to ſhrinke a little; but by continuall and ardent prayer to God the violence of the torment was abated and aſſwaged. Now ſtanding in the middeſt of the flames, his body being in a manner halfe conſumed, hee ſhewed apparent ſignes unto the beholders of his invincible courage, by holding up as well as hee could, his armes on a light fire.

Thus was this valiant Martyr handled in the preſence of multitudes; which cauſed many to cleave the rather to the Doctrine of the Goſpell, ſeeing him dye ſo conſtantly. The River of Eſcant received his aſhes, that the Sentence given upon him might be fully accompliſhed, Martin Smetius Martyr, Anno 1567.

MArtin Smetius being priſoner in the Caſtle of Wilbourd, there came to him a Frier to examine him, and with a purpoſe to turne him from the Faith. But Smetius being a man learned, and of a quick underſtanding, remained conſtant, which ſo confounded his oppoſite, that hee went away with ſhame. The Fryer invented a recantation, to which it was reported that Smetius had ſubſcribed. But an Elder of the Church, whoſe name was Cornelius Specor, comming to the knowledge thereof (by the helpe of friends) got a ſight of the ſaid Recantation. Who in the preſence of divers friends conferring a certaine Letter (which Smetius had put his name unto) with that writing, found it in nothing to agree therewith, and therefore the recantation to bee meerely counterfeited, The eighth of February being Saturday, Smetius having his feete tied under an horſes belly, on which he was ſet, was thus brought to Wilbourd to the “Provoſt (who himſelfe was afterwards hanged for his villanies.) His Sergeants paſſing immediatly along with him through Malives, went towards Maladery of Wallen, where finding a ladder ſet up to an oake, they hanged him thereon. Smetius being on the Ladder uſed theſe words; Lord forgive them, for they know not what they doe.

“Hee was apprehended by his Provoſt with 20. horſemen as he was preaching at Malives, When Smetius ſaw them, hee exhorted the congregation to be quiet, for they are come, ſaid he, to take me: but the aſſembly was by and by ſcattered.

And then ſinging certaine verſes of a Pſalme, he yeelded up his ſoule into the hands of the Lord.

¶ Maſter Iohn Goris and Ioris of Aſſchen Martyrs, Anno, 1567.

JOhn Goris Chirurgion, borne in Audenard, travelling towards Gaud, was betrayed by two ſpies, who ſignified the ſame to the Bayliffe; himſelfe alſo going the ſame way whither Goris was travelling before him. The Bailiffe, thirſting after the bloud of this poore innocent, rid on till hee had overtaken him, asking him whether hee went? I am going, ſaid Goris, to the Pariſh of Nazaret. And I purpoſe alſo, ſaid the Bayliffe, to goe thither, wee will beare you company. Having paſſed on thus a little way, the Bayliffe thinking himſelfe ſure of Goris, began to lay hands upon him. Goris ſeeing that leaped over a ditch, and got into a little wood. The wood was preſently beſet with Countrey people; and being there apprehended, he was carried to Audenard, as a ſheep to the ſlaughter, where he was committed to priſon. They layed many things to his charge, which they were not able to prove. Being examined the ſecond time upon divers articles, hee anſwered thereunto with ſuch wiſedome, that the Counſell admired how a man of ſo meane account could defend his cauſe in ſo good a manner. But after they came to queſtion with him concerning matters of Religion, now I ſee, ſaith he, that you ſeek my bloud.

The night following hee was overtaken with ſuch an apprehenſion of the feare of death, that for ſaving his life hee was almoſt reſolved to deny the truth. But by the aſſiſtance of Gods holy ſpirit calling his thoughts together, hee inſtantly and ardently beſought the Lord to deliver him out of this temptation, that by the power of his grace he might overcome the infirmity of his fleſh: which prayer of faith the Lord had ſuch reſpect unto, that from that time he manfully reſiſted all Satans aſſaults, and maintained the truth unto his laſt breath.

Having received ſentence he was nothing appalled thereat, but, like the holy Martyr S. Stephen, prayed God that he would not lay his death to their charge. Comming to the place where he was to be executed, caſting himſelfe downe proſtrate, he made his prayer to God; in which prayer albeit he ſought the Lord to forgive his Enemies, yet added he this withall; I am perſwaded, that God being a juſt Iudge will not leave their ſinne unpuniſhed. Which prediction fell out not long after; for the Bailife who apprehended him, & rejoyced in ſtanding by whilſt the martyr was executed, was not long after ſhot with a harquebuſe, whereof he preſently died like a wretch.

After Goris was thus executed, they brought forth his fellow priſoner, called Ioris of Aſſchen; who the ſame day ſuffered the ſame kind of death, that is to ſay, he was hanged upon a gibbet, which death he endured for the name of Chriſt with like conſtancy as did the former. Which courage of his he thus manifeſted to his parents and friends, in a letter written to them a little before his death.

¶ A Letter written by Ioris of Aſſchen, to his Parents and Friends, a little before the time of his Martyrdome.

MOſt deare Father and Mother, Siſter and Brother, I write here unto you comfortable newes, namely, that in all my life I never ſaw any day ſo pleaſing to me as this is; in which the Lord hath counted me worthy to be one of his Champions, and to ſuffer for his holy Name: For which I give him moſt humble and hearty thanks, I alſo thanke you much, good Father and Mother, that in all my diſtreſſes you have beene beneficiall and helpfull unto me, and carefull for me; for which the Lord aboundantly reward you in his kingdome. Rejoyce with me, I pray you, that God hath now called me to ſuch a glorious and welcome marriage day. Oh, how precious in the ſight of the Lord our God is the death of his Martyrs.

Deare friends, two Prieſts, yea, and ſome of the Magiſtrates alſo have ſought to terrifie me with many threats, thinking to turne me aſide from my holy profeſſion; but the Lord of his great mercy hath given me his grace to withſtand them all: for I plainly told them I was not aſhamed of the Goſpell of Chriſt, but would be willing and ready to die in the defence thereof; following my Lord and Maſter Ieſus Chriſt thorow all afflictions, to be made partaker with him at the laſt of his eternall joyes in his celeſtiall Tabernacle. Wherefore if God ſhal cal any of you forth to ſuffer ought for his Names ſake, beare the ſame, I beſeech you, with meekneſſe and patience, not declining from the Truth for feare or favour, to the right hand or to the left; but feare him rather who is able to caſt ſoule and body into hell.

The time which God hath lent us to converſe in this world is but ſhort, and therefore let us begin to abandon the love thereof, with all things that are therein, betimes, that ſo we may be ready to follow the call of God.

Deare Father and Mother, I doe take my laſt farewell of you, untill we meet together againe in the Kingdome of heaven, where we ſhall partake of that joy which ſhall laſt for ever, all ſorrowes, teares, and griefes being wiped away. Be ye not therefore grieved I pray you, but be patient; for the affliction which is befalne me is moſt acceptable unto me, for which alſo I bleſſe and praiſe the Lord.

The Lord proſper you in all your wayes, to his glory and your good. Thanke all my friends for their love expreſſed toward me, and ſalute them kindely with an holy kiſſe in the Lord.

Your humble and obedient ſonne,

Iohn Ioris of Aſſchen.

Thus were theſe two witneſſes of Ieſus Chriſt executed the fourteenth of April, 1567.

GUy de Brez, a Miniſter of the Goſpell, being committed priſoner into the Caſtle of Tournay, was viſited by many Ladies & Gentlemen, onely out of a deſire to ſee him, in regard hee was a man ſo highly eſteemed. Some at the firſt view ſcoffed; others railed on him; but others were moved to take pitty and compaſſion on him. Among the reſt, the Counteſſe of Ren, accompanied with certaine Gentlewomen, comming into the priſon, and at the firſt entrance beholding the iron chain to which he was faſtned; Maſter Guy, ſaid ſhe, I wonder how you can either eate, drinke, or ſleepe in quiet; for were I in your caſe, the very terror thereof would goe nigh to kill me.

O Madam, ſaid he, the good cauſe for which I ſuffer, and that inward peace of conſcience wherewith God hath endued me, makes me eate and drinke with greater contentment than my enemies can which ſeeke my life: yea, ſo farre off is it that my bonds or chaine doe any way terrifie me, or breake off my ſleepe, that on the contrary I glory and take delight therein, eſteeming them at an higher rate than chains and rings of gold, or any other jewels of price whatſoever; for they yeeld me much more profit. Yea, when I heare the ratling of my chaine, me thinkes I heare as it were ſome ſweet inſtrument of Muſicke ſounding in mine eares: not that ſuch an effect comes meerely from my chaines, but in regard I am bound therewith for maintaining the truth of the Goſpell.

¶ The ſame Martyr in a Letter to his wife acquaints her with Gods gracious dealing with him in all his aſſaults.

SPeaking of his apprehenſion, he ſhewes how carnall reaſon began to play its part againſt the providence of God; for, ſaith he, theſe thoughts came thronging into my head; What meant we to go ſo many in company together as we did? had it not been for ſuch and ſuch we had never been diſcovered nor taken. Under ſuch like cogitations I lay for a while, ſaith he, even in a manner overwhelmed, till by the aſſiſtance of Gods holy Spirit my minde was raiſed up to meditate on Gods providence. After which my heart began to feel wonderfull reſt and contentment, ſaying thus in my ſelfe, O my God, the day and houre of my birth was before ordained by thee, and ever ſince thou haſt preſerved and kept me in great perils and dangers, and hitherto delivered me out of them all. And if now the houre be come wherin I muſt paſſe out of this life into thy kingdom, thy holy will be done; I cannot eſcape out of thy hands; yea, though I could, yet Lord thou knoweſt I would not, ſeeing all my felicity depends upon conforming my will unto thine.

From theſe conſiderations I received no ſmall conſolation; and therefore, deare wife, rejoyce with me, I pray you, and bleſſe our good God for theſe his mercies towards me; for he doth nothing but that which is equall and right. You have béene privy to, and acquainted with all the travels, croſſes, and perſecutions which have befallen me, yea, and have your ſelfe béene partaker with me therein, when you accompanied me in my voyages during the time of my exile: and now after all theſe you ſée, my welbeloved in the Lord, how he holdeth forth unto me his hand of providence, to drive me home to himſelfe into his bleſſed kingdome. I now lead you the way, and when his will is you ſhall follow me thither. Our ſeparation ſhall not be for ever: it will not be long ere we be gathered under one head Jeſus Chriſt. This world is not the place of our reſt: no, heaven is our home, this is but the place of our baniſhment.

Let us therefore aſpire after our true countrey, namely heaven, and long to be received into the Manſions of our heavenly father, where we ſhall ſée our head and Brother, our husband and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, with the noble triumphant aſſemblies of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Apoſtles, and ſo many millions of Martyrs; to whom I hope ſhortly to be gathered, having finiſhed the courſe of that adminiſtration which I have received of the Lord Jeſus. Wherefore deare wife be you comforted in the meditation of theſe things. Take into your conſideration the honour the Lord doth you, in giving you a husband who is not only called to be a Miniſter of Chriſts Goſpel, but alſo ſo highly advanced of God, as to be accounted worthy to partake of the crowne of martyrdome. It is an honour which the Angels in heaven are not capable of. I now rejoyce in my ſufferings, my heart leapeth within me; in my afflictions, I finde nothing wanting unto mee; I am filled with the abundant riches of my God; yea, ſo far am I comforted therewith, that I have ſufficient ſtore not onely for my ſelfe, but to impart thereof alſo to as many as I have opportunity to ſpeake unto. Which bounty and favour I beſéech my Eternall Lord God to continue to me his poore priſoner: yea, I am perſwaded that he will performe it unto the end; for by good experience I féele, that he never forſakes them that truſt in him. I could never have imagined that God would have béene ſo gracious as he hath béen to me his poore creature.

Angels not capable of being Martyrs.

Gods goodnes to his afflicted children is oft above and beyond their expectation.

I now taſte of the fidelity and bounty of Chriſt my Saviour; I am here taught to practiſe what I have preached unto others. Yea, let me not be aſhamed to confeſſe, that when I heretofore preached I ſpake but as a Parrat, in regard of that which I have now better learned by proofe and experience. I have profited more in the ſchoole-houſe of this priſon, than ever I did in all my life before: for I have the holy Ghoſt, who is my conſtant inſtructor and ſchoolmaſter, teaching me how to handle my weapons in this fight of afflictions. Satan on the other ſide, who is the ſworne enemy of all Gods Elect, compaſſeth me about on every ſide, as a roaring Lyon thinking to devoure me. But he who hath ſaid, Feare not, I have overcome the world, puts as it were new courage into me; and then I ſée the Lord bruiſing Satan under my féet; féeling the power of God perfected in my weakeneſſe, And thus the Lord cauſeth mee one while to féele my infirmity and weakeneſſe, that ſo I may take knowledge how I am but a poore earthen Veſſell (even weakeneſſe it ſelfe) to humble mee, that God may have all the glory; and then by and by hée fortifies and comforts me, (I may truly ſay) incredibly above all I could aske or thinke.

Priſons prove Gods ſchoole-houſes to the faithfull.

John 16.33.
Rom.16 20.
2 Cor.12.9.

It is profitable for the godly ſometimes to féele their infirmities.

For I would not change my condition with theirs who perſecute me; I take my reſt, eate and drinke, with more hearts eaſe then they. I am indéed lodged in the ſtrongeſt and vileſt priſon they have, darke and obſcure, which for the darkneſſe thereof is called Brunain; where I have no aire to breath at, but a little ſtinking hole, where they lay all their rubbiſh, and where the drunkards commonly vent their urine. I am laden with Irons both on my hands and féet, which are a continuall torment unto me, the irons eating through the fleſh even to the bare bones. The Provoſt Marſhall comes to view my fetters twice or thrice a day, fearing leſt I ſhould make an eſcape: for preventing whereof he hath placed thrée guards of fourty men before the priſon dore, &c.

Brunain a priſon of the Valencians.

By reaſon whereof he complaines he wrote with much difficulty, and therefore could not write as otherwiſe hee would have done.

And thus having given unto his Wife his advice, how to behave herſelfe during her widowhood, and how to traine up her Children, with his loving ſalutations remembred to her ſelfe and other his ſpeciall friends, he cloſeth up this Letter.

In the end of a letter written to his Mother the rather to encourage her willingly to offer him up to God, he puts her in minde of two memorable examples of women who were mothers of Children, in this manner following.

I remember, ſaith he, that I have read in the Eccleſiaſticall Stories, how that in the hot perſecutions of the Church in times paſt, the poore chriſtians were aſſembled together without a certaine City, to heare the word of God. Now a great commander was ſent of purpoſe to ſée theſe poore Innocents put to the ſword. And being on his way ready to put his bloody commiſſion into execution, the report thereof came to the eares of a true Chriſtian Woman, who haſted with all the ſpéede ſhe could, to be at this méeting, carying her little Childe in her armes. As ſhée drew nigh to this troope of horſemen, ſhée ruſhed in, to get through, expecting that they would make way for her. The governour ſéeing her make ſuch haſte, called her to him, and examined her whither ſhée poſted ſo faſt? ſhée gave him this ſhort anſwere. I am going, ſaid ſhée, to the aſſembly of the chriſtians. What to do? ſaid hée; haſt thou not heard that I am commanded to put them all to death? Yes, I know it well, ſaid ſhée, And therefore am I in ſuch haſte, that I may be counted worthy to loſe my life with them. But what wilt thou do with thy little Childe, ſaith he? I am carying it thither, that even it alſo may partake of the crown of Martyrdome with the reſt.

The firſt example.

The tyrants heart was ſo wounded with theſe prompt and plaine anſwers of this ſilly woman, that he retired backe to the Emperor who had committed the execution of this buſineſſe unto him, and told him the whole diſcourſe; by meanes whereof the Emperors wrath was appeaſed, and the execution ſtayed. Here was an heart inflamed indeed with the fiery zeale of Gods love. Here is a patterne fit to be preſented before all women and Mothers to imitate the ſame.

I call to minde one other Example of a mother and her ſonne in the times when Romanus ſuffered Martyrdome. Hee was commanded to worſhip idols. His anſwer was, as hee ſtood in the place of judgement, that he worſhipped one God only, in Jeſus Chriſt, his only ſon. And this, ſaith he, is an Article ſo well knowne, that if any childe, though but of 7. yeeres old, ſhould be examined concerning it, he would eaſily make a direct anſwer to it. Then a Childe about thoſe yeeres being preſented publickely, Romanus ſaid, come hither

Anno 1566.

hither my pretty boy, anſwer me; ought wee to worſhip many Gods, or but one God in Jeſus Chriſt? The little child anſwered, That there be many Gods we children cannot beleeve; ſeeing to us there is but one God.

The ſecond example.

Then the tyrant apprehending the mother cauſed her child to be ſcourged with rods before her eyes. The babe intreated her to give him ſome drinke: to whom ſhe ſaid, Alas poore childe, I have no drinke to give thee; but now my ſonne goe and drinke of the cup of martyrdome, which Herod the king gavo the yong children to drinke of.

" Hitherto may be referred the invincible conſtancy of that pious mother mentioned in the 2. booke of the Machabees, with her ſeven children 2 Mac.cap.7. Reade the whole chapter

Then was the childs head ſtricken off. " Such examples are left upon record for our uſe, that in ſuch and the like mirrors we might behold how the mighty power of God being made perfect in the infirmity of weake fleſh, all of us, with one heart and voyce, ſhould render unto him the ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving for the ſame; ſhewing forth to our brethren and ſiſters his triumphs and victories with new ſongs of rejoycing. The which ſounding throughout the whole world, we may thereby incite all creatures, yea, the very Angels of heaven to magnifie and glorifie the name of our Lord eternally. So be it.

¶ With this godly perſonage Guy de Brez was one Peregrine de la Grange ioyned as his priſon fellow and fellow laborer in the worke of the Miniſtery.

Whoſe learned diſputes with Richardot biſhop of Arres doe heere follow, written with his owne hand.

THe biſhop at his comming into the priſon being informed of the priſoners name, and of his gentle diſpoſition, began thus with him.

Biſhop. I am much grieved Monſieur de la Grange to ſee you in this meane condition, and could wiſh it were farre otherwiſe with you then now I ſee it is.

La Grange. Sir, I humbly thanke you for your love and kindneſſe ſhewed towards me, altogether I confeſſe without any deſert of mine: and as for the baſe eſtate in which you now ſee me, God hath ſo comforted me therein with his grace, that I doe without any great difficulty patiently ſuffer what he hath pleaſed to lay upon mee; yea, I prayſe and bleſſe his name, that hee hath ballanced the weight of my afflictions according to the ſtrength which he hath given mee, ſo as I ſinke not under the burthen: for as my ſufferings in Chriſt abound, he cauſeth his conſolations by Chriſt to abound in me alſo.

2.Cor.1.3.

Biſhop, It is uſuall with ſuch as you are to glory in this kinde of ſpeech: for as ſoone as any afflictions befall you, you by and by ſtile them the ſufferings of Chriſt. And if any of you be put to death, then ye boaſt that it is for Gods truth: but when things are layd to the touchſtone, the matter is nothing ſo nor ſo.

La Grange. Sir, if your meaning bee of ſuch as have died for the doctrine for which I am bound with this chaine, and thus fettered with Irons: I doubt not but they have given ſuch a reaſon of their faith, that whoſoever ſhall read their anſwers, and weigh the ſame without partiality, muſt needs judge thereof even as wee doe. And for my owne part I am ready to make it good before any whom it conceres, that the doctrine I now hold and teach is according to godlineſſe, taken ont of the pure fountaines of the holy ſcriptures, without adding, diminiſhing, or varying any way therefrom.

1.Tim.6.3. Deut.12.32.

Biſhop. We reade that in all times men have been wont to ſhelter themſelves under the Title of Gods word, in ſo much that all the old hereſies maintained by heretiques have run to this covert; ſo as great heed is to be taken, leſt under this pretence men ruſh into errors.

La Grange. I am not ignorant, ſir, hereof, in regard that Satan knows how to transform himſelfe into an Angel of light, thereby to eſtabliſh his deluſions, cauſing darkneſſe thereby to be taken for light. But the holy Ghoſt, who is the Spirit of truth, hath in ſuch wiſe diſcovered his jugglings, that none are deluded thereby, but thoſe who at noone day cloſe their eyes that they may not behold the light.

2.Cor.11.14. Iohn 14.17. 2 Cor.4.4.

Biſhop. Doe you thinke that the holy Ghoſt hath given you ſuch an illumination, that the truth ſhould only be revealed to you, and to none other.

La Grange. God forbid, ſir, I ſhould have any ſuch thought. I am not of the minde of thoſe dreamers, who at this day bragge of their having particular revelations of the holy Spirit. But I ſpeake of an ordinary and generall revelation, ſuch as is taught us out of the Bible, which we call the holy Scriptures, according as it is therein declared unto us by the Prophets and Apoſtles.

He means the Anabaptiſts and their like. Eph.2.20.

This was the effect of the Biſhops firſt communication with de la Grange; after which hee was heard to ſay twice or thrice to the Kings Commiſſioners, that hee had no will to meddle any further with him. Being called for to be examined elſewhere before the ſaid Commiſſioners, Peregrine tooke his leave of the Biſhop, entreating him to intercede for him, that hee might be eaſed of his irons, alledging that the Priſon was ſtrong enough and ſufficiently garded.

The ſecond time they met together, the Biſhop having a prompt memory, made a rehearſall of what paſſed betweene them the day before, and after began thus with the ſaid Peregrine.

Biſhop. Seeing that which I hold as touching the Sacrament of the Altar is agreeable to the Scriptures, confirmed ſo long ſince by the conſent of all the ancient fathers, wherefore doe you not agree with us therein? Had you rather hold with theſe Noveliſts, as with Calvin and with the confeſſion of Auſpourge.

Grange. Sir, I am neither Calviniſt nor Papiſt; I am a Chriſtian, and what I hold concerning religion is taken out of Chriſts doctrine, who is the only Doctor of his Church. What Calvin hath taught conformable to the word of God, I am of the ſame minde with him: and whereas you call your Religion, the old Religion, and ours the new, it troubles me not at all, ſince the Father of lies hath long ſince forged the ſame, to diſgrace the truth, and to eſtabliſh and maintaine the multitudes of falſhoods and abſurdities of your Tenents which you hold. For example, becauſe Chriſt in giving his diſciples bread in the Sacrament, ſaid, This is my body, thence they would make us beleeve that the bread is become the body of Chriſt, as if the verbe eſt ſignified a change of the bread into another ſubſtance, which is found in no language whatſoever.

Biſhop. We maintaine not the Tranſubſtantiation of the bread from this Verbe eſt, knowing that the Hebrews uſe the Participle of the Preſent tenſe in ſtead of a Verbe; but rather from hence, becauſe Chriſt ſaid, This is my body.

La Grange. I told " you that Jeſus Chriſt in his Supper gives us that body which was conceived by the holy Ghoſt in the wombe of the virgin Mary; which was crucified, dead and buried, raiſed againe the third day, and is aſcended into heaven; yet wee utterly deny that there is any change made of the bread. Therefore if you would have us beléeve it, let us have ſome proofe of ſcripture for it.

" For they had many diſputes touching this point, which are not here inſerted.

Biſh. To ſpeake properly, the Tranſubſtantiation of the bread cannot be proved by the Word of God, and yet we muſt beléeve it for the reaſons above ſaid.

La Grange. Your glozing then that you have the Word of God on your ſide is as you ſée come to nothing. And why have you then burned ſo many of Gods ſaints for denying that which you cannot maintaine by the ſcriptures? For our parts, we ſhould bluſh to affirme, that the ſubſtance of bread remaines after the words of conſecration, if we could not prove the ſame from the very forme of the inſtitution of the ſacrament, wherein Chriſt tooke bread, and having given thankes hee brake bread, and gave to his Diſciples bread, and they tooke and did eat bread: yea, Saint Paul rehearſing the inſtitution calls it bread thrice.

1 Cor.11.23, 26.17.

Biſh. You know that in the Hebrew Tongue bread is taken for the remainders of what was eaten; Paul therefore in that place ſpeakes of thoſe viands which the Corinthians did eate in their Love-feaſts, reproving their abuſe. So alſo, howſoever Paul calls it bread there, and that in the ſecond of the Acts of the Apoſtles mention is made of the breaking of bread, all this ſerves not your turne,

Act. .42.

La Grange. I grant that bread is taken in the Scripture in this ſence; but be it that bread be taken for the meat that was left, yet you reade not that the ſubſtance was changed into the ſubſtance of other meate, or loſt the property thereof. It is certaine that the Scripture uſeth not this phraſe, of breaking of bread in the uſe of the Lords ſupper, for nothing; for thereby we are given to underſtand, that it is not a ſigne onely in appearance or ſhew, but the true ſubſtance of bread.

Biſh. Let it be what it will; wee hold cloſe to the words of Jeſus Chriſt, where he ſaith, This is my body; and therefore alſo beléeve what wee ſpeake. I care not if I be deceived in this matter, nor for bearing reproche for the ſame, either before God or men; for before God himſelf I will pleade thus, Lord, thou haſt ſaid it, and I beleeve it.

Underſtand the words ſacramentally, and all is wel.

La Grange. We reſt in the ſame thing alſo; but withall we have an eie unto Chriſts meaning and intent, which was to eſtabliſh a ſacrament: we alſo receive from his mouth the ſame words as well as you, but ſacramentally, where the outward ſigne beares the name of the thing ſignified.

Biſh. As touching the ſacraments in the old teſtament (which had their extent only to the comming of Chriſt, and no further) we indéed doe hold, that the ſigne beares the name of the thing ſignified thereby; and thus the Paſchall Lambe was called the Paſſeover, and Circumciſion was called Gods Covenant, being but a ſigne thereof: but it is otherwiſe now in the ſacraments of the new Teſtament, which have their continuance unto the end of the world, containing in them the thing ſignified.

Exod.12.43, Gec.71.10.

La Grange. Your Diſtinction will be but idle if we come to the ſacraments of the new Teſtament, which are onely two, (howſoever the church of Rome holds ſeven) to wit, Baptiſme and the Lords ſupper. The ſcripture calls Baptiſme the waſhing of regeneration, because it is a ſigne thereof, yet bearing the name of that whereof it is but a ſigne. Nor among your owne Writers do we finde, that the water in Baptiſme is changed into the blood of Chriſt; which is notwithſtanding the true laver of regeneration. Alſo the cup is called the new Teſtament, becauſe it is a ſigne thereof.

Dare you now affirme that the cup is the new Teſtament? But becauſe you ſéeme to bring in for confirmation of your opinion the ancient Fathers, we are content to be tried herein by them, even in our cauſe alſo, and it ſhall appeare that they are not ſo contrary to us as you ſuppoſe; and this will cleare our Doctrine from the crime of novelty, wherewith yée ſlander it. Afterwards we will come to touch ſuch inconveniences and abſurdities as flow from your Doctrine.

The Biſhop anſwering that hée was content, La Grange began as followeth.

La Grange. Gelaſius, who was an ancient doctor, yea and a Pope alſo, ſaid in a Councell held at Rome, That the ſubſtance and nature of bread and wine remained in the ſacrament of the Lords Supper, even as the humane nature of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt was united unto his divine eſſence. Chryſoſtome an ancient doctor, in his imperfect worke upon S. Matthew, denies that the body of Chriſt is incloſed under the bread in the ſacrament, but holds that it is only an outward ſigne thereof.

Gelaſius a pope of Rome

Chryſoſtome.

Biſh. I have, as you know, before anſwered that ſentence of Gelaſius, and then I told you that he was not ſéene in Philoſophie, and therefore could not diſpute ſubſtantially of the ſubſtance of the bread; yea, I verily thinke he underſtood not what this word ſubſtance meant, but tooke it for that which we call accidents; as ſometimes by this word accident wee underſtand ſubſtance; witneſſe Julian, who takes it in this ſence.

La Grange. Sir, I cannot conceive that ſuch a learned Father could be ſo ignorant, as not to know what the ſubſtance of bread ſhould meane, or at leaſt the nature thereof, ſéeing hée ate of it daily. S. Auguſtine hath this ſaying on the third Pſalme, That Chriſt ſhewed admirable patience in receiving Judas to that banquet in which hee inſtituted and gave to his Diſciples the ſigne of his body and blood.

Auguſtine.

Biſh. I doubt not but many ſuch ſentences are to be found in ſaint Auguſtine which ſéeme to favour your opinion; as where he ſaith to Adimantus the Manichée, That Jeſus Chriſt did not ſhun to call it his body, albeit he gave but the ſigne thereof. But ſuch kinde of ſpéeches muſt be expounded by conferring one place with another.

La Grange. Nay ſir, we have not onely ſaint Auguſtine, but alſo the moſt part of the ancient Fathers (all which you ſay are againſt us) on our ſide.

Biſhop. Well, but come now to the abſurdities and inconveniences of our doctrine, whereof you ſpake.

La Grange. Amongſt other, I will inſtance in this one; by the doctrine which you teach you ſever and diſiorne that which in it ſelf is joyned and united together. In the ſupper of the Lord the Sonne of God gives us his fleſh for our meate, and his blood for our drinke; which are coupled together by outward ſacramentall ſignes, bread and wine: now according to your doctrine the bread is converted into fleſh, and the wine into blood, and yée ſeparate the fleſh from the blood of Chriſt.

1. Abſurdity.

Biſh. We ſeparate not the fleſh from the blood, ſéeing that by concomitancy the fleſh is never without blood, nor blood without fleſh.

La Grange. If this be ſo, wee ſhould in one & the ſame action receive the fleſh & blood of Chriſt twice; for taking the bread, which you ſay hath blood accompanying it by your Concomitance,

2. Abſurdity.

you receive whole Chriſt in fleſh, and then againe in bloud; and thus we receive the fleſh twice, and the bloud twice.

Biſh. What inconvenience commeth of receiving the ſame twice in one action?

La Grange. Chriſt did not inſtitute his ſupper to be received twice in one action, but ſaith in the ſingular number, Take, eate, this is my body; he ſaid not in the plurall, Theſe are my bodies. This only abſurdity, if there were no more, overturnes the Lords inſtitution.

To this the Biſhop made no anſwer.

La Grange. If we marke Chriſts words, it will appeare that the abſurdities in your doctrine do croſſe this commandement, Eat; for what eat you ſir, I pray you, in this ſacrament?

Biſh. The accidents of bread.

La Grange. Eate you nothing but the accidents? It is ſaid, Eate, this is my body.

Biſh. We receive the body and blood.

La Grange. When you eate the body doe you not bruiſe it with your teeth?

Biſh. No, for Chriſts body is inſenſible; ſo as when we eate or bruiſe the cake, the body is not bruiſed therewithall, but the forme; the body is not diſmembred, but every bit is the body of Chriſt.

La Grange. Sir, you ſtill fall into the former abſurdities; for making three pieces of your cake in the Maſſe, and every piece thereof the whole body of Chriſt, it thereupon followes, that in taking three pieces you ſwallow downe three bodies of Chriſt together.

3. Abſurdity.

Biſhop. We muſt not be led thus by humane ſenſe.

La Grange. Sir, that which I ſay is manifeſt enough, and ſo that which you affirme of your formes cannot ſtand; for Chriſt ſaith not, Eat the formes, but, Eate, this is my body. Now wee cannot eate, unleſſe we gnaw with our teeth, in bruiſing therewith that we eate. If you ſay that the bread, which is fleſh as you hold, is conveyed under the tongue, and gently ſwallowed; then I anſwer, This is not eating but ſwallowing: for, Can he be ſaid to eate, who being halfe pined with hunger ſwallowes his bread and meate withou chewing? Nay, he may rather be ſaid to devoure it. Moreover, if the bread, which as you affirme is fleſh, bee put into a mans mouth, and ſwallowed, then how will you anſwere that which Chriſt ſaid in Saint Mathew, That whatſoever enters into the mouth goeth into the belly, and is caſt out into the draught, or backe chamber, as we call it.

Mat. 15. 17.

Biſh. Theſe words muſt be taken of our ordinary eating, which is caſt (ſaving your preſence) after it is eaten into the draught.

La Grange. What becomes then of this ſwallowed fleſh?

Biſh. The formes are turned into it, and the fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt is gone; but theſe things muſt not be too curiouſly examined.

La Grange. This anſwer cannot ſtand: the accidents, which you call kindes, cannot be changed thereinto, it is the ſubſtance which is changed. But let us come to a more ſubſtantiall argument: you teach, That whoſoever receives this Bread, which you call fleſh, receives Jeſus Chriſt. How is it then that Saint Paul ſaith, Hee that eateth and drinketh unworthily eats and drinks damnation to himſelfe, &c.

1 Cor 11. 27. 29.

Biſh. This argument hath ſome weight in it; for thus you reaſon, hee that receives Chriſt doth therewithall receive eternall life; but by our Doctrine all receive Chriſt in the ſacrament, therefore they muſt needs have eternall life.

I confeſſe it is true according to your minor propoſition, that they receive him: but I deny that all receive him unto life everlaſting; for if they receive not the fleſh by the holy Ghoſt, it profits them nothing.

La Grange. I have taken the firſt part of my propoſition out of Saint John, where Chriſt ſaith, he is the life; but ſeeing wee cannot receive ſo much as a common hearbe without the vertue of it, much leſſe can wee receive Chriſt without that life which is comprehended in him; otherwiſe we ſhould receive a dead body without efficacy, and not Jeſus Chriſt, who cauſeth thoſe that eate him to live eternally. For this ſacrament was inſtituted of God by his ſonne, to manifeſt and ſet forth his fatherly good will towards us, not contenting himſelf to have received us once as ſtrangers into his houſhold by baptiſme, but as his owne Children: and therefore hath ordained this ſecond ſacrament of the holy ſupper, that in his houſe wee might have wherewith to nouriſh and feed us continually. Now as touching the holy Ghoſt, it is by him that we eate the fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt and drinke his bloud, conjoyning by his powerfull working thoſe things together which by diſtance of place are ſevered farre off one from another, cauſing all that is in Chriſt to become ours, and as by a conduit pipe conveying unto us the true partaking of Chriſts fleſh and bloud; ſo as whoſoever receives Chriſt, hath eternall life.

John 11. 25.

John 6. 51.

Why the Lords ſupper was ordained.

We partake of Chriſt in the Sacrament, by the effectuall working of the holy Ghoſt.

Biſhop. That is, if hee receive him by the holy ſpirit; for otherwiſe the fleſh profiteth nothing, as ſaint John ſaith.

John 6. 63.

La Grange. Sir, the place you alledge makes againſt you; for Chriſt there reproves his diſciples for thinking they ſhould eate his fleſh after a carnall manner, as it appeares by the words following; for the words, ſaid hee, which I ſpeake to you are ſpirit and life. If then wee are ſo wiſe as to obſerve that the Sunne, ſending downe its ſubſtance on earth by the beames thereof, doth after a ſort cauſe the hearbes to ſpring forth and grow, ſhall not the influence of the ſpirit of Chriſt be of much more efficacy to bring us to the true participation of his fleſh and bloud?

Biſhop. Then the Biſhop was deſirous to bee gone, ſaying it grew late, and ſo for want of time our conference ended. The Biſhop commended me to God, and then tooke his leave of the company. This is the ſumme of our communication, ſo farre as I can remember.

By this briefe recitall we may obſerve what holy boldneſſe, mixed with meekeneſſe, the Lord had indued this his worthy ſervant with, even in the flower of his age, being drawne from his ſtudies and from the place of his birth to preach the Goſpell to the Valencians, and at length to ſeale up the ſame with his bloud.

A ſhort narration of the life and death of theſe two valiant Champions of Chriſt, Guy de Brez, and Peregrin de La Grange, Miniſters and martyrs.

NExt to the pure preaching of the word, nothing ſo much commends thoſe whom the Lord culls out to give their lives for the ſame, as doth an holy and blameleſſe converſation, continued unto their happy departure out of this world. It remaines then in few words, that we ſet forth the converſations of theſe two holy perſonages, that thereby the mercies and graces of the Lord beſtowed upon them may have the greater luſtre.

Guy

Anno 1566.

Guy de Brez borne in Mons in Hainault, beeing in his younger yeares much addicted to Popiſh ſuperſtitions, came by continually reading of the Scriptures to taſte the ſweetnes of Chriſtian Religion; which knowledge brought forth no ſmal fruit in him in due ſeaſon: Yet ſo, as it could by no meanes be reliſhed or received by them of his Nation. Whereupon he departed from Mons, and having learned the art of painting Glaſſe, came to London whileſt good King Edward the ſixth raigned, who gave perſecuted ſtrangers leave to have harbour within his realme of England. After his abode there a while, and underſtanding that the preaching of the Goſpell obtained ſome entertainment in the Low-Countries, he went over to give his aſſiſtance to thoſe of his owne Country.

The firſt fruits of his labours were moſt an end in beſtowing ſome exhortations in ſuch places where he found any willing to give him audience, though never ſo few in number.

But above all he clave to them of the City of Liſle, becauſe he found there a great number of beleevers who deſired nothing more than to heare the Goſpell publiquely preached unto them. At that time began alſo an holy conflict “ againſt the peſtilent ſect of the Anabaptiſts, which as cockle mingled it ſelfe amongſt the good corne. In this city he continued untill the flock of Chriſt were diſperſed by reaſon of perſecution, and then went to Gaud, where hee wrote his booke called the Staffe of Faith, extracted out of the ancient Fathers. After that beeing deſirous to profit more and more in the knowledg of ſuch things as were requiſite to be in a Miniſter of the Goſpell, hee travelled towards Lauſanna, and thence to Geneva, to furniſh himſelfe with the tongues; and thence withdrawing himſelfe into the Low-countries, hee there eſtabliſhed the churches of Liſle, Tournay, and of the Valencians; in which cities God ſo proſpered his labours, that he was preſerved by his divine providence, as it were in the middeſt of the fiery flames, from falling into the hands of his enemies. And not to ſtand longer in relating the paines and travels of this faithfull ſervant of Chriſt, not onely the reformed Churches of the ſaid country can teſtifie, but alſo theſe of Dier, Mondidier, and Amiens alſo, which hee was an happy inſtrument to ſupport, whileſt the cruell perſecutions in his owne Land would not permit him to continue his Office of teaching there.

“ Againſt which this godly man publiſhed a learned confutation in French, which booke I have in my hands.

The Duke of Bovillon obtaining him drew him to his city of Sedan, where he alſo continued a while in publiſhing the glad tidings of ſalvation, untill the Church of Antwerpe began in the moneth of Auguſt 1576, to call him to be thier Paſtor. But he could not obtaine leave of thoſe of Sedan to depart from among them without a great deale of difficulty, becauſe they evidently foreſaw by the beginning of perſecutions in the Low-countries, into what a Sea of troublous tempeſts hee ſhould bee caſt: and yet perceiving how the heart of this holy man longed to be gone, to yeeld his aſſiſtance to thoſe of his own nation; at length they conſented to let him goe with them that requeſted to have his helpe. Now having ſtayed but a while there, the brethren determined to ſend him to his ancient Church of the Valencians, who received him with no little joy, in regard the Lord had formerly ordayned him to erect a Church there peculiarly.

Peregrin de la Grange.

His meeke diſpoſition won him much reſpect.

To come now to Peregrine de la Grange, hee was borne in Chute nigh to Saint Marcellin in Daulphine. In the moneth of June in the yeare 1565 he was ſent from the Schooles of Geneva, at the requeſt and inſtance of the Valencians, to ſerve in the miniſtery among them. Such was his meeke and milde diſpoſition, that it won him much love and reſpect, and made his miniſtery to be ſo much the more acceptable in the eyes of all men. After the demoliſhing of Images in the City of the Valencians, two Churches were imployed by thoſe of the reformed Religion for the uſe of prayer, preaching the word, and adminiſtration of the Sacraments. Now the detaining of theſe Churches, the one of them being uſed by a ſtranger, namely by the ſaid la Grange who was none of King Philips Subjects, being alſo againſt the Decree of Margaret then Regent of the Low-Countries, gave occaſion to Noicurin, as then principall Bayliffe of Hainault and Valence, not onely to fruſtrate and break all accords with the ſaid Valencians, but moreover to afflict and beſiege them extremely. During which ſiege, becauſe the ſupper of the Lord was adminiſtred in both the ſaid Churches, it did ſo much the more enkindle the rage of the enemy againſt them, ſo as when the city was taken, La Grange was the more cruelly uſed, as you ſhall reade when wee come to ſpeake of his death.

The ſame adverſaries, who encountred Guy de Brez his companion, aſſailed him alſo; but he overcame them by the helpe of Gods holy Spirit, who gave them both ſuch power, as their enemies were not able to reſiſt.

They were impriſoned the eleventh of Aprill, and on Saturday the laſt of May the Provoſt of the bands came into the priſon about three of the clocke in the morning, to give theſe two priſoners warning to prepare themſelves for death: for they were to die at ſixe or thereabouts. Whereupon both of them began highly to magnifie God for his goodneſſe, and gave the Provoſt thankes for the good newes which he had brought them. Aſſoon as they were up and ready, Maſter Guy entred into the fore Court, bidding the reſt of the Priſoners good morrow; and then teſtifying to them his joy, ſpake after this manner; Brethren I am this day to die for the doctrine of the Goſpell; and now, bleſſed be God, I joy and rejoyce therein; I had not thought that God would ever have done me this honour. I feele my ſelfe repleniſhed with joy more and more, from minute to minute, my God addeth new courage unto me, and my heart leapes for joy within me.

Then exhorting the priſoners to be of good cheer, he told them it was no hard matter to die, and ſo by way of acclamation alledged that place out of the Apocalips, O how happy are the dead that dye in the Lord; for they reſt from their labours, and their workes ſollow them! Hee further beſought the priſoners to ſtand faſt in the doctrine of the ſonne of God, which he had taught them, avowing it to bee the undoubted truth, which was mainteined “ by him before the Biſhop of Arres and many others.

“ Which diſputes were formerly omitted in regard that in a manner they were the ſame with thoſe of Peregrin de la Grange.

Beware you do nothing, ſaid he, againſt a good conſcience; for I foreſee that the enemies of the Goſpell will execute the utmoſt of their rage againſt us; thinking thereby to weaken our faith, that ſo they might turne you from the truth, and ſo cauſing you to doe ſuch things as ſhould bring diſhonor to the cauſe for which you are in bonds. Take heed therefore ye ſhrinke not; for if yee doe, you ſhall certainely feele ſuch an hell in your conſciences, as will never ceaſe to vex and torment you. O my brethren, how good a thing is it to nouriſh a good conſcience?

One of the priſoners asking him whether hee had finiſhed a certaine work which he had begun, he anſwered, No; For now I muſt ceaſe to labour, becauſe I am paſſing along towards the heavenly reſt: the time of my departing is at hand, I goe to reape that in heaven which I have ſowne on earth. I have fought a good fight, I am at the point of finiſhing up my courſe: from henceforth the Crowne of Glory is layd up for me, which the Lord the righteous Iudge ſhal give unto me. Me thinks (ſaid he with a joyfull and ſmiling countenance) that my ſpirit hath obtained wings to ſoare aloft into heaven, being invited this day to the mariage Supper of the Lambe.

As he was ſpeaking, the Provoſt came in with bands into the Court, and putting off his hat ſaluted him. Maſter Guy bad him welcome, and gave him thanks againe for his good newes. The Provoſt replied, It grieveth me much that things ſhould be carried thus. To which Guy joyfully anſwered, I accept of you as of my good Friend, I love you with all mine heart. Then taking his leave of the priſoners he went into the little hall of the priſon.

Soone after Peregrine de la Grange entred into the ſame Court, who as he carried himſelfe comfortably during all the time of his impriſonment, ſo then after his accuſtomed manner he began with an amiable countenance to cheere the priſoners, with bidding them good morrow; and then ſaid thus unto them; I am this day to die for the Truth, and then the heavenly Inheritance is prepared for mee: my name is written in the Booke of life, never to be blotted out, becauſe the gifts and calling of God are without repentance.

Phil.4.3.
Rom.11.29.

He proteſted alſo, That for his part he never taught ought there but the pure Word of God; as for the doctrine of the Papiſts, it led ſoules, he ſaid, to perdition aud deſtruction: and thence took occaſion to exhort the priſoners to ſeparate themſelves from it, and to cleave wholly to the Doctrine of the Goſpell. Then leaving them he went into another roome, and called for a bruſh to bruſh his hat and cloake, cauſing his ſhooes to be blacked; For now, ſaid he, I am bidden to the mariage of the Lambe, where I am to feaſt with him for ever and ever.

Going thence, ſome of the priſoners came to him, and finding him ſitting in the entry of the priſon upon a bench, with bread and wine ſet before him, which was brought him for his breakefaſt, they asked him if he went to ſuffer with thoſe ſhackles on his heeles? I would I might (ſaid hee) yea, and that they would bury them with mee too, that they might manifeſt the inhumanity of my adverſaries. And as thoſe brethren comforted him, he replyed, that he felt ſuch joy of the holy Ghoſt in his heart, that he could neither with mouth nor tongue expreſſe it; adding, That God ſhewed him a thouſand times more favour to take him after this manner out of this tranſitory life, than if he had let him die in his bed by ſickneſſe: for now (ſaith he) I ſhall dye with enjoying the benefit of all the powers of my ſoule, praying the Lord to have mercy upon me.

Then every one taking his leave of him they retyred, and forthwith Guy and La Grange were led to the towne hall to receive the ſentence of death, namely to be hanged for tranſgreſſing the Kings commandement given at the Court of Bruxels. And ſo not medling at all with any of the points of Doctrine which they had preached, they eſpecially inſiſted upon the adminiſtration of the Lords Supper, againſt an expreſſe charge given them to the contrary.

To be ſhort, La Grange being brought to the place of execution, and now upon the ladder, hee proteſted with a loud voice (notwithſtanding the noiſe which the ſoldiers kept about the gibbet) that he died onely for preaching to the people the pure truth of God; taking heaven and earth to witneſſe the ſame with him.

Then was Maſter Guy brought thither; who, kneeling downe to have made his prayer at the foot of the ladder, was not ſuffered to make an end; for lifting him up they made him by and by to aſcend the ladder. Being thereon he faſtned his feet in the rundles, exhorting the people to carry themſelves with all due reſpect towards the Magiſtrates, ſhewing how ſome had overſhot themſelves in that behalfe.

Then Maſter Guy exhorted them to ſtand ſtedfaſt in the doctrine which he had taught them, avouching that it was the undoubted truth of God. He could not finiſh his ſpeech fully, becauſe the Commiſſioners gave a ſigne to the Executioner to haſten and make an end.

He was no ſooner turned off the ladder, but there fell out ſuch a tumult among the ſouldiers, being in armes in the market place, that they ran up and downe the City, ſhooting off their pieces againſt ſuch as they met, ſhooting off their pieces againſt ſuch as they met, as well Papiſts as others, yea killing one another in a grievous manner, ſo as ſome fell downe dead among many others that were wounded and hurt. And thus were they ſmitten with great feare without any ground thereof at all.

¶ Notes touching the eſtate of the Faithfull in the City of Venice, and of ſome executed there for the Truth, in the yeare, 1566.

IT pleaſed God for a long ſpace to free this noble City from being ſubjected to the cruell Inquiſition of the Pope, by reaſon whereof the face of a Church was to be diſcerned there, from the yeare 1530, to the yeare 1542. They enjoyed ſuch freedome of conferring and ſcanning of the points of Religion there, that they came in a manner to make profeſſion thereof publiquely; ſo as many ſtrange nations came to take notice thereof. But the Father of lies obſerving this began to beſtirre himſelfe, by ſetting his Lieutenant on worke, who hath his ſeat at Rome, to diſturbe theſe good beginnings: for it came to paſſe, that whilſt multitudes of good Chriſtians flocked thither from other parts, in proceſſe of time ſuch a courſe was taken by Antichriſts ſupporters, that many of them were impriſoned, and afteward ſent thence to Rome.

The reſt by a new found execution, never till then heard of, were caſt into the ſea, and drowned in the bottome of the ſame. The manner of it was thus: After they had received ſentence, an yron chaine was faſtened about their middle with a ſtone of great weight tyed thereto; and then were they laid upon a planke betweene two wherries, which being come to the place appointed, the wherries parting aſunder, the Martyrs were forthwith drowned. Yet for all this many ceaſed not ſtill to aſſemble together in a place appointed for that purpoſe, to talke and diſcourſe of heavenly matters, yea, and to make ſome collections for reliefe of the poore; ſo as in the yeare 1566 they called to them a miniſter of the Goſpell, to eſtabliſh & conſtitute a church among them; having alſo the Supper of the Lord adminiſtred to them. But ſome falſe brethren creeping in, under pretence of making the ſame profeſſion with them, betrayed them.

Then began the Popiſh Inquiſition to be erected there with the greateſt cruelty that might be, towards the maintenance whereof the Pope ſent every yeare a certaine ſumme of money to thoſe holy Fathers, to be diſtributed among ſuch as were appointed to be ſpies and revealers of ſuch ſecrets as they could come to the knowledge of. Thus were many caſt into the ſea and drowned, ſome were ſent to Rome; others were detained ſo long in priſons (which were like graves) that they rotted there.

Anno 1567.

¶ Maſter Anthony Ricetto, Martyr.

AMongſt others who were condemned to bee drowned, there was one Maſter Anthony Ricetto of Vincence, having a ſonne about twelve yeares old, who comming to viſit his father, according to the diſcretion of children, beſought him with teares to yeeld to thoſe who had condemned him, and to ſave his life, that he might not be left fatherleſſe.

A true Chriſtian (ſaid his father) is bound to forgoe goods, children, yea, and life it ſelfe, for the maintenance of Gods honor and glory: For which cauſe he was now ready and reſolved to lay it downe, the Lord aſſiſting him.

The Lords of Venice offered to reſtore unto him his patrimony, which was partly morgaged and ſold, if he would ſubmit himſelfe to the Church of Rome. But he refuſed whatſoever conditions they this way tendred unto him. Some that were priſoners with him, namely one M. Julius Ferlan hath reported much of the abſtinence, patience, and holineſſe of this excellent man, ſo farre as to paralell him to another John Baptiſt. On the fifteenth day of February 1565. which according to our computation is, 1566. Captain Clairmont came unto him, and told him, that Francis Sega was reſolved to recant. To which Ricetto by and by replyed, What tell you me of Sega? I will performe my vowes unto the Lord my God; and ſo he was led bound faſt to the wherry. A certaine Prieſt, who accompanied him, preſented unto him a wodden crucifix, exhorting him to returne and to die in the favour of God, reconciling himſelfe unto the Church of Rome, the holy Spouſe of Chriſt. But Ricetto, rejecting that Crucifix, beſought the Prieſt and thoſe that followed them to come out of the ſnare of the Devill, to cleave to Jeſus Chriſt; and to live, not according to the fleſh, but after the ſpirit; for if you doe otherwiſe, ſaid he, aſſure your ſelves your unbeliefe will bring you into that lake of fire that ſhall never be quenched. For though you confeſſe with your mouth that you know Jeſus Chriſt, yet you not onely deny him by your works, but you perſecute him in his members, being ſeduced and bewitched by the Pope, who is the open enemy of the Sonne of God.

"This Sega was his fellow priſoner, of whom ſee more hereafter

When they were come nigh to the two caſtles, the Captaine bound his hands; now, becauſe it was very cold, hee called for his cloke which they had taken from him. Then ſaid the wherry man, feareſt thou a little cold? What wilt thou do when thou art caſt into the Sea? Why art thou not carefull to ſave thy ſelfe from drowning? Doeſt thou not ſee that the poore flea skippes hither and thither to ſave her life? To whom hee anſwered, And I am now flying to eſcape eternall death.

Being arrived at the place where he was to ſuffer, the Captaine put a chaine of yron about his middle with a very heavy ſtone faſtened thereto. Then Ricetto, lifting his eyes to heaven, ſaid, Father forgive them, for they know not what they doe. And being laid on the planke, hee ſaid, Lord Ieſus into thy hands I commend my ſpirit: & then pulling this weighty ſtone towards him, not waiting till the boats were ſundred one from another, as in ſuch kind of executions they were wont to doe, this holy man ſlept in the Lord; which was no ſmall terrour to the Magiſtrate, in that there was never any that died this kind of death before, with ſo much conſtancy and reſolution.

¶ Maſter Francis Spinola, Martyr.

THe Sunday following, Maſter Francis Spinola of Milaine, being about the age of ſixe and forty yeares, was apprehended and brought into the priſon, called Des cleſſ de dix, That of ten keyes, where he found poore Francis Sega. Two daies after (which was the eight and twentieth day of February) Spinola was brought before his Judges, where they delivered into his hands a little Treatiſe of the Lords Supper, of which he freely confeſſed he was the author; ſhewing that the opinion which he there maintained was this, That the bread and wine were the ſignes, and not the things ſignified, and therefore muſt not bee adored. He was queſtioned with as touching the power of the Pope, prayer to ſaints, and about Purgatory. He anſwered that the Popes power was from man, which the Romane Conſiſtory and certaine Princes had given him: but that God the Father had given Jeſus Chriſt to be the Head of the Church, and to have all power in heaven and earth. What is Peter then, or what is Paul? He further added, that he would not worſhip nor pray to any other but to God only, as it is written. The memoriall of the Saints he well approved, as of thoſe who were the true branches ingrafted into the Vine Chriſt.

Heb. 9.

1 John 1.7.

Then as Spinola was returned into his priſon, Francis Sega (whom he was ignorant of) waited his comming, holding a candle in his hand, and paſſing by with his Keeper, ſaluted him by his name; whence it came to paſſe, that they two conferred together about the doctrine of the Goſpell. Now howſoever Sega differed from Spinola touching the number of ſacraments, yet he referred himſelfe to the judgement of the true Church of Chriſt in that behalfe. But after that he had learned that Spinola had conſtantly ſtood to the defence of the truth, he was very joyfull and much comforted, ſaying, That God had reſerved him for ſuch a time as this, to make him partaker with him of ſo great conſolation.

The conſtancy of one martyr puts life into another.

Hee wrote conſolatory letters to Spinola, committing his writings into his hands, whereof ſome were preſerved, and the reſt loſt by the careleſneſſe of a falſe brother. Upon the three and twentieth day of February, 1567. the Keepers of the priſon told Sega that he was to die within one houre after the ſhutting in of the evening. At the hearing of which newes hee intreated Spinola to pray with him. After prayer, Sega telling him that his ſoule was heavy to the death; Spinola gave him this anſwer, Feare not, for it will not be long before it ſhall feele thoſe joyes which ſhall endure for ever.

Being brought out of his darke dungeon, according to the time limited, hee tooke his leave of Spinola and the reſt of the priſoners. As hee was entred into the boat, a certaine frier began to perſwade him to returne into the right way. Sega anſwered, that he was already in the way of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and paſſing on he called upon the name of God. He ſeemed not to be much moved at the binding of his hands, but was a little amazed at the faſtening of his body to the chaine. Yet by and by taking unto him a Chriſtian reſolution, he tooke whatſoever they did unto him patiently. Being laid upon the bord or planke, hee commended his ſoule into the hands of God, and being left of the two boats (upon the edges whereof the planke was ſtayed) the one declining this way, and the other that way, he fell into his ſepulchre the ſea, and died patiently.

Spinola ſoone after was preſented the ſecond time before his Iudges, namely the tenth of March, where he reproved the Popes Legate with his clergy there preſent, as alſo the Lords of Venice who ſat in iudgement upon him, becauſe contrary to their conſciences they ſo perſecuted the truth of God, calling them the offſpring of the Phariſees, Caiphas, and the Gentiles, who now, ſaid he, kill Ieſus Chriſt in his members. The nine and twentieth of March following, hee was the third time brought before them, where they asked him if he would not recant his errors. He anſwered that the Doctrine he maintained was not erroneous, but the very ſame truth which Ieſus Chriſt and his holy Apoſtles taught and preached, and for which all the Martyrs, as well of old time as now, have willingly layd downe their lives, and endured the paines of death.

As he did the firſt time hee was convented before them.

After all this, Spinola became ſo weake, that he determined to ſtrike ſaile (as they ſay) and to apply himſelfe to the time; being brought hereinto by the advice of ſome, namely that he ſhould faine a giving of his conſent to what the Magiſtrate required of him, by meanes whereof hee might eſcape their hands. But about the tenth of September, comming againe to himſelfe, and eſpying whereunto this determination tended, hee proteſted before all, that he would ſtand in the confeſſion he had made from the firſt of April laſt paſt. Wherefore on the ninth of Auguſt hee was brought againe before the ſame Iudges, where he openly confirmed the ſame.

Spinola begins to waver.

But ſoone after recovers himſelfe.

His Iudges ſaid, that he ſhould either be drowned or burned alive. Then on the thirteenth of Ianuary 1566. (according to the Venetian account, which according to ours was 1567.) on Tueſday morning being come before the Tribunall, ſentence was pronounced upon him that hee ſhould be drowned as an Heretique. To which he gave them this anſwer, I am no heretique, but the ſervant of Ieſus Chriſt. At which words the popes legate commanded him to hold his peace, telling him that he lied. The next day in the morning (which was the laſt of Ianuary) he was brought into Saint Peters Chappell, where he was degraded, becauſe he had been a Prieſt; and the night following he was conducted unto the Sea, and there drowned in the place appointed; who died praying and bleſſing God with invincible conſtancy.

¶ A relation of ſuch things as fell out under the government of the Duke of Alva, and of many men put to death, 1567.

THe afflictions of the proteſtants in the Low-Countries were multiplied this yeare under the dominion of Ferdinando of Toledo Duke of Alva. It is well knowne that the Spaniards, uſing all their endeavours to rule over this Countrey at their pleaſures, had no better opportunity to accompliſh their deſign, then to eſtabliſh among them their inquiſition, thereby to domineere over the goods, honors, and lives of every one. The Nobles, Citizens, and Commons did what they could to oppoſe the ſame: to which purpoſe they had inſtantly beſought the King, to afford them his royall preſence, thet hearing once their complaints, his Majeſty might take ſome order for matters of ſo great importance; alledging to this end the example of the Emperour Charles his Father: who, upon a buſineſſe farre inferiour to this, adventured himſelfe with much diligence to paſſe through the enemies country, who were but a while before reconciled; onele to ſtay ſome mutinies begun in the City of Gand. Theſe things had ſo moved his Majeſty, that he made them a promiſe by letters of his comming. But his intention was broken off by ſuch as were the upholders of the inquiſition, that ſo they might with the more facility attaine the end of their deſires. In ſtead of their King then, they had ſent unto them the Duke of Alva, who at his entrance found the priſons repleniſhed with Gentlemen & other perſonages of note, whom the Dutches of Parma had left in bonds after her death, Long did they languiſh in this captivity, whilſt the Duke of Alva by faire promiſes diſſembled a kind of meeke and gentle carriage of minde towards them, giving them ſome hope of a generall pardon, proceeding from the Kings clemency; that thus he might catch the lords and governors the more cunningly into his nets, whereof the Lord Lemorall Earle of Egmond, Prince of Gand, Governor of Flanders and Artois, and others of quality gave but too lamentable experience; who being fed with vaine hopes were at length inhumanely put to death.

The ſixteene Provinces alſo ſubiecting themſelves under this new government, loſt their antient liberties and priviledges; which evidently appeared by the exploits done from the yere 1567. hitherto by a new counſell of twelve, elected and ſetled there by the Duke; the principall of which were Vergas and Delrio, the Fathers of the inquiſition, which Councell was commonly called the *Councell of bloud,

¶ The death of two Barons of Battembourg, the one called Gyſbrecht, and the other Thierri, brethren, with certaine other Gentlemen executed the ſame day at Bruxells, 1568.

AMong many Gentlemen and Captains who were apprehended after the diſcomfiture of the Aſſembly in Holland, whom the Dutches of Parma had impriſoned in the caſtle of Villford, the two brothers of Battembourg a moſt antient Barony ſcituated upon Menſe, about two miles off from Nieumegne, did manifeſt above others how much they had profited by being inſtructed in the Church of Geneva. The elder of them was Gyſbrecht, and the other Dietrich or Thierri; who from the flower of their youth had conſtantly profeſſed and confeſſed the pure Doctrine of the Goſpell.

On Tueſday the firſt of Iune, Anno 1568. the Duke of Alva began to declare to the world his fained meekeneſſe, putting to death the ſame day theſe two brethren, beſides the Lords, Peter Dandelet, Philip Wingle, &c. They were firſt brought into Provoſt Spellans houſe, neere the horſe faire, in the City of Bruxels, compaſſed about with a ſtrong guard, and many drummes beating, that none might heare what were their laſt ſpeeches. As they went to their death, Battembourg the elder ſeemed to be ſomewhat penſive, whereas Dietrich his brother was very cheerefull, comforting the other with his gracious words, ſaying, Ah brother, is not this the day we have ſo much deſired? Be not ſorrowfull now; for it is the higheſt honor that can befall us here to ſuffer for the Doctrine of the Sonne of God. It may be for the love you beare me, you grieve to ſee me dye firſt: I am content that you ſhould drinke of that cup before me, in regard you are the elder; if not, all is one, ſeeing we are going to our God.

Gysbrecht by and by replied, Thinke not, deare Brother, that the joy of the holy Ghoſt is taken from me now I am drawing nigh to the Lord, being ready to dye for his holy name.

Then aſcending the ſcaffold, after he had made his fervent prayers to God, the Executioner taking off his head, he ſlept happily & ſweetly in the Lord. His brother following him next with ſuch alacrity, as much aſtoniſhed the ſpectators.

He deſired, as ſome ſay, to ſee his brother, and when he had eſpied his head, he cried, I ſhall by and by be with thee, my brother. So after he had ended his prayer, he was by a quicke diſpatch united unto him.

Thoſe who teſtifie theſe things report, That the other Gentleman had ſo much favour as to bee buried; but theſe two brethren were made a ſpectacle, being hanged up: the cauſe was, for that in the very ſame morning they ſuffered, as alſo before, they directly ſet themſelves againſt the Idolatries which were propoſed unto them.

The Saturday after, the fifth of June, the Earles of Egmond and Horne were beheaded, and there made a publique gazing ſtock. Of which two, the Earle of Horne, who died laſt, gave an evident proofe of that true knowledge of God wherewith he was indued, and in which hee had more eſpecially increaſed in the time of his troubles and afflictions.

¶ An extract of a complaint with a proteſtation of the Prince of Orange and the Gentlemen of the Low countries, touching their oppreſſions.

THis yeare in the month of July, the Prince of Orange, William of Naſſau, accompanied with many Lords and Gentlemen of the Low-Countries, all profeſſors of the Goſpell, for prevention of the ſlanders and pretences of rebellion put upon them by the enemies thereof, publiſhed in writing a declaration; that it might appeare to all, that they were ſo farre off from plotting any treaſon againſt the Kings Majeſty, that on the contrary, they did by all the means they could acknowledge him to be their naturall Prince and Soveraign. The true cauſes indeed for which they tooke up armes under the authority of their Prince, for their owne defence, as alſo of thoſe who profeſſed the proteſtant religion, were the extortions, the confiſcations of body and goods, with the continuall condemnations and putting to death even of the moſt noble perſonages of the Countrey.

And that the Prince of Orange might make knowne to all, what injuſtice and cruelties were exerciſed upon thoſe of the Religion, he diſcovered the notorious ſubtilties of the cardinall of Gravella and others, who under the cloaks of the pretended catholique religion, ſought nothing elſe thereby but the diminiſhing of Cods glory, the Kings authority, and the welfare of the commonwealth, ſhedding the bloud of many a true Chriſtian, by whoſe death followed the loſſe of their temporall eſtates; and all, forſooth, under pretence of Juſtice.

And for as much as tortures, vexations, baniſhments, executions both by fire and water, by ſtrait impriſonments, ſword, and gibbets did ſtill increaſe more and more; that for theſe conſiderations the cauſe was lawfull and good, in taking upon them the defence of ſo miſerable a people, to whom the Dutcheſſe of Parma, Governeſſe under his Majeſty, had expreſly permitted the preaching of the Goſpell, for preventing of the perils and dangers which threatened the ruine of the ſaid countries.

And as the ſaid Prince had been a faithfull and loyall ſervant to his Majeſty, in doing him many acceptable ſervices, without either ſparing his perſon or goods, ſo was he alſo ready preſt to be imployed ſtill in the like, more then at any time heretofore. And thus proceeding on further, hee made it apparant to every one whoſe judgement was not foreſtalled, that the Duke of Alva, who in reſpect of the dignities conferred upon him ought himſelfe to be a patterne and a protector of the Nobility and Gentry, had notwithſtanding put to death threeſcore gentlemen, with others of quality, rich Burgemaſters of Bruxels, and of other Cities beſides; that this his ambition, being riſen to a notable height of cruelty, durſt put to death the Illuſtrious Earles of Egmond and Horne, without any ſhew of law or equity, who had ſo faithfully ſerved the Emperour Charles of famous memory in his wars.

Yea, that he might yet further debaſe the Nobility of the Countrey, which is as it were the principall ſupport of his Majeſty; hee cauſed the heads of the ſaid Earles to be ſet upon poles and forkes; By ſuch ſpectacles charging upon their parents and friends much obloquy and diſgrace. Yea, this horrible execution did ſtrike ſuch a feare and terror into many, that to avoyd theſe oppreſſions they fled the countrey. For a concluſion he added, that all theſe things layd together, the iſſue thereof tended to the extirpation of all true Religion, and conſequently the depriving of the faithfull not onely of their ſpirituall, but corporall good alſo. And therefore as a Prince, being a native member of the Empire, he held himſelfe obliged, in having compaſſion over the wrackes made among ſo many poore Chriſtians, to lend them his beſt helpe & furtherance for the free paſſage of the Goſpell, and the conſolation of ſuch of his Majeſties good Subjects, as were perſecuted, impriſoned, and oppreſſed.

¶ Before wee ſhut up the Hiſtory of the yeare 1568. wee will adde to the former Martyrs ſome that were executed in the Low-countries at divers times in the ſaid yeare, without tying our ſelves to any ſtrict order, touching their death.

¶ Schoblant the ſonne of Barthel, Iohn de Hues, Ioris Coomans, Martyrs.

THe eleventh of February there were taken and impriſoned in Antwerpe, Schoblant the ſon of Barthel, John de Hues, and Joris Coomans. After which, they were all joyfull and glad in the Lord, confeſſing that nothing fell out in this regard, but by his divine providence; as it appeares by Letters written to their brethren the ſeventeenth of March, containing that which followeth.

Seeing it is the will of God that we ſhould ſuffer for his holy name, and in the quarrell of his Goſpell, we certifie you brethren, that we are of good courage hitherto, howſoever the fleſh continually rebels againſt the ſpirit, counſelling it ever and anone according to the advice of the old ſerpent. But we are well aſſured that Chriſt who hath

Anno 1568. Ioh. 14.18. Rom.16.20. Gen 3.15. Mat.11.35. hath bruiſed, will alſo ſtill bruiſe the Serpents head, and not leave us comfortleſſe. True it is, we are now and then pricked in the heele, but that is all the Serpent can doe; nor are we diſcouraged, but keep our faith cloſe to the promiſes of God, who is the Lord of heaven and earth, having created all things of nothing.

Gen.39.21. Dan.3.25. Dan.6.22. Pſal.18. He forſooke not Joſeph in Egypt, nor left the three yong men in the fiery furnace: no, nor Daniel in the Lions Den. This is the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and of their righteous poſterity; ſo that we can without feare ſay with the Prophet David, the Lord is my helpe, tower, ſtrength, and refuge. By ſuch and the like Scriptures, deare brethren, we comfort our ſelves in our bands, rejecting all confidence in any man whatſoever. Be not diſmaid then, good brethren and ſiſters, for our bands and impriſonment. For ſo is the good will of God now towards us. And therefore pray rather that he will give us grace to perſevere conſtantly unto the end, ſo be it.

¶ The examination of Schoblant taken the 24. of March, in the preſence of the Marqueſſe, of the Bailiffe, of the Secretary and many others, 1568.

Marq. WHere were you borne?

Schob. in Sommerſwall.

Marq. Where did you marry your wife?

Schob. At Middleborough in Zealand.

Marq. Where were your children baptiſed?

Schob. In the Church of Chriſt, in which true Chriſtians are bound to baptiſe their children.

Marq. Though you ſhould ſay no more, we have ſufficient teſtimony from your owne mouth. Have you received the Lords Supper?

Schob. Yea ſir.

Marq. Are ye not a Miniſter?

Schob. No ſir.

Marq. Ought not you to ſubmit your judgement to that which hath been decreed in a generall councell, where ſo many learned men were aſſembled, Biſhops and Cardinalls, ſwaying the ſame.

Schob. I have read of ſome Councels where the Spirit of God was not preſent.

Marqueſſe. Would you not now willingly returne into the boſome of the holy Romane Church?

Schob. I will cleave to whatſoever God ſhall teach me out of his holy word. And thus for this time they parted.

On the ſeven and twentieth of March, Schoblant received ſentence of death; whereat he was nothing terrified, but began to ſing the ſong of Simeon, and the fortieth Pſalme.

The night following, he wrote his laſt farewell to his brethren, and excuſeth Joris for not being condemned with him, although they were both preſented at the ſame time before the Judges. I pray you deare friends be not offended, ſaith he, that Joris my fellow priſoner is not offered a ſacrifice with me. It is not, I aſſure you, for denying his Saviour. But let us meditate on that which the Lord ſaid to S. Peter; Iohn 21. If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me. This I apply to my ſelfe at this time, for which I render humble and hearty thanks to God, who hath counted me worthy, not only to confeſſe the Lord Jeſus with my mouth, but alſo to ſeale the ſame confeſſion with my blood. I now brethren bid you farewell, waiting with a joyfull heart the call and cry of my husband, who now invites me to come unto him.

Out of priſon the ſame night before the day wherein I muſt be offered up a ſacrifie.
Written with mine owne hand.

Schoblant the Sonne of Barthel.

THe next day he entreated the Jaylour with a great deale of earneſtneſſe that he would not ſuffer the Fryers and Monks to come into trouble him: for, ſaid he, ſuch kinde of people can do me no good, ſeeing the Lord hath already ſealed up the aſſurance of my ſalvation in my heart by his holy Spirit. I am now going to my ſpouſe, putting off this earthly mantle, to enter into the celeſtiall glory, where I ſhall be freed from all ſuperſtitions. And then he added further, would to God I might be the laſt that theſe Tyrants ſhould put to death, and that their thirſt after blood might be ſo quenched with mine, that the poore Church of God from henceforth might enjoy her reſt and quiet.

Having ſung the fortieth Pſalme with his fellow priſoner, concluding the ſame with ſaying the Lords prayer, they kiſſed one another, and commended one another unto God with many teares.

After which the executioner came in, and when he had bound him, he led him away. In going out of the priſon he ſaid, farewell Joris, I goe before thee, follow thou me. Joris anſwered, ſo will I brother, I will follow thee. In his paſſage towards the place of execution, he forgot not his brethren, but manifeſted his love to them by ſuch ſignes as he could. Being tyed to the ſtake he was burned alive, calling upon the name of the Lord, in the yeare 1568. the tenth day of July.

¶ Iohn Hues finiſhed his courſe in Priſon.

¶ Here followeth a Letter written by Ioris Coomans, out of Priſon, to the Church of God in Antwerpe.

BRethren I write unto you being left alone, whereas we were three in number; John Hues is now dead in the Lord. I did my beſt to comfort him whileſt he breathed. So as now I am alone, and yet not altogether alone, ſeeing the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob is with me. He is my exceeding great reward, and will not faile to reward me as ſoone as I ſhall have laid downe this earthly Tabernacle: pray unto God that he will ſtrengthen me to the end; for from houre to houre I expect the diſſolution of this houſe of Clay. Gen 15.1

Not long after, Joris was examined by the Magiſtrates, who queſtioning with him of his faith, he anſwered freely thereto, proving what he ſaid by the holy Scriptures.

The Marqueſſe asked him if he were reſolved to die for the faith he profeſſed.

Yes, ſaith Joris, I will not only venture to give my body, but my ſoule alſo for the confirmation of it.

Anno 1568.

Marqueſſe. How came you to underſtand the Scripture, ſeeing you have not the Latine Tongue?

Ioris. Call in hither your Doctors, and I will let them ſee that I have learning ſufficient to confute them. You greatly admire them, but Chriſt gives thankes to his heavenly Father, for hiding his ſecrets from the wiſe and prudent, and revealing them to babes.

Mat. 11. 25.

Marq. I hitherto ſpared you in hope to ſee you recant, but you grow ſtill worſe and worſe.

Ioris. Sir, during the time of my impriſonment I have ſhed many a ſalt teare, and by the grace of God I am become much more reſolute and better. But to faſhion my ſelfe according to your appetite I have no ſtomack at all; no, although you burne me, as you have done my brother Scoblant, Marq. And I can tell you that it will coſt you but little better cheape.

Ioris. I am ready if it be to morrow.

Then ſaid one of the ſtanders by. Sir, he hath neither wiſe, childe, nor goods to loſe, and that makes him ſo willing to die.

Ioris. Be it that I have none of all theſe, yet muſt I ſuffer death for conſcience ſake. But what care you for that? I would you could be ſilent and bethinke your ſelves well what you doe; you ſhall anſwer theſe your doings at the laſt day, where you muſt all appeare, and then there will be no reſpect of perſons.

Marq. If you uſe this kinde of language I will commit you to the hole; where you ſhall be fed only with bread and water, and that I thinke will tame your tongue. Therefore be quiet and ſing me no more of theſe Pſalmes.

Ioris. Well ſir, I may well reſtraine my outward voice, but neither you, nor all the World beſides, ſhall ever be able to let me from praiſing God in my heart; nor ſhall you ſit as Lords over my conſcience.

Marq. We have heard you preach but too long. Then he ſaid, Jaylor, take him and caſt him into the hole. Then was he put among theeves, as a Lamb among ſo many Wolves. Thus this conſtant witneſſe of Chriſt remained firm (ſcorning both their threats and torments) till they had burned him as they did Scoblant. Auguſt 14. the yeare 1568.

¶ Giles Annik, Iohn Annik his ſon, and Lovis Meulen, Martyrs, 1568.

Perſecution grew ſtill hot in Flanders.

GIles Annik, with John Annik his ſon, were driven from Renay in Flanders, and retired unto Emden in Eaſt Frieſland. But by reaſon of their ſo ſudden departure, they could not take their wives with them; and therfore returned thither again in the yeare 1568. to convey thē thence. The tyranny of the Duke of Alva and his Spaniards was then in the height; by reaſon whereof they durſt not enter the towne openly, but tooke up their lodging in the evening at an honeſt mans houſe, called Lovis Meulin. Now it was this night in which the enemies had foreappointed to make a ſecret ſearch in the towne for ſuch as profeſſed the Goſpell, knowing nothing of theſe two who were but now come thither. So paſſing by this houſe, and ſeeing the light of a candle in it, they imagined to meet with their prey there; wherefore forcing the doore open, they tooke theſe two priſoners, together with their hoſt; God having appointed them to be the witneſſes of Chriſt.

So after they had been detained in bands, they were all three condemned by the Magiſtrates to death, as heretiques. Giles was the firſt that they brought to the place of execution, and when the Prieſts offered to put their Idoll into his hands, he refuſed it: whereat his adverſaries being moved cauſed him to be gagged, that the people might not heare him ſpeake ought to their edification. Then was he burned, dying conſtantly and bleſſedly in the Lord.

Forthwith the Sergeants were ſent to fetch his ſon out of priſon; who, being endued with a ſingular fortitude and conſtancy, called to him one whoſe name was John Camber, being the firſt man that laid hold on him at his apprehenſion, ſaying, I forgive thee my death: then preparing himſelfe to die in the Lord, the hangman cut off his head. Likewiſe Lovis Meulen, who having lodged theſe ſtrangers, according to the rule of the Apoſtle, was executed by the ſword, which death he willingly endured for the name of Chriſt in the yeare, 1568.

¶ Louyes de Kiken-Pooſt, Martyr, 1568.

THis woman was the widow of one Huges Moyvert borne in Renay, about the age of ſixty yeares, one that truly feared God. The Magiſtrate of Renay impriſoned her in the yeare 1568. becauſe two yeares before ſhe with her children had conſented that a Miniſter ſhould preach in an outhouſe on the backſide of her dwelling; ſhe was alſo very charitable in releeving the poore, every way ſhewing forth the fruits of a true ſaving Faith. Having been kept in priſon ſeven moneths, ſhe was condemned to die the nine and twentieth of July. After her condemnation the Curate of Saint Martins came into the priſon, purpoſing to have heard her confeſſion. But the woman ſpake unto him with ſuch a divine grace, and with a ſpirit ſo repleniſhed with zeale, that the teares trickled downe his cheekes, and going his way he ſaid, I came to comfort you, but I have need rather to be comforted of you.

Then being brought by the Sergeants to the place of execution ſhe was beheaded; unto which ſhe yeelded her ſelfe with much boldneſſe and joy of heart, July the ninth.

A ſtrange accident fell out upon the death of this woman; for a couſin of hers being with child, and ready to lie downe at the ſame time when this Martyr was going to be executed, hearing the ſound of the Bell (which uſually toules when any are to ſuffer) ſhe fell into a trembling, and remained ſo three weekes, beyond her reckoning, her fruit ſtirring to and fro in her wombe as if a Weaver had moved his ſhuttle from one end of his Web to another; the neck of it bowing downe as if it had been broken with ſome blow. By which it appeared that theſe cruell tyrants were the cauſe of this poore innocents death. The woman viewing this ſtrange ſight ſent for the foreſaid Curate; who being come in, and beholding this ſpectacle, ſuddenly ſwounded and was never well after to his dying day.

THis Chriſtopher was bred up under the Abbot of Ename; who dying, the ſaid Chriſtopher addicted himſelfe to the making of Linnen Cloth, which he quickly grew expert in. But having been trained up in a bad ſchoole, as ſoone as the Sunday was come, he ſpent and conſumed all his weekes earnings. Now by reaſon of a friend of his that wrought with him, called Louys Stallens, God brought him into the right way. For the ſaid Louis would often tell him, that hee ought rather to diſtribute of his gettings to the Poore, than to ſpend them ſo waſtfully; for if he continued ſo, God would ſurely call him to an account for it. Theſe and the like exhortations ſo wrought upon this ſpendthrift, that he began to alter and change his courſe; ſo as in ſtead of frequenting Tavernes, he became a diligent hearer of Sermons, and alſo gave himſelfe much to the ſtudy of the holy Scriptures: inſomuch that not long after he was called by the Church to the Office of a Deacon, the which he diſcharged carefully and faithfully.

Having occaſion to go to a place called Audenard, in the moneth of March, 1 5 6 7. to make diſtribution of certaine almes to the poore there, hee was arreſted and ſent priſoner to the Caſtle by the Bailiffe, who had formerly ſeene him in the ſaid Abbats houſe. The Bailiffe asked him how he came now to turne heretique; for you learned not this (ſaid he) of your Maſter the Abbat. Nay Sir, ſaid Chriſtopher, I am no heretique, but a right beleeving Chriſtian; which he taught mee not indeed, but rather other vile qualities, the which I am aſhamed now to rehearſe.

In priſon he had many diſputes touching matters of faith, which he ſo defended and maintained by the Word of God, that he put his adverſaries to ſilence.

Some objecting againſt him his youth, being about the age of thirty yeares, he would tell them, that mans life conſiſted but of two dayes, viz. the day of his birth, and the day of his death, and therefore he muſt needs die once: for my part therefore (ſaid he) I am now willing by death to paſſe into eternall life.

Perceiving in the evening that he was certainly to die the next day, the ſtriking off of his bolts being a ſigne thereof, he ceaſed not to poure out his ſoule to God in prayer, untill ten of the clock, doing the like in the morning very early. His prayer being ended, he put on a cleane ſhirt, and waſhed himſelfe, ſaying to his fellow Priſoners, Brethren, I am now going to be married, I hope before noone to drinke of the wine of the kingdome of heaven. When he came downe he found three priſoners who were prepared to ſuffer with him; namely Jo. Liebert, William Spiere, and a woman called Jannekin Bearts.

Theſe foure exhorted one another, and encouraged each other to ſuffer death conſtantly. Which done, a Fryer forthwith preſented himſelfe before them, comming as he ſaid to convert them. But Chriſtopher ſaid unto him, Away from us thou ſeducer of ſoules, for we have nothing to doe with thee. Whereupon he by and by departed. Then came in the hangman; who as he was buſie about them to put into every one of their mouthes a gag, they bad one another farewell. John Liebert ſaid, What, ſhall we not have liberty in this our laſt houre to praiſe God with our voice & tongue? Chriſtopher anſwered, Brother, let not this diſcourage us; for the greater wrong our enemies thinke to doe unto us, the more aſſiſtance we ſhall finde from God: and ſo never ceaſed to comfort them till himſelfe was gagged alſo.

A confident ſpeech.

Then the Executioner brought them to the Towne houſe to heare their ſentence read; which in ſumme was this, That they ſhould be hanged becauſe they had been preſent at the hearing of ſermons. Thus theſe three men yeelded up their ſoules to God with admirable conſtancy, at the Gallowes.

The woman, being every way vertuouſly given, was condemned to be beheaded, becauſe ſhee had ſung Pſalmes, and made a certaine exhortation out of the word of God to her neighbours, at a womans up-ſitting. She was beheaded on the back ſide of the Towne houſe. Now becauſe her body was much enfeebled, ſhe was cauſed to ſit upon a ſtoole, receiving three blowes with the ſword overthwart the teeth. Yet ſhee conſtantly ſate ſtill till ſhe obtained the Crowne of Martyrdome, the ſame day in which the forementioned Martyrs dyed, which was the ſecond of June. Anno 1568.

¶ Piere Coulogue, and Betken his Maid ſervant, Martyrs, Anno 1568.

This Peter Coulogue, by his Trade being a Goldſmith dwelling in Breda, had long ſerved the Church there in the office of a Deacon; wherein he carried himſelfe with the good approbation of all. His houſe alſo was free for the aſſembly to meet in, as oft as the exerciſes of Chriſtian religion were performed amongſt them.

But the enemies of the truth not enduring the ſweet ſavour hereof impriſoned him, and laid him in irons: which the faithfull there tooke very heavily, uſing all the meanes they could to have acceſſe to viſit him. But the enemies taking knowledge thereof cauſed him to be conveyed into the Caſtle; whence both his and the Churches ſorrow was yet further encreaſed, becauſe they could not now come to be a comfort one to another.

His ſervant Betken, being very zealous and well read in the Scriptures, brought him his ordinary dyet from day to day, never ceaſing to comfort and confirme him out of the Word of God. All which ſhe had liberty to do nine moneths together. At length they impriſoned her alſo; whereof ſhe was right glad, thinking her ſelf happy to ſuffer ought for righteouſneſs ſake. Not long after Peter was put to the torture; which after he had endured, they came in like manner to his maid ſervant Betken: who ſpake unto them after this manner, My maſters, wherefore will you put me to this torture, ſeeing I have no way offended you? Is it for my faiths ſake? You need not torment me for that; for as I was never aſhamed to make a confeſſion thereof, no more will I be now at this preſent before you; I will freely ſhew you my minde therein. But for all this they proceeded on with that which they intended. Which ſhe perceiving ſaid, Alas my Maſters, if it be ſo that I muſt ſuffer this paine, then give me leave firſt to call upon God. To which her requeſt they yeelded. Now whileſt ſhe was making her prayer, one of the Commiſſioners was ſo ſurpriſed with feare and terror that by and by he ſwouned, and could not be fetched again. And thus the poore maid eſcaped the torture.

Soone after being examined touching her faith, they condemned theſe two innocents to be burned. Now as they were led to be executed, great ſorrowings and complaints were heard among the people. But as for Peter and his Maid, they praied to God with ardent affection, that he would perfect the good work which he had begun in them, and aſſiſt them with the power of his holy ſpirit untill they had finiſhed their courſe.

The courage and conſtancy of the ſaid Betken did ſo move many of the godly, both men and women, that not caſting what perill or danger might enſue thereof, they brake through the multitude, embracing the Priſoners, and praiſing God for their conſtancy; ſaying, Fight manfully, for the crowne is ready prepared for you.

After they were come where they ſhould ſuffer,

Anno 1568.

Betken began to ſpeake unto the people with an amiable countenance, ſaying thus unto them. Brethren and ſiſters, be you alwaies obedient to the word of God, and feare not thoſe that can kill the body, for on the ſoule they can have no power: as for me, I am now going to meet my glorious Spouſe the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And then falling both downe upon their knees, they prayed to the Lord with great devotion. Being riſen up from prayer, the executioner laying hold of them bound them with chaines to the ſtake, and then ſtrangled Peter, but would not ſtrangle the other, who encouraged her Maſter till he had yeelded up the ghoſt, and till the fire had taken hold of her ſelfe. Then was ſhe heard and ſeen to magnifie the Lord out of the middeſt of the flames; ſo as many among the multitude were raviſhed at her invincible conſtancy. Thus did theſe two Martyrs of the Lord give up their laſt breath in the fire. May the 29. Anno 1568.

Giles Meyere Martyr, Anno 1568.

IN Flanders at a place called Winderhout, diſtant from Gand about a mile, there was a certaine Curate called Giles de Meyere whom it pleaſed God to illuminate with the true knowledge of his Goſpell. Now having received a talent from God, he would not hide it with the Evill ſervant; but ſought all meanes how to imploy the ſame. He had the feare of God alwaies before his eyes, manifeſting the ſame as well in his Doctrine as in his converſation, being carefull to inſtruct thoſe whom God had committed to his charge. Yea, he went from houſe to houſe comforting and exhorting every one, as occaſion ſerved, out of the word of God; above all, labouring with them to beware of the abhominable ſuperſtitions of the Papacy.

Mat.25.18.

Acts 20.20.

He taught them that forgiveneſſe of ſins, the grace of God, and eternall life, was not to be obtained by our own merits, but by the free and only grace of God in Jeſus Chriſt.

The Clergy of Gand having notice given them hereof, namely, that their Doctrine and authority would come to be little ſet by, if this Curate ſhould proceed on thus in his courſe without let, they never reſted untill they had purſued him to the death. They impriſoned him then, in the moneth of March, anno 1567. caſting him into a deep and dark hole, where for a certaine ſpace hee remained, bearing this his affliction patiently, and conſtantly calling upon God night and day, praiſing him for eſteeming him worthy to ſuffer for his ſake. In which his afflictions many good people, who came often to viſite him, received ſuch inſtruction, and conſolation from him, that they were hardly drawn to leave him, till of neceſſity they muſt; their departure was alwayes accompanied with abundance of teares.

The Prieſts and others of that rabble ceaſed not likewiſe to ply him with diſputations, thinking by that meanes to make him renounce his Faith; but to no purpoſe: for he remained ſtill firme and conſtant, keeping himſelfe cloſe to the word of God written, which ſo vexed them, that they procured him to be laid in the Caſtle, where his ſentence was to be hanged; The Spaniards being then at Gand take him thence, bound him, girding and ſtraining him ſtrangely with cords, and would needs have him burned. As he was led thither, they abuſed him ſhamefully with mockes, thruſting him forward, and ſtriking him cruelly. The Captaine of the band gave him a blow over the face with his Gantlet, which much disfigured him. Finally, theſe tyrants handled him worſe then any dog, only becauſe his patient and conſtant carriage of himſelfe tormented and enraged them.

Being come to the place, they thruſt him into his little Cabbin piled up with fagots and wood, and then ſet fire unto him; where he was heard diſtinctly and plainly to uſe theſe words (albeit they had gagged him) Father into thy hands I commend my ſpirit. Thus this faithfull witneſſe of Jeſus Chriſt dyed quietly and conſtantly in the Lord, April the fourth, Anno 1568.

¶ Among theſe ſad relations, a little to quicken and refreſh the ſpirit of the reader, I will here inſert a Letter full of conſolations, written out of priſon to the faithfull by one William Touart, Merchant, who had his dwelling in the City of Liſle in Flanders.

THis honourable perſonage, being come to the age of eighty yeares or thereabouts, uſed his houſe for the ſpace of fourteene or fifteene yeares as a Church, wherein the aſſembly in the City of Liſle commonly met. Being chaſed and baniſhed thence in the yeare 1561. he withdrew himſelf for a while to Tournay, whence he was conſtrained to flie, and to goe to Amiens and Moundedier Cities of Picardy, that there he might enjoy the pure preaching of the Goſpell. Afterward returning into his owne countrey, he came to reſide in the City of Antwerpe, where after he had continued many yeares, he was at length impriſoned and condemned to be burned with two others, who ſuffered for the ſame cauſe. But it pleaſed God ſo to diſpoſe of him, that he dyed another kinde of death, to ſhew that his choſen ſervants have to triumph over the ſame, ſome one way, and ſome another. For being plunged into a ciſterne or tub full of water, he was drowned in priſon, and then they carried his body out of the City to a place called Berken, where the dead bodies of the condemned are laid upon the wheels or crutch. Among many letters which he wrote during the time of his impriſonment, my author hath ſelected out this one, which here followeth.

DEare brethren and ſiſters in Jeſus Chriſt, I moſt humbly thank my good God that he hath ſo fortified and comforted me by his grace, that I feele my ſelfe more cheared by lying in this darke priſon, then if I were walking in the open ſtreets or fields. I ſay, this I feele according to the ſpirit; for as touching the fleſh what doth it apprehend here but ſtinking vapors and ſmoke?

Wherefore my beloved, if it ſo fall out that you be apprehended for the name of Jeſus Chriſt, feare not the priſon, nor thoſe that have power to kill the body; for having done that, they can goe no further. Be yee not afraid then, ſeeing it is the reward which our good Captaine Jeſus Chriſt hath promiſed to all his faithfull ſoldiers and ſervants. He who turnes his backe in this conflict goes by the loſſe; but whoſoever fights manfully obtaines in the end the crowne, not a crowne of gold, but of glory immortall. We here lay downe a fading life, filled with griefes and troubles, to change the ſame for a life everlaſting; we put off the ragges of this mortall fleſh, to be clothed with robes immortall; we forſake a loathſome life for joy and felicity eternall; ought any gaine or exchange to be compared with this? O ſweet and happy Martyrdome, how doſt thou dignifie and enrich us, in deſpite of the world, devill, and our owne fleſh? And which of us now can complaine, ſéeing our Soveraigne Lord and Maſter hath ſo expreſſely foretold it to all his followers? will any man come after me, ſaith he? Let him then take up his croſſe and follow me. Let us beare, Oh let us then beare the croſſe chéerefully and with ioyfulneſſe, that we may be received in the preſence of his heavenly Father: for it is not only given us to beléeve in Chriſt, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake; and if we ſuffer with him, then wée ſhall alſo raigne with him.

Oh that wée could admire his bounty, who no ſooner imployes us in his worke, but hath the wages ready in his hand wherewith to recompence us. Your ſorrow, ſaith he, ſhall be turned into ioy. Let us then caſt off every weight that preſſeth downe, and whatſoever elſe that ſtands in our way to heaven-ward; be it father, mother, brother, ſiſters, husband, childe, yea, and our own life alſo. Let us with the wiſe Merchant man ſell all, that with him we may purchaſe that pretious pearle. How happy doe I eſtéeme them who are called to ſuffer, and leave their life for confeſſing the name of Jeſus Chriſt? For the eternall Son of God will confeſſe their names before his heavenly Father, and his holy Angels. They ſhall be clad with white robes, and ſhine as the Sunne in the kingdome of Heaven, filled with gladneſſe in the preſence of the Lambe. They ſhal eat of the fruit of the trée of life, which is in the midſt of the Paradiſe of God.

Let us fixe the eyes of our minds upon theſe ſo great & pretious promiſes of Jeſus Chriſt, which he hath made to all thoſe which perſevere in well doing unto the end. O how happy ſhall wée be, when we are delivered from theſe bodies of death to live for ever with our God? Let us continually pray then with the Diſciples, Lord increaſe our faith. O deare brethren, remember mée alwayes in your prayers, who am bound here in the bonds of Antichriſt. Remember thoſe alſo who are in bonds, as if you were bound with them; pray I ſay, without ceaſing; for our adverſary the Devill is alwayes compaſſing us about with his fetches, to cauſe our hearts to faint. And you are not ignorant what a potent enemy our owne fleſh is unto us. But I confidently beléeve that our good God, who hath begun this good worke in me, will perfect the ſame even unto the day of Chriſt.

Fare ye well.

It was ſtrange to ſée what ſpectacles of dead bodies, ſlaine by the bloudy Inquiſition, were to be gazed on in a manner in every place: eſpecially in the Cities of Tournay, and of the Valencians, in regard of the multitudes of beléevers, both of men and women, who had long languiſhed in ſundry priſons, in great miſery and neceſſities. Now that we may not forget what fell out in the beginning of this yeare 1569. thus it happened.

In the City of Valence were executed ſeven and fifty perſons, whereof the greater part were Burgeſſes of the City; onely becauſe they clave to the true faith of Jeſus Chriſt.

This ſlaughter was diſtributed into thrée ſeverall dayes. Ten were beheaded on Munday the foure and twentieth day of January; twenty on Tueſday following; and the other twenty the day after that: and ſo the ſeven in their order after the reſt, not without much aſtoniſhment and lamentations of the poore people, with the remainder of the Burgeſſes of that City.

¶ A notable cruelty executed upon a good woman called Perrette Curtet in the yere 1569.

As ſhe was travelling from Orleance to a place called Moutagris where ſhe intended to méet her husband, called Maſter Anthony Chanonter des Meringes, who had eſcaped the fury of his enemies: ſhe being in her Inne at ſupper, two or thrée deſperate villaines knocked at the dore, and comming in asked of the ſaid Curtet, Art thou not Meringes wife? ſhée anſwered yes, Then rapping forth execrable blaſphemies they ſaid, thou art ſhe whom we looke for. This done, they ſtripped her into her ſmocke, tooke away her monies and rings from her, and brought her to the river ſide; where after great blaſphemies they ſaid, confeſſe thée. The woman anſwered, Séeing I muſt die, give me leave to call upon God firſt. They deriding her, ſaid, Pray then, let us heare what kind of prayer thou wilt make. She having in her prayers commended her ſoule to God, one of them ſware, Gods death, is this all? wilt thou ſay nothing elſe? Then ſaid one of them to another, Let us caſt her into the river: which they agréed to doe; ſome taking her by the head, and others by the héels, and ſo throwing her in, heaped great pieces of yce upon her to cauſe her to ſink, and then went their way. But underſtanding that the poore woman had got upon a great flake of yce, to ſave her ſelfe thereon, Peter Gouge returned, who was one of the murtherers, and had betrayed her into the hands of the reſt, notwithſtanding her husband had covenanted with him to convey her to him in ſafety; this Gouge, I ſay, finding her there, gave her a deaths wound, the which had never come to light, had not the ſaid Gouge confeſſed the ſame, being impriſoned by the Ducheſſe of Ferrare for that very fact; yet eſcaped he unpuniſhed (contrary to the law of Provoſts) albeit hée was ſent to the Provoſt Marſhall of Montagris to that end, and was ſet at liberty, for the hatred which theſe bare againſt the Doctrine of the Goſpell, whereof the ſaid des Meringes was a Miniſter.

Now the dead body floating to and fro upon the water reſted no where, untill it came over againſt the lodging where the ſaid des Meringes lay (as if it had there demanded execution of juſtice upon the offenders) where being known and conveyed thence was buryed by ſome of the aſſembly who yet remained in the City.

¶ Another cruelty committed in Orleance about the ſame time.

A Woman in the City of Orleance was conſtrained by the murtherers (who broke in upon her husband in the night) to ſtand and hold the candle to them, whileſt they murthered him.

¶ Of the comming of the Queene of Navarre to the City of Paris in France, with the manner of her ſickeneſſe and death there.

Before I come to mention the bloudy Maſſacres of France, eſpecially that of Paris,

Anno 1572.

1572, which made way to all the reſt, I cannot omit to place here, as an entrance thereunto, the hiſtory of that noble and vertuous Lady Jane de Albert, Queene of Navarre, becauſe it containes much matter worthy of due obſervation.

This good Queene, before ſhe could be drawn to come to Paris to ſolemniſe the mariage of her ſon the Prince of Navarre with the ſiſter of Charles the ninth then King of France, received letters upon letters from the ſaid King to accompany the Prince her ſon in that ſolemnity: now, wheras ſhe caſt ſome doubts touching her ſonnes mariage with one of another religion, the King aſſured her that all things ſhould be ſo wrought, as ſhould give her good ſatisfaction and content; promiſing that he would get a diſpenſation from the Pope to that end. But when the Queen underſtood that the King was minded to have this marriage ſolemnized at Paris, ſhe would by no means heare of it: for I will not, ſaid ſhe, put any confidence in that ſo mutinous a people, being the ſworne enemies both of my ſelfe and mine.

Pope Pius 5. whileſt he lived could by no means endure to heare of, or give his conſent to this mariage: but he died, & then way was made for this mariage to bee concluded.

Still the King perſiſted in his ſute for the obtaining of the ſame at her hands. Alſo having intelligence by ſome of his agents, that the queen of Navarre began a little to waver, he ſollicited her yet once againe to come, aſſuring her that all things ſhould be caried in ſuch peaceable ſort, that ſhe ſhould have no cauſe to complaine. At length the Queene came from Rochell to Bloyes in the moneth of March, 1572. with great attendance, where it is incredible to thinke what welcome ſhe had on all ſides, eſpecially from the King & his brethren, &c. who yet, when all was done, could ſay to his Mother, Now Madam, have I not quit my ſelfe well? Let me alone, and I will bring them all into the net.

In Aprill following were the Articles concluded concerning the mariage of the Prince of Navarre with the Kings ſiſter. In the beginning of May the King wooes the Queene of Navarre again to come to Paris for preparing of things fitting for this mariage; which ſhe accordingly yeelded unto, and parting from Bloyes on the ſixth of the ſaid moneth, came to Paris on the fifteenth of the ſame. After which ſhe went from place to place in the City into ſundry houſes and ſhops, to finde out ſuch things as might tend to the adorning of the day of ſo great a ſolemnity.

The queene mother could by no means brooke this good Queene; and therefore not finding with what colour ſhe could diſpatch her with the reſt, and yet fearing the height of her ſpirit if ſhee ſhould ſurvive, as alſo that ſhe could not then ſo worke upon the flexibility of the Prince her ſonne as ſhe intended, ſhe conſulted with one Rene, whoſe practiſe it was to impoyſon things; who by ſuch meanes adventured to poyſon the Prince of Conde by the ſent of a poyſoned apple, which upon ſome ſuſpition was firſt tryed upon a dog: and it had almoſt coſt the Princes chirurgion his life, by ſmelling too nigh thereto. This Rene, ſelling to the Queen of Navarre his perfumed drugs, found the way how to poyſon her therewith, although others thought the contrary. But the ſaid Rene was heard afterwards to make his brags, that hee had the like in ſtore for two or three more, who ſuſpected no ſuch matter.

On Wedneſday the fourth of June, the Queen fell ſick of a continuall Fever, and kept her bed; which proceeded, as it was given out, from the griefe ſhe had in her lights, wherein by long continuance was bred an impoſthume, ſhe being alſo diſtempered with the heat of the ſeaſon and her extraordinary journeyes. This burning Fever grew ſo ſtrong upon her, that within five daies after ſhe died, to the great griefe of the better ſort, but to the joy of the ſecret counſell.

The malady indeed was in her braine, which was not ſearched: in which the Queen Mother had an hand, though ſhe ſeemed much to mourne for the affliction of her good friend. Now foraſmuch as in the time of her ſickneſſe ſhe manifeſted with what ſpirit ſhe was guided, we will here ſet downe the true narration of her behaviour, both in the ſame her ſickneſſe, and alſo at her death.

Perceiving in her ſelfe by the ſtrength of the diſeaſe (howſoever others ſleighted it) that ſhee could not long continue, ſhe made her ſelfe ready to receive from the hand of God that which he had appointed concerning her; and to that end requeſted ſhe might have ſuch nigh about her, as might comfort her in this caſe out of the word of God, as alſo to pray with her and for her, according to that which Saint James ſaith, Is any ſicke among you, Let him call for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray over ſuch a one, knowing that the fervent praier of a righteous man availeth much with God.

Iohn 5.14,16.

Thus according to her deſire a Miniſter reſorting unto her ſhewed out of the Scriptures, that Chriſtians ought in all things to ſubmit themſelves to the will of God, as to the Father of ſpirits, that they might live. And albeit the rigor of his chaſtiſements doth ſomtimes ſeeme to our fleſh as if they were ſent to none other end but for our ruine and deſtruction; yet ought we to conſider, that becauſe he is juſt he can do nothing but juſtly, and being a father, he cannot but therein ſeeke the welfare of his afflicted children.

Heb.12.

To which ſhe replyed, I take all this, ſaith ſhe, as ſent from the hand of God my moſt mercifull Father; nor have I during this extremity feared to die, much leſſe murmured againſt him for inflicting the ſame upon me: knowing that whatſoever he doth, he doth the ſame ſo, as all in the end ſhall turne to my everlaſting good.

The Miniſter continuing in his ſpeech, added, That the cauſes of ſickneſſes and diſeaſes muſt be ſought beyond the courſe of phyſicke, which alwayes lookes to the corruption of the humours, or to the more noble parts of the body any way diſtempered: for howſoever it was not amiſſe to have reſpect to theſe things as to ſecond cauſes, yet ought we to aſcend higher, namely to the firſt, even to God himſelf, who diſpoſeth of all his creatures as it pleaſeth him. He it is that makes the wound and heales, that kils and makes alive. And therefore to him we ought to direct our prayers for comfort in all our griefes and ſufferings, and in the end for full deliverance; ſeeing it is no hard matter with him to reſtore health unto us, if his good pleaſure be ſuch.

Deut.32.39.

To this ſhe anſwered, that ſhe depended wholly upon Gods providence, knowing that all things are wiſely diſpoſed by him, and therefore beſought him to furniſh her with all ſuch graces as he ſaw to be neceſſary for her ſalvation. As for this life, ſaid ſhe, I am in a manner weaned from the love of it, in regard of the afflictions which have followed me from my youth hitherto, but eſpecially becauſe I cannot live without daily offending my good God, with whom I deſire to be with all my heart.

The Miniſter told her, that long life, how ful of troubles ſoever it were, was notwithſtanding to be eſteemed among the bleſſings of God, ſeeing his promiſe implyes ſo much; and not onely ſo, but becauſe our life may many wayes ſerve to his glory, and is both an honor and a pledge of his favor, even as it is to him whom his prince imploys long in his ſervice having had experience of his fidelity for many yeares together. In which reſpect ſhe was earneſtly requeſted to pray, that if it were Deut.5.16.

the

Anno 1566.

the will of God to imploy her yet longer in his ſervice, for the further inlargement of his Goſpell, that he would grant unto her ſuch recovery of health, and good diſpoſition of body, that with renued ſtrength ſhee might bee encouraged to finiſh her courſe much more nobly than heretofore.

Whereupon ſhe proteſted, that in regard of her owne particular her life was not deare unto her, ſeeing ſo long as ſhe lived in this fraile fleſh, ſhe was ſtill prone and apt to ſinne againſt God: onely, ſhe ſaid, her care was ſomewhat for her Children (which God had given her) in reſpect they ſhould be ſo ſoone deprived of her now in their young yeares; yet not doubting, ſaid ſhe, but although it ſhould pleaſe God to take me from them that himſelfe will be a Father and a protector over them, as he hath been to me in my greateſt afflictions; and therefore I commit them wholly to his government and fatherly care: theſe were her very words.

The Miniſter ſaid, that he bleſſed God to ſee in her Majeſty this aſſurance of faith, and ſo to caſt her care upon the providence of God, praying her ſtill to perſevere therein, which would ſufficiently ſeale unto her the truth of her faith. And thus, ſaid he, did the Patriarkes in times paſt commit the care of their poſterity over into the hands of God; as may appeare by Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, touching their ſeverall bleſſings.

Gen.24 1. Gen.27. & 48. 15.& 49.

But yet it was very requiſite, as he ſaid, that ſhe ſhould make choiſe of ſuch, who, for their ſincerity both in life and doctrine, might continue to water in theſe young Princely plants the ſeeds of piety, which had been ſowne in them by her ſo great paine and induſtry; ſeeing it was to bee hoped, that the example of her faith and conſtancy in the ſervice of God, which ſhe had ſet before them, would ſerve as a perpetuall inducement to imitate her ſo noble vertues.

Now whereas ſhe had againe declared that death was not terrible unto her, becauſe it was the way by which we paſſe hence to our eternall reſt; The Miniſter told her, that Chriſtians had little cauſe to feare death, in regard they ſhould not die at all, according to Chriſts words in the Goſpell of John, he that liveth and beleeveth in me ſhall never die. For death (to ſpeake properly) is no death to them, but a ſleep; being often ſo called in the Scriptures; and therefore Chriſt for their ſakes hath overcome and triumphed over it in his owne perſon. So as now we may cry out with ſaint Paul, O death where is thy ſting? O grave where is thy victory?

Becauſe by death we paſſe to life.
John 8.51, 52.
John 11.26.
John 11.13, 14.
Acts 7.60.
1 Cor.15.55.

She was often admoniſhed by him to make confeſſion of her ſinnes before God, ſhewing that bodily diſeaſes tended to the diſſolution of nature, and that death was the wages of ſinne; declaring moreover that by this her chaſtiſement ſhe might diſcerne what ſhe had deſerved, if God ſhould now enter into judgement with her, not onely in regard of the fall of our firſt Parents, in which guilt ſhe was enwrapped, as well as others, but alſo by her owne perſonall ſinnes, ſeeing the beſt of men or women in the world are in themſelves but poore, miſerable and wretched offendors: yea, if the Lord ſhould puniſh us according to our demerits, we could expect nothing at his hands but eternall death and condemnation.

Rom.6.23.
Rom.5.12.

At theſe words, ſhe began with her hands and eies lifted up to heaven, to acknowledge, that her ſinnes which ſhe had committed againſt the Lord were innumerable, and therefore more then ſhe was able to reckon up: But yet ſhe hoped that God for Chriſts ſake, in whom ſhe put her whole affiance, would be mercifull unto her.

Pſal.19.12.

From the later clauſe of her ſpeech the Miniſter tooke occaſion to declare at large upon what ground ſhe was to expect the fruit of this mercy of God in Chriſt; ſeeing the whole have no need of a Phiſitian, but they that are ſicke: and therefore Chriſt ſaith in that place, Hee came not to call the righteous, but ſinners unto repentance; And that he is ready to fill the hungry with good things, whereas in the meane while he ſends the rich empty away. Of all which, ſaid he, you ought ſo much the rather to be perſwaded in your conſcience, by how much the more the holy ſpirit witneſſeth to your ſpirit that you are the childe of God, Crying in you, Abba, Father. For what is faith elſe, but a firme truſt and aſſurance of the good will of God, manifeſted towards us in his bleſſed ſonne?

What faith

Now the Miniſter, fearing he might ſome way offend her by his overlong diſcourſe, held his peace; the rather becauſe the Phyſitians thought that a long continued ſpeech might bee hurtfull unto her; but ſhe on the contrary earneſtly requeſted him not to forbeare ſpeaking unto her about theſe matters of life and eternall ſalvation; adding, that ſhe now felt the want of it, in regard that ſince her comming to Paris ſhee had been ſomewhat remiſſe in hearing ſuch exhortations out of the word of God; And therefore I am now the more glad, ſaith ſhe, to receive comfort out of it in this my ſo great extremity.

The Miniſter then endeavoured to ſet before her the happineſſe of heaven, and what thoſe joyes were which the faithfull there poſſeſſe in the preſence of God: which when the ſcriptures intend to diſcover unto us, they onely tell us that the eie hath not ſeene, nor hath the eare heard, nor hath it entred into the heart of man, to conceive what theſe things are, which God hath prepared for them that love him. To which purpoſe he uſed this ſimilitude; as if a King, minding greatly to honor ſome noble perſonage, ſhould bring him to his Court, and there ſhew him his ſtate and attendance, his Treaſures, with all his moſt precious Jewels: even ſo, ſaith he, will the Lord one day reveale to all his elect and faithfull people his magnificence and glory, with all the treaſures of his Kingdome, after he hath gathered them home to himſelfe, decking and adorning them with light, incorruption and immortality.

Pſal.16.11.
1 Cor.2.9.
Simile.

This happineſſe therefore being ſo great, her highneſſe, he ſaid, ought to be the leſſe carefull about the leaving of this tranſitory life, ſeeing that for an earthly kingdome, which ſhe was now to forgoe, ſhe ſhould inherit an heavenly; and for temporall good things, which vaniſh and come to nothing in the uſing, ſhe ſhould for ever enjoy thoſe that were eternall and everlaſting. For her faith being now firmely ſetled upon our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſhe might be ſuffered to obtaine eternall ſalvation by him, on which words he took occaſion to direct his ſpeech in more particular manner unto her, ſaying:

Madame, doe you verily beleeve that Jeſus Chriſt came into the world to ſave you? and doe you expect the full forgiveneſſe of all your ſinnes, by the ſhedding of his bloud for you?

To which ſhe readily anſwered ſhe did; believing that he was her only Saviour and Mediator, looking for ſalvation from none other, knowing that he hath abundantly ſatisfied for the ſinnes of the whole world, and therefore was aſſured that God for his ſake, according to his gracious promiſes in him, would have mercy upon her.

Thus you have in part the goodly ſpeeches, which paſſed from this religious Lady in the beginning of her ſickneſſe; all which was within the ſpace of three or foure daies. Howſoever before that, and ſince alſo ſhe ceaſed not to continue the ſame her fruitfull and comfortable communications, now and then ſending forth moſt affectionate ſighings to God, as a teſtimony of that hope and deſire ſhe had in enjoying his preſence; often uttering theſe words, O my God, in thy good time deliver me from this body of death, and from the miſeries of this preſent life, that I may no more offend thee, and that I may attain to that felicity which thou in thy Word haſt promiſed me.

Neither did ſhe manifeſt her pious affection by theſe her words onely, but therewithall ſhewed a joyfull and reſolute countenance, as the vehemency of her ſickneſſe could beare: which gave ſufficient proofe to all that beheld her, that the feare of death could not drive her from the ſtedfaſtneſſe of her Faith.

When ſhe had finiſhed theſe her conſolatory ſpeeches, they uſually went to prayer; intreating the Lord that he would arme her with conſtant patience, and have mercy upon her. Which praier it ſhall not be altogether impertinent to inſert in this place, ſerving as a forme of praier upon the like occaſion.

¶ The Prayer.

O Lord our God, we confeſſe here before thy Divine Majeſty, that wee are altogether unworthy of thy infinite mercies, by reaſon of our manifold iniquities; and that we are ſo farre off from deſerving to be heard of thee in our requeſts, that we are rather worthie thou ſhouldeſt reject both our perſons and our ſutes: but ſeeing it hath pleaſed thee to make us a gracious promiſe of hearing and granting our requeſts, we humbly beſeech thee freely to forgive all our offences, and to cover them under the obedience and righteouſneſſe of thy deare Sonne, that through him our ſelves and poore ſervices may be well pleaſing before thee. For Lord we acknowledge that all our afflictions are meaſured out unto us by thine hand, who art a moſt juſt Judge, in regard we have every way provoked thee to wrath by our infinite ſinnings againſt thee; yea, by our rebellions, which now teſtifie againſt us. For alas Lord, our [illegible] hath no way been anſwerable to that perfect obedience which thou in thy holy Law juſtly requireſt at our hands, which we from day to day do tranſgreſſe; and therefore doe here caſt downe our ſelves at this time before thy glorious preſence, unfeignedly acknowledging our miſery and wretchedneſſe from the very bottome of our hearts.

Yet Lord mercy is with thee, and becauſe thou art our father, therefore thou deſireſt not the death of ſinners, but rather that they ſhould convert and live. For this cauſe we now fall downe before the throne of thy grace, with confidence of obtaining thy wonted mercy, which thou haſt promiſed to ſuch as call upon thee in truth: beſeeching thee, which art the Father of mercies, to have compaſſion on all ſuch whom thou haſt humbled under thy mighty hand, by any of thy rods and chaſtiſements; but more eſpecially this thy ſervant the Queene, who lieth here before thee ſicke of a dangerous diſeaſe, that as thou haſt righteouſly afflicted her for her ſinnes (which ſhe alſo doth with us acknowledge) ſo it would pleaſe thee tu pardoning them all unto her, for thy beloved ſons ſake, to grant that ſhe may profit by this thy correcting hand for the time to come. Above all, give her a ſweet ſenſe, yea a full aſſurance of thy eternall joyes, that ſo ſhe may with the greater patience take downe this bitter potion miniſtred unto her from thy hand, and that the ſole deſire of enjoying thy preſence may cauſe her to forget all worldly greatnes and magnificence; knowing that they are nothing in reſpect of the glory which is now ſet before her.

Endue her alſo with meekeneſſe of minde to beare the tediouſneſſe of her affliction; for howſoever the ſpirit be willing, yet the fleſh is weake, yea full of reſiſting and unbeliefe; that ſo receiving all things from thee as from a father, ſhe may the more willingly ſudmit her will unto thine.

And becauſe, O good God, thou haſt made her hitherto an happy inſtrument for the advancement of thy glory, and the defence of thy poore afflicted people; we pray thee, if it may ſtand with thy good pleaſure, reſtore her to health againe, that ſo the excellent work which thou haſt by her means begun may not be left unperfect, but by vertue of this her deliverance ſhe may with renewed forces undertake the ſame in better ſort than ever heretofore, eſpecially for the well educating and training up the children which thou haſt given her.

But Lord, if thou have a purpoſe now to call her home to thy ſelfe, who are we that we ſhould contradict thy holy will? onely we pray thee that thou wouldſt confirme her more and more in the knowledge of thy bleſſed Goſpell, and thereby alſo in the certainty of her ſalvation, which thou haſt given her by faith in thy ſonne Jeſus Chriſt, that thus ſhe may not ceaſe to ſanctifie and call upon thy holy name unto her laſt breath.

And as touching our ſelves, who are here by thy good providence gathered together about her, being in bodily health, give us to know the uncertainty and brevity of our life: that ſo, according to our duty, we may behold the ſame in this mirrour which thou haſt ſet before us; as knowing that even the greateſt in the world are ſubject to the ſame calamities, as well as the ſmall; that ſo our chiefe care may be to imploy the remainder of our time to thy honor and ſervice: all which we crave of thee in the name of Jeſus Chriſt thy ſon, our only Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

Thus we have as neere as we could gathered the ſumme of the prayer. During which ſhe ceaſed not, with hands and eies ſtedfaſtly lifted up to heaven, to fetch many deep ſighes, eſpecially when mention was made of that mercy of God in Chriſt which he extendeth towards poore ſinners. So as there was not any there preſent that might not evidently perceive, that her heart and affections were joyned to the prayer which we pronounced in her preſence.

And while ſhe thus lay, ſhe ſtill continued in her godly reſolution to depart hence, that ſhee might be with Chriſt, taking great delight in the holy and Chriſtian exhortations which were uſually made unto her by many godly and learned men, who came in to viſit her, to whom ſhee alſo manifeſted no ſmall teſtimony of that faith, and hope, which ſhe had in God, touching the ſalvation of her ſoule, by her holy and Chriſtian ſpeeches, which for brevities ſake are here omitted.

Yee, albeit the Lord exerciſed her much with the ſenſe of her inward diſeaſe, yet could you not at any time diſcerne any ſpeech ſavouring of diſcontentment, or impatience, to proceed out of her mouth; nay, ſcarſely a groane, which not only thoſe of her owne family, but many others can teſtifie, even the Queene Mother, with others alſo, who now and then came in to ſee her.

But if at any time ſhe felt any refreſhings from the violence of her diſeaſe (there being no malady ſo vehement which hath not ſome intermiſſion and breathing time) ſhe manifeſted to all her willingneſſe to obtaine the recovery of her former health, refuſing to that end no good meanes preſcribed for her by the learned Phyſitians. Againe, when ſhe perceived her ſickneſſe to encreaſe upon her, and that ſhe grew worſe and worſe, ſhe was no whit appalled thereat, but ſhewed

Anno 1568. ſhewed her ſelfe to be armed with an invincible conſtancy, to undergoe the utmoſt that death could doe againſt her, preparing her ſelfe willingly for that laſt conflict.

Moreover ſeeing her Ladies and Gentlewomen weeping about her bed, ſhe would forthwith rebuke them, ſaying, I pray you weep not for me, foraſmuch as you ſee God doth now by this ſickneſſe call me hence, to enjoy a better life, and to enter in at the deſired haven, towards which this fraile veſſell of mine hath for a long time beene ſteering; only ſhe ſhewed her ſelfe ſomewhat grieved, that ſhe lacked opportunity to reward them, and many more of her family and train which had done her faithfull ſervice, as ſhe could have wiſhed; excuſing her ſelfe with theſe words unto them, that it was not for want of good will, but by being overtaken and ſo prevented by this her unexpected ſickneſſe. But, ſaith ſhee, I will not faile to give order concerning the ſame to my uttermoſt ability.

In the end, feeling her ſtrength to decay more and more, ſhe gave order to have her laſt will and teſtament made, wherin ſhe above all wiſhed, that her children might have but the grace to honor and feare the Lord, exhorting them conſtantly to continue in the profeſſion of the Goſpell, in which they had been trained up from their youth; ordaining eſpecially that her daughter the Princeſſe ſhould be educated and inſtructed therein, by the foure Ladies which ſhe had appointed and brought with her out of Bearne for that end and purpoſe. And being come to age, her deſire was that ſhe might be joyned in marriage to ſome Prince of the ſame religion, by the counſell and advice of the Cardinall of Bourbon and Gaſper Count of Colligny Admirall of France, whom ſhe made Executors and overſeers of her ſaid Teſtament. But here it may not be omitted briefly to relate another conference which ſhe had with a Miniſter of the Goſpell before her departure.

The eighth of June, which was the day before her death, ſhe cauſed a Miniſter of the Goſpel to be called for, and finding that ſhe was drawing nigher unto her end than before, ſhe willed him to ſpeake ſomewhat largely of ſuch temptations as Satan is wont to aſſaile Gods elect withall in their laſt conflict.

To which the Miniſter anſwered, that then was the houre indeed wherein that ſworne enemy of all the faithfull did moſt buſily beſtir himſelfe, if he could, to deprive them of the comfort of their ſalvation; not ſparing at that time eſpecially to ſet upon them with might and maine: but yet even then the Lord is not, nor will be wanting to his, filling their hearts with ſuch joy and comfort of the holy Ghoſt, as ſhall make them through the ſame more than conquerours.

The firſt engine then which ſatan uſeth againſt the Saints to cauſe them to deſpaire, is to preſent before their eyes the innumerable heapes of their ſins and pollutions, wherewith they have any way been defiled in their whole life; and then preſents unto them Gods juſtice, before which no fleſh can be able to ſubſiſt, unleſſe it be pure and ſpotleſſe: whence he infers, that miſerable ſinners can expect and looke for nothing, but an horrible deſolation and condemnation. But againſt theſe aſſaults in the firſt place muſt be oppoſed, (as David doth in the one and fiftieth Pſalme) the infinite multitudes of Gods compaſſions, which doe infinitely ſurpaſſe the multitudes of our ſins. And as touching the juſtice of God, we confeſſe that no creature that is defiled with ſin can in any ſort abide to be ſtrictly examined by it, if he ſhall call the ſame to a ſevere account: but we alſo know that God will never enter into judgement with thoſe that beleeve in his ſon, but allowes unto them that righteouſneſſe and obedience which was accompliſhed in him, which is only ſufficient for us, being imputed unto us, to oppoſe againſt the judgement of God: therefore in it alone they expect to ſtand before his face, and not by their owne dignity or worthineſſe. Indeed if they were to appeare before the throne of Juſtice, to receive thence what they have deſerved, they had good reaſon to be overwhelmed in utter deſpaire, as oft as they thinke upon or looke on the ſame: but turning their eyes upon him, who being the eternall Son of God hath clothed himſelf with our humane nature, to beare in the ſame the puniſhment due to our ſins, and therein acquitted us, then Gods juſtice doth no way affright us, but rather yeelds us aſſured comfort, becauſe they make this their full reſolution, that foraſmuch as God is juſt, he cannot require the ſame debt twice. Having therefore received full and perfect ſatisfaction of him, whom he hath ordained to be our ſurety, and paid our debts for us, thence we gather aſſurance that he wil no more require them of us.

To which purpoſe theſe ſentences are to be well obſerved. It is Chriſt who hath borne our griefes and carried our ſorrows. Iſa.53 4.5. That the chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him, and with his ſtripes we are healed. I grant, ſaith he, that theſe things belong not to all indifferently, but only to ſuch as beleeving in the Son of God doe wholly reſt themſelves ſatisfied in the merit of his death and paſſion, which merit of his, as Saint Peter witneſſeth, ſufficeth for their ſalvation. Acts 4.12.

After theſe matters premiſed, he asked her whether ſhe placed her whole confidence on Chriſt crucified, who dyed for her ſins, and roſe againe for her juſtification? Rom.4.25.

To which the noble Princeſſe anſwered, that ſhe neither expected ſalvation, righteouſneſſe, nor life from any elſe, then from her only Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, being aſſured that his only merit abundantly ſufficed for the full ſatisfaction of all her ſins, albeit they were innumerable.

This being your Faith Madam (ſaid the Miniſter) you cannot come into condemnation, but are paſſed from death to life. Iohn 5.25. to God, as a teſtimony of that hope and deſire ſhe had in enjoying his preſence; often uttering theſe words, O my God, in thy good time deliver me from this body of death, and from the miſeries of this preſent life, that I may no more offend thee, and that I may attain to that felicity which thou in thy Word haſt promiſed me.

Neither did ſhe manifeſt her pious affection by theſe her words onely, but therewithall ſhewed a joyfull and reſolute countenance, as the vehemency of her ſickneſſe could beare: which gave ſufficient proofe to all that beheld her, that the feare of death could not drive her from the ſtedfaſtneſſe of her Faith.

When ſhe had finiſhed theſe her conſolatory ſpeeches, they uſually went to prayer; intreating the Lord that he would arme her with conſtant patience, and have mercy upon her. Which praier it ſhall not be altogether impertinent to inſert in this place, ſerving as a forme of praier upon the like occaſion.

¶ The Prayer.

O Lord our God, we confeſſe here before thy Divine Majeſty, that wee are altogether unworthy of thy infinite mercies, by reaſon of our manifold iniquities; and that we are ſo farre off from deſerving to be heard of thee in our requeſts, that we are rather worthie thou ſhouldeſt reject both our perſons and our ſutes: but ſeeing it hath pleaſed thee to make us a gracious promiſe of hearing and granting our requeſts, we humbly beſeech thee freely to forgive all our offences, and to cover them under the obedience and righteouſneſſe of thy deare Sonne, that through him our ſelves and poore ſervices may be well pleaſing before thee. For Lord we acknowledge that all our afflictions are meaſured out unto us by thine hand, who art a moſt juſt Judge, in regard we have every way provoked thee to wrath by our infinite ſinnings againſt thee; yea, by our rebellions, which now teſtifie againſt us. For alas Lord, our life hath no way been anſwerable to that perfect obedience which thou in thy holy Law juſtly requireſt at our hands, which we from day to day do tranſgreſſe; and therefore doe here caſt downe our ſelves at this time before thy glorious preſence, unfeignedly acknowledging our miſery and wretchedneſſe from the very bottome of our hearts.

Yet Lord mercy is with thee, and becauſe thou art our father, therefore thou deſireſt not the death of ſinners, but rather that they ſhould convert and live. For this cauſe we now fall downe before the throne of thy grace, with confidence of obtaining thy wonted mercy, which thou haſt promiſed to ſuch as call upon thee in truth: beſeeching thee, which art the Father of mercies, to have compaſſion on all ſuch whom thou haſt humbled under thy mighty hand, by any of thy rods and chaſtiſements; but more eſpecially this thy ſervant the Queene, who lieth here before thee ſicke of a dangerous diſeaſe, that as thou haſt righteouſly afflicted her for her ſinnes (which ſhe alſo doth with us acknowledge) ſo it would pleaſe thee in pardoning them all unto her, for thy beloved ſons ſake, to grant that ſhe may profit by this thy correcting hand for the time to come. Above all, give her a ſweet ſenſe, yea a full aſſurance of thy eternall joyes, that ſo ſhe may with the greater patience take downe this bitter potion miniſtred unto her from thy hand, and that the ſole deſire of enjoying thy preſence may cauſe her to forget all worldly greatnes and magnificence; knowing that they are nothing in reſpect of the glory which is now ſet before her.

Endue her alſo with meekeneſſe of minde to beare the tediouſneſſe of her affliction; for howſoever the ſpirit be willing, yet the fleſh is weake, yea full of reſiſting and unbeliefe; that ſo receiving all things from thee as from a father, ſhe may the more willingly ſudmit her will unto thine.

holy Patriarkes, Prophets, Apoſtles and Martyrs of the Son of God, to partake with them of the ſame felicity and glory.

The Miniſter minding yet further to ſound her, whether ſhe were loth to leave this life, uſed theſe words: And now good Madam, ſaid he, if it ſhould pleaſe God by this your ſickneſſe to put an end to this weariſome pilgrimage of yours, where yet you remaine with us, and to call you home to himſelfe, whereof he gives us to ſee ſome evident ſignes and tokens, are you willing, I beſeech you, to goe unto him? To which this excellent Princeſſe with great magnanimity and courage, without any aſtoniſhment, replyed, Yes, I aſſure you.

Then he once againe added, good Madam, open the eyes of your Faith, and behold Jeſus your great Redeemer ſitting at the right hand of his Father, reaching out his hand to receive you unto him. Are you, are you willing to goe unto him? Yes, I aſſure you, ſaith ſhe, moſt willing, and much more willing than to linger here below in this world, where I ſee nothing but vanity.

The miniſter, not willing to continue longer in this kinde of diſcourſe, asked if ſhe were pleaſed that they ſhould goe to prayer, declaring that godly perſonages there preſent would willingly joyne their deſires with hers. To which ſhe conſenting, the ſaid Miniſter prayed by her a good ſpace, whileſt this pious Lady manifeſted her ardent affection to call upon God.

When prayer was ended, the Miniſter diſcerning in her the undoubted teſtimonies of her repentance, and of the ſorrow ſhe conceived for the offences which ſhe had committed againſt God, together with the aſſured confidence which ſhee had in his mercies, as a Miniſter of the Goſpell, and Embaſſadour of the Son of God, by the authority diſpenſed to him, having committed to him the word of reconciliation, he aſſured her in his name, that all her ſins were forgiven her of God, and that they ſhould never come into account before his judgement Seat; yea, that ſhe ſhould no more doubt thereof, then if the Sonne of God from heaven ſhould ſay unto her, Daughter thy ſins are forgiven thee. And to the end that troubled conſciences might the better be quieted, Chriſt hath uſed theſe words, ſpeaking to his Miniſters, ſaying, Whoſe ſoever ſins ye remit, they are remitted, and whoſe ſins ye unlooſe, they are unlooſed. The reaſon is, becauſe the word which they pronounce is not the word of a mortall man, but of the immortall God, being of no leſſe weight, than if himſelfe uttered the ſame.

1 Cor. 5.

Mat. 16. 14.

Then he asked of her Majeſty, if ſhe accepted of ſo gracious a Meſſage which aſſured her of the free pardon of all her ſins. Yea, I doe, ſaith ſhee, and make no doubt thereof.

Not long after theſe exhortations, the Admirall comming in, and with him another Miniſter, ſhee alſo gave eare to him for a good ſpace together; whoſe diſcourſe tended to prepare her for death, as he had done who had ſpoken to her immediatly before; who having finiſhed his ſpeech prayed alſo with her and for her, which ſhe heard with great attention and affection. Then ſhe requeſted that theſe two miniſters might ſtay with her all night in her Chamber, and that they would in no wiſe leave her.

The greater part of this night was ſpent in holy admonitions which theſe two miniſters gave to this gracious Lady and Princeſſe one after another. Beſides theſe admonitions ſhe commanding that ſome Chapters of the holy Scripture, which were pertinent for her condition, ſhould be read unto her; one of the Miniſters read in her hearing certaine Chapters out of the Goſpell of Saint John, namely, from the foureteenth to the ſeventeenth. After he had read to her theſe Chapters, he went to prayer, which being ended the Queene deſired to take ſome reſt, but it was not long ere ſhe commanded them to reade again: whereupon the other Miniſter having made choiſe of certaine Pſalmes of David, full of ardent and affectionate prayers, ſuiting to this Princeſſes preſent affliction, he read them unto her, and for a concluſion read the one and thirtieth Pſalme, where the Prophet, among other things, doth there commend his ſpirit into the hands of God; becauſe, ſaith he, thou haſt redeemed me, O Lord God of truth.

Pſal. 31. 5.

The Queene willed them to pray with her again: and thus, as I have ſaid, was the moſt part of the night ſpent in ſuch vertuous exerciſes, namely in exhortation, in reading the holy Scripture, and in prayer: during all which time the miniſters never diſcerned in any of her ſpeeches or behaviour the leaſt impatiency. Nay, whereas ſome dayes before ſhe fell ſick ſhe ſhewed how affectionately ſhe was bent to provide things moſt magnificent for the day of her Sons marriage, according as the State of ſo great an alliance required: it was admirable to obſerve, that after this ſickneſſe had ſeized upon her, God wrought in her ſuch a forgetfulneſſe and neglect of all ſuch matters, that ſhe never made ſhew of having ſo much as a thought thereof.

This night being thus paſſed and ſpent by this noble Queene, ſhe perſevering in the expreſſions of like pious actions and ardency of Faith, the next day in the morning betweene eight and nine of the clocke ſhe departed this life, to take poſſeſſion of a far better life, ſweetly yeelding up her ſpirit into the hands of God, the ninth of June 1572. the ſixth day after ſhe fell ſick, in the 44. yeare of her age.

She had her perfect ſpeech alwaies even to the houre of her death: ſhewing not only the ſtayedneſſe and ſoundneſſe of her judgement (which ever in times paſt ſhe had) in her care about the ſalvation of her ſoule, but in her other worldly affaires alſo.

Now to avoide all jealouſies and ſuſpitions of her being wronged by poyſon or otherwiſe in this matter of her ſo ſudden ſickneſſe, her body was opened, by ſundry expert and learned Doctors of Phyſick and Chirurgery, with all exquiſite diligence, who found her heart and liver very ſound and untouched, her lungs only excepted, which long before on the right ſide had been very ill affected, by reaſon of an extraordinary hardneſſe which they had contracted, and withall a great impoſthume, which, ſo far as man could judge, they concluded was the cauſe of her death. But they had no command given them to open the braine, and therefore finding ſomewhat out of frame in her body, they delivered their opinions only concerning the ſame.

Thus you have with as much brevity as I could, and as the merit of the thing required, the true report of the manner of this vertuous Princeſſes ſickneſſe and death, thus far related unto you; only my requeſt is (ſaith my Author) that if any have a more perfect and particular knowledge of the excellent parts wherewith the Lord had adorned and beautified her, they would not ſuffer the ſame to be buried in ſilence, but to cauſe it to ſee the light; that on the one ſide it may ſerve as an example to poſterity; and on the other ſide, that we may learne to bleſſe God for her piety and conſtancy.

Anno 1572.

An Introduction firſt into that which leades to the death of the Admirall of France; Then, to the maſſacre at Paris, and ſo in ſome other Cities.

And firſt, what moved the Admirall to come to Paris.

AFter the death of the Queene certaine Princes were ſollicited by the King to give their attendance at Paris, for the ſolemniſing the marriage of the Prince of Navarre (now made king by the death of his mother) according to the ceremonies which were thereto appertaining. Among the reſt, letters were directed to the Admirall by the King himſelfe, to come to this marriage; which were delivered unto him by Cavagues: wherein the King aſſured him he would not tarry long after him; Willing him not to be afraid of the fury of the Pariſians, nor of their threats which they had formerly uttered againſt him. For he was not ignorant of the deadly hatred they bare him, and therefore wrote unto the Maior of the City, to looke unto it at his perill, that the Admirall had no wrong offered him by the Citizens, either at his entrance or continuance in the City. For of all the Cities in that Kingdome it is the moſt ſuperſtitious and eaſily moved to ſedition; and therefore the Admirall, being of a contrary religion, could expect but ill welcome at his comming thither: eſpecially becauſe at his ſollicitation the Croſſe of Gaſtines was remoued out of the ſtreet of S. Dennis.

The Queene mother and the Duke of Aniou wrote unto the Maior alſo, and likewiſe to the reſt of the Magiſtrates, to the ſame effect; but eſpecially to their ſervants, ſome whereof had a little light given them touching that device. To be ſhort, they endeavoured to take all rubbes out of his way, that he might with the leſſe miſtruſt fall into the ſnare.

The Admirall, not caſting any perils, reſolved to take his journey to Paris. Albeit he lacked not ſundry advertiſements from his owne followers, and others his well-willers in the Kingdome; who honoured him much, deſiring him, that howſoever he had no ſiniſter opinion of the "King, of his mother, or any of theirs, yet at leaſt he was to take into his conſideration the place whither he went, and amongſt what enemies he was now to venture himſelfe. But he alwaies leaning upon the teſtimony of a good conſcience, and being confident in Gods providence, not moved by theſe advertiſements, tooke his journey to Paris with very few Attendants. Being come thither, he was honourably received of the King, of his Brethren, and of the Queene mother, with others alſo.

"He gave this teſtimony in his anſwer to theſe advertiſements, that ſince France came to be a Kingdome, it never enjoyed a better King then Charles the ninth.

The marriage of the King of Navarre with the Kings ſiſter being ſolemniſed on the ſeventeenth and eighteenth of Auguſt, 1572. and all the Triumphs and feaſtings accompanying the ſame being finiſhed, the Admirall determining to take his leave at the Court, and ſo to returne homewards, the Deputies of the Reformed Churches brought him their requeſts on a ſudden, to preſent the ſame to the King, in regard of many wrongs the ſaid Churches had ſuſtained; and therefore they inſtantly beſought him, that he would not leave the Court till ſome order might be taken for redreſſe thereof.

This with other impediments were the occaſions of detaining him ſtill there.

Mauravell comming to Paris whileſt theſe Feaſts laſted, having preſented his ſervice firſt to the King and his mother, the Duke of Aniou, with thoſe of the Guiſe; after ſome ſpeech had with the King and the Queene mother, one called Chaill had a command to direct him to the houſe whence the blow ſhould be given: who left him with a woman in the ſaid houſe, which woman was forbidden not only to aſke his name, but alſo ſo much as to enquire for what cauſe he was lodged there.

This Mauravell was he that ſhot the Admirall.

On Friday, the two and twentieth of Auguſt, in the morning he trimmed up his harquebuſe, watching ſecretly the Admirals comming.

The Admirall at his going forth out of the Louure meeting the King comming out of a Chappell which is before the ſame, paſſing thence to play at Tenniſe, he ſcarcely had gone an hundred paces from the place, but as he returned to his lodging on foot to dine there, attended on by ſome twelve or fifteene Gentlemen, reading a petition; out of the window of a lodging (where Willemur tutor to the Duke of Guiſe uſually lay) he was ſhot with an harquebuſe charged with three braſſe bullets, one of which tooke off the fore finger on his right hand, and he was hurt with another in his left arme. Feeling himſelfe thus wounded, hee willed ſome of his followers to enter that houſe, and to enquire who it was that had done that, or who ſet him on worke, to doe it: and then to advertiſe the King thereof, giving him to underſtand how well his command was obſerved.

Mauravell hurts the Admirall.

Now whileſt they were buſie to force open the doore, the murtherer fled out by a back way, eſcaping thence out of the gate of Saint Anthony; where one attended him, holding a Spaniſh gennet brought out of the Duke of Guiſes Stable; whereon he galloped away, yet not without ſome difficulty: for flying thus in ſome feare, he fell off his horſe twice or thrice.

A Gentleman ſeeing the Admirall hurt came to ſupport his left arme, binding up the hurt thereon with his handkerchiefe. And thus was he conducted to his lodging, which was diſtant from thence about ſome twenty paces. In his paſſage a Gentleman ſaid it was to be feared the bullets were poiſoned: to which the Admirall replyed, All muſt be as it pleaſeth God.

The King hearing of the Admirals hurt left his game, where he was playing till then with the Duke of Guiſe, and throwing away his racket as it ſeemed in an anger, with a ſad and heavy countenance withdrew himſelfe into his Chamber; the Duke of Guiſe following him within a while after.

The King of Navarre, the Prince of Conde, with many other of the religion, having notice of the Admiralls hurt, complained to the King of this untimely accident; entreating they might have leave to depart out of the City, ſeeing they could expect little ſafety there. The King made his moane to them of the miſchance that hapned, ſwearing and proteſting that he would execute ſuch impartiall juſtice upon the offendor, and on all the complotters, as ſhould give the Admirall and all his friends content; only he willed them to ſtay, promiſing them ere long to provide for their ſecurity.

The King of Navarre and the Prince Conde complaine to the King.

The Chirurgians and Phyſitians were preſently ſent for, amongſt whom was Ambroſe Pare the Kings Chirurgian, a man very expert. He began firſt with the Admirals finger, which put him to much paine, in regard the ſciſſers were not ſharpe enough to cut it off at once; beſides hee was faine to ſtop and open the wound thrice. Then he came to the left arme, making inciſions in two places into which the bullet had pierced.

The

Anno 1572.

The admirals ſpeech while he was in the Surgeons hands.

The Admirall endured all this with an undaunted countenance, and wonderfull patience, whileſt thoſe which ſtood by and ſaw him ſo mangled could not refraine from teares. Captaine Monins held him with both his armes about the middle, and Cornaton held his hands. He ſeeing them aſtoniſhed, my friends, ſaid he, why weepe you? I thinke my ſelfe happy to be thus handled in the cauſe of God. And anone caſting his eyes upon a Miniſter called Merlin, he ſaid, here ye ſee, my friends, Gods bleſſings. I am hurt indeed; but I know it is come to paſſe by the will of my heavenly Father, humbly thanking his Majeſty in that hee is pleaſed to honor me ſo farre, as to ſuffer any thing for his holy name. Let us pray unto him, that he would grant unto me the gift of perſeverance.

This Merlin was miraculouſly delivered in the maſſacre of Paris.

Then looking upon the ſaid Miniſter who wept over him. Oh Maſter Merlin, ſaith he, what will not you comfort me? Yes ſir, ſaid he; for wherein may you take greater comfort, then in calling to mind how greatly God hath alwaies honored you, in eſteeming you worthy to ſuffer rebuke for his names ſake, and true religion? The Admirall replied; alas, if God ſhould deale with me according to my deſerts, he might have put mee to worſe torments then theſe. But bleſſed be his holy name, in that he is pleaſed to take pity on mee his poore and unworthy ſervant. Be of good cheere, ſir, then ſaid another unto him: for ſeeing God hath ſpared your more noble part whole, you have cauſe therein to magnifie his goodnes. In theſe wounds you have received from God a teſtimony of his love, rather then of his diſpleaſure, ſeeing hee hath preſerved your head and underſtanding ſafe.

Then ſaid Merlin, ſir, you doe well in turning your thoughts away from him who hath committed this outrage upon you, in looking onely unto God; for no doubt it is his hand that hath ſmitten you: therefore for the preſent, ceaſe to thinke on the malefactor. I aſſure you, ſaid the Admirall, I doe freely forgive him from the bottome of my heart, and thoſe alſo that are his abettors; being fully perſwaded, that none of them all could have done me the leaſt hurt, no, though with violent hands they had put me to death. For what is death it ſelfe to Gods children but an aſſured paſſage to an eternall reſt and life?

Now as the ſaid Miniſter declared how the evils which happen to the children of God in this preſent life, doe often incite and quicken them up to poure out their prayers into the boſome of the Almighty, the Admirall preſently with a loud voice and ardent affection prayed thus.

¶ The Admirals godly and devout Prayer.

The admirals godly and devout prayer.

LORD God and heavenly father, have pity upon me for thy goodneſſe and mercies ſake; remember not Lord the ſinnes of my life paſt, nor the offences which I have committed againſt thee; for if thou narrowly marke our ſinnes, the looſenes of our behaviour, and diſloyalties, in tranſgreſſing thy holy commandements; Lord, who ſhall ſtand? who is able to beare the weight of thy diſpleaſure? I renounce all Idoll Gods; I acknowledge thee to be the onely true God, and worſhip thee alone O Eternall Father, in thine Eternall ſonne Ieſus Chriſt. I beſeech thee for his ſake, that thou wouldeſt give unto mee thy holy ſpirit, and therewithall the gift of patience. I put my truſt in thy free mercy; for therein conſiſts the ſtay and prop of all my hope, whether I die now at this preſent, or live for the time to come. Behold Lord, here I am, doe with me as it pleaſeth thee; having this confidence in thee, that if I now depart hence, thou wilt receive me into the bleſſed reſt of thy kingdome. If it pleaſe thee to lengthen out my daies here on earth, O heavenly Father give me grace that I may ſpend the reſidue thereof in ſetting forth the glory of thy holy name, and in maintaining, to the utmoſt of my power, thy pure worſhip and ſervice. Amen.

The Miniſters pray with him.

Having ended this prayer, Merlin asked him, if it pleaſed him that the Miniſters of Chriſt ſhould now pray with him and for him. To whom hee ſaid, yes, with all my heart; I pray you begin. Whileſt Merlin pronounced the prayer, applying the ſame to the preſent occaſion, the Admirall with his eyes looking up to heaven expreſſed the ardency of his affection, in conſenting thereunto. Prayer being ended, Merlin began to propound unto the Admirall the examples of the Martyrs, ſhewing that from Abel to Abraham, and conſequently hitherto, whoſoever carried themſelves in any degree of faithfulneſſe in the houſe of God, felt at one time or other the ſmart of afflictions in divers kinds. The Admirall anſwered, that when hee called to minde the ſufferings of the Patriarchs and Martyrs, it much comforted him, and helped him ſomewhat to allay the tartneſſe of his afflicted eſtate.

The King & Queene Mother came to viſit the Admirall.

The King of Navarre and the Prince of Conde having bitterly bewayled this outrage committed upon the Admirall (as you heard before) about two of the clocke in the afternoone, the King, accompanied with the Queene Mother, his Brother, and other of the Lords, went to viſite the Admirall.

The King with teares ſeemed to be exceeding ſorry for that which was come to paſſe, promiſing him, with one blaſphemous oath upon another, to revenge the fact, no leſſe than if it had beene committed upon his owne perſon: praying him to come and take up his lodging with him, in the Louvre, for his greater ſecurity and ſafety. Whereupon, the Admirall, after ſome diſcourſe made to the King in ſecret, gave him moſt humble thankes for ſo great a favour, as to viſite him in his owne perſon.

Upon the motion made by the King, Mazilles his chiefe Phyſitian was called, demanding of him, whither the Admirall might ſafely be removed thence into the Louvre, or no? His Anſwer to the King was, that it could not be done without danger. Some of the Admirals friends thought it fitting to requeſt a guard of ſouldiers to be aſſigned by the King unto him for his better ſecurity. The King anſwered, he liked well of that device, being fully determined to provide for the admirals ſafety as his owne, and would preſerve him no leſſe then the apple of his eie. After this the King called for the bullet of braſſe wherewith the Admirall was hurt, that he might ſee it, asking whither hee was not put to great paine when his finger was cut off, as likewiſe touching the dreſſing of his arme? Now as Cornaton ſhewed the bullet, having his ſleeve all bloudy (becauſe he was appointed to hold the Admirals arme, while it was in dreſſing) the King asked if that were of the Admirals bloud? and whither ſo much bloud iſſued out of his wounds? adding (after Cornatons anſwer) he never ſaw man in his life ſhew greater conſtancy and magnanimity of ſpirit then the Admirall did.

Then was the Queene Mother deſirous to ſee the Bullet, ſaying, I am glad the bullet is taken out; for I remember when the Duke of Guiſe was killed before Orleance, the Phiſitian told me, that if the Bullet were gotten out, there was no danger of death, though it were poyſoned.

Then Cornaton anſwered, we have foreſeene that Madame; for being carefull to prevent that danger, the Admirall had a medicine given him to expell the poiſon, if peradventure any ſuch thing ſhould be.

Some good hopes of the Admirals recovery.

The Saturday before the Admirall was ſlain he began to be ſomewhat chéered, ſo as the Chirurgions and Phyſitians gave out, that they would warrant the Admirals life: becauſe his arme, having loſt but little of its ſtrength, would ſoone be healed. This newes was brought to the King, who ſéemed to entertaine the ſame joyfully. The new maried wife came alſo to viſit the Admirall. But all this was but a lightening before death. For that night there was heard a great clattering of armour in the City, and many torches lighted every where, borne by many of the people. Some Gentlemen, whoſe lodgings were nigh to the Admirals, roſe, and went out, asking ſome of their acquaintance the reaſon why there were ſo many up in armes at that houre of the night: They anſwered; That the King much deſired to ſée a caſtle aſſayled and defended, deviſed onely in ſport to give him content. They paſſing yet further came to the Looure, where they likewiſe ſaw many torches lighted, and troups of armed men.

The guard there could no longer contain themſelves, but began to picke a quarrell with them; and as one of the ſaid Gentlemen was about to ſpeake, a Gaſcoine ſouldier ſtrucke at him with a Partizan, and then they fell upon the reſt. The noiſe hereof ſpreading, the Quéene Mother ſaid, ſéeing it is not poſſible to retain the fury of the ſouldiers any longer from breaking out, “Let the bell of the Church of S. German be touled, ſaid ſhe.

“ That was the watchword, as you would ſay, when the maſſacre was to begin. The marke or ſigne by which the murtherers were to be diſtinguiſhed from the reſt, was a white handkerchiefe knit about the left arm, and a white croſſe in their hats.

The Admirall comming to the knowledge of this uprore) though he had but few of his followers about him, was not much moved thereat; truſting (as he often uſed to ſay) upon the Kings favor, whereof hee had large experience. Alſo hee knew that when the Pariſians ſhould underſtand how much the king diſliked their folly, though they had an intention of doing him ſome miſchiefe, yet would they be quieted as ſoone as they ſaw Coſſeins and his guard,

This Coſſeins was appointed by the Duke of Anjou to defend the Admirals lodging, wherein the old Proverb was verified, That the Wolfe was ſet to keep the ſheep.

Proverb.

About breake of day, Auguſt the foure & twentieth, 1572. being ſaint Bartholomewes day, they began to knocke at the doore where the Admirall lay. La Bonne, who lay not farre from him, having the keyes, perceiving that there were ſome who came on a meſſage from the King to the Admirall, came downe quickly and opened the doore; preſently Coſſeins fell upon him and ſtabbed him with his dagger, ſo that he dyed. Then with his harquebuſiers ruſhing into the houſe, killing ſuch as they met, others fled. Cornaton awaking with the noiſe that hee heard at the doore (for he lay in the next Chamber by) ranne thither, cauſing the Switzers and other officers to fortifie it. Coſſeins hearing that cryed to him to open it in the Kings name, and he ſo handled the matter, that with the help he had, he forced the doore open, and after gained the ſtaires. The Admirall and thoſe that were with him, taking notice how they ſhot off piſtols and guns, finding themſelves incloſed in their enemies hands, fell to prayer, begging pardon of God for their ſins.

The Admirall riſing out of his bed, and putting on his night gowne, commanded Merlin the Miniſter to make the prayer. He alſo, calling earneſtly upon Jeſus Chriſt his God and Savior, commended his ſpirit into his hands. He that teſtified theſe things, and made report thereof, comming into the Chamber, and being asked by the Admirall what that tumult meant; ſir, ſaith hee, God is now ſummoning us to looke to our end. The admiral ſéeing what would be the iſſue, anſwered, I have long ſince expected death: ſave your ſelves if it be poſſible, for you cannot ſecure me; I commend my ſoule into the hands of the mercifull God. Thoſe who were preſent and eſcaped have affirmed, that the Admirall was no more affrighted at death, which he ſaw preſent before his eyes, than if there had béen no likelihood thereof at all.

The admirals Chriſtian and conſtant cariage of himſelfe in theſe broils

Forthwith every one in the Chamber getting up to the top of the houſe, and having found a window néere the roofe, ſaved themſelves there; but the greater part, who were beneath in the next roome to the Admirall were ſlaine, others miraculouſly eſcaped. In the meane while Coſſeins having made his way cauſed certaine Switzers of the D. of Anjous guard to enter into the houſe.

Beſine, Coſſeines, and Sarlabour, with their Targets in one hand, and their naked ſwords in the other, broke open the Admirals chamber doore, and Beſine (which was afterwards ſlain himſelfe by one Bertoville upon the way, after hee had eſcaped out of priſon) comming towards the Admirall, holding the point of his ſword to his breaſt, ſaid thus, Art not thou the Admirall? I am the man, ſaid hee, with an undaunted courage, as the murtherers afterwards confeſſed. Then beholding the naked ſword, Young man, ſaid the Admirall, thou oughteſt ſomewhat to reſpect my yeares, and my infirmity of body, but it is not thou that canſt ſhorten my dayes. Beſine deſperately thruſt the Admirall into the body with his ſword, and then ſmote him therewith on the head: the reſt had every one a blow at him; ſo as he preſently fell downe wounded to death.

The Admiral wounded to death.

Whilſt this miſchiefe was in acting, the Duke of Guiſe being below in the baſe Court, with other Romiſh Catholike Lords, cryed to the murtherer above, Beſine haſt thou done? It is done, ſaith he. Then the Duke replyed, Monſieur, our knight (meaning King Henries baſtard) will not beléeve it unleſſe he ſée it with his eyes; throw him downe out of the window.

Then Beſine and Sarlabour, lifting up the body of the Admirall, caſt him downe unto them, where he lay naked on the ground, expoſed to all ſort of ſcorne and mockes of the multitude, ſome trampling on him with their féet. Now becauſe the blow which Beſine had given the Admirall on his head, had ſo covered his face with bloud iſſuing thence, that his viſage could not be diſcerned, the Duke of Guiſe ſtooping downe tooke his handkerchiefe, and wiping his face therewith ſaid, It is he, I know him well enough; and giving this poore dead body a ſpurne on the head with his foot (whom all the murtherers in France feared whilſt he lived) he paſſed thence, encouraging his ſoldiers, ſaying, We have made a good beginning; now let us goe on to the reſt, for the King hath ſo commanded, the King hath ſo commanded, repeating it over twice.

An Italian of the Duke of Nevers guard cut off the Admirals head, and brought it to the King and Quéene Mother: which being embalmed was ſent to Rome to the Pope, and to the Cardinall of Lorrain, being there at that time. The common people on the Munday following cut off his hands and privy members, and then in this wofull plight being dragged up & downe thrée daies in the channels throughout the ſtréets, he was at the laſt carried out of the Citty to a gibbet in mount Faucon, where they hanged him by the féet; from whence ſome that were well diſpoſed, going together in the night to this gibbet, tooke downe the body of the Admirall; the which they interred ſo ſecretly, that doe the Papiſts what they could, they could never find it out, but it lay buried ſtill, ſo as they were faine to make a body of ſtraw, and hung that up in ſtead of the body it ſelf, rather than none at all.

¶ Here, as in fitteſt place is briefly related the ſentence which the Court of Parliament in Paris denounced againſt Gaſper Coligne Admirall of France, after hee was maſſacred as you have formerly heard, viz.

1 First, That for his conſpiracy practiſed againſt the King and the State in the yeare 1572, the ſaid Court hath condemned him of high treaſon.

2 That his memory ſhall bee utterly raſed out.

3 If his body or any figure thereof ſhall bee taken, that the ſame ſhall be firſt drawne upon a hurdle to the place called Le Grene, and there hanged upon a Gibbet by the Executioner.

4 After which, a Gibbet ſhall be ſet up at Mountfaucon, and he there to be hanged up in the moſt eminent place thereof.

5 His armes and armor to be drawne at an horſe taile through the ſtreets of the ſaid City of Paris, and other Cities where they ſhould bee found, and there by the Miniſter of Juſtice to be broken and battered in pieces, in ſigne of his perpetuall ignominy.

6 All his goods and poſſeſſions to be forfeited to the Kings uſe.

7 All his children to be pronounced ignoble, as alſo held unworthy and uncapable of any honor or dignities whatſoever.

8 His houſe and caſtle of Chaſtillon upon the Loin, with the baſe Court and all appurtenances thereunto appertaining, to be defaced and demoliſhed to the ground.

9 Then in the ſaid place this ſentence ſhall be ſet up engraven in braſſe.

10 Laſtly, that on the foure and twentieth of Auguſt, 1572, generall proceſſions be made throgh the City of Paris, by way of thankſgiving to God for this puniſhment inflicted upon the conſpirator.

Pronounced and executed in Paris, the ſeven and twentieth, and nine and twentieth of October, Anno 1572.

Great joy at Rome for theſe ſorrowfull events.

At Rome ſolemn maſſes were ſung, and thanks rendred to God for the good ſucceſſe which the Roman Catholiques had obtained in maſſacring the Huguenots. At night, in token of joy and gladnes, were made many great bonfires in ſundry places: And, as the report went, the Cardinal of Lorraine gave a thouſand Crownes to him that brought this deſired newes unto him. Touching whoſe death I will here inſert that which I finde written of it.

A note touching the manner of the Cardinall of Lorrains death.

The Cardinall of Lorraine, a principall pillar in the houſe of Guiſe, a crafty and cruell perſecutor of the reformed churches, ſoone after the raigne of Henry the third, brother of Charles the ninth, in the yeare 1574, died at Avignon frantique; at the houre of whoſe death there hapned ſuch a horrible tempeſt in the aire, that all ſtood amaſed at it. The people obſerving how it fell out in one of the chiefe Cities where Popery bare the ſway, thought it the more remarkable; not ſticking to ſay, that this wiſe worldling, who had enriched himſelfe beyond meaſure by execrable practiſes, received now in the prime of his youth, and in the top of his hopes, the juſt reward of all his wicked proceedings; it being not poſſible, that a ſoul ſo repleniſhed with iniquity could depart quietly.

But thoſe of the Religion added, That in this his ſo ſudden departure ſhined the wonderfull providence of God, in that one of the Popes great ſupporters, comming to Avignon with a purpoſe to arme the King of France and Polonia againſt the Chriſtian aſſemblies (out of a vaine confidence thinking, that at his onely word and threat the Prince would be perſwaded to overthrow all) it ſhould fall out ſo contrary to his expectation, that the maſter builder and upholder of violent and bloudy counſels muſt now in the middeſt of his triumphs come to ſo fearefull and miſerable an end: That he, who bent all his wits to croſſe the counſell and wiſedome of God, ſhould at an inſtant in this City be ſmitten with frenſie. To give warning to all, that there is no wiſedome or counſell againſt the Lord; who blaſteth the ripeſt wits when they dare to oppoſe him therewith. But now to returne againe to the matter where wee left.

The ſame day that the Admirall was hurt, the King adviſed the King of Navarre, his brother in law, to lodge in his chamber, with ten or twelve of his truſtieſt ſervants, to protect him from the deſignes of the Duke of Guiſe, whom he called an unhappy boy.

The Admirall as it ſeemeth ſomewhat before his death made his will, in which he gave the king counſell, that he ſhould not give his brethren over great portions. The Queen Mother hearing this, and reading the ſame to the Duke of Alencon the Kings brother; Now you ſee, ſaith ſhe, the heart of your friend the Admirall, whom you ſo much loved and reſpected.

The Duke anſwered, I know not how much he loved me, but I well perceive by this how much he loved the King.

The Admirall a loving and loyall ſervant to his Prince and Country.

The Engliſh Embaſſador made almoſt the like anſwer when the ſaid Queene told him, How the Admirall had adviſed the King not to truſt the Engliſh too farre.

Indeed Madam, ſaith he, hereby it appeared that though he bare but little good will to the Engliſh, yet he manifeſted himſelfe a loyall ſervant to the Crowne of France.

Brion governour to the Prince of Condes ſon maſſacred.

The Sieur de Brion, Governour of the little Marqueſſe Conde, ſonne to the late Prince of Conde, hearing theſe ſtirres, taking his little maſter even in his ſhirt, thinking to convey him ſomewhere out of the way, met theſe murtherers, who plucking from him the ſaid yong prince, maſſacred the old man in his preſence, whileſt the Prince with teares intreated them to ſpare his Governour. But they died his white haires in his owne bloud, and then barbarouſly dragged him through the mire.

Ten thouſand maſſacred within three daies in the City of Paris, &c.

This Sunday morning all that were popiſhly affected tooke liberty to kill and ſpoyle; it being credibly reported, That the number of the ſlaine that day and two other daies following, in the City of Paris, and in the Suburbs, did amount to above ten thouſand, counting Lords, Gentlemen, Preſidents, Counſellors, Advocates, Lawyers, Schollers, Phyſitians, Merchants, Tradeſmen, Women, Maids, and Children. The ſtreets were covered with dead bodies, the river was died with bloud, the gates and entrance into the Kings palace painted with the ſame colour: but the bloud-thirſty were not yet ſatisfied.

Anno 1569.

The pretence was this: Report was raiſed there that a treaſon of the Huguenots was diſcovered, who had conſpired to kill the King, his Mother, & his brethren, having already killed fifteene of the guard.

But going from houſe to houſe with their aſſociats where they thought to find any Huguenots, they brake open the dores, then cruelly murthered whomſoever they met, ſparing neither ſex nor age. Carts were laden with dead bodies of yong maidens, women, men and children, which were diſcharged into the river, covered in a maner all over with the ſlain, and dyed red with their bloud, which alſo ſtreamed down the ſtreets from ſundry parts thereof, whereat the Courtezans laughed their fill, ſaying, That the warres were now ended, and that hereafter they ſhould live in peace, &c. But it would take up too much time to recite all the lamentable paſſages of this ſo ſad and ruefull a tragedy.

¶ This with ſome others which follow, belonging to this Hiſtory, becauſe they could not bee omitted, are here under inſerted.

TO begin then with Monſieur Pierre de la Place Preſident of the Court of Requeſts, whoſe ſtory we will relate ſomewhat at large, becauſe his ſingular piety requires the ſame. On Sunday morning about ſix of the clock, one called Captaine Michael, harquebuſier of the king, came into his lodging, into which he had the more eaſie acceſſe for divers private reſpects.

This was a token by which the murtherers were diſtinguiſhed from others.

This Captaine being armed, having a harquebuſe on his ſhoulder, a piſtoll at his girdle, and his handkerchiefe tyed about his left arme, preſenting himſelf before the ſaid De la Place, the firſt words he ſpake were, that the Duke of Guiſe had ſlaine the Admirall by the Kings appointment, with many Huguenots beſides: and becauſe the reſt of them of what quality ſoever were deſtinated to death, he was come to his lodging to exempt him from the common deſtruction: onely he deſired to have a ſight of that gold and ſilver which was in the houſe. The Lord de la Place ſomwhat amaſed at the audacious malapartneſſe of the man, who, in the midſt of ten or twelve perſons which were there preſent in the roome, durſt preſume to utter ſuch language, askt him if he knew where he was, or whether he thought there was a King or no?

To this the Captaine blaſphemincluding anſwered, that he willed him to goe with him to know the kings pleaſure. The ſaid Lord de la Place hearing this, fearing alſo ſome danger to be towards, by ſedition in the City, ſlipped forth at a backe doore behind his lodging, purpoſing to get into a neighbors houſe. In the meane while moſt of his ſervants vaniſhed out of ſight, and this Captaine having ſtored himſelfe with a thouſand crowns, was intreated by the Lady Marets, daughter to the ſaid Lord, to convey her father with the Lord Marets her husband into the houſe of ſome Romane Catholike, which he conſented to doe, and alſo performed it.

After this, de la Place being refuſed at three ſeverall houſes was conſtrained to retire backe againe into his own, where he found his wife very penſive and grieved beyond meaſure, fearing leſt this Captaine in the end would caſt her ſonne in law and daughter into the river, as alſo for the imminent danger wherein her deare husband and all his family were.

But the ſaid Lord de la Place, being ſtrengthened by the ſpirit of God with incredible conſtancy in the inner man, ſharply rebuked her; and afterwards mildely demonſtrated unto her, that we muſt receive theſe and the like afflictions from the hand of God; and ſo having diſcourſed a while upon the promiſes of God comforted her.

Then he commanded ſuch ſervants and maids as remained in the houſe to be called together; who being come into his Chamber, according to his cuſtome on the Lords dayes, he made a forme of exhortation to his family: then went to prayer, and began to read a Chapter out of the booke of Job, with the expoſition or ſermon of Maſter John Calvin upon it. So having ſpoken ſomewhat of Gods mercy and juſtice, which as a good and wiſe father uſeth to exerciſe his elect with ſundry chaſtiſements, leſt they ſhould bee intangled here below with the things of this World, he ſhewed how needfull afflictions were for Chriſtians, and that it was beyond the power of Satan or men to hurt or wrong them, unleſſe the Lord of his good pleaſure gave them leave. What need have we then, ſaid he, to dread their authority, which at the moſt can but prevaile over our bodies? Then he went to prayer againe, preparing himſelfe and his whole family rather to endure all ſorts of torments, yea death it ſelfe, than to ſpeake or doe ought that might tend to the diſhonour of God.

Having finiſhed his prayer, word was brought him, that Senecay the Provoſt Marſhall with many archers were at the doore of his lodging, commanding the ſame to be opened in the Kings name, ſaying that he came to ſecure the perſon of the Lord de la Place, and to preſerve his houſe from being pillaged by the common ſort. The Lord de la Place having intelligence of this ſpeech commanded the doore to be opened to him, who entring in declared the great ſlaughter that was made upon the Huguenots every where in the city by the Kings command; adding this withall in Latine, that he would not ſuffer one to live, Qui mingat ad Parietem. Yet have I expreſſe charge from his Majeſty, ſaith he, to ſee that you ſhall ſuſtaine no wrong, but only conduct you to the Louvre, becauſe the King is deſirous to be informed touching many things about the affairs of thoſe of the Religion, which he hath now in hand, and therfore willed him to make himſelf ready to goe to his Majeſty. The Lord de la Place anſwered, That he alwaies thought himſelfe happy before he left this life, to gaine any opportunity by which hee might render an account to his Majeſty of his behaviour and actions.

But in regard ſuch horrible Maſſacres were every where committed, it was impoſſible for him to paſſe to the Louvre, without the certaine danger of his perſon; praying him to aſſure his Majeſty of his willingneſſe to come, the whileſt leaving in his lodging as many Archers as hee thought fitting, untill the fury of the people was ſomewhat pacified. The Provoſt agreed to his requeſt, and left with him one of his Lieutenants called Toute Voye, with ſome foure of his archers.

Not long after comes into his lodging Preſident Charron, then provoſt of the merchants, with whom conferring a little in ſecret, going his way he left with the foure archers which were there before, foure more of the city archers. The whole night following was ſpent in ſtopping up and fortifying of all paſſages from entring the houſe, with logs and proviſion of Flint-ſtones, damming up the windowes, ſo as it ſeemed by this ſo exact and diligent a defence, the archers were left in the houſe, to free the ſaid de la Place and all his family from the common calamity, till Senecay, returning the next day after two of the clocke in the afternoone, declared that hee had expreſſe charge from the King to bring him to his Majeſty without delay. Hee replyed as before, that it was dangerous as yet to paſſe through the City, in regard that even the ſame morning there was an houſe pillaged next to his.

Anno 1572.

Seneca on the contrary inſiſted, ſaying, it was the common ſpeech of theſe Huguenotes to proteſt that they were the Kings moſt loyall and obedient ſubjects and ſervants; but when they were to manifeſt their obedience to his commands, then they came off but ſlowly, ſeeming rather much to abhor and deteſt it. And wheras he pretended danger, Seneca anſwered, that he ſhould have a Captain of Paris who was well known to the people, to accompany him. As Seneca cōtinued this ſpeech, the Captaine of Paris ſurnamed Pazon, a principall actor in this ſedition, entred the chamber of the ſaid Lord of Place, offering his ſervice to conduct him through the city to the King; which De la Place would by no means yeeld unto, telling Seneca, that he was one of the moſt cruell & bloudy minded men that was in all the City; and therefore ſeeing he muſt needs goe to the King, he intreated that the ſaid Seneca would be his guard. To whom Seneca anſwered, that having now other affaires to looke unto, he could not conduct him above fifty paces.

Then his wife (though otherwiſe a very gracious and good Lady) out of that entire love which ſhe bare to her husband, proſtrated her ſelfe at the feet of the ſaid Seneca, beſeeching and intreating him to accompany her husband to the King. But the ſaid De la place, who never ſhewed any ſigne of a dejected ſpirit, came to his wife, tooke her up from the ground, rebuked her, and told her, that it is not the arme of fleſh that we muſt ſtoupe unto, but unto God onely. Then turning himſelfe about, he perceived in his ſonnes hat a white croſſe, which through infirmity he had placed there, thinking thereby to ſave himſelfe, for which his father ſharply chid him, commanding him to plucke that marke of ſedition thence; telling him that we muſt now ſubmit our ſelves to beare the true croſſe of Chriſt, namely, thoſe afflictions and tribulations which it ſhall pleaſe our good God to lay upon us, as ſure pledges of that eternall happineſſe, which he hath treaſured up for all his elect ſervants. Thus ſeeing himſelfe preſſed by the ſaid Seneca, to goe with him to the King, reſolving upon death, which hee ſaw he could not avoid, he tooke his cloake, embracing his wife, earneſtly wiſhing her above all things to have the feare of God and his honor in precious eſteeme, and then went on his way boldly. Comming into the ſtreet where the glaſſe-houſe is, over againſt Cocks ſtreet, certain murtherers who attended there for his comming, with their daggers in a readineſſe, killed him, about three of the clocke in the afternoon, as an innocent lambe in the midſt of ten or twelve of Senecas Archers, who led him into that butchery: and then pillaged and embezeled away what they found in his lodging for the ſpace of five or ſix daies together. His body (whoſe ſoule was now received into heaven) being carried into a ſtable, and covering his face over with dung, the next day they threw him into the river.

De la Place addreſſeth himſelfe to go to the King.

He is firſt murthered, & then throwen into the river.

Peter Ramus maſſacred and afterwards diſgracefully handled.

Peter Ramus the Kings profeſſor in Logicke, a man renowned among the learned, was not forgotten. He had many enemies; among other, one called James Carpenter, who ſent the murtherers to the Colledge of Prieſts, where the ſaid Ramus was hidden. But being diſcovered, hee offered a good ſumme of money to ſave his life; yet was he maſſacred, and caſt downe out of an high Chamber window to the ground, ſo as his bowels iſſuing out of the ſtones, were afterwards trailed through the ſtreets; the carkaſſe was whipped by certaine ſchollers, being ſet on by their tutors, to the great diſgrace of good letters which Ramus profeſſed.

I doe here, ſaith the Hiſtorian, forbeare to write what cruelties were exerciſed in this foreſaid City of Paris, on Sunday, Munday, Tueſday, and the daies following; becauſe in ſuch confuſions, thoſe that ſurvived had little leaſure to think upon the murthers committed in their preſence, to obſerve every particular; I content my ſelfe therfore to ſay in a word, that no man living in Paris, taking notice what was done there this Saint Bartholomewes day, &c. but will averre that there was never ſeen, heard nor read of, ſuch perfidious diſloyalties, ſtrange raviſhments, more then brutiſh cruelties, audacious robberies, execrable blaſphemies, as thoſe that were committed in theſe few dayes; wherein it was ſafe for one to be any thing, rather then an honeſt man.

A Young man about the age of two and thirty yeares, a ſincere Chriſtian, and excellently well learned above many of his age and time, going early abroad this Sunday morning upon ſome ſpeciall occaſion, returning home, and perceiving what a ſtrange rumor there was concerning the death of the Admirall throughout the City of Paris, he out of his ſingular and childelike affection to his Mother, haſtened to her with all poſſible ſpeed, informing her what had happened, and ſo wrought for her, without delay, not regarding his owne ſafety, thet he ſecured her in a place, as you would ſay, fitted for the purpoſe. After which himſelfe being found alone ſhut up in his ſtudy at prayer, to which exerciſe he had long before devoted himſelfe; The furious Maſſacrers on that part of the City asked him if hee would obey the King, he anſwered, yes, but I muſt alſo obey God.

Then they began preſently with battle axes and ſtaves to load him with blowes on the head, that he received his owne bloud into his hands; and then making an end of him, they threw him into the river.

¶ Two Miniſters maſſacred.

TWo Miniſters appertaining to the King of Navarre, the one called More, the other Deſgoris, fell alſo into the hand of theſe murtherers, who killing them, caſt them into the water. I cannot learne, ſaith the hiſtoriographer, by report, that any moe Miniſters were ſlaine at this time, then theſe two. At the writing hereof many were living, who laboured in the worke of the Lord, in the Church of Paris, and were alſo miraculouſly preſerved.

¶ An inhumane Cruelty.

PHilip le Doux a great Jeweller, at his returne home from Guybray faire, being gone to bed, his wife at that time had the midwife attending upon her, being ready to be delivered: ſhee hearing theſe furies below bouncing at the doore, commanding it to bee opened to them in the Kings name, as ill as ſhe was, adventured to goe downe, and opened the ſame to theſe tygers, who preſently ſtabbed her husband in his bed. The midwife ſeeing them bent to murther the woman alſo, now ready to lie downe, inſtantly intreated them to tarry, at leaſt ſo long till the infant (which would be the 20. Childe that God had given her) was borne. Having conteſted ſome while with them, they tooke this poore woman halfe dead with feare, and thruſt her into the fundament with a dagger to the very hilts. She finding her ſelfe mortally wounded, and yet deſirous to bring forth her fruit, fled into a corne-loft; whither they purſued her, giving her another ſtabbe into the belly with a dagger, and then caſt her out of a window next to the ſtreete; upon which fall the childe came forth of her body, the head formoſt, gaping or yawning, to the great aſtoniſhment and confuſion of the Papiſts, who were conſtrained often with deteſtation to acknowledge and confeſſe the cruelties of their butchers.

What iron heart would not have been moved to compaſſion herewith.

ONE of the Maſſacrers having ſnatched up a little childe in his armes, the poore babe began to play with his beard, and to ſmile upon him; but in ſtead of being moved to compaſſion therewith, this barbarous wretch wounded it with his dagger, and ſo caſt it all on a gore blood into the river, ſo as it was a good while ere it could recover the own colour againe.

To proceed on further and fully to relate all the tragicall acts committed in this Maſſacre at Paris, to ſet downe the thundrings of Guns and Piſtols, the lamentable voices and outcries of the ſlaine, the roarings and horrible blaſphemies belched forth by theſe Maſſacrers and devils incarnate, were enough to cauſe the Paper whereon they ſhould be deſcribed either to bluſh, or weepe.

Not to ſtay the Reader therefore any longer in this, having many things of the like nature to preſent unto thy view, we will paſſe from the dolorous City of Paris to other cities in France, and ſet before thee as in a glaſſe a company of horrible and rufull ſpectacles.

¶ Maſſacres committed upon thoſe of the Religion, at Meaux in Brie.

LEt us begin then with thoſe of Meaux in Brie, which is not above a daies journey from Paris.

There was a roule drawne where the maſſacre ſhould begin, continue, and end.

The poore Proteſtants in this City were deſtinated to drinke of this cup of Martyrdome after their brethren and ſiſters in the aforeſaid City of Paris. Therefore on the ſame Sunday the foure and twentieth of Auguſt, about foure of the clocke in the afternoon, a poſt was ſent to Meaux with letters, accompanied with a ſeditious fellow called le Froid. Being come thither, the Packet was preſented to Monſieur Lovis Coſſet, the Kings Atturney there. Upon the receit whereof, this Atturny haſted hither and thither in his own perſon to advertiſe ſuch cut-throats (as had had their hands in the pillaging and robbing thoſe of the religion in the firſt, ſecond, and third troubles) with command, that they ſhould be ready to come forth of their houſes armed, at the ſtroke of ſeven of the clock, and then cauſe the gates inſtantly to be ſhut.

This Coſſet was then branded for notorious villanies, and a miſhapen fellow.

The time prefixed being come, which was about ſupper time, the gates were ſhut, and then they began to execute their cruelties in ſundry parts of the City. Thus was that night paſſed, not without uprores and ſtrange events.

On the next day, which was Munday, about three of the clocke in the morning, theſe good Catholikes began to pillage the houſes of the Proteſtants, of the beſt things they had, which continued till eight of the clocke, their trading liked them ſo well. But the principall of all the ſpoiles were conveyed into the Court and houſe of this noble Atturney Coſſet; yet theſe were only the beginnings of ſorrows.

For after robbing and ſpoiling they fell to ſhut them up in priſons: which being filled, the maſſacrers having Coſſet for their Captaine (who uſually carried in each hand a Piſtoll ready to diſcharge) went into the ſaid priſon on Tueſday the ſix and twentieth of Auguſt, about five or ſix of the clock at night, with ſwords, daggers, and butchers knives.

Nigh to this priſon there was a great Court, encloſed on every ſide with walls and a very ſtrong Gate. In a corner whereof is a large paire of winding ſtaires, containing five and twenty, or thirty ſteppes, by which they goe up to the Judgement Hall to the Seat of Juſtice. Into this Court were the murderers aſſembled; which done, Coſſet went up into his ſeat. Then they had a ſcroule or bill containing the names of the priſoners there impriſoned, who were called over one by one to the number of two hundred and upwards, as ſome of the murderers themſelves have ſince reported, when as they impudently made their brags of theſe their horrible impieties and injuſtices.

Then the Atturney laughing began to call for the firſt man named in the bill; who being brought forth, and ſeeing naked ſwords before him, falling downe and craving forgiveneſſe of his ſins at the hands of God, was ſuddenly butchered by five or ſixe.

One Quintin Croyer, an Elder of the reformed Church, being called forth, and ſeeing many of his companions maſſacred before his eyes, kneeled downe, praying God to pardon theſe murderers; at which prayer they fell a laughing, and not being able with their daggers to pierce a Jerkin of double Buffe which he ware, and which they were loth to ſpoile, (for it was a good booty) they cut aſunder the points, and then gave him five or ſix ſtabs with a dagger into his body; and ſo this good man wounded to death, calling upon God, rendered up his ſpirit into the hands of him that gave it.

Faron Haren, a man zealouſly affected to religion, who had been Sheriffe of the City in the firſt troubles, having by his endeavours chaſed the Maſſe out of Meaux, for a time was mortally hated of theſe ſeditious Papiſts; and therefore they were not contented ſimply to kill him, but firſt cut off his noſe, eares, and ſecret parts, then giving him many ſmall thruſts into divers parts of the body, they conſtrained him to and fro among them, as if he had gone thorow the pikes. But being weakened, and not able any longer to hold out, in regard of the blood that iſſued from all the parts of his body, he fell with his face to the ground, and inſtantly calling upon the name of the Lord, received infinite gaſhes and wounds after he was dead.

By this time it grew late; therefore theſe bloodſuckers, having almoſt wearied themſelves in worrying theſe poore lambes and ſheep of Chriſt, deferred the execution of the reſt till after ſupper, as well to take ſome breathing and refection, as alſo to murther the reſidue with the greater alacrity. For in as much as the blood of the ſlaine ſhined yet upon the ſwords and armes of the murtherers (their ſleeves being tucked up) which ſomething hindered their proceeding; after they had drunke wine their fill, they meant to returne and make themſelves drunke with blood alſo; which that they might ſhed the more freely, they tooke with them Butchers great axes wherewith they ſmite downe their Oxen, and in the preſence of this honeſt Atturney felled theſe poore priſoners one after another; who called upon God and cry ing ſo loud for mercy, that all the City in a manner rung thereof. This maſſacre laſted from nine of the Clock at night till it was midnight. And for as much as there yet remained many priſoners alive, they deferred this their bloody buſineſſe till the next day.

☞ But this may ſuffice to have been ſaid as touching this maſſacre at Meaux in Brie; paſſe wee on now to the City of Troys in Champaigne, and there take notice, as it were by the way, what cruelties were executed in that place.

¶ Perſecution of the Faithfull at Troys in Champaigne.

NEwes comming to Troys of the Maſſacre executed at Paris, the greater part of the Judges and Officers of the King were ſent to the Bailiffe of Troys, with commandement diligently to make ſearch for all thoſe of the Religion, from houſe to houſe, and to impriſon as many as they could meet withall.

In this city there was a Merchant called Peter Belin, a man of a turbulent nature. This Belin was at the maſſacre in Paris on S. Bartholomews day; from whence he was ſent with Letters from the King dated the eight and twentieth of Auguſt, to the Maior and Sheriffes of Troys, to cauſe all theſe perſecutions to ceaſe, and the priſoners to be ſet at liberty. On the third of September he came to Troys with theſe two letters (which had been firſt publiſhed in Paris) with commandement to deliver them to the foreſaid Magiſtrates to be proclaimed there alſo.

But at the firſt entrance into the City, he began to enquire, that all might heare him, whether they had not executed the Huguenots there as they had done in Paris; which was his language thorow the ſtreets till he came home. But even ſome of the Papiſts, who were not ſo cruelly minded, demanded of Belin the contents of the K. letters, whereof they had ſome inkling before. But he, like a Bedlam ſwelling with choler, ſware that whoſoever ſaid they contained any thing tending to pacification, lyed. Haſtning therefore to the Bailiffes houſe at Troys, after he had delivered him the packet, and buzzed ſomewhat in his eare, he put him on to ſee this execution done. Now that the ſame might paſſe the better for currant, the help of the Executioner of Troys was requeſted, whoſe name was Charles.

Yet he ſhewing himſelf more juſt and humane than the reſt, peremptorily refuſed to have his hand in an act tending to ſo great cruelty; anſwering, that it was contrary to his office to execute any man before ſentence of death had firſt been pronounced by the Magiſtrate. If they had ſuch ſentence to ſhew againſt any of the priſoners, he was ready to doe juſtice; otherwiſe he would not preſume, without a warrant, to bereave any man of his life: and ſo with theſe words he returned home to his houſe.

Now albeit this anſwer, proceeding from ſuch a kinde of perſon whoſe office and cuſtome it was to ſhed blood, might ſomewhat have aſſwaged and taken off the edge of the moſt barbarous Tyger in the world; yet the Bailiffe ſleighting it, was the further enraged. Upon this he ſent for one of the Jaylors of the priſon who kept thoſe of the religion; but he being ſicke of a Tertian Ague, Martin de Bures was ſent to know his pleaſure.

The Bailiffe telling him at large what Belin had ſignified to him in private; as alſo, that on a ſudden all the priſoners of the Religion muſt bee put to death, that ſo the place might be purged of them: This (he ſaid) you muſt not faile to doe. But (ſaid the Bailiffe) that the blood may not run into the ſtreets, you ſhall cauſe a trench to be digged in the middeſt of the priſon, and at the two ends thereof ſet certaine veſſels to receive the ſame.

But this de Bures for ſome conſiderations, as namely thinking the Kings Letters (whereof he had had ſome intelligence) might be proclaimed, made no haſt to performe his charge, acquainting no man with ought that had paſſed betweene the Bailiffe and him; no not Perennet the Keeper, who then lay ſick in his bed.

The next day, being Tueſday, which was the fourth of September, the Bailiffe came into the priſon about ſeven or eight of the Clock, and calling for Perennet asked of him with a ſmile, Perennet, is it done? Perennet, knowing nothing either more or leſſe, asked of him what? Then ſaith the Bailiffe, Why, are not the Priſoners diſpatched? and thereupon was ready with his dagger to have ſtabbed him. But comming a little better to himſelfe, he told Perennet what his purpoſe was, and how he was to behave himſelfe concerning the execution thereof; willing him by all meanes not to forget to make the ſaid Trench. At which words this Perennet ſtanding amaſed, though otherwiſe he was a fellow forward enough of himſelfe to commit any outrages againſt the Proteſtants, certified the Bailiffe, that ſuch an inhumane act could not be committed over to him, fearing leſt in time to come Juſtice might be followed againſt him by the Parents or Allyes of the Priſoners. No no, ſaid the Bailiffe, feare not, I will ſtand betweene you and all harmes. Others of the Juſtices have conſented thereto beſides my ſelfe, and would you have better ſecurity than that?

Within a while after, the Jaylor comming into the court of the priſon, where the priſoners were abroad recreating themſelves, cauſed every one to reſort to his cabbin or hole, becauſe, ſaid he, the Bailiffe will come by and by, to ſee whether the Keepers have done as he commanded them: which they did. Then began theſe poore ſheep to feare they were deſtinated to the ſlaughter, and therefore went preſently to prayer. Perennet inſtantly called his companions about him, reporting to them what the Bailiffe had given him in charge. Then they all tooke an oath to execute the ſame; but approaching nigh to the Priſoners, they were ſo ſurpriſed with feare, and their hearts ſo failed them, that they ſtood gaſing one upon another, having no courage to act ſuch a barbarous cruelty: and ſo returned to the Jaylors lodge, whence they came, without doing any thing.

But in ſtead of laying this to heart, as an advertiſement and warning piece ſent them from above; as if of ſet purpoſe they meant to reſiſt againſt the checks of their owne conſciences, and ſo kick againſt the prickes, they ſent to the Taverne for ſixteene pints of the beſt wine, Troys meaſure, with ſheepes tongues, and other viands, and intoxicating their braines with wine, they drew a liſt or Catalogue of all the priſoners; which they delivered to Nicholas Martin, one of their Confederates, who was to call them forth as he ſaw their names ſet downe in the ſcroule; and thus as they came forth they maſſacred them.

Ludot one of the priſoners, being called forth as his turne came, preſented himſelfe before them with a cheerefull countenance, calling upon the name of the Lord. Now as he was to receive the ſtroke of death from theſe deſperate blood-ſpillers, he prayed them to forbeare him a little, till he had put off his doublet, being oiletted, which he was wont to put on when any tumult grew in the City: and having himſelfe unlaced it, preſenting his naked breaſt unto them, he received the blow, and fell downe dead.

But poore Meurs eſcaped not ſo good cheape; for his turne being come, he was no ſooner in their ſight, but one of them let drive at him with the point of his Halbert, redoubling the ſame oft to have killed him, yet could not. The poore man ſeeing himſelfe thus dealt withall by the Caitiffe, and no end made, tooke hold with his hands on the point of the halbert, and himſelfe pointing him to the ſeat of the heart, cryed to the murderer with a ſtedfaſt voice, Here, ſouldier, here, right at the heart, right at the heart, and ſo finiſhed this life.

Howſoever in this maſſacre theſe two formerly mentioned are for brevities ſake only named, yet by that which immediatly followes you may perceive they were not a few who ſuffered in this tragedy.

The Maſſacre (ſaith my Author) being ended, the murtherers made a great pit on the back ſide of the Chappell of the priſon, whereinto they caſt the bodies one upon another, ſome of them yet breathing. So as one called Maufere lying in the midſt of them, was eſpied to raiſe up himſelfe above his fellow Martyrs in this pit, upon whom they forthwith throwing earth (as was reported) ſtifled him, being but halfe dead. But becauſe the order which the Bailiffe ſet downe was not obſerved, namely the making of a trench in the priſon to receive the blood which was ſhed, it ran in ſuch abundance out at the priſon doore, and thence through a channell into a river nigh thereto, that it was turned into the colour of blood. Which ſome of the Papiſts themſelves taking notice of, being ignorant of the fact, were ſo terrified therewith, that they ran along the ſtreet, crying and pointing at every one they met withall to behold this horrible and lamentable a ſpectacle. Whereupon many haſting to the priſon by this occaſion, could conjecture no other but that the priſoners had ſlaine one another.

This was preſently noiſed through the City, inſomuch as ſome went to informe the lieutenant and bailiffe thereof. But what? it was as if they had run to the Wolves to tell them the Sheepe were devoured.

Whileſt this ſo ſavage a cruelty was committed in the priſon, one Bartholmew Carlet a Cooper, priſoner there for debt (who of all the troupe of murtherers in Troys was one of the principall) having in the former troubles exerciſed moſt notorious cruelties againſt thoſe of the Religion, was called in by theſe maſſacrers to be one of their aſſociates; who executed his part in ſo bloody a manner, that (as himſelfe afterwards often acknowledged) he with his owne hands ſlaughtered thirty of theſe poore innocents: So far was he growne paſt ſhame or common honeſty. But this his fact was ſo pleaſing to certaine of the Popiſh Religion at Troys, that for a recompence thereof they payed his debt, and ſet him free out of priſon; which was done (as the report went) by making a collection for him in certaine Pariſhes.

The next day after, which was the fifth of September, this worſhipfull Bailiffe of Troys, that he might apply the plaiſter when the parties were dead, cauſes the Kings Letters, which he had received the thirtieth of the moneth of Auguſt before going, to be publiſhed in all the corners of the City with ſound of Trumpet. The Bailiffe (as we have been credibly informed) was preſent in perſon at the publication, and as the Notary read the contents thereof to him, he pronounced the ſame jeeringly, and not with a full and audible voice, as matters of ſuch conſequence ought to be read.

¶ Of the maſſacre at Orleance.

IT now remaines that we proceed unto the City of Orleance, and to take notice whether the papiſts there were leſſe cruell than thoſe of Paris. But, ſaith the Hiſtorian, when I call to mind what hath been the report of thoſe that were preſent at that time in Orleance, it cauſeth the haire to ſtand upright on my head. Yet for as much as it is convenient that poſterities to come may be acquainted with the fury of theſe monſters in nature, we will commit that to writing whereof we have credibly been informed.

On Saturday, the three and twentieth of Auguſt, Letters were ſent from the King to Orleance, unto Sieur de la Renic Preſident of Dijon, to prevent all diſorders, murthers, &c. With command, that he ſhould advertiſe the Citizens, how the Admirall was hurt, as alſo to aſſure thoſe of the religion, that ere long ſuch juſtice ſhould be executed on the actors, as all France ſhould take warning thereby not to enterpriſe the like.

This was carefully performed by the ſaid Sieur de la Renic the ſame day; who cauſed thoſe of the beſt rank of both religions to be preſent at the publiſhing of the Kings minde. The faithfull thinking themſelves ſecure, were quiet, and on the Sabbath day aſſembled in the place appointed for their meeting, to the number of 300. perſons, men, women, and children.

But on the ſame day towards night came a new order to the Juſtices, Maior, and Sheriffes of the ſaid City, by which they were injoyned to be up in armes, and to gather to them what ſtrength they could; with expreſſe charge to make havock of thoſe of the Religion. To this purpoſe the Captaines of twelve companies were appointed to be the leaders to the reſt, divided into eight and forty ſquadrons.

¶ The cruell maſſacre of Dechampeaux a worthy Counſellor in the City of Orleance, by a wretched Villaine his neighbour.

ONe of theſe blood-ſuckers called Texier came with a ſmall troupe to a Counſellors houſe of Orleance, whoſe name was Dechampeaux Lord of Bonilli, bidding himſelfe and his company to ſupper with him. Dechampeaux bid them all kindly welcome, making them good cheere, being ignorant of that which had hapned at Paris. But ſupper being ended, and all of them being riſen from the table, Texier bad him deliver his purſe. Dechampeaux laughing thereat, thinking that he had been but in jeſt, this cruell and unthankfull gueſt with blaſphemous oathes told in few words what had hapned in the City of Paris, and what preparation there was among the Romane Catholiques of Orleance, to cut off and root out the Proteſtants there. Dechampeaux ſeeing there was no time now to conteſt with him, gave mony to this theefe: who, to requite the curteſie and good entertainment he had had, embrued his honds in the blood of his hoſt and neighbour, a man of as good and upright a carriage as was in all the City, and afterwards himſelfe with his troupe pillaged the whole houſe.

A cruell and unthankfull gueſt.

The ſix and twentieth day of Auguſt following the maſſacrers began the execution about the ramparts, after ſuch a ſtrange manner, as hee that had but a ſparke of humanity left in him, out of

of compaſſion would be moved to abhorre and deteſt it. In theſe quarters there inhabited many of the Religion. All the night long was heard nothing but ſhooting off of Guns and Piſtols, forcing open of doores and windows, fearefull outcryes of the maſſacred, both of men, women, and little children, trampling of horſes, and rumbling of carts, hurrying of dead bodies to and fro; the ſtreete ſwarming with unwonted exclamations of thoſe of the common ſort, with horrible blaſphemies of the murderers, laughing their fill at their furious exploits; Some crying kill them all, and then take the ſpoile; others, ſpoile not, but kill all.

So all muſt goe to wrack.

On Wedneſday the maſſacre began more fiercely, and ſo continued to the end of the weeke, not ſparing to breake theſe and the like jeſts upon the poore maſſacred: Where is now your God? What is become of all your prayers, and Pſalmes now? Let your God, whom you called upon, ſave you if he can. Yea ſome of them, who in times paſt had been profeſſors of the ſame Religion, whileſt they were maſſacring the poore innocents; durſt ſing unto them in ſcorne the beginning of the three and fortieth pſalm: Which in the French meeter runs, Revenge moy pren le quarrelle de moy, Iudge me O God, and plead my cauſe. Others ſtriking them ſaid, ſing now, Miſerecorde aupaure vicieux, Have mercy on me O God, which language they uſed to this poore people in Paris, and elſewhere. But theſe execrable outrages no way daunted the courage of the faithfull from dying ſtedfaſt in the faith.

Theſe were miſerable characters.

Touching the multitude of the ſlaine, the murtherers did not ſticke to vaunt that in this City they cauſed more than twelve thouſand men to periſh: Alſo an hundred and fifty women, with a great number of Children of nine yeare old and upward. But as ſome of themſelves have ſince reported, there were eighteen thouſand murdered, beſides women and children. The manner of their death was, firſt to ſhoot them with Piſtols, then to ſtrip them of their clothes, and either drowning or elſe burying the dead bodies in pits, namely ſuch as dwelt about the wals. They were armed alſo with knives and ponyards: in like manner with Javelins and partizans, wherewith they murdered theſe poore, meeke, and harmleſſe creatures.

On Tueſday at night certaine of this bloody crue came and knocked at the doore of one that was a Doctor of the Civill Law, called Taillebous; who opening a Caſement, and underſtanding that they had ſomewhat to ſay to him, came downe immediatly, and opened the ſame unto them. At the firſt greeting they told him he muſt die. Whereupon he fell to prayer, and that with ſuch conſtancy and affection, that the maſſacrers being aſtoniſhed, and by a ſecret celeſtiall power reſtrained, contented themſelves onely with taking his purſe, in which there were fifteen Crownes, and ſo left him, offering him no more violence.

The force of fervent prayer

The day following certaine Schollers reſorting to his lodging, requeſted of him that they might ſee his Library, into which having brought them, one asked this booke of him, and another another, the which he willingly gave them. At length they told him they were not as yet ſatisfied, their purpoſe being to kill him. He proſtrating himſelfe upon the ground, and having ended his prayer, willed them to kill him there. But they forced him out of his owne houſe, whence he went on with an undaunted courage, till in the way he lighted on the body of a certain Shoomaker, newly wounded, lying gaſping for breath. At which ſight ſtarting back as one ſomewhat appaled, he prayed them to kill him there; yet they would not, but conſtrained him to paſſe on forward. Being come to the Schooles of the Civill Law, at leaſt, ſaid he, let me die before this place, where I have taught ſo long. But they furiouſly repulſing him, more than before, made him goe further with them, where at length they knocked him downe.

A rich Burgeſſe of the City called Nicholas Bougars Sieur de Nove, a man of ſingular worth, and highly eſteemed of all, was at that time deadly ſick. Some of the murtherers came into his Chamber with a purpoſe to kill him; but ſeeing him in that caſe ſpared him: yet finding there Noel Chaperon, an Apothecary who brought him Phyſick, they cut off one of his armes, then drew him into the open market place, where they made an end of him.

The next day there came one to the lodging of him that was ſick, who was wont heretofore to viſit him. Now as he was entring in, he met the mother of the ſick party at the doore going unto Maſſe, and comming up into the Chamber he ſtabbed the ſaid ſick man with a dagger in many places, and ſo killed a dying man. Then with all ſilence, as if he had done no ſuch act, wiping his dagger, he went down the ſtaires again, and meeting one at the doore who came to viſit him that was ſick, this fellow ſaluting him paſſed along by him, without any change either in his behaviour or countenance.

A Cooke, having hid himſelf three whole daies, was inforced for hunger to come forth, for lack of meat. But whileſt he went about to eſcape one death, he fell into the talents of theſe Lions, who devoured him, and that forthwith.

Francis Stample a rich Merchant was threatened to have his throat cut preſently, if he gave not the murderers money: but having none about him, being taken by them out of his houſe, calling for pen and inke he wrote a letter to his wife, willing her forthwith to ſend him his ranſome: he had no ſooner ſealed the letter, but the murderers deprived him thereof and his life together, laughing at that they had done. And though they got from his widdow a round ſumme of money, yet could ſhe not obtaine at their hands the body of her dead husband.

But to fill up the meaſure of the popelings cruelty, that thoſe of the religion might taſte thereof to the utmoſt, the Papiſts were not content to be maſſacrers themſelves, but conſtrained ſuch of the Proteſtants as through feare had revolted, to play the murderers alſo. Thus placing theſe wicked revolters into the forefront of their companies, and arming them with weapons fit for the purpoſe, they preſſed them to march on before, and to give the firſt onſet, crying to them, Smite them, ſmite them; are they not of your brethren and holy ſiſters? And if they refuſed to doe as they were commanded, their turnes were like to be next.

¶ The Maſſacres committed at Bourges and la Chanite, are the rather paſſed over in ſilence, because the hiſtory requires at this time to touch only upon ſuch things as are moſt remarkable, and ſhall after follow.

YEt one thing ought not to be forgotten which fell out in the City laſt mentioned. There was one John Sarrazin of the age of ſeventy yeares and above, who for a long time had exerciſed the office of a Deacon in the reformed Church; the which he ſo faithfully performed, that he was eſteemed a father of the poore. This good old father was ſet upon on Tueſday night in his owne houſe the fourth of September, 1572. and laid at with ſwords by theſe furious murtherers: who with a venerable and ſmiling countenance looking upon them, ſaid, my friends, what will ye doe with me? have I ever offended any of you? And if I have, let him ſpeake. But nothing could any whit prevaile with theſe ſavage monſters to mollifie their ſtony hearts. For with a more then brutiſh rage they fell upon this gray head and poore withered carkaſſe, who to fence off the blowes crept under his bed, where one of theſe rakehels, his next neighbour and Godſon, gave him ſuch a thruſt in with his ſword into the belly, that his bowels iſſued out.

The poore man ſeeing himſelfe thus wounded, and perceiving who had done it, ſaid, Ah Godſon, doe you uſe me thus? I never hurt you, but have done you good. He languiſhed of this hurt two daies & two nights: during which time, as we have learned from his wife, who gave her attendance on him all the while, he ceaſed not with great zeale to call upon God, thinking himſelfe happy to have ſuffered that outrage for his name, and ſo not long after yeelded up his ſpirit, into the hands of God that gave it.

¶ The horrible Maſſacre of the faithfull at Lyons in France.

ON Wedneſday the ſeven and twentieth of Auguſt in the yeare 1572. about ſixe of the clocke in the morning, Sieur Mandolet governour of Lyons was advertiſed of the Maſſacre at Paris; and within an houre and an halfe after, a ſouldier paſſing through the ſtreets made it knowne to the people, that the Admirall, and all the Proteſtant Princes were ſlain. By and by the gates of the City were ſhut, and guards of ſouldiers placed here and there.

Huguenots he called them.

But leſt thoſe of the Religion ſhould be moved with ſuch an unwonted and an unexpected ſhutting in of the gates (as in the time of open warre) the Roman Catholiques cauſed it to be bruited that all was done to ſecure the Proteſtants. To which report ſome gave too much credit (for beſide the ordinary guard of the governour, and that of the Citadell, with the three hundred harquebuſiers of the City, which amounted to about a thouſand) there were gathered to them many beſides of the City with armes likewiſe; with command that if they deſcried any troupe of thoſe of the Religion comming abroad, though but with their ſwords guirt unto them, forthwith to cut them off with the reſt alſo. But they, having enured themſelves to an incredible modeſty and patience, gave not the leaſt appearance of defending themſelves, ſeeing a tempeſt now nigh at hand; which they knew could not ariſe without a ſpeciall providence of God.

The day following, notwithſtanding all theſe faire ſhewes, they evidently perceived that their lives were at the mercy of the Papiſts, who had ſucked the bloud of many of them in the firſt troubles. For albeit they found no more paſſage for them out of the City then they did the day precedent, they might not now either freely goe out or come in upon their neceſſary occaſions: if they preſented themſelves in the ſtreets, they were clapt up in priſon; for which cauſe they were fain to keep their houſes. Night being come, they made a privy ſearch in their dwelling houſes; ſome they rifled, others were ranſomed, and the reſt impriſoned. Many of them never comming thither, were either killed in the corners of the ſtreetes with daggers, or elſe caſt into the river; whereof ſome (who were living when this Hiſtory was in writing) were ſaved by ſwimming, being carried down with the current of the ſtreame, halfe a mile beneath the City.

On Friday after there was a Proclamation with ſound of trumpets in all the chiefe places of the City, the ſumme of which was this, that thoſe of the Religion were to appeare before the governour at his houſe, there to be informed what the Kings pleaſure was concerning them. The greater part, being but too credulous, feared not to make their appearance at the place aſſigned, whence ſoone after they were committed to ſundry priſons. The night following there were heard from all parts of the City lamentable cries and ſhreekings, not onely of ſuch as were maſſacred in their houſes, but of others halfe wounded to death whom they haled to the river.

From that time forwards there were ſuch murthers and outrages committed, throughout the City, that it ſeemed hell was ſet open, and that Devils in the likeneſſe of men comming forth thence ran roring to and fro in the ſtreets.

On Sunday which was the laſt of this moneth of Auguſt, about eight of the clock in the morning, the reſt, who were left unmaſſacred the Fryday before, were made an end of then.

About one of the clocke the ſame day, commandement was given, that under every Ancient twenty five armed men with twelve Porters ſhould be gathered to conduct them to Saint Georges gate, which is by the Archbiſhops houſe, in which were more then three hundred and fifty priſoners; in which place the great Maſſacre was to bee executed. The keyes of the Archbiſhops houſe, wherein ſo many priſoners were incloſed, were delivered unto this bloudy crue; who joyfully offered themſelves to performe ſo horrible a buſineſſe; The which the ordinary executioner refuſed, and common Souldiers abhorred to undertake, when the ſame was firſt propounded unto them; they anſwering peremptorily they would never doe it.

The firſt alleadged, that if according to the courſe of Juſtice ſentence of death had been denounced againſt them, he knew what he had to doe; but for this their purpoſe he told them he thought they might have but too many executioners in the City to ſatiſfie their deſire. The ſouldiers anſwered, they thought it more then inhumane, to cut the throats of ſuch as never offended them. But if the priſoners had made any Inſurrection or ſedition in the City, they then might have ſome colour of reaſon to doe it; otherwiſe they meant not to ſtaine the honor of their profeſſion (which is accompanied with nobleneſſe of ſpirit) with ſo villanous an act, more befitting butchers then ſouldiers.

But Mandelot and his accomplices were not ſo ſcrupulous; for within three houres after, Clou Captaine of the Harquebuſiers of the City came with an enraged troupe, &c. the greater part whereof were furniſhed with ſhort ſwords and hangers.

As ſoone as Le Clou entred into the great Court, he gave the priſoners to underſtand with a loud voice, that they muſt die; and turning him towards his ſlaughter men, he ſaid, on, on, goe in, and to your worke: but firſt he forgat not to demand the priſoners purſes for his booty, which when he pocketted up, he gat him into a Gallery there, to ſatiſfie his helliſh luſt in taking a view of this rufull ſpectacle.

The murtherers began to fall upon the poore priſoners with ſuch barbarous cruelty, hacking and hewing them, in ſo furious a manner, that within leſſe than an houre they were all cut in pieces, not ſo much as one eſcaped their hands. All theſe for the moſt part were maſſacred kneeling on their knees, and lifting up their eies and hands to God for mercy, whilſt they had their hands and fingers cut off.

¶ The death and martyrdome of Francis le Boſſu, a merchant, together with his ſons.

AMong all thoſe who confeſſed the name of Jeſus Chriſt, and gave their lives for his truth, a certaine Merchant of hats and caps called Francis le Boſſu well deſerves to be ſet in the fore ranke, with his two ſonnes; for whileſt he trampled in the bloud of his brethren, being beſmeared therewith, and ſpirting as it were in his face; he encouraged his children to take their death willingly and patiently: uſing this ſpeech, Children, we are not to learne now, that it hath alwaies been the portion of Beleevers, to bee hated, cruelly uſed, and devoured by Unbeleevers; as Chriſts ſilly Sheep of ravening wolves: if wee ſuffer with Chriſt we ſhall alſo reigne with him. Let not theſe drawne ſwords terrifie us, they will be but as a bridge whereby we ſhall paſſe over out of a miſerable life, into immortall bleſſedneſſe. We have breathed and lived long enough among the wicked, let us now goe and live with our God: let us joyfully march after this great company which is here gon before us, and let us make way for them that ſhall follow after.

When he ſaw the murtherers come, he claſped his armes about his two ſonnes, and they likewiſe embraced their father; as if the father meant to be a buckler to his children, and the children as if by the bond of nature (which binds them to defend his life from whence they received it) they meant to ward off the blowes which were comming towards their father, though with the loſſe of their owne lives: who when the maſſacre was ended were all three found dead, thus embracing one another.

The Papiſts abhorre their own cruelties

Now after this furious aſſault, theſe impudent creatures went up and downe the City, ſhewing their white doublets all beſprinkled with bloud; boaſting, that ſome had killed an hundred, ſome more, ſome leſſe. Forthwith the great gates of the Archbiſhops houſe were ſet wide open for all commers; of whom ſurely there was none (were they of the devouteſt Romaniſts) but muſt needs have their hearts wounded and pierced within them, to ſee ſo hideous a ſlaughter. And indeed ſome of them were heard to ſay, when they beheld this ſo inhumane and cruell an act, That certainly they were not men, but devils in the habit of men, that had done this.

The next morning which was Munday, the firſt of September, the remainder of corpſes, which were not caſt into the water, were put into great boats, which being rowed over to the other ſide of the river of Saon, were all caſt on ſhore there; the corpſes being alſo ſpread upon the ground nigh to the Abbey of Eſnay like dung upon the earth. The Monkes would at no hand yeeld to have them buried in their Churchyard, eſteeming them unworthy of buriall; fearing alſo, that ſo many put together would be a meanes to infect the aire, and therefore gave them a ſigne to have them throwne into the river.

Now as the multitude were dragging them in thither, an Apothecary came and informed them, that money might be made of the greaſe that was taken out of their bodies. Then were the moſt corpulent bodies preſently ſought out, which when they had ripped up, a great quantity of that commodity being gotten thence, was ſold by theſe Merchants for three ſhillings the pound. And then not knowing how to wrecke their malice any further upon them, after many deriſions and ſcornes which the ſtanders by, but eſpecially the Italians, had done to theſe poore deſpiſed carkaſſes, they were tumbled into a great pit, and the reſt throwne into the river.

Thoſe of Daulphine, of Languedoc, and Provence were amaſed to ſee ſo many bodies floating upon the water, ſome diſmembred, others faſtned together with long poles, others lying on the ſhore, ſome having their eies put out, others their noſes, eares, and hands cut off, ſtabbed in with daggers in every part of their bodies, ſo as ſome among them had no humane ſhape remaining. Yea, ſo great a number of theſe mangled corpſes preſented themſelves on the port of Tournon, that the men and women of the place began to make an outcry, as if the enemies had bin at their gates.

Not many moneths after, when all theſe bloudy Tragedies were ended, the Pope ſent a Legate to the King, called Cardinall Urſin. This Legat was received with great ſolemnity at Lyons, and the ſtreets hung with tapeſtry. Now having heard maſſe at Saint Johns Church, and returning by the ſame dore which he went in at, the greateſt number of the maſſacrers attended his comming there, and as he paſſed by they all kneeled downe for his abſolution. But the Legate not knowing the reaſon why they kneeled ſo before him, one of the principall agents kneeling there amongſt them, told the Legat that they were thoſe who had been the actors in the maſſacre. When the Legate perceived that to be the cauſe, he abſolved them all with making the ſigne of the Croſſe.

The maſſacrers abſolved by the Popes Legat.

¶ Perſecution at Angiers in France.

¶ Maſter Iohn Maſon, a learned Miniſter, together with his wife and ſome others, Martyrs.

A Proteſtant miniſter murthered in his garden.

AS ſoone as the maſſacre was begun at Paris, a Gentleman of Paris called Monſoreau obtained a Paſport with letters to maſſacre thoſe of the Religion at Angiers. Who, being diſappointed of his prey in one place, came to the lodging of a reverend and learned Miniſter called Maſter John Maſon, ſirnamed de Launay, Sieur of Riviere. Meeting his wife at his entrance into the houſe, he ſaluted her and kiſt her, as it is the manner in France, eſpecially among the Courtiers, and asked her where her husband was? She anſwered him, that he was walking in his garden, and then directed him the way unto him.

Monſoreau having lovingly embraced La Riviere, ſaid unto him, Doe you know wherefore I am come? the King hath commanded me to kill you forthwith, and hath given me expreſſe charge to doe it, as you ſhall know by his letters. After which words he ſhewed him a piſtoll ready charged. Riviere replyed, that hee knew not wherein he had offended the King; but ſeeing, ſaith he, you ſeeke my life, give me a little leave to cry to God for mercy, and to recommend my ſpirit into his hands.

Having made a ſhort prayer, he willingly preſented his body to the murtherer, who ſhot him in with his piſtoll, and ſo he died by and by.

Not long after the King ſent Puygaillard, who drowned nine or ten, and amongſt other the wife of this Miniſter de la Riviers above named, who expreſſed a ſingular conſtancy of faith even to her laſt breath.

This Miniſter and Martyr formerly mentioned, ſirnamed Launay, was the eldeſt ſon of Sieur de Launay, a man exceeding rich and wealthy, but an obſtinate Papiſt. When as the old man obſerved how his ſon was inclined to be a profeſſor of the Goſpell, he threatened to diſinherit him unleſſe he would abjure, promiſing on the contrary to beſtow great matters upon him, and to marry him honorably, if he would be ruled by him. All which his ſon refuſing, his fathers love began to be turned into hatred; inſomuch that the young man was forced to fly to Paris, where in time he was called to bee a Miniſter of the firſt reformed Church planted in that City, under the raigne of King Henry the ſecond; from which reformed Church other Churches in divers Cities in France fetched their light.

¶ Perſecution at Rovan.

When the Maſſacrers began to play their parts in this City, they counſelled thoſe of the religion to get themſelves into the priſons, as into places of greateſt ſecurity from the fury and rage of the people. But ſuch as followed this advice, were there even ready to be devoured, as poore Sheep, by theſe greedy wolves at their pleaſure.

Six thouſand maſſacred in few dayes at the city of Rovan

Thoſe who were murthered in the city in a few dayes, ſome in their houſes, and others in the priſons, amounted to ſix thouſand, beſides more than fifty women, upon whom they exerciſed no leſſe cruelty than upon men.

Their names for brevities ſake are here omitted. The dead bodies being piled together were conveyed in tumbrils out of the City, and throwne by heaps one upon another into great pits digged for that purpoſe. Their garments being waſhed in the river from their bloud, by certaine poore women, were afterwards diſtributed here and there to the poore by the Papiſts, that they might ſeeme with their unjuſt cruelty to mingle ſome workes of juſtice and charity.

¶ A Note touching the ſhamefull revolt of a Miniſter called Du Roſier, with the event of it.

Within a mile of Paris there is a place where thoſe of the Religion, which dwelt thereabouts, were wont to aſſemble to heare Sermons, and to participate of the Sacraments. Over this flocke was Huges Sureau (called Du Roſier) placed as overſeer.

Being in times paſt Miniſter at Orleance, he was diſcharged from thence, as one of a contentious ſpirit, and given to affect novelties.

In proceſſe of time he came to be eſtabliſhed the Miniſter of this foreſaid Church nigh unto Paris.

Hearing the newes of the Maſſacre, hee fled with the reſt for company. Being apprehended, he began to waver, perſwading many priſoners to revolt as he had done; which cauſed him afterwards, if his repentance was ſound, to utter theſe words in a booke which I have, wherein hee bitterly lamented his wofull fall. The murtherers, ſaith he, by their cruell hands murthered mens bodies, whilſt their ſouls eſcaped ſafe; but I by my perſwaſions have been a killer of ſoules, in turning them from the truth which before they profeſſed.

The Judge who had him in bonds ſent letters preſently to Paris, to give notice of his apprehenſion, as alſo of ſome apparent ſignes which gave him hope of the Miniſters converſion.

The King by and by ſent for him; who being brought into his preſence, ſubſcribed inſtantly to an abjuration with deteſtation of the Huguenots profeſſion, before the King of Navarre and the Prince of Conde, maintained the Romiſh Religion, conſented therto with the Sorboniſts at that time there preſent; againſt whom a few yeares before he had learnedly defended the truth.

In this abjuration he endeavoured to confute many articles which were maintained by Calvin and Beza againſt the Romiſh Religion. In theſe diſputes, this Miniſter being of a prompt wit, and having ability to expreſſe himſelfe well, handled the matter ſo cunningly, that the King of Navarre, the Princeſſe his ſiſter, and the Princeſſe of Conde ſo far yeelded, that within five or ſix dayes after they went to maſſe, and received abſolution of the Cardinall of Bourbon.

The points about which this Roſier diſputed were theſe. Firſt, concerning the markes of the Church; Secondly, of the Trinity of Perſons; Thirdly, of the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt; Fourthly, of Chriſts deſcent into hell; Fifthly, of originall ſinne; Sixthly, of the providence of God; Seventhly, of predeſtination and reprobation; Eightly, of mans free will, Ninthly, of Juſtification; Tenthly, of ſucceſſion; Eleventhly, of interceſſion of Saints; Twelfthly, of the ſacrifice of the maſſe; and laſtly of Tranſubſtantiation. The Sorboniſts cauſed this confeſſion to be printed, to which the Miniſters of the reformed Religion would not vouchſafe an anſwer, knowing that hee who made it did it contrary to his own conſcience, adding nothing thereto which had not been confuted a thouſand times.

All this upon his repentance he afterwards revoked, as is to be ſeene by his booke printed here in London in the French tongue, in the yere 1573, which confeſſion of his contrary to his abjuration I have in my cuſtody.

Now touching the Prince of Conde, the King propounded to him three things, either to goe to maſſe, to die, or elſe perpetuall priſon: and therefore to bethink himſelfe well which of the three he liked beſt. The Prince anſwered as it is reported, That by Gods grace he would never chuſe the firſt: as for the two later he referred himſelfe to the Kings pleaſure.

¶ A maſſacre at Tholouſe in France.

On Sunday which was the eight day after the maſſacre of Paris, about eight of the clocke in the morning, the chiefe of the Papiſts received advertiſement of that which had paſſed, with letters directing them what they were to doe. Then a Councell was called, at the breaking up whereof the great gates of the City were ſhut, only the wickets left open, at which there was ſet ſuch to watch as they thought fitting. Soone after it was noyſed through all the City, that the Lords and Gentlemen of the Religion were maſſacred at Paris. Which the Proteſtants at Tholouſe noting, being gone forth about five of the clocke in the morning to heare the Sermon at Caſtanet, ſome thought it fit not to returne, but to reſort to ſome other place: others reſolved to goe backe againe, that they might take order about their affaires. Theſe, being ill adviſed, were ſuffered to enter in peaceably, leaving their ſwords and daggers at the gate. At evening ſouldiers were placed here & there; but in regard many Counſellors of the Religion were abroad (that they might the better entrap them) the next day the gates were not ſo carefully looked unto, but who would might come in, and goe out at their leiſure, without being queſtioned at all. This whs done to draw in the ſimple people who wandred up and downe the fields. The firſt preſident called Daſis, a ſubtle headed man, ſent to the Counſellors abroad to come in, promiſing them their ſafety upon his word, ſhewing that their abſence did but incenſe the Inhabitants of Tholouſe the more againſt them. It was granted indeed, that there had been a Maſſacre at Paris, but that was upon ſome private quarrell, ſo as the King was not minded for that to breake his edict of pacification.

Some of them were perſwaded aud returned; others caſting ſome perill reſolved to retire to Mountauban, Realmont, and elſewhere. On Tueſday following, that they might hold them whom they had gotten within the Walls, and draw in ſuch as yet kept themſelves without, they cauſed it to be publiſhed with ſound of trumpets; that the Kings will was that none of the religion ſhould be moleſted, but reſpectively uſed. The preſidents with ſundry others were preſent at this Proclamation, accompanied with a guard of ſouldiers, which cauſed many of the Religion, eſpecially the Counſellors, to ſuſpect ſome trechery; who therefore haſtened to the firſt preſident to know what theſe things meant. He anſwered, it was onely to reſtraine the people from making a tumult. But perceiving that they could not by their cunning catch the birds who kept aloofe off, they wrecked their malice upon thoſe they had in their hands.

On Wedneſday next then, about ten of the clocke in the morning, having ſeparated their Troupes into divers quarters, they cauſed them to enter into the houſes of thoſe of the Religion, whom they impriſoned in ſundry priſons of the City. This buſineſſe held them all that Wedneſday. The guard was doubled at the gates, and one of the Parliament, with a Merchant that was a Papiſt, deputed as commanders at the ſaid gates, to examine all ſuch as went out, and to put backe ſuch as meant to eſcape. There was alſo a charge given, that none ſhould dare to conceale any of the ſaid Religion, as they would anſwer to the contrary. By meanes whereof many being diſcovered, were impriſoned. Among which were five or ſix Counſellors, men excellently learned, who comforted the reſt. Thus were they detained three weeks. In the meane while the Maſſacrers ſet upon the neighbour Cities.

The three weekes being expired, they put all theſe priſoners together into the Conſciergery, which is a ſpeciall priſon. After which they began to manifeſt themſelves: for the reaſon why they had deferred the ſlaughter of them ſo long, was, that they might obtaine authority from Paris; the which was brought them by their Deputies, whoſe names were Delpech and Madron, rich Merchants of the City. Theſe came with a warrant from the King, that if the Maſſacre was not finiſhed, then they ſhould not deferre any longer to put his will in execution. To which they ſhewed themſelves but too forward and ready.

On Saturday morning before the Sunne was up, certaine ſchollers who were night walkers, with other lewd fellowes to the number of ſeven or eight, armed with axes and butchers knives, entred into the ſaid Conſciergery, and cauſing the priſoners to be called down one after another, they maſſacred them beneath at the ſtaires foot of the Conſciergery, not permitting them ſo much much leiſure as to ſpeake, much leſſe to pray. It was thought that they maſſacred to the number of three hundred; afterwards ſpoiling them of all they had, ſtripping them out of their cloathes and ſhirts, and leaving them naked, their ſecret parts being onely covered with a piece of paper. They were expoſed to the view of all for the ſpace of two daies; whileſt they digged great pits, whereinto the corpſes thus cruelly maſſacred were caſt naked one upon another. The Counſellors whom they had impriſoned, after they were maſſacred, were hanged in their long gownes upon a great Elme which was in the Court of the Palace; and in the meane while the houſes of thoſe of the Religion were ſacked and pillaged.

Three hundred maſſacred in the City of Tholouſe in France.

Many among theſe, by reaſon of the barbarous cruelties uſed againſt their Brethren, abjured daily. Now becauſe the Sorboniſts provided a forme of abjuration to that purpoſe, for ſaving the lives of ſuch as recanted, it ſhall not be impertinent to inſert the ſame in this place; it being imprinted at Paris by Nicholas Roffet.

The abjured minding to returne into the lap of our holy Mother the Roman Church, muſt preſent themſelves firſt to their Parſons or Curats, to be directed by them what they ought to doe. Afterward to be ſent thence to their reverend Biſhop and Dioceſan, or his Officiall, to pronounce the ſaid abjuration in manner and forme following.

¶ The forme of their Abjuration.

1 I Such a one of ſuch a Dioceſſe, and dwelling in ſuch a place, acknowledge by the grace of God the true Catholique and Apoſtolike Faith, from which I have wilfully gone aſtray and ſeparated my ſelfe; and now deſiring to returne into the true Sheepfold, which is the Catholique, Apoſtolique, and Romane Church, I do profeſſe to have abjured, and here before you my ſuperiour do abjure and deteſt all the Huguenote errors of Luther, Calvin, and all hereſies whatſoever, wherwith heretofore I have been infected and defamed, conſenting now to the doctrine of our holy Mother the Church, beſeeching you in the name of God, and of his ſon Jeſus Chriſt, and of the glorious Virgin Mary his Mother, with all the hee ſaints and ſhe ſaints in Paradiſe, that it wil pleaſe you to receive me into the fold of the Chriſtian flock and people of God, who live under the obedience of the Pope, ordained Chriſts Vicar in the ſaid Church, ſubmitting my ſelf patiently to beare, and willingly to performe the penance you ſhall think fit to impoſe upon me, abſolving me from all my offences committed whileſt I lived in ſuch errors, for which I here aske pardon of God, of the ſaid Church, and of you my Paſtor (ſet over mee by God the Creator) to abſolve me with ſuch penance as you ſhall judge to be availeable for the ſatisfaction of my ſins and offences. And that it may be ſeen that from the heart I have made and doe make this abjuration.

2 I further confeſſe, before God and you, that I beleeve all that is contained in the Apoſtles, Athanaſius and Nicene Creeds, with all the confeſſions of faith beſides, allowed and approved by the Councels of the Catholique, Apoſtolique, and Roman Church, and ſo forth as it followeth in thoſe Creeds.

3 I alſo beleeve, acknowledge and confeſſe whatſoever is contained in the old and new Teſtament, approved by the ſaid holy Catholique Apoſtolique Roman church, according to the ſenſe and interpretation of the holy Doctors, and by them received, rejecting wholly all other Interpretations as falſe and erroneous.

4 I acknowledge the ſeven Sacraments of the ſaid Church to have been inſtituted by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as neceſſary for the ſalvation of mankinde, although all of them are not of neceſſity to be conferred upon all; namely, I acknowledge that the ſeven Sacraments be, Baptiſme, Confirmation, the Euchariſt, which is the holy Sacrament of the Altar, Penance, extreame Unction, Orders, and marriage; and that of them Baptiſme, Confirmation, and Orders cannot be reiterated without ſacriledge. That the ſaid Sacraments confer grace, and have thoſe effects which the Church hath taught, and that the forme and uſe according to which they are adminiſtred to Chriſtians is holy and neceſſary.

5 I further acknowledge, that the holy maſſe is a Sacrifice and oblation of the true body and blood of Jeſus Chriſt, under the formes of bread and wine mingled with water; which bread and wine under the foreſaid formes are in the Maſſe, by the words of Conſecration there pronounced by the Prieſt, tranſubſtantiated and changed into the ſaid body and blood of Chriſt; albeit the qualities and accidents remaine in the ſaid formes after Conſecration; and that the Maſſe is profitable and available both for the living and for the dead.

6 I acknowledge and confeſſe the concomitance, namely, that in receiving the body of Chriſt under the forme of bread only, I then likewiſe receive the blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

7 I confeſſe that prayer to, and interceſſion of Saints for the living and for the dead, is holy, good, and profitable for Chriſtians, and in no ſort contrary to the honour of God.

8 That prayers made in the Church for the faithfull departed are beneficiall for them, for the remiſſion of ſins, and mitigating of their paines deſerved for the ſame.

9 That there is a Purgatory, where the ſoules of ſuch as are detained there are relieved by the prayers of the faithfull.

10 I confeſſe that honour ought to be given to the Saints raigning with Chriſt in heaven, that they ought to be prayed to, and that they make interceſſion for us to God, and that their reliques ought to be worſhipped.

11 That the commandements and traditions of the ſaid church, conſiſting in divine ceremonies, are holy and good, as faſtings, abſtinence from meats, obſervation of feaſts, and other Eccleſiaſticall rites, and ought to be obſerved according to the traditions of the Apoſtles and ancient Fathers, continued from the Primitive times, and ſince brought into the Church by the decrees of Councels, received thence long agoe or lately: Alſo that I will and ought to obey them as preſcribed and authorized by the holy Ghoſt, the ordainer of thoſe things which ſerve to the upholding of Chriſtian religion, and of the holy Catholike and Apoſtolike Romane Church.

12 I likewiſe beleeve and conſent to all the Articles concerning originall ſinne and Juſtification.

13 I alſo ſtedfaſtly beleeve that the pictures of Chriſt, of his holy Mother, and of all the Saints ought to be retained in the Church, that the uſes of them are very profitable, and that they ought to be worſhipped.

14 I confeſſe that the power of indulgences and pardons is left to the Church by Jeſus Chriſt, and the uſe of them is greatly availeable; as alſo I acknowledge the Church of Rome to be the chief Mother of all Churches, and that ſhe hath the holy Ghoſt for her guide: and that all private and pretended inſpirations contradicting the ſame are of the Devill the prince of diſſention, who would rent in ſunder the ſeameleſſe Coat of Jeſus Chriſt.

15 Laſtly, I ſtrictly promiſe to obſerve and keepe whatſoever was decreed and ordained by the laſt Councell of Trent, and do promiſe before God and you, never to depart from the Catholike and Apoſtolike Romane Church. And if I ſhall (which God forbid) I ſubmit me to the correction and Canons of the ſaid Church, made, decreed, and ordained againſt them which fall into Apoſtaſie.

To which abjuration and confeſſion I have ſubſcribed with my hand, &c.

Some of thoſe who for feare abjured afterwards relented; others grew more and more hardened; inſomuch that in going oft to Maſſe they tooke part with the prieſts and murtherers, as if they had never made any profeſſion at all of the truth.

¶ Perſecution at Bourdeaux the third of October, 1572.

SOone after the maſſacre at Paris, tidings thereof came to Bourdeaux. Where it happened on a morning as the Proteſtants were taking boat to heare a Sermon in a meadow where they were wont to meet, being about three miles from Bourdeaux, betweene the river of Garonna and the brooke of la Jalla, that the Governour Mountferrand commanded them to come backe again. He had the skill to cloake the ſame under a plauſible pretence, namely, that they ſhould not be ſet upon there by the multitude.

After their returne they began to ſet a ſtrong watch and ward at the gates, ſo as none of the religion could have leave to paſſe forth, unleſſe he had a paſſeport from the Governour: yet meanes was made for their Miniſters eſcape without being perceived; who went to Medoc, expecting what the event of this buſineſſe at Bourdeaux would be. Having intelligence of what was executed there, they ſtaid certaine daies and nights, hiding themſelves in the rocks and mariſhes, untill they had opportunity to take ſhipping and ſo ſaile into England.

Inſtantly thereupon there arrived at Bourdeaux the Lord of Montpeſat from the King, who at his firſt comming fained as if he meant to ſettle all things in peace. Yet he wrought under hand in ſuch wiſe with the Governour, that the maſſacre was reſolved of, to which he was ſollicited by a Jeſuite called Edmund Angier, who out of the pulpit uſed horribly and bitterly to thunder and inveigh againſt the remiſneſſe and faint-heartedneſſe of the ſaid Governour. Inſomuch as on S. Michaels day (as they called it) ſpeaking of the Angels by whom God executes his judgements, he cryed out by way of Interrogation, who executed Gods judgements upon the Hugenots in Paris? The Angell of God. Who hath executed the like upon other Cities in this kingdome? The Angell of God. In a word, he never ceaſed in publique and private to ſollicite the Papiſts of Bourdeaux to follow the example of the Pariſians. And then as a croking Raven, day by day he menaced thoſe of the religion with the approaching of an utter ruine and deſolation, if they did not betimes returne into the boſome of the Romane Church, which offer if they now refuſed, they ſhould not be received in when they would.

Many being terrified with theſe threates, as alſo by the intreaties of their kindred, who ſet before them the imminent danger which hung over their heads, revolted and abjured. The ſaid Sieur of Montpaſſet cauſed Maſter William Blanck, an Advocate in the Court of Parliament, to be called before him, who was counſellor to him and to his father in law; exhorting and perſwading him to returne to the unity of the Romane church.

Le Blanck anſwered, that he had ſufficiently weighed and compared all things together, before he tooke upon him the profeſſion of that Religion which he now profeſſed; which he ſaid was the true religion, acknowledging the ſame in every reſpect far to exceed the other.

Montpeſſat hearing this, rebuked him ſharply; ſaying, that then he thought himſelfe wiſer than the King and all thoſe that profeſſed as his Majeſtie did. Inſomuch as they who ſtood about Le Blanck began to handle him roughly; ſo that hee had much adoe to eſcape with his life, had not Montpeſſat reſcued him from that danger, becauſe he was come thither upon his word. The Governour ſaid; if he had been there he would have ſlaine him.

The Covernour, being preſſed to diſpatch this maſſacre at Bourdeaux, wiſt not well what to do. For on the one ſide La Sieur de Veſins, with ſundry others comming from the Court, aſſured him from the King, that he wondred why the buſineſſe was deferred ſo long; ſhewing, that he could not performe a more acceptable ſervice unto him than it. On the other ſide Stroſſi, who hovered about Rochel to take it, wiſhed him to be well adviſed what he did, what command ſoever he had to the contrary: Foreſeeing belike, that if he went forward with this execution, the Rochellers would have had the ſaid Stroſſi in ſuch a jealouſie, that his project would have been defeated, and ſo would be no ſmall prejudice to the Kings affaires; putting him in hope, that he would ſtand betweene him and all perils.

For the truth is, the army by ſea, which was prepared againſt Rochel, lying for a time at Burdeaux, under pretence of conquering Florida, would have been ready enough to have made a generall maſſacre there, but that they were afraid the Rochellers would be incenſed thereat.

Yet in concluſion the Governour, having balanced things on both parts, was perſwaded by the Sieur Montpeſſat to put the maſſacre in execution. To which purpoſe an oath being taken, a catalogue was made of ſuch as they meant to ſpoile.

On Saturday then, which was the third of October, 1572. the Governour having aſſembled together all the ſcum of the City to aide and aſſiſt him in ſo barbarous an act, commanded them with other ſouldiers to be ready preſently after dinner to put the Kings command into execution. To which they were very forward, comming in their Liveries, attended on by Captaines of tens, to direct them touching that they had to do. The greater part of the maſſacrers had red hats given them by Peter Eſtounach, and for the blood wherwith they dyed their armes, they were called the Red Band: others called them the Cardinalls Band. The Governor commanded them to kil all thoſe of the Religion, eſpecially ſuch as had taken armes, and not to ſpare one. And himſelfe intending to ſhew them the way, went to the houſe of Maſter John Guilloch, Lord of Obiere, counſellor in the Court of Parliament, to execute the hatred he had long ſince conceived againſt him: who being about to eſcape away out at a backe doore, they caught and brought him into the outer court before his houſe, in the preſence of the Governour, who with a ſhort ſword maſſacred him; which done, his houſe was wholly pillaged.

At that time they brought a certaine Miniſter out of the Conſciergery, who a few daies before comming from the country Saintong to Bourdeaux (for his better ſafety as he thought) was there apprehended and impriſoned: and as ſoon as he was come out of the priſon they maſſacred him before the gates of the Palace.

Maſter William Sabins houſe (a Counſellor of the ſaid Parliament, who was one of the Religion) was forced open, pillaged and ſpoiled, and himſelfe cruelly murthered. His Clarke called Simonet, ſeeing his maſter about to be maſſacred, embraced and comforted him: and being asked whether he were of the Religion, he anſwered yea, and would die with his maſter for the ſame. Thus they were ſlaine one in anothers armes.

¶ The cruell Martyrdome of Du Tour, a Deacon of the Proteſtant Church.

A Deacon of the reformed Church called Du Tour, an old man, who in the daies of his ignorance had been a Prieſt in the popiſh church, being ſick in his bed, was haled forth into the open ſtreet; of whom it being demanded, whether he would go to Maſſe, and thereby ſave his life; he freely anſwered, No, eſpecially now drawing ſo neere his end, both in regard of his yeares and greevous ſickneſſe: I hope (ſaith he) I ſhall not ſo far forget the eternall ſalvation of my ſoule, as for feare of death to prolong this life for a few dayes; for ſo I ſhould buy a ſhort terme of life at too deere a rate. They hearing him ſay ſo, maſſacred him inſtantly.

It was lamentable to ſee the poore Proteſtants wandring up and downe, not knowing where to ſave their lives: ſome were rejected of their owne parents and kinsfolkes, who ſhut their doores againſt them, pretending as if they knew them not; others were betrayed and delivered up by thoſe to whoſe truſt they had committed themſelves: many were ſaved even by Prieſts and others, from whom a man would have expected no ſuch ſecurity. Some were ſaved by their very enemies, whoſe hearts abhorred ſuch deteſtable outrages.

All the City was full of terrors and horrible threats againſt thoſe of the Religion, ſaying, that the Kings commandement was, that he would not have ſo much as one of them left in his Kingdome. And if any refuſed to goe to Maſſe, that an hole ſhould be digged for him in the earth, in which he ſhould forthwith be buried without any more adoe.

¶ Scoffing Ballads ſung in contempt of the Admirall of Chaſtillon and other Proteſtants.

Neare the Palace and throwout the City were defamatory Libels ſung againſt the Admirall of Chaſtillon and the Huguenots. In which regard, ſuch in whoſe hearts God had reſerved but any ſparkle of piety, were ſo terrified and vexed with their blaſphemies, that the condition of the maſſacred ſeemed to be much better than theirs who were left alive; who heard and ſaw thoſe things without ceaſing, which to an honeſt minde was more bitter then death it ſelfe.

The Governor was very carefull after the maſſacre was ended, to advertiſe the Sieur Montpeſſat, by a Gentleman, of all things which had paſſed, according to the promiſe he had made unto him. Which Montpeſſat was ſuddenly ſurpriſed with

Anno 1573.

Montpeſat ſuddenly ſurpriſed with a ſtrange diſeaſe.

with a diſeaſe; wherein feeling Gods hand heavy upon him, he uttered ſuch lamentable outcries, that his bloud and ſoule were poured out at once, a judgement juſtly inflicted upon him, for all the innocent bloud the which he had ſhed without a cauſe.

¶ The judgement of God upon one Vincent.

THe like judgement of God fell not long after upon another of theſe maſſacrers called Vincent, Advocate of the Court, one who had had his hand deepely dyed in this bloudy enterpriſe, not ſticking to boaſt that with his own hands hee had murthered Agraulet doore keeper of the Court. This man alſo fell dangerouſly ſick, but in the end recovering againe, and as he thought being in good health, he told ſome of his friends that hee felt his armes ſtrong enough to handle his Coutleaxe or ſhort ſword as well as ever he had done. But within a while after he was overtaken by the hand of God, with ſuch a flux of bleeding at his noſe, as could not be reſtrained nor diverted by any of the remedies that were then uſed. It was an hideous ſight to ſee him ſtill bowing his head over a baſon full of bloud, which without ceaſing iſſued out of his noſe and mouth.

Vincent dies drenched in his owne bloud.

This bloudy wretch then, who breathed forth nothing but bloud in the time of his health, nor could have his eyes ſatisfied with ſeeing the bloud of innocents poured out, was forced whileſt he lived to ſee himſelfe drenched in his own bloud, even untill his laſt gaſpe.

Another of this wretched crew ſwelled ſo long that he burſt in ſunder.

Another of them, thirſting after bloud as much as any of the reſt, was taken with ſuch a ſwelling in all the parts of his body, that there was ſcarcely to be diſcerned in him the forme of a man, and ſo continued ſwelling more and more, till at the length he burſt in ſunder.

God meets with the Gevernor himſelf at length.

The Governour himſelfe who was the chiefe actor in this maſſacre, about two yeares after gathering all the forces he could to beſiege Genſes, with an intention to doe wonders there, preſenting himſelfe ready for the purpoſe, was choſen to goe in the ranke of five and twenty or thirty brave Gentlemen, and he onely ſhot with an harquebuſe dyed. The reſt by and by retiring came off ſafe, without doing any further exploit.

Thirty thouſand maſſacred within a few weeks in the Cities of France.

Thus we have taken a view of the extreme afflictions and oppreſſions of the reformed Churches in many parts of France, wherein within a few weeks well nigh thirty thouſand were put to death.

Now in the yeare 1572. many places whither the faithfull were fled for refuge, were aſſayled by open warre; namely, in the firſt place that of Sancerre, the Hiſtory whereof you have here in a ſhort view preſented before you in that which followeth.

¶ A relation of the extreme famine which happened in the City of Sancerre in France, being beſieged with five hundred horſmen, and about five thouſand footmen the ninth of Ianuary, 1573. with their deliverance.

The Sieur of Chaſtre was then Generall of the Kings army.

BEing (ſaith the ſtory) compaſſed about with irreconcileable enemies, from about the beginning of Aprill; the want of victuals having cauſed them to gather together all the aſſes and mules they had in the City, they were eaten up in leſſe than a moneth.

Then they came to horſes, cats, rats, mouſes mice, and dogges. After theſe were ſpent, they fell to eat oxe and cow-hides, ſheep-skins, parchment old ſhooes, bullockes, and horſehoofes, hornes of lanthornes, ropes, and horſe harneſſe, leather girdles, &c.

In the end of June the third part of the beſieged had not bread to eat. Such as could get hemp ſeed, ground it, or ſtamped it in mortars, and made bread of it, the like they did with all ſorts of herbes, mingling the ſame with branne if they had it. There they eat meale of chaffe, nut-ſhels, and of ſlate, excrements of horſes, and men, yea, the offall which lay in the ſtreets was not ſpared.

The nine and twentieth of July, a poore man and his wife were executed for having eaten the head, braines, and entrailes of a young childe about three yeares old which died of hunger; having made ready the other parts to eat at another meale. An old woman lodging in their houſe, eating a part of this mournefull dyet, dyed in priſon, within a few houres after her impriſonment.

They were found guilty of other offences; but this aggravated the ſame the more. All children under twelve yeares of age dyed. It was lamentable to heare the pittifull voices uttered by poore parents for the miſery wherein their eyes beheld their languiſhing and dying infants.

To which purpoſe you may take notice here of a memorable accident. A boy of ten yeares old, being ready to yeeld up the ghoſt, ſeeing his father and mother weeping over him (whoſe armes and legges when they handled, felt as if they had been dryed ſtickes) ſaid unto them, wherefore weepe ye thus, in ſeeing me famiſhed to death? Mother, ſaith he, I aske you no bread, I know you have none: but ſeeing it is Gods will I muſt die this death, let us bee thankfull for it. Did not the holy man Lazarus dye of famine? Have I not read it in my Bible? In uttering theſe with the like ſpeeches he yeelded up the ghoſt the thirtieth day of July.

That all the people died not of famine in the end of this moneth, it was by reaſon of certain horſes which were reſerved for ſervice if need ſhould be, and ſix kine which were left to give milk for the ſuſtenance of young infants. Theſe beaſts were killed, and their fleſh ſold for the reliefe of ſuch as were living, with a little corne which by ſtealth ſome brought into the City; ſo that a pound of wheat was ſold for halfe a crowne.

There died by fight in Sancerre but eighty four perſons, but of the famine more than five hundred. Many ſouldiers getting forth as they could out of the City, flying from the famine, choſe rather to dye by the ſword of the enemy; whereof ſome were ſlaine, others impriſoned, and the reſt put to death by the executioner.

God ſent theſe good men in due ſeaſon from a farre countrey to preſerve this diſtreſſed city from utter ruine.

But when all helpe of man failed, the King having ſworne that he would make them eat up one another, the King of Kings delivered them by his wonderfull providence. For at this inſtant the embaſſadors from Poland came into France to accept the duke of Anjou for their king, at whoſe intreaty (which could not well be denied) poore Sancerre, more than halfe famiſhed, was now ſet at liberty by raiſing the ſiege, who otherwiſe were determined to leave their bones there, rather than to yeeld themſelves into their enemies hands, in regard they had oft threatened them with a generall maſſacre. Whereas now by the Kings appointment they were permitted to paſſe out of the City armed; if any would tarry, that they ſhould not be moleſted: having liberty granted them to diſpoſe of their affaires, as they pleaſed, with promiſe of conſerving the honour and chaſtities as well of virgins, as women, &c.

Of this ſiege Marſhall Mon Luc ſaid, that it was great, long, and ſightly: but though well aſſailed yet better defended.

Now let us come to the City of Rochel, which being at this inſtant ſtrongly beſieged by the forces of France, both by ſea and land, with about forty or fifty thouſand men, was yet in the end alſo delivered, though not without many hot conflicts, by the immediate hand of God; namely thus: The Embaſſadors of Poland arriving in France the ſeventeenth day of June, a truce was made on the ſudden, articles of peace drawne, and ſent to the King, who conſented to them, and returned anſwer in forme of an Edict, granting to thoſe of Rochell, Montauban, Niſmes, and others which ſtood upon their defence, liberty for the exerciſes of Religion; the reſt to live peaceably in their houſes, and therein to miniſter the ſacrament of Baptiſme, and marriage as they had wont to doe, ſo as their aſſemblies exceeded not the number of ten, beſides the parents.

He reſtored to the Rochellers and others their rites and priviledges, letting fall all the decrees given out againſt them, approving of their defenſive war; giving them leave, according to their ancient cuſtome, to retaine in their Cities, Towers, and Fortreſſes men and munition, yea, to receive in Governours among them, provided that they were ſuch as they had no cauſe to ſuſpect or except againſt.

By vertue of this Edict, upon the tenth day of July, about ten of the clocke in the forenoone, the Sieur of Biron entred into the City at the gate called de Coigne, with an Herauld of armes, and foure of the Kings Trumpetters (at which houre peace was proclaimed in the moſt eminent places thereof) accompanied with the Lieutenant of the City, and with the Lord of Villiers. After which, dining at the Maiors houſe, he ſoone after retired, being conducted along till he came without the City.

A certaine Gentleman, Nephew to Puygaillard Governour of Angiers, bragging that he had beene one who murthered the Admirall, ſhewing a ſhort ſword which he had uſed in that ſlaughter, threatened the like to the Rochellers, but God cut him ſhort alſo, at the ſiege of Sancerre.

The ſame day many ſmall Veſſels laden with Biskets, Corne, Meale, Fiſh, and other proviſion entred into the Haven. At this ſiege the Duke D'Amaule loſt his life, with Coſſeins, who had broken into the Admirals Lodging, and began the maſſacre at Paris: beſides many great Lords, Gentlemen, Captaines, Lieutenants, and Antients, to the number of threeſcore, the greater part of which, having their hands embrued in thoſe other bloody maſſacres, being come thither received their reward, namely, either preſent death, or wounds ſo incurable that they eſcaped not with life,

One thing ought not here to be paſſed over in ſilence, to wit, the proviſion of victuals which God furniſhed this beſieged people withall, when all other proviſions began to faile them, namely, an infinite number of ſmall fiſhes never ſeene before in that haven, which every day yeelded themſelves to the mercy of the neceſſitous inhabitants. But as ſoone as the Edict was publiſhed, and the Rochellers ſet at liberty by the arriving of the Poliſh Embaſſadors, theſe ſea fiſhes withdrew themſelves.

¶ Although this relation following, touching another ſiege of this City of Rochel, ſutes nothing at all with the order of time, happening as it did in the yeare 1628. yet foraſmuch as it ſeemes to have ſome affinity with the terrible famine wherewith both the City of Sancerre and it were afflicted; let not the reader be offended for placing the ſame here ſomewhat out of place, being a thing ſo worthy of note.

¶ An extract of a Letter written on board the Saint George, his Majeſties Ship in Saint Georges Iſland.

There dyed in this ſiege of Rochel, the thirtieth of October, 1628, ſixteen thouſand perſons, the reſt enduring a world of miſeries; moſt of all their food being hides, leather, and old gloves: other proviſions being very ſcarſe were at an exceſſive rate; viz.

A Buſhell of wheate	xx. li.
A pound of bread	xx. s.
A quarter of Mutton	vi. li. od mony.
A pound of Butter	xxx. s.
An Egge	viii. s.
An ounce of Sugar	ii. s. vi. d.
A dryed fiſh	xx. s.
A pinte of Wine	xx. s.
A pound of grapes	iii. s.
A pinte of Milke	xxx. s.

Alſo it is reported, that through the famine, yong maids of fourteen or ſixteen yeares of age did looke like old women of an hundred yeares old. The famine was ſuch, that the poore people would cut off the buttocks of the dead as they lay in the Church yard unburied. All the Engliſh that came out looked like Anatomies. They lived two moneths with nothing but Cow hides and Goats skins boiled; the dogs, cats, mice, and frogs being all ſpent. And this with a world of other miſeries did they ſuffer, in hope of being releeved by others. Thus much I thought good to let you underſtand.

¶ A deſcription of the manner of the death of Charles the ninth, King of France.

In the yeare 1574. Charles the ninth, King of France (in the time of whoſe raigne theſe forenamed execrable maſſacres were executed) fell ſicke; which ſickneſſe ſeiſed upon him before his brother the Duke of Aniou tooke his voyage into Poland: from which during the winter ſeaſon he obtained ſome recovery. But that which then ſeemed to lie hidden brake forth again afreſh in the Spring; ſo as this Prince, after he had languiſhed three whole moneths, viz. February, March, and April, drew his Phyſitians to a conſultation about the ſtate of his body; who in the end concluded to purge and let him blood. But theſe remedies tooke not ſuch an effect as the King and they expected; for he ſtill waſted and conſumed away, being in the flower of his age, to the wonder of many. Some gueſſed he had taken a ſurfet either in eating or drinking; others, that hee was enchanted.

The thirtieth of May he dyed, in the preſence of his mother, and of the Cardinals of Bourbon and Ferrare, &c.

He was borne on the twenty ſeventh day of June, 1550. He began his raigne the firſt of December, 1560. and ſo reigned, as that it gives to poſterity juſt cauſe both of admiration and deteſtation. Thus this Prince lived not forty yeares fully compleat. Now if any deſire to be further ſatisfied as touching the manner of his death, I referre them to that which Maſter John Fox hath written thereof not many lines before the concluſion of this booke, commonly called the booke of Martyrs.

A note touching a Bull of Pope Sixtus the fifth, wherein the King of Navarre, and the Prince of Conde were declared Heretiques &c. with the cenſure thereof by the Parliament of Paris.

IN September 1585. Pope Sixtus the fifth, by a Bull ſent from Rome, condemned the king of Navarre, and the Prince of Conde for Heretikes, excommunicated them, degrading them and their ſucceſſors from their dignities, eſpecially laying claime to the Crowne of France, abſolving their ſubjects from their oath of allegiance, and expoſing their Countries for a prey to them that could firſt ſubdue them.

The Court of Parliament of Paris made a notable remonſtrance to the King concerning theſe Buls, in the which they ſought to maintain the priviledges of the Gallicane Church. Among other things, theſe words that follow are very remarkable. The Court thinks that theſe Buls are ſet forth in a ſtile altogether of a new ſtamp, and ſo contrary to the modeſty of former Popes, that they can in no ſort diſcerne therein the ſpirit of a ſucceſſor of the Apoſtles. And therefore (as the deputies of the ſaid Court added) wee can neither find by our regiſters, nor by any antiquity, that the Princes of France ever ſubjected themſelves ſo farre to the authority of the Pope, nor that the Subjects have taken ſuch knowledge of the Religion of their Princes. The Court therefore cannoe determine ought thereupon, unleſſe firſt of all the Pope can cauſe his pretended right in tranſlation of Kingdoms, to appeare, which Kingdomes were eſtabliſhed and ordained of God, before the name of a Pope was heard of in the world: that he manifeſts not to us what title he hath to intermeddle with the matter of the ſucceſſion of a young and vigorous Prince, who, for ought the Pope knows, may have his ſucceſſion yet in his loynes: that he ſhews not with what appearance of juſtice or equity he ſhould deny that priviledge which is allowed to ſuch as ate accuſed of hereſie againſt the decrees of antient canons, namely that no man ought to be held as an heretique, untill his defence be fully and freely heard, till he have received often admonitions from many Synodes, and thereupon ſentenced by a Councell lawfully aſſembled.

Further they added, that ſeeing the pope in ſtead of inſtruction, breaths forth nothing in his Buls but deſtruction, changing his ſhepherds crooke into a terrible thunderbolt, rather to ſcatter then ſweetly to call the erring flocke into the Boſome of the Catholique Church, the Court cannot ſafely admit of, or entertaine a Bull ſo pernitious and oppoſite to the generall good of all the Chriſtian World, and to the ſoveraignty of the Crowne of France; yea, they further were of opinion, that this Bull deſerved to be throwne into the fire and burned, and the ſollicitors or upholders thereof for examples ſake to be ſeverely chaſtiſed; humbly beſeeching the King to maintaine his Edicts in his owne Kihgdome in peace.

This remonſtrance tooke ſmall effect: for not long after, the King being ſollicited by the principall of the league, ſet forth a declaration the ſeventh of October, upon the Edict publiſhed in July next before going; wherein having confiſcated the body and goods of thoſe of the Religion with their aſſociates, who in any Province had taken armes againſt the fury of the league, it was ordained, that thoſe of the Religion within ſixe moneths were to depart out of the Kingdome, unleſſe within fifteene daies fully accompliſhed after the ſaid declaration they ſhould abjure.

The Parliament, ſuffering themſelves to be carried downe by the violence of this ſtreame, accepted and admitted of this Edict. The Princes framed an oppoſition againſt the Popes Bull, appealing therefrom, as a wrong done unto them, offering to make it appeare in a free and lawfull Councell, that the Pope had malitiouſly belied them, in calling them Heretiques; ſo as if he refuſed this faire and lawfull courſe by them propounded, they would hold and eſteem him for that great antichriſt, and would proclaime an open irreconcileable war againſt him. This oppoſition was affixed and ſet up at Rome the ſeventh day of November.

Not long after, among thoſe of the Religion which were impriſoned, others were more ſeverely handled. Among many, take notice here of two honourable Women, whoſe memory ought to be celebrated in this Hiſtory of the Martyrs; namely, Radagonde daughter of Maſter John Foucoult, Atturney in the Parliament of Paris, Widow, of the age of fourty yeares, and Claude Foucoult her ſiſter, a Virgin about thirty ſix, who were apprehended the nine and twentieth of October 1585. the one of the Village of Pierrepit neere Paris, and the other in the ſuburbs of Saint German, and brought priſoners into Chaſtelet becauſe they denied to goe to maſſe, and would not abjure and forſake the true Religion. Being ſevered one from the other in priſon, they were examined upon ſundry Articles “ to which they made their direct anſwer according to the word of God.

“ To wit, touching the ſupper of the lord, prayer to ſaints, prayer for the dead, & about abſtaining from meats.

Then being put together, they were accuſed for diſobeying the Kings commandement, which was that thoſe of the Religion were either to depart the Kingdome by ſuch a time, or elſe abjure. They anſwered, that they were willing to leave the Kingdome, if they might obtaine a convenient time to take order about that little which they had there; but refuſing to yeeld to their requeſt, they were ſhut up again, and the ſeventh of November in the preſence of the Lieutenant, as alſo of the Advocate for the King, and a ſorboniſt, they pleaded their Innocency. Theſe men getting no advantage againſt them, but being rather confounded by the Wiſedome of Gods Spirit, ſpeaking by theſe two ſiſters, went and complained to the King, that they were obſtinate Heretiques. This was in the beginning of the yeare 1588.

They continued in priſon many weeks, being cumbred with many diſputes, yet remained unſhaken. The Friday before Eaſter the “ King himſelfe was to ſee them, asking them whether they would conforme themſelves to the Catholique Apoſtolique Roman church (as he called it) They with ſuch reverence and obeiſance, as became them, gave him their reaſons why they could not ſo doe, confirming the ſame by texts of Holy Scripture. His ſecond queſtion was, why they had not obeyed his laſt Edict. The Widow anſwered, ſir, ſaith ſhe, I have three ſmall Children to care for; and whereas your Majeſty allotted thoſe of the Religion the tearme of fifteene daies after ſix moneths ended to depart the Kingdome; I have done my utmoſt to take up ſuch monies as were due unto me, but thoſe who were indebted unto me, neglected to pay me. Beſides, hee that kept my vineyards of Pierrepit, to quit himſelfe of me, accuſed me of hereſie, cauſing my ſiſter and my ſelfe to be here impriſoned, where we have lien ſix moneths, and if ſo be our petition preſented by us find no acceptance in your Majeſties ſight, we moſt humbly beſeech you to grant that we may be freed out of priſon, and wee will be gone inſtantly out of the Kingdome according to your Majeſties Edict.

The date is paſt, ſaid the King, nor will I ſhew you any favour, unleſſe you will promiſe to goe to maſſe. He was much diſpleaſed in ſeeing their conſtancy. Now at the ſame time there was preſented before him one ſirnamed Richelot, who had been apprehended that very day in which the women were taken for the cauſe of Religion, unto whom the King uſed not many words: only, in concluſion hee ſaid, there wanted nothing but fagots to burne him. This Richelot abjured that day in which theſe two ſiſters were executed. The King had five or ſixe Sorboniſts, which attended on him there, who offered to reaſon with the priſoners by occaſion of a word ſpoken by the widow. But the King preventing it, ſaid, we are not come hither to diſpute, let them be laid waſt, and none ſuffered to come to them.

Within halfe an houre after, the Duke of Longueville came to viſit them, ſaying, he was ſorry for their affliction, counſelling them to go to maſſe, alleadging, it is written, Thou ſhalt obey thy Prince,, and if he therein force you to it againſt your conſcience, he ſhall anſwer for it; adding, that they were to remember their ſexe, and therefore to be teachable upon the point of obedience. They anſwered, that no earthly potentate had any warrant to command Chriſtians to ſinne againſt their conſciences.

They further beſought him to be a meanes for them to the king, that they might be delivered: but all the anſwer he gave them was this, That if they would not turne, the King would not deliver them: alſo there was great likelihood, after their long detenſion in priſon, that they muſt be executed in the end.

The next day being Eaſter Even, the Queene with the Ducheſſe of Joyeuſe came into Chaſtelet to viſit the priſoners. But in ſtead of ſpeaking to the two ſiſters her ſelfe, ſhe ſent unto them a wicked Apoſtata, called Mathew de Launy, who being a Miniſter turned popiſh prieſt, and one whom the league made no ſmall uſe of; who loading theſe honourable ſiſters with injuries and reproachfull ſpeeches, calling them dogges and Devils incarnate, and worthy to be burned, ſo left them and never came any more unto them. Soone after the day of the Barricadoes, which is a defence made of earth and ſtones heaped up, ſerving to ſtop a ſtreet or any paſſage, the Judges of Chaſtellot adjudged them to be hangd, and their bodies to be burned to aſhes. From which ſentence they appealed to the Court, and were brought into the Conſciergery, which is the name of a common Gaole belonging to Paris or any other priſon.

Queene Elizabeths picture burned in Paris.

On the Even before Saint John Baptiſts day in the moneth of June, the common people in Paris making fires as they were wont to doe, amongſt other inſolencies, burnt in divers parts of the City a picture repreſenting the Queene of England.

The next day the curates and preachers began in their ſermons to thunder, ſaying, That it was not enough to burne the pictures of heretiques, but to burne the bodies of the obſtinate priſoners: which ſo inraged the tumultuous ſort of people, that the day following, flocking together into the court of the palace, they threatned the Preſidents and the Counſell, that ſome miſchiefe ſhould follow unleſſe they condemned theſe two priſoners to dye. A gentle anſwer was returned to this factious crie, with promiſe alſo that the buſines ſhould not long be delayed.

The next day the eldeſt ſon of Radegonde preſented a petition to the Ducheſſe of Nemours, daughter to the late lady of Ferrare. Her grace ſollicited the Duke of Guiſe her ſon, for the priſoners: whoſe anſwer was, That his comming to Paris was not to petition the King in favour of thoſe of the Religion; and if he would doe ſo (in regard of the ſervices which the priſoners had done his grandfather) yet he could not, fearing leſt the mad multitude might ſet upon him.

The eight and twentieth day of the ſame month of June, the Court having confirmed the ſentence given at Chaſtellot, ſent them backe thither to be executed, ſo as about noone they were gagged, becauſe the maid profeſſed, that if they brought her into any Idols Temple, ſhee would extend her voice ſo loud againſt the ſame, that every one ſhould heare it. About three of the clocke they were led as ſheepe to the ſlaughter, where they conſtantly perſiſted in the profeſſion of the true Religion.

The widow being aſcended the Ladder ſhooke out of her hands a wodden croſſe, which they had by force affixed thereto, whereat the multitude were ſo provoked, that they began to throw ſtones and ſtaves at her, ſo as the hangman having turned her off the Ladder cut the rope by and by, letting her fall halfe dead into the fire, wherein ſhe yeelded up her ſoule into the hands of God, as alſo her ſiſter did.

¶ Being now come to the yeare, 1588. it gives us juſt occaſion to call to mind that miraculous deliverance of our noble Queene and Countrey, from the intended invaſion of the Spaniards the ſame yeare. The memoriall whereof, that it might the rather be continued to the ages ſucceeding, deſerves by way of hiſtory here to bee inſerted as in its due and proper place. Of which deliverance it may truly be ſaid (all things conſidered) that it was the Lords doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes. The true relation whereof here followeth.

¶ A briefe diſcourſe touching the great preparations made by the Spaniards, and other Romiſh Catholikes, for that invincible Navy, intended for the invading and ſurpriſing of the Realme of England, together with their utter overthrow.

The Spaniſh navy prepard to invade England.

HEr Majeſty of England having had intelligence from ſundry places of the great and diligent preparation of the King of Spaine in divers parts both by ſea and land, not onely of the ſtrongeſt ſhips in all places within his dominions, but of all ſorts of proviſion neceſſary for ſo mighty a Fleet, as hee intended to ſet forth; and theſe rumors of warre, which before were but ſleight, daily increaſing, at laſt it was certainely confirmed by the newes on all ſides, that in Spaine there was an invincible Navy preparing againſt England; that the moſt famous captaines in military knowledge, and the beſt ſouldiers were ſent for into Spaine, from Italy, Sicily, yea from America. For the Pope and ſome religious Spaniards, and Engliſh fugitives, now recalled the Spaniard to the cogitation of ſurpriſing of England, which purpoſe was interrupted by the Portugall warres. They exhorted him earneſtly to doe God this ſervice, that had done ſo much for him; now that he enjoyed Portugall with the Weſt-Indies, and many rich Iſlands, to adde England to all, were an eſpeciall ſervice of God, fit for his Catholike Majeſty. By this meanes hee might adde theſe flouriſhing Kingdomes to his Empire, and ſo keepe the Low-countries in peace, and ſecure the navigations to both Indies. That the preparations of Spaine were ſo great that no power was able to reſiſt it. They made him beleeve that it was an eaſier matter to overcome England, than to overcome the Dutchland, becauſe the navigation from Spain to England was much ſhorter, than to the Netherlands. And by ſurpriſing of England the other would eaſily follow.

Conſultation about the beſt way & means how to oppreſſe England.

Hereupon the conſultation began to be had, of the beſt way and meanes to oppreſſe England. Alvarus Baſſanus, the Marqueſſe of S. Croſſe, who was chiefe commander in the Navy, adviſed firſt to make ſure ſome part of Holland or Zealand, by the Land forces of the Duke of Parma, and by ſending before ſome Spaniſh ſhips, ſo to take ſome place on a ſudden, where the Spaniſh Navy might have a receptacle, and from whence the invaſion might with convenience begin. For in the Engliſh ſea, which is troubleſome, the windes oft changing, and the tides unknowne, the Navy could not be in ſafety. With him agreed Parma who much urged this expedition. Yet others diſliked this counſell, as a matter of great difficulty and danger, of long time, of much labor, of great expence, and uncertaine ſucceſſe. And that neither ſecretly nor openly it could be performed, and eaſily hindered by the Engliſh. Theſe thought that with the ſame labour and expences England might be won: and the victory would be ſure, if a well prepared army from Spaine might with a ſtrong Navy be landed on Thames ſide, and of a ſudden ſurpriſe London the chiefe City, by an unexpected aſſault. This ſeemed a thing moſt eaſie to be effected.

The Duke of Parma playes his part.

The Duke of Parma alſo in Flanders, by the commandement of the Spaniard, built ſhips, and a great company of ſmall broad veſſels, each one able to tranſport thirty horſe, with bridges fitted for them ſeverally; And hired mariners from the Eaſt part of Germany. And provided long pieces of wood, ſharpened at the end, and covered with yron, with hooks on the one ſide; And twenty thouſand veſſels, with an huge number of fagots, and placed an army ready in Flanders, of an 103. companies of foot, and foure thouſand horſemen. Among theſe were ſeven hundred Engliſh fugitives, which were had of all other in moſt contempt. Neither was Stanley reſpected or heard, who was ſet over the Engliſh, nor Weſtmerland, nor any other who offered their help: but for their impiety towards their owne countrey were ſhut out from all conſultations, and as men unominous rejected, not without deteſtation. And Pope Sixtus the fifth, that in ſuch a purpoſe would not be wanting, ſent Cardinall Alan into Flanders, and renued the Buls declaratory of Pius 5. and Gregory the thirteenth. He excommunicateth the Queen, depoſeth her, abſolveth her ſubjects from all allegiance, and as if it had been againſt the Turks and Infidels, he ſet forth in print a Conceat, wherein he beſtowed plenary indulgences, out of the treaſure of the Church (beſides a million of gold, or ten hundred thouſand Duckats, to be diſtributed, (the one half in hand, the other halfe when either England or ſome famous haven therein ſhould be won) upon all them that would joyne their helpe againſt England. By which meanes the Marqueſſe of Burgaw, of the houſe of Auſtria, the Duke of Paſtrana, Amady Duke of Savoy, Veſpaſian Gonzaga, Jo. Medices, and divers other noblemen were drawn into theſe wars.

The Pope excommunicates the Queen, &c.

Queene Elizabeth, that ſhe might not be ſurpriſed at unawares, prepared as great a Navy as ſhe could, and with ſingular care and providence maketh ready all things neceſſary for war. And ſhe her ſelfe, which was ever moſt judicious in diſcerning of mens wits and aptneſſe, and moſt happy in making choice, when ſhe made it out of her owne judgement, and not at the commandement of others, deſigned the beſt and moſt ſerviceable to each ſeverall imployment. Over the whole Navy ſhe appointed the Lord Admirall Charles Howard, in whom ſhee repoſed much truſt; and ſent him to the Weſt parts of England, where Captaine Drake, whom ſhe made Viceadmirall, joyned with him. She commanded Henry Seimor, the ſecond ſonne to the Duke of Somerſet, to watch upon the Belgicke ſhore with forty Engliſh and Dutch ſhippes, that the Duke of Parma might not come out with his forces. Albeit ſome were of opinion, that the enemy was to be expected, and ſet upon by land forces, according as it was upon deliberation reſolved, in the time of Henry the eighth, when the French brought a great Navy upon the Engliſh ſhore.

The Queen ſelects out ſuch able and ſerviceable men as were fitteſt to undertake ſo great imployment.

For the land fight, there were placed on the South ſhores twenty thouſand: And two armies beſides were muſtered of the choiceſt men for war. The one of theſe which conſiſted of 1000. horſe, twenty two thouſand foot, was the Earle of Leiceſter ſet over, and camped at Tilbury on the ſide of Thames. For the enemy was reſolved firſt to ſet upon London. The other army was governed by the Lord Hunſdon, conſiſting of thirty foure thouſand foot, and two thouſand horſe, to guard the Queene.

Order taken about the land fight.

The Lord Grey, Sir Francis Knolles, Sir John Norice, Sir Richard Bingham, Sir Roger Williams, men famouſly knowne for military experience, were choſen to conferre of the land fight. Theſe thought fit that all thoſe places ſhould be fortified, with men and munition, which were commodious to land in, either out of Spaine, or out of Flanders, as Milford haven, Falmouth, Plimmouth, Portland, the Iſle of Wight, Portſmouth, the open ſide of Kent called the Downes, the mouth of Thames, Harwich, Yarmouth, Hul, &c. That trained ſouldiers through all the maritime provinces ſhould meet upon warning given, to defend theſe places: that they ſhould, by their beſt meanes and power, hinder the enemy to take land; if he ſhould take land, then ſhould they waſt the Countrey all about, and ſpoyle every thing that might be of any uſe to the enemy, that ſo hee might find no more victuals then what he brought upon his ſhoulders with him. And that by continuall alarums the enemy ſhould find no reſt day or night. But they ſhould not try any battell, untill divers Captaines were met together with their companies. That one Captaine might be named in every ſhire which might command.

Two yeares before, the Duke of Parma conſidering how hard a matter it was to end the Belgicke warre, ſo long as it was continually nouriſhed and ſupported with ayde from the Queene, he moved for a treaty of peace, by the meanes of Sir James Croft one of the privy Counſell, a man deſirous of peace, and Andrew Loe a Dutchman, and profeſſed that the Spaniard had delegated authority to him for this purpoſe. But the Queene fearing that there was ſome cunning in this ſeeking of peace, that the friendſhip betweene her and the confederate Princes might bee diſ-

A Counſell about peace pretended on the adverſaries part, whilſt they intended to make war.

Anno 1588.

It is the honor of a King, ſaith Solomon, to ſearch out a thing.

Delegats ſent into Flanders about a treaty of peace ſolved, and that ſo they might ſecretly be drawne to the Spaniard; ſhe deferred that treaty for ſome time. But now, that the wars on both ſides prepared might be turned away, ſhee was content to treat of peace; but ſo, as ſtill holding the weapons in her hand.

For this purpoſe in February Delegats were ſent into Flanders, the Earle of Darby, the Lord Cobham, Sir James Croft, Doctor Dale, and doctor Rogers. Theſe were received with all humanity on the Dukes behalfe, and they preſently ſent Doctor Dale to him, that a place might be appointed for their treating, and that they might ſee the authority delegated to him by the Spaniſh King. Hee appointed the place neere to Oſtend, not in Oſtend, which then was holdē of Engliſh againſt the King. His authority delegated he promiſed then to ſhew, when they were once met together. Hee wiſhed them to make good ſpeed in the buſineſſe, leſt ſomewhat might fall out in the meane time which might trouble the motions of peace. Richardotus ſpake ſomewhat more plainly, That he knew not what in this interim ſhould be done againſt England.

Not long after, Doctor Rogers was ſent to the Prince, by an expreſſe commandement from the Queene, to know the truth, whether the Spaniard had reſolved to invade England, which he and Richardotus ſeemed to ſignifie. He affirmed, that he did not ſo much as thinke of the invaſion of England, when he wiſhed that the buſines might proced with ſpeed: and was in a manner offended with Richardotus, who denied that ſuch words fell from him.

The twelfth of April the Count Aremberg, Champigny, Richardotus, D. Maeſius, and Garnier, delegated from the Prince of Parma, met with the Engliſh, and yeelded to them the honour both in walking and ſitting. And when they affirmed that the Duke had full authority to treat of peace, the Engliſh moved, thot firſt a truce might be made. Which they denied; alledging that that thing muſt needs be hurtfull to the Spaniard, who had for ſix moneths maintained a great army, which might not be diſmiſſed upon a truce, but upon an abſolute peace. The Engliſh urged, That a Truce was promiſed before they came into Flanders. The Spaniard againſt that held, That ſixe moneths ſince a Truce was promiſed; which they granted, but was not admitted. Neither was it in the Queenes power to undertake a Truce for Holland and Zealand, who dayly attempted hoſtility. The Engliſh moved inſtantly, that the Truce might be generall for all the Queenes Territories, and for the Kingdome of Scotland: but they would have it but for foure Dutch towns which were in the Queens hands; that is, Oſtend, Fluſhing, Bergen up Zom, and the Briel; and theſe onely during the Treating, and twenty daies after; and that in the mean time it might bee lawfull for the Queene to invade Spaine, or for the Spaniard to invade England, either from Spain or Flanders. At laſt, when the Engliſh could not obtaine an abſtinence from armes, and could by no means ſee the Charter by which the Duke of Parma was authoriſed to treat of peace; they propoſed theſe things, That the antient leagues betweene the Kings of England and the Dukes of Burgondy might bee renewed and confirmed; That all the Dutch might fully enioy their own priviledges; That with freedome of conſcience they might ſerve God; That the Spaniſh and forraine ſouldiers might bee put out of Dutchland, that neither the Dutch nor their neighbouring nations might feare them. If theſe things might be granted, the Queene would come to equall conditions concerning the townes which now ſhe held (that all might know, that ſhe tooke up armes not for her owne gaine, but for the neceſſary defence both of her ſelfe and of the Dutch) ſo that the money which is owing therefore be repayed. To the which they anſwered, that for renewing the old leagues there ſhould be no difficulty, when they might have a friendly conference of that thing. That concerning the priviledges of the Dutch, there was no cauſe why forraine Princes ſhould take care, which priviledges were moſt favourably granted not onely to provinces and townes reconciled, but even to ſuch as by force of armes are brought into ſubjection. That forraine ſouldiers were held upon urgent neceſſity, when as Holland, England, and France were all in armes.

Touching thoſe Townes taken from the king of Spaine, and the repaying of the money, they anſwered, That the Spaniard might demand for many myriads of Crownes to be from the Queene repayed him, as the Belgicke war hath coſt him ſince the time that ſhe hath favoured and protected the Dutch againſt him.

At this time Doctor Dale by the Queens command, going to the Duke of Parma, did gently expoſtulate with him touching a booke printed there, ſet out lately by Cardinall Allen, wherein he exhorts the Nobles and people of England and Ireland to joyn themſelves to the King of Spains forces, under the conduct of the Prince of Parma, for the execution of the ſentence of Pope Sixtus the fifth againſt the Queene, declared by his Bull; in the which ſhe is declared an heretike, illegitimate, cruell againſt Mary Queene of Scots, and her ſubjects were commanded to help Parma againſt her: (for at that time a great number of thoſe Bulls and Books were printed at Antwerp to be diſperſed through England.) The Duke denied that he had ſeen ſuch a Bull or Booke, neither would he doe any thing by the Popes authority, as for his owne King, him he muſt obey. Yet hee ſaid, he ſo obſerved the Queen for her princely vertues, that after the King of Spaine he offered all ſervice to her. That he had perſwaded the King of Spaine to yeeld to this treaty of peace, which is more profitable for Engliſh than Spaniſh: for if they ſhould be overcome they would eaſily repaire their loſſe, but if you be overcome the Kingdome is loſt.

To whom Dale replyed, That our Queen was ſufficiently furniſhed with forces to defend the Kingdome. That a Kingdome will not eaſily be gotten by the fortune of one battell, ſeeing the King of Spaine in ſo long a warre is not yet able to recover his antient patrimony in the Netherlands.

Well, quoth the Duke, be it ſo, theſe things are in Gods hands.

After this the Delegates contended among themſelves by mutuall replications, weaving and unweaving the ſame web. The Engliſh were earneſt in this, that freedome of religion might be granted at leaſt for two yeares to the confederate Provinces. They anſwered, That as the King of Spain had not intreated that for Engliſh Catholikes; ſo they hoped the Queen in her wiſedome would not intreat any thing of the King of Spaine which might ſtand againſt his honor, his oath, and his conſcience.

When they demanded the money due from the States of Brabant, it was anſwered, That the money was lent without the Kings authority or privity: but let the account be taken, how much the money was, and how much the King hath ſpent in theſe wars, ond then it may appeare who ſhould looke for repayment.

Thus the Engliſh of ſet purpoſe were from time to time driven off, untill the Spaniſh fleet was come neere the Engliſh ſhore, and the noiſe of Guns were heard from Sea. Then had they leave to depart, and were by the Delegates honorably brought to the borders neere to Calis. The Duke of Parma had in the meane time brought all his forces to the Sea ſhore.

Thus this conference came to nothing; undertaken by the Queene, as the wiſer then thought, to avert the Spaniſh fleet; continued by the Spaniard, that he might oppreſſe the Queene, being as he ſuppoſed unprovided, and not expecting the danger. So both of them tryed to uſe time to their beſt advantages.

Preparation for ſetting forth of the Spaniſh fleet

In fine the Spaniſh Fleet well furniſhed with men, munition, Engines, and all warlike preparation, the beſt indeed that was ever ſeen upon the Ocean, called by that arrogant title the Invincible Navy, conſiſting of a hundred and thirty ſhips, wherein there were nineteene thouſand two hundred ninety; Mariners eight thouſand three hundred and fifty: chained rowers eleven thouſand and eighty: great Ordnance eleven thouſand ſix hundred and thirty. The chiefe commander was Perezius Guſmannus, Duke of Medina Sidonia; (For Antonius Columna Duke of Palian and Marqueſſe of Saint Croſſe, unto whom the chiefe government was allotted, dyed whileſt things were preparing.) And under him alſo Joannes Martinus Ricaldus, a man of great experience in Sea affaires.

The time when the navy ſet out.

The great fleet ſore ſhaken with a tempeſt.

The 30. of May they looſed out of the River Tagus, and purpoſing to hold their courſe to the Groine, in Gallitia, they were beaten and ſcattered by a tempeſt: three Gallies by the helpe of David Gwin an Engliſh ſervant, and by the perfidiouſneſſe of the Turkes which rowed, were caried away into France. The Fleet with much adoe after ſome dayes came to the Groine and other harbours neere adjoyning. The report was, that the Fleet was ſo ſhaken with this tempeſt, that the Queen was perſwaded, that ſhe was not to expect that Fleet this yeare. And ſir Francis Walſingham, Secretary, wrote to the Lord Admirall, that he might ſend backe foure of the greateſt ſhips, as if the war had been ended. But the Lord Admirall did not eaſily give credit to that report; yet with a gentle anſwer entreated him to beleeve nothing haſtily in ſo important a matter: As alſo that he might be permitted to keepe thoſe Shippes with him which hee had, though it were upon his owne charges. And finding a favourable winde turned Sailes towards Spaine, to ſurpriſe the enemies ſhaken Ships in their harbours. When he was not far from the ſhore of Spaine, the winde turned, and hee being charged to defend the Engliſh ſhore, fearing that the enemies unſeene might by the ſame wind be driven to England, he returned unto Plimmouth.

Now with the ſame winde, the twelfth of July, the duke of Medina with his fleet departed from the Groine. And after a few daies he ſent Rodericus Telius into Flanders, to advertiſe the duke of Parma, giving him warning that the fleet was approaching, and therefore he was to make himſelfe ready. For Medina his Commiſſion was to joyne himſelfe with the Ships and Souldiers of Parma; and under the protection of his Fleet, to bring them into England, and to land his land forces upon Thames ſide.

The Spaniſh Navy the ſecond time ſcattered.

Flemming a Pyrate diſcovers the Spaniſh fleet to the Engliſh.

The ſixteenth day (ſaith the relator) there was a great calme, and a thicke cloud was upon the Sea till noone: then the North winde blowing roughly, and againe the Weſt winde till midnight, and after that the Eaſt; the Spaniſh Navy was ſcattered, and hardly gathered together untill they came within the ſight of England the nineteenth day of July. Upon which day the Lord Admirall was certified by Flemming (who had beene a Pyrate) that the Spaniſh Fleet was entred into the Engliſh Sea, which the Mariners call the Channell, and was diſcryed neere to the Liſard. The Lord Admirall brought forth the Engliſh Fleet into the Sea, but not without great difficulty, by the ſkill, labour, and alacrity of the ſouldiers and mariners, every one labouring; yea the Lord Admirall himſelfe put his hand to this worke.

The faſhion of the Spaniſh fleet deſcribed.

The next day the Engliſh Fleet viewed the Spaniſh Fleet comming along with Towers like Caſtles in height, her front crooked like the faſhion of the Moone, the hornes of the front were extended one from the other about ſeven miles, or as ſome ſay eight miles aſunder, ſailing with the labour of the windes, the Ocean as it were groaning under it; their ſaile was but ſlow, and yet at full ſaile before the winde. The Engliſh were willing to let them hold on their courſe, and when they were paſſed by, got behind them, and ſo got the help of the winde.

The firſt fight

Upon the one and twentieth of July, the Lord Admirall of Eugland ſent a Pinace before, called the Defiance, to denounce the battell by ſhooting off ſome peeces. And being himſelfe in the Arch-Royall (the. Engliſh Pretorian ſhip or Admirall) he ſet upon a ſhip which he tooke to be the Spaniſh Admirall, but it was the ſhip of Alfonſus Leva. Upon that he beſtowed much ſhot. Preſently Drake, Hawkins, and Forbiſher came in upon the Spaniſh hindmoſt ſhips which Ricaldus governed. Upon theſe they thundred. Ricaldus laboured as much as lay in him to ſtay his men, who fled away in their Navy, untill his ſhip beaten and much battered with many ſhot hardly recovered the Fleet. Then the Duke Medina gathered together his diſſipated Fleet, and ſetting up more ſaile, held on their courſe. Indeed they could doe no other, for the Engliſh had gotten the advantage of winde, and their ſhips were much more nimble, and ready with incredible celerity to come upon the enemy with a full courſe, and then to turne and returne, and be on every ſide at their pleaſure. After a long fight, and that each of them had taken ſome triall, as of their owne courage, ſo of the Spaniards alſo, the Lord Admirall thought good not to continue the ſame any longer, in regard that forty ſhips were then abſent, which at that inſtant were ſcarce drawne out of Plimmouth Haven.

The night following, Saint Katherine a Spaniſh ſhip, being ſore torne with the fight, was received into the middeſt of the Navy to be mended. Here a great Cantabrian ſhip of Oquenda, wherein was the Treaſurer of the Campe, by force of Gun-powder that had taken fire, was fired: yet it was quenched in time by the ſhippes that came to helpe her. Of theſe that came to helpe the fired ſhip, one was a Galeon, in which was Petrus Waldez; the foremaſt of the Galeon was caught in the tackling of another ſhip, and broken. This was taken by Drake, who ſent Waldez to Dartmouth, and a great ſumme of money, viz. fifty five thouſand duckats, which he diſtributed amongſt the ſouldiers. This Waldez comming into Drakes preſence, kiſſed his hand, and told him they had all reſolved to die, if they had not beene ſo happy as to fall into his hands, whom he knew to be noble. That night he was appointed to ſet forth light, but neglected it; and ſome Germane Merchant ſhips comming by that night, he thinking them to be enemies followed them ſo far, that the Engliſh Navy reſted all night when they could ſee no light ſet forth. Neither did he nor the reſt of the Navy finde the Admirall untill the next day at Even. The Admirall all the night proceeding with the Beare and the Mary Roſe did carefully follow the Spaniards with watchfulneſſe. The Duke was buſied in ordering his Navy. Alfonſus Leva was commanded to joyne the firſt and laſt companies. Every ſhip had his ſtation aſſigned according to that preſcribed forme which was appointed in Spaine; it was preſent death to forſake his ſtation. This done, he ſent Oliclius an Anceani to Parma, which might declare to him in what caſe they were, and left that Cantabrian ſhip of Oquenda to the winde and Sea, having taken out the money and mariners, and put them in other ſhips. Yet it ſeemeth that he had not care of all: for that Ship the ſame day with fifty Mariners and ſouldiers lamed, and halfe burnt, fell into the hands of the Engliſh, and was carried to Weymuth.

The three and twentieth of the ſame moneth, the Spaniards having a favourable North winde turned ſailes upon the Engliſh; the Engliſh being much readier in the uſe of their ſhips, ſet about a compaſſe for the winde, and having gotten advantage of the winde, they came to the fight on both ſides. They fought a while confuſedly with variable ſucceſſe: whileſt on the one ſide the Engliſh with great courage delivered the London ſhips which were incloſed about by the Spaniards; on the other ſide the Spaniards by valour freed Ricaldus from the extreme danger he was in: great were the effulminatiõs which by beating of Ordnances were heard this day. But the loſſe (by the good providence of God) fell upon the Spaniſh ſide, their ſhips being ſo high that the ſhot went over our Engliſh ſhips; and the Engliſh having ſuch a faire mark at their taller ſhips never ſhot in vaine. Amidſt which encounters, Cock an Engliſhman, being caught indeed in the middeſt of the Spaniſh ſhips, could not be recovered, but periſhed, howbeit with great honor he revenged himſelfe. Thus a long time the Engliſh ſhips with great agility were ſometimes upon the Spaniards, giving them the one ſide, and then the other, and preſently were off againe, and ſtill tooke the Sea, to make themſelves ready to come in againe. Whereas the Spaniſh ſhips being of great burthen were troubled and hindred, and ſtood to bee markes for the Engliſh Bullets. For all that the Admirall would not admit the Engliſh to come to board their ſhips, becauſe they had a full army in their ſhips, which he had not; their ſhips were many in number, and greater, and higher, that if they had come to grapple, as ſome would have had it, the Engliſh being much lower then the Spaniſh ſhips muſt needs have had the worſt of them that fought from the higher ſhips. And if the Engliſh had been overcome, the loſſe would have been greater than the victory could have been; for ours being overcome would have put the kingdome in hazard.

The Admirall would not ſuffer his ſhips to come to grapple with the Spaniſh.

The foure and twentieth day of July they gave over fighting on both ſides. The Admirall ſent ſome ſmall Barkes to the next Engliſh ſhore, to ſupply the proviſion; And divided all his Navy into foure ſquadrons: The firſt whereof was under his owne government; the next Drake governed; the third Hawkins; the laſt Forbiſher. And he appointed out of every ſquadron certaine little ſhips, which on divers ſides might ſet upon the Spaniards in the night, but a ſudden calme tooke them, and ſo that advice was without effect.

The third fight.

The five and twentieth day, being S. James day, S. Anne the Galeon of Portugall, not being able to hold courſe with the reſt, was ſet upon by ſome ſmall Engliſh ſhips. To whoſe aide came in Leva, and Didacus Telles Enriques with three Galeaſſes: which the Admirall and the Lord Thomas Howard eſpying, made in againſt the Galeaſſes (the calme was ſo great that they were drawne in by boats with cords) and did ſo beat upon the Galeaſſes with great ſhot, that with much adoe, and not without great loſſe, they hardly recovered the Galeon. The Spaniards reported that the Admirall of Spaine was that day in the hindmoſt company, and being come neerer the Engliſh ſhips then before, was ſore beaten with the Engliſh great Ordnance, many men ſlaine in her, her great maſt overthrowne. And after that the Admirall of Spaine, accompanied with Ricaldus and others, did ſet upon the Engliſh Admirall, who by the benefit of the winde ſuddenly turning eſcaped. The Spaniards hold on their courſe againe, and ſend to the Duke of Parma, that with all ſpeed he ſhould joyne his ſhips with the Kings Fleet. Theſe things the Engliſh knew not, who write that they had ſtricken the Lanthorne from one of the Spaniſh ſhips, the ſtemme from another, and had ſore beaten a third, doing much harme to her. That the Non Parigly, and the Mary Roſe fought a good while with the Spaniards; and the Triumph being in danger, other ſhips came in good time to help her.

Knights made.

The next day the Lord Admirall knighted the Lord Thomas Howard, The Lord Sheffield, Roger Townesend, John Hawkins, and Martin Forbiſher, for their valour well imployed in the laſt fight. After this they reſolved not to ſet upon the enemy untill they came into the ſtraight of Calis, where Henry Seimor, and William Winter ſtaid for their comming. Thus with the faire gale the Spaniſh Fleet goeth forward, and the Engliſh followed. This great Spaniſh Armadoe was ſo far from being eſteemed Invincible in the opinions of the Engliſh, that many yong men and Gentlemen, in hope to be partakers of a famous victory againſt the Spaniards, provided ſhips of their owne charges, and joyned themſelves to the Engliſh Fleet; among whom were the Earles of Eſſex, of Northumberland, of Cumberland, Thomas and Robert Cecills, Henry Brookes, William Hatton, Robert Cary, Ambroſe Willoughby, Thomas Gerard, Arthur Gorge, and other Gentlemen of good note and quality.

Noblemen and Gentlemen joyne with the Fleet.

Purpoſing to execute their deſigne on Friday the 12. of Auguſt, the night being dark, but how happily the ſame was prevented, reade the next ſection following.

The ſeven and twentieth day at Even, the Spaniards caſt anchor neere to Calis, being admoniſhed of their ſkilfull Sea-men, that if they went any further, they might be indangered by force of that tide to be driven into the North Ocean. Neere to them ſtood the Engliſh Admirall with his Fleet within a great Guns ſhot. To the Admirall Seimor and Winter now joyne their ſhips; ſo that now there were an hundred and forty ſhips in the Engliſh Fleet, able and well furniſhed for fight, for ſaile, and to turne which way was needfull: and yet there were but fifteen of theſe which bore the burden of the battell and repulſed the enemy. The Spaniard, as often he had done before, ſo now with great earneſtneſſe ſent to the Duke of Parma to ſend forty flie boats, without the which they could not fight with the Engliſh, becauſe of the greatneſſe and ſlowneſſe of their owne ſhips, and the agility of the Engliſh ſhips: And intreating him by all meanes now to come to Sea with his army, which army was now to be protected as it were under the wings of the Spaniſh Armadoe, untill they tooke land in England.

But the Duke was unprovided, and could not come out at an inſtant. The broad ſhippes with flat bottomes being then full of chinkes muſt bee mended. Victuals wanted and muſt be provided. The Mariners being long kept againſt their wills beganne to ſhrinke away. The Ports of Dunkerke and Nieuport, by which he muſt bring his army to the ſea, were now ſo beſet with the ſtrong ſhips of Holland and Zealand, which were furniſhed with great and ſmall munition, that he was not able to come to Sea, unleſſe he would come upon his owne apparent deſtruction, and caſt himſelfe and his men wilfully into a headlong danger. Yet he omitted nothing that might be done, being a man eager and induſtrious, and inflamed with a deſire of overcomming England.

A notable ſtratagem of the Engliſh.

But Queene Elizabeth her providence and care prevented both the diligence of this man, and the credulous hope of the Spaniard: for by her commandement the next day the Admirall tooke eight of their worſt ſhips, charging the Ordnance therein up to the mouth with ſmall ſhot, nailes, and ſtones, and dreſſed them with wilde fire, pitch, and roſin, and filled them full of brimſtone and ſome other matter fit for fire, and theſe being ſet on fire by the miniſtery and guiding of Yong and Prowſe, were ſecretly in the night by the helpe of the winde ſet full upon the Spaniſh Fleete, which on Sunday the ſeventh of Auguſt they ſent in among them as they lay at anchor.

When the Spaniards ſaw them come neere, the flame ſhining and giving light all over the ſea; they ſuppoſing thoſe ſhips, beſides the danger of fire, to have beene alſo furniſhed with deadly Engines, to make horrible deſtruction among them; lifting up a moſt hideous wofull cry, ſome pull up anchors, ſome for haſte cut their Cables, they ſet up their ſailes, they apply their oares, and ſtriken with a Pannick terror, in great haſte they fled moſt confuſedly. Among them the Pretorian galleaſſe floating upon the Seas, her rudder being broken, in great danger and feare drew towards Calis, and ſticking in the Sand was taken by Amias Preſton, Thomas Gerard, and Harvey; Hugh Moncada the governor was ſlaine, the ſoldiers and Mariners were either killed or drowned; In her there was found great ſtore of Gold, which fell to be the prey of the Engliſh. The ſhip and Ordnance fell to the ſhare of the Governour of Calis.

The Spaniards report, that the Duke when he ſaw the fiery ſhips comming commanded all the fleet to pull up their anchors, but ſo, as the danger being paſt, every ſhip might return again to his ſtation: and he himſelfe returned, giving a ſigne to the reſt by ſhooting off a Gun; which was heard but of a few, for they were far off ſcattered, ſome into the open Ocean, ſome through feare were driven upon the ſhallowes of the coaſt of Flanders.

The 4. fight before Graveling, Aug 8.

Over againſt Graveling the Spaniſh fleet began to gather themſelves together. But upon them came Drake and Fenner, and battered them with great Ordnance: to theſe Fenton, Southwell, Beeſton, Croſſe, Riman, and preſently after the Lord Admiral, Thomas Howard, and Sheffield came in and all joyned together. The Duke Medina, Leva, Oquenda, Ricaldus, and others with much adoe getting themſelves out of the ſhallows ſuſtained the Engliſh force as well as they might, untill moſt of their ſhips were pierced and torne; the Galleon S. Matthew, governed by Diego Pimentellus, comming to aide Francis Toletan, being in the S. Philip, was pierced and ſhaken with the reiterated ſhots of Seimor and Winter, and driven to Oſtend, and was at laſt taken by the Fluſhingers. The S. Philip came to the like end; ſo did the Galleon of Biſcay and divers others.

The laſt day of this moneth, the Spaniſh fleet ſtriving to recover the ſtraights again, were driven toward Zealand. The Engliſh left off purſuing them, as the Spaniards thought, becauſe they ſaw them in a manner caſt away; for they could not avoid the ſhallowes of Zealand. But the winde turning, they gat them out of the ſhallowes, and then began to conſult what were beſt for them to doe. By common conſent they reſolved to returne into Spaine by the Northerne Seas, for they wanted many neceſſaries, eſpecially ſhot, their ſhips were torne, and they had no hope that the Duke of Parma could bring forth his forces. And ſo they tooke the Sea, and followed the courſe toward the North. The Engliſh Navy followed, and ſometimes the Spaniſh turned upon the Engliſh, inſomuch that it was thought by many that they would turne backe againe.

¶ A deſcription of the Queenes comming to the Campe at Tilbury, with the manner of her behaviour there, as it is related by a Popiſh Spie, in a letter written here in England to Mendea. The Copy of which letter by good happe was found in the chamber of one Richard Leigh a Seminary Prieſt, as well in French as Engliſh: which Prieſt was executed for high Treaſon whileſt the Spaniſh Armado was on the Sea.

The Queene comes to the campe at Tilbury.

SHee cauſed alſo, ſaith he, an army to incampe neere the Sea ſide upon the river of Thames. After the army was come thither, ſhe would not by any advice be ſtayed, but for comfort of her people, and to ſhew her owne magnanimity of heart, ſhe went thereunto, lying at that time betweene the City of London and the ſea, under the charge of the Earle of Leiceſter, placing her ſelfe betweene the Enemy and her City; and there ſhe viewed her army, paſſing through it divers times, and lodging in the borders of it, returned againe and dined in the army. Firſt viewing from place to place the people as they were by their Countries lodged and quartered by their ſeverall camps. Afterwards when they were all reduced into battell, prepared as it were for fight, ſhe rode round about with a Leaders ſtaffe in her hand, only accompanied with the Generall and three or foure others attending upon her: but yet to ſhew her ſtate (I well marked it) ſhe had the ſword carried before her by the Earle of Ormond. There ſhee was generally ſaluted with cryes, with ſhouts, with all tokens of love, of obedience, of readineſſe, and willingneſſe to fight for her, as ſeldome hath the like beene ſeene in an army, conſidering ſhee was a Queene. All which tended to ſhew a marvellous concord in a mutuall love betweene a Queen and her ſubjects, and of reverence and obedience of ſubjects to their Soveraigne; all which ſhee requited with very princely thankes and a good ſpeech.

I could enlarge the deſcription hereof with many more particulars of mine owne ſight; for thither I went as many others did, and all that day wandring from place to place, I never heard any word ſpoken of her, but in praiſing her for her ſtately perſon and princely behaviour, and in praying for her life and ſafety, with curſing of all her enemies, both traitors and all Papiſts, with earneſt deſire to venture their lives for her ſafety. And beſides ſuch particular acclamations, the whole army in every quarter did ſo devoutly at certaine times ſing in her hearing, in very tunable manner, divers Pſalmes put into forme of prayers, in praiſe to Almighty God, no waies to be miſliked, that ſhe greatly commended them, and with very earneſt ſpeech thanked God with them. This that I write you may be ſure I doe not with any comfort, but to give you theſe manifeſt arguments, that neither this Queene doth diſcontent her people, nor her people doe ſhew any diſcontent in any thing they be commanded to doe for her ſervice, as heretofore hath been imagined.

The ſame day wherein the laſt fight was, the Duke of Parma, after his vowes offered to the Lady of Halla, came ſomewhat late to Dunkerk, and was received with ſome opprobrious words of the Spaniards, as if in favour of Queene Elizabeth he had ſlipped the faireſt opportunity that could be to doe the ſervice. He to make ſome ſatisfaction, puniſhed the purveiours that had not made proviſion of beere, bread, and victuals which was not yet ready nor imbarked; ſecretly ſmiling at the inſolency of the Spaniards, when he heard them glorying, that what way ſoever they came upon England, they would have an undoubted victory; that the Engliſh were not able to endure the ſight of them. Bernardinus Mendoza did indeed by Bookes in France ſing a fooliſh and lying triumphant ſong before the victory. The Engliſh Admirall appointed Seimor and the Hollanders to watch upon the coaſt of Flanders, that the Duke of Parma ſhould not come out; himſelfe followed the Spaniards upon their backes, untill they were paſt Edenborough frith.

For which a Papiſt ſticks not to taxe him, writing upon this ſubject to Mendoza.

The Spaniards diſmaied flie away for feare.

The Spaniards ſeeing all hopes faile, and finding no other help for themſelves but by flight, fled amaine, and never made ſtay. And ſo this great Navy, being three yeares preparing with great coſt, was within a moneth overthrown, and after many were killed, being chaſed away (of Engliſh there were not one hundred loſt, nor one ſhip loſt, ſaving that of Cocks) was driven about all Britaine by Scotland, Orcades, Ireland, toſſed and ſhaken with tempeſts, and much leſſened, and came home without glory. Whereupon ſome money was coined with a Navy fleeing away at full ſaile, and this inſcription, Venit, Vidit, Fugit. Other were coined with the ſhips fired, the navy confounded, in honour of the Queene, inſcribed, Dux fœmina facti. As they fled, it is certain that many of their ſhips were caſt away upon the ſhores of Scotland and Ireland. More then ſeven hundred ſoldiers and Mariners were caſt up upon the Scottiſh ſhore, who at the Duke of Parma his interceſſion with the Scots King, the Queene of England conſenting, were after a yeare ſent into Flanders. But they that were caſt up upon the Iriſh ſhore by tempeſts came to more miſerable fortunes; for ſome were killed by the wilde Iriſh; others by the Deputies command; for he fearing that they might joyne themſelves to the wild Iriſh (& Bingham the Governor of Connach being once or twice commanded to ſlay them having yeelded, but refuſing to doe it) Fowle the under Marſhall was ſent, and killed them; which cruelty the Queen much condemned; whereupon the reſt being afraid, ſick, and hungry, with their torne ſhips committed themſelves to the ſea, and many were drowned.

And all their preparations blaſted: the Engliſh receiving ſmall loſſe, viz. not one hundred men in all, nor one ſhip but that of Cockes.

Queene Elizabeth came in publike thankeſgiving to Pauls Church, in a Chariot drawne with two horſes, her Nobles accompanying her with a very gallant traine through the ſtreets of London which were hung with blew cloth: the companies ſtanding on both ſides, were in their liveries; the Banners that were taken from the enemies were ſpred; ſhee heard the Sermon, and publique thankes were rendred unto God with great joy. This publique joy was augmented when ſir Robert Sidney, returning out of Scotland, brought from the King aſſurance of his noble minde and affection to the Queene, and to religion; which as in ſincerity he had eſtabliſhed, ſo he purpoſed to maintaine with all his power. Sir Robert Sidney was ſent to him when the Spaniſh fleet was comming, to congratulate and to give him thankes for his propenſe affection towards the maintenance of the common cauſe; and to declare how ready ſhe would be to help him if the Spaniards ſhould land in Scotland; and that he might recall to memory with what ſtrange ambition the Spaniard had gaped for all Britaine, urging the Pope to excommunicate him, to the end that he might be thruſt from the Kingdome of Scotland, and from the ſucceſſion in England: and to give him notice of the threatning of Mendoza and the Popes Nuncio, who threatned his ruine if they could worke it; and therefore warned him to take eſpeciall heed to the Scottiſh Papiſts.

Queen Elizabeth giveth thankes to God for ſo unexpected a deliverance.

The King pleaſantly anſwered, That he looked for no other benefit from the Spaniard, then that which Polyphemus promiſed to Vlyſſes, to devoure him laſt after all his Fellowes were devoured.

¶ To cloſe up this whole relation, heare what Theodore Beza writes in certaine gratulatory Verſes written in Latine, and ſent unto her Majeſty: the effect of which Verſes is this in Engliſh.

WIth Navy huge the Spaniard proud
The Engliſh ſeas had ſpread,
And all to ſet the Engliſh Crowne
Vpon the Spaniſh head.

And would you gladly underſtand
The cauſe of all this rout,
Ambition firſt did lay the plot,
And lucre brought them out.

How well this pride thus puffed up
A puffe did overthrow:
And ſwelling wave ſuch ſwelling wights
How well did overflow.

How well that Worrier of mankinde,
That Spaniſh cruell Wolfe
Was toſt and tumbled up and downe
Within the Ocean gulfe.

And you for whom both all the windes
And all the waters fight,
O noble Queene, of all the world
The only true delight.

Goe forward ſtill to rule for God,
Ambition laid aſide;
Goe forward ſtill for Chriſt his Flocke
In bounty to provide.

That thou maiſt England governe long,
Long England thee enjoy,
As well a love unto the good,
As to the bad annoy.

From Geneva, beſieged by the Duke of Savoy, the twelfth day of Auguſt, Anno 15 9.

Your Majeſties moſt humble Orator,

Theodore Beza.

¶ The death of the Duke of Guiſe, and Henry the third King of France.

IT was not long after that the Duke of Guiſe, who was ſlain by the Lord Lougna at the kings Chamber doore, and King Henry the third were taken away; he being the laſt of the houſe of Vallois, and dying without any lawfull heires of his body begotten.

The manner of whoſe death was thus. A Frier of the Order of Saint Dominicke, called James Clement, pretended hee had matters of great conſequence to impart to the King: who being admitted into his preſence, upon his knees preſented the King with a Letter which he drew out of one ſleeve; which whilſt the King attentively read, the Frier pulled forth a poyſoned knife out of his other ſleeve, wherewith he ſtabbed the King into the lower part of his belly. The King feeling himſelfe hurt therewith, ſnaching it out of the wound, ſtrucke the ſame into the Friers eye, who haſting to get away, the King crying out, His Lords and Gentlemen perceiving what the Frier had done, ſlew him preſently with rapiers and ſwords. The King before hee died, having raigned fourteene yeares and ſeven moneths, called for the King of Navarre, all the Princes, Lords and Noblemen, that were in his campe, and declared that the King of Navarre was the true lawfull heire to the Crowne of France; willing them all to acknowledge him for their King, and that notice ſhould likewiſe be given throughout all his camp and Kingdome alſo.

The raigne of Henry the fourth over the kingdome of France.

Thus the ſoveraigne Judge of the world made way for the entrance of Henry the fourth to have dominion over the Kingdome of France. Now howſoever from the yeare 1589. to this preſent yeare 1598. the Churches of Chriſt have ſeene marvellous changes, and how the league for a time made many furious onſets: yet it pleaſed God ſo to moderate things, that the faithfull were preſerved from being perſecuted; yea, they obtained of their Prince many priviledges and favors. For the King in the firſt yeres of his raigne continuing in the profeſſion of the true Religion, wherein he had been bred and brought up, did manfully reſiſt both theſe of the league, and the Spaniards, the great God of battels bleſſing the right and juſt wars undertaken by this Prince, to the confuſion of all his enemies, till he fell to ſide with Popery; though the affairs of his Kingdome gained but little thereby.

¶ A Note touching the Popes Bull.

THe Leaguers ſeeing what proſperous ſucceſſe God gave King Henry the fourth in his wars undertaken againſt them, fearing that in the end all would yeeld unto him, they procured a new excommunication from Rome, againſt him and all his faithfull ſubjects, cauſing the ſame to bee publiſhed at Pont de l'Arch in Normandy, by Marcellus Laudrianus a malapert Jeſuite. The king, being advertiſed thereof, commanded his Court of Parliament holden at Cane, to proceed againſt Pope Gregory the fourteenth who ſent it, and his Nuncio that brought it, as againſt Tyrants, conſpirators with Rebels, perturbers of the ſtate, ſowers of ſeditions, and the common and notorious enemies of God and all goodneſſe.

Then taking the Popes Bull, he cauſed it to be faſtened to a Gibbet at Tours, by the common hangman of the towne, and there to be conſumed to aſhes, to the great rejoycing of all the beholders.

¶ The Hiſtory of one Margaret Pierrone, who choſe rather to be burned her ſelfe, than willingly to burne her Bible, Anno 1593.

THere was one Margaret Pierrone borne in a village of Cambray called Sanſay, who with her husband retired into the City of the Valencians. Now becauſe ſhe could not endure the bad qualities of a maid ſervant of hers, ſhee was by her ſaid maid accuſed to the new ſect-Maſters ſirnamed the Jeſuites, for that ſhee had not been in many yeares at the maſſe, as alſo for keeping in her houſe a Bible, in reading whereof was her whole delight. They acquainting the Magiſtrate herewith, ſhe was by and by apprehended: ſome friends ſent her an inckling thereof before hand once or twice, that ſhee ſhould get her ſome where out of the way: but the errand was not done, God having a purpoſe that ſhe ſhould beare witnes of his truth, to fill up the number of thoſe that were to die for the name of Jeſus.

Being in priſon, the Judges calling her before them, ſaid, Margaret, are you not willing to returne home unto your houſe, and there live with your husband and children? Yes ſaith ſhe, if it may ſtand with the good will of God. They added further, that they had ſo wrought with their Fathers the Jeſuites, that in doing a ſmall matter ſhe might be ſet at liberty, If, ſaith ſhe, it be not a thing contrary to Gods glory and mine owne ſalvation, you ſhall heare what I will ſay. No ſuch thing Margaret, ſaid they: for a ſcaffold ſhall be erected in the chiefe place of the City, upon which you are to preſent your ſelf, and there to crave pardon for your offending the Law; then a fire being kindled, you muſt caſt your bible therein to bee conſumed, without ſpeaking any word at all.

I pray you my maſters tell me, ſaith ſhee, Is my Bible a good booke, or no? Yes, we confeſſe it is, ſaid they, If you allow it to be good, ſaid the woman, why would you have me caſt it into the fire? Only ſaid they, to give the Jeſuits content. Imagine it to be but paper that you burne, and then all is well enough, doe ſo much for ſaving your life, and we will meddle no more with you; you may buy you another when you will.

They ſpent about two houres in perſwading her hereunto, ſhewing how ſhe might doe a leſſe evill, that a greater good might come of it. By the help of God, ſaith ſhee, I will never conſent to doe it. What would the people ſay, when they ſee me burne my Bible? will they not exclaime and ſay, yonder is a wretched woman indeed, that will burne the Bible wherein are contained all the Articles of our Chriſtian faith? I will burne my body ſure, before that I will burne my Bible.

Then ſeeing ſhe would in no ſort conforme her ſelfe either to the will of the Jeſuites, or to theirs, they cauſed her to be committed cloſe priſoner, and to be fed only with bread and water, none to be permitted ſo much as to ſpeake unto her, thinking by this hard uſage to overcome her: but all was to no purpoſe. Being thus long ſhut up, and no newes heard of her one way or other, every one imagined that they had put her to death privily. Her Judges were willing to have ſaved her life, ſending often a Doctor unto her called

Anno 1593.

N. of Vivenoyne to turne her from her reſolution; but he found it too hard a taſke for him to effect, often confeſſing to them that ſent him, that he found no cauſe at all in her why they ſhould put her to death.

But on Wedneſday the two and twentieth of January 1592, ſhee was condemned to be brought upon a ſtage ſet up in the Market place before the towne-houſe, there to ſee her bookes burnt; then her ſelfe to be ſtrangled at a poſt, and her body dragged to the dunghill without the City. Shee comming to the place, and aſcending the Scaffold, diſtinctly pronounced the Lords Prayer. Then ſeeing her bookes burned in her preſence, ſhe uttered theſe words with an audible voice; you burne there the word of God, which your ſelves have acknowledged to be good and holy. Having againe repeated the Lords Prayer, ſhe was ſtrangled and died peaceably in the Lord, ſo as ſhe was nothing altered in her colour after ſhee was dead, leaving to the Valencians the truth of this ſentence, Pretious in the ſight of the Lord is the martyrdome of his Saints; and to the Judges, and her hangmen the Jeſuites, a perpetuall corraſive to their conſciences.

Pſal.116.15.

¶ An Engliſh man burned at Rome.

IN the yeare 1595. about the end of May there was executed a young man at Rome about the age of five and twenty yeares, who went into the Church of Magdalen, where beholding their behaviour, being pricked forward with religious zeale and conſtant reſolution, not being able to endure the ſight of thoſe horrible impieties which were there committed amongſt them: As the Biſhop was ſetting forward to goe on proceſſion, this young man directed his way towards the Church porch: and as the proceſſion began to paſſe forward he waited till the Biſhop came that bare the Hoſt, and in his going forth ſtepped to the pixe, plucking it out of his hands, threw it to the ground, ſaying aloud, ye wretched Idolaters, doe ye fall downe to a morſell of bread? The people preſently fell upon the young man; yet without touching his perſon, notwithſtanding the great ſtirre they made, he was from thence ſent to priſon to the Capitoll. Complaint being made thereof to Pope Clement the eighth touching all that which had happened; He preſently ordained that he which had done it ſhould be burned the ſame day, for an example and terrour to all his companions. But ſome of the Popes Cardinals being then at hand, adviſed that he ſhould be detained rather a while in priſon, to be examined by all exquiſite tortures, to make him confeſſe his fellowes, and who had ſet him on. Having kept him eight daies in priſon, nothing could be drawne from him, but this ſpeech, Such was the will of God.

When they ſaw they could not prevaile, his inditement was framed, and his ſentence regiſtred, namely that he was to paſſe from the Capitoll, naked unto his middle, and to weare on his head the forme of a Devill, or Dragon, his breeches painted all over with flames of fire, and thus being bound in a cart, to be burned alive, being firſt carried in this manner about the City.

The Patient underſtanding how he was to be handled, lifting up his eies, implored helpe from the Almighty; and ſeeing how he was derided of all, continued in his devotion and prayers. He could not refraine from uttering ſomewhat againſt the life of the Cardinals and their aſſociates, who hearing it, began to be in a rage, and that he might no longer bewray their wickedneſſe, they cauſed a great gagge to be forced into his mouth, which vexed him more then all the reſt, when he teſtified, ſaying, How ſhall I call upon my God? But he patiently ſubmitted himſelfe to endure all their cruelties.

In this plight he was brought to Magdalens, where he had caſt downe the Idoll, and there one of the hangmen cut off his hand before the doore: at which the patient being not much moved, his hand being ſet on a pole in the cart, the two tormentors made him feele the force of the fire, taking each of them a great torch in his hand flaming, with which they ſcorched and burned his fleſh through all the city of Rome.

At length they arrived at the place called Campio de Fior, by which time the young man was brought into a pittifull caſe, being ſcorched all over his body, all bliſtered, and bloudy, having nothing whole but his head, which he now and then lifted up.

Being taken downe out of the cart, and ſeeing the poſt whereunto he was to be faſtened with three chaines of yron; he went of himſelfe to the poſt, and falling on his knees kiſſed the chaines with which he was there to be bound till the ſacrifice ſhould be ended.

But before the fire was put to him, he was urged by Friers and Prieſts to worſhip an Idoll which they preſented there before him. From which turning away his face, he ſhewed unto them his conſtant reſolution to the contrary, holding on his Chriſtian courſe unto the end: which he truly teſtified; for as ſoone as the flames of fire ſeiſed on him, bowing his head hee quietly yeelded up his ſoule into the hands of God.

¶ The death and martyrdome of an old man of Millan, who was burned at Rome.

THe ſame yeare they burned an old man who for a long time had lyen in the Inquiſitors caves. He dyed with great conſtancy and reſolution. Before his death he was exhorted and importuned by the Monks to kiſſe a crucifix. He ſeeing their impudency, ſaid, If ye take not this Idoll out of my ſight, you will conſtraine me to ſpit upon it, which when they heard, he was ſent away to the fire, and conſumed to aſhes.

¶ The troubles and perſecution of Bartholomew Copin, a godly and religious martyr of Chriſt.

IN the yeare 1601. Bartholomew Copin of the valley of Luſerne reſorted unto a place called Aſt in Piemont, with certaine merchandiſe, purpoſing to vent the ſame at a Faire there, which was to be kept the day following. It ſo fell out, that ſitting at ſupper in the evening with ſundry other Merchants, one amongſt the reſt began to uſe ſome ſpeech about the diverſities of Religions, and therewithall ſpake ſomething tending to the diſgrace of thoſe of the valleyes of Angrougne and the neighbour villages.

Copin hearing ſuch ſpeeches caſt forth againſt his Brethren, as he little expected from men of that ſort, and alſo againſt their Religion, all which tended to the diſhonour of God; hee feared leſt it ſhould be offenſively taken, if he ſhould not make ſome reply unto thoſe blaſphemies which he heard with his eares, and ſo anſwer him who held ſuch a diſcourſe againſt the religion which himſelfe profeſſed. He who reproved Copin asked, Are you one

Anno 1601.

one of Vandois? He anſwered, yes I am. And what? ſaid the other, beleeve you not that God is in the Hoſt? No, ſaid Copin. Oh, ſaid the other, ſee how falſe your Religion is? My religion, ſaid Copin, is no leſſe true then God is God, and as certaine as I am ſure to die.

The next day Copin was called before the Biſhop of Aſt, who told him that report had been made to him of ſome offenſive ſpeeches which hee had uſed the night paſt in his lodging; and therefore it behoved him now to acknowledge his fault, if he meant to obtaine pardon for the ſame, otherwiſe he muſt looke to be chaſtiſed according to his demerits.

Luke 9 23.

Copin anſwered, he had uttered nothing, but that which he was firſt provided to ſpeake; nor had he ſaid ought, but what he was reſolved to maintain to the hazard of his life. He affirmed that God had beſtowed upon him ſome worldly goods, as alſo a wife and children, but that he was not ſo glued in his affection to any of them, but he could bee content to forgoe them all, rather than the peace of a good conſcience.

As touching his carriage and behaviour, if it pleaſed him, he ſaid, to make enquiry thereof among the Merchants of Aſt, they could all reſolve him as touching his honeſt dealing: who alſo hee knew would witneſſe with him, that hee had wronged none in all that time hee had converſed among them. And inaſmuch as he was a Merchant trafiquing in and about his lawfull calling, he ought to be diſmiſſed and to be no further moleſted. For if it were lawfull for Iewes and Turkes to trade in Faires and Markets, and to uſe commerce throughout Piemont; that favor ought much more to be permitted unto him who was a Chriſtian. And as touching the matter of Religion, whereabout he was accuſed, he medled not at all therewith for his owne particular, but had queſtions propounded to him concerning the ſame by others: in which regard leave was granted him to anſwer and to yeeld a reaſon of his faith in any place, to any whomſoever they were that ſhould aske what he thought of the ſame: yea, liberty was granted even by his Excellency to thoſe of the Valleyes of Vandoyes to anſwer any man to a queſtion demanded; provided that hee proceeded not to teach and inſtruct others.

The Biſhop regarded none of theſe allegations, but commanded he ſhould be put into priſon. The next day the Biſhops Secretary came to viſite Copin, teſtifying how much good will hee bore him; adviſing him as a friend, that if he acknowledged not his fault, he was in great danger of his life.

Pſal. 89. 47, 48.

Copin anſwered, that his life was in the hands of God, and that he would never ſeeke to ſave it to the prejudice of Gods glory: alſo, that he had not above two or three turnes to fetch here in this world, before he arrived in heaven; and therefore prayed God ſo to aſſiſt him by his grace, that hee might never leave the ſtrait way which leadeth thereto.

Mat. 8. 38.

A few dayes after hee was examined by a Monke, who was an Inquiſitor, in the preſence of the Biſhop, who vexed him a long while with his ſugred diſcourſe, and by faire words endeavoured to drawn him to abjure his Religion. But Copin reſiſted him ſtill by the holy Scriptures; ſhewing that if he ſhould now be aſhamed of Chriſt and deny him, Chriſt might juſtly be aſhamed of him, and utterly deny him before his heavenly father.

The Monke finiſhed his diſpute with this dogged farewell, Away thou curſed Lutherane, thou ſhalt goe to all the Devils in hell; and when thou commeſt to be tormented amongſt thoſe uncleane ſpirits, then wilt thou remember theſe holy admonitions which wee have tendred unto thee for the ſaving of thy ſoule, but thou haddeſt rather goe to hell, than to reconcile thy ſelfe to thy holy Mother the Church. It is not long ſince, ſaid Copin, that I was reconciled to the true Church.

After many violent aſſaults they gave way for his wife to come unto him, and with her one of his ſons, promiſing them to ſet him at liberty to goe home with them, if hee would make amends for his fault committed, by acknowledging the ſame. They gave his ſon and wife leave, to this purpoſe, to ſtay ſupper with him in priſon: during which time he uſed many exhortations tending to patience; albeit the wife ſhould depart to her houſe without an husband, or the child without his father: for be you well aſſured, ſaid hee, that God will be a better husband and a father unto you than ever I was or can be. For his owne part, he ſaid, he was not bound to love wife or children more then Chriſt: beſides, they had cauſe to rejoyce, and to think him happy, that God would honor him ſo farre as to beare witneſſe to his truth with the loſſe of his life, and hoped, hee ſaid, that God would be ſo favorable to him, as to ſupport him under any torments he was to endure for his glories ſake.

In concluſion hee commended his ſonne and one daughter to his wives care, which God had given them in the married eſtate; charging her againe and againe to ſee them brought up vertuouſly and in the feare of God. He charged his ſonne to obey his mother, ſo ſhould he be made partaker of the promiſed bleſſing. He intreated them both to pray for him, that God would fortifie him againſt all temptations. And thus having bleſſed his ſon, and taken leave of his wife, they were conducted out of the priſon, and he ſhut up as hee was before.

The woman and her ſon were diſſolved into teares, ſighing and crying out, that it would have moved the ſtonieſt heart to compaſſion: but this holy man, not contenting himſelfe with that hee had ſaid to them by word of mouth, writ unto his wife this Letter enſuing, the originall whereof ſhe hath exhibited to us, written and ſigned with the hand of the ſaid Copin, the inſcription thus following.

¶ To my wel-beloved wife, Suſanna Copin, from the Tower of Lucerna.

DEare yoke-fellow, I received much conſolation by your comming to this place, and by ſo much the more as it was beyond my expectation; and I ſuppoſe you alſo were not a little comforted that you had ſuch an opportunity offered you, as to ſup with me the laſt night, being Saturday the fifteenth of September, 1601. I know not well what they aymed at in permitting you ſo to doe. But God ordereth all theſe things. But as farre as I can gheſſe, it ſhall be the laſt time that ever we ſhall ſup together in this life: and therefore pray to God that hee will not ceaſe to be a comfort unto you. Truſt you ſtill in him, for hee hath promiſed never to leave nor forſake thoſe that put their truſt in him. God hath endued you with wiſedome, governe your owne family in ſuch ſort, that our children Samuel and Martha may be obedient unto you: whom in the name and authority of God, I command that they obey you, for ſo the bleſſing of Almighty God ſhall light upon them.

Anno 1605.

Deare wife, be not over penſive for mee, for if God hath ordained me now to attaine unto the end of my race, and that I muſt render into the hands of the Almighty my ſoule, which ſo long time he hath lent me; my hope is, that of his holy and divine mercy he will receive it into his Kingdome, for his owne beloved Sonnes ſake Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, throgh whom I beléeve that my ſinnes are forgiven, for the onely merit of his holy death and paſſion. Alſo my praier is, that he will aſſiſt me by the power of his holy ſpirit unto my laſt breath.

Be fervent in praier, and in all other parts of Gods worſhip and ſervice, for this is the way to true bleſſedneſſe. Take no care about ſending any thing unto me for theſe thrée wéeks, and then I pray you ſend me ſome money if you thinke good to give the Iaylor, and ſomewhat more for mine owne neceſſaries, if it pleaſe God I live ſo long. Alſo I pray you call to minde what I have often told you, namely how God prolonged King Hezechias life for fiftéen yeares. But he hath preſerved my life much longer; for it is many yeares agoe ſince you ſaw me at the point of death, and through Gods goodneſſe I am alive: and I hope, yea I am aſſured that he will ſo long preſerve me as ſhall be for his glory and my eternall good, through his onely frée grace.

Iſa. 38. 5.

From the priſon of Aſt, the ſixteenth of September, 1601.

The Biſhop of Aſt was ſomewhat troubled about this his priſoner; for if he had let him go, he feared it would bréed ſome ſcandall, and many might thereby be emboldned to open their mouths wide againſt the Romane religion. Beſides, there was a clauſe in the Contract made betwéene his Excellency and the people of Vandois, which exempted thoſe of the religion from offence, in theſe words; And if it ſhall fall out that they be asked or queſtioned withall in Piemont, about the cauſe of Religion, by any of his excellencies ſubjects, it ſhall be lawfull for thoſe of the ſaid Religion to anſwer without ſuffering any penall or perſonall puniſhment for the ſame.

Now Copin had a queſtion put to him, in which reſpect he ought to have béen cléered. But the Biſhop would by no meanes heare that hee had unjuſtly impriſoned him; and therefore that his death ſhould not be laid to his charge, nor yet that hee ſhould be ſent away abſolved, he ſent the cauſe of his Endictment to Pope Clement the eighth, to know what ſhould be done with him. We cannot learne what anſwer the Pope returned to the Biſhop; but not long after this good man was found dead in priſon, not without ſome apparent ſuſpition of his being ſtrangled there; leſt if they had executed him in publique, the people ſhould have been edified by his conſtancy.

Being dead, he was condemned to bee burned, and therefore having cauſed him to be brought out of priſon, they read his ſentence openly, and the body was caſt into the fire.

Thus have you the laſt among the Vandois, which is come to our knowledge, that were perſecuted to death for the cauſe of Religion.

¶ Mention hath heretofore been often made of ſundry bloudy maſſacres in forreine parts; but wee are now come to fall upon the report of a buſineſſe neerer home, which if the moſt wiſe and watchfull providence of God had not timely and graciouſly prevented, it would have (to the ruine of our Church and ſtate) proved ſuch a maſſacre, the like whereof the heart of man never conceived, the eare of man never heard of, nor the tongue or pen of man could ſcarſe ever have uttered; namely, at one blow to have blowne up not onely the King, Quéene, and royall poſterity, but the whole body of the ſtate in generall. Now as the Church and State had each of them a ſhare in this ſo admirable a deliverance from God upon the fifth day of November, Anno 1605. ſo each of them ſhewed their care, if it might be, for ever to perpetuate the praiſe of God for the ſame on the ſaid day; the one by ſtabliſhing an act of Parliament for it; the other by publiſhing a forme of thanksgiving the better to effect it; ſome expreſſion whereof the Reader may hap to méet with at the end of the diſcourſe following.

¶ A diſcourſe touching the manner of the diſcovery of the Pouder-treaſon, with the examination of ſome of the Priſoners.

WHile this land and whole Monarchy flouriſhed in a moſt happy and plentifull peace, as well at home as abroad, ſuſtained and conducted by theſe two maine pillars of all good government, Piety and Iuſtice, no forraine grudge, nor inward whiſpering of diſcontentment any way appearing; the King being upon his returne from his hunting exerciſe at Royſton, upon occaſion of the drawing néere of the Parliament time, which had béen twiſe prorogued already; partly in regard of the ſeaſon of the yeare, and partly of the Terme; as the winds are ever ſtilleſt immediately before a ſtorme; and as the Sunne blenks often hotteſt to foretell a following ſhowre; ſo at that time of greateſt calme did that ſecretly hatched thunder begin to caſt forth the firſt flaſhes and flaming lightenings of the approaching tempeſt. For the Saturday of the wéeke immediately preceding the Kings returne, which was upon a Thurſday (being but ten daies before the Parliament) the Lord Mounteagle ſonne and heire to the Lord Morley, being in his owne lodging ready to goe to ſupper at ſeven of the clocke at night, one of his Footmen (whom he had ſent of an errand over the ſtréet) was met by an unknowne man of a reaſonable tall perſonage, who delivered him a Letter, charging him to put it in my Lord his Maſters hands. Which my Lord no ſooner received, but that having broken it up, and perceiving the ſame to be of an unknowne and ſomewhat unlegible hand, and without either date or ſubſcription, did call one of his men unto him for helping him to read it. But no ſooner did he conceive the ſtrange contents thereof, although hee was ſomewhat perplexed what conſtruction to make of it (as whether of a matter of conſequence, as indéed it was, or whether ſome fooliſh deviſed Paſquil by ſome of his enemies to ſkarre him from his attendance at the Parliament) yet did he as a moſt dutifull and loyall ſubject conclude, not to conceale it, what ever might come of it. Whereupon, notwithſtanding the lateneſſe and darkeneſſe of the night in that ſeaſon of the yeare, hee preſently repaired to his Majeſties Palace at Whitehall, and there delivered the ſame to the Earle of Salisbury his Majeſties principall Secretary. Whereupon the ſaid Earle of Salisbury having read the Letter, and heard the manner of the comming of it to his hands, did greatly encourage and commend my Lord for his diſcretion; telling him plainly, that whatſoever the purpoſe of the Letter might prove hereafter, yet did this accident put him in minde of divers advertiſements he had received from beyond the ſeas, wherewherewith he had acquainted as well the King himſelfe, as divers of his privy Counſellors, concerning ſome buſineſſe the Papiſts were in both at home and abroad, making preparation for ſome combination among them againſt this Parliament time, for enabling them to deliver at that time to the King ſome petition for toleration of Religion: which ſhould be delivered in ſome ſuch order, and ſo well backed, as the King ſhould be loth to refuſe their requeſt. Like the ſturdy Beggers, craving almes with one open hand, but carrying a ſtone in the other, in caſe of refuſall. And therefore did the Earle of Salisbury conclude with the Lord Mountegle, that he would in regard of the Kings abſence impart the ſame Letter to ſome more of his Majeſties Counſell; whereof my Lord Mountegle liked well: only adding this requeſt by way of proteſtation, that whatſoever the event hereof might prove, it ſhould not be imputed to him, as proceeding from too light and too ſuddaine an apprehenſion, that he delivered this Letter, being only moved thereunto for demonſtration of his ready devotion and care for preſervation of his Majeſty and the State. And thus did the Earle of Salisbury preſently acquaint the Lord Chamberlaine with the ſaid Letter. Whereupon they two in the preſence of the Lord Mountegle, calling to minde the former intelligence already mentioned, which ſeemed to have ſome relation with this Letter: The tender care which they ever carried to the preſervation of his Majeſties perſon, made them apprehend, that ſome perillous attempt did thereby appeare to be intended againſt the ſame; which did the more neerely concerne the ſaid Lord Chamberlaine to have a care of, in regard that it doth belong to the charge of his office to overſee as well all places of aſſembly where his Majeſty is to repaire, as his highneſſe owne private houſes. And therefore did the ſaid two Counſellors conclude, that they ſhould joyn unto themſelves three more of the Counſell, to wit, the Lord Admirall, the Earles of Worceſter and Northampton, to be alſo particularly acquainted with this accident: who having all of them concurred together to the re-examination of the contents of the ſaid Letter, they did conclude, that how ſlight a matter it might at the firſt appeare to be, yet was it not abſolutely to be contemned, in reſpect of the care which it behooved them to have of the preſervation of his Majeſties perſon.

Purpoſe of the Papiſts for delivering a petition to his Majeſty to crave toleration of religion.

The Lord Chamberlain made privy to the letter by the Earle of Salisbury.

Wherefore they reſolved for two reaſons, firſt to acquaint the K. himſelfe with the ſame before they proceeded to any further inquiſition in the matter, as well for the expectation and experience they had of his Majeſties fortunate Judgement in cleering of obſcure riddles and doubtfull myſteries; as alſo becauſe the more time would in the meane while be given for the practiſe to ripen, if any was, whereby the diſcovery might be the more cleere and evident, and the ground of proceeding thereupon more ſafe, juſt, and eaſie. And ſo according to their determination did the ſaid Earle of Salisbury repaire to the King in his Gallery on Friday, being Alhallow day, in the afternoone, which was the day after his Majeſties arrivall, and none but himſelfe being preſent with his highneſſe at that time, where without any other ſpeech or judgement given of the Letter, but only relating ſimply the forme of the delivery thereof, he preſented it to his Majeſty, the contents whereof follow.

Thought meet by the Counſellors to acquaint the King with the Letter.

Upon Alhallow day the Earle of Salisbury ſhewed the letter to the King.

MY Lord, out of the love I beare to ſome of your friends, I have a care of your preſervation. Therefore, I would adviſe you as you tender your life, to deviſe ſome excuſe to ſhift off your attendance at this Parliament. For God and man have concurred to puniſh the wickedneſſe of this time. And thinke not ſlightly of this advertiſement, but retire your ſelfe into your country, where you may expect the event in ſafety. For though there be no apparance of any ſtir, yet I ſay, they ſhall receive a terrible blow this Parliament, and yet they ſhall not ſee who hurts them. This counſell is not to be contemned, becauſe it may doe you good, and can doe you no harme; for the danger is paſt ſo ſoone as you have burnt the Letter. And I hope God will give you the grace to make good uſe of it: To whoſe holy protection I commend you.

The King no ſooner read the Letter, but after a little pauſe, and then reading it over againe, hee delivered his judgement of it in ſuch ſort, as hee thought it was not to be contemned, for that the ſtile of it ſeemed to be more quicke, and pithy, then is uſuall to be in any Paſquill, or Libell (the ſuperfluities of idle braines.) But the Earle of Salisbury perceiving the King to apprehend it deeplier then he looked for, knowing his nature, told him that he thought by one ſentence in it, that it was like to be written by ſome foole or mad man, reading to him this ſentence in it, For the danger is paſt ſo ſoone as you have burnt the Letter, which he ſaid was like to be the ſaying of a foole: for if the danger was paſt ſo ſoone as the Letter was burnt, then the warning behooved to be of little availe, when the burning of the letter might make the danger to be eſchewed. But the King on the contrary conſidering the former ſentence in the Letter, That they ſhould receive a terrible blow at this Parliament, and yet ſhould not ſee who hurt them, Joining it to the ſentence immediately following, already alledged, did thereupon conjecture, That the danger mentioned ſhould bee ſome ſuddaine danger by blowing up of powder: For no other inſurrection, rebellion, or whatſoever other private and deſperate attempt could bee committed or attempted in time of Parliament, and the Authors thereof unſeene, except onely it were by a blowing up of Powder, which might be performed by one baſe knave in a darke corner; whereupon he was moved to interpret and conſtrue the latter ſentence in the Letter (alledged by the Earle of Salisbury) againſt all ordinary ſence and conſtruction in Grammar, as if by theſe words, For the danger is paſt ſo ſoone as you have burnt the Letter, ſhould be cloſely underſtood the ſuddainty and quickneſſe of the danger, which ſhould be as quickly performed and at an end, as that Paper ſhould be blazing up in the fire; turning that word of As ſoone, to the ſence of, As quickly: and therefore wiſhed, that before his going to the Parliament, the under roomes of the Parliament houſe might be well and narrowly ſearched. But the Earle of Saliſbury wondering at this his Majeſties commentary, which he knew to be ſo far contrary to his ordinary and naturall diſpoſition, who did rather ever ſin upon the other ſide, in not apprehending nor truſting due advertiſement of practiſes and perils when he was truly informed of them, whereby he had many times drawne himſelfe into many deſperate dangers: and interpreting rightly this extraordinary Caution at this time to proceed from the vigilant care he had of the whole State, more then of his owne perſon, which could not but have all periſhed together, if this deſignement had ſucceeded: He thought good to diſſemble ſtill unto the King, that there had beene any juſt cauſe of ſuch apprehenſion; and ending the purpoſe with ſome merry jeſt on this ſubject, as his cuſtome is, tooke his leave for that time. But though he ſeemed ſo to neglect it to his Majeſty, yet his cuſtomable and watchfull care of the King and the State ſtill boiling within him; And having

His Majeſties judgement of the Letter.

A terrible blow indeed; at once to have wracked King, Queen, Prince, and Progeny, Religion, State, and all.

His Majeſties opinion for ſearching of the under roomes of the Parliament houſe.

having with the bleſſed Virgin Mary laid up in his heart the Kings ſo ſtrange judgement and conſtruction of it; he could not be at reſt till hee acquainted the foreſaid Lords what had paſſed betweene the King and him in private.

Whereupon they were all ſo earneſt to renew againe the memory of the ſame purpoſe unto his Majeſty, as it was agreed that he ſhould the next day, being Saturday, repaire to his Highneſſe: which he did in the ſaid privy Gallery, and renewed the memory thereof, the Lord Chamberlaine then being preſent with the King. At what time it was determined, That the ſaid L. Chamberlaine ſhould, according to his cuſtome and office, view all the parliament houſes, both above and below, and conſider what likelihood or appearance of any ſuch danger might poſſibly be gathered by the ſight of them: but yet, as well for ſtaying of idle rumors, as for being the more able to diſcern any myſtery, the nearer that things were in readineſſe, his journey thither was ordained to be deferred till the afternoone before the ſitting downe of the Parliament, which was upon the Munday following. At what time he (according to this concluſion) went to the Parliament houſe, accompanied with my Lord Mountegle, being in zeale to the Kings ſervice earneſt and curious to ſee the event of that accident whereof he had the fortune to be the firſt diſcoverer: where, having viewed all the lower roomes, he found in the vault under the upper houſe great ſtore and proviſion of billets, fagots, and coales: and inquiring of Whyneard keeper of the Wardrobe, to what uſe he had put thoſe lower roomes and cellars; he told him that Thomas Percy had hired both the houſe and part of the Cellar or Vault under the ſame, and that the wood and coale, under which were hidden thirty ſixe barrels of powder great and ſmall, beſides great barres of Iron, peeces of Timber, and maſſie ſtones covered over with Fagots therein, was the ſaid Gentlemans owne proviſion. Whereupon the Lord Chamberlaine, caſting his eye aſide, perceived a fellow ſtanding in a corner there, calling himſelfe the ſaid Percies man, and keeper of that houſe for him, but indeed was Guido Fawkes, the owner of that hand which ſhould have acted that monſtrous and helliſh Tragedy.

The determination to ſearch the Parliament houſe and the roomes under it

Wood and coale found by the L. Chamberlaine in the Vault.

The Lord Chamberlaine looking upon all things with a heedfull indeed, yet in outward appearance with but a careleſſe and reckleſſe eye, (as became ſo wiſe and diligent a miniſter) he preſently addreſſed himſelfe to the King in the privy Gallery, where in the preſence of the Lord Treaſurer, the Lord Admirall, the Earles of Worceſter, Northampton, and Saliſbury he made his report, what he had ſeen and obſerved there; noting that Montegle had told him, That he no ſooner heard Thomas Percy named to be the poſſeſſor of that houſe, but conſidering both his backwardneſſe in Religion, and the old deareneſſe in friendſhip betweene himſelfe and the ſaid Percy, he did greatly ſuſpect the matter, and that the letter ſhould come from him. The ſaid Lord Chamberlaine alſo told, That he did not wonder a little at the extraordinary great proviſion of wood and coale in that houſe, where Thomas Percy had ſo ſeldome occaſion to remaine; as likewiſe it gave him in his minde that this man looked like a very tall and deſperate fellow.

The Lord Chamberlaines report and judgment of what he had obſerved in the ſearch.

This could not but increaſe the Kings former apprehenſion and jealouſie: whereupon he inſiſted (as before) that the houſe was narrowly to be ſearched, and that thoſe billets and coales would be ſearched to the bottom, it being moſt ſuſpitious that they were laid there onely for covering of the powder. Of this ſame minde alſo were all the Counſellors then preſent. But upon the faſhion of making of the ſearch was it long debated: for upon the one ſide they were all ſo jealous of the Kings ſafety, that they all agreed, that there could not be too much caution uſed for preventing his danger. And yet upon the other part they were all extream loath and dainty, that in caſe this Letter ſhould prove to be nothing but the evaporation of an idle brain; then a curious ſearch being made, and nothing found, ſhould not only turne to the generall ſcandall of the King and the State, as being ſo ſuſpitious of every light and frivolous toy, but likewiſe lay in ill favoured imputation upon the Earle of Northumberland one of his Majeſties greateſt ſubjects and Counſellors, this Thomas Percy being his kinſman and moſt confident familiar. And the rather were they curious upon this point, knowing how far the King deteſted to be thought ſuſpitious or jealous of any of his good ſubjects, though of the meaneſt degree. And therefore though they all agreed upon the main ground, which was to provide for the ſecurity of the Kings perſon, yet did they much differ in the circumſtances, by which this action might be beſt carried with leaſt dinne and occaſion of ſlander. But the King himſelfe ſtill perſiſting that there were divers ſhrewd appearances, and that a narrow ſearch of thoſe places could prejudge no man that was innocent, he at laſt plainly reſolved them, that either muſt all the parts of thoſe roomes be narrowly ſearched, and no poſſibility of danger left unexamined, or elſe he and they all muſt reſolve not to meddle in it at all, but plainly to goe the next day to the Parliament, and leave the ſucceſſe to Fortune; which he beleeved they would be loth to take upon their conſciences: for in ſuch a caſe as this, an halfe doing was worſe than no doing at all. Whereupon it was at laſt concluded, That nothing ſhould bee left unſearched in thoſe houſes: and yet for the better colour and ſtay of rumour, in caſe nothing were found, it was thought meet, that upon a pretence of Whyneards miſſing ſome of the Kings ſtuffe or hangings which he had in keeping all theſe roomes ſhould be narrowly ripped for them. And to this purpoſe was Sir Thomas Knevet (a Gentleman of his Majeſties privy Chamber) imployed, being a Juſtice of Peace in Weſtminſter, and one, of whoſe ancient fidelity both the late Queen and our now Soveraigne have had large proofe: who, according to the truſt committed unto him, went about the midnight next after to the Parliament houſe, accompanied with ſuch a ſmall number as was fit for that errand. But before his entry into the houſe, finding Thomas Percies alledged man ſtanding without the doores, his clothes and bootes on at ſo dead a time of the night, he reſolved to apprehend him, as he did, and afterward went forward to the ſearching of the houſe: where after he had cauſed to be overturned ſome of the billets and coales, he firſt found one of the ſmall barrels of powder, and after all the reſt, to the number of thirty ſixe barrels, great and ſmall. And thereafter ſearching the fellow whom he had taken, found three matches, and all other inſtruments fit for blowing up the Powder, ready upon him, which made him inſtantly confeſſe his own guiltineſſe, declaring alſo unto him, That if he had happened to be within the houſe when he tooke him, as hee was immediatly before (at the ending of his worke) he would not have failed to have blowne him up, houſe and all.

Diſputation about the manner of the further ſearch.

Agreed that the ſearch ſhould be under colour of ſeeking for Wardrobe ſtuffe miſſed by Whyneard

Faux found at midnight without the houſe.

Thus after Sir Thomas had cauſed the wretch to be ſurely bound, and well guarded by the company he had brought with him, he himſelfe returned back to the Kings Palace, and gave warning of his ſucceſſe to the Lord Chamberlaine, and Earle of Saliſbury; who immediatly warning the reſt of the Counſell that lay in the houſe, as ſoone as they could get themſelves ready, came with their fellow Counſellors to the Kings Bed chamber, being at that time néere foure of the clock in the morning. And at the firſt entry of the Kings chamber doore, the Lord Chamberlaine, being not any longer able to conceale his joy for the preventing of ſo great a danger, told the King in a confuſed haſte, that all was found and diſcovered, and the Traitor in hands and faſt bound.

Then, order being firſt taken for ſending for the reſt of the Counſell that lay in the towne, the priſoner himſelfe was brought into the houſe, where in reſpect of the ſtrangeneſſe of the accident, no man was ſtaid from the ſight or ſpeaking with him. And within a while after the Counſell did examine him; who ſéeming to put on a Romane reſolution, did both to the Counſell and to every other perſon that ſpake with him that day, appeare ſo conſtant and ſetled upon his grounds, as wée all thought we had found ſome new Mutius Scevola borne in England; for notwithſtanding the horror of the fact, the guilt of his conſcience, his ſudden ſurpriſing, the terror which ſhould have béen ſtricken in him by comming into the preſence of ſo grave a Counſell, and the reſtleſſe and confuſed queſtions that every man all that day did vexe him with; yet was his countenance ſo far from being dejected, as he often ſmiled in ſcornfull manner, not only avowing the fact, but repenting only, with the ſaid Scevola, his failing in the execution thereof, , whereof he ſaid the Devill and not God was the diſcoverer; anſwering quickly to every mans objection, ſcoffing at any idle queſtions which were propounded to him, and jeſting at ſuch as he thought had no authority to examine him.

All that day could the Counſell get nothing out of him touching his complices, refuſing to anſwer to any ſuch queſtions as he thought might diſcover the plot, and laying all the blame upon himſelf; whereunto he ſaid he was moved only for religion and conſcience ſake, denying the King to be his lawfull Soveraigne, or the annointed of God, in reſpect he was an heretique; and giving himſelfe no other name then John Johnſon, ſervant to Thomas Percy. But the next morning being carried to the Tower of London, he did not there remaine above two or thrée daies, being twice or thrice in that ſpace re-examined, and the rack only offered and ſhewed unto him, when the maſke of his Romane fortitude did viſibly begin to weare and ſlide off his face; and then did he begin to confeſſe part of the truth, and thereafter to open the whole matter, as doth appeare by his depoſitions immediatly following.

I Confeſſe, that a practiſe in generall was firſt broken unto me againſt his Majeſty, for reliefe of the Catholique cauſe, and not invented or propounded by my ſelfe. And this was firſt propounded unto me about Eaſter laſt was twelve moneth, beyond the Seas, in the Low-Countries of the Archdukes obeiſance, by Thomas Winter, who came thereupon with me into England, and there we imparted our purpoſe to thrée other Gentlemen more, namely, Robert Cateſby, Thomas Percy, and John Wright: who all five conſulting together of the meanes how to execute the ſame, and taking a vow among our ſelves for ſecrecy (which vow was this, You ſhall ſweare by the bleſſed Trinity, and by the Sacrament you now purpoſe to receive, never to diſcloſe, directly or indirectly, by word or circumſtance, the matter that ſhall be propoſed to you to kéep ſecret; nor deſiſt from the execution thereof untill the reſt ſhall give you leave: after which, being confeſſed, and receiving abſolution, the forementioned received the Sacrament thereupon, by the hands of Gerrard the Jeſuite there preſent) Cateſby propounded to have it performed by Gun-powder, and by making a Mine under the upper houſe of Parliament: Which place wée made choiſe of the rather, becauſe Religion having béen unjuſtly ſuppreſſed there, it was fitteſt that juſtice and puniſhment ſhould be executed there.

This being reſolved amongſt us, Thomas Percy hired a houſe at Weſtminſter for that purpoſe, néere adjoyning to the Parliament houſe, and there we begun to make our Mine about the 11. of December, 1604.

The five that firſt entred into the worke were Thomas Percy, Robert Cateſby, Thomas Winter, John Wright, and my ſelfe: and ſoone after we tooke unto us Chriſtopher Wright, having ſworne him alſo, and taken the Sacrament for ſecrecy.

When we came to the very foundation of the wall of the houſe, which was about thrée yards thick, and found it a matter of great difficulty, we tooke unto us another Gentleman, Robert Winter, in like manner with oath and Sacrament as aforeſaid.

It was about Chriſtmaſſe when we brought our Mine unto the wall, and about Candlemaſſe we had wrought the wall halfe through; and whileſt they were in working I ſtood as ſentinel to deſcry any man that came néere, whereof I gave them warning, and ſo they ceaſed untill I gave notice againe to procéed.

All we ſeven lay in the houſe, having ſhot and powder, being reſolved to die in that place, before we ſhould yéeld or be taken.

As they were working upon the wall, they heard a ruſhing in a cellar of removing of Coles, whereupon we feared we had béen diſcovered, and they ſent me to goe to the cellar; who finding the Coles were a ſelling, and that the cellar was to be let, viewing the commodity thereof for our purpoſe, Percy went and hired the ſame for yéerely rent.

We had before this provided and brought into the houſe twenty barrels of Powder, which we removed into the Cellar, and covered the ſame with billets and fagots, which were provided for that purpoſe.

About Eaſter, the Parliament being prorogued till October next, we diſperſed our ſelves, and I retired into the Low-Countries, by advice and direction of the reſt, as well to acquaint Owen with the particulars of the plot, as alſo leſt by my longer ſtay I might have growne ſuſpitious, and ſo have come in queſtion.

In the mean time Percy having the key of the cellar, laid in more powder and wood into it. I returned about the beginning of September next, and then receiving the key again of M. Percy, we brought in more powder and billets to cover the ſame againe, and ſo I went for a time into the Countrey till the thirtieth of October.

It was further reſolved amongſt us, that the ſame day that this act ſhould have béen performed, ſome other of our Confederates ſhould have ſurpriſed the perſon of the Lady Elizabeth the Kings eldeſt Daughter, who was kept in Warwickſhire at the Lord Harringtons houſe, and preſently ſently haue proclaimed her queen, hauing a proiect of a proclamation ready for that purpoſe; wherein we made no mention of altering of religion, or would haue auowed the deed to be ours, untill we ſhould haue had power enough to make our party good, and then we would haue auowed both.

Anno 1605.

Concerning Duke Charles the Kings ſecond ſon, we had ſundry conſultations how to ſeize on his perſon. But becauſe we found no meanes how to compaſſe it (the Duke being kept neere London, where we had not forces enough) wee reſolued to ſerue our turne with the Lady Elizabeth.

¶ And in regard that before this diſcourſe could be ready to go to the Preſſe, Thomas Winter being apprehended, and brought to the Tower, made a confeſſion in ſubſtance agreeing with this former of Fawkes, only larger in ſome circumſtances: I haue thought good to inſert the ſame likewiſe in this place, for the further cleering of the matter, and greater benefit of the Reader.

¶ Thomas Winters confeßion, taken the three and twentieth of November, in the yeare 1605. in the preſence of the Counſellors, whoſe names are under-written.

My moſt honourable Lords,

NOt out of hope to obtaine pardon; for ſpeaking of my temporall part, I may ſay, The fault is greater then can be forgiuen; nor affecting here the title of a good ſubiect; for I muſt redeeme my Countrey from as great a danger, as I haue hazarded the bringing of her into, before I can purchaſe any ſuch opinion: only at your honors command I will briefly ſet downe mine owne accuſation, and how far I haue proceeded in this buſineſſe, which I ſhall the faithfullier doe, ſince I ſee ſuch courſes are not pleaſing to Almighty God, and that all, or the moſt materiall parts haue been already confeſſed.

I remained with my brothar in the countrey from Alhallon-tide untill the beginning of Lent, in the yeare of our Lord 1603. the firſt yeare of the Kings reigne; about which time Maſter Cateſby ſent thither, intreating me to come to London, where he and other my friends would bee glad to ſee me. I deſired him to excuſe me: for I found my ſelfe not very well diſpoſed; and (which had happened neuer to me before) returned the meſſenger without my company. Shortly, I receiued another Letter, in any wiſe to come. At the ſecond ſummons I preſently came up, and found him with Maſter Iohn Wright at Lambeth, where he brake with me, how neceſſary it was not to forſake our Countrey (for he knew then I had a reſolution to goe ouer) but to deliuer her from the ſeruitude in which ſhe remained, or at leaſt to aſſiſt her with our uttermoſt endeauours. I anſwered, that I had often hazzarded my life upon far lighter termes, and now would not refuſe any good occaſion, wherein I might doe ſeruice to the Catholique cauſe; but for my ſelfe I knew no meane probable to ſucceed. Hee ſaid that he had bethought him of a way at one inſtant to deliuer us from all our bonds, and without any forraine help to replant againe the Catholique Religion; and withall told me in a word, It was to blow up the Parliament houſe with Gunpowder; for, ſaid he, in that place haue they done us all the miſchiefe, and perchance God hath deſigned that place for their puniſhment. I wondered at the ſtrangeneſſe of the conceit, and told him, that true it was, this ſtrake at the roote, and would breed a confuſion fit to beget new alterations: but if it ſhould not take effect, (as moſt of this nature miſcarried) the ſcandall would be ſo great which Catholique Religion might hereby ſuſtaine, as not only our enemies, but our friends alſo would with good reaſon condemne us. Hee told me, The nature of the diſeaſe required ſo ſharpe a remedy, and asked me if I would giue my conſent. I told him, yes, in this or what elſe ſoeuer, if he reſolued upon it, I would venture my life. But I propoſed many difficulties, as want of an houſe, and of one to carry the Mine, noiſe in the working, and ſuch like. His anſwer was, Let us giue an attempt, and where it faileth, paſſe no further. But firſt, quoth he, becauſe we will leaue no peaceable and quiet way untryed, you ſhall goe ouer and informe the Conſtable of the ſtate of the Catholikes here in England, intreating him to ſollicite his Maieſty at his comming hither, that the penall Lawes may be recalled, and we admitted into the ranke of his other ſubiects; withall, you may bring ouer ſome confident Gentleman, ſuch as you ſhall underſtand beſt able for this buſineſſe, and named unto me Maſter Faukes. Shortly after I paſſed the Sea, and found the Conſtable at Berghen neere Dunkirke, where by help of Maſter Owen I deliuered my meſſage. Whoſe anſwer was, that he had ſtrict command from his Maſter, to doe all good offices for the Catholiques, and for his owne part he thought himſelfe bound in conſcience ſo to doe, and that no good occaſion ſhould be omitted, but ſpake to him nothing of this matter,

Returning to Dunkirk with Maſter Owen, we had ſpeech whether he thought the Conſtable would faithfully help us, or no. He ſaid, he beleeued nothing leſſe, and that they ſought only their owne ends, holding ſmall account of Catholikes. I told him that there were many Gentlemen in England, who would not forſake their Countrey untill they had tryed their uttermoſt, and rather venture their liues, then forſake her in this miſery. And to adde one more to our number, as a fit man both for counſell and execution of whatſoever we ſhould reſolve, was wiſhed for M. Fawkes, whom I had heard good commendations of; hee told me the Gentelman deſerved no leſſe, but was at Bruſſels, and that if he came not, as happily he might, before my departure, he would ſend him ſhortly after into England. I went ſoone after to Oſtend, where Sir William Stanley as then was not, but came two daies after. I remained with him three or foure daies, in which time I asked him if the Catholikes in England ſhould doe any thing to help themſelves, whether hee thought the Archduke would ſecond them? Hee anſwered, no: for all thoſe parts were ſo deſirous of peace with England, as they would endure no ſpeech of other enterpriſe; neither were it fit, ſaid he, to ſet any project afoot now the peace is upon concluding. I told him there was no ſuch reſolution, and ſo fell to diſcourſe of other matters, untill I came to ſpeake of Maſter Fawkes, whoſe company I wiſhed over into England. I asked of his ſufficiency in the warres, and told him we ſhould need ſuch as he if occaſion required; he gave very good commendations of him. And as we were thus diſcourſing, and I ready to depart from Newport, and taking my leave of Sir William, Maſter Fawkes came into our company, newly returned, and ſaluted us, This is the Gentleman, ſaid ſir William, that we wiſhed for, and ſo we embraced againe. I told him ſome good friends of his wiſhed his company in England, and that if he pleaſed to come to Dunkirke, we would have further conference, whither I was then going: ſo taking my leave of them both, I departed. About two daies after came Maſter Fawkes to Dunkirke, where I told him that we were upon a reſolution to do ſomewhat with Englond, if the peace with Spaine helped us not, but had as yet reſolved upon nothing; ſuch or the like talk we paſſed at Graveling, where I lay for a winde, and when it ſerved came both in one paſſage to Greenwich, neere which place we tooke a paire of Oares, and ſo came up to London, and came to Maſter Catesby whom we found in his lodging; hee welcommed us into England, and asked me what news from the Conſtable. I told him, good words, but I feared the deeds would not anſwer. This was the beginning of Eaſter Terme, and about the middeſt of the ſame Terme (whether ſent for by Maſter Catesby, or upon ſome buſineſſe of his own) up came Maſter Thomas Percy. The firſt word he ſpoke (after he came into our company) was, ſhall we alwaies (Gentlemen) talke, and never doe any thing? Maſter Catesby tooke him aſide, and had ſpeech about ſomewhat to be done, ſo as firſt we might all take an oath of ſecrecy, which we reſolved within two or three days to do; ſo as there we met behind ſaint Clements, Maſter Catesby, Maſter Percy, Maſter Wright, Maſter Guy Fawkes, and my ſelfe; and having upon a Primer given each other the oath of ſecrecy, in a Chamber where no other body was, wee went after into the next roome, and heard maſſe, and received the bleſſed ſacrament upon the ſame. Then did Maſter Catesby diſcloſe to Maſter Percy, and I together with Iacke Wright, tell to Maſter Fawkes the buſineſſe for which we tooke this oath, which they both approved. And then was maſter Percy ſent to take the houſe which maſter Catesby in mine abſence had learned did belong to one Ferris, which with ſome difficulty in the end hee obtained, and became as Ferris before was, Tenant to Whynniard. Maſter Fawkes underwent the name of Maſter Percies man, calling himſelfe Iohnſon, becauſe his name was the moſt unknowne, and received the keyes of the houſe, untill we heard that the Parliament was adjorned to the ſeventh of February. At which time we all departed ſeverall wayes into the countrey, to meet againe at the beginning at Michaelmas terme. Before this time alſo it was thought convenient to have a houſe that might anſwer to Maſter Percies, where wee might make proviſion of pouder and wood for the mine, which being there in a night made ready, ſhould in a night be conveied by boat to the houſe by the Parliament, becauſe we were loth to ſoyle that with often going in and out. There was none that wee could deviſe ſo fit as Lambeth, where Maſter Catesby often lay; and to be keeper thereof (by Maſter Catesbies choiſe) we received into the number, Keyes, as a truſty honeſt man: this was about a moneth before Michaelmas.

Sir Edward Cooke knight at the araignment of Garnet addes further, that Catesby and Thomas Percy meeting together complained one to another of the Kings proceedings: and therefore the only way was to kill the King, which Percy himſelf would undertake to do. No Tom, ſaid Catesby, thou ſhalt not ſo adventure thy ſelfe, there is a plot to our greater advontage, & then diſcovered to him the pouder treaſon.

Some forthnight after towards the beginning of the Terme, Maſter Fawkes and I came to Maſter Catesby at Morecrofts, where we agreed that now was time to begin and ſet things in order for the mine. So Maſter Fawkes went to London, and the next day ſent for mee to come over to him; when I came, the cauſe was, for that the Scottiſh Lords were appointed to ſit in conference of the union in Maſter Percies houſe. This hindered our beginning untill a forthnight before Chriſtmas, by which time both M. Percy and Maſter Wright were come to London, and wee againſt their comming had provided a good part of the pouder; ſo as we all five entred with tooles fit to begin our worke, having provided our ſelves of Baked meats, the leſſe to need ſending abroad. We entred late in the night, and were never ſeene, ſave onely Maſter Percies man, until Chriſtmas eve. In which time we wrought under a little entry to the wall of the Parliament houſe, and underpropped it, as we went, with wood.

Whileſt we were together, we began to faſhion our buſineſſe, and diſcourſed what we ſhould doe after this deed was done. The firſt queſtion was how we might ſurpriſe the next heire: the Prince happily would be at the parliament with the King his Father, how ſhould we then be able to ſeiſe on the Duke? This burthen Maſter Percy undertooke, that by his acquaintance, he, with another Gentleman, would enter the Chamber without ſuſpition, and having ſome dozen others at ſeverall doores to expect his comming, and two or three on horſebacke at the Court gate to receive him, he would undertake (the blow being given, untill which he would attend in the Dukes chamber) to carry him ſafe away: for he ſuppoſed moſt of the Court would be abſent, and ſuch as were there, not ſuſpecting, or unprovided for any ſuch matter. For the Lady Elizabeth, it were eaſie to ſurpriſe her in the countrey by drawing friends together at an hunting neer the lord Harringtons, and Aſhby Maſter Catesbies houſe, being not farre off, was a fit place for preparation.

The next was for money and horſes, which if we could provide in any reaſonable meaſure (having the Heire apparent, and the firſt knowledge by foure or five daies) was oddes ſufficient.

Then what Lords we ſhould ſave from the Parliament, which was firſt agreed in generall, as many as we could that were Catholiques, or ſo diſpoſed; But after we deſcended to ſpeake of particulars.

Next what forrain Princes we ſhould acquaint with this before, or joyne with after. For this point we agreed, that firſt we could not enjoyne Princes to that ſecrecy, nor oblige them by oath; ſo to be ſecure of their promiſes: beſides we knew not whether they will approve the project or diſlike it. And if they doe allow thereof, to prepare before might beget ſuſpition, and not to provide untill the buſineſſe were acted, the ſame letter that carried newes of the thing done, might as well intreat their helpe and furtherance. Spaine is too ſlow in his preparations to hope any good from in the firſt extremities, and France too neere and too dangerous, who with the ſhipping of Holland, we feared, of all the world might make away with us.

But while we were in the middle of theſe diſcourſes, we heard that the Parliament ſhould be anew adjourned untill after Michaelmas, upon which tidings we broke off both diſcourſe and working untill after Chriſtmas. About Candlemas we brought over in a boat the pouder, which wee had provided at Lambeth, and laid it in Maſter Percies houſe, becauſe we were willing to have all our dangers in one place.

Wee wrought alſo another fortnight in the mine againſt the ſtone wall, whirh was very hard to beat through; at which time we called in Kit Wright; and neere to Eaſter, as we wrought the third time, opportunity was given to hire the cellar, in which we reſolved to lay the pouder, and leave the mine.

Now by reaſon that the charge of maintaining us all ſo long together, beſides the number of ſeverall houſes, which for ſeverall uſes had been hired, and buying of pouder, &c. had layne heavy on M. Catesby alone to ſupport; it was neceſſary for him to call in ſome others to eaſe his charge, and to that end deſired leave, that he, with Maſter Percy, and a third, whom they ſhould call, might acquaint whom they thought fit and willing to the buſines; for many, ſaid he, may be content that I ſhould know, who would not therefore that all the company ſhould be acquainted with their names: to this we all agreed.

After this Maſter Fawkes laid into the cellar (which he had newly taken) a thouſand of billets, and five hundred of fagots, and with that covered the pouder, becauſe we might have the houſe free, to ſuffer any one to enter that would. Maſter Catesby wiſhed us to conſider, whether it were not now neceſſary to ſend Maſter Fawkes over, both to abſent himſelfe for a time, as alſo to acquaint Sir William Stanley, and Maſter Owen with this matter. Wee agreed that he ſhould (provided that he gave it them with the ſame oth that we had taken it before) viz. to keep it ſecret from all the world. The reaſon why we deſired ſir William Stanley ſhould be acquainted herwith, was, to have him with us ſo ſoone as we could; And for Maſter Owen, he might hold good correſpondency after with forraine Princes. So Maſter Fawks departed about Eaſter for Flanders, and returned the later end of Auguſt. He told me that when he arrived at Bruſſels, Sir Willam Stanley was not returned from Spain, ſo as he uttered the matter onely to Owen, who ſeemed well pleaſed with the buſineſſe, but told him that ſurely Sir William would not be acquainted with any plot, as having buſineſſe now a foot in the Court of England: but he himſelfe would be allwayes ready to tell it him, and ſend him away ſo ſoone as it were done.

About this time did Maſter Percy and maſter Catesby meet at the Bathe, where they agreed, that the company being yet but few, M. Catesby ſhould have the others authority to call in whom he thought beſt; by which authority hee called in after, Sir Everard Digby, though at what time I know not, and laſt of all Maſter Francis Treſham. The firſt promiſed, as I heard maſter Catesby ſay, fifteene hundred pounds; the ſecond two thouſand pounds; Maſter Percy himſelfe promiſed all that he could get of the Earle of Northumberlands rents, which was about foure thouſand pounds, and to provide many galloping horſes to the number of ten.

Meane while Maſter Fawkes and myſelfe alone bought ſome new pouder, as ſuſpecting the firſt to be danke, and conveyed it into the cellar, and ſet it in order as we reſolved it ſhould ſtand.

Then was the parliament anew prorogued untill the fifth of November, ſo as we all went down untill ſome ten daies before, when Maſter Catesby came up with Maſter Fawkes to an houſe by Enfield Chace called White Webs, whither I came to them, and Maſter Catesby wiſhed me to enquire whither the young Prince came to the Parliament: I told him that I heard that his grace would not be there. Then muſt we have our horſes, ſaid Maſter Catesby, beyond the water, and proviſion of more company to ſurpriſe the Prince, and leave the Duke alone.

Two dayes after being Sunday at night, in came one to my Chamber, and told me that a letter had been given to my Lord Mountegle to this effect, That he wiſhed his Lordſhips abſence from the Parliament, becauſe a blow would there be given; which letter he preſently carried to my Lord of Salisbury.

On the morrow I went to White-Webs, and told it Maſter Catesby, aſſuring him withall that the matter was diſcloſed, and wiſhing him in any caſe to forſake his countrey. He told me he would ſee further as yet, and reſolved to ſend M. Fawkes to try the uttermoſt, proteſting that if it were his caſe, he would try the ſame adventure.

On Wedneſday Maſter Fawkes went and returned at night, of which we were very glad.

On Thurſday I came to London, & on Fryday M. Catesby, M. Treſham and I met at Barnet, where we queſtioned how this letter ſhould be ſent to my Lord Mountegle, but could not cõceive; for M. Treſham forſware it, whom we ſuſpected.

On Saturday night I met Maſter Treſham againe in Lincolnes Inne walkes. Where he told ſuch ſpeeches, that my Lord of Salisbury ſhould uſe to the King, as I gave it loſt the ſecond time, and repeated the ſame to Maſter Catesby, who hereupon was reſolved to be gone, but ſtayed to have Maſter Percy come up, whoſe conſent herein we wanted. On Sunday Maſter Percy being dealt with to that end would needs abide the uttermoſt triall.

This ſuſpition of all hands put us into ſuch confuſion, as Maſter Catesby reſolved to goe downe into the countrey the Munday that Maſter Percy went to Syon, and Maſter Percy reſolved to follow the ſame night, or early the next morning. About five of the clocke being Tueſday, came the younger Wright to my chamber, and told me that a Nobleman called the Lord Montegle, ſaying, Ariſe, and come along to Eſſex houſe, for I am going to call up my Lord of Northumberland; ſaying withall, The matter is diſcovered. Goe backe Maſter Wright (quoth I) and learne what you can about Eſſex gate. Shortly, he returned, and ſaid, Surely all is loſt: for Lepton is got on horſebacke at Eſſex doore: and as hee parted, he asked if their Lordſhips would have any more with him; and being anſwered no, is rode as faſt up Fleetſtreet as hee can ride. Goe you then (quoth I) to Maſter Percy, for ſure it is for him they ſeeke, and bid him be gone, I will ſtay and ſee the uttermoſt. Then I went to the Court gates, and found them ſtraightly garded, ſo as no body could enter. From thence I went downe towards the Parliament houſe, and in the middle of Kings ſtreet found the gard ſtanding, that would not let me paſſe. And as I returned I heard one ſay, There is a Treaſon diſcovered, in which the King and the Lords ſhould have been blowne up. So then I was fully ſatisfied that all was knowne, and went to the ſtable where my gelding ſtood, and rode into the Countrey. Maſter Catesby had appointed our meeting at Dunchurch, but I could not overtake them untill I came to my brothers, which was Wedneſday night. On Thurſday we took the armor at my Lord Windſors, and went that night to one Stephen Littletons houſe, where the next day (being Friday) as I was early abroad to diſcover, my man came unto me, and ſaid, That an heavy miſchance had ſevered all the company; for that Maſter Catesby, Maſter Rookewood, & Maſter Grant were burned with Gun-pouder, upon which ſight the reſt diſperſed. Maſter Littleton wiſhed me to fly, and ſo would he. I told him I would firſt ſee the body of my friend, and bury him, whatſoever befel me. When I came I found Maſter Catesby reaſonable well, Maſter Percy, both the Wrights, Maſter Rookewood, and Maſter Grant. I asked them what they reſolved to doe: they anſwered, We mean here to die. I ſaid againe, I would take ſuch part as they did. About eleven of the clocke came the company to beſet the houſe, and as I walked into the Court, I was ſhot into the ſhoulder, which loſt me the uſe of mine arme: the next ſhot was the elder Wright ſtricken dead, after him the younger Maſter Wright, and fourthly Ambroſe Rookewood ſhot. Then ſaid Maſter Catesby to me (ſtanding before the doore they were to enter) ſtand by mee Tom, and we will dye together. Sir, quoth I, I have loſt the uſe of my right arme, and I feare that will cauſe me to be taken. So as we ſtood cloſe together, Maſter Catesby, Maſter Percy, and my ſelfe, they two were ſhot (as farre as I could gueſſe, with one bullet) and then the company entred upon me, hurt me in the belly with a pike, and gave me other wounds, untill one came behind, and caught hold of both mine armes.

And ſo I remaine yours, &c.

But here let us leave Fawkes in a lodging fit for ſuch a gueſt, and taking time to adviſe upon his conſcience, and turne our ſelves to that part of the hiſtory, which concernes the fortune of the reſt of his partakers in that abhominable Treaſon. The newes was no ſooner ſpread abroad that morning, which was upon a Tueſday, the fifth of November, and the firſt day deſigned for that ſeſſion of Parliament; The newes, I ſay, of this ſo ſtrange and unlooked for accident was no ſooner divulged, but ſome of theſe conſpirators, namely, Winter, & the two brothers the Wrights, thought it high time for them to haſten out of the Towne, (for Catesby was gon the night before, and Percy at foure of the clocke in the morning the ſame day of the diſcovery) and all of them held their courſe, with more haſte than good ſpeed, to Warwicke ſhire toward Coventry, where the next day morning being Wedneſday, and about the ſame houre that Fawkes was taken in Weſtminſter, one Grant a Gentleman having aſſociated unto him ſome others of his opinion, all violent Papiſts and ſtrong Recuſants, came to a Stable of one Benocke a rider of great horſes, and having violently broken up the ſame, carried along with them all the great horſes that were therein, to the number of ſeven or eight, belonging to divers noblemen and gentlemen of that countrey, who had put them into the riders hands to be made fit for their ſervice. And ſo both that company of them which fled out of London, as alſo Grant and his complices met all together at Dunchurch at Sir Everard Digby his lodging the Tueſday at night, after the diſcovery of this treacherous attempt: the which Digby had likewiſe for his part appointed a match of hunting to have been hunted the next day, which was Wedneſday, though his mind was Nimrod-like upon a far other manner of hunting, more bent upon the bloud of reaſonable men than brute beaſts.

The taking of the horſes out of the ſtable at Warwicke by Grant and others.

The hunting match appointed by ſir Everard Digby.

This company and helliſh ſociety thus convened, finding their purpoſe diſcovered, and their treachery prevented, did reſolve to run a deſperate courſe, and ſince they could not prevaile by ſo private a blow, to practiſe by a publique rebellion either to attaine to their intents, or at leaſt to ſave themſelves in the throng of others. And therefore gathering all the company they could unto them, and pretending the quarrell of Religion, having intercepted ſuch proviſion of armour, horſes, and pouder, as the time could permit, thought by running up and downe the countrey, both to augment peece and peece their number (dreaming to themſelves that they had the vertue of a Snow-ball, which being little at the firſt, and tumbling downe from a great hill groweth to a great quantity, by increaſing it ſelfe with the ſnow that it meeteth by the way) and alſo that they beginning firſt this brave ſhew in one part of the countrey, ſhould by their Sympathy and example ſtirre up and encourage the reſt of their religion in other parts of England to riſe as they had don there. But when they had gathered their force to the greateſt, they came not to the number of foureſcore, and yet were they troubled all the houres of the day to kéep and contain their own ſervants from ſtealing from them; who (notwithſtanding all their care) daily left them, being farre inferiour to Gedeons hoſt in number, but far more in faith or juſtneſſe of quarrell.

Their going into armes after the plot diſcovered.

Their number never above foureſcore.

Their flight.

And ſo after that this Catholique troup had wandered a while through Warwicke ſhire to Worceſter ſhire, and from thence to the edge and borders of Stafford ſhire, this gallantly armed band had not the honor at the laſt to bee beaten with the Kings Lievtenant or extraordinary Commiſſioners ſent down for the purpoſe, but only by the ordinary Sheriffe of Worceſter ſhire were they all beaten, killed, taken, and diſperſed. Wherein ye have to note this following circumſtance ſo admirable, and ſo vively diſplaying the greatneſſe of Gods juſtice, as it could not be concealed without betraying in a manner the glory due to the Almighty for the ſame.

Overtaken at Holbeach, in Stafford-ſhire, in Ste. Littletons houſe.

Although divers of the Kings Proclamations were poſted downe after theſe Traitors with all the ſpéed poſſible, declaring the odiouſneſſe of that bloudy attempt, the neceſſity to have had Percy preſerved alive, if it had bin poſſible, and the aſſembly together of that damned crew, now no more ſecret conſpirators, but open and avowed rebels; yet the farre diſtance of the way (which was above an hundred miles) together with the extreame déepneſſe thereof, joyned alſo with the ſhortneſſe of the day, was the cauſe that the hearty and loving affections of the Kings good ſubjects in thoſe parts prevented the ſpéed of his Proclamations. For on the third day after the flying downe of theſe rebels, which was on the Fryday next after the diſcovery of the plot, they were moſt of them all ſurpriſed by the Sheriffe of Worceſter ſhire at Holbeach, about the noone of the day, and that in manner following.

Grants attempt to ſurpriſe the Lady Elizabeth.

Grant, of whom I have made mention before, for taking the great horſes, who had not all the preceding time ſtirred from his owne houſe till the next morning after the attempt ſhould have béen put in execution, he then laying his account without his Hoſt (as the Proverbe is) that their plot had, without failing, received the day before their hoped for ſucceſſe, tooke, or rather, ſtole out their horſes (as I ſaid before) for enabling him, and ſo many of that ſoule-leſſe ſociety that had ſtill remained in the countrey néere about him, to make a ſudden ſurpriſe upon the Kings elder daughter, the Lady Elizabeth, having her reſidence néere to that place, at the Lord Harringtons houſe; whom they thought to have uſed for the colour of their treacherous deſigne (his Majeſty her Father, her Mother, and male Children being all deſtroyed above.) And to this purpoſe alſo had that Nimrod Digby provided his hunting match againſt the ſame time, that numbers of people being flocked together upon the pretence thereof, they might the eaſilier have brought to paſſe the ſudden ſurpriſe of her perſon.

Now the violent taking away of thoſe horſes long before day, did ſéeme to be ſo great a riot in the eies of the common people, that knew of no greater myſtery: And the bold attempting thereof did ingender ſuch a ſuſpition of ſome following rebellion in the hearts of the wiſer ſort, as both great and ſmall began to ſtirre and arme themſelves, upon this unlooked for accident. Among whom ſir Fulke Grevill the elder, knight, as became one both ſo antient in yeares, and good reputation, and by his office being deputy Lieutenant of Warwicke ſhire, though unable in his body, yet by the zeale and true fervency of his minde, did firſt apprehend this foreſaid riot to be nothing but the ſparkles and ſure indices of a following rebellion; whereupon both ſtoutly and honeſtly he tooke order to get into his owne hands the munition and armour of all ſuch Gentlemen about him, as were either abſent from their owne houſes, or in doubtfull guard; And alſo ſent ſuch direction to the Townes about him, as thereupon did follow the ſtriking of Winter by a poore Smith, who had likewiſe béen taken by theſe vulgar people, but that he was reſcued by the reſt of his company; who perceiving that the country before them had notice of them, haſtened away with loſſe in their owne ſight, ſixtéene of their followers being taken by the townesmen, and ſent preſently to the Sheriffe at Warwicke, and from thence to London.

But before twelve or ſixtéene houres paſt, Cateſby, Percy, the Winters, Wrights, Rookwood, and the reſt bringing then the aſſurance that their maine plot was failed and bewraied, whereupon they had builded the golden mountaines of their glorious hopes: They then tooke their laſt deſperate reſolution to flocke together in a troupe, and wander, as they did, for the reaſons aforetold. But as upon the one part, the zealous duty to their God and their Soveraigne was ſo déeply imprinted in the hearts of all the meaneſt and pooreſt ſort of the people (although then knowing of no further myſtery then ſuch publique miſbehaviours as their owne eyes taught them) as notwithſtanding all their faire ſhewes, and pretence of their Catholique cauſe, no creature, man or woman through all the countrey, would once ſo much as give them willingly a cup of drinke, or any ſort of comfort or ſupport, but with execrations deteſted them: So on the other part, the Sheriffes of the ſhires, wherethrough they wandred, convening their people with all ſpéed poſſible, hunted as hotly after them, as the evilneſſe of the way, and the unprovidedneſſe of their people upon that ſudden could permit them. And ſo at laſt after Sir Richard Verney, Sheriffe of Warwickeſhire, had carefully and ſtraightly bin in chaſe of them to the confines of his County, part of the meaner ſort being alſo apprehended by him; Sir Richard Walſh Sheriffe of Worceſter ſhire did likewiſe dutifully and hotly purſue them through his ſhire; And having gotten ſure tryall of their taking harbour at the houſe above named, he did ſend trumpeters and meſſengers to them, commanding them in the Kings name to render unto him his Majeſties Miniſter; and knowing no more at that time of their guilt then was publikely viſible, did promiſe upon their dutifull and obedient rendring unto him, to intercede at the Kings hand for the ſparing of their lives: Who received only from them this ſcornfull anſwer (they being better witneſſes to themſelves, of their inward evill conſciences.) That he had néed of better aſſiſtance, then of thoſe few numbers that were with him, before he could be able to command or controll them.

The preparation to aſſault the houſe.

But here fell the wondrous worke of Gods Juſtice, that while this meſſage paſſed betwéen the ſheriffe and them, the ſheriffes & his peoples zeale being juſtly kindled and augmented by their arrogant anſwer, and ſo they preparing themſelves to give a furious aſſault; and the other party making themſelves ready within the houſe to performe their promiſe by a defence as reſolute; It pleaſed God that in the mending of the fire in their chamber, one ſmall ſparke ſhould flée out, and light among leſſe then two pound weight of pouder, which was drying a little from the chimny; which being thereby blowne up, ſo maimed the faces of ſome of the principall rebels, & the hands and ſides of others of them (blowing up with it alſo a great bag full of pouder, which notwithſtanding never tooke fire) as they were not only diſabled and diſcouraged hereby from any further reſiſtance, in reſpect Cateſby himſelfe, Rookwood, Grant, and divers others of greateſt account among them were thereby made unable for defence; but alſo wonderfully ſtrucken with amaſement in their guilty conſciences, calling to memory how God had juſtly puniſhed them with that ſame inſtrument which they ſhould have uſed for the effectuating of ſo great a ſin, according to the old Latine ſaying, In quo peccamus, in eodem plectimur: as they preſently (ſee the wonderfull power of Gods Iuſtice upon guilty conſciences) did all fall downe upon their knees, praying God to pardon them for their bloody enterpriſe: and thereafter giving over any further debate, opened the gate, ſuffered the Sheriffes people to ruſh in furiouſly among them, and deſperately ſought their own preſent deſtruction; the three ſpecials of them joyning backes together, Cateſby, Percy, and Winter, whereof two with one ſhot, Cateſby and Percy were ſlaine, and the third, Winter, taken and ſaved alive.

And thus theſe reſolute and high aſpiring Catholiques, who dreamed of no leſſe then the deſtruction of Kings and Kingdomes, and promiſed to themſelves no lower eſtate then the government of great and ancient Monarchies, were miſerably defeated and quite overthrowne in an inſtant; falling in the pit which they had prepared for others, and ſo fulfilling that ſentence which his Majeſty did in a manner prophecy of them in his Oration to the Parliament; ſome preſently ſlaine, others deadly wounded, ſtrippped of their clothes, left lying miſerably naked, and ſo dying rather of cold, than of the danger of their wounds; and the reſt that either were whole, or but lightly hurt, taken and led priſoners by the Sheriffe, the ordinary Miniſter of Iuſtice, to the Gaole, the ordinary place even of the baſeſt malefactors, where they remained till their ſending up to London, being met with a huge confluence of people of all ſorts, deſirous to ſee them as the rareſt ſort of Monſters; fooles to laugh at them, women and children to wonder, all the common people to gaze, the wiſer ſort to ſatisfie their curioſity in ſeeing the outward caſes of ſo unheard of a villany; and generally all ſorts of people to ſatiate and fill their eyes with the ſight of them, whom in their hearts they ſo far admired and deteſted: ſerving ſo for a fearefull and publique ſpectacle of Gods fierce wrath and juſt indignation.

¶ Anno III. Iacobi Regis.

An Act for a publique thankeſgiving to Almighty God, every yeare, on the fifth day of November.

FOraſmuch as Almighty God hath in all ages ſhewed his power and mercy, in the miraculous and gracious deliverance of his Church, and in the protection of religious Kings and States, and that no nation of the earth hath been bleſſed with greater benefits then this kingdome now enjoyeth, having the true and free profeſſion of the Goſpell under our moſt ſoveraigne Lord King James, the moſt great, learned, and religious King that ever raigned therein, enriched with a moſt hopefull and plentifull progeny, proceeding out of his royall loynes, promiſing continuance of this happineſſe and profeſſion to all poſterity: the which many malignant and devilliſh Papiſts, Ieſuites, and Seminary Prieſts much envying and fearing, conſpired moſt horribly, when the Kings moſt excellent Majeſty, the Queene, the Prince, and all the Lords ſpirituall and temporall, and Commons ſhould have been aſſembled in the upper houſe of Parliament, upon the fifth day of November, in the yeare of our Lord 1605. ſuddenly to have blowne up the ſaid whole houſe with Gun-powder; an invention ſo inhumane, barbarous, and cruell, as the like was never before heard of, as was (as ſome of the principall conſpirators confeſſe) purpoſely deviſed and concluded to be done in the ſaid houſe, that where ſundry neceſſary and religious Lawes for preſervation of the Church and State were made, which they falſely and ſlanderouſly terme cruell Lawes enacted againſt them and their religion, both place and perſons ſhould be all deſtroyed and blowne up at once, which would have turned to the utter ruine of this whole kingdome, had it not pleaſed Almighty God, by inſpiring the Kings moſt excellent Majeſtie with a Divine ſpirit, to interpret ſome darke phraſes of a letter ſhewed to his Majeſtie, above and beyond all ordinary conſtruction, thereby miraculouſly diſcovering this hidden Treaſon, not many houres before the appointed time for the execution thereof: Therefore the Kings moſt excellent Majeſtie, the Lords ſpirituall and temporall, and all his Majeſties faithfull and loving ſubjects do moſt juſtly acknowledge this great and infinite bleſſing to have proceeded meerly from God his great mercy, and to his moſt holy name doe aſcribe all honor, glory, and praiſe. And to the end this unfeigned thankfulneſſe may never be forgotten, but be had in a perpetuall remembrance, that all ages to come may yeeld praiſes to his Divine Majeſty for the ſame, and have in memory this joyfull day of deliverance:

Be it therefore enacted by the Kings moſt excellent Majeſty, the Lords ſpirituall and temporall, and the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, and by the authority of the ſame, That all and ſingular Miniſters in every Cathedrall and Pariſh Church, or other uſuall place for Common prayer within this Realm of England and the dominions of the ſame, ſhall alwaies upon the fifth day of November ſay Morning prayer, and give unto Almighty God thankes for this moſt happy Deliverance: and that all and every perſon and perſons inhabiting within this realme of England and the dominions of the ſame, ſhall alwaies upon that day diligently and faithfully reſort to the Pariſh Church or Chappell where the ſaid morning Prayer, Preaching, or other ſervice of God ſhall be uſed, and then and there to abide orderly and ſoberly during the time of the ſaid prayers, preaching, or other ſervice of God there to be uſed and miniſtred.

And becauſe all and every perſon may be put in minde of this duty, and be the better prepared to the ſaid holy ſervice, Be it enacted by authority aforeſaid, that every Miniſter ſhall give warning to his Pariſhioners publiquely in the Church at morning Prayer, the Sunday before every ſuch fifth day of November, for the due obſervation of the ſaid day. And that after morning Prayer, or preaching on the ſaid fifth day of November, they reade diſtinctly and plainly this preſent Act.

God ſave the King.

Anno 1611.

¶ A Prayer and Thankeſgiving for the happy deliverance of his Majeſty, the Queene, the Prince, and the States of Parliament, &c.

ALmighty God, who haſt in all ages ſhewed thy power and mercy, in the miraculous and gracious deliverances of thy Church, and in the protection of righteous and religious Kings, and States profeſſing thy holy and eternall truth, againſt the wicked conſpiracies, and malicious practiſes of all the enemies thereof: we yeeld unto thee from the very ground of our hearts all poſſible praiſe and thankes for thy wonderfull and mighty deliverance of our gracious Soveraigne K. James, the Queen, the Prince, and all the royall branches, with the nobility, clergy, and commons of this realme, aſſembled together at this preſent in Parliament, by popiſh treachery appointed as ſheep to the ſlaughter, and that in moſt barbarous and ſavage maner, no age yeelding example of the like cruelty intended towards the Lords annointed and his people. Can this thy goodneſſe, O Lord, be forgotten, worthy to be written in a pillar of Marble, that we may ever remember to praiſe thee for the ſame, as the fact is worthy a laſting monument, that all poſterity may learn to deteſt it? From this unnaturall conſpiracy, not our merit, but thy mercy, not our foreſight, but thy providence hath delivered us, not our love to thee, but thy love to thine annointed ſervant, and thy poore Church, with whom thou haſt promiſed to be preſent to the end of the world. And therefore not unto us, not unto us Lord, but to thy name be aſcribed all honor and glory in all Churches of the ſaints, throughout all generations: for thou Lord haſt diſcovered the ſnares of death, Thou haſt broken them and we are delivered. Be thou ſtill our mighty protector, and ſcatter our cruell enemies which delight in blood: infatuate their counſell, and roote out that Babiloniſh and Antichriſtian ſect, which ſay with Jeruſalem, Downe with it, downe with it, even to the ground. And to that end ſtrengthen the hands of our gracious King, the Nobles and Magiſtrates of the land with judgement and juſtice to cut off theſe workers of iniquity (whoſe religion is rebellion, whoſe faith is faction, whoſe practiſe is murthering of ſoules and bodies) and to root them out of the confines and limits of this kingdome, that they may never prevaile againſt us, and triumph in the ruine of thy Church; and give us grace by true and ſerious repentance to avert theſe and the like judgements from us. This, Lord, we earneſtly crave at thy mercifull hands, together with the continuance of thy powerfull protection over our dread Soveraign, the whole Church, and theſe Realms, and the ſpeedy confuſion of our implacable enemies, and that for thy deare Sons ſake, our only Mediatour and Advocate, Amen.

IN the yeare 1611. on the day which the papiſts call the feaſt of God, a young man of ſix and twenty yeares old, being miraculouſly called unto the knowledge of the Goſpel, was by certain Italians led through a Church where maſſe was to be ſung, and being urged to ſhew how he liked it, began to refute their Idolatry with great zeale, admoniſhing the people there preſent, not to ſuffer themſelves to be ſo ſeduced by the pompous ſplendor of ſuch vaine ſuperſtitions: Telling them, That that God which the Prieſt held up was no God, as thoſe ſeducers made them beleeve, but a meere Idoll, ſeeing it was not able to remove it ſelfe from one place to another unleſſe it were borne. Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God our Saviour is to be ſought, ſaith he, at the right hand of God the Father Almighty. This yong man was forthwith compaſſed about with an innumerable company of people, who buffeting him often on the face, and ſpurning him with their feete, haled him thence into the common Gaole of the City.

After many daies the Biſhop with ſundry other Lords, calling him before them, aſked him if the heretiques had not perſwaded him to uſe ſuch words as he had ſpoken: alſo whether he had not a reſolution to kill the Queene, or her ſon the King, or the Biſhop of Wilne? The priſoner wiſely and reſolutely anſwered, That no man had ſet him aworke to doe it, but only the zeale he had of Gods glory, his conſcience provoking him thereto; holding it impoſſible for him any longer to ſuffer that men ſhould attribute that honour to a dead Idoll, which is only due to Jeſus Chriſt his Saviour.

As touching their other demand, his anſwere was, that Chriſtian Religion teacheth us not to murther men, as Papiſts have hitherto done in France, England, in the Low-Countries, and elſewhere, as hiſtories doe daily ſhew. The priſoner alſo admoniſhed the Biſhop of Wilne to forſake all Idolatry, to preach Gods truth and verity, and ceaſe to bewitch the poore people with humane inventions: moreover this faithfull witneſſe did with much vehemency and conſtancy maintaine the truth of God, that the Biſhop of Wilne drove out of his Hall his ſervants and ſuch as came in there to heare him, But he got little by it, for as they went here and there in the City, they told it abroad, how in all their lives they never heard man ſpeake with that courage and boldneſſe of divine things to ſo good purpoſe, as this yong man had done.

Not long after he was againe brought before the ſame Judges, and queſtioned as before: but in ſtead of yeelding, he hardened his face againſt the impudency of his adverſaries. They purpoſing to quaile this his magnanimity, cauſed him to feele the torture. When he had ſuffered the utmoſt of their cruelty, he was ſo far off from abjuring the truth, that on the contrary his confeſſion diſcovered in him a greater reſolution then ever before, being deſirous and ſhewing himſelfe ready preſt to receive the Crowne of Martyrdome.

To be ſhort, the laſt of June 1611. which was the ſame day twelve-moneth 1610. where in the City of Wilne, being the capitall City of the great Ducheſſe of Lithuany, at eight of the clock in the morning there happened as terrible a fire as hath been heard of, at the houre in which the ſaid Biſhops and a great company of Jeſuites were going on proceſſion: the fire was ſo vehement, that within the ſpace of ſeven houres it devoured ſixe thouſand five hundred and fourteene houſes, which fell out as the Jeſuites ſuppoſed, becauſe they ſpared the Heretiques there. Whereupon the Martyr of Chriſt was cruelly butchered there by the enemies of the Goſpell, not in a publike place, nor by day, though he inſtantly requeſted the ſame at the hands of his Judges; but privatly in the night, in a place walled about nigh to the Governours houſe. Before they put him to death, he was cruelly tortured, and then bound by the executioner to a poſt, where they drew out his tongue under his chinne; which done, cutting off his head, his body being divided into foure quarters, was carried the next day through the City upon ſo many poles.

¶ An hiſtory of three Engliſhmen put to death at Rome.

Thrée Engliſh men méeting together entered into a conference concerning the ſtate of the Church at that time, complaining that the zeale of Gods glory was wonderfully cooled among men, yea and that even thoſe of the religion were growne but too worldly wiſe; that ſatan by little was ſowing the ſéeds of Atheiſme every where, by rocking men aſléep in the cradle of ſecurity: whereupon having in humble manner commended themſelves into the hands of God, they determined to take their voyage to Rome, and there to encounter with the adverſary of Chriſt. Thither they came, and after a few daies two of them behaving themſelves modeſtly, did in ſecret manifeſt to ſome there the truth of the Goſpell, who being betrayed were impriſoned and put to death without any further adoe.

The third, having reſolved to act his part in publique, gave over himſelfe to ſuffer all the extremities the wit of man could invent. It came to paſſe one day that this man, eſpying the Pope in the middeſt of his maſſing devotion, ſtept quickly unto him, plucked the conſecrated Hoſt out of his hands, caſt it to the ground, trod it under foot, uttering invective ſpéeches againſt the Maſſe and Antichriſt. The people in a rage fell upon the Engliſhman; who, being altogether bruiſed with their fiſts and féet, ſaid, you hangman, finde out as many torments as you can, the hand of the Almighty will ſhew it ſelf the more gloriouſly. My ſoule is reſolved to vanquiſh death valiantly. He was forthwith bound and ſet upon an Aſſe, ſixe Torches were lighted, and from ſtréet to ſtréet the executioners bare them by him, burning therewith his face, mouth, and tongue firſt; for he had ſaid before to one of the tormentors, thou haſt no power over my ſoule, thou wretch, knoweſt thou not that God underſtands the voice of my ſecret thought and complaint. When the flames came overthwart his chéekes, he was heard to cry, Lord forgive theſe men, for they know not what they doe. After they had burned all his face, put out his eyes, ſcorched and roſted his body, in the end they conſumed it wholly to aſhes.

The learned author, who ſet forth this Hiſtory in a notable work of his, notes neither the yeare nor the names of theſe Engliſhmen. It ſhould ſéeme to be about the time of Pope Clement the eighth, in Anno 1595, for in his ample diſcourſe he mentions an old wiſe man le ſage veillard burned at Rome (after theſe Engliſh men) who before he went to the fire, ſpake with ſuch efficacy to his confeſſor ſent unto him (who alſo left him not till he yéelded up his ſpirit in the middeſt of the flames into the hands of Chriſt) that this confeſſor going the next day into the Pulpit, maintained the cauſe of the old wiſe man with ſuch boldneſſe and zeale, that all the audience hearing him attentively, without any reſiſtance, underſtood his meaning, and never accuſed the Preacher.

An admirable Capuchin.

But in Lent following, a Capuchin Fryer preaching before Pope Clement the eighth called him Antichriſt, and during that Lent ceaſed not to Preach the truth of the Goſpell, in the Chaire of peſtilence, under the robe and habit of a Liar, &c.

In the ſame work my author (ſaith our Hiſtorian) mentions another Italian preacher called N. Montalchin, who in deſcribing his Hiſtory hath theſe words: The Pope perceiving that by executing the Martyrs thus openly in the ſight of the people, in ſtead of terrifying them, thereby many were the more encouraged, he reſolved with himſelfe thenceforward to conceale his open violence out of the ſight of the Sun, and to exerciſe it rather in the dark, and in the night ſeaſon. The inquiſitors, who had Montalchin in their hands, were preparing a way to murther him privily, according to the Popes intention.

It ſo fell out, that the Jaylour ſmelling the injuſtice which theſe reverend Fathers were deviſing againſt the poore priſoner, adventured to give him notice of it, to the end he making his peace with God might fit himſelfe for death. This experienced ſouldier of Jeſus Chriſt plotted a way under hand, by a ſpirituall wile, to catch the wiſe in their craftineſſe: faining therefore a repentance, he called for his judges, telling them he was now minded to revoke his errors, after they had pronounced ſentence againſt him, and would in the hearing of all recant what he had in publike maintained againſt the truth.

His Judges, beléeving he had ſpoken in good earneſt, promiſed him his life upon thoſe tearmes. Now that they might the rather ſatisfie their pride, they made known to every one the time and place appointed for his abjuration. All the city aſſembled together to take knowledge of this ſo unexpected a novelty. Montalchin was brought and placed on a ſcaffold for that purpoſe. He ſtood there in his ſhirt, holding in his hands two torches lighted: then ſilence being obtained, he began to ſpeake to the people as followeth.

Deare brethren and Children, I have a long time taught you ſuch a doctrine as hath troubled you. I am now brought hither to open my minde unto you. Montalchin is a ſinfull man and therefore may erre. But lend me your attention a while, and I will let you ſée the difference betwéen both opinions: Thrée words (ſeul, ſeule, ſeulement) will ſerve to diſtinguiſh betwéene falſhood and truth.

1 I have taught you that Chriſt is our only ſacrifice, our only prieſt, who only was once offered for us. But the Doctors teach the contrary, to wit, that the true body of Chriſt without bread is offered up for the living and for the dead, that the prieſts ought daily to offer up the naturall body of Chriſt really in the Maſſe.

2 I have taught that in taking the viſible ſignes in the Sacrament, we doe therein by faith only take the ſpirituall and heavenly bread of our ſoules.

The Doctors ſay, that Chriſts body is taken fleſh and blood into the mouth and belly of the communicant.

3 I have preached that Jeſus Chriſt is our only mediator, and that by him alone we have acceſſe unto the Father.

But the Doctors goe further, and will have us to come to the Virgin Mary, making her and all the Saints departed our Mediators and Interceſſors.

4 I have declared that we are juſtified only by faith in Jeſus Chriſt, and that the frée mercy of God is the foundation of our ſalvation.

The Doctors would have us to help our faith, and grace by good workes as meritorious cauſes of ſalvation.

5 You have heard me preach that Chriſt only gives grace; and that he alone pardons ſins.

They affirm that the Church hath a Coffer or Cheſt, of which the Pope kéeps the keyes, whereinto are put the merits of ſaints, which he largely Anno 1611. diſtributed abroad to ſuch as will buy his pardons with money.

6 I have told you that the Canonicall bookes of the old and new Teſtament are the onely ground of our faith and ſalvation.

The Doctors adde thereto their unwritten verities.

7 I have taught you that after this life ended there are only two places prepared for them to goe unto who die and depart out of this world; One, the place of joy and comfort, the other of torment.

The Doctors ſay, there are foure, viz. Paradiſe, Hell, Limbus, and Purgatory.

8 I have preached that the Pope is not a god on earth, but only a Biſhop, and that only of one place, if he therein behave himſelfe as a good Biſhip ought to doe.

The Doctors make him Lord of the world, and the head of the viſible Church.

9 Now O Chriſtian brethren, Judge you of that which I have ſaid, and ſée if you can diſcerne Truth from Error; Truth leads you to life, honour, and bleſſedneſſe; Error and lies to death and deſtruction.

Be now either ſervants of Truth, or the ſlaves of Error. For my part I will cleave to the truth of the Goſpell, and doe condemne all errors and lies: let Montalchin die, and live thou, O Lord Jeſus.

Then threw he downe his two burning torches, one this way, and another that way, offering his hands to be tyed and bound, which cauſed a great tumult among the people. Montalchin was returned back again to priſon.

Now Reader, it will not be hard for thée to imagine what entertainment he found there: whether or no the Popes " Decrée was executed to the full upon this worthy Confeſſor, who in the face of the world did ſo nobly triumph over Satan and Antichriſt his Lieutenant.

" Which was to put the martyrs to death, privily, as was noted in the beginning of this hiſtory.

Concluſion.

¶ The invincible conſtancy of the Martyrs tyred the Perſecutors; their fiery burning zeale dryed up the Rivers; the ſlaughter of mens ſwords ſéemed to be blunted; the Hangmens halters to be utterly ſpent and waſted, &c.

MAT. 5. 10.

Bleſſed are they that are perſecuted for righteouſneſſe ſake, for theirs is the Kingdome of Heaven.

¶ The true declaration of the Maſſacres of the Valtoline.

Albeit that the Griſon Lords, being as it were the Soveraigne Magiſtrates, had by ſundry Decrées, according to the common liberty of the two Religions in thoſe countries, granted, that in the Countrey of Boalez, a place belonging to the territory of Tell, there ſhould be eſtabliſhed a Church for the Religion, which ſhould receive the ordinary ſtipend which at that preſent was allowed to other Churches of the Valtoline, An. 1619. in the moneth of May: The Miniſter of the Church of Tell with the Miniſters of Irian and Bruſe, together with the aſſiſtance of the principall Lords of Tyrano and Tegly, did méet together in the ſaid place of Boalez, to preach in the Church of that place. But ſo great was the multitude and concourſe of the papiſts in that place in Armes, that they were of neceſſity inforced to give over their purpoſe; and at that time was Maſter Gaudentius Taches the Paſtor of Bruſe almoſt beaten to death with ſtaves, a young man of Tyrano was ſlaine outright, and others very cruelly handled by ſome of theſe villaines, who by that occaſion may worthily be called the firſt martyrs of the Country of Tyrano.

Within a ſhort time after was murdered a ſervant of the Governour of that place, where the rage and fury of thoſe murderers grew unto that height, that they did not only contemne the

Proclamations

Anno 1620.

Proclamations publiſhed by the Governor, but in ſcorn and deſpite thereof they paſſed up and downe before the Palace, threatening to kill the ſaid governor, and other principall perſons of the Church of France.

Now for that the ordinary Magiſtrate of that place was not ſtrong enough to repreſſe the outrages and inſolencies of thoſe villaines, from whom none could bee ſecure either in their houſes or abroad, by reaſon of the frequent attempts which they made upon the Proteſtants, the rather for that they bordered neere upon a forraine juriſdiction, to which they had recourſe when they had committed any miſchiefe, the Governour was conſtrained to make his addreſſe for juſtice to the ſoveraigne Dave of the countrey, who about the midſt of February, anno 1620, granted a commiſſion, wherein were named theſe commiſſioners, viz. the Lords Joachinas Montalta, at this time Vicar of the Valtoline, John Baptiſta of Salicht, a Doctor of Law, Ja. Rumel a captain, Salomon Candeamma Buoli, Landlaine of Tavos, in the ten juriſdictions, Dieteganus Fertmannus, captaine of the Lordſhip of Meienfield, and John Andrea Miniardino for the Chancellorſhip, &c.

By theſe perſons, beſides the proceſſes framed already by the Lords, John of Cappaul, Governour of Tyrano, and Andreo Enderlino of Tegly, there were againe divers proceſſes framed anew, and upon the impriſonment and revealing of certain perſons it was diſcovered and confeſſed, there was a reſolution made in the ſame place of Boalty to pnt to the ſword not only the Preacher if he had preached, but alſo all the people, as many as profeſſed the Goſpell, as they could light upon, yea even the magiſtrate himſelfe; beſides there were divers perſons diſcovered, and thoſe of principall ranke, who were the authors of thoſe wicked and barbarous practiſes, and had promiſed all poſſible ayde and aſſiſtance unto them.

And therefore, the importance of the buſineſſe being of great conſequence, it was thought expedient, that thoſe Lords, Commiſſioners, ſhould return to Tavos, and report to the Court of juſtice, which there reſided, all the buſineſſe which reſulted of theſe proceſſes; which they accordingly did about the midſt of April laſt paſt. Moreover, they were intreated by divers noble perſons of the proteſtant Church of the Valtoline, that they would with all poſſible ſpeed provide a garriſon of Griſons for the defence of the vally, in regard that by the foreſaid diſcovery they had great reaſon to feare a generall rebellion, in caſe they ſhould proceed to chaſtiſe the authors of thoſe tumults and diſorders, and that ſuch a buſineſſe could not be, without intelligence with the Spaniard, and that ſo much the more likely, that ſome certaine yeares agoe ſuch another practiſe had bin diſcovered and attempted to be put in practiſe, as came to paſſe 1584, and ſince of late.

All theſe buſineſſes were conſidered, but it was not poſſible to put the ſame in effect for many reaſons, had it not been that they received intelligence that a number of Spaniards approached neere to the three plebes, which were places adjoyning to the Valtoline, by which occaſion the Magiſtrate and governors of the Valtoline were conſtrained to put a guard neere the trenches of Trahona, and Morben, about the Calends of July 1620, thinking to ſecure the valley from the forraine enemy: and that guard conſiſted of the Countrey-men, and dwellers in the Valtoline: & this courſe wrought no other effect but that the Proteſtants by this meanes were incloſed in of all ſides, that they could not flee away on that ſide, by the way already concluded, but anticipated within eight daies which was the Sabboth day. The ninth of July 1620, followed the maſſacre in the countrey of Tyrane and Teglio, as now ſince in Sondres, a principall countrey of this Valley.

¶ The maſſacre of Tyrane, wherein were murthered about threeſcore perſons.

The beginning of their murthers was made at Tyrane, wherein thoſe barbarous and wicked fellowes were aſſiſted by certain villains who lived neer in a forrain juriſdiction, of whom the principall captains and ringleaders, were Jacopo Robuſtello of Groſſot, Marco Anthonio de Venoſta, a Doctor of phyſicke of Mazzio, and Francis Venoſta of Tyrane, a Doctor of the Civill Law. Theſe together with their confederats and dependants, both ſuch as were domeſtique, and came from forrain places, that were the moſt cruell and bloudy villaines which could be picked out thereabouts, before any enterpriſe covertly made, gave order, that all the waies and paſſages of every ſide ſhould be well guarded, to the end that their cruell enterpriſe upon the Proteſtants of the Countrey ſhould not ſo readily be diſcovered, and they the attempters themſelves ſhould be the leſſe troubled in the execution.

Then about ſixe of the clocke in the night, they entred into the Countrey of Tyrane, like ſo many foming wild Bores, making their rendevous of Doctor Franceſco Venoſta. They cauſed foure muskets to be diſcharged before the Palace of the Seignior Podeſta the principall magiſtrate of the place, and rung the great Bell of Tyrane. Upon which ſignall all the inhabitants in that vicinity tooke the alarme, and made head toward the ſaid houſe. They gave order to break the bridges which lay towards Bruſe, and on the place they planted a ſtrong guard, and this was done before day. Suddenly upon the dawning of the day, the Bels began to ring another peale a Matello, and then theſe traitors began to bandy and to range themſelves together. The Proteſtants, who without feare or ſuſpition of any practiſe againſt them, came out of their houſes into the ſtreets to ſee what the matter was, were ſuddenly ſhot and moſt cruelly murthered in the place. Others by force entred into the houſes of the Proteſtants, drew them out of their beds, and without any compaſſion ſlew all they could meet withall.

John Andrea Cataneo was by his wife delivered from the hands of thoſe murtherers, but was againe by force recovered by them. And although this Gentlewoman was a neere kinſwoman of Robuſtello, and of Doctor Venoſta, as couſins once removed, and this Cataneo had ever eſteemed them among his better friends, yet could not he obtaine the favor to have his life ſpared. He prayed them that firſt hee might have leave to ſpeake with the ſaid Doctor, which could not bee obtained. In the meane time he eſcaped into another houſe adjoyning, and hid himſelfe in a Garret in the top thereof, hoping to eſcape the hands of thoſe his furious perſecutors: but all in vaine, for they nevertheles purſued him into the houſe, wher he poore Gentleman hid himſelfe, they tooke him, and caſt him down out of the houſe into the ſtreet, and when they found there was yet life in him, they with a moſt inhumane and unſpeakeable cruelty diſpatched him with a piece of Timber.

Antonio de Salve, a Chancellor in that Valley being appointed Judge upon criminall cauſes, a man of the greateſt authority in the pregella, and other places, who at that inſtant was reſident at Sondres, being deſirous to ſave himſelfe together with his Deputy, Marco Antonio Venoſta a Doctor of Law in the houſe of Jacobo

Anno 1620.

Homodeo was drawne out of the houſe into the ſtreet, with Venoſta and his ſervant Antonio Keller of Soglio in the ſaid Pregella, and ſlaine with a ſhot of musket, being of the age of forty two yeres.

Seignior Andrea Enderlin of Kublis in Pretigonia, a Gentleman of great worth, very ſingularly learned, and skilfull in many languages, being at that time Governor of Teglie, in the name of the three leagues, being in this hurly-burly by chance in Tyrane in the houſe of Battiſta Baruſſino, was alſo with his ſervant George Petterlin ſtrangled to death in the chamber where he was found: and this noble Gentleman, being firſt caſt out of the chamber window, was all his body over ſo beaten and bruiſed, that you could not know him; and yet after, their fury not ceaſing, they knitting a cord about his necke threw him into the river of Adda: notwithſtanding hee was afterward found and buried.

In the meane time, with this Governour alſo was ſlaine Iohn the ſon of Senior Michael Montio of Bruiſe, a Gentleman of ſingular goodneſſe and wiſedome, who before time had been Deputy to his father in the government of Trahona, and in the ſame demeaned himſelfe with great commendation. Who being deſirous to withdraw himſelfe from Tyrane to his owne houſe, was intreated by Ambroſio Baruſſino, ſonne of the foreſaid Battiſta, for his greater ſecuritie to lodge with him in his houſe. Which courteſy when he had accepted, ſuſpecting no treacherie in his new hoſt, he was by him ſhot with a musket, and caſt into the floud of Adda, being of the age of forty yeares.

The reverend Gentleman Senior Antonio Baſſo, Paſtor of the Proteſtant Church of Tyrane, a man of great ſanctity and wiſedome, and a lover of the peace of the Countrey, hearing the noyſe of theſe uprores, he and Maſter Samuel Andreoſcha the Paſtor of Mello in the lower Tercier, whom he had viſited that day, withdrew themſelves into a hall, where having recommended their ſoules to God, they were moſt cruelly ſlaine.

Neither did thoſe furious perſecutors reſt here, but beſides they cut off Baſſoes head, and carried it into the Church, and fixed it upon a pole in the pulpit where before time he was wont to preach, ſaying with all diſgrace and ſcorne, Come downe Baſſo, thou haſt preached long enough already.

In like manner at the ſame time the Palace of the Chequer of Tyrane was beſieged by thoſe helhounds; wherein dwelt Senior Iohn de Cappaul being at that time governor. To which place Michael Lazarone, a man of good acount and chancellor of that office, had retired himſelfe early in the morning to ſave his life. But becauſe he was extreamely hated of the Papiſts, by reaſon of his ſingular piety, religion, and ſincerity, hee was eſpecially purſued by them; inſomuch as thoſe rebels followed him even to the palace, threatning to ſet fire on the ſame, if he were not delivered into their hands. Lazarone ſeeing that notwithſtanding the Palace was well furniſhed with great ordnance, faulcons, muskets, munition, and other neceſſary proviſions, he was like to fall into the hands of his enemies, for that the ſaid Governor was reſolved in his judgement to overcome thoſe miſcreants rather by faire and courteous dealing than by force, was inforced that evening to fly out of the houſe, and to hide himſelfe about the banks of the river Adda, wherein he covered himſelfe, and lay cloſe three whole houres all naked, poore Gentleman, to ſave himſelfe. But his enemies, and principally Doctor Vincentio followed him hotly, accompanied with many ſhot, and at the laſt they found him, and drew him out of the water. And albeit he did with teares in his eyes beſeech them that they would give him his life, in compaſſion of his deare ſmall children, yet could not he obtaine that favor at their hands, but they anſwered him, That this was no time for pitty, and favour: but if he would ſweare by the Popes Bull, and abjure his Faith, in that caſe they would ſhew him favor, and grant him his life. But he, with a great and couragious reſolution, anſwered, God forbid and defend that I for love of this temporall life ſhould deny my Lord Ieſus Chriſt, who with his precious bloud upon the wood of the Croſſe did at ſo deare a rate redeeme me, and after that I have ſo long time through his grace freely and publikely confeſſed him, ſhould now hazard the loſſe of eternall life, to which I was elected before the foundation of the World; I ſay God forbid. Vpon this ſpeech he was in moſt barbarous and ſavage manner murthered by them.

The very ſame evening was the gate of the palace burnt to the ground by thoſe rebels, who the next morning entred into the ſame, raging with fury, and tooke the Governour priſoner with his young ſonne; ſpoyling and ranſacking wives, and maidens, and carrying away all they could lay hands on. The Governour of the Palace was carried away priſoner to the houſe of the foreſaid Dort Franceſco, and at laſt, after he had long time been tugged to and fro, hee was miſerably ſlaine with a ſhot.

Iohn Antonio Mazano endeavouring to make reſiſtance againſt thoſe rebels, and his wife defending him, was with her ſelfe and two young children miſerably killed.

Another called Iohn Antonio Schloſſer, a Gardoneſe, having made long reſiſtance, and killed one of the rebels, was at the laſt taken, and tyed to a tree, and ſo ſhot to death.

To be ſhort, theſe villaines had no regard of any perſon, neither young, nor old, nor weake, nor ſtrong, but all of all ſorts were either ſhot unto death, or cut in pieces, or in one manner or other deſtroyed; and the number of thoſe perſons in eſtimation, who in Tyrane received the crown of martyrdome for the profeſſion of the Goſpell, was about ſixty.

Of thoſe who by the grace of God, although with great danger, eſcaped through the horrid and vaſte Alpes into Retia and other parts, were only three perſons, that is, Doctor Iacobo Albertino, Iacobo Nevio de Coyra, and Egidio Venoſta, who left behind them wealth, wives, children, and whatſoever goods they had.

The Ladies who were not ſlain were conſtrained to change their Religion, and at this day goe to maſſe, ſaving the wife of the ſaid Lazarone and her daughters, and her niece, being the wife of the ſaid Egidio, who by the aſſiſtance of Almighty God continued in ſafety. And there alſo the eighth of Auguſt, the ſaid Ladies were releaſed, who retired themſelves into Retia, viz. the wife of this Lazarone, and her two daughters, leaving behind them in the Valtoline one daughter and two yong ſonnes who cannot obtaine leave to depart the countrey.

CHAP. 2.

¶ The maſſacre of Teglie, wherein were murthered about ſixty perſons.

These wicked traitors having in this manner committed the foreſaid execrable maſſacre in Tyrane, ſuddenly the ſtrangers and the outlawes of the mountaines, apparrelled in red caſſockes, and well mounted on horſebacke, marched in the morning to Tel at the houre when the Sermon was, and ran like ravening Wolves to the Volta Church, being guided by two Friers, Azzo and Carolo Beſta, & by Antonio Beſta their couſin germane. The Proteſtants who were in the Church, obſerving the evill intention of thoſe villains, aroſe ſuddenly from their ſeats, and endevored to ſhut the Church dore, and to barricadoe the place with the benches. They without laboured with all their power to enter the Church: but not being able ſo ſpéedily to do it, ſome of them climed up unto the windowes, and diſcharged their muskets among the people without reſpect of any perſon, and killed very many of them. At laſt they forced the dore, entred, and ſlew all they found, ſaving a few who promiſed to go to maſſe. Some of the men and ladies with their children fled into the belfrey to ſave themſelves; but they ſet fire to the place, & moſt miſerably burnt all that were within.

Amongſt thoſe who were ſlaine in the Church, the chiefeſt of note was the reverend Lord John Piere Dante of Rozu of the higher Engadin, a miniſter of the Proteſtant Church of Tell, a man rarely endued with learning and the feare of God, and in thoſe reſpects honoured even of his enemies themſelves; who after he had with lively reaſons exhorted that afflicted Church of his conſtantly to perſevere unto death in the knowne and confeſſed truth, to the honor of his Savior, even ſo long as the brevity of the time would permit him, was to the griefe of very many miſerably ſhot to death, being of the age of 42 yeares.

Amongſt theſe was one Joſui Gatti a Doctor of the law, Lievtenant to the Podeſta of Tell, and principall Juſtice, an honorable Gentleman, and of excellent vertues, about 43 yeares of age, together with Daniel Gugelberge.

Gaudenzo Guizziardi a Gentleman of like worth and honour, Couſin germane to the father of the forenamed Azzo Beſta, of the age of ſixty foure yeares; Margaritta his daughter of the age of fourtéene yeares, or thereabouts, was wounded with a musket ſhot in the head, going about to bow her ſelfe by giving a laſt kiſſe to her deare father who was yéelding up the ghoſt.

Antonio the ſonne of Scipion Beſta, a Gentleman very rich and of excellent parts, although hee was the néere kinſman of Azzo Beſta, was ſhot to death, and died in the arms of his wife, being of the age of thirty ſeven.

Aſcanio Gatti an Apothecary of Tell, being ſeven and twenty yeres of age, George his brother eightéen yeres old, Jonata Piatti ſixty five yeares old, Maximilian Piatti foure and twenty yeares, Vincenzo Frigerio, Notary and Procurator of Tell, age 39. Marſſilio Piatti, age 38. Filiberto his brother, age 19. Virginio Piatti, age 28. Lorenzo Piatti of Boaltie, age 23. ſlaine with a musket ſhot at the window of the ſtéeple. Philippo Nova likewiſe of Boaltie, age 45. Bartolomeo his brother, age 42. Petro Marcioninno Maſter of the ſchool of Tell, age 35. Thomas de Boruno, age 64. together with his ſon Claudio Gatti a Notary, age 43. Andrea Tempino a Gardoneſe, age 41. Anna Gala di Zozio of the upper Agnadma wife of Bartolomeo Nova a Romane Catholike, age 42. Benedetto Cattaneo, age 17. Giouanni Pietro, and John Martin Cattaneo his ſons, Lucius Federicke, age 60. Andruno Morello age 50. Joſepho his brother, age 35. Alberto Marcumni, 45. Federico Valentino of Zernezo, of Agnadma the lower, dwelling at Gura, of the hundred of Chiure, age 64. Joanni Menghino of Poſvavo, dwelling in Gura, 40 yeares of age.

In the Stéeple of the Church were burnt theſe which follow; Horatio Gatti, ſonne of the abovesaid Joſue Gatti, age 6. Doctor Lelio Paravicino of Berbenno, a Phyſitian of great worth, and excellently practiſed in his profeſſion, dwelling in Tell, age 43. Azzo Guizziardi nephew of the above named Gaudenzo, a young courteous gentleman, and of rare hope, age 22, Friderico Guizziardi, age 34. Horatio Paravicino ſonne of Franciſco, age 6. Margareta Marlianica wife of Raphael Nova a Doctor of the Law, a Gentleman of great worth, age 43. Madalena her daughter, wife of Daniel Gatti, age 18. Anſhelmo Gatti Chancellor of the State of Tell, age 67. Giovan Pauli Piatti ſon of Jonata, age 48. Claudia Piatti daughter of Maſſimiliano, age 7. Violante late wife of Theodore Gatti, age 64. Giovanninna widow of Vincentio Nova, age 34. Pietro Regenzano Chancellor of the above named Podeſta of Tell, age 46. Joſue Meda, age 50. Martua of Borum, age 53. Madalena Girardona wife of Claudio Gatti, age 33. Auguſto Gatti ſon of Abraham, age 22.

Abroad without the Church and Stéeple were ſlaine Vincentio Gatti, brother of Anſhelmo, age 73. Andrea his ſonne, age 32. who was murthered in the ſtréet called Lagone. Claudio Gatti ſonne of Theodoro, Jonatan Meda ſonne of Joſue, Daniel Lazeroto, Vincentio Cattaneo, and Giovan Pietro Regenzano, who, comming from Morbegno from the garriſon, were ſlaine in a certaine place called Buffetto, age 18. or thereabouts. Thomazo Regenzano brother of Giovan Pietro, age 38. Melchior Marcionino wounded in the head, but after five daies being found in his bed, was ſolicited with great promiſes to renounce his Religion: but he with great earneſtneſſe and reſolution refuſing was murthered in his bed, age 65. Giovanni Antonio Federici, Doctor of Law in Sonico, in Valeamenica, age 38. was very néer to be murthered in priſon, from whence at the inſtance of Antonio Piatti Curate of Tell he was ſet frée.

In this place it is worth the noting, that Giovan Abondio Nova ſonne of Doctor Raffaele, a very learned young man, albeit out of humane infirmity to ſave his life he had promiſed in the Church of Tell to goe to maſſe, yet in ſhort time recovering himſelfe, and acknowledging his overſight, with much griefe and repentance for his fault, he with all ſpéed departed from Tell towards Sondres, ſuppoſing that he ſhould be ſafely protected by his deare kinſman Nudar Marliemico; but being required by the ſouldiers who kept the paſſage of Triſirta, to deny his Religion, for refuſing the ſame, he was ſlaine in the way, being 22 yeares of age. This young man is a ſingular example for them who fall méerly through infirmity and danger of death, not in other reſpect, but yet after their fall, through the grace of God, and the crowing voice of the word doe returne to repentance, confeſſing their fault, and with unfained ſorrow of heart bewailing the ſame; which even befel the bleſſed Apoſtle Peter himſelfe.

CHAP. 3.

The maſſacre following committed at Sondres in the mountaine of Sondrium and Malenk; wherein were left dead above 140 perſons.

These wicked and ſavage wretches, having in this manner executed and finiſhed this their impious and execrable enterpriſe at Tyrane and Tell, aſſembled themſelves in the middeſt of the Valley of Sondres, where the principall and chiefe Juſtice of the Country made his reſidence, having before placed ſecure guards upon every paſſage of the countrey about. They came principally by the conduct of Giovani Guizziardi, Proſpero Swadino, and Guilio Pozalis, being all three of Ponte, with an entire company of ſouldiers from Ponte, Chiur, and ſome few from Porti, who the very ſame Sunday marched to the gate of Alboſagia : in which place they found Lorenco Paribello a doctor, Giovan, Iacomo, and Floratio his ſons, with another company of ſouldiers attending the comming of the aboveſaid Iohn Guizziardi with his company.

This buſineſſe was freely divulged all abroad in Sondres by the Romane Catholikes themſelves, that theſe baniſhed came towards Sondres to execute the ſame deſigne which they before had practiſed at Tyrane and Tell, who offered their ayd to the chiefe Iuſtice to defend him againſt the invaſion, proteſting that they would no more endure any ſuch villanous attempts. Wherfore they took armes, under pretence and ſhew of defence, beating up the drummes, ane ringing the bells for the alarme: by which meanes not only great multitudes aſſembled in armes out of the countries adjoyning, but alſo with one purpoſe and conſent to doe miſchiefe, and to execute their malitious intentions againſt the proteſtants who ſuſpected nothing leſſe. In the meane time the proteſtants, truſting to the great promiſes which the Papiſts made them, mixed themſelves amongſt them.

Theſe perſons, concealing their miſchievous intent, killed at times ſometimes one, ſometimes another of the Proteſtants, in ſuch manner, as although divers of them were ſlaine, yet they did not underſtand the ſecret of the practiſe.

Some of them endeavouriug to flee towards the valley of Malenco, which lies againſt Polchiaro, Agnedma, and Pregalia, were murthered by certaine villaines of Ponchiero, a place about Sondres: and amongſt other Gentlewomen were wounded and run through in many parts Frances Marliannio, Giovanni Andrea Chiſſa, and others, particularly Doctor Bartholomeo Paravicino, Doctor of the Law in Berbenno, called the Fatt, who was cruelly murthered, being of age 53 yeares.

The day after was ſlaine in the morning Nicholo Marlianco, ſonne of Felloſio, a man ſingularly affected to the publique good, and to the advancement of the Goſpell. Hee was ſhot by his couſin germane Emilio Luvizaro meeting him in the ſtreet, the ſaid Marlianco going in the company of Lucio Dſchletta of Zornezo Agnadina the lower, to viſit the court of guard in the quarrevoy of Sondres, age 46.

At this time it was delivered for certaine, that the day before was murthered Ceſar the ſonne of Proſpero Paravicino, and of Hortenſia Marteninga, Counteſſe of Barco, a Gentleman of moſt rare abilities, travelling about his buſineſſe towards Treſiar, age 50. Beſides Proſpero his ſon was ſlaine, of age 27. alſo Battiſta Girrardo with his ſonne George, and many others : by which meanes, theſe proteſtants were ſo ſcattered and left deſtitute of any head for their conduct, that they could not poſſibly unite themſelves to make defence againſt their enemies.

Onely the Chancellor Giovan Andrea Migardino, calling to remembrance the matters contained in the aboveſaid proceſſes, the ſame ſabbath day the ninth of Iuly, with his brother Gregory, and others of the Church of Sondres, withdrew themſelves to the number of eighteene together, with certaine Ladies and their young children into their owne houſe, which is adjoyning to the Palace, and there they fortified themſelves with reſolution to defend themſelves even to the death, ſeeing that in the ſtreet wherein they dwelt none durſt come out of the doores, nor enter into the Church which ſtood over againſt them. Nevertheleſſe, the enemy reſolved to ſet upon the houſe with a thouſand armed men, threatening alſo the Magiſtrate to kill him, in caſe any of them ſhould take any harm by thoſe who were retired into the houſe. Whereupon the Magiſtrate commanded them in the houſe to depart ; who being well armed tooke their way on the ſudden by Sondres towards the bridge, where for a time they fortified themſelves, then returning again, they drew unto them certain others, and marched towards the Church of the Mountaine of Sondres. In which place being gathered together with the Paſtor, they made their prayers to God, and afterwards to the number of threeſcore and thirteene perſons in all they paſſed the valley of Malenco, which was beſet by the enemy on two ſides : but thoſe that kept thoſe places were by the providence of God ſo aſtoniſhed, that they fled away, and the proteſtants, although they were purſued to the tops of the hils, did miraculouſly eſcape with ſafety.

The enemy, that is to ſay, the proper Inhabitants of the valley, with their ringleaders Iames Robuſtello, Azzo Beſta, Iohn Guizziardi, Lorenzo Paribello, and others entred into the Palace, they deprived the Magiſtrate of his office, that is to ſay, Giovanni, Andrea Traerſio of Scants, of the upper Agnadua, Captaine and Governour of the Valtoline, who with his family had retired himſelfe into the houſe of Paul Clamar untill Wedneſday the eleventh of Iuly; on which day, under proteſtation to ſecure them, they were conducted to Malenco, where in the Village of Chiſſa, againſt their faith given, they were made priſoners, and detained for eight daies following. They who by the commandement of the ſaid captaine found themſelves to bee made priſoners were delivered, putting in their roome certaine of the Religion. They immediately changed the Calender, and gave for a prey the goods of the Proteſtants : by which occaſion great multitudes of perſons aſſembled from all the parts of the Valtoline to rob and ſpoile ; and by reaſon of the ſweetneſſe which they found in pillaging the goods they met with in divers noble houſes excellently well furniſhed, grew an intolerable heate and outrage to ſpoile, inſomuch as brother robbed brother, and the neereſt of kindred purſued and robbed one another, and followed one another to the death. The peaſants, hoping by meanes hereof to be exempted from paying their yearely rents, ranne with all fury and madnes about the woods, buſhes, and mountaines, ſearching after the poore Proteſtants, who were ſcattered by feare, whom they murthered as they found them with extreme cruelty.

Amongſt theſe were theſe Gentlemen of greateſt worth and reſolution, Doctor Bartolomeo Paravicino of Sondres, from whom they tooke about two thouſand crownes ; Doctor Nicolas his brother, whoſe brother Doctor Lelio had before been ſlaine in the Church of Tell; Petronio Paravicino, Doctor, and Giovan Battiſta Mallerio of Antwerpe in the Low-Countries, a man endued with excellent rare qualities of mind and body ; for he was both a good Philoſopher and a learned Divine, and very fit to inſtruct youth he was ſurpriſed in the houſe of Morone, and when they had ſtoned him to death, they cut off his head, ripped his belly, and tooke out his entrailes. His Children, Giovan, Andrea, and Catharine were carried to Millane.

Annaidi Lita, wife of Anthony Grotti of Chio in the territory of Vincentine, of an honorable and antient houſe, was come out of Italy but ſome few yeares before for the liberty of her conſcience. This Anna was firſt by them exhorted with faire words to change her Religion; but ſhe conſtantly perſevering therein, was admoniſhed that ſhe would at the leaſt have a care of her young infant which ſhe held in her armes, being about two months old; otherwiſe ſhee would make reckoning that in the twinkling of an eie both ſhe and her babe ſhould die: but ſhe with a bold and undaunted courage anſwered, That ſhe had not departed out of Italy her native Countrey, neither had ſhe forſaken all the eſtate ſhe had, to renounce at laſt that faith which had been inſpired unto her by the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; yea, that ſhe would rather ſuffer, if it were poſſible, a thouſand deaths. And how, ſaith ſhe, ſhould I have regard in this caſe of my infant, ſince God our heagenly Father ſpared not his onely Sonne, my Lord Jeſus, but delivered him up to death for the love of me and of all ſinners: Then giving them the child, ſhe ſaid, behold the childe; the Lord God, who hath care of the birds of the aire, will much more be able to ſave this poore creature, although by you it were abandoned and left in thoſe wilde mountaines. So unlacing her gowne ſhee opened her breaſt, and ſaid, Here is the body which you have power to kill; but my ſoule, on which you have no power to lay hand, that I commend to my God, and preſently ſhe was ſlain, and afterwards cut in pieces, being thirty five yeares old. The infant, becauſe it was a lovely and a ſweet babe to looke on, was ſuffered to live. God reſtraining the cruelty of thoſe butchers, and was delivevered to a popiſh woman to nurſe up. And here is to be obſerved, that this bleſſed Martyr imitated the commendable example of her deare brother Giovanni Antonio, who for the profeſſion of the truth of the Goſpell having continued in the ſaid Chio, and endured a grievous impriſonment two yeres together, was at laſt condemned to the Galley, where he died within two moneths after. When he was bound in chains, being carried from Chio, he ſaid, You may indeed bind my perſon, but the word of God ſhall never the more be bound in the hearts of the elect, that it doe not ſhew manifeſtly it ſelfe, and bring forth fruit, &c.

A holy reſolution.

Behold here the power of faith.

Gods Word and Goſpell can never be bound in the heart of Gods elect.

According to this moſt Chriſtian example John Steeven Moron and Rodulfo Rivello, being both of them of the Valley of Sondres, did not onely in their proper perſons ſeal with their bloud the truth of the Goſpell, but moreover exhorted their children, John Andrea, and John Antonio, the one of them being fifteene yeares of age, the other ten, that they ſhould doe the like, following the honourable example of the ſeven brethren in the Machabees, and of their mother, who choſe rather to dye, than to obey the King, and to tranſgreſſe the Law of the Lord.

And yet by reaſon of the money and jewels found in the houſes and cheſts of the Proteſtants, the eagerneſſe and fury of each of thoſe miſcreants increaſed daily more and more; inſomuch as that there were neither noble nor ignoble, nor Lady, no neither man, woman, young nor old, of what condition ſoever, who were not ranſacked and ſpoiled, ſome twiſe, and others oft times thriſe over. Some honourable matrons had their rings pulled off their fingers, inſomuch as they would cut off their hands and fingers, if they would not preſently draw them off. Some women were by force dragged up to the tops of high and craggy mountaines, and threatened to be throwne downe headlong with their children, unleſſe they would goe to maſſe. And although Lucretia the wife of Antonio Lavizaro, and Katherina wife of Giulio Merlianico, being moved and terrified with the horror of death, had conſented to change their Religion, yet were they murthered for all that without any pitty at all.

The ſame befell to D. Jo. Battiſta Salici of Soglio in the Pregaglia; for although that his life was promiſed him, nevertheleſſe he was brought into the market place of the ſaid Campello pinioned with a cord, and miſerably ſlain with two musketiers, being of the age of 72, after he had bin robbed of his gold and ſilver, whereof great ſtore was found in his houſe, according to the common and too much practiſed rule of the Roman Catholikes, Hæreticis non eſt ſervanda fides.

Dominico Berto, an aged man of 67 yeres, was ſet upon an Aſſe, his face turned to the taile, which he held in his hand in ſtead of a bridle, and in his other hand a booke, whom in this manner they carried through Sondres, ſaying, Aleſſio, Aleſſio, &c. they cut off his eares, his noſe, his cheekes, boring holes in divers parts of his body, with a ſtrange and unheard of barbarouſneſſe, untill they had quite killed him; but he for the love of Chriſt his Savior with great and incredible courage & cheerfulneſſe endured all thoſe varieties of torments and martyrdome. And by this it may be gathered what they would have don with Seignior Aleſſio, a faithfull Paſtor of the Church of Sondres, if he had falne into the hands of theſe raging beaſts. But he by the great mercy of God was preſerved with his wife and children, in the company of ſeignior Georgio Jenatro Miniſter of Berbenno, and Charles Salice ſon of Cavaliere Hercole of happy memory, and others, not without great travell, danger and difficulties, among the craggy and dangerous mountains, whereon they travelled, it ſo pleaſing the gracious God by the vertue of his ſpirit graciouſly to aſſiſt him, although he was in the midſt of his perſecutors.

Anthony de Prati of the hils was with many words exhorted to abjure his Religion; but he conſtantly perſevered, and with a generous courage replyed in theſe words, My ſoule ſhall be taken up into Abrahams boſome, and after my death my enemies ſhall ſee the Angell of God hard by mee, &c. and accordingly an Angell appeared over his body in a white garment, being beheld of the by-ſtanders, who of their owne accord have publikely confeſſed the ſame.

Theophilo Moſſino received into his body a ſhot with a musket: but before he was dead a gag was put in his mouth, which being filled with gunpouder, fire was given to it, and in that manner he paſſed miſerably out of this life; Giovanni his ſon was ſlain with ſeven wounds.

Seignior Salvetto, being delivered out of priſon, was inſtantly exhorted to embrace the catholike Romane Religion. But notwithſtanding he conſtantly perſiſted, although he was both young in yeares, and a lover of worldly vanities: and having received a ſhot of a musket was carried by a ladder out of the Palace to the ground, from whence he raiſed himſelfe, and beſought them to finiſh the worke they had to doe about his body, that he might render his ſoule to his Creator, being 28 yeares of age.

Jo. Battiſta Mingardino, having received many wounds, and being ſtripped of his garments, and left naked in the woods, neverthele s after this ſo evill intreaty hee returned to his houſe: and although the Prieſts of Sondres did with all diligence poſſible exhort him to change his Religion, promiſing him, in caſe he would doe ſo, mountaines of gold; neverthe eſſe hee conſtantly perſevered in the truth of the Goſpell even to the end.

Chriſtina Ambria the wife of Vincenzo Bruno of Prada, Mudalena Merli of Montagna, and John Garato of Fruragiola, were throwne downe headlong into the river Adda, from divers bridges of Boſſetto, S. Petro and others, and ſo drowned, becauſe they had refuſed to embrace the Catholike Romane Religion, and that with ſo manly and conſtant a reſolution, as did worke an admiration in the perſecutors themſelves.

In this meane time notwithſtanding the reverend Seignior Bartholomew Marlianico received the crowne of Martyrdome, who ſometimes had preached at Sondres, a true ſervant of God, and for his life and manners unreprovable. Others had their mouths ſlit up to the eares; others received other flaſhes in the face, others were in other manner moſt cruelly mangled to the death, Battiſta of Grilio, called of the Bajacca, an aged man of ſeventy five yeares, being found in the houſe of the heires of Seignior Conte Viſſe Martinengo of moſt happy memory, being ſet upon by thoſe murthering caitifes, leaped out of a window and paſſed the river Maleto, and having gotten to his houſe and ſhifted his clothes, he was aſſailed again, taken priſoner, and carried to the Palace, put often to the ſtrapado, and laſtly was in ſuch ſort ſliced and hewne with a ſword, that he had nothing left him but the armes which were faſtened to the cord.

Paulo Baretta of Chio in the County of Vicence, a virgin of the age of ſeventy five yeares, of an honourable, noble, and antient family, who twenty ſeven yeares came before to Sondres to embrace the Goſpell, was by theſe villanies caried through Sondres, with all diſgrace, ſhame, and ſcorne, having a Myter of paper put upon her head, her face beſmeared with dirt, and many buffets given in her cheekes, and in many other faſhions abuſed. Being required to call upon the holy Virgin Mary and the Saints, and to place her truſting in them: ſhe ſmiling did with great readineſſe anſwer them, My truſt and my ſalvation is in my onely Savior Jeſus Chriſt, and in him onely will I reſt. And it is alſo true, That I acknowledge the Virgin Mary for the moſt holy Virgin above all others, which ever was, or ever will be: who was a Virgin before the birth, a virgin in the birth, and after birth, and ſo ſhall remain. Who although ſhe be favoured and beloved of God, above all women in the world, to be made the Mother of my Lord Jeſus the Savior of the world: nevertheles, becauſe ſhe is not able to know our neceſſities, as not being omnipotent (for otherwiſe ſhe would be God himſelfe) and beſides hath had need of the merits of her ſon, it was not lawfull for her to call upon any other then the eternall God, who knoweth all things, and upon no creature of any quality whatſoever, &c. In this ſort ſhe endured the ſcornes and outrages with an incredible conſtancy and cheerfulneſſe, ſaying continually, I do willingly endure as becommeth mee to doe, deſiring no better uſage, ſince the very ſame hath been done to my Lord and Savior Jeſus, and to his Apoſtles, and to thouſands of the holy martyrs. Laſtly, ſhe was carried away to be ſent to Millaine; but ſhe, rather then that ſhould be, deſired earneſtly that ſhe might be killed, ſeeing ſhe was reſolved to die in the faith of the Lord Jeſus, both there and at Millaine: but ſhe could not obtaine the favour to be killed there, but was carried along as hath been ſaid. On Wedneſday being the eighteenth of July was found in the plaine of Saint Gregory in the Valtoline in the high way the dead body of an old woman, which by the conjecture of ſome was the body of this woman Paulo, who in concluſion had been murthered by the aſſaſinate in that place.

There were divers other good Chriſtians, honeſt men, and fearing God, both of rich & of meane eſtate of Sondres from the mountain of Sondres, and from the valley and communalty of Malenco, that were in greater numbers cruelly murthered; who in regard they were ready to ſeale the truth with their bloud, our deſire was for this reaſon, that mention ſhould be made of them.

And theſe were the reverend Gentlemen, Marco Antonio Alba, of Caſale, of Montferrato, Paſtor of the Church of Malenco, a man full of zeale, of the age of ſixty three yeares; John Piedro Mingardino, Anaſtaſia his ſiſter, Lorenzo Hicke ſlain above the bridge of Sondres, and throwne downe into the water; Andrea his ſon, who had his noſe cut off, and his cheekes even to the furtheſt part thereof, that they might afterwards put him to the more cruell death; Andrea the ſon of Peter called Luther neere to the butchery of Sondres; John Oſwaldo a carpenter of di Cyra neer to the palace of Sondres, Daniel Newbecher neer to the floud of Sondres, whereinto hee was caſt, being halfe dead before, John Lorence neere unto the Church at the mount of Sondres, Gaudenzino di Moſſini, John in Bonginono, Battiſta and Andrea his ſons, John Antonio ſon in law of Vicenzo Bruno, Steffano Pagano of Poſchiavo. Antonio ſon in law of Vicenzo Bruno, Stephano Pagano of Poſchiavo, Antonio Samadeno Paolo, and Jacobo Demonegoni, Andrea ſon of Pietro Ducheno, Domenico his brother, Pietro his ſon, Nicolo Feacaiolo ſomtime Deacon of Sondres, Eugenio Chieſa, Giovanni Chieſa, Barnardo his ſonne. Radolpho his brother dwelling in Malenco had promiſed to goe to maſſe, for which cauſe his life was given him: but becauſe hee had furniſhed with victuals Signior Aleſſio, and his company, when they paſſed the mountaines, he was ſhot to death.

John Vientius Andreone Cani was hewed into many pieces, of age 84. Zacharia Ventura of Breſdiano, a poore, lame, dumb, begger, yet made he a ſigne with his finger, how ſmall accompt hee made of the maſſe.

Moreover John Patara a member of the Church of Sondres, being diſcovered to be one of the Religion, was on the ſudden ſhot with a musket in the backe and ſo died.

Many hid themſelves in holes, and caves, and in woods, out of which they durſt not come but by night onely to get ſome food, and that with great feare and terrour of the watching enemy; others for want of convenient food to eat, and others that fed onely upon roots, leaves, and graſſe, made an end of their lives; and many were murthered in divers places, who had no buriall at all; ſo as many carkaſes were to be ſeene in groves and woods in the mountaines, and in waters in many places.

¶ The maſſacre of Berbenno, wherein were ſlaine about eleven perſons.

IN what manner alſo buſineſſes paſſed in the noble Countrey of Berbenno it doth likewiſe plainly appeare; for in that place alſo the rebels played their part of killing and ſpoyling the profeſſors of the Goſpell. For after they had executed their cruelties and outrages, as hath bin delivered before in Tyrane, Bruſe, Tell, Sondres, in the mountaine of Sondres, Malenco and other places, they alſo received ſpeciall commandement, as may appeare by a letter written to them by John Guizziardi, of the twelfth of July of the preſent yeare, that they ſhould with all their power and courage, murther, ſtrangle, maſſacre, and in ſumme ſhould uſe all diligence, without favour or mercy, to deſtroy all Lutheranes whereſoever: by vertue of which commiſſion they have not for their parts omitted any manner of outrage and villany againſt the Proteſtants. And firſt there were preſently murthered certaine perſons of good ranke and quality, and that with great cruelty, againſt faith and promiſe given them. The which was with ſo much the more rage and fury put in execution: for that thoſe Catholique Romans themſelves, who upon the firſt propoſition refuſing to give their conſents on the ſudden to thoſe murders, were without reſpect or favour on the ſudden murdered themſelves, as happened to Bartolomeo Porretto, and other Romane Catholikes.

The Proteſtants that were maſſacred were theſe that follow, Theophilus de Piſcatory of Ognano in Romagna, who had dwelt in Berbenno twenty yeares paſt, was ſlaine in a place above Berbenno called Luſcione, the tenth of July, of the age of ſixty five yeares.

Anna di Caſſavia of Pregaglia, wife of the aboveſaid Theophilus, was before murdered at a houſe called the Chanons of Berbenno the day aboveſaid, aged fifty yeares.

Concordia Crotta of Tyrane, the wife of Giovan Gugelman of the territory of Zuriz, who had dwelt in Berbenno as many yeares, was maſſacred in the place and on the day abovenamed, being of the age of forty three.

Aurelio the ſon of Nicolas Paravicino, going from Berbenno to Sondres, was ſlaine in the plaine of Caſtione, the eighteenth of July, aged fifty ſeven.

Bartolomeo the ſon of David Paravicino was wounded to death in the head with the ſhot of a Muſket, who, quite againſt the hope and expectation of the Chirurgions, lived five daies after, and then dyed, being eighteen yeares of age.

Ottavio Paravicino of Capelli, an honourable Gentleman, was together with two others underwritten, John Battiſta and Horatio Paravicino detained as priſoners in the Chanons of Berbenno, from the eleventh unto the ſixe and twentieth day of July, on which day they were requeſted and accompanied to Sondres by the commandement of Robuſtello, who pretended with all kindneſſe and courteſie to entertaine them; cauſing them to drinke, and to be accompanied even unto Saſſella: But there, by order of the ſaid Robuſtello, they were murdred; who replyed, being demanded why he did ſo, That they muſt never keepe faith with heretiques. This Ottavio was thirty eight yeares of age.

John Battiſta Paravicino of Capelli a Gentleman alſo of great honour, who was kept priſoner as aforeſaid, and conducted to Sondres, in his returne unto Saſſella, there with Ottavio was ſlaine, being of the age of foure and thirty yeares.

Horatio, brother of the ſaid John Battiſta, was wholly and in all things his faithfull companion, and in like manner rendred his life the day aboveſaid, being thirty two yeares of age.

Anna de Beveri of Gineura, wife of the abovenamed Ottavio, a Gentlewoman of an honourable eſtimation, being deſirous for the ſafety of her life to follow a company of Griſon ſouldiers, amongſt whom was a couſin of hers, and other kinſmen of hers, not being able to travell by reaſon of the ſharpneſſe and ſteepneſſe of the way, being a gentlewoman grave and tender, was ſhot in the backe with a Muſket, and left for dead the third of Auguſt, being forty yeares of age.

Theoſina Paravicina of Capelli, mother of the aboveſaid John Battiſta, and Horatio, a Gentlewoman of great worth, was ſlaine in her owne houſe, being of the age of fifty five yeares.

Adamo Scarumbeio of Tyrane was at the time of the barbarous maſſacre of Tyrane in the garriſon of Morbenno, from whence notwithſtanding he eſcaped and came to Clavenno, afterwards meaning to returne with the Band of Griſons to the Valtoline, and to accompany the ſaid Theoſina to Sondres, was murdered, being twenty yeares of age. He was a young man of ſingular expectation.

CHAP. 5.

¶ The Maſſacre of Caſpano and Trahon, wherein there were murdered eleven perſons or thereabouts.

BUt for all this the Trahoneſſe could not paſſe in the lower Valtoline, but that he received his part in this perſecution with the perſecution of divers perſons, which the Reader may ſee by the Catalogue inſuing.

Joſua the ſon of Hortenſio Malacrida, comming from Gaſpano, in his journey to Bulio, being encountred at the bridge of Maſino, and being demanded if he would goe to Maſſe, anſwering that he would not, was forthwith ſlaine and caſt into the river of Maſino, being of the age of thirty yeares.

The like befell to his brother Plinit, he was ſought for in Bulio by 25. perſons, and not being found there, was met in his return betwixt Arden and Bulio, and killed, being 26. yeares of age.

Andrea Paravicino of Bugo, of Caſpano Sarto, by his trade a Tailor, ſtayed there from the 9. of July, untill the comming of the Griſon Band into the Valtoline: but after the ſudden departure of the ſaid Band, being diſcovered by his countrimen and kinsfolkes, was taken and carried to Morbegnio, and being ſolicited to forſake the true Religion, and to embrace the Romane, and ſtanding conſtantly with great manfulneſſe thereto, was condemned to the fire, and was placed betweene two heapes of wood, to make him to recant. But all was in vaine; for being aſked if he were a Catholike, he anſwered, That he was. Then if he were a Romane Catholike; he alſo affirmed likewiſe, that he was ſo. But being demanded if he held the Romane faith as it is at this day, he anſwered, no. It is true, ſaid he, that I hold the ancient Catholique Romane faith, which was preached by S. Paul, That a man is ſaved by grace by the meanes of faith, and not by workes, leſt any man ſhould boaſt. Being demanded, if he beleeved the Pope to be head of the Church, he anſwered, No; becauſe Chriſt only is the head of the Church, according to the promiſe, I will be with you unto the end of the world.

And although the fire was firſt kindled, and then put out, of purpoſe to draw him to a recantation, neverthelesse he perſevered and endured that cruell death with admirable conſtancy, the 15. of Auguſt, being ſixty yeares old.

Giovan Pietro Malacrida, although he were little of ſtature, yet was he great and mighty in the confeſſion of the truth, inſomuch that for the love of his Saviour he ſuffered death with ſingular cheerefulneſſe, being forty yeares of age.

His example was devoutly and conſtantly imitated by Elizabeth his wife; who was killed in the eight and thirtieth yeare of her age: and moreover theſe Herodian murderers not therewith content, but joyning one barbarous inhumanity to another, obſerving a daughter of hers, being an infant of three yeares old, to lie in the cradle, although it was a childe of a ſweet countenance, and theſe wretches ſeeing that the babe did looke lovingly and cheerefully on them, which would have been enough to have moved any adamantine heart to compaſſion, notwithſtanding they tooke the poore babe by the feete, and paſhed her againſt the wall, and in this manner moſt barbarouſly murdered the ſame.

Thomaſo Maeſtrella Carpenter, and a princi-pall enginer, excellent in building of mills and other buildings, was murdered in one of his mils at Melle, being eighty yeares of age.

Dominico of Paguno, called Luther of Scermele of the hundred of Canvicke in Trahoneſſe, being at his worke at Morbegno, was killed the fourteenth of Auguſt, age forty eight; he was followed by his ſon Jacomo, age eighteene, and Peter his ſon, of age fifteene; alſo of Maria his ſiſter: all which in one day, being the fourteenth day of Auguſt, were for the faith of the Goſpell profeſſed by them ſacrificed to God their Creator and Saviour.

CHAP. 6.

¶ The Maſſacre of Bruſe, in which were murdered to the number of 27. perſons.

THeſe wretched murderers were not contented in the places abovenamed, which were ſubjects to the Lords Griſons at Tyrane, Tell, Sondres, Monte di Sondrio, Berbenno and Malenco, to have maſſacred ſo many perſons who feared God, honorable, noble, learned, wiſe, and ſober, of authority and reverence, young and old, men, women, yea even their next alliance, ſtraiteſt friends and kinsfolks, by ſhooting them, by throwing them headlong from mountaines, by ſtoning them, by hewing them in peeces, by caſting them in rivers, by burning, by mangling them, and by all cruell meanes making them away: but they alſo executed the like cruelty in Retia it ſelfe, the countrey of their naturall Lords and Commanders.

For example, on Sunday the ninth of July, a young man called John the ſon of Dominico of Ada a Romane Catholike, early in the morning travelled to the bridge of the caſtle of Bruſe, being the way to Tyrane, to buy corn for his houſe; there he met Ambroſio the ſon of Baruffino his hoſt in Tyrane, with a company of people, who were at the time endeavouring to breake down the bridge, not ſuffering any paſſage to the ſaid John, but commanded him to returne back again. At which the man wondering, and aſking the reaſon, they anſwered, That they meant not only to ſtop the paſſage of the Lutheraues of Bruſe, but alſo at once utterly to root them out. This young man ſuddenly returned to Bruſe, and reported unto Martine Martino, the ſon of Dominico, this which he had ſeen and heard. Udillo being then his ſervant, who was a Proteſtant, runs with great ſpeed to give warning to the Proteſtants, not thinking that they were in the Church; but although they were diligently attending the ſermon, he was bold to publiſh the notice thereof to them all. The people were much aſtoniſhed at the newes, and were about to depart out of the church: but they were earneſtly deſired by the Paſtor to ſtay ſtill, proteſting, that he would not forſake them, but would live and die with them. So they continued ſtill, untill the Sermon and Prayers were ended. Then they armed themſelves, and aſſembled in the houſe of Michael Montio. Soone after they marched in their armes toward another bridge, which was neere to the countrey of Bruſe, and there they deſcryed ſome of their enemies, who then were comming to cut off that bridge. But perceiving the Proteſtants ready to reſiſt them, they returned back without any further attempt. On Sunday and Munday the Proteſtants ſtood upon their guard: on the Tueſday following in the evening came the enemies with a multitude of people, being accompanied with a great company of the Roman Catholikes of Bruſe. They ſet fire on the houſe of Anthonto Montine, and Pietro Ageſtino, and other houſes adjoyning. The proteſtants ſeeing ſo great a multitude of enemies, finding themſelves fewer in number, and weaker in ſtrength, ſome of them tooke themſelves to their heeles, the reſt were ſlaine between that evening and the next day.

There were ſlaine at that conflict twenty ſeven perſons, and among them theſe which follow.

Bettino of Azzala, ſonne of Pietro, of age fourty five yeeres; Perrotta his wife, being of the age of fourty; Pietro their ſonne, being of age twelve yeeres; Andreino Zopo, ſonne of Janotto, age fourty; James ſonne of John Domenico, Quadernetto, age thirty. John Monegatti, age fifty eight; Michaele della Roſa, age 28. Jacomena de Burieo, age thirty yeeres; Jean Moneta age eighty. This Woman was oftentimes adviſed to become a Romane Catholike, and to favour her age, telling her that if ſhee would, ſhee ſhould have her life given her: but ſhe with great reſolution replied, God forbid that I, who now of long time have had one foote in the grave, ſhould come to forſake my Lord Jeſus, who hath ſo long time preſerved me in the knowledge and confeſſion of his truth, and to put my truſt in creatures, and to receive in ſtead of his holy word the traditions of men. Upon which words this worthy Matron was inſtantly ſlaine.

Now there is no doubt but in this furious perſecution at Bruſe and in other places, there have beene murdered many good men for the foreſaid cauſe, whoſe names have not been mentioned in this diſcourſe: but whoſoever they were, they have departed with this comfort, that they have not ſuffered as murderers or robbers, or malefactors, or as buſie bodies in thoſe things which belong not to them, but as holy Chriſtians, who at no hand would worſhip Images, they beleeved that the bloud of Chriſt hath purged them from all ſinne; That Chriſt hath offered one onely ſacrifice once for ſins; that we ought to worſhip the Lord God alone, and onely ſerve him; that wee are ſaved by grace, by the meanes of faith, and that not of our ſelves, the ſame being the gift of God, not by workes, to the intent none might boaſt; That we ought to worſhip God in all places, holding up cleare hands unto him, that every creature of God is good, and none to be rejected, being uſed with thankſgiving; that mariage is honorable in every ſort and condition of perſons, according to the expreſſe words of the holy Apoſtolique Scripture: and by reaſon of this very confeſſion were the inhabitants of Tyrano, Teglio, Sondro, Malenco, Berbenno, Trahono, Morbegno, Dabino, Caſpano, and Bruſo, ſo cruelly perſecuted and maſſacred.

There was of late time a booke printed in Italy, how the preteſtants of the aboveſaid places ſhould practiſe to execute upon the Catholiques, about the 15. day of Auguſt, the like, which ſince hath befalne themſelves: but how divelliſh a ſlander and calumny this is, may cleerely be gathered by this, that where the proteſtants of thoſe places are ten, the popiſh Catholiques are a thouſand. Who then would beleeve that ſo ſmal a number ſhould be able to make reſiſtance againſt ſo great a multitude, and eſpecially againſt thoſe deſperate rebels, and outlawd villaines, who for their murders formerly committed, for their corruptions of the commiſſaries, and tranſgreſſions of the commandement of the Magiſtrate had before beene baniſhed out of the Country, being alſo ſuſpected of ſodomy, of falſification of money, and like ravening wolves, being throughly armed, entred like a moſt furious torrent on the ſodaine, ſlaughtering the poore naked proteſtants, who ſuſpected ſpected no ſuch wrong, even in thoſe Churches which before had been priviledged even among the Barbarous Pagans, to the intent that they might put in execution that bloody deſigne which had been reſolved on about 17. yeeres before, according to a Letter intercepted of a principall rebell in this action, who is neither afraid nor aſhamed to terme the ſame a holy reſolution, and an honourable enterpriſe: which it is indeed, if to ſpoile, to rob, to ſtrangle, to maſſacre, to burn, to hew in peeces children and women, to caſt them into fire and water, to falſifie faith, ought to be accounted an attempt of holineſſe: if it ought to be eſteemed a thing honorable and pleaſing to God, not to ſuffer the bodies of the dead, being buried in the earth and in the Church, to reſt quietly, but to take them up againe, and being taken up to handle them in moſt barbarous manner (as very lately had been done in the Countries of Caſpano and Trahone and in other places, where the bodies digged out of the ground, which before were entire and whole, were throwne into rivers and water, to be meat for the fiſhes) and having bruiſed and ground their bones to powder, moſt barbarouſly to caſt them into the fire. But here, if ever, the old tale of Aeſop is verified, where the poore ſilly ſheepe was accuſed to have troubled the water of a malitious wolfe, although the ſaid ſheep dranke below at the foot of the river.

Therefore it appeareth moſt clearely every way, that the aforeſaid perſons underwent thoſe ſufferings for no other cauſe, but only for the truth of the Goſpell; even as by the eternall decree of God, the holy Prophets, Saint Io: Baptiſta, the holy Apoſtles, yea even our Lord and head Ieſus Chriſt himſelfe, and after him thoſe many millions of the elected martyrs in all ages have done before, and eſpecially in theſe miſerable laſt times, in Germany, France, England, Scotland, Low-countries, Bohemia, Italie, Spaine, Portugall, &c.

Which martyrdome they endured willingly, rejoycing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer blame for the name of Chriſt Ieſus, remembring the promiſe of this our Lord, Bleſſed are they who are perſecuted for righteouſneſſe ſake, becauſe the Kingdome of heaven is theirs. Bleſſed are you when others ſhall revile and perſecute you, and ſhall falſely ſpeake all evill of you for my ſake. Rejoice and triumph, for your reward is great in heaven, for ſo have they perſecuted the Prophets who were before you. Reade to this purpoſe. 1 Pet. 4. Verſes, 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. which words, of all good Chriſtians are to bee well pondered and weighed: For firſt by ſuch triall we periſh not. Secondly, we are thereby made conformable to Chriſt our head. Thirdly, ſuch ſufferings cauſe unto us greater joy than ſorrow. Fourthly, they are infallible markes that the ſpirit of God reſts upon us. Fifthly, they manifeſt to all our unfained love to Chriſt and his Goſpell.

Mat. 5. 10.

Sixthly, hereby wee have good proofe that the Lord doth correct us, not as a ſevere Iudge, but as a moſt loving and tender hearted Father: to whom therefore with his bleſſed Son, and holy Spirit, be all glory and honour aſcribed in all the Churches of the Saints, world without end, Amen.

SIGNES

Anno 1620.

SIGNES AND PRODIGIES, WHICH HAPPENED BEFORE THE MASSACRE IN THE VALTOLINE.

THe Proteſtants having appointed Gards and Sentinels in the ſteeples of the Churches of the Valtoline, beſides others which were commanded to watch in certaine places, to give the ſigne by fire, to the intent that the whole Valley being warned partly by the Becons, partly by the ſound of the bells, might together be ready on the ſuddaine to take armes for their defence againſt the Spaniard, if he ſhould make any incurſion upon the Valley: about the Calends of May 1620. in Sondres, the foreſaid Sentinels reported, that in a night as they watched, they heard in the Church of Gervaſe a murmuring as it were of many perſons, with great earneſtneſſe and vehemency of arguing and conteſting among themſelves: and from the Church there ſhined upwards through the ſteeple a great brightneſſe, in ſo much as the Sentinels lighted their torches, and aſſembled themſelves to goe downe into the Church to ſee what the matter might be. But as they were deſcending downe the ſtaires, their lights were put out, and returning afreſh to light their torches they were put out againe with greater ſtrength, and with much aſtoniſhment and trembling; and the brightneſſe which filled the Church ſuddenly vaniſhed, the weights alſo of the great Clocke fell downe, and they heard about ten knells of a Bell, in ſuch manner as it uſeth to ring to give the alarme, the which was heard by very many.

Likewiſe in Tyrane, there were heard the like knells by the great Bell; and the Magiſtrate commanded them ſuddenly to goe and know the cauſe, but he found that it was not done by the act of men, and inſtantly the ſervants running from the Belfrey, and diligently attending to ſee this buſineſſe, they diſcerned a thing like a Cat to deſcend downe into the place.

Signes and prodigies heard and ſeene in the Valtoline after the maſſacre, as hath been affirmed by divers perſons of credit, being departed from the ſaid Valley, and lying in the Valtoline after the maſſacre. In the Evangelike Proteſtant Church, and principally from Teglio and Tyrane a voice hath been heard to cry, woe, woe to you. The vengeance of God is upon you for the blood of the innocent.

Moreover there was heard the Bell of the Evangelike Church of Tyrane, to ring even at the ſame time that the ſermon was uſed to be: and in that Church a voice was heard, like the voice of Senior Anthonio Baſſo, who ſometimes had been there a Miniſter, and was murdered in the ſaid place, as if himſelfe had been preaching in the ſame place.

In Londres there was ſeen to deſcend an army from the Mountains every way furniſhed; which ſight was the cauſe that many take their flight, and departed out of Sondres; but ſuddenly this apparition vaniſhed like a cloud. The which ſtruck a great terror into the mindes of the people, inſomuch as many departed out of the Valley, as men that feared a caſtigation and puniſhment from heaven.

THat in caſe there fall out any miſtake in the penner, or printer, or in the Reader, that he lookes not aright under each head (for we are all but men): Then,

1. To looke the thing under as many ſeverall heads, or alphabeticall words, as in all probabilitie the thing may be expreſſed in or by.

2. To have recourſe to the Chronologie; where thou mayſt readily finde each Emperour, Pope, King. A Biſhop, and the chiefe occurrences in their times, with the page in the laſt collume to finde it in the large volume.

3. To have regard to the time when things were done ſince Chriſt. Which remembred, the Chronologie will in that yeere touch the thing.

4. To mind how much each Volume conteines, viz. the firſt to the end of Hen. 7. The ſecond all Hen.8. and Edw.6. time: the third Q. Mary and Q. Elizabeth. And being confident in what Volume the thing is, the Contents of that Volume at the top or in the title of each page will diſcover the thing to thee.
